Yea, not only may brethren prove forgetful of us, but cruel to us. We have an experience of this in the firſt pair of brethren that ever were in the world: As ſoon as the bond of brotherhood could be broken, it was broken; Cain ſlew his Brother Abel, he was far from him indeed when he thus drew near to him. Chriſt forewarns us that we may quickly meet with ſuch actings againſt the light of nature, while we follow and act up to the light of Grace; The brother ſhall deliver the brother to death, and the father the child, and the child ſhall riſe up againſt his parents, and cauſe them to be put to death (Mat. 10. 21.) To deliver a brother up to death, that is, to deliver him up to others to put him to death, is as bad as if our ſelves had taken away his life. We do that evil which we do not hinder others (according to our place and power) from doing; much more may we be ſaid to do that evil, which we provoke thoſe to do, who have power to do it. To deliver a brother up to death, is to kill our brother. Grace teaches us to lay down our lives for the brethren. Corruption teaches the brother to take away the life of a brother. Our Book of Martyrs gives divers inſtances of brethren ſuffering for Chriſt, by the procurement of brethren. There are no bonds of love, but have often received a crack by luſt, and ſometimes a total breach; and where there ſhould be the greateſt love, there have been the greateſt breaches. The Prophet Obadiah checks thoſe Edomites, who were the Deſcendants of Eſau, and and ſo by Iſaac their common Father, brethren to the Iſraelites; the Prophet, I ſay, checks them for their inſolency againſt their afflicted brethren (v. 12.) Thou ſhouldeſt not have looked on the day of thy Brother. The day of their brother was the day of their brothers calamity, as is plain in the next words, In the day that he became a ſtranger, that is, to his own Land, being carried away into captivity: Thou ſhouldeſt not have looked upon this day of thy brother. But was it a ſin to look upon them in that day? To ſee them was no ſin, and to ſee or look upon them with an eye of compaſſion, was a duty; but they looked upon their brethren with an eye of ſcorn at, or with an eye of delight in their miſery; it pleaſed them to ſee their brethren oppreſſed and carried captives. This kind of ſeeing their brethren, was (within one degree) as ſinful as ſlaying them; ſuch looking upon them when led into captivity, was a leading them into captivity. That which we rejoyce to ſee any ſuffer from the hand of others, they ſuffer alſo from our hand. The Prophet Iſaiah deſcribes this unnatural unkindneſs againſt brethren (ariſing, in ſome, at leaſt, from a pretended or ignorant zeal for God) in the profeſſion of the ſame Religion (chap. 66. 5.) Hear the word of the Lord ye that tremble at his word, your brethren that hated you (he doth not ſay, your enemies that hated you, this a ſtrange conjunction, hating brethren, your brethren that hated you) that caſt you out for my Names ſake (there's the ground of the quarrel, it was religious, or about the things of God) ſaid, let the Lord be glorified, or, appear in glory. Which implies that either they pretended to glorifie God by caſting out their brethren, as Chriſt foretold, John 16. 2. They ſhall put you out of the Synagogues; yea, the time cometh, that whoſoever killeth you, ſhall think that he doth God ſervice. To do God ſervice is to glorifie him. Theſe brethren judg'd their brethren evil doers againſt the Lord, and that therefore it was good to puniſh and caſt them out; hence, they ſaid, let the Lord be glorified; or theſe words, let the Lord be glorified, may be expounded ironically, as if theſe perſecutors of their brethren had derided their brethrens expectation and hope of the glorious appearance of the Lord in judgment, to vindicate their innocency and do them right. And ſo it anſwers that of the ſame Prophet, chap. 5. 19. Let him make ſpeed and haſten his work, that we may ſee it. As alſo that of the Apoſtle, 2 Pet. 3, 3, 4. Where is the Promiſe of his coming? &c. Hence 'tis added, But he (that is, the Lord) ſhall appear to your joy, and they ſhall be aſhamed. They who either think to bring glory to God by troubling their brethren, or who deride their brethrens hope, that the Lord will appear to deliver them from, or to recompenſe them for all their troubles. Theſe troubling brethren (I ſay) ſhall have ſhame to their portion, and the portion of their troubled brethren ſhall be joy at the appearing of the Lord. The ſame Scripture ſhews the extream hatred of brethren againſt their brethren, and the ſore diſpleaſure of the Lord againſt Brethren-haters.

Secondly obſerve, The eſtrangement of brethren from us is very grievous.

Job laid it more to heart that his brethren did not comfort him, then that ſtrangers did afflict him. It is one of the moſt delightful ſpectacles to ſee brethren dwell together in unity (Pſal. 133. 1.) Behold, how good and how pleaſant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity! He compares it to the dew of Hermon, and to the precious ointment upon the head, that ran down upon the beard, even Aaron's beard, and that went down to the skirt of his garment. Now, as it is a pleaſure to behold the union and harmony of brethren, ſo 'tis very bitter to ſee brethren broken off and disjoynted from one another. Whether they be brethren by blood, or brethren by profeſſion; but chiefly if they be brethren in the faith and profeſſion of the Goſpel. Abraham ſaid unto Lot, let there be no ſtrife, I pray thee, between me and thee, & between my herdmen & thy herdmen. He would not only have no ſtrife between themſelves, but not between their ſervants, and why? For we are brethren (Gen. 13.8.) The diviſions of brethren are both grievous and ſcandalous; grievous to themſelves, and ſcandalous to others. Hence Moſes gives counſel to the two contending Iſraelites (as Stephen reports it, Act. 7.26.) Sirs, why do ye wrong one to another? you are brethren. The name of a brother, or the remembrance that we are brethren, is enough to pacifie our ſpirits, and haſten us to a reconcilement of all our differences. And that ſo many brethren, who alſo are Iſraelites, fall out with, and wrong one another, and will not be reconciled, how ſad is the ſcandal, and how heavy the burden at this day? All gracious hearts have much cauſe to lament this, as all eyes, even the eyes of our common enemies, have too much occaſion to take notice of it.

Thirdly, In that he ſaith, He hath put my brethren far from me; Obſerve,

The changes of affection are from God: or, it is of the Lord that our brethren are at any time eſtranged from us.

As God puts health far away from us, or aboundance far away from us, ſo he puts friends far away from us. This doth not excuſe brethren in their unkind departures and eſtrangements from one another; only it ſhould teach us to depend upon God, as much for the eſtabliſhment and continuance of friends in their affections and reſpects to us, as of our Lands and Cattel in their fruitfulneſs to us, or of our own bodies in their health and ſtrength to us. There is an over-ruling hand of God, and his effectual working, as in all other afflictions and troubles which come upon us, ſo in the withdrawings of friends and brethren from us. As God forms the ſpirit of man within him, in reſpect of being and exiſtence (for he is the God of the ſpirits of all fleſh, or the Father of ſpirits) ſo likewiſe in reſpect of motion and influence (Zech. 12.1.) It is the Lord who makes men to be of this mind, or of that mind, who ſhapes and faſhions their ſpirits, either towards a compliance with, or a diſlike whether of things or perſons. Friends love no longer then God maintains love in them, and they can do us good no longer then God maintains in them a will to do us good; we cannot diſcharge the loweſt natural duty of love unto a brother, unleſs God come in; yea, we quickly grow unnatural, if God leave us. The love or hatred of man is from the Lord.

But ſome may ſay, Is the hatred of man from God? If ſo, how ſhall we acquit God from being the author of ſin?

I anſwer, God is ſaid to put our friends far from us, when he withdraws or withholds that aſſiſtance and influence which inlarges and unites the hearts of friends. We are all by nature (as the Apoſtle ſpeaks, Tit. 3.3.) Hateful, and hating one another. And while nature, as corrupted, acts alone, it is not more hateful to God, then full of hatred to men, eſpecially to good men. As God doth not, ſo there is no need he ſhould put enmity and hatred into the heart of a brother againſt his brother, there's too much of theſe already in every mans heart; if God do but leave a brother to himſelf, he quickly ſhews himſelf unbrotherly. Now if brethren hate unleſs God over-rule their hearts, then 'tis no wonder if ſtrangers and enemies do it (Pſal. 105.25.) When Moſes deſcribes the cruel uſage which the Egyptians ſhewed to the people of Iſrael, he tells us, God turned their hearts, that they hated his people, and dealt ſubtilly with his ſervants. That is ſomewhat a hard ſpeech when 'tis ſaid, He turned their hearts to hate his people; God did not drop hatred into their hearts; God turns the heart from ſin, not to ſin; but he is therefore ſaid to turn their hearts to hate his people, becauſe he gave them up to the baſeneſs and ſuſpiciouſneſs of their own hearts, which told them a thouſand ſad ſtories, or propheſies rather, what the Iſraelites would do, and how they would burden Egypt, and bring it low, unleſs themſelves were brought low by an impoſition of new burdens. This was enough, and this was all that God did when he turned the hearts of the Egyptians to hate his people, and deal ſubtilly with his ſervants. Unleſs God hold our hearts, and keep them for us, we are not only unſteady in every duty both to God and man, but we act quite beſide, yea contrary to our duty: We love where we ſhould hate, and hate where we ſhould love; we help thoſe whom we ſhould oppoſe, and oppoſe thoſe to whom we ſhould be helpful; we are like brethren to thoſe whoſe enemies we ſhould be, and we are as enemies to our brethren. He hath put my brethren far from me,

And my acquaintance are verily eſtranged from me.

Brethren are our neareſt acquaintance, and all our acquaintance may be called brethren. The Hebrew word ſignifies, to know. Some render it ſo here, they who knew me, or were known to me, are eſtranged. The knowledge we have of men brings us into acquaintance with them; and the more we are acquainted with them, the more we know them. The word implies, intimate and ſpecial knowledge (1 Sam. 3.7.) Samuel did not yet know the Lord; Not know the Lord! why, how was Samuel bred, that he did not know the Lord? He was come to years of knowledge, and had he lived in ignorance? The meaning is not, that he did not know the Lord at all, but he had not yet known the Lord by way of extraordinary revelation, or viſion: Thus Samuel did not know the Lord till that time. God reproves the Jews for their hypocriſie and formality (Iſa. 58.2.) They ſeek me daily, and delight to know my wayes; that is, they pretend to an earneſt deſire of knowing my wayes, they ſeek to me as if they would creep into my mouth, yea and lodge in my heart, to know all my deſire concerning the holineſs of their lives, and the exacteſt conformity of their wayes to my will. Thus they would be thought to know me and acquaint themſelves with me; and ſo much the word uſed by Job (which we render acquaintance) holds forth. Yet becauſe Job ſpeaks at verſ. 19. of his inward friends, therefore I rather take his acquaintance here, for common friends, ſuch as were but generally known to him, or ſuch as knew him but generally; My acquaintance, ידעי Noti mei. Vulg. Neceſſarii mei. Tygur. Scientes nomen meum obliti ſunt mei. Sept.

Are verily eſtranged from me.] The word ſignifies, ſuch an eſtrangement, or alienation of ſpirit, as ariſeth from nauſeouſneſs, or the offence which the ſtomach takes at ſuch meats as are improper to it. As if he had ſaid, My acquaintance loath me, their ſtomachs turn at me, they are ready to vomit at the ſight or thought of me, and of my afflicted condition. In which ſence, the word is uſed (Ezek. 14.5.) Where the Lord complains of the backſliding of his ancient people to Idolatry; They are all eſtranged from me through their Idols; as if the Lord had ſaid, My people whom I have loved begin to loath me, I am out of date with them, and my wayes are out of requeſt with them ſince they have found new gods, or new wayes of worſhipping God. Old acquaintance are often laid by when we find new. And (which was Job's caſe) when old friends fall into a low condition, ſome will loath them, or eſtrange themſelves from them, though they have no new. My acquaintance are

זור Alienatio aut receſſus ejuſmodi eſt ut cum aliquis nauſeā habet.

Verily eſtranged.] The word verily, hath an emphaſis in it, and notes not only the truth of the thing, or that it was ſo, but alſo the degree of the thing, that it was very much ſo. As if he had ſaid, They are altogether eſtranged, or, there is nothing in them but eſtrangement and unfriendlineſs. We have the like uſe of the word, though to another end (Pſal. 23.6.) Surely goodneſs and mercy (or, only goodneſs and mercy, pure goodneſs and mercy) ſhall follow me all the dayes of my life; that is, I ſhall have goodneſs and mercy without any mixture of ſorrow and trouble; ſo here, They are ſurely or verily eſtranged from me; that is, they are ſtrange as ſtrange can be; there is not the leaſt mixture of love, not the leaſt appearance of good will to me among them all.

אך זרו
אך טוב
Tantū bonū; bonū merum; nullius mali mixtura adulteratū.

Verſ. 14. My kinsfolk fail.

Before he ſpake of his brethren and acquaintance, now of his kindred. All our brethren are our kindred, but all our kindred are not brethren. The original word ſignifies one that is near, and in the Verb, to draw near; ſo 'tis uſed (Pſal. 73.28.) It is good for me to draw near to God. We draw near to God in any act of worſhip, or in the exerciſe of any grace, eſpecially in the exerciſe of faith, even as we are ſaid in Scripture, to depart or turn from God, when we neglect his worſhip, or when we act any luſt, eſpecially unbelief, Heb. 3.12. And becauſe the people of God uſe to draw near unto him thus, and 'tis never ſo well with them as when they do ſo; therefore all the people of God, are called Gods nigh ones (Pſal. 148. 14.) He alſo exalteth the horn of his people, the praiſe of all his Saints, even of the children of Iſrael; a people near unto him. All the Saints are (as we may ſay) Gods kindred (it is this word) a people near to him. Our kinsfolk are near to us. How great a priviledge is it to be near God, or of kin to the moſt High.

חדל

Affert ceſſationem ab aliquo opere aut officio.

My kinsfolk fail.] Friends fail. Firſt, In number when they die, that was not Job's meaning.

Secondly, There is a failing in courteſie; thus his kinsfolk failed, they ceaſed to perform the office of kindred to him, as Ruth's kinſman did. Job had many of his kindred living, but none in whom kindneſs lived. He had many kinsfolk, but few friends. My kinsfolk fail.

And my familiar friends have forgotten me.

Familiar friends are expreſſed in the Hebrew, by the ſame word which was before tranſlated acquaintance, only with a little difference, this is active, the other paſſive; as if his acquaintance were rather known by him, then knew him, and his familiar friends knew him more then they were known by him. Familiar friends are ſuch as we daily or very frequently converſe with. We ſay, Out of ſight, out of mind. It ſeems Job's friends caſt him out of their mind, while they were in his ſight. Forgetfulneſs is the abſence of a thing or perſon from our minds. Memory is the treaſury of the mind; forgetfulneſs exhauſts that treaſure. My familiar friends, ſaith Job,

Have forgotten me.] Poſſibly ſome of them forgot that they had ſuch a friend, but all of them forgot him as a friend, they forgot all the courteſies and kindneſſes that ever they received from him, as alſo all the kindneſſes and courteſies that ever they profeſſed to him.

Again, To forget, is to neglect, or to ſlight. Though they had him in their thoughts, though he lived in their natural memory (as memory is taken properly for the keeping or laying up of that which is paſt) yet they morally forgot him, that is, they ſlighted and neglected him: And then my familiar friends have forgotten me, is, as if he had ſaid, Thoſe friends to whom I have expreſſed love, take no care of me, they perform no offices of love to me, nor do they regard what becomes of me, ſink or ſwim 'tis all one with them. So the word is applied (Lam. 2.2.) He hath violently taken away his Tabernacle, as if it were of a garden, he hath deſtroyed his places of the Aſſembly; the Lord hath cauſed the ſolemn feaſts and aſſemblies to be forgotten in Sion. How forgotten? The Lord did not cauſe the Jews to forget that there had been ſolemn feaſts, and Sabbaths in Sion; the thing was remembred, and that was an addition to the ſorrow of their captivity; but thoſe feaſts were diſuſed by all, none came at them, none obſerved them, and they were ſleighted by many; thus they were forgotten. And as the Lord at that time in wrath cauſed them to forget their ſolemn feaſts in a ſtrange land; ſo he promiſed in mercy, that a time ſhould come when they ſhould be forgotten in their own Land (Jer. 3.16.) And it ſhall come to paſs, when ye be multiplied and encreaſed in the Land, in thoſe dayes ſaith the Lord, they ſhall ſay no more, The Ark of the Covenant of the Lord, neither ſhall it come to mind, neither ſhall they remember it, &c. But what are thoſe dayes, wherein the Ark (which is put Synechdochically for all Ceremonial obſervations) ſhould not be remembred, or ſhould be forgotten? We may underſtand it, either of the dayes of Chriſts coming in the fleſh, when all ſhadows ſhould vaniſh or diſappear; or of the times of their reſtauration, when they ſhould not truſt to, nor boaſt of thoſe external Evidences of Gods preſence, as formerly they had done when they cryed, The Temple of the Lord, the Temple of the Lord, Jer. 7.4. They who uſe outward adminiſtrations may be ſaid to forget them while they live in the ſpirit, and have no confidence in a form, though good, uſeful and neceſſary.

Oblivio negligens eſt recordatio vera, diligens & ſtudioſa.

Thus Job complains, My familiar friends have forgotten me; either they do not at all viſit me as friends, or they do not uſe me friendly in their viſits. To forget, is either to neglect the doing of a thing, or the doing of it negligently; as to remember a thing, imports, not only the doing of it, but the doing of it diligently. And ſo thoſe former expreſſions, They are eſtranged from me, they have failed, are the ſame with this, They have forgotten me. All ſignifying and ſpeaking the unkindneſs of his friends to him in that low condition.

Hence obſerve, Firſt, Adverſity and affliction are the touch-ſtone of friendſhip.

That's the time to try friends, to know what friends are, or who are friends. And as adverſity is the demonſtration, or touchſtone of friends, ſo 'tis a high commendation to continue friendſhip in adverſity. Chriſt tells his Diſciples (Luke 22.28.) and he puts an accent of honour upon it, Ye are they, who have continued with me in my temptation; as if he had ſaid, All have not done thus, nor could ye have done it, unleſs it had been given you from above; and when the temptation, that is, the tryal and ſufferings of Chriſt grew very high, they began to fail in doing it, and ſhrink from their Maſter: yet Chriſt took their former conſtancy to, and continuance with him ſo well, that he did not only give them the honour of this acknowledgment, Ye are they; but preſently tells them of an honourable reward; and I appoint unto you a Kingdom, as my father hath appointed unto me. It is an eaſie matter to abide with Chriſt, or with thoſe that are Chriſts, in times of peace, or in the day of their conſolations; but when we are under temptations, afflictions, and troubles, then to abide and keep cloſe to Chriſt, and thoſe who profeſs Chriſt; here's the proof of friendſhip, and Goſpel-love. Many will run to friends to ask ſhelter, when themſelves are in a ſtorm (as we uſe to betake our ſelves to the ſhelter of a ſpreading tree in a ſtorm of foul weather) who quickly leave them when the ſtorm is blown over, and the weather fair. But how few are there who run to their friends when they are in a ſtorm to offer them ſhelter? The Apoſtle complains of his deſertion in ſuch a condition (2 *Tim.*4.16.) At my firſt anſwer no man ſtood with me: but all men forſook me: I pray God that it may not be laid to their charge: And he remembers it to the praiſe of Oneſiphorus, for whom alſo upon that account he prayes (2 *Tim.*1.16.) The Lord give mercy to the houſe of Oneſiphorus, he oft refreſhed me, and was not aſhamed of my chain. Many friends come about us when we have a crown of comfort or of honour upon our heads, or when we have our garments of praiſe and joy upon our backs; but when we are in ſackcloath, or wear a chain, then to appear with us or for us, argues ſtrength as well as truth of love. True and ſtrong love hath theſe five things in it.

Firſt, It is not weakned by time, it never waxeth old; true love, the older it grows, the ſtronger and freſher it grows. We ſay, Time is a great eater, it conſumes all things; but Eternity cannot eat out true love, either to God or man. True love ſhall be old, but it never waxeth cold, nor vaniſheth away.

Secondly, True love is not hindred by remoteneſs of place, love knows no local diſtances; a friend in the fartheſt parts of the world, is as near to real affection, as he that lodgeth under the ſame roof, and eats bread with us every day. We may ſoon remove out of the ſight, but we cannot remove out of the mind of a friend indeed.

Thirdly, True friendſhip or love is fruitful; ſincere affection will put it ſelf forth, and bud into action, it doth not reſt at the tongues end, or confine it ſelf to fine expreſſions, and complements, but it makes appearance or may be ſeen at the fingers ends, and is laborious in works and offices of friendſhip. As faith, ſo love without works is dead, and as that faith which juſtifies, ſo the love of a juſt perſon is juſtified by works. Hence the beloved Diſciple mingles or makes up his counſel about this duty with a dehortation and an exhortation (1 Joh. 3.18.) Brethren, let us not love in word or in tongue, but in deed, and in truth; that is, let our deeds ſpeak the truth of our love; it is an eaſie matter to ſay, but it is a great matter to do or to deed our love. Much love may be expreſſed by the tongue, but actions are the compleature of love. There may be abundance of love-labour in lip-labour, but where love labours truly at the lips, it will not withdraw the labour of the hand, or of the whole man for his good whom we love.

Fourthly, Truth of affection is full of compaſſion, ſorrowing the ſorrows, and being afflicted in the afflictions of thoſe we love; it is ſo far from departing from thoſe that are burden'd, that it bears a part of the burden with them; it weeps with thoſe that weep, and cauſeth us to remember thoſe that are in bonds as bound with them, and them that ſuffer adverſity, as being our ſelves alſo in the body (Heb. 13. 1, 2.) They who are of one heart, make both their loſſes and their enjoyments common, they all ſhare in what befals any one.

Fifthly, True love is as ready to own the perſon of a friend, as to ſympathize with his condition. As hope makes us not aſhamed of our own eſtate, whatſoever it is, ſo love makes us not aſhamed of the eſtate of another (Prov. 17. 17.) A friend loves at all times; he is not aſhamed to profeſs or expreſs his love at any time. He loves his friend in good report and ill report, (if that ill report be not raiſed upon his ill deſert) in honour and in diſhonour (if that diſhonour riſe not from his diſhoneſty); he is neither aſhamed of his friends poverty, nor of his priſon, when (not his own ſin, but) the chaſtning hand of God, or the unjuſt hand of man caſts him into either.

Thus a friend loves at all times, and he that loves not at all times, is no friend at all. We ſhall quickly ſee the end of their love, who love either God or man mearly for ſelf-ends: but where the ends of love to God or man are pure, that love will endure and hold out unto the end. Chriſt forewarns us (Matth. 24. 12.) That in the latter times, becauſe iniquity ſhall abound, the love of many ſhall wax cold: cold no doubt to God, and cold to man. The abounding of iniquity in thoſe dayes will make a ſcarcity of love. When iniquity abounds, trouble waxeth hot. And as then all falſe love waxeth quite cold, ſo the true love of ſome both to God and man will wax colder then it was. The blaſts of trouble, whether among or againſt the brethren, may (poſſibly) blow up and more inkindle the love of ſome, but they will blow out and quench the love of many. Trouble is the ſureſt trial of love; and therefore Chriſt tells us plainly (what Job found in the time of his perſonal trouble) that in times of great publick trouble there ſhall be but little love.

Secondly, In that Job complains of this ſo much and ſo often in his affliction, Obſerve,

The alienation of friends, or their abatements of love, is a very great encreaſe of our ſorrow in times of ſorrow.

The kindneſs of friends is comfortable at all times, much more in ſad times. And as their unkindneſs leſſens our comforts in good times, ſo it adds to our ſorrow in evil times, and that upon a threefold conſideration.

Firſt, Becauſe they are obliged by received courteſies.

Secondly, Becauſe they have obliged themſelves by promiſed kindneſſes. It doth not trouble us much to ſee them uncourteous to us, who never received courteſie from us; or to ſee them unwilling to do us a kindneſs, who never promiſed any. But when we ſee our courteſies loſt upon any man, or him ſitting looſe to us, notwithſtanding all his own promiſes, this goes to the heart, and cuts deep. An unexpected croſs is not ſo grievous to us, as the croſſing our expectation. God himſelf calls Heaven and Earth to witneſs againſt ſuch as fail him in obedience, when he hath fill'd and followed them with benefits, (Iſa. 1. 2.) I have nouriſhed and brought up Children (ſaith the Lord) and they have rebelled againſt me. Though when any man rebelleth againſt God, he croſſeth his will, yet many rebel againſt him of whom (in a fence) we may ſay, that they do not croſs his expectation; for though he hath deſerved better at the hands of all, yet he looks for no better at the hands of ſome: But when Children, and Children whom he hath tenderly brought up and nouriſhed, rebel againſt him; when they whom he hath even ſtudied to pleaſe, care not to pleaſe him; when they from whom he had reaſon to expect all obedience, and nothing but obedience, pay him with rebellion, he will bear no longer. 'Tis thus in a proportion between man and man, as between God and man. Hence David complains often of the unkind alienation of friends, (Pſal. 31. 11.) I was a reproach among all mine enemies (that was not ſo much, he could expect no better) but ſpecially amongſt my neighbours, and a fear to mine acquaintance; they that did ſee me without fled from me. David ſpeaks here of three ſorts; Firſt, Enemies; Secondly, Neighbours; And thirdly, Acquaintance. That his Enemies reproached him, was a trouble to him, yet the leaſt of his troubles; the thing which troubled him moſt, was, that his Neighbours reproached, and that his Acquaintance were afraid of him; he was a fear to his acquaintance, not that they were afraid he would do them any hurt, but they were afraid to own him, or do him any good. We have David bemoaning himſelf again for this (Pſal. 38. 11.) My lovers and my friends ſtand aloof from my ſore, and my kinſmen ſtand afar off. His friends came near enough to him when he was (as we ſay) in a whole skin, or in a good condition, but when ſores were upon him, he means it not of ſores (in proper ſence) upon his fleſh, but of ſores in a metaphor, troubles in his eſtate; then as if his ſore had been a plague-ſore, they ſtood afar off. Read the ſame holy man once more bewailing the unfaithfulneſs of his friends (Pſal. 69. 8.) I am become a ſtranger to my brethren, and an aliant to my mothers Children. And though Heman's greateſt trouble was a divine Deſertion, yet he was not a little troubled that men deſerted him (Pſal. 88. 8.) Thou haſt put away my acquaintance far from me; thou haſt made me an abomination unto them. Heman had a precious ſpirit, yet God at once poured terror upon him, and ſuffered men to pour contempt upon him; and while the terrors of God diſtracted him, he could not conceal how much the contempt of men diſquieted him.

Thirdly obſerve, The moſt profeſſed and real friends in the world, may prove unſteady and unkind.

We cannot be aſſured of any friend but Chriſt. Where or whom he loves, he loves to the end; but we may quickly ſee the end of mans love. Men are mutable in their condition, but more mutable in their affections. Now they love, anon they hate; now they applaud, anon they calumniate; now they lay us in their hearts, and anon they caſt us out of their houſes; now they cannot tell how to live out of our company, and anon they cannot live in it. There are many rocks upon which love hath ſplit, and friendſhip hath been broken; but uſually 'tis ſome change in our outward condition, which makes the change in our affection. Sometimes the proſperity of friends turns our love into envy: And, which we may (charitably) interpret as an argument of Gods favour to them, checks our friendſhip with them.

It is an ancient obſervation, That proſperity hath many friends, yea, that all men are greedy to call themſelves the kindred of the rich; and like ſwallows to flutter about thoſe who live in the warm ſummer of worldly aboundance. Yet the envy of ſome is too hard for their love, and they grow poor and beggarly in their affections to thoſe who outgrow them in riches and poſſeſſions. Some cannot rejoyce in friends any longer then they ſtand upon equal terms and even ground with them. But the ordinary rock upon which friendſhip ſuffers, is poverty and affliction; that which ſhould be the ſpecial ſeaſon for friends to ſhew themſelves in, becomes the occaſion of their falling off (Prov. 17. 17.) A friend loves at all times, and a brother is born for adverſity; as if he had ſaid, there is little or no uſe of a brother, but in a time of adverſity, or that's the ſpecial time in which we have uſe of him, he is born for that very end, to aſſiſt and comfort an afflicted Brother; as Chriſt ſpeaks of witneſs-bearing to the truth (Joh. 18. 37.) To this end was I born, and for this cauſe came I into the world, that I ſhould bear witneſs to the truth: As if Chriſt had thus expreſſed himſelf, I ſhould looſe the very end of my birth, the end why I came into the world, if I ſhould not bear witneſs to the truth; ſo we may conclude, if brethren and friends help not their friends and brethren in adverſity, they looſe the very end why they were born, and the deſign of ſetting up that relation. To give witneſs to an oppreſſed truth, and to give aſſiſtance to a diſtreſſed brother, are a pair of the nobleſt works, which we have to do in this world. Yet we rarely find either zeal enough in men to give witneſs to oppreſſed truths, or love enough in men to give help to their diſtreſſed brethren.

εὐτυχία πολύφιλος. εὐτυχόντων πάντες εἰσὶ συγγενεῖς. Græc. Prov.

Fourthly obſerve, Holy and good men may be deſerted by friends that are holy and good.

Job was a good man, and there is no queſtion but Job had good men to his friends, and that divers of his kindred feared God, yet how ſhamefully was he diſowned by them all? There is no duty, whether to God or man, but a good man may come ſhort in his anſwer to it; In many things we offend all, and all are apt to offend in this. As the law of faith in God, ſo the law of love to man is not eaſily fulfilled. Where the true habit of love is, there may be a great defect in the exerciſe of it. As he that hath faith, doth not alwayes act faith, ſometimes he acts as an unbeliever; and as he that hath the graces of patience and humility, doth not alwayes act the patient and the humble man; ſo he that hath love, and is a friend at his heart, may yet ſhew himſelf unfriendly: Not only may carnal and graceleſs friends, but even ſpiritual and gracious friends prove very vain and unſtable to us. As Alexander the Copperſmith, a temporary Believer, turn'd enemy againſt Paul, and did him much evil (2 Tim. 4. 14.) So they who were true Believers and ſound in the faith, were not true to him in their friendſhip; for they all forſook him, though not through unfaithfulneſs, yet through fear in an evil day, as he complains at the ſixteenth verſe of the ſame Chapter. At my firſt anſwer no man ſtood with me, all forſook me. Paul had not a friend to own him, or ſhew him any love when he was brought before Nero. How great the ſin of this univerſal deſertion was, we may collect from that ſerious interceſſion, I pray God it be not laid to their charge. Unleſs free mercy come in with pardon and diſcharge, our cowardly withdrawings from Saints in times of danger, as well as our withdrawings from Chriſt and his Truth, will be charged ſadly upon us. When Chriſt himſelf was betrayed by Judas, and attached by the Jews, all his Diſciples (even John the beloved Diſciple, who but a little before leaned on his boſom) forſook him and fled: And as all they fled from him, ſo Peter who followed him, followed him afar off; and when he was come to Chriſt in his bodily preſence, even unto the high Prieſts Palace, he then forſook, and fled from Chriſt more then all his fellow-Diſciples, he denied him, and forſwore him: Our Lord Jeſus Chriſt might ſay indeed, My familiars and acquaintance are verily eſtranged from me. Therefore in ſuch forſakings and failings of friends, let us not be ſcandalized, as if ſome new thing had happened, or as if this were not a temptation common to man. While we remember that Chriſt was forſaken, that Paul was forſaken, that Job was forſaken, who are we, that we ſhould not be forſaken? Men may ſay it, and yet fail; only God hath ſaid it, who cannot fail; I will never leave thee nor forſake thee.

To cloſe this Point, take theſe four Deductions.

Firſt, There is no friend upon whom we can fully confide, but God himſelf.

And indeed to confide fully on any friend (were upon the matter) either to ſuppoſe or make him our God (Mic. 7. 5.) Truſt ye not in a friend, put ye not confidence in a guide; keep the doors of thy mouth from her that lieth in thy boſom: for the ſon diſhonoureth his father, the daughter riſeth up againſt her mother, the daughter-in-law againſt her mother-in-law; a mans enemies are the men of his own houſe. But may we not truſt friend nor brother? May not a husband truſt the ſecrets of his heart with his wife? This ſeems unnatural to all theſe relations, and takes that from them which is a principal end why they are. The Prophet in all theſe cautions againſt creature-truſt, doth not command or teach friends to nouriſh jealouſies concerning each others faithfulneſs (which is the canker of friendſhip) nor would he have the husband torment himſelf with fears of his wives diſloyalty to him, if he ſhould communicate his boſom-ſecrets to her (which were to make marriage a meer bondage.) That which he aims at, is to arm us with patience, if friends fail and prove unfaithful; or to forewarn us that there is no friend but may prove unfaithful; and that therefore, as himſelf did (v. 7.) we ſhould reſolve to look unto the Lord, that is, to be confident of his help alone.

Secondly, It is of God that friends are faithful and true unto us.

When friends are friendly, this is of God; and if our friends are unfriendly, this alſo is of God. The Lord can make our enemies to be at peace with us. And unleſs he uphold the hearts of our friends, they will quickly be as enemies to us. The ſmiles and the frowns, the love and the hatred, the good will and the ill will of man are ordered by a divine hand; riches and honour, with all other accommodations and comforts of this life, are not more the gift of God to us, then the affections of our friends are.

Thirdly, Though friends have given us much proof of their faithfulneſs, yet they may fail in the offices of friendſhip.

Not only profeſſed, but experienced friends may prove vain and helpleſs to us. We cannot conclude that any man will do us good, or ſtand our friend, becauſe he hath done ſo; for not only may his hand be ſhortened, and he cannot do as before; but his mind may change, ſo that he will not do as before. Experiencrs of what God hath done for us, are ſtrong grounds of confidence in him; the more experience we have, the more hope; but the experience we have of men, is not a ſure ground of hope; that they have been a ſupport and comfort to us, is no infallible argument that they will be ſo again.

What Abſalom ſaid to Huſhai (when upon a ſeeming defection from David, he offered him his ſervice and advice) Is this thy kindneſs to thy friend? Why wenteſt thou not with thy friend? The ſame may be ſaid to many, who make real defection from their friends, and apoſtatize from all their moſt ſerious profeſſions of friendſhip; Is this your kindneſs to your friends? why go you not with your friends? Falſe friends will alwayes fail us for an advantage to themſelves; and true friends may ſometimes fail us, when we expect moſt advantage, and need moſt aſſiſtance from them. Who can bring a clean thing out of an unclean? is Job's denying queſtion in this Book. We may alſo queſtion with as ſtrong a negative concerning perſons; Who can find a certain friend among men, who are all (upon one account or other) uncertain? We have no aſſurance of men but this, that ſurely men of low degree are vanity, and men of high degree are a lie (Pſal. 62. 9.) Men of high degree and men of low degree, comprehend all ſorts of men: A lie and vanity comprehend all kinds of uncertainty; and therefore (though ſuch men, whoſe hearts God eſtabliſheth to us, may be ſure to us, yet) we may write uncertainty, uncertainty, upon all men.

Fourthly, 'Tis beſt to uſe friends as knowing that they may fail us.

We muſt have them as if we had them not, and love them as if we loved them not. Not that we ſhould be unſound or cold in our love to others (that were not only uncivil, but ſinful) but that we ſhould not be confident, or make our ſelves ſure of the love of any. That man who is unſound or cold in his love, is leſs then a friend; and he that is confident, or makes himſelf ſure of the love of a friend, makes him more then a man. That ſpeech, So love as if thou ſhouldeſt ſhortly hate, may have an ill uſe; yet there is a good uſe to be made of it: For though (in regard of the ſincerity of our own affections) we ſhould ſo love, as if we were to love for ever, yet in regard of the inſtability of mans affections, we ſhould ſo love, as if occaſion might be given us to hate every moment. We muſt ſo love God, as knowing that whom he loves, he loves to the end, that is, without any end of loving; yet we muſt ſo pleaſe God, as if we feared his love might end, or be turned into hatred every hour: but though we ſhould be willing to pleaſe and pleaſure men in all lawful things, as if their love towards us could never end; yet we muſt ſo love them, as knowing that their love might quickly end. We rarely give our friends ſo much love as we ought; but we often expect more love from them then we ſhould. We can never give God ſo much love as we ought, nor are we able to hope for ſo much love from him as we ſhould. 'Tis beſt for us to give all our love to God, and not to expect much from man: We may hope for moſt from God, when we expect leaſt from the creature. The freſh ſprings of the conſolation of God flow moſt fully into us, when the freſh ſprings of our affection run chiefly unto God. And the Lord is pleaſed ſometimes purpoſely to ſtain the beauty of all our comforts in the creature, with their failings and uncertainties, that while we uſe them, we may enjoy none but himſelf; and that while we love them, we might live only in and upon his love.

Sic ama tanquam oſurus.

VERS. 15, 16, 17, 18, 19.

They that dwell in mine houſe, and my maids count me for a ſtranger, I am an aliant in their ſight.

I called my ſervant, and he gave me no anſwer; I entreated him with my mouth.

My breath is ſtrange to my wife, though I entreated for the childrens ſake of mine own body.

Yea, young children deſpiſed me, I aroſe, and they ſpake againſt me.

All my inward friends abhorred me, and they whom I loved, are turned againſt me.

Verſe 15. They that dwell in mine houſe.

גור ‧ גרי Variè redditur, Incolæ, inquilini, advenæ. Inquilini domus meæ. Vulg. Γείτονες οἰκίας. Vicini domus. Sept.

THe word is rendred a Tenant who hires Land to uſe, or a Houſe to dwell in; and ſo ſome underſtand it here; They that dwell in mine houſe, that is, they that hire my Houſes, or my Lands, and dwell upon them; My Tenants count me a ſtranger.

Others tranſlate Neighbors, or ſuch as dwelt near him; My Neighbors count me a ſtranger.

Thirdly, The word ſignifies a Sojourner, one who hath the conveniencies of Lodging and Diet in the houſe (Exod. 3. 22.) Every woman ſhall borrow of her neighbour, and of her that ſojourneth in the houſe, Jewels of ſilver, and Jewels of Gold.

Fourthly, The word may note any paſſenger or ſtranger whom we entertain and admit to ſtay with us, and abide in our houſe for a ſeaſon. The ſojourner lives with us at his own charge, he payes for what he receives; but the ſtranger ſtayes with us upon our coſt, and hath his welcome freely. Be not forgetful (ſaith the Apoſtle) to entertain ſtrangers (Heb. 13. 2.) So the word is uſed (Exod. 2. 22.) Moſes called his Sons name Gerſhom, for he ſaid, I have been a ſtranger in a ſtrange Land. And Job ſhewing his nobleneſs in Hoſpitality, ſaith (chap. 31. 32.) The ſtranger did not lodge in the ſtreet; I took him into my houſe.

Eadem vox Gherim Hebræi vocabant eos quos Græci προσήλυτους vocant, illos, ſc. qui non genere, ſed quaſi adoptione initiati profitebantur Judaiſmum, & circumciſionem accipiebant. Bold.

Fifthly, This word ſignifies a Proſelyte, who was not originally of the people of Iſrael, but a Gentile, or a ſtranger by birth; yet receiving Circumciſion, was looked upon as one of them, and admitted to the priviledges of the Jews. The word is uſed in that ſence (Exod. 12. 48.) When a ſtranger ſhall ſojourn with thee, and will keep the Paſſeover to the Lord, let all his Males be circumciſed, and then let him come near and keep it. Of ſuch Chriſt ſpeaks (Mat. 23. 15.) Wo unto you Scribes and Phariſees hypocrites; for ye compaſs Sea and Land to make one Proſelyte (that is, to bring one into the Jewiſh Religion) and when he is made, ye make him twofold more the child of hell then your ſelves; for (to open that difficulty only in paſſage) though ſeducers are ſeven-fold the children of hell more then the ſeduced, barely ſo conſidered, in which regard, the ſeducing Phariſees were the elder ſons of Satan, or more the ſons of Satan then the ſeduced Proſelytes; yet becauſe young proſelytes who drink in falſe opinions or ſuperſtitions, at the perſwaſions of others, are uſually far more taken with them, and more zealous for them, then their perſwaders (we have ſeen many Novices very violent, and even to out-act their Leaders) hence it is (as I conceive) that Chriſt ſaith, that the old Phariſees made the young Proſelytes twofold more the children of hell then themſelves; ſeeing by how much any do the more advance the deſign of hell, by ſo much the more they are advanced in their portion in hell; Double work ſhall have double wages. But to return; though ſome Proſelytes were at once converted and perverted, or, turned from what they were, to what they ſhould not be, yet many were indeed converted from what they were, to what they ſhould be: And 'tis ſuppoſed, that the Pſalmiſt includes thoſe (Pſal. 118. 2, 3, 4.) among all ſorts that are invited to praiſe the Lord, Firſt, The whole body of the Jewiſh Nation (verſ. 2.) Let Iſrael now ſay, &c. Secondly, The Prieſts and Levites (verſ. 3.) Let the Houſe of Aaron ſay, his mercy endureth for ever. Thirdly, The Proſelytes (verſ. 4.) Let them now that fear the Lord, ſay, that his mercy endureth for ever. Some who were not either of the houſe of Aaron, that is, of the Prieſts or Levites, nor of the houſe of Iſrael, that is, native Jews, yet might be of the Jewiſh Religion, and fear the Lord. All ſuch were called Proſelytes, and therefore they alſo were invited to praiſe the Lord. Some underſtand Job ſpeaking of ſuch in this Text; The dwellers in mine houſe, or proſelytes, ſuch as I have been a means to turn to God, even they turn away from me; They count me a ſtranger, and I am an aliant in their ſight.

זר Alienum ſignificat & hoſtem.

They counted me a ſtranger.] The word ſignifies not only a ſtranger, but an enemy. Strangers have devoured the Land (Iſa. 1. 7.) that is, enemies. And the reaſon why the ſame word ſignifies both an enemy and a ſtranger is, becauſe enemies are the worſt of ſtrangers: And though ſometimes our neighbours and they of our own houſe are enemies to us, yet moſt commonly our enemies are ſtrangers to us, and alwayes they who are enemies, are eſtranged from us. In which ſence Solomon often calls the Harlot a ſtrange woman (Prov. 2. 16. & 5. 3. &c.) Not only becauſe ſhe is a ſtranger, or another, from a lawful wife, but becauſe ſhe is really an enemy, and will deſtroy his peace who is enticed and overcome by her.

Further, This word which we render Stranger, ſignifies alſo a prophane man, who indeed ſhould be a ſtranger to the Saints, and is a ſtranger to God, as the Apoſtle expreſſeth all ſuch (Eph. 2. 12.) Aliens from the Commonwealth of Iſrael, ſtrangers from the Covenant of promiſe, having no hope, and without God in the world. So ſome underſtand it here.

Sicut prophanum reputaverunt me. Targ.

They count me a ſtranger.] That is, the men of my houſe, who have ſeen my way of worſhip, and have joyned with me in the exerciſes of Religion, now that I am fallen under theſe afflictions, account me as a ſtranger from the Covenant, as a prophane man, as an out-caſt from the people of God: As if he had ſaid, They who were ſtrangers and aliens from the true God, now count me a ſtranger and an alien, as if I had renounced my Religion, and had made a defection from the fear of God.

נכרי Extraneus fui.

And I am an aliant in their ſight] An Aliant is a man unknown to us, or if known to us, yet not of the ſame Nation with us. I am accounted an Aliant; as if I were not the ſame man, as if I were not Job, but a ſtrange kind of creature, newly come into the world, or come from another world. My friends look upon me as if they had never ſeen me before, or any like me; they whiſper among themſelves, or ſay in their hearts, Is this Job? Surely it is not he, or if it be, he is not the man he was. Hence note,

First, Man is ready to receive, and as ready to forget received courteſies.

Job was not counted a ſtranger by ſtrangers, but by home-dwellers, by perſons obliged, by ſuch as had taſted of his favours, and reaped a plentiful harveſt from his bounty; theſe, theſe were they who counted him a ſtranger. How unnatural and inhumane is it to count him a ſtranger to us, that hath entertained us when we were ſtrangers? Yet ſuch returns man makes to man. And no marvel if ſuch be the carriage of man to man, when man carries it thus to God himſelf. Every ſin we commit againſt God, is a tranſgreſſion, not only of the Law of holineſs, but of Law of the love and kindneſs. The Apoſtle doth moſt ſignificantly put theſe two together, unthankful, unholy (2 Tim. 3. 2.) Seeing every act of unholineſs hath much unthankfulneſs in it. We are dwellers in Gods houſe. The whole world is Gods houſe; he hath ſet up this great Fabrick; yet to how many that dwell in this houſe is God a ſtranger, and an alien in their ſight? They live without God in the world. Yea, there are many that dwell in Gods more ſpecial houſe, the viſible Church, who yet count God as a ſtranger; or at leaſt have little acquaintance with him. Many profeſs the name of God, who know not what it is to converſe with God. And they who know what it is, are yet ſo ſlow and ſeldom in it, that the Lord may juſtly ſay, You that dwell in my houſe count me a ſtranger. We have all our accommodations in the houſe of God; he feeds and provides for our bodies in his common houſe, the world; and in his ſpiritual houſe, the Church, he feeds and makes proviſion for our ſouls, and yet (in a great meaſure) we are as ſtrangers to him, and give the Lord cauſe to be a ſtranger unto us. Moſes having told the people of Iſrael what God had been to them, and done for them, checks their unthankfulneſs, Deut. 32. 6. Do ye thus requite the Lord, O fooliſh people, people and unwiſe? Why? what had the Lord done for them? He had taken them into his houſe, he made them his houſe, he dwelt among them, yet they forgot him and turned aſide unto other gods. They made themſelves ſtrange gods, and ſo made God a ſtranger to them. They who take ſtrange Gods, make the true God a ſtranger; If God alone be not our God, he is not at all our God. It is ſaid of good Hezekiah (2 Chron. 32. 25.) that when the Lord had healed him, and reſtored him from the grave, whither he gave himſelf for gone; that, yet Hezekiah rendred not again according to the benefits done to him; for his heart was lifted up; his heart ſhould have been lifted up in thankfulneſs, but his heart was lifted up in pride. God dwells with an humble ſoul, and humble ſouls dwell with God; but as God beholds the proud afar off, ſo when any of his own people, who are in a ſtate of nearneſs to him, are lifted up with pride, they behold God afar off, he is as a ſtranger to them. While we keep cloſe to God by faith, our hearts are kept low by humility. Hezekiah prayed hard to have his body healed, and no ſooner was his body healed of that ſwelling boil, but his ſoul ſweld. They who are proud, whether towards God or man, can never be thankful. When ſhall we who are ſo greedy to receive, ſay, what ſhall we return?

Secondly, Conſider how Job taxeth thoſe who had dwelt in his houſe, whom he had entertained when they were ſtrangers, who had received kindneſſes from him. O ſaith he, They that dwell in mine houſe, count me a ſtranger.

Hence note, Man cannot but reſent it ill to ſee thoſe forgetful of him that have received kindneſs from him.

The former point ſhewed that we are apt to forget the courteſies we receive; this ſhews how deep an impreſſion this makes upon their hearts from whom we receive them: when they that dwell in our houſes count us ſtrangers, when they who have eaten our bread will not own us, what brand is black enough for ſuch unthankfulneſs? Now, if man cannot bear it to ſee thoſe forgetful of him, of whom he hath been mindful, and to whom he hath been helpful, ſurely God will not bear it at the hand of man. This cauſed the Lord (*Iſa.*1.2.) to make his appeal to Heaven and Earth, Hear O ye Heavens, and give ear O Earth: What's the matter? I have nouriſhed and brought up Children, and they have rebelled againſt me. God reſented it deeply when ſuch as himſelf had nouriſhed, rebelled; when the Children whom he had brought up were diſobedient againſt him. There is an obligation in nature, to bring up Children, to feed and nouriſh them. Now, if it be ſo offenſive when Children do not anſwer our care in their breeding and education; much more is this true in reference to ſtrangers. The Lord may tell thoſe who are now his Children, that he nouriſhed, yea and redeemed them, when they were not only ſtrangers, but enemies; how greatly then do we provoke the Lord by our unthankfulneſs, when we make him a ſtranger to us, who took us in when we were ſtrangers, and acted ſuch unſpeakable love to us when we were enemies.

Further, the Text holds out another antecedent to theſe words, beſides the dwellers or ſojourners in Job's houſe, even his houſhold ſervants.

My maidens count me a ſtranger, I am an aliant in their ſight.

He ſpeaks alſo of his men-ſervants in the next verſe; I called my ſervant, and he gave me no anſwer. We are now come to the third ſort whom Job taxeth of unanſwerableneſs in duty to him in his afflictions. Firſt, His kindred were unkind; Secondly, His friends were unfriendly; Thirdly, His ſervants proved unſerviceable.

My maidens.] The word which is here uſed for Maidens, doth not ſignifie thoſe who are for ordinary ſervice only, but ſuch as have command and truſt, ſuch as keep the keyes of the family. The word imports truſt: ſervants are expreſt by that word both for the truſt committed to them, and for their expected faithfulneſs in that truſt. Abigail gives a diſtinction of maid-ſervants in that expreſſion (1 *Sam.*25.41.) ſome for government, others for common work in the houſe: that Text ſaith, She aroſe and bowed her ſelf on her face to the earth, and ſaid, Behold let thine hand-maid be as a ſervant to waſh the feet of the ſervants of my Lord.

אמה Ancilla, ſic dicta à fidelitate; ancilla libera & ingenua; cui credita ſunt præcipua domus miniſteria. Bold.

Let thy hand-maid.] There ſhe expreſſeth her ſelf by the word of the Text, Let thy hand-maid be as a ſervant; that word notes a ſervant of an inferior rank, not a directing, or an over-ſeeing ſervant, but a working ſervant; Let thy hand-maid be as a ſervant (to do the meaneſt work) to waſh the feet of the ſervants of my Lord. Job ſpeaks of the beſt ſort of ſervants, not of drudges; My maidens (who had truſt) accounted me as a ſtranger.

שפחה Notat ſervã abjectioris conditionis.

Verſ. 16. I called my ſervant, and he gave me no anſwer.

'Tis the duty of ſervants to be at a call, or to come when they are called. The word implies calling by name, which is a free and a familiar way of calling. It carries ſome reſpect and favour in it to ſpeak to a ſervant by name; I called my ſervant, and he gave me no anſwer: Silence is ſometime a ſign of conſent, but ſilence is here taken for a ſign of contempt; not to anſwer when we are called is incivility in moſt, and it is undutifulneſs in ſome; if a ſervant anſwer not when he is called, he forgets what his calling is. The Apoſtle forbids ſervants ſome kind of anſwering (Tit. 2. 9.) Exhort ſervants to be obedient to their own Maſters, and to pleaſe them well in all things, not anſwering again; yet here Job reproves and complains of it as a fault in his ſervant, that he did not anſwer; how then ſaith the Apoſtle, Not anſwering again?

There is a twofold anſwering; Firſt, By way of contradiction; Secondly, By way of ſubmiſſion; or there is an anſwer of reluctance, and an anſwer of obedience: when the Apoſtle ſaith to ſervants, Be obedient to your Maſters, not anſwering again, he means, not anſwering by way of contradiction, or reluctance, as ſervants are very apt to do. When Maſters give lawful commands, ſervants muſt give anſwer by ſubmitting, not by queſtioning, much leſs by oppoſing: hence we put in the margent, Not gainſaying. A ſervant muſt give an anſwer when he is asked a queſtion, but he muſt not gain-ſay when he is enjoyned a duty. Some ſervants are both lowd and lazy, quick of tongue and ſlow of hand. Job's ſervant was one if not both theſe; I called my ſervant, and he gave me no anſwer.

And I intreated him with my mouth.] I did not only call, but intreat him; the language of a Maſter is imperative, 'tis his place to command, not to entreat; but ſaith Job, I intreated. The word here uſed ſignifies the humbleſt intreaty, the intreaty of a poor man for an alms; according to that of Solomon in the Proverbs (Chap.18.23.) The man uſeth entreaties, or, ſpeaketh ſupplications; it is this word, he ſpeaketh humbly; they that are rich and have enough ſpeak big, the words of Great men are uſually like themſelves great and high, but poor men ſpeak ſupplications. Job did not ſpeak commands, but ſupplications to his ſervant; he did not ſpeak to him as a ſervant, but as if himſelf had been his ſervant, at leaſt, as if he had been his fellow-ſervant. As his eſtate was brought low, ſo his ſpirit was humble; 'tis comly when our expreſſions bear the image of our condition.

חנן Eſt blandè loqui & cũ obſecrationibus, ut loquitur pauper.

I intreated him with my mouth.] There is ſomewhat more in that. The mouth is the ſhop of words (as the heart is of thoughts) there they are wrought and framed, and from thence they are ſent out; yet a man may ſpeak and not with his mouth; a nod with the head, a look with the eye, a motion from the hand, have a language in them, eſpecially from a Maſter to his ſervants; and there are geſtures of the head, hand, or eye, which may ſignifie not only ſpeaking but entreating; but Job entreated with his mouth; a maſter may entreat by the mouth of another, and ſend a meſſenger to entreat his ſervant. Had Job done only ſo, that had been much; but it is much more for a Maſter to entreat with his own mouth, I intreated him with my mouth, I ſpake my ſelf, and yet I could get no anſwer. Job puts in all theſe aggravations to ſet forth this part of his affliction; he called, he intreated, and that with his own mouth, yet his ſervant regarded not.

Further, His meaning is not only that he could not get a word from his ſervant, but that he could not get any work from him. Job's ſervant did not only refuſe to ſpeak to him, but to do for him; when a ſervant makes no anſwer with his mouth, yet if he act with his hand, it makes ſome amends; his induſtriouſneſs is a ſatisfaction for his unmannerlineſs; and his diligence may obtain pardon for his ſilence. We read in the Goſpel of a Father who ſaid to one of his Sons, Go, and he anſwered, I will go, but he did not; he anſwered with his mouth, but not with his hand: to another ſon he ſaid, go, do ſuch a thing, and he ſaid, I will not; he did not only not promiſe to go, but plainly denied to go; but afterwards he repented and went, he denied his Father with his tongue, but he obeyed with his hand; it were well if a ſervant who forbears to anſwer by word, would anſwer by his work. When Job's ſervant gave him no anſwer, he gave him neither word nor work, neither tongue nor hand. And though Job's ſervant had denied him nothing but an anſwer in words, yet he had reaſon enough to be troubled at it, and to number it among his ſorrows. Not to anſwer when we are called to, is a deſpiſing of him that calleth us; and we can hardly ſpeak any thing of a man, which renders him more worthleſs, then by not ſpeaking to him. What can we eſteem him worthy of, whom we do not eſteem worthy of a word from us? Hence obſerve, Firſt, A man in affliction is apt to lay every thing to heart; and is very jealous of every mans carriage towards him.

We are ſenſible of any diſreſpect from men, when the hand of God is upon us; Job could not but take notice of a ſlight from his ſervant: We might think that Job a man of a great and truly noble ſpirit, ſhould have over-looked the neglect of his maidens and men-ſervants, and not have troubled himſelf with it, but he could not. Though the thing in it ſelf was light, yet it lay heavy upon his ſpirit; as in his proſperity he did not deſpiſe the cauſe of his man-ſervant, or of his maid-ſervant, when they contended with him, (Chap. 31. 13.) ſo in his adverſity he could not deſpiſe the contempt of his man-ſervant, or of his maid-ſervant, when they did not own nor anſwer him. We take moſt notice of little evils, when great evils are upon us. And as uſually it is our infirmity to do ſo, ſo there may be both a diſcovery and an exerciſe of much grace in doing ſo. For as it ſhews much holineſs of ſpirit, if when we are loaded with great mercies, we can take notice of little mercies to be thankful for them, ſo if when we are under great afflictions, we take notice of little afflictions to profit by them. He that is ſpiritual, deſires to pick out the meaning of God towards him, in the ſmalleſt croſs-carriage of man towards him. There is much faith ſeen in bearing a heavy croſs, and much tenderneſs in feeling the lighteſt croſs. And as he that hath a tender conſcience is troubled for, and feels the ſmart of the leaſt ſin which he hath committed againſt God, ſo he feels ſome ſmart of the leaſt trouble inflicted upon him by the hand of man, becauſe he looks upon it as a tryal ſent from God.

Secondly, In that he complains thus of his ſervants, Obſerve,

God can create trouble to us out of any of our relations.

They who live and depend upon us, may become a burden to our lives. As ſervants are a help to their Maſters, ſo Maſters are the ſupport and ſtay of their ſervants, they feed them, they cloath them, they lodge them, they have all that they have in the world from them. 'Tis true, ſome ſervants have been great comforts to their Maſters, they have been to them as their right hand, or as their Children; hence Solomon gives the wiſe ſervant a part of the inheritance among the brethren, (Prov. 17. 2.) yet how often doth that relation prove an affliction? How many ſervants are there, who ſerve their own ends, and not their Maſters, or who care not to ſerve their Maſters any longer or further, then they can ſerve their own ends? The ill diſpoſition and demeanor of ſervants, is none of the leaſt of thoſe troubles, of which the Apoſtle warns them that marry (2 Cor. 7.28.) Nevertheleſs ſuch ſhall have trouble in the fleſh; that is, in their outward condition. With all our comforts troubles are mingled, the ſtate of marriage is not only an honourable, but a comfortable ſtate, yet many troubles attend and throng about it: there is comfort in Children, but there is trouble in Children too; there is comfort in ſervants, yet they are troubles alſo. A ſervant is the loweſt and laſt reſort of a miſerable man for comfort, if he be denied it there, if a ſervant refuſe to help, and inſtead of ſubmiſſive and ſweetning anſwers, either ſtands mute and ſullen, or gives revilings, how great is the miſery of ſuch a man?

Ad valde acerbam injuriam pertinet, ut domini cum ſervis blandè loquantur, & ſervi contemnant. Pined.

Thirdly, In that he charges it upon his ſervant, that he did not anſwer when he was called, Obſerve,

It is the duty of ſervants to be obedient to the call and command of their Maſters.

The time and buſineſs of a ſervant, is not his own, but his Maſters hand; and 'tis his duty at all times to ſerve his Maſter in every honeſt buſineſs. Gracious hearts pattern themſelves in their attention to God, by the attentiveneſs of good ſervants to their Maſters (Pſal. 123. 1.) Unto thee lift I up mine eyes, O thou that dwelleſt in the Heavens; behold as the eyes of ſervants looks to the hands of their Maſters, and the eye of a maiden to the hand of a Miſtreſs, ſo our eyes wait upon the Lord our God till he have mercy on us. The ſervants eye ſhould alwayes be upon his Maſter, and the maidens eye upon her Miſtreſs, not only to hearken what they ſay, but to obſerve what they do, and to pick out the meaning of every motion and turning of their hand. A ſervant ſhould alwayes ſtand ready, and ſet himſelf in a poſture of obedience. Beckening with the hand, or a nod with the head, ſhould be to him as a word of command. The Centurion gives that character of a good ſervant (Matth. 8 9.) I have Souldiers under me, and I ſay to one go, and he goeth, and to another come, and he cometh, and to my ſervant do this, and he doth it. Here is no murmurings at, no nor ſo much as any the leaſt diſputings of the orders given. Going and coming and doing, are the beſt language of ſervants; 'tis moſt comly when they ſpeak with their feet, and make anſwer with their hands. The Apoſtle is much upon this obſequiouſneſs of ſervants in moſt of his Epiſtles (1 Tim. 6. 1.) Let as many ſervants as are under the yoak, count their own Maſters worthy of all honour, that the name of God and his doctrine be not blaſphemed: The doctrine of God is, that ſervants ſhould give honour to their Maſters, therefore the doctrine of God is blaſphemed if they do not: The Apoſtle ſpeaks to believing ſervants, and he preſſeth them upon that very account; They that have believing Maſters, let not them deſpiſe them becauſe they are brethren. The Apoſtle ſeems to ſay, that ſome ſervant might thus object, As my Maſter is in the faith, ſo am I too; what honour do I owe him? there is neither Jew no Gentile, bond, or free, maſter nor ſervant, but in Chriſt we are all one: It is true ſaith the Apoſtle, yet abuſe not this priviledge; ye are all one as to the participation of Goſpel-Grace, in the pardon of your ſins, and the juſtification of your perſons; but ye are not all one as to the ſtate of your relations. Grace doth not take away or cut aſunder the bonds of duty, whether natural or civil. Read more, Col. 3. 22. Epheſ. 5. & 6. Now (I ſay) ſeeing the Apoſtle inſiſteth ſo much upon that point, ſurely there is much of the will and glory of God in it, elſe the Spirit of God would not have left ſuch frequent and plentiful admonitions about it. Hence as Paul uſeth a negative conſideration in Timothy, provoking ſervants to obedience, that the name of God be not blaſphemed; ſo he uſeth an affirmative in direct oppoſition to that in his Epiſtle to Titus (Chap. 2. 10.) That they may adorn the doctrine of God our Saviour in all things. Holineſs being moſt viſible in our relations, relational holineſs muſt needs be the chiefeſt ornament of our profeſſion. Whereas Job ſaith, his ſervant would not anſwer, though he intreated him with his mouth, Obſerve,

To act againſt the condeſcention of thoſe who are above us, heightens our ſin.

It is a fault for a ſervant not to anſwer when he is barely called or commanded; but for a ſervant not to anſwer when he is intreated, is exceeding ſinful. Every Maſter is above his ſervant, but when he entreats, he puts himſelf below his ſervant. And by how much the Maſter goes out of his place, in gentleneſs to entreat his ſervant, by ſo much doth a ſervant go the more out of his place in ſtubbornneſs, by not obeying his Maſter. Now, if it be ſuch an aggravation of a ſervants undutifulneſs, not to hear when his Maſter entreateth; how ſinful is it when man doth not hear at Gods entreaty? We are all ſervants to God, how oft doth God call, and we do not anſwer, yea, how often hath he intreated us with his mouth, and yet we have not yielded? God beſeecheth man to be reconciled to him, and he refuſeth; God beſeecheth man to obey him, and he either denieth or delayeth obedience. No man could bear that at a ſervants hand, which God beareth at ours. We are careleſs and negligent, we are ſtubborn and unfaithful, yet God is patient. Did Maſters reflect on their ſervices to God, they they would ſee little cauſe to complain of, or much cauſe to be patient towards their moſt unprofitable ſervants. We are very ſenſible of a ſervants failing in duty to us; when ſhall we be ſenſible as we ought of our failings in duty to God? When we are troubled that ſervants do not come at our call, nor do at our bidding, we ſhould conſider how many calls we have withſtood, and how many biddings we have diſobeyed. Let us be exact in duty to God, and walk to all well-pleaſing, ſeeing we expect exactneſs in duty from man, and to be pleaſed in all things.

Cum vis ut ſerviat tibi ſervus tuus, & tu non vis ſervire Deo, facis Deo quod tu pati non vis. Auguſt.

Job proceedeth to deſcribe his affliction in a nearer relation. By how much any relation is nearer to us in which our affliction lies, by ſo much doth that affliction come nearer to us. Affliction from a ſervant pincheth much, but affliction from a wife pincheth much more.

Verſ. 17. My breath is ſtrange to my wife, though I intreated for the childrens ſake of my own body.

We found that Job's Wives breath was ſtrange to him, (Chap. 2. 9.) when ſhe bid him curſe God and die; now his breath is ſtrange to her. 'Twas ſin which made her breath ſtrange to him; but ſorrow made his breath ſtrange to her.

My breath was ſtrange to my wife.

There are four interpretations of theſe words.

Firſt, Some by the word (Ruach, which we render breath) underſtand the mind, or underſtanding; and becauſe the word which we tranſlate ſtrange, ſignifies alſo to be diſtracted, to be as a mad man who hath loſt the uſe of his reaſon; from both, the ſence is made up thus; I was as a diſtracted man in the account of my Wife, my Wife looks on me as if I were out of my wits, and ſo unfit for her converſe or ſociety. The underſtanding of a madman is a ſtranger to himſelf, and we love not to be near thoſe who are mad.

Quaſi uxor Jobi eum pro demente habuerit. Bold.

Secondly, Others tranſlate, not breath, but life, becauſe life is continued by breathing. Life is the union of ſoul and body, while breath continues, life continues, and the departing of our breath is the departure of life. According to this ſence of the word, the Text is thus tranſlated, My life is ſtrange to my Wife, that is, I being ſick and full of ſores, my Wife is weary of my life, and would be glad to ſee me in my grave; Job was as a man free among the dead, and theſe conceive his Wife was willing to be freed from him by death.

Thirdly, Others by his breath underſtand that which moved upon his breath, his words, or voice, his ſpeech, or complaint. Words are nothing but breath formed and ſhaped to expreſs our minds by; ſo, My breath is ſtrange, is, my words, my complaints to her, my diſcourſes with her are ſtrange; ſhe will not hear me ſpeak, my voice is offenſive and unpleaſant to her by reaſon of my affliction; I deal ſo much in groans and ſighs while I ſpeak, that ſhe cannot bear it to hear me ſpeak.

Fourthly, Take breath ſtrictly for that which we reſpire or breath forth while we live. My breath is ſtrange, that is, loathſom, noyſom, ill ſavoury. So the word is uſed (Numb. 11. 20.) where the Lord tells the people of Iſrael when they murmured for fleſh, that they ſhould have their fill of it (verſ. 20.) Ye ſhall not eat one day, or two dayes, or five dayes, or ten dayes, or twenty dayes, but even a whole moneth, till it come out of your noſtrils, and be loathſom to you (ſo we read, or) till it be ſtrange to you, or an abhorrence to your ſtomach. As all things are ſtrange to us which we never had or uſed, ſo ſome things grow ſtrange to us, becauſe we have and uſe them ſo much. The ſtrangeneſs of loathing is worſe then the ſtrangeneſs of not having. Ye ſhall be acquainted with fleſh till ye count it ſtrange, that is, ungrateful or unwelcom both to your preſence and your palate. So here, My breath is ſtrange to my Wife, 'tis to her as unſavory meat which the ſtomach loatheth, or cannot digeſt; probably the breath of Job might have an ill ſavour, through the continuance of his diſeaſe; any long ſickneſs may breed corruption of the breath, and ſome ſickneſſes ariſe from putrifaction in the lungs or inward parts, which neceſſarily corrupt the breath: 'tis like Job had inward ſores as well as outward, and that theſe made his breath unſavory, yet he looks on this as a part of his affliction, that his breath (though not ſo ſweet and pleaſant as in former times) ſhould be ſtrange to his Wife.

My breath is ſtrange to my Wife.] He adds an aggravation to this unkindneſs of his Wife, as before to the neglect of his ſervants; as he intreated them, ſo he intreated her; My breath is ſtrange to my Wife,

Though I intreated for the Childrens ſake of my own body.

Some render it diſtinctly, and make this a deſcription of the undutifulneſs he found in his Children; My breath is ſtrange to my Wife, and I intreated my own Children; implying that they alſo refuſed; I intreated the Children of my own body, I was a ſuppliant to my own bowels. Thus Servants, Wife, and Children, all relations in the family helped on his affliction.

Et orabam filios uteri mei. Vulg.

They who inſiſt upon this interpretation are hard put to it how to make it out, that he intreated his Children; for it may be objected, all his Children were cruſhed to death with the fall of the houſe, in Chap. 1. how then can he be ſaid to intreat his own Children here?

'Tis anſwered, Firſt, He might have young Children when his houſe fell, that were not at the banquet; ſo that as the violent death of ſome of his Children was an affliction to him, ſo alſo was the preſervation and life of his other Children, according to this opinion.

Secondly, Others refer it to his Grand-children, his Sons Sons, whom he might reckon as his own; Childrens Children, are as our own Children. Thus Jacob ſpake to Joſeph (Gen. 38. 5.) And now thy two Sons, Ephraim and Manaſſeh, which were born unto thee in the Land of Egypt, before I came unto thee into Egypt, are mine, as Reuben and Simeon, they ſhall be mine.

Filii filiorū ſunt inſtar filiorum.

Thirdly, The Septuagint interpret it for the Children of his Concubines. The Scripture is clear that divers of the Patriarks had Concubines, but that Job had any the Scripture is ſilent; and therefore I paſs this, and rather ſettle upon our reading, which both the Hebrew very well beareth, and moſt of the Learned follow: this being only an addition to the unkindneſs of his Wife, to whom (ſaith he) my breath was ſtrange, though I intreated her for the Childrens ſake of my own body, or as the letter of the Hebrew is, Though I intreated towards the Children of my own body.

Deprecabar ad filios uteri mei. Heb.

Further, The word ſignifies, to bewail, or deplore, as well as to entreat: ſo the word is uſed (Pſal. 102. 13, 14.) Thou wilt ariſe and have mercy upon Sion, for the time to favour her, yea the ſet time is come, for thy ſervants take pleaſure in her ſtones, and they favour the duſt thereof; ſome read it, they pitty the duſt, they bewail and mourn over the duſt of Sion. Thus Job bewailed his Childrens duſt; and then the meaning may be, My breath, or my complaint was ſtrange to my Wife, even when I was bewailing, or deploring the Children of my own body; ſhe did not only abhor me, when I cryed out of the loſs of my eſtate, when I complained of my pains and ſores, and of the injuriouſneſs of my friends, but when I was bewailing the loſs of my very Children, in which ſhe was as much concerned as I am.

Patet uxori anima mea etiam ubi communes liberos deploro. Coc.

Secondly, I intreated for the Childrens ſake; may carry this meaning, as if the argument which he uſed to draw his Wife to reſpect him was his Children. I entreated her by the inviolable band of marriage, and the fruits of it, but ſhe regarded me not. My breath is ſtrange to my Wife, &c.

Per ſanctum jus conjugii & fructus ejus. Jun.

Hence obſerve, Firſt, They who have taken ſweeteſt content in one another, may quickly be loathſom to one another.

There is nothing in the Creature of any long continuance, much leſs of any long contentment. Man and Wife ought in duty to take mutual delight and contentment one in another; yet a Wife who is one fleſh with her Huſband, may count his breath a ſtranger, and ſhe who was given for a help, may prove helpleſs, in time of greateſt need.

When man was created, the Lord ſaid it is not good for man to be alone, I will make him a help meet for him. A Wife is made for a help to man; and when doth a man need her help ſo much, as in the time of ſickneſs, and affliction? That which is good at all times, is at ſometimes better. A Wife ſhould ever be a help to her Huſband, but then moſt when he cannot help himſelf. The vertue of ſome Wives hath appeared gloriouſly at ſuch times; and when diſeaſes have made all others loath their Huſbands, they have delighted in them. True conjugal love out-lives all changes both of time and ſtate, it knows no decay either by age or ſickneſs.

The

Speed's *Chrō.p.*630. Sect. 5.

The Story is famous of Prince Edward, wounded with a poyſoned knife by a treacherous Aſſaſſine, to whom, when other means of cure proved ineffectual, his wife, the Lady Eleanor ſucked out the poyſon, and gave him both eaſe and healing. How rare a pattern was this woman of conjugal fidelity? How far did ſhe out-act Job's wife in love, who was ſo far from ſucking his wounds or licking his ſores, that ſhe could not abide his breath. Solomon gives this aſſurance of a virtuous woman, that ſhe will do her husband good and not evil all the dayes of her life: What changes ſoever be upon him in outward things, her affections change not; whether he be in health or in ſickneſs, whether in riches or poverty, whether his breath be ſweet or unſavoury, ſhe doth him good, and not evil all the dayes of her life. True love holds out in duty both to God and man.

Secondly obſerve, That Love between man and wife, which begins and is grounded upon outward motives, may ſoon decay and wither.

All outward things are decaying, and if the groundwork fall, that which is built upon it, cannot ſtand. If riches be the motive of love between man and wife, when once they grow poor, they will be as poor in love. If corporal comlineſs and beauty be the motive, ſickneſs ſtains that, and there's an end of love. They who love Chriſt for the loaves, and godlineſs for worldly gain, will not love them long. And none know how ſoon their love may end to any earthly and civil relation, if it began upon earthly and meer civil ends.

There are two motives of conjugal love, that will laſt for ever.

First, Grace in the perſon loved.

Secondly, Obedience to an Ordinance of God.

The beauty of Grace withers not, though the grace of beauty do. Grace is moſt beautiful in the greateſt declinings and wrinklings of natural beauty. The breath of Grace can never be unſavoury, nor can obedience to an Ordinance of God decay. Theſe continue ever in the ſame ſweetneſs and ſtrength, and ſo will that love between husband and wife, which began at them.

Thirdly, Whereas Job intreated for the Childrens ſake of his own body; obſerve,

Children are ſtrong obligations of love between man and wife.

A husband hath no greater argument to move a wife by, then to beſeech her for the Children that God hath given them. Children are dear to their parents, and an endearing to their parents. As Children encreaſe, ſo ſhould Love encreaſe; Children are one of the principal ends of marriage; the attaining of any end in marriage, puts a further engagement upon us to perform all the duties of it. Children are the living images of their parents; they are their parents multiplied. So that while a husband entreats his wife for his childrens ſake, ſhe is entreated for the ſake of as many husbands as ſhe hath children. Hence obſerve, Laſtly, Strong deſires are importunate, and will improve every intereſt for the obtaining of what is deſired.

What we cannot carry upon our own intereſt, we labour to carry upon any other more prevailing name or intereſt. Jacob moves the Lord in prayer by the remembrance of his Fathers, Abraham and Iſaac; O God of my Father Abraham, and God of my Father Iſaac (Gen. 32. 9.) Jacob did not pray to his Father Abraham, but he made uſe of his Fathers name, as a motive in prayer, And though all names and intereſts are ſwallowed up in the name and intereſt of Jeſus Chriſt, as to deſerving a grant of what we pray for; yet we may argue and plead with God in prayer, for the Churches ſake; yea, for our own childrens ſake, that God would do us good, that we may be further inſtrumental for their good.

עויל

Quod ſæpe aliis accidit contrarias habet ſignificationes. Stulti quoq; deſpiciebant me. Vulg.

Verſe 18. Yea, young children deſpiſed me, I roſe, and they ſpake againſt me.

The word ſignifies not only a Child, but a Fool; ſo ſome render it here, Fools deſpiſed me; none but fools deſpiſe wiſe men, nor are the godly contemned by any but the wicked. We ſay, young children newly weaned from the breaſt, or as the original in ſtrictneſs bears, Sucklings, who are the youngeſt children, deſpiſed me. Children in that ſtate, are not in a capacity either to give honour to, or to deſpiſe their Elders: And therefore by young children, we are to underſtand youths, or the younger ſort of men, not youngeſt children. Youths and young men are in common language called Children, in compariſon of the Aged. The Prophet Jeremiah cries out (chap. 1. 6.) Ah Lord God, behold I cannot ſpeak; for I am a Child: That is, I am but young. And Solomon tells the Lord in Gibeon, I am but a little Child; I know not how to go out or to come in, 1 Kings 3. 7. Yet at this time Solomon had a Child; as appears (1 Kings 14. 21.) for he reigned but forty years, and Rehoboam his Son was one and forty years old when he began to reign. So that he called himſelf a Child, becauſe he was young, and with reference to his years, unfit to rule ſo great a people. Thus here, Young children deſpiſed me, that is, young ones deſpiſed me.

I aroſe, and they ſpake againſt me.

Not only did they deſpiſe when I ſtood upon my authority, as an ancient man may do; but when I aroſe, that is, when I ſhewed them reſpect, and (as it were) did obeiſance to them. To riſe to any man, is a geſture of reverence, as well as to fall down before him. Children ought to riſe up, and ſhew reverence to the aged. Job roſe to children, and yet they gave him no reverence. Yet ſome underſtand it barely of the act; I aroſe, and went away from them, and aſſoon as I turned my back, they ſpake againſt me. As if his meaning were, Though they durſt not ſpeak againſt me to my face, yet as ſoon as I turned my back, they reproached and ſcorned me; what! Is this Job? But I rather take it as before, that Job condeſcended in reſpects to young ones, who, forgetting their diſtance, gave him none. As he did not only call his ſervant, but entreated him; as he did not only ſpeak to his wife, but entreated her; ſo he did not only deal gently with, but ſhewed reſpect to children, and yet they deſpiſed and ſpake againſt him. Of this he complains, both as their ſin, and as his affliction. Hence obſerve, Simulac ſurrexero & ab illis receſſi, mihi detrahunt, qui præſentē non auderēt ita tractare Merc.

First, They that are young, owe reverence to the aged.

This is ſeated in the Law of Nature, and we find an expreſs Law for it, given by God himſelf to his ancient people the Jews (Lev. 19. 32.) Thou ſhalt riſe up before the hoarie head, and honour the face of old men, and fear thy God; I am the Lord. He that wears the Silver Crown, ſhould be honoured, in his capacity, as well as he that wears the Golden Crown. As we are to honour our parents, ſo every old man; for he is as a parent. And if the younger ought to riſe up before the hoary head, and give them reverence, how great a perverſion is it both of the Law of Nature and of Nations, when the hoary head riſing up, is deſpiſed by the younger? Paul gives caution concerning Timothy (1 Tim. 4. 12.) Let no man deſpiſe thy youth. 'Tis a ſin to deſpiſe the young who are gracious; what is it then to deſpiſe grave and gracious old age?

Secondly obſerve, It is an addition to our affliction, to be deſpiſed in affliction; eſpecially to be deſpiſed by our inferiors, whether in degree or age.

This is threatned as a ſore judgment upon the Jews, when an enemy ſhould invade their borders (Deut. 28. 30.) I will bring upon thee a Nation of fierce countenance, that ſhall not regard the face of the old; noting that old men ſhould be reverenced, and uſually are reverenced among all Nations. Job was once reverenced both by young and old (chap. 29. 18.) The young men ſaw me, and did hide themſelves. When a man of venerable age comes in preſence, young men ſhould ſtart back and modeſtly withdraw; Yea (ſaith he) the aged roſe and ſtood up: He had reverence in former times, not only from young men, but from the aged. This ſhewed the height of his worldly felicity. But now (to ſhew the depth of his worldly miſery) the youngeſt of young ones, who could deſpiſe him, did deſpiſe him. It was a crime puniſhable in the Spartan Common-wealth, for young men not to riſe up and ſhew reverence to the aged when they paſſed by. Hence that proverbial ſpeech took its original; It is only good to be an old man in Sparta. 'Tis comly in all Common-wealths and Families, when every perſon keeps his rank, when honour is given to whom honour is due. Rebuke not an Elder (it is the Apoſtles rule to Timothy,

Aſſurgendi habitus à pueris & adoleſcentibus in adventu ſeniorum religioſè obſervabantur, præſertim apud Spartas, unde dictum, In ſola Sparta expedire fieri ſenem. Plut.

(1 Tim. 5. 1.) but exhort him as a Father. Though we muſt not flatter or favour any perſon, to the prejudice of the truth, or holineſs, yet while we ſpeak truth, or reprove unholineſs, we muſt put a difference between the perſons of men. We muſt not handle or deal with Elders as we deal with the younger men. When we ſpeak reproof, we muſt ſpeak reſpect unto the ancient. The Prophet gives it as the Character of a confuſed State, when children behave themſelves proudly againſt the ancient, and the baſe againſt the honourable (Iſa. 3 5.)

Verſe 19. All my inward friends abhorred me, and they whom I loved are turned againſt me.

Job proceeds to another rank of friends; he ſpake of his ordinary friend before, now of thoſe who were as his Council: Though a man hath many friends to converſe with, yet ſome few only are fit friends to take counſel with. We may love many heartily, yet but few ſhould know our hearts. The Hebrew is, The men of my ſecrets, that is, the men to whom I opened my ſecrets, and with whom I took advice in things of neareſt concernment. In Scripture we find many ſuch Hebraiſmes (Iſa. 5. 13.) We tranſlate, Thy honourable men are famiſhed. The Hebrew letter is, Their glory are men of famine. So (Obad. 7.) The men of thy confederacy, that is, the men with whom thou hadſt confederacy, or didſt joyn thy ſelf in league or covenant; ſo here, The men of his ſecrets, are the men to whom he communicated his ſecrets: Theſe we call inward friends. He is an inward friend, with whom we either adviſe what to do, or whom we tell what we have done or are about to do; as Chriſt beſpeaks his Diſciples (John 14. 15.) Henceforth call I you not ſervants, for the ſervant knoweth not what his Maſter doth; but I have called you friends: for all things that I have heard of the Father, declare I unto you. As if Chriſt had ſaid, As my Father hath opened his boſom to me, ſo have I to you. Therefore you are not uſed like ſervants, but like inward friends. Of ſuch Job complains here, My inward friends

Abhor me.] The word implies ſuch an abhorring of him, as if he had been a man unfit for any familiarity at all, much more for inward familiarity. As if he had ſaid, The men with whom I joyned heart and hand, will not come at me: They ſtand off as if I were unworthy to be ſpoken to, or to be heard ſpeak; they defie my company, and will not have to do with me. The word is applied to the averſation of all the ſences; it is applied to hearing (Amos 5. 10.) To ſmelling (Iſa. 1. 13.) To the taſte (Gen. 43. 32.) To touching or feeling (Iſa. 14. 19.) Thus (ſaith he) by the men that were to me as my own ſoul, am I now the abhorrence of their ſouls, yea, even of all their ſenſes.

תעב

Eſt ita abominari aliquem ut reputetur omni familiaritate indignus.

In that Job had common friends (he deſcribed ſuch before) and inward friends; obſerve,

Wiſe men make difference of men, but eſpecially of friends,

A wiſe man knows how to diſtinguiſh perſons as well as things; he hath (as we may ſay) inward friends and outward friends. He hath many to whom he doth courteſies, to whom yet he doth not communicate his counſels. Some men have love and faithfulneſs enough in them to be made the men of our counſel, but they are defective in judgment and underſtanding; others have underſtanding and judgment enough to be the men of our counſel, but they want faithfulneſs; neither every judicious man, nor every faithful man are fit to be men of our counſel, or to be truſted with ſecrets. He that is fit for this, muſt have a compoſition of both in him, and ſuch a man is a rare man indeed. Many will ſerve for friends to eat and drink with, to talk and diſcourſe with; but few are fit to conſult and communicate our hearts with. The heart is a great truſt. Obſerve,

Secondly, Wiſe men deſire to take advice and counſel of others, they have men of their ſecrets.

'Tis beſt to ſee with our own eyes, yet 'tis not only good, but neceſſary to uſe the ſight of other mens eyes. They are but fools who are meerly led by others, or who act only by the advice of other men, and they (which is as bad) are over-wiſe, who think they have no need to be adviſed. None have been ſo much miſtaken, as they who take all upon themſelves. They make beſt improvement of their parts and wiſdom, who uſe them much, but truſt them little. As we may not truſt our own wiſdom at all (which Solomon calls leaning to our own underſtanding) in reference to our dependance upon God; ſo it is very unſafe and dangerous to truſt to our own wiſdom with contempt or neglect of men. Private men need counſel for the management of their family-affairs, much more do Magiſtrates need it for the managing of publick affairs. The Orator ſaid, Men of Counſel are to a Common wealth, as the mind, reaſon or underſtanding is to any particular man: They are to a State, as the foundation is to the building; the whole Fabrick whereof quickly falls and decayes without counſel; therefore in the holy Language Jaſad ſignifies to lay a foundation, as alſo to gather together in Council, becauſe the foundation of the peace and proſperity of a Nation is laid in good counſel. Job being a publick man, had his Council. It was the ſaying of one of the Ancients, That Commonwealth is moſt ſafe and flouriſhing, where the heads of ancient men, and the arms of young men are employed and improved (Prov. 11. 14.) Where no counſel is the people fall; but in the multitude of Counſellers there is ſafety. The worſt of Princes have hated counſel. Nero was an utter enemy to the Roman Senate. And Caeſar cared little for their advice. They who would rule by their own will, would rule by their own wiſdom; and they who would make all the people their ſlaves, have no deſire to make any of them their Counſellers.

Conſilium atque Senatus eſt mens, ratio, intelligentia reipublicae. Cic.

יסד

Significat fundare & convenire in conſilio.

Maxima ſalva eſt Reſpublica ubi conſiliũ ſenum, juvenum arma obtinent. Plut.

And they whom I loved are turned againſt me.

Having ſpoken of his friends before, he now ſpeaks of his friendlineſs to them; They whom I loved: There is no friendſhip without mutual love. Loving may be taken two wayes, either as oppoſed to hating, or as oppoſed to a leſs degree of loving. Job loved all his friends, but ſome more; here love is oppoſed to a leſs degree of love; Thoſe whom I loved, that is, thoſe whom I loved greatly, thoſe who had ſo much of my love, that in reſpect of them, I might be ſaid to love none but them. Chriſt loved all his Diſciples, yet one was called the Diſciple whom Jeſus loved. A man that loves many, may ſo love one, that comparatively he doth not love any but him. Such ſhould our love to God be, as ballanced with our love to man. Though it be a duty, and the great Commandment, to love one another; yet God muſt be ſo loved by us, that we may (in this ſence) affirm we love none but God. The Law is expreſs, Thou ſhalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, with all thy ſoul, with all thy ſtrength (Luke 10. 27.) If God be loved with all the heart, then the love that we bear to the creature, is no love in compariſon of that we owe to God. And in proportion, the love we bear to ſome man, ſo far exceeds our love to others, that they may be ſaid to engroſs all our love. Job ſpake here diſtinctly, and diſtinguiſhingly of ſuch friends as were higheſt in his favour, and had moſt room in his heart. Theſe he calls the men whom he loved.

Habebat Job quos prae aliis diligeret.

Again, We may conſider love two wayes; firſt, As it is a love of benevolence; ſecondly, of complacency: Job ſpake before of thoſe friends whom he loved with the love of benevolence; but here of thoſe friends whom he loved with the love of complacency, of thoſe in whom his delight was ſet, and in whom all the lines of his affections were firmly centred: Such was the love of Jonathan to David, of whom he ſaith (2 Sam. 1. 26.) Very pleaſant haſt thou been unto me, my brother Jonathan, thy love to me was wonderful, ſurpaſſing the love of Women. Women love moſt; Jonathan's love to David, was more then the love of women to thoſe whom they love moſt, their husbands and their children. Job had extraordinary out-goings of his heart in love to ſome; what returns they made to him, we ſhall ſee in opening the next clauſe; Thoſe whom I loved

Are turned againſt me.] As if he had ſaid, I have had moſt of their hatred, who had moſt of my love. They who were as my Counſellers, are become my Betrayers. It is one thing to turn from a man, and another to turn againſt him; it is if friends turn from us in an evil day (as 'tis ſaid of the Children of Ephraim, that being harneſſed, and carrying bows, they turned back in the day of battel. Thus to turn back in the time of need, is (I ſay) bad enough) but when they turn againſt us, and not only do us no good, but do us hurt; this is the utmoſt departure from, and breach of the bounds and bonds of friendſhip. Thus Abitophel turned againſt David in the conſpiracy of Abſolom, and Judas againſt our Lord Jeſus Chriſt. To turn againſt, is the act of an enemy, and implies an hoſtile ſpirit. They whom I loved, are turned againſt me.

Now ſeeing Job who had many friends, had alſo ſome inward friends, whom he calls by way of eminency, thoſe whom he loved.

First, Obſerve, That though all friends are loved, yet ſome may have a more ſpecial intereſt in, and portion of our love.

All the people of God are his friends, yet Abraham had the priviledge above many, to be called the Friend of God. God calls but ſome Saints, his beloved ones, his Jedediahs, his favourites, though he love and favour all that are Saints. He ſpake of the whole people of Iſrael, You have I known (that is, you have I loved) above all the Nations in the world; ſo men may ſee reaſon to love with a diſtinction, to place the heat and hight of their affections upon ſome beyond others, to whom they bear good affection.

Obſerve Secondly, The love of man is ill requited by ſome men; or, They to whom we have done many good turns, turn ſometimes not only from us, but againſt us, and ſhew themſelves not only no friends, but enemies.

That man is leſs then a friend who ceaſeth to do us good, but he is a down-right enemy, who contrives or acts our hurt. What Chriſt ſaid to the Jews (John 10.32.) we may ſay to ſuch friends (in our meaſure) Many good works have we done among you, and to you, for which of them do ye ſtone us. When friends decline in their love, they encline to hatred; and while they are not with us, they may be numbred with thoſe who are againſt us: Neutarlity towards a friend is a kind of enmity; but Job's friends became his enemies in kind. Of ſuch David complains (Pſal. 109.4, 5.) For my love, they were mine adverſaries, they have rewarded me evil for good, and hatred for my good will. And again (Pſal. 55.12, 13, 14.) It was not an adverſary that ſet himſelf againſt me (Who was it then? it was one whom he once reckoned his choiceſt friend) It was thou, O man, my companion, my guide, and my familiar friend; we took ſweet counſel together, and went to the houſe of God as friends. None prove worſe enemies then they that have received the greateſt kindneſſes, when once they turn unkind. As the ſharpeſt Vineger is made of the pureſt Wine, and pleaſant meats turn to the bittereſt humours in the ſtomack; ſo the higheſt love beſtowed upon friends, being ill digeſted, or corrupted, turns to the moſt unfriendly hatred. The Philoſopher ſaith, They who love one another too much, hate one another moſt. As no exceſs of love is of any long continuance, ſo when they whom we have loved moderately begin to hate us, they hate us more then ſuch can whom we never loved. The diſſentions of brethren, are hotteſt, becauſe they are neareſt: and the diſſention of friends is hotter then that of brethren, becauſe the love of brethren (ſtrictly conſidered) is founded only in nature, but the love of friends is founded in courteſies and profeſſions, which, though not in themſelves, yet to us, becauſe we have been active or receptive in them, are the cloſeſt obligations to love. Now, the cloſer any obligation is, the wider is the breach, when once that obligation is broken, or miſ-improved: if they whom we have loved begin to fall from us, they uſually fall out with us. We have had ſad experiences of this. And 'tis an argument where ever it falls, that ſuch did never love thoſe who loved them upon Goſpel-principles, or in obedience to the command of God. For as they who turn againſt the truth of God, never received the love of it; ſo they never received the love of men in truth, who turn againſt them. Spiritual love cannot turn to hatred, 'tis meer natural love which doth ſo. Holy love ſeldom turns from, but it never turns againſt a friend. When grace is the cement of affections, what can divide them? The ſpecial love of God overcomes thoſe that are loved of him to love him; and though the Lord may ſay of all the Saints on earth, that they have not anſwered his love, with a due proportion of love, and of many that they are fallen from their firſt love; yet ſo powerful is his love, that they never fall either out of his love, or from their own; but the love of man hath no ſuch power over man. And therefore what Job once ſaid, others may have cauſe to ſay, They whom we loved are turned againſt us.

Qui ſe nimiũ amant, hi ſe nimiũ odio habent. Ariſt.l.7. Pol.c.7. Proximorũ odia ſunt acerrima.

Thus Job's affliction ran through all his relations; he was not only loaded with trouble in his ſtate and perſon, but in his kindred, friends, ſervants, wiſe, children, Councellors, and chief familiars. All denied him duty, and therefore he cries out for pity in the next Verſe.

VERS. 20, 21, 22.

My bone cleaveth to my skin, and to my fleſh, and I am eſcaped with the skin of my teeth.
Have pity upon me, have pity upon me, O ye my friends, for the hand of God hath touched me.
Why do ye perſecute me as God; and are not ſatisfied with my fleſh.

IN the former context Job ſhewed what effects his affliction wrought upon others, (all contemned him, or proved unfaithful to him) Here he ſhewes what effect his affliction had wrought upon himſelf, it waſted and conſumed his body, it greived and troubled his Soul; the ſenſe of this took ſuch ſtrong hold of him, that he breaks out into a ſupplication for pittie, (verſ. 21.) and into a deprecation of further perſecution, (verſ. 22.)

Verſ. 20. My bone cleaveth to my skin.

As if he had ſaid, My afflictions have brought me to skin and bones, I am become a very skelliton. My fleſh faileth, and my heart is almoſt failed, only God is the ſtrength of my heart, and my portion for ever.

My bone cleaveth to my skin, and to my fleſh.

The word ſignifieth to cleave together, as thoſe things do that are faſtned with glue; ſo ſome render it here, My bone is glued to my skin: and the copulative is rendred as a word of likeneſs by Mr. Broughton and others, My bone cleaveth to my skin as to my fleſh; that is, whereas my bone (as the bone of any man in health) ſhould cleave to my fleſh, my bone cleaveth to my skin; as if he had ſaid, there is nothing between my bone and my skin; ordinarily fleſh groweth between the skin and the bone; but my skin is immediate to my bone. All fleſh is graſs, ready to wither; but my fleſh and the goodlineſs thereof is already withered. The cleaving of the skin to the bones is a proverbial ſpeech, for extream leanneſs, both among prophane Writers, and in the holy Writ. (Pſal. 102.5.) My heart is ſmitten dead, &c. by reaſon of the voyce of my groaning; my bone cleaveth to my skin, that is, I am become very low and lean. This proverb is uſed alſo by complaining Jeremie, Their viſage is blacker then a coal, they are not known in the ſtreets, their skin cleaveth to their bone (Lam. 4. 8.) Fat men are skin and fleſh, bones appear not; lean men are skin and bones, their fleſh appears not.

*In pelle meâ & in carne mea adhæſit os meũ.*Heb. μαρασμὸν id morbi genus appellant Græci quum toto corpore ſucco exhauſto, oſſa cuti agglatinata cernuntur. Merc. Conjunctio & ſumitur pro ſicut. *Cuti meæ ut carni meæ adhærent oſſa mea.*Jun. Oſſa atque cutis ſum miſera macritudine. Plaut.

And I am eſcaped with the skin of my teeth.

When he ſaith, I am eſcaped, he implyes that he had been in danger, and could not eaſily get away. Some evils may be withſtood and conquered, but 'tis well if we can make an eſcape from others. Job was as hard put to it, as ever poor man was. He ſpeaks in alluſion to a Battel, or as if he had come lately from the Wars; and indeed his was a ſore war. A man that hath been put to the worſt in a battel, is glad he can eſcape away with any thing; he is glad when all elſe is loſt to eſcape away with his skin, though it be not a whole skin; when all's made a prey, he is well if he hath his life for a prey. Job had been in a great battel, and was pittifully battered, he only came off with his life, (that Satan had no commiſſion to touch) but he came off with very little beſides, nothing was left him but the skin of his teeth, that was all, and that's a poor all, even as little as may be. The whole skin is not much, but the skin of the teeth is much leſs. This was Job's caſe, I am eſcaped with

The skin of my teeth.] The Vulgar rendreth it, I am eſcaped with my lips about my teeth, or, there is nothing left me but my lips about my teeth; They who follow that tranſlation, tell us rather wittily then ſolidly, that his lips were ſpared him not out of pitty, but upon deſign. The Devil who had power to wound him all over, to touch his bone and his fleſh, as the Lord ſpeaks (Chap. 2.) yet ſpared his lips, leſt he ſhould be diſabled or hindred in ſpeaking, and ſo in blaſpheming God, which was his original plot upon him. A learned Tranſlator, who retains our reading, doth yet expound the skin of his teeth, for his lips, the lips being as a skin encloſing the teeth; and gives that Gloſs upon it; He had nothing left him, but the inſtruments of ſpeech, which Satan hoped would be the inſtruments of ſin.

Derelicta ſunt labia tantummodò circa dentes. Vulg.

Nihil remanſit integrum præter ſermonis inſtrumentum. Jun.

Others by the skin of his teeth, underſtand the more immediate skin of the teeth, his gums, which are ſockets into which the teeth are ſet and faſtned. All theſe tranſlations and interpretations meet in the expreſſion of this one thing, that his beauty was faded, and the ſtrength of his body utterly conſumed, that he was within a ſtep of death, and ready to drop into the grave. When the bone cleaves to the skin, both are near cleaving to the duſt. And he who is eſcaped only with the skin of his teeth, is not like to eſcape the teeth of death. The next thing which the body hath to looſe is life, when all is loſt but skin and bone. My bone cleaveth to my skin, &c.

Hence Note, Firſt, A ſound mind oft lodgeth in a conſumed and crazy body.

Job had a healthy ſpirit, but his body was unhealthy. While his bone cleaved to his skin, his ſoul cleaved to Chriſt. Some good ſouls are ill-houſed in the body, and ſome beautiful ſtrong bodies are ill-tenanted by the ſoul. A ſound body and a ſound mind are together a compleat bleſſing.

Secondly, Obſerve how much Job layes this to heart, he makes it his complaint once and again, both here and elſewhere.

Hence Note, Bodily conſumption may prove very afflictive to the ſoundeſt mind.

Though a ſound mind can bear the pain of the body, yet it cannot but be ſenſible of the pain of the body. Soul and body are ſuch near neighbours, that they muſt needs know how each other do. If the body be ſtrong, an afflicted mind will weaken it. And if the mind be well, yet an afflicted body will trouble it. Some who have a fulneſs and fatneſs of grace in their ſouls, have been heard bemoaning themſelves in regard of bodily weakneſs in the language of the Prophet (Iſa. 24. 16.) My leanneſs, my leanneſs. In the former part of the Verſe, he makes report of what he had heard, and what was that? From the uttermoſt part of the earth have we heard ſongs, even glory to the righteous. All the men in the world (who know what they ſing) ſing Glory to the righteous, that is, they atteſt and ſet forth the happy eſtate of thoſe who are freely juſtified, and ſo reputed righteous by the grace of God towards them; and who are powerfully ſanctified, and ſo made righteous by the grace of God in them. Now though both the glory of Grace, and the grace of glory, even all the good things, or fatneſs, both of this life, and of the life to come, be the portion, and (by promiſe) the due of the righteous, yet this righteous Prophet cries out, My leanneſs, my leanneſs. As leanneſs of body was the effect of his troubled mind, ſo his mind was troubled at the leanneſs of his body.

Job concludes theſe effects of his affliction with an apoſtrophe, and a vehement exclamation to his friends.

Verſ. 21. Have pity upon me, have pity upon me, O my friends, for the hand of God hath touched me.

Some expound theſe words as a reproof, not as a ſupplication; As if he had ſaid, O my friends, ye have unjuſtly vexed me, ye have troubled me without cauſe; now therefore know, that it is your duty to pity me: ye have profeſſed your ſelves my friends, but hitherto ye have ſhewed me little friendſhip: be aſhamed of this, return to your duty, and trouble me no more. Will ye ſtill perſecute him, whom ye ought to pity? Thus he is conceived reproving them.

But rather take the words as an humble, yet earneſt intreaty, and ſo we may title them Job's petition to his friends; he had argued and diſputed with them long, but now he entreats and ſupplicates. In this ſupplication we may conſider, Firſt, The ſubſtance or matter of it, or what he deſires, that is pity.

Secondly, We may conſider the circumſtances or form of it; there is life and ſpirit in it, 'tis quick, paſſionate, and piercing, and 'tis quickned two wayes.

Firſt, By an exclamation, Have pity upon me, O ye my friends. He doth not only ſpeak, but cry to them for pity. Interjections are imperfect ſpeeches, but they carry the moſt perfect ſenſe, both of our wants, and of our deſires. When our thoughts are too big for our words, and our hearts too large for our tongues, we vent them by exclamation.

Secondly, He quickens his ſupplication by a reiteration of it, he doubles it upon them. And there are two doublings in this ſupplication.

Firſt, In reference to the act.

Secondly, In reference to the object.

He doubleth the act in thoſe words; Have pity, have pity; he doubleth the object, me, me: have pity upon me, upon me; there is pity, pity, and, me, me; as if he would tell his friends that he was a double object of pity, or that he needed double pity, abundance of pity. Multiplyed ſorrows, call for a multitude of compaſſions; and they who ſuffer much, cannot be ſatisfied with a little, or with ſingle pity.

Thirdly, He repreſents the reaſon or ground of his ſupplication, why it was that he thus preſſed them for compaſſion, and cried out for pity at their hands. It was (ſaith he) becauſe the hand of God hath touched me. The hand of God hath touched me, let this touch your hearts.

Have pity upon me.] Pity is the moving of the heart towards thoſe who are in miſery. The Original word ſignifies to ſhew favour, whether by word, or deed, or rather both by word and deed. Good words, and good works, make compleat pity; good words are comfortable, but good words without good works are lean and miſerable comforters. He that ſpeaks pity doth well, but he that acts it doth beſt.

חנן Eſt favore proſequi, largiri, & cum objectū miſerum eſt, ſympathiam & voluntatem levandi miſeriam denotat.

Pity is twofold.

Firſt, Natural.

Secondly, Spiritual.

Natural pity is common to mankind: Man cannot put off pity, unleſs he put off humanity, and almoſt ceaſe to be a man. Some beaſts are pitiful; thoſe men are worſe then beaſts who are not. We juſtly call thoſe men inhumane and unnatural, who have no pity, becauſe pity is ſeated in the very nature of man; unmercifulneſs is a ſin againſt the light of nature, as well as againſt the law of God. And therefore the Apoſtle puts theſe two near together, Without natural affection, unmerciful (Rom. 1. 31.) This natural pity as it provokes us to relieve others, ſo it is a relief to our ſelves. That pity which moves us to eaſe others, is our own burden. It is a burden to ſee another in affliction, ſpecially if he hath any relation or nearneſs to us; therefore he eaſeth his own burden who ſhews pity to another. We do not alwayes love thoſe perſonally whom we pity. Some ſhew pity only out of a common inſtinct of love to others, and ſome only out of love to themſelves. That Judge who neither feared God nor regarded men, yet after a while ſaid within himſelf, becauſe this widow troubleth me, I will avenge her (that is, do her juſtice and relieve her) leſt by her continual coming ſhe weary me (Luk. 18. 4, 5.) And hence we read in Scripture of the bowels of pity, of the bowels of compaſſion. If any bowels and mercies, ſaith the Apoſtle (Phil. 2. 1.) They who have any bowels cannot but have ſome mercies. In the Hebrew and Greek tongue, the ſame word ſignifies both bowels and mercy or pity, becauſe pity cauſeth a ſecret motion in the bowels, and affects the body. The harlots bowels yerned, when the living child was to be divided (1 King. 3. 26.) The pity of God himſelf is called the moving or ſounding of his bowels; (Iſa. 63. 15.) Where is thy zeal, and thy ſtrength, the ſounding of thy bowels and of thy mercies towards us? are they reſtrained? The Prophet ſpeaks of God in alluſion to man, whoſe bowels are ſaid to be ſtraitned, when he is ſtraitned in mercy. When the inferior ſenſitive faculties in man, the eye, or the ear, take in ſorrowful ſpectacles or reports, theſe go to our bowels, to our very heart, the iſſue and effect whereof is compaſſion to thoſe, whoſe ſorrows are reported to us. Sometimes the eye carries in a viſion of ſorrow and miſery to the heart; Mine eye affecteth my heart, ſaith mourning Jeremy, when he ſaw the ruines and deſolate condition of Jeruſalem. Sometimes the ear conveyeth a report of miſery to the heart, and then we may ſay, the ear affecteth the heart. When word was brought to good Nehemiah of the ſad affliction and reproach of his brethren, the remnant of the captivity that were left in the Province, and how the wall of Jeruſalem was broken, and the gates thereof burnt with fire, he ſat down and wept, and mourned certain dayes (Neh. 1. 3, 4, 5.) his bowels were exceedingly moved. Natural pity may do this, yet that pity of Jeremy and Nehemiah was more then natural.

Qui compaſſione moti ſubveniunt indigenti, magna ex parte ſibi ſubveniunt, propriam enim compaſſionem minuunt. Bold.

רחם σπλάγχνα

There is beſide this a ſpiritual pity, which ariſeth out of pure love. There may be pity (as was ſaid) where there is no love to the perſon, and there may be pity flowing only from natural love to the perſon; but where pity flows from love, and that a divine love, there's ſpiritual pity, ſuch pity as is more an act of grace then of nature; to the exerciſe of this pity the Saints are often called. Put on (ſaith the Apoſtle, Col. 3. 12.) as the Elect of God holy and beloved, bowels of mercies, kindneſs, &c. They who have indeed put on, and are cloathed with the garments of holineſs, will alſo put on bowels of mercy as a Garment. Mercy moves us to cloath the naked, and mercy is alſo our own cloathing. Have pity upon me, ſaith pitiful Job.

Have pity upon me.] Job is not content to ſpeak it once, but he ſpeaks it again, Have pity, have pity; ingeminations, or the doubling of words, are frequent in Scripture, importing much vehemency and intention of ſpirit in him that ſpeaketh. What we would be ſure to have once, we call for twice; and whom we reverence and deſire much, we call after more then once. When Eliah was rapt up to heaven in a fiery Chariot, his ſervant Eliſha calls after him (2 Kings 2.12.) My father, my father, the Chariots of Iſrael, and the horſemen thereof. Father, is a title of eſteem and honour; we count him worthy of double honour, whom we call Father, Father. When David would ſhew how ambitious he was to ſtand in the Lords books as his ſervant, he ſaith it, and ſaith it again; O Lord, truly I am thy ſervant, I am thy ſervant (Pſa. 116.16.) And the ſame David being under a ſpiritual deſertion, recalls the preſence of God with a double expoſtulation (Pſal. 22. 1.) which is a Prophecy of Chriſt, who alſo took up thoſe words when he hung upon the Croſs (his Father having vail'ed his face from him) My God, my God, why haſt thou forſaken me. Once more; The Prophet (Iſa. 65. 1.) foretelling the earneſt deſire of Chriſt to receive and be acquainted with poor ſinners, who had no acquaintance with him, nor deſire after him, expreſſeth him doubling his deſire; I am ſought of them that asked not for me, I was found of them that ſought me not; I ſaid, behold me, behold me, unto a Nation that was not called by my name. As if he had ſaid to that ſtrange Nation (us ſinners of the Gentiles he means) Be neither afraid nor aſhamed to look upon me, and I would have you view me well, glut your eyes upon me, and take your fill of my beauty; when you have beheld me once, behold me a ſecond time, and ſee whether ye will not like me as well as at the firſt: look upon me as often as you pleaſe, the oftener you look, the more ye will be pleaſed, and be ſure ye look upon no other, for beſides me there is no Saviour; Behold me, behold me, me only, and me alwayes; behold me as much as you will, and have no will to behold any other. Scripture repetitions (you ſee) are no where vain repetitions; the more words we have from God, ſtill the more weight; 'tis ſo here in Job's repetition; Have pity upon me, have pity upon me,

Saltem vos Amici. Vul.

O ye my friends.] Or, at leaſt, ye my friends (as ſome tranſlate) do ye ſhew me pity, ye who are friends; let ſtrangers do what they pleaſe, let them paſs by ſenſleſs of my ſorrows, but do not ye; or ye my friends who are preſent with me, let me prevail with you to ſhew me pity, though other friends who live at a diſtance are hardned againſt me. Thus Job is conceived making a particular application to his three friends, in oppoſition to thoſe whom he charged with unfriendlineſs in the former context. As if finding himſelf deſerted by thoſe, yea by his kindred, by his wife, and children, by his ſervants, and Councellours, he turned himſelf to his friends then viſiting him, O ye my friends, who profeſs that ye came upon that very errand to comfort me, be not ye unkind as the reſt of whom I made that ſad complaint. But ſeeing Job in many paſſages hath taxed thoſe three friends with deepeſt unkindneſs, and profeſſeth that he had not experienced any pity from them; I ſee little reaſon why he ſhould make application to them here upon that account; And therefore (I conceive) he directs his ſpeech to them, becauſe it was their duty as well as the duty of others to pity him, not becauſe they had given him more hopes of pity then others had.

Further, Conſider he doth not ſay have pity on me, O ye men; though there is an obligation in that to pity; nor doth he ſay have pity on me, O ye my allies and kindred (though that be a further obligation to pity) but he puts it upon profeſſing and ſometime acting lovers, O ye my friends. A friend is a profeſſor of love; and friendſhip is love not only profeſſed, but frequently acted. As many bare profeſſions of love, ſo ſome one act of love doth not amount to friendſhip. Every man would do himſelf good often and alwayes. A friend is another ſelf; ſo Moſes deſcribes a friend (Deut. 13.6.) Where to ſhew how impartially the Jewes were to proceed againſt ſeducers, he expreſly forbids any favour to thoſe who might either challenge or deſerve the greateſt favour, whether upon natural or civil relations. If thy brother, the ſon of thy Mother, or thy ſon or thy daughter, or the wife in thy boſom, or thy friend (he ſeems to ſpeak leſs, but indeed he ſpeaks more then before, if thy Friend) that is as thine own ſoul, intice thee ſecretly, ſaying, let us go and ſerve other gods, that thou haſt not known, thou ſhalt not conſent unto him, neither ſhall thine eye pity him, &c. A ſpecial friend is as our own Soul, and many ſpecial friends are as if they had but one Soul. Jonathan and David moved in the higheſt ſphear of friendſhip; hence 'tis ſaid of Jonathan, that his Soul was knit with the ſoul of David, and Jonathan loved him as his own Soul (1 Sam. 18.1) So that while Job beſpeaks theſe men under the title of friends, he moves them by that argument which with moſt is the moſt preſſing, and which is the moſt laſting argument. For though brother, and child, and wife, are the neareſt ties of love, yet theſe have received more breaches then that of friend; and friends are more famous for acts of love, then brethren or children, and parents, or husbands, or wives. A friend ſticketh cloſer then a brother (Prov. 18. 24.) and, whereas man and wife are one fleſh (Mat. 19.6.) friend and friend are one Soul. What common humanitie will not do, what kindred and alliance would not do, friendſhip hath ſometimes done. Have pity upon me, O ye my friends,

For the hand of the Lord hath touched me.

The hand of God is his power, and this is takeen two wayes in Scripture.

Firſt, For his helping, or his protecting hand; which is called the good hand of God, (Iſa. 8. 18.) And by the good hand of God upon us, they brought us as a man of underſtanding. So Ezr. 8. 18. Then I told them of the hand of my God which was good upon me; that is, to help or to do me good.

Secondly, The hand of God is put for the power of God in puniſhing and afflicting. Thus Naomi ſpake when ſhe was become Mara; The hand of God is gone out againſt me (Ruth 1. 13.) We have variety of expreſſions uſed in Scripture in reference to the puniſhing and afflicting hand of God.

As firſt, to lay the hand, Exod. 2. 4. And Pharaoh ſhall not harken unto you, that I may lay my hand upon Egypt, and bring forth mine Armies.

Secondly, To lift up the hand (Iſa. 26. 11,) when thy hand is lifted up (to ſmite thine enemies, and deliver thy people) they will not ſee. They had eyes to ſee, but they had no hearts, no wills to ſee what God had done.

Thirdly, To ſtretch out the hand (Iſa. 9. 12.) For all this his anger is not turned away, but his hand is ſtretched out ſtill.

Fourthly, To touch with the hand, which was opened in the firſt and ſecond Chapters of this Book; put forth thine hand now (ſaith Satan to the Lord) and touch his bone, and his fleſh (v. 5.) Job's bone and fleſh had felt that touch, and therefore he ſpeaks in the ſame form and phraſe; The hand of the Lord hath touched me.

The finger of God is put for his power in Scripture, as well as his hand. Pharaoh's Magicians confeſſed at laſt the finger of God is here (Exod. 8. 19.) That is, this plague or puniſhment is a demonſtration of a divine power. Some conceive that the word finger is there uſed to note ſome ſmall part of the power of God; and that as the hand is greater then a finger, ſo, to ſay, The hand of God hath touched me, is more then to ſay, The finger of God hath touched me, or, This is the finger of God. Indeed the little finger of God is more then the whole hand, yea then the loynes of all Creatures. Fooliſh Rehoboam, ſaid, My little finger ſhall be heavier then my fathers loyns. The Lord can make his little finger heavier then the loyns of the moſt cruel oppreſſours. The little finger of God is powerful enough to plague and ſubdue the ſtouteſt of his enemies; And there are ſome works of God ſo great beyond other of his works, that the one may be ſaid to be done by the finger of God, the other by his arm or hand; yet the finger of God may be taken in general for the power of God as well as his hand; and therefore Chriſt alluding to thoſe words of the Magicians, when he refuted thoſe who diminiſhed the glory of his miracles, as thoſe Magicians did the miracles wrought by Moſes, ſaith (*Luk.*11.20.) If I with the finger of God caſt out Devils, &c. Which another Evangeliſt expounds by the Spirit (who is the great power) of God (*Mat.*12.28.) So that hand and finger may ſignifie the ſame divine power, not only in kind, but in degree. However Job confeſſeth that he felt not the finger, but the hand of God upon him.

But ſeeing he ſaith, this hand had only touched him, doth it not import ſome lighter affliction? The hand of God hath touched me.

ורע Non ſolum tangere ſed etiam percutere denotat, hinc ſæpe de percuſſione lepræ intelligitur.

I anſwer, the word which we tranſlate to touch, ſignifies a grievous ſtroak, and is in Scripture applyed to ſmiting with the plague of Leproſie. This touching is a wounding, and leaves its mark and ſkar behind it, as the Leproſie did. When the Leproſie aroſe in the forehead of Uzziah, as he preſumptuouſly uſurped the Prieſts office, the Text (expreſſing it by this word) ſaith, The Lord had ſmitten him, (2 *Chron.*26.20.) and though, ſtrictly to touch, eſpecially when the word finger is the inſtrument of it, ſignifies but a little ſtroak, or a light dealing with a thing, as (Luke 11.46.) where Chriſt rebukes the Phariſees, who bound heavy burthens on the people, but themſelves would not ſo much as touch them with one of their fingers; that is, they would not take the leaſt pains about them; and to ſhew how great vertue there is in a little, or the lighteſt true application by faith to Chriſt, it is ſaid in the Goſpel, that many beſought Chriſt that they might only touch the hem of his garment (Mat. 14.36.) yet to touch, implies alſo an heavy ſtroak; and we in our common ſpeech joyn it with words of deepeſt impreſſion, as when we ſay, touch him home, or touch him to the quick: And ſuch I conceive is the meaning here; The hand of the Lord hath touched me; that is, he hath made my wound deep, mine are ſore and great afflictions, he hath ſmitten not only my fleſh, but my bone, or he hath ſmitten me to the bone. The Lord hath touched me home, he hath touched me to the quick; Have you pity upon me, for the hand of God hath touched me.

Firſt, From the matter of the Petition, Have pity upon me, have pity upon me; Job being in a troubled condition, what doth he ask for? not for riches, not for honour, he only asketh pity.

Hence Obſerve in General, Deſire runs out upon thoſe things which are ſutable to our wants.

'Tis perfect happineſs to enjoy all ſutable good; and the ſupply of any particular good which we want is part of our happineſs. All ſenſitive delight ariſeth from the proportion that is between the object received, and the organ receiving; and ſo alſo doth intellectual delight. Every man frameth (according to his apprehenſion) his Petition to his ſtate, and his prayers to his deficiencies. As all deſire that which is good, ſo that good ſpecially which is the proper cure of their preſent evils. Pity is proper to miſery, and compaſſion to an afflicted condition, therefore the common cry of the afflicted is, pity, pity. He that is hungry, begs for bread, he cryes, Bread, bread; he that is in pain, begs for eaſe; and he that is ſick, thinks nothing worth the having, unleſs he may have health; he that is condemned, begs for parden, nothing ſo well-come to him as a pardon; he doth not ſue for lands, and large inheritances, for a full Table, or coſtly apparel, no, he ſueth only for pardon. He that is convinced of guilt, crys, pardon, pardon; and he that is convinced of his corrupt heart and ſinful defilements, cries, Grace, Grace. Jeſus Chriſt is therefore altogether deſireable, becauſe he hath in him a ſutable ſupply of all our wants. If we are weak, he is ſtrength for us; if we are ignorant, he is wiſdom for us; if we are guilty, he is righteouſneſs for us; if we are hungry, he is bread for us; if we are naked, he is cloathing for us; if we are in the dark, he is light for us; if we are dead, he is life for us. Chriſt is all in all; and he is all to all. He is all by way of comprehenſion, as having all fulneſs in him; And he is all in or to all by way of diſtribution, as filling all with his fulneſs. In one Chriſt we have all that we want or can deſire for good; He is called the Deſire of all Nations, becauſe all Nations ſhall deſire him, and ſhall receive from him the accompliſhment of all their deſires. And as all our deſires are found in Chriſt, ſo that eſpecially which Job ſo earneſtly deſired, pity. For it behoved him to be made like unto his brethren, that he might be a merciful high Prieſt, even touched with the feeling of our infirmities, having been in all points tempted like as we are, only without ſin.

Secondly, Obſerve from the vehemency of his deſire, Great and pinching afflictions cauſe us to put forth ſtrong and preſſing deſires.

According to the weight of the burthen that grieveth us, is the cry that comes from us; How do poor condemned priſoners cry to their Judges, Have pity upon us, have pity upon us? David in the day of his calamities, doubles his prayer for mercy (Pſal. 57.1.) Be merciful unto me, O God, be merciful unto me, for my ſoul truſteth in thee, &c. Until theſe calamities be over-paſt. It was not a ſingle calamity, but a multitude of calamities which compaſſed David, and therefore he compaſſeth the Lord about with Petitions. His ſpirit being up in prayer like a bell that rings out, he ſtrikes on both ſides, Be merciful unto me, O God, be merciful unto me. Chriſt who in the dayes of his fleſh was under ſtrong temptations, offered up prayers and ſupplications, with ſtrong crying and tears, unto him that was able to ſave him from death (*Heb.*5.7.)

Thirdly, Obſerve, Miſery calls for pity.

If man had not made himſelf miſerable, he had not needed the pity of God; And when God caſts his people into miſery, that calls for the pity of man. There is a voice in ſufferings, though the ſufferer be ſilent; his wants cry aloud, though he ſay nothing; his wounds and ſoars petition for him, though he do not; and 'tis our duty to anſwer his petition, though we receive none from him. Simpathy is a work of that grace which is in us, and the grace of God towards us ſhould provoke us to the exerciſe of it. The Goſpel acquaints us with the pity of God to us, and it preſſeth us to pity one another. Be kindly affectioned one towards another; Rejoyce with them that rejoyce, weep with them that weep. (Rom. 12.15.) Again (Heb. 13.2,3.) Remember them that are in bonds as bound with them, and them that ſuffer adverſity, as being your ſelves in the body. To remember them that are in bonds, is not a bare act of remembrance, or only to think that ſuch and ſuch are in bonds; to remember them is to pity them, to pity them really, that is, to do them good, to miniſter and exhibit ſuch things to them as they ſtand in need of. How often ſoever we either think or ſpeak of thoſe that are afflicted, we remember them no oftner, then we ſupply ſome refreſhing to them; for as to remember God, is not barely to have God in our thoughts, but it is an obediential act. While Solomon (*Eccleſ.*12.1.) cautions the young man, with remember thy Creator in the dayes of thy youth; his meaning is, obey and honour him: ſo while the Apoſtle exhorts to remember them that are in bonds, it implies the acting of our charity towards them. Or as the Apoſtle Peter ſpeaketh (1 *Pet.*3.8.) it is to have compaſſion on them, to love them as brethren, to be pitiful, to be courteous. They who ſhew no compaſſion to man, ſhew they have little or no acquaintance with the compaſſions of God. And they are both forgetful of and unanſwerable to the compaſſion they have received from God, who withhold compaſſion from man. Hardneſs of heart is oppoſed both to repentance and to pity. That hardneſs of heart which is oppoſed to repentance, is the ſign of a wicked man, who loves his ſin; and that hardneſs of heart which is oppoſed to pity, is the ſign of a cruel man, who hath no love to his brethren. Though the former be the worſer of the two, yet the latter is ſo bad that he cannot be good that hath it. The Apoſtle John concludes againſt ſuch (1 Ep. 3.17.) Whoſo hath this worlds good, and ſeeth his brother have need, and ſhutteth up his bowels of compaſſion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him? That is, the love of God doth not at all dwell in him. Compaſſion is due to every brother in the fleſh who hath need, but moſt of all to Saints, who are brethren in the faith, and partakers of the ſame grace with us.

There are two ſorts of ſufferers; ſome under the hand of God, and that either chaſtning or puniſhing. Others under the hand of man, and theſe are of two ſorts, either ſuch as ſuffer for righteouſneſs ſake, and, as the Apoſtle Peter expreſſeth them (1 Pet. 4. 15,16.) as Chriſtians; others as evil-doers, or as buſie-bodies in other mens matters. Thus the converted thief rebuked his fellow-ſufferer who railed on Chriſt, ſaying, We indeed ſuffer juſtly, for we receive the due reward of our deeds, but this man hath done nothing amiſs (Luk. 23.40,41.) They who ſuffer for righteouſneſs ſake under the wrathful hand of men, or to try their righteouſneſs under the chaſtning hand of God, as they are the higheſt objects of our pity, becauſe they are good, ſo they are the objects of our joy, becauſe their ſufferings are good; yet even they alſo are to be pitied who ſuffer for their ſins, not only becauſe their miſery is great, but becauſe the root of the ſame ſin is in us, which might have put forth the ſame fruit in us, and ſo have wrapt us up in the ſame miſeries. While we applaud and rejoyce in the juſtice of God upon wicked men, we may pity them as men; in ſome caſes where God deals ſeverely, it becomes man to deal kindly; and not only is it ſinful to vex, but not to eaſe thoſe whom God hath ſmitten. God doth not afflict to teach others to afflict, but to give them an occaſion to ſhew mercy, and an opportunity to be charitable. As many of our graces (as faith and patience, &c.) want an opportunity for their full exerciſe, till we our ſelves are afflicted; ſo ſome of them (as charity and mercy) want an opportunity for their exerciſe till others are afflicted. That hand of God which we ſee wounding others, points alſo to us to pour the oyl of our tendereſt compaſſions into their wounds. And therefore Job urgeth his friends by this argument to ſhew him pity; For the hand of God hath touched me. As if he had ſaid, Let not your hand be againſt me, becauſe the hand of God is; nay rather becauſe his hand hath ſmitten me, let your hand embrace and ſupport me. Do not ye perſecute him, whom God hath wounded; as he intimates they did in the next verſe, Why do ye perſecute me as God, &c.

Non affligit deus ut cæteri affligant, ſed ut quẽ ille percuſſit benignè tractent; & qua poterant ratione leniant. Pined.

Quamvis deus puniat in nobis humanitatẽ vult. Nicet.

Obſervandũ eſt illud quia, nam divinũ ſupplicium proponit pro ratione commovendæ humanæ miſericordiæ. Pined.

Fourthly, Obſerve, Double or great afflictions call for great or double compaſſions.

We ought not only to pity thoſe who are diſtreſſed, but we muſt pity them in proportion to their diſtreſſes. A narrow plaiſter will not help a wide wound. The Apoſtles word implies both elegantly and comfortably, that the compaſſions of Chriſt are of the ſame extent and dimenſions with our neceſſities. (Heb. 5.2.) He can have compaſſion (or compaſſion in meaſure) on the ignorant, and on them that are out of the way. If we be in double wants, Chriſt gives double ſupplies; if we be in double ſorrow, he gives us double comforts; and ſo ſhould we one to another; to ſee our brethren over-whelmed with flouds of ſorrow, and to give them but drops of comfort; to ſee them in great diſtreſs, and to give them but little help, is below our duty. He doth much who doth but little, if he doth what he can; but he doth nothing who doth but a little while he can do much, if much be wanting. μετριοπαθεῖν δυνάμενος. Qui quantũ ſatis eſt poſſit dolere. Bez.

Fifthly, In that Job lays it home upon his friends to pity him, Note,

There is a ſpecial obligation upon friends to ſhew pity to their diſtreſſed friends.

Common humanity moves for pity, much more doth profeſſed friendſhip. Many enemies have pitied their conquered enemies. When Alexander the Great heard of the death of Darius, and Caſar of the death of Pompey, they both ſhed tears. When Titus Veſpatian (who came up as the ſcourge of God againſt Jeruſalem, according to the prediction of Chriſt, Luk. 19) ſaw the miſerable maſſacre of the Jewes, both by ſword and famine, he expreſſed much compaſſion. Now if ingenuous enemies cannot withhold their pity to fallen enemies, how ſhould they who have both received and promiſed love, be moved with pity to their afflicted friends?

Sixthly, Though Job had received much hard uſage, and many unkindneſſes from his viſiters, yet ſtill he calls them his Friends.

Hence Note, A good man doth not preſently caſt thoſe out of the number of his friends, who have dealt unfriendly with him.

True love doth not make us blind, ſo that we cannot diſtinguiſh between the courteſies and diſcourteſies of our friends, but it makes us ſo clear-ſighted, that we can eaſily diſtinguiſh between our friends, and their diſcourteſies. Job could ſay, that God acted towards him as an enemy, yet ſtill he reverenced and loved God as his friend and father. So, in proportion did Job, take notice of his Friends doing acts of great unkindneſs to him, and yet he retained a good opinion of them that they were his friends.

Laſtly, Foraſmuch as Job cryes out in ſorrow, that the hand of God had touched him. Obſerve,

It is very dreadful to fall into the hand of God.

If it made Job complain when he did but fall under the chaſtiſing hand of God, how will it make thoſe complain who ſhall fall under his revenging hand? Who knows the power of thine anger? (ſaith the Pſalmiſt;) I may ſay (and it is the ſame) who knows the weight of thy hand? God can ſtrike deep, he can make his ſword enter and paſs into the very bones and bowels. As it is in ſpiritual, ſo in outward ſmitings; when the hand of God goes forth with the word, it makes deep impreſſions upon the conſcience; It is quick and powerful, and ſharper then any two-edged-ſword, peircing even to the dividing aſſunder of the ſoul and ſpirit, and of the joynts and marrow, and is a diſcerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart, (Heb. 4. 12.) So when the hand of God ſmites the body, or the ſtate, it cuts thorough, and layes all our outward comforts waſt. If the Lord do but touch the Mountains (that is, the higheſt and the ſtrongeſt of worldly powers) they ſhall ſmoak (Pſal. 144.5.) then in what flames and combuſtions ſhall they be, if he lay the weight of his hand upon them, and ſuffer his whole diſpleaſure to ariſe againſt them! How fearful a thing will it be for unbelievers and contemners of the Goſpel to fall into the hands of the living God (Heb. 10. 31.) when we hear a godly man thus lamenting the touch of his hand? They who fall into the hand of God, ſhall certainly fall under it.

Verſ. 22. Why do ye perſecute me as God, and are not ſatiſfied with my fleſh.

Some expound this Verſe as a correction of the former, implying that Job had petitioned his friends in vain; as if he had ſaid; I deſired you to pity me, yet ſtill you perſecute me, why are ye ſo unmerciful? Can ye give me any reaſon, why you give me ſo much of your anger? Indeed we find his friends as ſharp upon him as ever, as if they little regarded, or were not at all moved with his cry. But why were they thus inexorable? Why were their bowels ſhut up, and their hearts ſtill hardned againſt him? Surely they were not void of humanity, no nor of pity; yet when he begs for pity of them, he found none, what ſhould the reaſon of this be?

I anſwer, Firſt, This was from a ſpecial diſpenſation of God, who hath the hearts (as of Kings, ſo) of all inferiour perſons in his hand; friends are kind or harſh to us, eaſie to be intreated, or inflexible, at the diſpoſe of God. The ſenſitive powers are ſtopt by the power of God, the eye while it ſees doth not diſcern if he forbid; as 'tis ſaid of the two Diſciples in whoſe company Chriſt walked after his reſurrection, Their eyes were holden that they ſhould not know him (Luk. 24. 16.) Now as God holds the eyes from diſcerning, ſo the affections from loving and pitying when he pleaſeth. And becauſe the ſeverity of Job's friends ſerved the providence of God for his further tryal, therefore he bound up their ſpirits from any relenting towards him, or ſhewing him any pity.

Secondly, His friends being ſtill prejudiced againſt him, and looking upon him as an hypocrite who had ſinned greatly, and obſcured the glory of God by ſtanding up to juſtifie himſelf and maintain his integrity when the hand of God was gone out againſt him (they (I ſay) ſuppoſing him in this ill-temper) thought it unſeaſonable to pity him, and might poſſibly conclude, that to be favourable to him would be both diſhonourable to God, and diſadvantagious to their deſign, which was to humble him and bring him to repentance. So that leſt they ſhould ſeem to comply with, or flatter him in his ſinful way, they kept on their old way of ſevere reproofs and threatnings, together with bitter inſinuations of his hypocriſie and ungodlineſs. And it muſt be granted, that if this ſuppoſition or ſuſpicion had been juſt, their perſeverance in reproving him, and refuſal to comfort him, had been juſtifiable. Though the patient complain, yet painful operations muſt not be forborn, nor corroding plaiſters taken off till the ſoar be throughly ſearched and cleanſed. To ſhew pity to men in their ſins, is indeed to be cruel to them. As withholding more then is meet (from ſpending) tends to poverty, and proves a ſcattering of the eſtate, as Solomon ſpeaketh (Prov. 11.24.) ſo withholding more then is meet from reproving, tends to flattery, and proves a fixing of the ſoul in ſin.

Thus we may make out a fair ſenſe of theſe words, as they refer to his friends hard and ſevere uſage of him after he had made that paſſionate requeſt for pity; yet I ſhould rather expound them as a reprehenſion of their former ſeverity. As if he had ſaid; You need not ask what aileth me thus to cry, pity, pity; for is there not a cauſe? and have not you given me cauſe? do I complain before I am hurt? is there not as much reaſon as paſſion in my petition? have not you provoked me to it? unleſs I were ſenſleſs as a ſtone, how can I forbear to ſpeak? and unleſs you are ſenſleſs as ſtones, you will now at laſt forbear to ſtrike; Why do ye perſecute me as God, and are not ſatisfied with my fleſh?

To perſecute is more then to afflict, every act of perſecution hath many afflictions in it, but many afflictions may have no perſecution at all in them; affliction may riſe from irrational, yea from inanimate creatures; any thing may be an affliction to us, but perſecution is the act of a rational creature; reaſon abuſed or clouded is the ſpring of perſecution, and he that perſecuteth thinks he hath reaſon to do ſo. We may take the picture of a perſecutor from that deſcription of Saul (afterwards Paul) Acts 9.1. And Saul yet breathing out threatnings and ſlaughter againſt the Diſciples of the Lord, &c. While a perſecuter hath in him the breath of his own life, he breaths nothing but death againſt others; and thoſe others againſt whom he breathes death, are ſuch as are moſt worthy to live, the Diſciples of the Lord: Nothing will ſatisfie him but the death and deſtruction of ſuch. One wicked man may vex and oppoſe another even to death, but he perſecutes none but Saints. Evil men are puniſhed, but good men only are perſecuted; or if they who are indeed evil are perſecuted, 'tis becauſe they make ſome profeſſion or ſhew (at leaſt) of goodneſs.

Perſecutio eſt actualis quædã conſpiratio in aliquem ex zelo inimicoſ procedens.

Why do ye perſecute me.

Perſecution is the hardeſt tryal which Saints are put to. There are many promiſes to ſuch as endure any kind of affliction from the hand of God, but there are more ſpecial promiſes to thoſe that endure perſecution from the hand of men; Where we are moſt comforted, we are moſt aſſaulted. (Mat. 5.10.) Bleſſed are ye when ye are perſecuted for righteouſneſs ſake, &c. rejoyce and be exceeding glad, for great is your reward in heaven. See 1 Pet. 4.12, 13, 14. Revel. 2.10, &c.

But did Job's friends perſecute him? Perſecution may be conſidered two wayes.

Firſt, Strictly, as it is the actual oppoſition of any man for the cauſe of God, or for righteouſneſs ſake, proceeding from an enemy-like zeal againſt his perſon or his peace. Thus Job's friends did not perſecute him, they did not at all ſeek to ruine him, but to reclaim him, and bring him to repentance.

Secondly, Perſecution is taken in a large ſenſe, and ſo to perſecute is no more then to proſecute and put to trouble. Thus Job's friends had perſecuted him all along, and thus notwithſtanding his many proteſtations of his own integrity, and his late cry for pity, they continued to perſecute him.

Why do ye perſecute me as God?

Job ſpeaks as if his friends had exampled themſelves by God in this perſecution; did God perſecute him? I anſwer by the former diſtinction, God did not perſecute him as perſecution is taken ſtrictly, but as perſecution is taken in a large ſenſe for a violent proſecution, ſo it may be ſaid (with reverence) that God did perſecute him while he followed him with afflictions.

But how is it that he ſaith, They perſecuted him as God? as if they had ſet God for their pattern, and had done as they ſaw him do.

Man is not more unlike to God in any thing then in his perſecution of man. The Lord is pitiful when he perſecuteth, he in judgment remembreth mercy; he is kind when he is ſevere. This was the Ground of Davids choice (2 Sam. 24.14.) Let me fall into the hand of the Lord, for his mercies are great, and let me not fall into the hands of men. When did he look for mercy? even when the Lord was reſolved to afflict him. David did not ſay, his mercies are great, when he gives me wealth, riches, and honour, when he gives deliverance, and works ſalvation for his people, but when he is ſmiting his people, and conſuming them with the dreadful peſtilence. The woundings of God have more kindneſs in them then the kiſſes of many men. Man ſeldom ſhews pity to thoſe who are ſmitten, but how rarely doth he ſhew pity while he is ſmiting, or mingle mercy with his juſtice; God uſually exerciſeth ſparing mercy towards his enemies, and he alwayes doth it towards his own people, againſt whom he never ſuffers his whole diſpleaſure to ariſe, though he be often provoked by them, and diſpleaſed with them.

And as men are unlike God in the manner of their afflicting one another, ſo in the deſign and intendment of it. God afflicts to try and purge us, moſt men afflict either to vex and trouble us, or to pleaſe themſelves. The Fathers of our fleſh (ſaith the Apoſtle Heb. 12.10.) chaſten us after their own pleaſure, or as themſelves pleaſe, yea for their own pleaſure ſometimes, or to pleaſe themſelves, but he (that is, the Lord the father of ſpirits) for our profit. He doth it that the iniquity of Jacob may be purged, and this is all the fruit, to take away his ſin (Iſa. 27.9.) But man doth it that ſome injury may be revenged, and this is all the fruit he looks after, that his enemy may be taken away, or that he may take the ſpoil. It is ſaid of the Aſſyrian (Iſa. 10.7.) when God ſent him againſt an hypocritical Nation, againſt the people of his wrath, to take the ſpoil, &c. Howbeit he meaneth not ſo, neither doth his heart think ſo. What did he not mean or think? Did he not mean to go to take the ſpoil when he came thither? yes, he was forward enough to go, and he was greedy enough after the ſpoil when he was come: But he had no thought nor the leaſt meaning to do this in any compliance, either with the will or purpoſe of God. All that was in his heart was to deſtroy and cut off Nations not a few, he only deſigned to heap up riches, and advance his honour and intereſt in the kingdoms of the world. This was all that was in his heart, while the work of God was in his hand. There are but few who follow Gods deſign in doing his work. And though Job's friends had ſomewhat in their hearts ſutable to the deſign of God upon Job in his ſufferings, even a further humbling and abaſing of him in the ſight of his own unworthineſs, yet they were ſo unſutable to God in their handling of him, and of the whole matter, that the wrath of God was kindled againſt them (Chap. 42.7.) Why then doth he ſay, that they perſecuted him as God?

I anſwer; Firſt, God afflicted him without cauſe, as he tells Satan in the ſecond Chapter: That is, without any ſuch cauſe as Satan ſuggeſted againſt him. Job was a perfect man and upright, according to Gods own teſtimony. Thus Job might ſay to his friends; Will ye perſecute me as God? God, indeed, out of his prerogative may do it, he hath ſupream power, and may do what he pleaſeth, without giving an account of any of his matters; but it is too great a boldneſs in creatures to imitate God in this; Will ye

Num idem vobis licet quod deo? An vos dei Majeſtatem & imperium atq; judiciariam poteſtatem adepti eſtis? Tacitè ſummam iis arrogantiã objicit, q.d. nã quid vos dii eſtis? Bold.

ye dare to perſecute me, when no reaſon appears but your own ſurmiſes and ſuſpitions ? ye know nothing by me, ye can produce no evidence againſt me, only conjectures. While you deal thus with me, do not you take upon you to perſecute me as God in a prerogative way, and becauſe you will. Forbear any longer to ſet your ſelves in the place of God. It doth not become you, nor is lawful for you who are my fellow creatures, to deal with me as God doth. Are ye cloathed with his Majeſty and power ? Are ye ſupream and abſolute in your proceeding as he ? Are ye Gods? You take too much upon you ye ſons of men. Either then ſhew me better reaſon for what ye do, or do ſo no more. Why do ye perſecute me as God?

Secondly, God had counted him as an enemy (as he complained in the ſixteenth Chapter, verſ. 9. Chap. 19.11.) Now (ſaith he) will you perſecute me as God ? What if God ſhew himſelf an enemy to me, will you my friends, between whom and me there hath been a long profeſſion of love ? will you ſhew your ſelves enemies alſo ? While the Lord appears in wrath, you ſhould appear in love to your afflicted friend.

Thirdly, God afflicted him without intermiſſion ; God ſmote him inceſſantly with breach upon breach, blow upon blow, giving him no reſt, no breathing, as was ſhewed before. Will ye afflict me as God, and give me no breathing, no reſt ? Will ye follow me with rebuke upon rebuke, and threat upon threat ?

Quæ â deo fiunt & dei ſunt ea maxima eſſe dicuntur.

Fourthly, We may refer it to the degree of affliction ; God hath greatly afflicted me, he hath laid his hand heavily upon me ; will you proportion your hand to his ? Shall your hand be heavy, becauſe the hand of God is ? Will you lay load on me, as God hath done ? In proſecution of which ſenſe, ſome expound the words by an uſual Hebraiſm. To do a thing as God, is to do it with ſtrength ; the phraſe importeth the moſt powerful and higheſt acting of ſtrength ; Will ye perſecute me as God ? or, as if ye were ſo many Gods ? Thus he might charge them with an unwarrantable imitation of God in the manner of their oppoſition.

But I conceive we need not ſeek out theſe Parallels between the manner of Gods afflicting him and theirs, but only look to the matter, or the thing it ſelf in General. Will ye perſecute me as God ? That is, God hath afflicted and perſecuted me, and will you do ſo too, my friends, will you ? What reaſon is there that you ſhould trouble me, becauſe God hath ? Though God be righteous in all that he hath brought upon me, yet you are not innocent. While you thus afflict me, you wound your own ſouls, though, it be ſuppoſed that, you have God himſelf for your pattern.

Why do ye perſecute me as God ?

Hence Obſerve, We muſt not alwayes imitate God.

There are ſome things of which God ſaith, As ye ſee me do, do likewiſe: He ſaith ; Be perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect (Mat. 5.48.) and be merciful as I am merciful. We ſhould be merciful as God, and perfect as God ; but we muſt not be angry as God, nor ſmite as God. The Lord ſaith (Iſa. 47. 6.) I was wroth with my people, I have polluted mine inheritance, and given them into thy hand ; yet the Lord reproves them who were extream againſt them too, Thou didſt ſhew them no mercy, &c. As if he had ſaid ; Thou ſhouldeſt have ſhewed them mercy when I ſhewed them none. We muſt look to the Word of God, and not to his example for theſe things. It may be ſin in us to do that which God doth, and to will that which God willeth in many caſes. The revealed will of God is our rule, not his ſecret will ; his ſecret will ſhall be done upon us, his revealed will muſt be done by us. A father is ſick, and it is the ſecret will of God, that his ſickneſs ſhall be to death, yet it is ſinful for the child to will that his father ſhould die : he ought to pray for his fathers life, becauſe the revealed will of God is, that the child ſhould pray for the life of his father ; he muſt not ſay (poſſibly) it may be the will of God that my father ſhall die, therefore I will pray that he may die, or I will not pray that he may live. We are in that to look to our duty, not to the decree of God. So when God afflicteth, or layes his hand upon our brethren, we muſt not lay our hands upon them too : God calls us to pity, not to vex thoſe that are oppreſſed with affliction : It is not alwayes the will of God, that we ſhould will that which he willeth. It is the will of God, that many of his pretious ſervants ſhould ſuffer, but he doth not will any to put them to ſufferings, as if that were a thing ſuitable to his mind, or to the duty of man. God is juſt and holy in willing ſome things, which if man wills, he is unjuſt and unholy.

Volebat deus Jobum affligi, ſed non mandabat, tanquã rẽ conſentaneam imagini dei, quæ eſt in homine vel hominis officio, vel tanquã rem ſibi charam & acceptã. Coc.

Nec in ea parte homo divinæ adverſatur voluntati, quia vult deus ut homo ſibi cõgruum expleat officiũ, non invadat quæ dei eſt, tantũ intereſt quid deo, quid homini velle congruat. Auguſt. Enchir. cap. 105.

It is the genius or diſpoſition of the world, to bleſs thoſe whom God outwardly bleſſeth ; and to croſs thoſe upon whom God layeth an outward croſs. Whereas God often afflicts thoſe outwardly whom he loves, and heaps many outward bleſſings upon thoſe whom he hates. As every man is not good whom God filleth with worldly goods ; ſo neither is every one evil whom God preſſeth with worldly evils ; therefore the outward dealings and diſpenſations of God to man, are no rule for man either in his opinion of or actings towards man. Yea in this manner to proſecute that which God willeth is to oppoſe his will ; and to act differently from that which God willeth is to do his will ; For the contrariety of mans will to Gods will doth not ariſe from his doing contrary to that which it is the will of God to do, but from his doing contrary to that which it is the will of God he ſhould do. So, to the point in hand, though it be the will of God to afflict any of his people, yet he hath not willed us to afflict them, but to comfort and relieve them, and therefore though in relieving ſuch we do contrary to what himſelf wills to do, yet we obey what he wills us to do. Nor doth our will croſs his, though the object or thing willed be croſs. Man is not diſpleaſed with what God doth and wills according to the higher cauſe, his ſecret will ; nor is God diſpleaſed with what man doth according to the inferior cauſe, his revealed will. So then our contrariety to and compliance with the will of God cannot be concluded from the difference or identity of the object willed, but from the difference or identity of the actings of our wills with reſpect to the will of God. Hence Job ſaith, do not you think that you pleaſe God, or comply with his will, while you perſecute me as he doth ; Seeing though it be his will to do it, yet you cannot produce any warrant, that it is his will you ſhould, Why do ye perſecute me as God,

And are not ſatisfied with my fleſh.

Et carnibus meis ſaturamini. Vulg. q.d. Itane vobis refectio & voluptas ſit mei corporis cruciatus ?

Some read it affirmatively ; And ye are ſatisfied with my fleſh ; That is, my fleſh is your feaſt, you feed upon my ſorrow ; my fleſh, that is, the afflictions which wound my fleſh are a refreſhing to you, it is a pleaſure to you to ſee me in pain. It is a ſin not to pity thoſe that are afflicted, what is it then to take pleaſure in their afflictions, and to make our ſelves merry with their troubles, and to drink their tears as ſweet wine ? But the negative particle in the Original forbids this tranſlation, nor may we conceive him charging his friends with this remorſeleſs inhumanity. Yet

Secondly, Others read it (without the negative particle) as a prayer ; Why do ye perſecute me as God, be ſatisfied with my fleſh, or, Pray be ſatisfied with my fleſh ; then the meaning is this, do not you force on this my affliction as far as God, Be you ſatisfied with my fleſh ; God afflicteth my ſoul, I confeſs he doth, his arrows ſtick upon and drink up my ſpirit, he hath ſent trouble into my mind, and tryeth me with inward terrours and temptations. But my brethren; do not you perſecute me as God, be ſatisfied with with my fleſh; that is, with the afflictions and troubles of my fleſh, do not vex my ſpirit, as the Lord is pleaſed to do, be you ſatisfied with this pained body, with theſe putrified ſoars, proceed I pray, no farther, O do not vex my ſoul ! Mr. Broughton gives this gloſs upon it ; Be contented, that my fleſh is waſted, go not about like ſavage beaſts to break my bones alſo ; as if the oppoſition were not between fleſh and ſpirit, but between fleſh and bones. But the former interpretation carries a fuller ſenſe, and a higher aggravation of his miſery. For though to wound and break the bones, be more then to wound the fleſh, and Satan (Chap. 2. 5.) moved for both, Put forth thy hand now, and touch his bone and his fleſh, yet to wound the ſpirit is far more then to wound the bones. Our tranſlation which expreſſeth the negative particle, And are not ſatisfied with my fleſh, may very well agree with, and be reconciled to this; for while according to this rendring he ſaith, Pray be ſatisfied with my fleſh, he ſuppoſeth, that they were not ſatisfied with his fleſh.

Now while Job ſpake thus to his friends, Ye are not ſatisfied with my fleſh, his ſorrow tranſported him too far; and while he was begging compaſſion, he ſhewed himſelf too paſſionate. Good men do not alwayes keep the bounds, either of ſpeaking or of doing. Job's friends had dealt harſhly with him, but ſurely they were not thus inſatiably cruel. Yet what he ſaith ſomewhat over-largly of his friends, is not at all over-large for ſome mens diſpoſitions. Some there have been, and poſſibly ſuch there are, who are not ſatisfied with the fleſh of thoſe who are in affliction. And therefore we may hence Note in general,

> Such is the cruelty of ſome men, that they are unſatisfied with the corporal troubles of others, except they trouble their ſpirits, and vex their ſouls.

Yea ſome have riſen to that height of wickedneſs, that nothing could ſatisfie them, unleſs they could damn their ſouls. Fleſh will not ſatisfie them; to take away the life of the body, is a poor revenge; they muſt deſtroy the ſoul, if they can. Such was that exquiſite malice of that Italian, who not ſatisfied with the fleſh of his enemy, firſt threatned him into the denial of God, and then, that he might have a perfect revenge, ſlew him preſently, leſt he ſhould repent. Such an abomination there is in the heart of ſome men. And it was an abomination very like this, which was in his heart, who being at the examination of one who had committed a great murther, for which bloody fact he profeſſed much ſorrow and repentance, ſaid, It troubles me to ſee the villain ſo penitent, I am afraid he will go to heaven. The Civil Magiſtrate and Officers of the State ſhould be ſatisfied with the outward fleſh of moſt hainous offenders, as the Church ought to be ſatisfied with the inward fleſh, that is, with the deſtruction of ſin in the greateſt ſinners, and ſhould rejoyce in, yea by all means provoke them to repentance, that their ſouls may be ſaved in the day of the Lord Jeſus (1 Cor. 5.5.) Double revenge belongs only to him, Who after he hath killed hath power to caſt into hell (Luke 12.5.) Indeed neither the moſt cruel Magiſtrates nor murtherers can do more (Luke 12.4.) yet they ſhall be judg'd as having done more, who have either wiſhed or attempted more. That mixture of pride and malice which appeared in Haman was monſtrous and inhumane, Who thought ſcorn to lay hands on Mordecai alone, but ſought to deſtroy all the Jewes who were throughout the whole kingdom of Ahaſuerus, even the people of Mordecai (Heſt. 3.6.) Perſonal revenge would not ſerve his turn, it muſt be national; yet the malice and cruelty of thoſe exceeds that of Haman, who think ſcorn to lay hands upon the body of a man alone, they muſt reach at his ſoul, and do their utmoſt to make him in one moment univerſally and eternally miſerable. Fleſh is too groſs a morſel for their revenge, they muſt feed upon the ſpirit. Such cannot live like Canibals or ſavage beaſts, upon the carkaſſes of men, they muſt like the Devil (that roaring Lyon who goes about ſeeking whom he may devour) lay waſt their conſciences, and prey upon their ſouls. And ſome there have always been who though they arrive not at this degree of wickedneſs to deſire the damnation of the ſouls of others, yet they are very hungry after and active in the vexation of their ſouls, thinking they do not enough, unleſs they do that, which is a torture to their minds, a grief unto their ſpirits. Of ſuch alſo, we may ſay, They are not ſatisfied with fleſh. The cruelty of Davids enemies extended only to his fleſh (Pſal. 27.2.) When the wicked, even mine enemies and foes, came upon me to eat up my fleſh, &c. (That is, to deſtroy, to make an end of me) they ſtumbled and fell. To eat fleſh is a proverbial ſpeech, noting extreameſt cruelty; ſo (Zach. 11.9.) They ſhall eat every one the fleſh of another; That is, they ſhall exerciſe utmoſt cruelty one againſt another; yet this cruelty in eating fleſh, in ſpoiling the lives and eſtates of men, is a kind of mercy in compariſon of theirs who devour ſouls. The wickedneſs of the Adultereſs is expreſſed by Solomon (Prov. 16.26.) That ſhe hunteth for the precious life; the life of the body is a precious commodity, but the life of the ſoul is far more precious. The whoriſh woman may be ſaid to hunt for both, and chiefly for the latter; The taking away of that life is ſometime the end which the Adultereſs aims at, and it is alwayes the end and iſſue of her Adulteries, unleſs the Lord give repentance and pardon. Old Jacob ſaith of his ſons, Simeon and Levi; Curſed be their anger, for it was fierce; and their wrath, for it was cruel. We may ſay of the Adultereſs, Curſed be her love, for it is fierce; and her embraces, for they are cruel; She is not ſatisfied with fleſh, ſhe hunts for the precious life, even the precious life of the never-dying ſoul.

Thirdly, Theſe words are interpreted as expreſſing both the ſpirit and the work of detractors and ſlanderers, their ſpirit is full of ſpight, and their work is to eat up the honour of others. Thus while Job's friends judg'd him an hypocrite, and declared him a wicked one, he might ſay they were not ſatisfied with his fleſh. Slander devours a man alive; and it devours more then fleſh, yea that which ſome eſteem more then their lives, their credit and reputation. Now as we may ſay of all ſlanderers, They are not ſatisfied with the fleſh of thoſe they oppoſe, ſo it is very rare that any man oppoſeth another without ſome mixture of ſlander. The Chriſtians in the Primitive times were ſubjected and willingly gave up themſelves to a thouſand ſorts of death for the name of Chriſt; but this did not ſatisfie their perſecuters. They always endeavoured as much to ſlay and kill their credits, as they did their bodies; and were as buſie to invent and ſet a face upon horrible lies againſt them, as to invent terrible tortures for them. They could no more bear it that their good names ſhould live, then that they ſhould live. And therefore they ſuggeſted inceſt, murther, and what not, as the common practiſes of their early meetings. That they were Chriſtians, was indeed, their crime, that was capital by the Laws of thoſe times; but their perſecuters were not ſatisfied with their fleſh, which they might (at pleaſure) devour, becauſe they profeſſed Chriſt, they muſt fall upon their good names, and charge them with enormities in manners, whom they meant to deſtroy for the faith. The like methods we have found revived in theſe latter days; all ways being uſed to ſtain their reputation, and heap reproaches upon their perſons, whoſe way and intereſt hath been oppoſed. The Apoſtle warns the Church of Galatia (and that is our warning) (Gal. 5.15.) If ye bite and devour one another, take heed ye be not conſumed one of another.

Eſt detractoris periphraſis. Obtrectatores vivis paſcuntur carnibus. Merc.

But ſome may ſay, if men be once bitten and devoured one of another, what is there remaining of them to be conſumed?

I anſwer; By this biting and devouring the Apoſtle means ſlandering, backbiting, and evil-ſpeaking one of another. Words which have ſuch a tendency in them, are devouring words, they devour his good name who is concerned by them: Now ſaith the Apoſtle, Take heed ye do not devour one another by ſharp words, leſt that provoke you to cruel actions; uſually men firſt devour one another by the tongue, and then by the hand; detracting words ſtir up ſuch ſtrife and contention, ſuch diſtractions and diviſions in families, neighbourhoods, and Churches, as prove an utter conſumption to them.

Laſtly, We may refer this to the contempt and ſcorn which they powred upon him; under the weight and ſence of which he had complained more then once before; as if upon a freſh remembrance of it he had thus beſpoken them. O my friends, is it not enough that my body is worn and corrupted with painful ſoars, unleſs you pour in the Vineger of ſharp invectives and bitter ſcoffs, to perplex and afflict my troubled ſpirit? Are theſe the comforts which you have prepared for your friend? Why are ye not ſatisfied with my fleſh.

Annon ſatis vobis eſt, quod corpus meum ulceribus cruciatur, niſi inſuper me ludibrio habeatis? O ſævitiam pluſquã ferinã. Merc.

Thus much of Job's ſupplication for pity, and his deprecation of their further perſecution; in the next words he calls for audience and attention to what he had yet to offer; O that my words were written, &c.

VERS. 23, 24, 25.

O that my words were now written, O that they were printed in a Book!

That they were graven with an iron pen and lead, in a rock for ever!

For I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he ſhall ſtand at the latter day upon earth, and though after my skin Worms deſtroy this body, yet in my fleſh ſhall I ſee God.

THis ſorrowful Patient having cryed to his friends for pity, at verſe 21, and for ſparing, at verſe 22, that they would both condole his former, and forbear to give him further ſufferings; he now begs (if he fail in thoſe requeſts) at leaſt due attention to, and ſerious conſideration of what he had yet to ſay (verſ. 23, 24, 25, &c.) in which (as ſome conceive) he reaſſumes the proof of his integrity, and doth it two wayes.

Firſt, By a vehement wiſh, that all his words might be brought to a ſtricter, yea to the ſtricteſt tryal; O that my words were written, &c. verſ. 23, 24.

Secondly, By a ſtrong profeſſion of his faith in the Redeemer, and of an aſſured expectation of a happy reſurrection to a better life, though he ſhould never ſee good day more in this (verſ. 25.) The former ſhews, that he had lived in all good conſcience towards men, and the latter that he was ready to die in a right faith towards God.

The argument of the firſt part may be thus framed up;

He who deſires that all his words may not only be heard, but written, and not only written but printed, yea ingraven in a rock, that all poſterity may have the skanning of and commenting upon them; this mans conſcience doth acquit him, and he ſtands clear in the apprehenſion of his own integrity.

But it is my deſire, that my words were written that they were printed, that they were ingraven, that all may skan them, and comment upon them.

Therefore my conſcience doth acquit me, and I am clear in the apprehenſion of my own integrity.

This aſſumption is laid down in the three and twentieth and four and twentieth Verſes, in much variety of high expreſſions, all concurring in this, that he did not only not fear nor decline the judgment of the preſent age, or of any mortal man then living; but alſo that he did neither fear nor decline the judgment of poſterity, who uſe to be more ſevere and critical in their determinations, being freed from all perſonal reſpects and ingagements, which often byas the judgment, and blind the underſtanding, in reference to thoſe who are preſent and alive. And though this be only a probable argument, not concluſive, or demonſtrative of the ſincerity of Job, (for many are ſtiff enough to their errours, and are not afraid to commend them over to the cenſure of poſterity by writing) yet conſidering that Job looked on himſelf as a dying man, and that he had much more to ſay for himſelf, then this his bare ſay-ſo, or verbal aſſeveration, therefore the argument carries weight in it, and a fair ground that he was ſincere, in what he ſpake and did, becauſe he cared not who heard what he had ſpoken, or examin'd what he had done; Guilty conſciences love not to examine or try themſelves, much leſs to be examined and tryed by others. Thus we may be led into the general ſcope of the three and twentieth and four and twentieth verſes; I ſhall now briefly open the parts.

Verſ. 23. O that my words were now written.

As if he had ſaid; For as much as after all theſe diſcourſes, I find that there is little will and leſs care in you to tender my condition, and to do me good, there remains only this laſt deſire which I put up unto you, that what I have both ſpoken and done, may be faithfully regiſtred and recorded, that ſome Scribe would now appear while we are in diſpute, and faithfully note and ſet down all the paſſages which have been between us. Thus he ſpeaks alſo in the cloſe of this diſpute (Chap. 31. 35.) O that one would hear me, behold my deſire is that the Almighty would anſwer me, and that mine adverſary had written a Book: let a Book be written of theſe diſputes, I care not who writes it. I would truſt even an adverſary to write it; O that mine adverſary would write a Book, I would take it upon my ſhoulder, and bind it as a Crown to me; I am ſure, mine adverſary could ſay nothing juſtly concerning me, but what I may glory in, and make my Crown.

מי יתן Quis dabit.

O that my words.] The Hebrew is, Who will give me? As if this were ſuch a ſpecial favour, that he looking about him could not find any man ready to beſtow it on him; as if pen, ink, and paper, and the pains of writing, were a greater bounty then he was like to meet with in the world. The Hebrew expreſſion, imports much difficulty, though not an impoſſibility; who will do it? As if he had ſaid, it is hard to find a man to undertake this task; O that my words, &c. 'Tis queried here, what words he meaneth, or what he meaneth by theſe words, there are three opinions about it.

Optandi forma Hebræis uſitata, valet idem quod utinam. Pronomen quis in ſcripturis ſanctis non pro impoſſibili ſed pro difficili ſemper accipitur. Hieron. in Eccleſ. 3.

Firſt, Some take words in a general notion for the hiſtory of all his actions and ſufferings in the whole ſeries of his tryal. O that, what I have done, O that, what I have endured were faithfully recorded. Words are put for things by a frequent Hebraiſme.

Cuncta quæ pertulit. Greg.

Verba pro rebus ipſis. Polychr.

Secondly others reſtrain theſe words to what he had ſaid by way of defence or apologie for himſelf, in this conteſt with his friends.

Thirdly we may rather refer theſe words he would have written to what he was about to ſpeak, to which theſe two Verſes ſeem but a Preface; O that the words which I ſhall ſpeak next might be written, though that all that I have already ſpoken be ſcattered in the wind. Golden words indeed thoſe were and worthy to be written in Letters of Gold. Glorious words concerning the Redeemer, concerning the laſt Judgment, concerning the Reſurrection, and his hope of Glory, come next to be opened; O that theſe words (ſaith he) were written, that they were printed in a Book, that they were graven, &c. There are three ſteps of this wiſh.

Ea quæ poſtea de fide & Auctore reſurrectionis ſubjungit, & de adventu domini. Hier. Epiſt. 61. ad Pammach.

Quæ dicturus ſum de ſpe, quam in deo firmavi. Aquin.

Firſt, That his words might be written.
Secondly, That they might be printed.
Thirdly, That they might be graven; all three note duration, yet with a gradual difference.

To write a thing, notes the preſervation of it; a word heard quickly periſheth, 'tis gone into air, that which is written, is preſerved and continueth; We tranſmit our minds, our opinions and actions to poſterity by writing.

Vox audita perit, litera ſcripta manet.

But Job would have his words not only written, but printed, O that they were printed, printed in a Book. The word which we tranſlate printed, ſignifies, firſt, ſimply to ſet down, or deſcribe a thing Hiſtorically, or by way of narration: Secondly, It ſignifies authoritatively to ſet down a thing as a Law, as a Statute, by way of determination. The word is frequently uſed in the Old Teſtament, to expreſs thoſe Laws, Ordinances and Statutes which the Lord preſcribed unto his people; And ſo this word ſpeaks more then the former; Laws and reſolutions of State are more ſtrongly confirmed and more carefully preſerved, then bare Narrations are.

חקק Ad ea pertinet quæ tanquā firma & rata perſcribuntur ad publicam memoriam, cujuſmodi ſunt ſtatuta, jura, leges.

O that they were printed in a book.

That is, that my words were written as publick Statutes, Ordinances, and Lawes, with a ſtamp of authority upon them, that they may be preſerved as the Monuments of a Commonwealth, and the Records of a Court are. (Iſa. 10. 1.) Wo to them that decree unrighteous decrees. The word that we tranſlate to print, is there rendered to decree. (Iſa. 33. 22.) Thou art our Law-giver, it is this word, or our Statute maker, as we put in the Margent.

Again, When he ſaith; O that my words were printed; We are not to take printing in that ſtrict ſenſe uſed amongſt us, for that new Art or invention oppoſed to writing. We have no ground to believe that the Art of printing was uſed in thoſe ages. The firſt time that ever it was heard of in Europe (as our Hiſtorians tell us,) was (little more then two hundred years paſt) in the year one thouſand four hundred and fourty. It begun to be practiſed (as it is ſaid) at Harlem, and was perfected at Mentz. Here printing is taken in a large ſenſe for the ſetting down and deſcribing of any thing in the moſt authentick and ſtrongeſt manner, for the perpetuating of it. And therefore alſo he would have it printed in a book, not in looſe ſhattered papers, but in a book; for though that uſe alſo of binding bookes be not very ancient, their writing (for the moſt part) being in Roules or Volumes; yet thoſe Roules were under much care and inſpection; ſo that this addition of printing in a book carries in it a further degree of care to preſerve what was printed. (Gen. 5. 1.) This is the book of the generations of Adam; (Matth. 1. 1.) The book of the generation of Jeſus

John Gerrtudenberg firſt inventer of Printing in Europe. An. 1440.

Opto (quaſi ſe corrigens) non tantum ſcribi communi ratione, ſed ut exarentur in libro, majus quippe hoc eſt & firmius.

Jeſus Chriſt; Theſe books were written to be preſerved and laid up. That is, of the birth, life, and death of Adam and of Jeſus Chriſt. Job would have a book of his Generation alſo; O that my words were printed in a book; And which is yet more;

Verſ. 24. That they were graven with an iron pen and lead in the Rock for ever.

This verſe is the ſame in ſubſtance with the former, and contains only a further amplification of his deſire; it would not ſatisfie him that his words were written with a quill, or printed in an ordinary book of parchment, or paper, (there were divers materials, upon which writings were made in ancient times, as alſo at this day) ſuch books may ſoon be eaten with wormes and moths, at leaſt, time the eater of all things, will eat them up; but (ſaith he) I would have my words written with a pen of iron and lead in the Rock for ever.

A pen of iron.] The Prophet (Jer. 12. 1.) uſeth the ſame expreſſion; The ſin of Judah is written with a pen of iron, and with the point of a Diamond; implying that it was written to perpetuity: ſo here, O that my words were graven with an iron pen; That is, ſo graven, that (as he explaineth his intention in the laſt words of the verſe) it might laſt for ever. Thoſe things which continue very long (though they have an end) look like eternity, and ſo are truly ſaid to be done, or to laſt for ever. Rocks have a kind of everlaſtingneſs in them. And therefore that which is written upon a Rock cannot but be everlaſting. God is called a Rock of Ages (which we tranſlate, an everlaſting ſtrength, Iſa. 26. 4.) not only becauſe his own ſtrength continueth, and is the ſame in all Ages, but becauſe all Rocks are of long continuance, and laſt many, very many, no man knows how many ages. So that to write upon a Rock is oppoſed not only to writing upon the water, or in the ſand which continue not at all, but to all thoſe uſual wayes of writing which are of long continuance; this being once done, may be ſaid to be done for ever. In this all agree; but there is ſome difference what the meaning ſhould be, of this iron pen and lead, with which he wiſhed his words might be graven in a Rock for ever. The queſtion is whether he means a pen of lead, as well as an iron pen; And if ſo, it may be doubted, why having called for an iron pen, he ſhould call for a leaden? What can a pen of lead do upon a Rock? lead being ſofter then a Rock, how can it make impreſſion, or draw a letter upon it?

There are three things which may be offered for the removing of this ſcruple, and the further clearing of this Scripture.

Firſt thus; Some render it, in lead, as making the pen to be but one, and that of iron; but that the writing ſhould be upon a twofold matter; firſt, upon lead; and ſecondly upon the Rock; as if he had ſaid, I would not have a skin of parchment, or a ſheet of paper, but a ſheet of lead to write upon; with which the ancient cuſtom of writing matters of greateſt moment, whether decreed or done in lead, agreeth well.

Publica inſtrumenta plumbeis voluminibus reſervata. Plin. l. 13. c. 11. Fortè ferro incidebant, quod poſtea plumbo colorabant. Druſ. Rab. Selom. Plumbo per ſulcos infuſo. Jun. Fortè plumbum temperatura aliqua indurabant adeo ut ſtilo ejus in ſilice aut petra incidi poſſit. Pine. Optat Job ut ſermones ſui immortales ſint, & in longum ævum durent, hoc enim eſt, ſtilo ferreo inſculpi, & exarari plumbo.

Secondly, Becauſe lead ſeems to be ſpoken of here as the inſtrument of writing, not as the matter upon which they did write. I conceive it may be an alluſion to another cuſtome among ancient Engravers, who when they had cut the letters in ſtone, or (as he ſaith) in a Rock (that is, in Marble cut out of the Rock) when (I ſay) they had formed the letters with graving inſtruments, or iron pens, then they coloured them with lead, or filled the cuts of the letters with lead. Thus they might be ſaid to grave with an iron pen and lead, becauſe when the iron pen had ſhaped the Characters, they powred lead into the furrows or cuts of the letters, to render them more clear and legible.

Thirdly, They who interpret the lead, by a pen of lead, ſay that there was an art of tempering lead with other mettals, which hardned it, and ſo made it fit for a graving inſtrument. But it is not much material, which of theſe we determine. This is plain, that in this wiſh he alludeth to ſome extraordinary way of writing in thoſe times upon Monuments of publick Pillars, that the contents or matter ſo engraven might be tranſmitted to poſterity, and be made immortal, even to endure for ever.

From theſe two Verſes, which only expreſs the ſtrength of his deſire, that what he had to ſay, might be ſafely preſerved for the Obſervation of after ages; learn firſt,

That our honeſt and juſt deſires, (though ſomewhat paſſionate) and gratiouſly accepted and anſwered by God.

Job ſpeaks here in ſome heat, yet his heart was honeſt, and his aim ſincere in what he deſir'd, and the Lord granted his deſire. He wiſheth his words might be written, and his words were written, God provided him a Secretary. Job's tongue was as the pen of a ready writer, and God made ready a writer to pen down what he ſpake with his tongue. Few words have had ſuch a writing, or ſuch a writer; his were written in a book, and written as with an iron pen and lead in a rock for ever; they are preſerved to this day, and ſhall to the end of the World, as Monuments of his patience and uprightneſs, as alſo of the Lords power and faithfulneſs.

Secondly, from this confidence of Job in deſiring to have what he had ſaid, or what he had to ſay, written, we may obſerve;

Truth ſeeks no corners.] Truth loves to be tryed, it cares not before whoſe judgment-ſeat it comes; it would be written, that it might be ſeen and conſidered of all men. Pure Gold fears neither the furnace nor the ballance. Errour may ſhew fair till 'tis tryed, but truth ſhewes alwayes faireſt after tryal.

Thirdly, As this writing ſpecially refers to that noble and divine confeſſion of faith, which Job made in the next Verſe; Obſerve,

It is a duty to profeſs our faith openly, when we are called to it.

Job had a call to do this; for though he were not directly (and in terminis) invited to make a confeſſion of his faith, yet the dealing of God, and of his friends with him, put him upon it, and beſpake it of him. 'Tis high time to declare the ground of our hope, and upon what foundation we are built, when ſtorms either of affliction or perſecution aſſault and ſhake us; and then 'tis beſt to do it freely and openly, that our faith may be as famous as our afflictions are. Or (as the Apoſtle Peter ſpeaks (1 Epiſt. 1. 7.) That the tryal of our faith being much more precious then of Gold that periſheth, though it be tryed in the fire, might be found to praiſe, and honour, and glory, not only (as he there ſaith) at the appearing of Jeſus Chriſt, but in the day of our ſuffering. As we muſt not hide our talents in a napkin by our idleneſs, ſo we muſt not hide our faith in a napkin by our ſilence; we ſhould be ſo far from being aſhamed of our hope, that we ſhould glory in it while we are in tribulation, and deſire as (with Job) that it might be written with a pen of iron in a rock for durableneſs, ſo that it might be written as with the beams of the Sun for light, and clearneſs. The Apoſtle tells the Corinthians; Ye are our Epiſtle written and ſeen of all men (2 Cor. 3. 2.) They held forth the faith, both in their profeſſion and practiſe; they were a breathing confeſſion of faith, a living Epiſtle, read and ſeen of all, and ſo ſhould we be. As faith muſt be made viſible by our works, Shew me thy faith by thy works, ſaith the Apoſtle James, ſo it muſt be made audible by our words.

There were a ſort of Hereticks ſpoken of by Euſebius, who held this opinion, That there was no need for any man at any time to make open confeſſion of his faith, eſpecially not in times of danger: Then (according to their doctrine) all might conceal and keep their faith to themſelves, that ſo they might alſo keep themſelves in a whole skin, and avoid the danger. This is, indeed, a ſafe way to avoid perſecution and martyrdom, but it is a ſinful way. We have juſt cauſe to ſuſpect that their faith is dead, who thus hide and bury it. Saints are bound to profeſs their faith (when called to it) to the death, and to contend earneſtly for truth, whatever afflictions and ſufferings come after them. The Apoſtle reports his and the Saints troubles in thoſe times for the Goſpel; We are troubled on every ſide, yet not diſtreſſed; we are perplexed, but not in diſtreſs; perſecuted, but not forſaken; alwayes bearing about in the body the dying of the Lord Jeſus, &c. But what did Paul (and his fellow-Saints) in thoſe boiſtrous and bloudy times? Did he politickly preſerve himſelf, or hide his profeſſion? No he, proclaims it, as he ſaith the Saints of old did before, who were ſpirited with the ſame faith (2 Cor. 4. 13.) We having the ſame ſpirit of faith, according as it is written,

Euſeb. lib. 6. cap. 38.

I

I believed, and therefore have I ſpoken; we alſo believe, and therefore we ſpeak. What a Chriſtian believes, he ſhould be ready to ſpeak; and he that believes indeed cannot but ſpeak. The Apoſtles being threatned, anſwer, We cannot but ſpeak the things which we have heard and ſeen. Faith is like the oyntment in the right hand, which bewrayeth it ſelf; and as it is an evidence, to the Soul that hath it, of thoſe things which are not ſeen corporally or naturally, ſo it will give an evidence to others of thoſe things which it ſelf hath ſeen ſpiritually.

Fourthly, From the ſeaſon in which Job made this confeſſion; Obſerve;

> There is nothing doth more ſupport and keep up the ſpirit in times of ſorrow and danger, then a free confeſſion of our faith, and confidence in the Redeemer.

The way to overcome all the evils and troubles in the World, is to ſay, I believe; Faith is our victory (1 Joh. 5.4.) Who is he that overcometh the world, but he that believeth that Chriſt is the only begotten Son of God. He that believes overcomes. The profeſſion and holding out of our faith, is our actual conqueſt and victory over the world. Faith is our Shield, whereby we quench all the fiery darts of the wicked, whether men or Devils. Faith leadeth us to a fountain of living waters, which at once refreſheth us, and puts out that fire. If once faith get up, all evils and temptations fall before it. Job that he might get victory over all the oppoſitions of men and Devils, holds forth his Shield, and makes profeſſion of his faith in God.

What was that? A compendious yet exact confeſſion of faith it was; as will appear in opening the next Verſe, with the context following.

Verſ. 25. For I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he ſhall ſtand at the latter day upon the Earth.

For the cleering of theſe words, I ſhall premiſe two general veins of Interpretation.

Firſt, The Jewiſh Writers interpret this Context of a metaphorical reſurrection, in reference to Job's outward condition, or of his reſurrection from a ſtate of affliction. We have this ſenſe of a reſurrection illuſtriouſly held forth (Ezek. 37.) where the return of the people of Iſrael out of Babylon is deſcribed by the reviving of dry bones. God himſelf makes the Comment (verſ. 11,12.) Then he ſaid unto me, Son of man, theſe bones are the whole Houſe of Iſrael: Behold, they ſay, our bones are dried, and our hope is loſt, we are cut off for our parts. Therefore propheſie and ſay unto them: Thus ſaith the Lord God; Behold, O my people, I will open your graves, and cauſe you to come up out of your graves, O my people, and bring you into the Land of Iſrael. An eſtate of extream miſery and danger is often in Scripture expreſſed by death. Paul ſaith, that he had been in deaths often (2 Cor. 11.23.) and that God had delivered him from a Great death (2 Cor. 1.10.) that is, from deadly danger. Such a condition deprives us of all the comforts of life, and makes our lives oftentimes more bitter then death; yea, men in ſuch a condition are ſpoken of as buried and diſſolved into duſt. In purſuance of which metaphor, deliverance is called, a quickning, a reviving, a riſing again, Pſal. 71. 20. Thou which haſt ſhewed me great and ſore troubles, ſhalt quicken me again, and ſhalt bring me again from the depths of the earth. So Pſal. 80. 18. Pſal. 85. 6. Iſa. 26. 19. Hoſ. 6. 2. Rom. 11. 15. In which laſt place, the calling and reſtoring of the Jews, is called Life from the dead. Now (I ſay) the Rabbins generally, as alſo ſome of our learned Expoſitors run upon that ſtrain here; conceiving that Job therefore calls God his Redeemer, becauſe he had to that day preſerved him alive in the midſt of ſo many deaths and dangers, as alſo becauſe he had a ſure hope that he ſhould through the power of God ſurvive them, and be reſtored to ſuch an eſtate of honour and riches, as he had enjoyed in the former part of his life; this they call his reſurrection and redemption, and ſo accordingly they fit an explication to the ſeveral paſſages of this Context; yet their opinion is ſtrongly oppoſed by others, with much evidence of reaſon.

Mercer.
Calvin.

Three ſpecial reaſons may be urged againſt it.

Firſt, the height and ſpiritualneſs of Job's language tells us, that his thoughts moved, and that his hopes were fixed above this worlds felicity; His faith ſoared aloft in the meditation of a Redeemer, in the præmeditation of the laſt Judgment, and in the viſion of God: all which argue more then a metaphorical reſurrection.

Secondly, Though his expreſſions in the letter may be fitted to that inferior ſenſe, yet if we remember what hath been touched more then once in the former paſſages of this Book, we find that Job had as it were diſclaimed all hope of reſtoring unto any temporal happineſs in this life, affirming, that his hope was gone, and that he was worſe then a tree cut down, of which there is hope, that it will grow again, and put forth tender branches from the root; as for him, as he had no deſire, ſo no expectation of recovering his former beauty and greatneſs, with promiſes of which his friends (upon the ſuppoſition of his repentance) had often endeavoured to raiſe his ſpirits and fill his ſails. Therefore it ſeems altogether improbable, that he ſhould riſe to that height of hope about it in this place, contrary to the current of all his former diſcourſes upon that point.

Thirdly, He ſaith, that he ſhould ſee God with the ſame eyes, that he ſhould ſee him for himſelf, and not another; which argueth that he intended not a reſurrection of his outward eſtate; for what doubt could there be, that if he were raiſed from affliction, but that he ſhould ſee God with the ſame eyes, and that he himſelf ſhould ſee him, and not another, or not for another; but to believe the reſtoring the ſame body, or the Identity of the eyes of his body after all had mouldred into duſt, this was a high act of believing. From theſe reaſons it appears that Job holds forth his faith in a reſurrection, not to a temporal good in this life, but to eternal life. In which ſecond ſenſe I ſhall open and proſecute the ſeveral paſſages of this Scripture. Beſides many others, one of the Ancients gives his Judgment clearly for it; What (ſaith he) can be more manifeſt then this Propheſie. None ſince Chriſt came in the fleſh have ſpoken ſo plainly of the reſurrection, as this man did before the coming of Chriſt in the fleſh.

Quid hac prophetia manifeſtius? Nullus tam apertè poſt Chriſtum, quam iſte ante Chriſtū de reſurrectione loquitur. Hieron. Epiſ. 61. ad Pammach.

I know that my Redeemer liveth, &c.

As if he had thus argued; He that waits by faith in the Redeemer for the reſurrection of his body to eternal life, after death hath done its worſt, is not a wicked man, or an hypocrite, as you have charged me.

But ſuch is my faith, I believe in the Redeemer, and I look to riſe (after this body is conſumed and eaten of worms) to an eternal happy life; therefore I am not ſuch as you judge me to be, neither wicked not hypocrite. You account me as rejected of God, yet I know that God is my Redeemer, I know that he lives for ever, and that he is mine for ever; and therefore do not think, becauſe I have no hope of this life, that therefore I deſpair of life: do not take upon you, that you only know theſe myſteries, and that I am ignorant of them, as my friend Bildad concluded in the eighteenth Chapter (this is the portion of the man that knows not God,) for even I alſo know that my Redeemer liveth, and ſhall ſtand upon the earth at the latter day.

For I know.] What this knowing is, hath been opened (Chap 13. 18.) upon thoſe words, I know that I ſhall be juſtified. In brief, 'tis knowing upon the greateſt certainty, knowing without all wavering; As if Job had ſaid, My judgment is fixed, and my faith confirmed in this thing, it is as clear to me, that my Redeemer liveth, as if I had already ſeen him alive. It is as ſure to me that I ſhall riſe again, as if I had been dead, and were already riſen. My faith makes this as evident to me now, as my experience hereafter ſhall.

Verbum Originale omnē dubitationē excludit, & notat mentis firmam adhæſionem & rem ſatis ſuperque exploratam.

I know.] This knowing came not in either by ſenſe or any natural demonſtration; Faith is the gift of God, and ſo is the knowledge of Faith, or that knowledge which is the full aſſurance of Faith. There is an exceeding greatneſs of the power of God put forth to thoſe-ward who believe according to the working of his mighty power, which he wrought in Chriſt when he raiſed him from the dead (Epheſ. 1. 19, 20.) Faith is the evidence of things not ſeen; who can make things not ſeen evident to us, but he who is every where evident, yet no where ſeen. Faith is the ſubſtance of things hoped for, as the Apoſtle gives the definition (Heb. 11. 1.) Who can make things abſent from our enjoyment, preſent to our comfort, but he who is alwayes preſent? Saints do not ſee what they believe, yet they know what they believe. When Joſeph brought his two Sons, Manaſſes and Ephraim to his father Jacob for his bleſſing, Jacob put his right hand upon the younger, and his left hand upon the elder; Joſeph obſerving this, humbly corrects his fathers error, Not ſo my father, this is the firſt-born, put thy right hand upon his head; but his father refuſed and ſaid, I know it my Son, I know it, (*Gen.*48.19.) I do not this upon miſtake, I know what I do, though the ſight of my eye be dim, yet I ſee clearly enough what I do. Faith ſees not upon whom it layeth its hand, but it knoweth upon whom it layeth its hand. (2 *Tim.*1.12.) I know whom I have believed. Faith gives us acquaintance with God, before we ſee him, and when we ſee him, faith ſhall be ſwallowed up.

I knew that my Redeemer.

גאל Significat 1 rem aut perſonam venditam redimere. 2 captam liberare. 3 interem tā vindicare aut ulciſci.

The word which we tranſlate Redeemer, comes from a root which is applied three wayes in Scripture.

Firſt, To buying again of that which was alienated by ſale or morgage, and ſo to reduce it unto the poſſeſſion of thoſe whoſe it was before, Lev. 25.25.

Secondly, To the reſcuing or bringing back of thoſe who have been taken priſoners and led into captivity. There is a double way of redeeming ſuch.

Firſt, By force and power. Thus when Lot was taken priſoner by thoſe four Kings that came againſt Sodom, Abraham armed his ſervants, and by force redeemed or brought him back, Gen. 14. 14, 16.

Redimere eſt quaſi rurſus emere.

Secondly, There is a redemption by price or ranſom; To redeem is to buy again; captives are often ranſomed and redeemed by price; Chriſt hath redeemed us both wayes, as will be ſhewed further in the opening of this Scripture. And becauſe when we are ſurprized by or engaged in any preſſing danger, it coſts much or calls for much power to vindicate and reſtore us; therefore this word redeeming is often uſed in Scripture to ſignifie deliverance from any eminent or imminent danger. (Pſal. 69. 18.) Draw nigh unto my ſoul, and redeem it. And again (*Pſal.*72.14.) He ſhall redeem their ſoul from deceit and violence; that is, from all ſecret plots and open actings tending to deſtruction. And thus the Lord is ſaid to redeem his people from the hand of the Enemy, (Pſal. 106. 10.) And Jacob ſpeaks of the Angel that redeemed him from all evil (Gen 48.16.) Job's redeemer and this Angel who redeemed Jacob from all evil, is the ſame, even Jeſus Chriſt; of whom the Lord ſpeaks to Moſes (*Exod.*23 20,21.) Behold, I ſend an Angel before thee, to keep thee in the way, and to bring thee into the place which I have prepared; beware of him and obey his voyce, provoke him not, for he will not pardon your tranſgreſſions, for my Name is in him. This Angel can be none but Chriſt, the creating, not a created Angel. Pardon of ſin belongs not to creatures, nor is the name of God in them; Some creatures have the name of God upon them; but he only hath the name of God in him, who is of the ſame nature with God.

Thirdly, This word is applied to the avenging of their death, who have been wrongfully ſlain. (Numb. 35. 12.) Goel is the avenger of blood, or the redeemer of blood, becauſe he came to take vengance on ſuch as had unjuſtly ſhed the blood of his kinſman. He may be ſaid to redeem a man from death, who according to juſtice purſues him who took away his life. Chriſt is not only our Redeemer, by reſtoring us to life, but our avenger by purſuing and ſpoiling him (that is, the Devil) who was our murderer, or the contriver of our death.

Again, To be a Redeemer is taken two wayes.

λυτρωτὴν i.e. liberatorem רינא Diremptorē litium. Syr.

Firſt, More largly for a deliverer, or helper; ſo 'tis one of the names of God; and to redeem is both his work and his honour. (*Exod.*6.6.) I will redeem you with a ſtretched out arm, and with great Judgments. In which ſenſe alſo Moſes is call'd a deliverer, (*Act.*7.35.) according to the Greek, which the Syriack tranſlates by a word that ſignifies a Judge, or one that determines a controverſie. God ſent Moſes to mannage his controverſie with Pharaoh, and deliver his people from that ſtate of bondage. And thus God was Job's Redeemer, becauſe he pleaded his cauſe, and determin'd for him, delivering him out of his affliction, as is reported in the latter part of this book. Under this more general notion (I ſay) God is often call'd a Redeemer; for as he ſuffers his people to be carried away by, and fall into the hands of their enemies, and ſells them into the enemies hands (that they may know the difference between his ſervice, and the ſervice of the Nations, as he ſpeaks, 2 Chron. 12.8.) yea he ſells them for nought (Pſal. 44. 12.) As ſometimes they are ſaid to ſell themſelves (Iſa. 51. 1.) Which of my Creditors is it to whom I have ſold you. It was a cuſtome among the Jews, that parents who were poor and unable to pay their debts, ſold their children to their creditors, or their creditors took their children for their debts, as appears by the pitiful complaint of the widow to the Prophet Eliſha (2 Kings 4.1.) In alluſion to which the Lord challenges the Jews to name his creditors (if they could) to whom he had ſold them: As if he had ſaid, I am not in debt to any man, or Nation of men, that I ſhould need (as you ſometimes do) to ſell my children to free my ſelf; no, for your iniquities (as it follows) you have ſold your ſelves. Now when God fetcheth his people back again, and delivers them from that captivity or miſery, into which either he ſells them, or they ſell themſelves (though indeed he never ſells them, till they ſell themſelves) then he is call'd a Redeemer, (*Jer.*15.21.) I will redeem thee out of the hand of the terrible. And in Pſal. 130. 7. With thee there is plenteous redemption; that is, with thee there are many redemptions, thou multiplieſt deliverances as faſt as our troubles multiply.

More ſtrictly to redeem, and the Title Redeemer, is applied to Jeſus Chriſt; to whom alſo, I conceive, we may particularly apply all thoſe works of redemption, which in the Old Teſtament are aſcribed to God. For he was God the Redeemer from the beginning, long before he was God manifeſted in the fleſh. And all the Redemptions of his Church and people from temporal affliction, as well as from eternal damnation, do properly belong to him. It was (ſaith God) by the blood of thy Covenant, that is, by the blood of Chriſt, with whom God made the Covenant in our behalf; that God ſent forth the priſoners; that is, their diſconſolate ſtate in Babylon, *Zech.*9.11.

In this ſtrict ſenſe the word Redeemer, ſuites Chriſt fully. For Goel ſignifies one that is near to us in conſanguinity, one of our blood, bone of our bone and fleſh of our fleſh. Hence an ancient Tranſlator renders here, I know that my kinſman, or he that is near to me liveth. And ſuch were under a ſpecial obligation to redeem, as appears, Ruth 3.12. Chap. 4. 4, 5. where the caſe is ſet down between Boas, and the other kinſmen. Boas was a kinſman and had right to redeem, yet becauſe there was a nearer kinſman, he would not meddle but upon his refuſal. As if he had ſaid, you have the firſt right, and may make uſe of your priviledge if you pleaſe; If thou wilt redeem it redeem it, but if thou wilt not redeem it, then tell me that I may know, for there is none to redeem it beſides thee, and I am after thee. From this proceeding 'tis evident that redemption belonged to thoſe that were near of kin, and firſt to the neareſt. Jeſus Chriſt is near to us, therefore properly and in a ſtrict ſenſe he is (Goel) our Redeemer, he is fleſh of our fleſh, and bone of our bone, he is one with us. As we are the children of God by Regeneration, ſo the brethren of Chriſt by Adoption. For both he that ſanctifieth, and they that are ſanctified, are all of one: for which cauſe he is not aſhamed to call them brethren (*Heb.*2.11.) Chriſt and we are all of one, that is of one nature; we, and Chriſt as man, are not only of one Father or Efficient cauſe which is God; but we are of one nature or material cauſe which is fleſh and blood. In which reſpect he is our Redeemer upon the ſtricteſt tearms and laws of redemption. And in that ſtrict ſenſe, beſides him there is no redeemer. For though God the Father in the Son by the holy Spirit be indeed our Redeemer, yet properly and according to the ſignification of this word, Jeſus Chriſt alone is our Redeemer; who taking our nature upon him, and becoming our brother, had right to redeem us, even as being God in our nature, he had full power to redeem us. We are redeemed by the blood of Chriſt (*Epheſ.*1.7.) In whom we have redemption thorough his blood.

ὁ ἀγχιστεὺς μȣ proximus meus. Theodotio

Redimere eſt aſſerere & vindicare aliquid vel ab iniquo vel alieno poſſeſſore jure propinquitatis. Redemptoris & propinqui idem nomen in ſcriptura.

Etſi Deus pater in filio per ſpiritum ſanctum veriſſimè redemptor noſter eſt, proprie tamen hebrææ vocis ſignificatio Chriſto convenit; qui quia frater noſter, (aſſumpta noſtra carne) factus eſt, jus redimendi habet, & certiſſimam redimendi poteſtatem quia Deus eſt in carne manifeſtatus.

The blood of Chriſt may be conſidered two wayes in the work of our redemption.

Firſt, As the price of our redemption, we have redemption thorough his blood; that is, blood is the price, by which we are redeemed; We are bought with a price (1 *Cor.*6.20.) What that is, we are taught (1 *Pet.*1.20.) Not with corruptible things, as ſilver and gold, but with the precious blood of the Son of God, as a Lamb undefiled, and without ſpot.

Secondly, As the blood of Chriſt may be conſidered as it is the price of Redemption, ſo alſo as it carries the right of Redemption: Blood implies nearneſs in relation. God made of one blood all Nations of men (Acts 17. 26.) that is, the blood of Adam the firſt man hath run in the veins of all his poſterity; and ſo there is a natural relation among all mankind, though not a legal or civil. Now as God made all Nations of men of one blood, ſo he hath made Chriſt and us of one blood. For as much as the Children are partakers of fleſh and blood, he alſo himſelf took part of the ſame, that through death he might deſtroy him who had the power of death, that is, the Devil, and deliver them who through fear of death, &c. (Heb. 2. 14.) Thus (I ſay) the blood of Chriſt and ours being one, and ſo one that he is our brother and kinſman, he had the right, yea (we may ſay with reverence) it was his duty to redeem us. Chriſt as God had power to redeem us, but as being (Immanuel) God with us, one with us, a kinſman, a brother, he not only had a right, but he was obliged to redeem us.

To clear the point a little further, there are five things concurring to compleat the Office and Service of our Redeemer.

Firſt, The Redeemer muſt be a kinſman.

Secondly, He muſt redeem upon that ground, or under that notion, as a kinſman.

Thirdly, He muſt deliver thoſe who were under reſtraint or captivity, from the hand of their enemies and oppreſſors.

Fourthly, He muſt not pay any price to the oppreſſor.

Fifthly, He muſt pay the price to the true Lord, or into his hands, to whom the redeemed originally and of right do belong.

Theſe five Conſiderations meet in Chriſt our Redeemer; For,

Firſt, He is our kinſman.

Secondly, He redeemed us upon that account, as he was a brother or kinſman.

Thirdly, He hath fetcht us out of the hands of our oppreſſor the Devil.

Fourthly, He paid nothing to the Devil in lieu of our redemption.

Fifthly, He paid the price into his hand who was our firſt Lord, even into the hands of his Father.

Mankind fallen, may be looked upon two wayes.

Firſt, As under the power of ſin and Satan.

Secondly, As under the power and Juſtice of God: When Chriſt came to redeem us, he paid nothing to the Devil but blows; He ſpoiled principalities and powers (Col. 2. 15.) but he did not make them ſatisfaction; we owed the Devil nothing, he was only an executioner to vex and afflict us; but he paid the price to his Father, under whoſe juſtice we were fallen; and ſo he exactly fulfilled all the duties, and ſuſtained all the parts of a Redeemer to the utmoſt.

To clear up this Title or Office of Chriſt yet further, we may take notice that Chriſt is called in Scripture, a Mediator as well as a Redeemer, yet theſe titles are not of equal extent. Chriſt is a Mediator, yea a head for, and to thoſe, whoſe Redeemer he is not. The good Angels have Chriſt for their head and Mediator as well as man, but man only hath Chriſt for his Redeemer. The evil or fallen Angels could not be redeemed, therefore Chriſt took not upon him the nature of Angels (Heb. 2. 16.) The good Angels, or thoſe who ſtand in obedience, had no need to be redeemed, yet they had need to be confirmed, and therefore Chriſt took care of the Angels, and became their head and Mediator. So that as Chriſt is Mediator between God and man, to make up the breach that is between them; ſo he is Mediator between God and the elect Angels, to maintain the union that is between them; but he is a Redeemer to man only.

Further, Job doth not only profeſs faith in a Redeemer, but in his Redeemer; My Redeemer liveth; every word in this confeſſion is precious and weighty. Here he uſeth an appropriating word, yet he doth not engroſs the Redeemer to himſelf excluding others, but he takes his part with others. Thoſe Pronounes, mine, thine, his, are (voces amatoriæ) words of love, and drop like honey-combs with ſweetneſs of affection. Job's heart was carried out abundantly to Chriſt in love as well as in faith. The firſt work of faith is to believe that Chriſt is a Redeemer; the ſecond is to reſt and rely upon Chriſt as a Redeemer; the third is to ſee an intereſt in Chriſt as my Redeemer. When the ſervants of Benhadad (1 Kings 20. 32.) came to Ahab mediating for his life, He no ſooner ſaid, He is my brother, but they took hold of it, as of a comfortable word. The Syrians (as ſome report them) were South-ſayers, who ſuperſtitiouſly obſerved a good Omen from thoſe words, which they called Lucky. 'Tis probable Benhadad's ſervants were skild in ſuch obſervations, and took it for a good Omen, when Ahab ſaid, my Brother. The Text implies ſome ſuch thing, while we read (verſ. 33.) that, the men did diligently obſerve whether any thing would come from him, and did haſtily catch it; and they ſaid, thy Brother Benhadad; they looked upon it as a love-token when once he ſaid, my Brother Benhadad. Thus here, my Redeemer, ſhews that Job had much intereſt in and love to the Redeemer; his faith did not run upon generals, but was fixed, ſet down, and reſolved, to live and die by his living Redeemer.

Erat valdè amicum verbum propter utramq; vocem, & quaſi omen; omen eſt Auguriū ex verbis captatum Syri erant Auguriis dedititi. Pined.

My Redeemer liveth.] To live, implies not only the preſent being, but the eternity of the Redeemer; as if he had ſaid, though I am mortal and dying, as alſo you my friends are, yet my Redeemer liveth; he ſaith not, hath or ſhall live, but he liveth; he ſpeaks of the Redeemers life, without any diſtinction of time paſt or to come, he liveth. God is for ever, I am; Chriſt as God liveth from Eternity, Chriſt as man liveth to Eternity. And as Chriſt God-man was the Lamb ſlain from the foundation of the world in the promiſe, and from eternity in the purpoſe and decree of God; ſo Chriſt as God-man lived from eternity in the purpoſe of God, and from the foundation of the world in the promiſe. Chriſt is compared in the Goſpel to many things without life, to water, to bread, to a ſtone, to a way; yet every one of them hath the addition of life as he is compared to them. He is not called ſimply water, but living water; nor ſimply bread, but living bread; ſo alſo a living ſtone, a living way, and the tree of life.

Vivit dominus, i. e. æternus eſt. Druſ. Viventem dicit, i. e. æternum & incorruptibilis vitæ ac virtutis. Ccc.

Secondly, When he ſaith, my Redeemer liveth, we muſt look on Chriſt, not only as having life, but as the Lord and Prince of life (Act. 3. 15.) Chriſt as the Eternal Word hath life in himſelf (Joh. 1. 4.) As he is the Son of man he receiveth life of the Father; For as the Father hath life in himſelf, ſo hath he given to the Son to have life in himſelf, (Joh. 5. 26.) and that not as every thing which lives hath life in it ſelf; but by way of Eminency, as a Prince of life; for, Firſt, he hath his own life in his own diſpoſe. See how like a Prince he ſpeaks of his own life (Joh. 10. 18.) I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again. Secondly, He gives life to others; the Son quickens whom he will, Joh. 5. 21. As Chriſt hath life in himſelf, ſo he hath life to beſtow at his pleaſure, or upon whom he pleaſeth; He came that we might have life (Joh. 10. 10.) He is the life (Joh. 14. 6.) And he is our life (Col. 3. 4.) We were all dead; and lay under the ſhadow or power of death, the image of death ſate upon us all; yea life it ſelf ſat (as it were) in darkneſs, till Chriſt brought life and immortality to light through the Goſpel (2 Tim. 1. 10.)

Thirdly, When Job ſaith, My Redeemer liveth, it notes the ſtrength, activity, and power of Jeſus Chriſt; not a meer being or ſubſiſtence only, but might and ſtrength. As if he had ſaid, Though I am weak, poor, and miſerable, though my life be ſo low, and my body ſo diſ-ſperited, that I may more fitly be numbred among the dead then among the living; yet my Redeemer liveth, he liveth and is mighty. David ſaid of his enemies (Pſal. 38. 19.) Mine enemies are lively and ſtrong, or being living are ſtrong. Many men live who are not ſtrong; and ſome live who have no ſtrength. But the life of Chriſt and his might are the ſame, and ſhall never be diſjoyned. The Pſalmiſt indeed propheſying of the ſufferings of Chriſt, repreſents him thus complaining (Pſal. 22. 15.) My ſtrength is dryed up like a potſheard, my tongue cleaveth to my jaws, and thou haſt brought me into the duſt of death. When Chriſt died the ſtrength of his body was dryed up, yet Chriſt did not die for want of ſtrength; for he gave up the Ghoſt (ſaith the Evangeliſt) it was not pull'd or ſnatcht from him whether he would or no. Chriſt did not die becauſe he could live no longer, but becauſe in obedience to his Fathers will, and in anſwer to the deſign of our ſalvation, he was willing to lay down his life. And ſo ſtrong was he in death, that he conquered dying, and ſpoiled principalities and powers, making a ſhew of them openly, and triumphing over them while he was nailed to the Vivere eſt vigere.

Croſs (*Col.*2.15.) The death of Chriſt had more life and ſtrength in it, then the lives of all men and Angels. Again, though Chriſt died, as death is the diſunion of the two parts of the humane nature (ſoul and body) yet death did not hurt the union between his two natures, the divine and the humane, this remained untoucht and inviolable. In this union the ſtrength of Chriſt lay, as the ſtrength of Sampſon did in his locks, which were only a ſign or an aſſurance of the nearneſs and preſence of God with him; and therefore it is ſaid after his locks were cut, he (attempting to put forth his ſtrength as he had done before) wiſt not that God was departed from him. Now for as much as God never departed from our Sampſon Jeſus Chriſt, no not in death; for then not only was God his Father with him (though he cryed out, Why haſt thou forſaken me) but the God-head of the Son the ſecond perſon continued in firmeſt union with the man-hood which he aſſumed. And ſo it may be ſaid of the Redeemer, that when he died, he lived, as well as now we ſay, he liveth who was dead. Thus he ſpake to John, (*Rev.*1.18.) I am he that liveth, and was dead, and behold, I am alive for evermore, Amen, and have the keyes of hell and of death. The keyes ſignifie power, and to ſhew that the life of Chriſt is not a bare ſubſiſtence, but cloathed with power; therefore, as he ſaith, I live for ever, ſo, I have the keyes. And thus while Job ſaid, I know my Redeemer liveth, he aſcribed ſtrength and efficiency to him as well as life. From this part of Job's confeſſion, I know that my Redeemer liveth,

First obſerve, Affliction doth not ſeparate from Chriſt.

When Job could call nothing in or of the world his, he could call Chriſt his; though he could not ſay, my health, my ſtrength, my friends, my riches, my beauty, for he had none of all theſe, all theſe being departed from him, yet he could ſay, My Redeemer; for Chriſt was not departed from him. This was Paul's aſſurance, and the triumph of his faith (Rom. 8. 35.) Who ſhall ſeparate us from the love of Chriſt? ſhall tribulation, or diſtreſs, or perſecution, or famine, or nakedneſs, or peril, or ſword? I am perſwaded they cannot; nay in all theſe we are more then conquerors through him that loved us. Unleſs Saints were conquered, yea unleſs Chriſt himſelf were conquered, they cannot be ſeperated from Chriſt. But all theſe things, the leaſt of which ſingle do more then conquer worldly men, are more then conquered by holy men; and therefore notwithſtanding the united forces of all theſe, the union between Chriſt and Saints remains unviolable.

Secondly obſerve, That a Believer may arrive at an aſſurance, at the full aſſurance of his intereſt in Jeſus Chriſt the Redeemer.

Here are two words of aſſurance, I know, there is aſſurance; my Redeemer, there is aſſurance again. Faith acts upon a ſure ground, 'tis bottom'd on the knowledge of a ſure word, not upon opinion, and it takes faſt hold, 'tis not ſatisfied until it can ſay, the Redeemer is mine, and I am his; all's mine, and he is my all. I will not inſiſt upon this point, having in Chap. 13. ſpoken to it, upon thoſe words, I know that I ſhall be juſtified.

Thirdly obſerve, That Jeſus Chriſt was the Redeemer from the beginning.

The old Fathers who lived before that fullneſs of time in which Chriſt came in the fleſh, died in this faith, they waited for the Meſſias, they looked for and relied upon the promiſed ſeed. Chriſt ſpeaks of the times as high as Abraham, Abraham ſaw my dayes, and was glad (Joh.8.) And the Apoſtle Jude ſpeaks higher of him, that Enoch the ſeventh from Adam propheſied of the coming of Jeſus Chriſt to judge the world, therefore certainly he was acquainted with the promiſe of Jeſus Chriſt to redeem the world. This adminiſters a ſtrong confutation of the Socinian-hereſie; for if Chriſt who was manifeſted in our nature in the latter end of the world, was the Redeemer of thoſe who lived in the firſt ages of the world; then he was not a Saviour only (as they affirm) by his word and doctrine, or by the example of his life, ſufferings, and reſurrection; but by his ſacrifice and ſatisfaction. For how could either the perſonal teachings or example of Chriſt reach to or be conveyed up to them, who lived before him?

Fourthly learn, That, there is but one Redeemer.

My Redeemer.] He ſpeaks in the ſingular number; one is all, as the Apoſtle teſtifies (Act. 4. 12.) Neither is there any name under Heaven whereby we can be ſaved, but only by the Lord Jeſus Chriſt.

Fifthly note, We have a living Redeemer.

Our Redeemer died for us, but he lives for ever. Chriſt being raiſed from the dead dieth no more, death hath no more dominion over him (Rom.6.9.) Death never had any abſolute dominion over Chriſt, for he had no ſeed of death, that is, no ſin in him. (The Throne of death is founded upon ſin, as the Throne of life is founded upon righteouſneſs) Chriſt ſubmitted himſelf to death, but it was not poſſible he ſhould be holden of it, or ſubjected by it (*Act.*2.24.) But now not only hath ſin no abſolute dominion over him, but no dominion over him; and when the Apoſtle ſaith, Death hath no more dominion over him, his meaning is, death hath nothing at all to do with him. In this life of Chriſt our comfort lives. We have a twofold comfort in the life of Chriſt.

Firſt, In that he liveth, he liveth to us; that is, he liveth for our good. So the Apoſtle concludes (*Heb.*7.25.) He is able to ſave them to the uttermoſt that come unto God by him, ſeeing he ever liveth to make interceſſion for them. We are aſſured of a twofold Salvation by the interceſſion of Chriſt. Firſt, Of a Temporal ſalvation from troubles and outward evils: Secondly, Of an Eternal ſalvation from ſin and condemnation. Therefore (ſaith Paul, 1 *Tim.*4. 10.) we both labour and ſuffer reproach, becauſe we truſt in the living God, who is the Saviour of all men, ſpecially of thoſe who believe. The living God is the Saviour of all men, yea he ſaveth man and beaſt (*Pſal.*36.6.) by his general providence; but he ſaveth believers by an act of ſpecial providence; and therefore they are ready, not only to do their utmoſt for him, but to venture the loſs of all for him; they both labour and ſuffer reproach, becauſe they truſt in the living God, who ſaveth them above all other men, becauſe Chriſt ever liveth to make interceſſion for them, which he doth not for other men.

Secondly, We have this further comfort in the life of Chriſt, that we live in him; for as Chriſt is the life (Joh. 14. 6.) ſo, he is our life (Col.3.4.) our life is bound up in him. Chriſt is indeed the bundle of life (1 Sam.25.29.) in whom the lives of all believers are bound up. Hence (which is a ſpring of everlaſting aſſurance and conſolation) himſelf infers (Joh. 14. 19.) Becauſe I live, ye ſhall live alſo. The life of Saints is not in their private hands, but in Chriſt their publick head. And ſeeing the Spirit hath taught us to ſay, that He is our life, we may ſay (with holy reverence, and in an humble dependance upon him) that our life is as ſafe as His.

From this double comfort (which indeed includes all comforts) iſſuing out of this great truth, that our Redeemer liveth, I ſhall only intimate this ſingle duty (which indeed includes all duties) incumbent upon all believers, Live to Chriſt. Paul had made out this Judgment upon this ground (2 Cor. 5. 14, 15.) and ſo ſhould we, That if one died for all, then were all dead; and that he died for all, that they which live, ſhould not henceforth live unto themſelves, but unto him that died for them, and roſe again. If Chriſt had only died for us, that we might live, that had been ſo great a benefit, and ſo unſpeakable a kindneſs, that it would have obliged us for ever to live to his name and memory; but when, as he died, ſo he aroſe or lived again for us, and is thereby enabled to pour down benefits upon us, and do us kindneſſes every day, how much more doth this oblige us to live unto him! Some are apt to forget dead friends, yea though they laid down or ventured their lives for them, yet they are ſoon forgotten. But ſhall not he live in our memories, and be the ſum of all our lives, who died to redeem us, and yet is our living Redeemer. Though every believer doth not arrive at this clearneſs and full aſſurance of faith, to know that the Redeemer is his; yet he that believes cannot but know that he upon whom his ſoul reſteth, as a Redeemer, liveth. And therefore, though he doth not yet receive the ſweetneſs of this comfort, that he ſhall for ever live with Chriſt; yet he ought with his all, and in his ever to pay the tribute of his duty in living unto Chriſt. I know that my redeemer liveth, —And that he ſhall ſtand at the latter day upon the earth, &c.

Theſe words contain the ſecond Article of Job's holy confeſſion; as if he had ſaid, I do not only believe that my redeemer liveth, but that he ſhall ſtand at the latter day upon the earth.

יקום à radice קום Surrexit ad ſtandum, erectus, elatus, elevatus fuit. יקום Omne quod ſtat, ſubſiſtit vel vivit in terra. Cadaver, dictum à cadendo, vel ut alii, caro data vermibus. Sic נבלה Hebraicè & πτῶμα, Græcè idem ſonant. ואחרון Poſterior, poſtremus, ultimus vel tandem. Theodotio vertit noviſſimè.

The word which we tranſlate to ſtand, ſignifies to riſe up to ſtand, or to be erected, or lifted up; and hence Jecum, (from the ſame root) is uſed by Moſes (Gen. 7. 4.) to ſignifie, every living ſubſtance, ſo we tranſlate, For yet ſeven dayes, ſaith the Lord, and I will cauſe it to rain upon the earth forty dayes and forty nights, and every living ſubſtance that I have made (or every thing that ſtandeth up or ſubſiſteth) I will deſtroy. A living body ſtandeth up, in oppoſition to which a dead body is (in all the learned Languages) expreſſed by a word that ſignifieth falling down; a dead body is a falling body, a body fallen to the earth from whence it firſt was raiſed; or it is fleſh given to the worms, as ſome make the Latine word ſound, by a nice diſtinction of each ſyllable to a word.

Now, ſaith Job, My Redeemer liveth, and ſhall live, he liveth and he ſhall ſtand at the latter day. Jeſus Chriſt was a falling body, when he died; but he conquered death, and became a ſtanding body again, and ſhall ſtand,

At the latter day upon the earth.] The Hebrew is, laſt, or latter upon the earth, our Tranſlaters add the word day, in a different letter, both to diſtinguiſh it from the expreſs terms of the original Text, as alſo to determine what they apprehended as the proper ſence and ſcope of the place.

The latter or laſt dayes in Scripture are taken three ways.

Firſt, More generally for the time following, or for hereafter. That which the Prophet Joel expreſſeth thus, It ſhall come to paſs afterward, that I will pour out my Spirit upon all fleſh (Chap. 2. 28.) is cited by the Apoſtle (Act. 2.17.) It ſhall come to paſs in the laſt dayes, &c,

Secondly, The latter dayes contain all Goſpel time, or all that time elapſed ſince Chriſt came and was revealed in the fleſh; which, though the Goſpel was publiſhed preſently after the fall (Gen. 3. 15.) is ſtrictly called the Goſpel-time, in oppoſition to the legal adminiſtrations. So we may underſtand the old Patriark Jacob (Gen.49.1.) When he called unto his ſons and ſaid, Gather your ſelves together, that I may tell you what ſhall befall you in the laſt dayes, that is, at the coming of the Meſſias, or when Shilo comes, as he ſpeaketh (Verſ. 10.) Though withal Jacob intends there a propheſie to his ſons of their ſtate in all the times following, or as the Hebrew elegancy expreſſeth it, In the poſterity of dayes, which Scripture phraſe notes alſo any or all time to come, as was toucht before. Thus the Apoſtle ſpeaks of the latter times (1 Tim. 4. 1.) and of the laſt dayes (2 Tim. 3. 1.) Theſe dayes are called laſt, Firſt, Becauſe all was then conſummated, which was propheſied concerning the work of mans redemption, and ſo is the perfection of all times; or as the Apoſtle calls it (Gal. 4. 4.) The fulneſs of time. Secondly, Becauſe the whole time of the worlds continuance being diſtinguiſhed into three Great periods, the Goſpel time is the laſt of the three. The firſt, Was from the Creation to the giving of the Law upon mount Sinai. The ſecond, From the giving of the Law till the appearance of Chriſt in our Nature. The third, From that Appearance in humility, till his appearance in Glory. Theſe are the latter dayes.

Finis dierū denotat extremos dies, ſive tempus Meſſiæ. Schind.

Thirdly, As the whole Goſpel time is called the laſt time, or the latter dayes; ſo, there is a latter day, or a laſt time, (1 Pet. 1.5.) which is more ſpecial and particular, and that is the dap of the Reſurrection, or the day of Judgment, which we may call the laſt of the latter dayes. Under both which notions the words may be taken here; firſt, as referring to the coming of Chriſt in the fleſh to redeem us from death; ſecondly, to the coming of Chriſt in Glory to raiſe the dead, and to Judge both quick and dead.

√

Further, As this word laſt or latter, is expounded with reference to a time, ſo to a perſon.

And thus it is taken two wayes.

First, Some refer it to the perſon of Job, and joyn the words on the earth, not with the word ſtand, but with the word laſt; giving the ſence thus, I know that my Redeemer liveth, and the laſt (man) upon the earth ſhall ſtand; that is, he who is laſt, loweſt, or meaneſt upon the earth, meaning himſelf (Job ſpeaks of himſelf in the third perſon (ſay they) the more to move compaſſion) ſhall ſtand upon the earth freed from the bondage of theſe afflictions, under which now he groaneth, and which is more, as a conquerer in the cauſe which now dependeth. There is a general truth in this; to call any man the laſt upon the earth, is as much as to ſay, he is a poor or a miſerable man. The laſt upon the earth, is the loweſt or meaneſt upon the earth. Thus Job deſcribeth at once the poverty and weakneſs of his condition, and the ſtrength of his faith; I know that my Redeemer liveth, and though I be laſt upon the earth, yet I ſhall ſtand in this cauſe, and carry it againſt my friends, becauſe I have ſuch a Redeemer, ſuch a Deliverer, to undertake for me.

Ego noviſſimus ſuper terram, &c: i.e. Ego omnium in terra habitantium miſerimus ſurrecturus ſum & victor exiſtam in hac vita. Verba ſuper terram jungunt, non cum verbo ſurget vel ſtabit, ſed cum nomine noviſſimus. Ego noviſſimus ſuper terram, i. e. omnium in terra habitantium miſerrimus erigar, &c. Bold.

And to make that yet clearer, ſome expound thoſe words upon the earth comparatively, I, the laſt upon the earth, that is, I, who am viler then the earth, or (as the Apoſtle ſpeaks) the off-ſcouring of all things in the account of all men. We have ſuch an expreſſion in our Language, concerning a perſon who hath low thoughts of himſelf, or is vile in his own eyes. He is not worth, or he doth not judge himſelf worth the ground he goes upon; that is, he judges himſelf, as Job is ſuppoſed to do, according to this interpretation, more vile then the earth. And then the ſence of the whole may be thus conceived; as if he had ſaid, Though I am in my own opinion, or in the opinion of others, more vile then the earth, as the off-ſcowring of all things, the ſcorn of men, and the outcaſt of the people; yet I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that I ſhall ſtand right before him, in judgment, when my cauſe comes to tryal. In which ſence this word ſtand is uſed (Pſal. 1. 5.) The wicked ſhall not ſtand in judgment, that is, they ſhall not be juſtified or acquitted, they ſhall fall before the Judge. Wicked men though they judge themſelves more excellent then the heavens, ſhall yet fall in Judgment when the righteous ſhall ſtand, who thought themſelves, or were thought more baſe then the earth. But I ſhall not ſtay upon this interpretation, there being ſo much ſtraining of the Text to make it out.

Si verba ſuper terram vel pulverem, comparative ſumeremus, i.e. abjectus & vilis pluſquam terra Emphaſin habet. Bold.

Secondly, It is referred to the perſon of the Redeemer, I believe that my Redeemer liveth, and that he ſhall ſtand the laſt upon the earth. The laſt, is one of the Titles of Chriſt, who is called Alpha and Omega, the firſt and the laſt (Rev. 1. 7.) It is as great an honour to be called the laſt, as the firſt (Iſa. 44. 6.) Thus ſaith the Lord, the King of Iſrael, and the Redeemer the Lord of Hoſt, I am the firſt, and I am (acaron, the word of the Text) the laſt, and beſide me there is no God; firſt and laſt, Alpha and Omega comprehend and carry all. Alpha is the firſt, Omega is the laſt letter of the Greek Alphabet; theſe are letters of more eminent note then the reſt, becauſe being firſt and laſt, they encloſe all the reſt. How eminent then is Chriſt, who is Himſelf both theſe letters! How great is he in whom the terms of greateſt diſtance imaginable, firſt and laſt, meet and are united; ſo that Chriſt calling himſelf firſt and laſt, takes to himſelf abſolute perfection, power, ſoveraignry, eternity, dignity, and Divinity. He is the firſt, becauſe before all beginning, he was in the beginning with God, and from him all things received their beginning. He is the laſt, becauſe he ſhall continue for ever without end, and is the end of all things that had a beginning; All things were created (not only) by him, but for him (Col. 1. 16.) He is alſo the laſt, becauſe when we have attained him, we are at the higheſt or laſt of our attainments; we reſt and have no more to ſeek when we have found him, for he brings us to the Father in whom, through himſelf the Son, we have eternal reſt. Thus we may conceive Job's faith triumphing in his Redeemer, as the ſum and comprehenſion of all things; He liveth as the firſt, and the laſt ſhall ſtand,

Vult dicere, poſt omnes qui terram incolunt ipſe manebit: poſtremus omnium erit, ſtabit, i. e. perſtabit manebit, vivet poſtremus & ultimus. Druſ.

Upon the Earth, or, upon the duſt.

על עפר Super pulverem vel contra pulverem על importat Hoſtilitatem.

Which is expounded three ways (as I ſhall ſhew further.)

Firſt, Of his ſtanding upon the earth, when he was made man.

Secondly, Of his riſing up upon the earth (for the word as was toucht before, ſignifies both to riſe up and to ſtand upon) after he had laid down his life, and abode in the grave three dayes.

Thirdly, Of his ſtanding upon the earth, or over the earth (the Hebrew bears that alſo) when he ſhall judge man.

Again, Some render, He ſhall ſtand againſt the duſt; that is, He ſhall contend with the duſt, and ſhall by his power raiſe me and all men up out of the duſt; he ſhall conquer the duſt; ſo the word (with this prepoſition) is uſed (Gen. 4. 8.) Cain roſe, or ſtood up againſt his brother Abel: Cain's riſing againſt him, was a contending with him to ſlay him. (Judg. 9.12.) Ye are riſen up againſt the houſe of my father. (Pſal. 54.5.) Mine enemies riſe up againſt me, or upon me. Thus the Redeemer ſhall riſe or ſtand up againſt the earth. What earth?

This earth is interpreted two wayes; firſt, for men, who are but duſt and refined earth; or for that earth into which the bodies of men are reſolv'd in the grave. Chriſt ſhall ſtand up againſt that earth, to recover the bodies of his people out of it; ſo a late Expoſitor gives the ſence. This Verſe (ſaith he) declares the manner how Chriſt ſhall vindicate our dead bodies out of the hand of corruption. He will ſtand upon the earth as upon a conquered enemy. Our bodies are ſown in the earth, there they are held priſoners; but Chriſt will recover them out of the earth, he will ſtrive with the duſt, and putting forth his Almighty Power, break the bars and gates of that Priſon wherein the bodies of his people are detained. Death is an enemy, the laſt enemy, as the Apoſtle ſpeaks (1 Cor. 15. 25, 26.) where he repreſents Chriſt, contending with it, and conquering it. He muſt reign till he hath put all enemies under his feet; the laſt enemy that ſhall be deſtroyed is Death. Now Death keeps all under its feet, but Chriſt ſhall put Death under his feet, ſtanding triumphantly upon the duſt in the latter day.

Stabit ſupra pulverem ut vindex triumphans, ſpoliato mortis carcere, qui carnem noſtram detinebat. Coc.

For the further underſtanding of theſe words, I ſhall gather the diſtinct interpretations and verſions of them together, that they may lie the fairer to the Readers eye and judgment.

He ſhall ſtand at the latter day upon the earth.

Firſt, The Vulgar tranſlation renders this clauſe, as the former, in the firſt perſon, as Job's profeſſion of his faith about his own Reſurrection. I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that I ſhall riſe in the latter day. The favourers of that tranſlation ſtrive much to vindicate and maintain it, as alſo to reconcile it to the Original, which is in the third perſon (as all agree) beſides other wide differences, very hardly, if at all, to be agreed. Nor is there any need to expound Job ſpeaking in this Verſe of his perſonal Reſurrection (unleſs incluſively with the reſurrection of all mankind) that being the buſineſs of the two Verſes following. For as ſoon as he had ſaid, He (that is, Chriſt the Redeemer) ſhall ſtand at the latter day upon the earth, he ſubjoyns his aſſurance in the next words, that himſelf ſhould then be raiſed up; Though after my skin worms deſtroy this body, yet in my fleſh I ſhall ſee God. How ſtrong and confident an aſſertion of his own Reſurrection is couched and contained in that profeſſion, will appear when I come to the opening of it.

In noviſſimo die reſurrecturus ſū. Vulg.

Secondly, This clauſe is underſtood by ſome metaphorically; To ſtand, is to overcome and be victorious; He ſhall ſtand laſt upon the earth, that is, Chriſt ſhall conquer all his enemies, all that oppoſe him ſhall fall before him; his enemies ſhall lick the duſt, but he ſhall ſtand upon the duſt, or continue laſt upon the earth. This holds out a comfortable truth,

> That, Chriſt will certainly out-ſtand and vanquiſh all his enemies.

Perpetual duration triumphs over all. Whatſoever Chriſt hath done, or doth, or is to do, is wrapt up in this, That he was, and is, and is to come; or in this, that he is Alpha and Omega, firſt and laſt. It is a grand principle among Politicians, Take time, and you may do any thing: He that is firſt and laſt, may take what time he will, and therefore he may and will do whatſoever he wills. The Eternal will have the laſt word, and the laſt blow. He that ſtands laſt upon the ground, and keeps the field, carrieth the day againſt all, and is proclaimed Conquerer. What a mercy is it to have a friend who counts all our enemies his, and who is too hard for all his enemies.

Thirdly, Theſe words (as others conceive) at leaſt imply and intimate to us the Incarnation of Chriſt, or his taking fleſh, I believe that my Redeemer liveth, or that he is God from everlaſting. There is Job's faith in the divine nature of the Redeemer, and that in the latter day he ſhall ſtand on the earth, that is, that he ſhall take fleſh and be incarnate; there is Job's faith, that the Redeemer ſhould aſſume our Humane nature, and ſo become God with us. He could not have had a true faith in the Redeemer, unleſs he had believed this; he could not have called Chriſt his Goel, or kinſman, in the former part of the Verſe, unleſs he had believed that he ſhould ſtand upon the earth, as he expreſſeth it in the latter. The Redeemer muſt be God, how elſe could he ſatisfie? The Redeemer muſt be man, how elſe could he ſuffer?

Fourthly, Others conceive theſe words ſpeaking Job's faith in the Reſurrection of Chriſt from the earth, or ſtanding up upon the earth. Junius (if I apprehend him rightly) tranſlates fully to this ſence, And ſhall riſe the laſt upon the duſt. Not that Chriſt ſhall riſe laſt, for he is the firſt-born from the dead, and the firſt-fruits of them that ſleep; but he aroſe as the laſt Adam in oppoſition to Adam, who was the firſt man, as the Apoſtle ſpeaks (1 Cor. 15.45.) Maſter Broughton agrees alſo to this meaning, rendring the words, And at laſt ſhall riſe upon the duſt; which he thus explains, My Redeemer ſhall riſe from death. See then how rich a ſtore we have here of precious truths about the great myſtery of Chriſt in this one Scripture, which the Holy Ghoſt hath been pleaſed ſo to phraſe, that it may at once hold forth Job's faith in the incarnation of Chriſt, that he ſhould ſtand upon the duſt in our nature; as alſo in the Reſurrection of Chriſt, that he ſhould riſe out of the duſt in our nature. Theſe two involve each other, for unleſs Chriſt had taken fleſh, and ſtood upon the duſt, he could not die, and ſo lie down in the duſt; and his riſing from the duſt, neceſſarily implies, that he had taken fleſh, which he laid down by his free ſubmiſſion unto death.

Et poſteriorem ſuper pulverem reſurrecturum. Jun.

Yet (as I conceive) theſe words are more ſtrictly to be underſtood, not of Chriſts taking fleſh, and ſtanding upon the earth in it; nor of the perſonal riſing of his fleſh out of the duſt (both which are yet included) but of his coming to raiſe all fleſh out of the duſt, and then to proceed in judgment with them. And thus a late Expoſiter concludes, Theſe words (ſaith he) have various interpretations, all agreeing with the analogy of faith; yet this is a plain and pertinent ſence which we follow; Namely, that Job believeth his Redeemer to be eternal, who ſhall at laſt ſtand upon the earth, and by his ſoveraign power or command raiſe the dead. Our tranſlation together with our renewed Annotations appear faireſt this way; and Mr. Mercer (though himſelf followeth the Rabbins in the opening of this Text, yet) confeſſeth, that it is the Judgment of moſt Interpreters, both Ancient and Modern, that theſe words are to be underſtood of the general Reſurrection, and of the Judgment which ſhall follow. For when Job profeſſeth his aſſurance, that his Redeemer ſhall ſtand upon the earth in the latter day, we are not to ſtay our thoughts in a bare poſture, but are led forth to conſider, what his ſtanding there intends, or what the Scripture tells us he ſhall do when he appears and ſtands upon the earth in the latter day. Now the work of that day is plainly reduced to theſe two heads in Scripture, Reſurrection and Judgment. In reference to both which, I ſhall ſpecificate theſe general words, and draw them out into expreſs and particular Obſervations.

Hæc verba in varios ſenſus trahuntur, & quidem cum analogia fidei congruentes; commodus & ſimplex hic quem ſequimur eſt. Æternum ſc. eſſe hunc ſuum redemptorem, qui tandem pulveri inſiſtens pro imperio mortuo excitet. Merl. Et noviſſimo ſuper pulverem (vel terram) ſtaturū. Mont.

> Firſt, Thus, Our bodies ſhall be raiſed out of the duſt in the latter day by the power of Chriſt.

Man is a creature conſiſting of viſible and inviſible, of mortal and immortal, a ſoul and a body. His mortal and viſible part the body fell under the arreſt of death, as ſoon as he was tainted with ſin, and by the decree of God it is appointed unto all men once to dye; yet man ſhall not alwayes abide in this death, which is the ſeperation of the ſoul from the body. Theſe ſhall meet again and be re-united; death it ſelf is under the dominion of Chriſt the Lord of life; the keyes of the grave are committed unto him. We read of a twofold Reſurrection from a twofold death, both effected by his power (Joh. 5.25, 28, 29.) The hour is coming, and now is, when the dead ſhall hear the voice of the Son of God, and they that hear it ſhall live. All men are naturally dead in ſin, as ſoon as they live in nature. And as ſoon as any of theſe dead hear the voice of Chriſt ſpeaking by his Word and Spirit, they live in grace. This is called a new Birth, a new Life, as alſo a Reſurrection. The hour or ſeaſon of this ſpiritual Reſurrection (ſaith Chriſt) is coming, and now is (verſ. 25.) But at verſ. 28, 29. he ſpeaks of a Reſurrection which was coming, but then was not; Marvail not at this, for the hour is coming, that all that are in the graves ſhall hear his voice and come forth; they that have done good to the Reſurrection of life, and they that have done evil to the Reſurrection of damnation. There are but ſome who attain the ſpiritual Reſurrection, but all ſhall attain the corporal: All that are in the graves (whether buried in the Sea, or upon the dry Land) ſhall come forth, even they who ſhut their ears againſt his voice, calling them out of their ſins, preaching peace, and tendring them eternal Salvation, ſhall hear his voice calling them out of their graves, and ſummoning them to the judgment of their eternal Condemnation. As Pharaoh lifted up the head of both his great Officers; the chief Butler and the chief Baker, were both brought out of the priſon, but the one he reſtored to his Office, and the other he hanged up. Thus in proportion will it be in the day when Chriſt lifts up the heads of all the priſoners of death out of the grave. Chriſt is ſo much in the Reſurrection, that he calls himſelf the Reſurrection. When he was going to the grave of Lazarus, he ſaith to Martha, Thy brother ſhall riſe again (Joh. 11. 25.) ſhe anſwered, I know he ſhall riſe again at the Reſurrection, at the latter day. Her faith was clear for the Reſurrection, and ſhe expreſſeth the time (as Job in the Text) at the latter day. Chriſt approved her confeſſion, yet gives her further inſtruction (verſ. 25.) I am the Reſurrection and the life; and ſo he is, not formally, but cauſally, or virtually, that is, he is the Author of the Reſurrection, and that in reference to both Natures. Firſt, His Divine Nature is the efficient cauſe of the Reſurrection, he ſhall raiſe our bodies out of the duſt, and the duſt ſhall give up its priſoners, by the power of his God-head. Secondly, His Humane Nature is the exemplary cauſe or pattern of the Reſurrection; upon which ground the Apoſtle calls Chriſt, the firſt-born from the dead, Col. 1. 18. For though ſome were raiſed from the dead before him, yet ſeeing his Reſurrection was the cauſe of their Reſurrection, and will be the cauſe of theirs who ſhall be raiſed, therefore he is called the firſt-born from the dead. Hence the Apoſtle argues the oppoſers of the Reſurrection in the Church of Corinth (1 Cor. 15. 12.) If Chriſt be preached that he roſe from the dead, how ſay ſome among you, that there is no Reſurrection of the dead? As if he had ſaid, Do but grant this, that the body of Chriſt is riſen, and you cannot rationally deny a Reſurrection of our bodies; both becauſe his Reſurrection is the exemplar of ours, and becauſe Chriſt and all believers are one myſtical body, he is the head and we the members; nor indeed is Chriſt perfectly riſen, till we all riſe. For though Chriſts perſonal Reſurrection was perfect when he aroſe, and though all believers aroſe repreſentatively when Chriſt aroſe, yet till all believers ariſe perſonally, the Reſurrection of Chriſt hath not received its utmoſt perfection. For as though the perſonal ſufferings and afflictions of Chriſt in the fleſh were perfect, yet till all his members have ſuffered in the fleſh, that which God hath appointed as their portion in ſufferings; There is ſomewhat behind (as the Apoſtle ſpeaks, Col. 1. 24.) of the afflictions of Chriſt, which Paul for his part rejoyced to fill up; ſo we may ſay, that till all believers ariſe in the fleſh, or body, there is ſomewhat behind of the Reſurrection of Chriſt.

We may further take notice from 1 Cor. 15. verſ. 16, 17, & 18. how the Apoſtle turns this Argument: as before he ſaid, If Chriſt be riſen, how do ſome ſay, that there is no Reſurrection of the dead; ſo here on the other ſide, If the dead riſe not, Chriſt is not riſen; and if Chriſt be not raiſed, your faith is vain; ye are yet in your ſins, and they that are fallen aſleep in Chriſt are periſhed. From all he concludes verſ. 20. But now is Chriſt from the dead, and become the firſt fruits of them that ſleep; for ſince by man came Death, by man came alſo the Reſurrection from the dead; for as in Adam all dyed, ſo by Chriſt ſhall all be made alive. There are two roots out of which life and death ſpring: Death ſprings from Adam, life from Chriſt; and as by Adam all die, which are Adam's ſeed, or his ſons (as all men naturally are); ſo by Chriſt all who are his ſeed and Children, and ſo only the Elect and Faithful are, ſhall be made alive. But then it may be queſtioned, Shall not all men, even all the ſons of Adam be made alive by the Reſurrection of their bodies, which is the general ſubject of that Chapter? I anſwer, they ſhall. Hence Chriſt ſpeaks diſtributively, of them that ſhall riſe, as was ſhewed but now (Joh. 5. 29.) They that have done good ſhall come forth to the Reſurrection of life, and they that have done evil to the Reſurrection of damnation. But ſhall not the wicked be raiſed alſo by Chriſt? The twenty eighth Verſe anſwers, All that are in the graves ſhall hear his voice. Chriſt ſhall raiſe all, yet with a difference; the wicked ſhall be raiſed by vertue of that power or dominion which he hath over all fleſh (Joh. 17. 2.) But the godly are raiſed up by vertue of that union which Chriſt hath with their ſpirits, yea with their perſons.

Secondly, Conſider the words as holding out that which follows the Reſurrection, Judgment; Job is conceived (in reference to his own preſent condition) as having a ſpecial eye at that; for he was hardly judged in thoſe dayes, and therefore might comfort himſelf in this hope, that his caſe ſhould be judged over again at the latter day; as if he had ſaid, Though I am ſeverely treated by you, and cannot have right judgment here on earth, yet the time will come when I ſhall ſurely have it; My Redeemer ſhall ſtand at the latter day upon earth, to miniſter judgment unto all, and to me among the reſt.

From the application of the Text,

Firſt obſerve, That there ſhall be a general Judgment, hath been known and believed in all Ages.

While Solomon ſeems to let the young man looſe to his pleaſures, he preſently gives him a check, or a cooler, upon this account (Eccleſ. 12. 9.) Rejoyce O young man in thy youth, &c. but know for all theſe things God will bring thee to Judgment. The Preacher concludes his penitential Sermon with this point, God ſhall bring every work to Judgment, and every ſecret thing, whether it be good or evil. The Apoſtle Jude ſpeaking of the lapſed Angels, aſſures us at Verſ. 6. that, The Angels that kept not their firſt eſtate, but left their own habitation, he hath reſerved in everlaſting chains under darkneſs, unto the Judgment of the great day. In Verſ. 14, 15. he ſhews how early this doctrine of a judgment was in the Church of God; Enoch the ſeventh from Adam, propheſied of this, ſaying, Behold the Lord cometh with ten thouſands of his Saints, to execute Judgment upon all, and to convinse all that are ungodly amongſt them, of all their ungodly deeds which they have ungodlily committed, and of all their hard ſpeeches which ungodly ſinners have ſpoken againſt him. Enoch lived long before Job, yet in his time this was a famous well known point of faith; and we find that in the Apoſtles time, it grew into the number of ſacred Proverbs, which are all famous, and commonly known (1 Cor. 16. 22.) If any man love not the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, let him be Anathema Maranatha, that is, let him be accurſed till the day of Judgment, or till the Lord come to Judgment. The Apoſtle uſeth two words, to note both the vehemency of his own ſpirit in ſpeaking, and the certainty of the thing ſpoken; and he gives the curſe in two Languages (Greek and Syriack, which latter is a daughter of the Hebrew) both to ſhew that men of all Nations and Languages, who love not Chriſt, are under a curſe, and that they are deſervedly curſed among all Nations. The Greek word uſed by the Apoſtle, Anathema, ſignifies execrable. The Syriack word Maranatha, is a compound of Maran Lord, and Atha He cometh. This was uſed in the moſt dreadful ſentence of Excommunication; as if they had cited the perſon to the tribunal of Chriſt at his coming to Judge the world, or left him bound under the curſe of that ſentence until the coming of Chriſt. So that Maranatha, ſignifying, the Lord ſhall come, was a proverbial ſpeech, implying a day of Judgment coming. And as Scripture authorities are full of it, ſo there are many rational demonſtrations of it: For firſt, The judgments which have been, ſhew that there ſhall be a Judgment; Chriſt hath often, as it were, ſtood on the ground already in Judgment both againſt Perſons and Nations; theſe leſſer dayes of Judgment, are a ſtrong argument of a great day of Judgment. Secondly, As leſſer external Judgment-dayes argue it, ſo do internal Judgment-dayes. There is a day of Judgment kept in the Conſcience of man, which tells us that God will keep a day of Judgment at laſt concerning all men. If we were not to be judged, we ſhould never judge our ſelves; nor be troubled at what we have done, were we not to anſwer for what we have done. The Apoſtle is clear in it (Rom. 2. 15.) ſpeaking of the Gentiles who had not the Law publiſhed to their ear, Yet (ſaith he) which ſhew the work of the Law written in their hearts, their conſciences alſo bearing witneſs, and their thoughts in the mean while either excuſing, or accuſing one another. This mean while, is, till the Judgment come; as if he had thus expreſſed himſelf, Before the great Judgment comes they judge themſelves; or their thoughts betwixt themſelves are arraigning and impleading them, or Apologizing for and acquitting them. The reaſon of this internal antecedent ſeſſion is, becauſe as many as have ſinned in the Law, ſhall be judged by the Law (Verſ. 12.) (the thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth Verſes, are but a parentheſis) In the day when God ſhall judge the ſecrets of men by Jeſus Chriſt according to my Goſpel. In this mean while, or in this interim till the day that God ſhall judge the thoughts of men by Jeſus Chriſt, mens thoughts fall a judging themſelves. Conſcience is the correſpondence of the ſpirit of man with the Law of God in binding or looſing, in condemning, or abſolving. And though ſome mens conſciences are ſo dark, blind, and ignorant, that they do not judge themſelves at all; and the conſciences of others are ſo brib'd and biaſſed, ſo ill informed and erroneous, that they give a falſe judgment, and juſtifie thoſe whom God and his Law condemn; yet that there is ſuch a work of conſcience (whether it be true or falſe, right or wrong, alters not the caſe) all (who know any thing of its working) do agree; and this is an evident and convincing demonſtration, that there ſhall be a judgment. Conſcience is Gods Deputy, and doth but begin what Chriſt in that Great audit-day, or day of reckoning, will compleat and finiſh. The Apoſtle indeed aſſures us, that if we would judge our ſelves, we ſhould not be judged (1 Cor. 11. 31.) Yet in this he doth not exempt either good or bad who judge themſelves from appearing in the great day of Judgment, but only directs the good (for he ſpeaks there to Saints in fellowſhip) how to prevent the Lords adjudging them to preſent chaſtnings and afflictions, as is clear from Verſ. 32. For when we are judged, we are chaſtned of the Lord, that we ſhould not be condemned with the world. Holy ſelf-judging and examination may prevent preſent judgment, but every ſelf-judging is an evidence, yea, an aſſurance of the future judgment.

Thirdly, Judgment hath not been fully executed in any age of the World, excepting one, that of the old World; and yet then it was not a full execution of judgment, there was a wicked one not judged, there was an accurſed Cham in the Ark ſpared from judgment, while the reſt of mankind was drowned and overwhelmed with water. And though God hath written wrath and judgment upon thouſands of wicked men in red Letters, even in their own blood; yet there are many whoſe paths ſwim with Butter, and the rock pours out rivers of Oyl unto them; many upon whoſe heads the candle of outward proſperity ſhines, whilſt their heads, and hearts, and hands are full of wickedneſs; judgment is ſo far from being fully executed in this world, that many are hardned in ſin, and ſome ſo ſtumbled or offended in the wayes of holineſs, that they are ready to ſay, Where is the God of judgment? And hence it is that the Apoſtle (Rom. 2. 5.) calls the laſt judgment, the day of the declaration of the righteous judgment of God. The judgment of God is righteous now, but it is not revealed, it is not manifeſted, therefore a time ſhall come, when there ſhall be a revelation of his righteous judgment fully; the ſame Apoſtle gives a fourth reaſon (which comes near the caſe of Job) why there muſt be a day of judgment. Job's good name was under a cloud, his credit was exceedingly eclipſed, and he was miſ-judged by his friends (as many ſincere ones have ſince been) an hypocrite; now as the Lord will have a time to acquit himſelf, and to declare the righteouſneſs of his judgment, ſo he will have a time to quit the integrity of his people, and to ſet them right in the eye of all the world. In that day as he will deſtroy the vails of miſ-report which have been caſt upon his wayes, and the vails of error which have been caſt upon his Word; ſo alſo he will deſtroy all the vails of reproach and ſlander which have been caſt upon the perſons, ſpeeches or endeavours of his people. He will have a day in which there ſhall be a freſh Edition of the works of all his Saints, with the comment of their own upright and honeſt meaning upon them, not rackt and wier-drawn with the malice and miſ-conceptions, either of enemies, or miſtaken friends. This is the ground of that ſerious and but needful caution given by the Apoſtle (1 Cor. 4. 5.) Judge nothing before the time, till the Lord come, who both ſhall bring to light the hidden things of darkneſs, and make manifeſt the councels of the heart, and then every man ſhall have praiſe of God. What, every man? Will God praiſe thoſe who are praiſe-leſs? Will he praiſe the proud and covetous, the drunkards, and unclean? Shall every man have praiſe of God? Will he flatter men in their ſin, and ſow pillows of commendation under every elbow? No, the Apoſtles meaning is, every man that is praiſe-worthy, ſhall have praiſe of God; every good and faithful man, every true believer; all ſincere and honeſt hearts, though they have been called hypocrites, and diſgraced, though they have had the dirt of a thouſand ſcandals caſt in their faces, yet there is a day coming, when as all tears, ſo all reproaches ſhall be wiped away, and every man, that is, every godly man ſhall have praiſe of God. Job who was called hypocrite, and wicked, ſhall then again have praiſe of God, his old certificate or Letters of commendation ſhall be renewed; A man perfect and upright, fearing God and eſchewing evil.

Seeing this day of Judgment hath been ſo long ago ſpoken of, and believed, ſeeing there are ſuch undeniable proofs and demonſtrations of it; we have cauſe to be aſhamed that we have not more quick thoughts, more lively and working apprehenſions of it, that we are not more acquainted with it. One of the Ancients ſaith of himſelf, that whereſoever he went, whether he did eat or drink, or travel, or ſtudy, or whatſoever he was about, he thought he heard the voice ſounding in his ears, Ariſe ye dead and come to Judgment; it is good for us to carry this day in our thoughts all our dayes. If we do ſo, we ſhall find theſe two profitable effects of it.

Firſt, It will awaken us; Secondly, It will meeken us.

Firſt, It will awaken us, and keep us awake. The ſound of this Judgment made Fælix tremble; he that trembles is awakened; and it will keep us awake while we remember that it ſhall come unexpectedly, ſuddainly; it hath been long in coming, but when ever it comes, it ſhall come ſuddainly. So the Apoſtle deſcribes the coming of that day (1 Theſ. 5. 2.) It ſhall come as a theef; a theef comes ſuddainly. Chriſt deſcribes it by that which is more ſuddain (Luke 21. 35.) It ſhall come as a ſnare; how ſuddainly doth a ſnare take the bird? That the Judgment ſhall be ſo terrible and dreadful ſhould awaken us; that it ſhall be ſo ſuddain and unavoidable, ſhould keep us awake.

Secondly, It ſhould meeken us. Why ſhould we judge others, ſeeing we muſt all be judged? See how the Apoſtle takes them up, or rather takes them down, who erected tribunals, and ſtood on the earth as Judges over their brethren (Rom. 14. 4.) Who art thou that judgeſt another mans ſervant? Proud cenſuring perſons know not themſelves, nor doth any man know what they judge themſelves to be, who are over-buſie in judging others. When we in common ſpeech ſay to a man, Who art thou? we argue our own ignorance or neſcience of his perſon. But in ſpeeches of this ſtile, when we ſay, Who art thou? We either argue the pride of that perſon whom we already know, or that he doth not know his place and duty, but over-weens himſelf, and takes upon him beyond his line, which no man doth more then he who takes upon him to judge another mans ſervant, excepting him only who takes upon him to judge the ſervants of God. And while the Apoſtle ſaith, Why doeſt thou judge another mans ſervant? he doth but more convince (by that common rule) ſuch as preſume to judge the ſpecial ſervants of God. As thus he reproves all peremptory judging of others, becauſe they are ſervants to another; ſo he proceeds to a further reproof of it, becauſe they are our brethren (Verſ. 10.) Why doeſt thou judge thy brother? Why doeſt thou ſet at naught thy brother? We ſhall all ſtand before the Judgment ſeat of Chriſt. But may we not at all judge one another; muſt all judgment be deferred till Chriſt comes to judge us all? This the Apoſtle ſeems to give in charge (1 Cor. 4. 5.) Judge nothing before the time; What's the time? We have an anſwer in the next words, Until the Lord come, who both will bring to light the hidden things of darkneſs, &c. What coming is this? None other ſurely, but his coming, or his glorious appearance, when we muſt appear before his Judgment-ſeat, to receive according to what we have done in the fleſh, whether it be good, or whether it be evil. Yet this is not a total prohibition of Judgment, as ſome pervert that place, urging it againſt all Magiſtracy, as if it were unlawful for a man to be a Judge. The Scripture forbids only incompetent Judges, or the unjuſt Judgment of ſuch as are competent. It forbids only raſh Judgment about things or perſons without proof, or a Judgment upon perſons about ſuch things, of which there can be no proof; The hidden things of darkneſs, and the counſels of the heart, which Chriſt alone can bring to light and make manifeſt, as that Text expounds it ſelf: or the Scripture forbids rigid and final judgment concerning the eternal ſtate of any perſon. For though we may ſay of many men, conſidering their actions and outward courſe, as alſo the appearing frame and diſpoſition of their ſpirits, that they are in a damnable and periſhing condition; yet we cannot pronounce a final ſentence upon any man, that he ſhall be damned, becauſe every mans judgment is of God, and they who are now abominable and diſobedient, and unto every good work reprobate, may yet (through Free Grace) be converted and healed, made clean and juſtified.

Laſtly, The Scripture forbids us to judge one another, as having no grace, for the doing or not doing of thoſe things, which may conſiſt with a preſent ſtate of grace. So the Apoſtle argues (Rom. 14. 3.) in his diſpute about the ceremonial obſervation of meats and dayes, concerning whoſe abolition by Chriſt, many believers were then unſatisfied; Let not him that eateth not, judge him that eateth, for God hath received him; that is, he hath accepted, and numbred him among his own; therefore do not thou ſeverely reject and caſt him out. And as thus in many caſes we ought not to judge our brethren at all, ſo in all caſes we ought to judge them with tenderneſs and meekneſs, with a kind of trembling and unwillingneſs, becauſe there is a Judgment to which we alſo muſt come to give an account, as of all our wayes, ſo of the Judgment which we at any time paſs upon our brethren.

Secondly obſerve, The Redeemer ſhall be the Judge.

Though the three Perſons in the glorious God-head, Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, concur in every work upon the Creature; yet ſome works are ſpecially appropriated to each perſon. This great work of Judgment is appropriated to the Son as a part, or as the completion of his Mediatorial Office (Joh. 5. 22, 27.) The Father judgeth no man, but hath committed all judgment to his Son; that is, the Father alone (as they imagined) without the Son, judgeth no man; for as he created all, ſo he judgeth all by the Son: And hath given him authority to execute judgment alſo, becauſe he is the Son of man; for being the Son of man he will be viſible to all (Rev. 1. 7.) and ſo moſt fit to be the Judge. Peter ſpeaks this as a ſpecial doctrine which he was called to preach (Acts 10. 42.) Him hath God raiſed up, and ſhewed him openly, not to all the people, but to witneſſes choſen before of God; and hath commanded us to preach to the people, and to teſtifie that it is he that is ordained of God to judge the quick and dead. As the ſaving of man by Chriſt is founded in the will and ordination of God, ſo alſo is the judging of man by Chriſt. The Apoſtle Paul (Acts 17. 31.) ſtirs up and awakens all to the duties of holineſs and repentance, becauſe God hath appointed a day in which he will judge the world in righteouſneſs by that man whom he hath ordained, whereof he hath given aſſurance to all men, in that he hath raiſed him from the dead.

Some may object that of Chriſt himſelf (Joh. 8. 15.) as a diſclaimer of this office, I judge no man: The anſwer is at hand, Ye judge after the fleſh, I judge no man; that is, as ye do, after the fleſh, or by outward appearances (as he ſpeaks, John 7. 24.) I judge the Spirit, and after the Spirit, mine is righteous judgment. Again, I judge no man; that is, my preſent work is to ſave, and to preach ſalvation; my work is to tender conditions of peace, and to call ſinners to repentance, that's my preſent work; my ſecond coming is for Judgment. But though Chriſt be Judge, yet it ſeems he is not the only Judge, himſelf ſaith that he had aſſociated his Diſciples (Luke 22. 29, 30.) I appoint unto you a Kingdom, as my Father appointed unto me; that ye may eat and drink at my Table in my Kingdom, and ſit on thrones judging the twelve Tribes of Iſrael. I anſwer, They ſhall judge, not authoritatively, but doctrinally. As the word which Chriſt ſpake, ſo the word which the Diſciples of Chriſt ſpake (or which any of his faithful Miniſters ſpake according to the truth of Chriſt) ſhall judge him (that hath heard it) in the laſt day (Joh. 12. 48.) The word is the rule of judgment, as Chriſt is the perſon judging. Yet, I conceive, that Text in Luke imports ſome ſpecial perſonal honour and priviledge, which the twelve Apoſtles ſhall have in the Judgment of the great day, beyond the reſt of Saints. Of whom the Apoſtle ſpeaks (1 Cor. 6. 2.) Know ye not that the Saints ſhall judge the world? All the Saints ſhall judge the world as approvers, they ſhall Vote as it were with Chriſt, and ſay, This is a juſt and righteous Sentence; but the Apoſtles ſhall judge (if I may ſo expreſs it) as Aſſeſſors with Chriſt, to whom alone the Commiſſion as Judge is given. The Queen of the South (ſaith Chriſt) and the Ninivites ſhall riſe up in the Judgment with the men of this generation, and condemn them (Luke 11. 31.) that is, the example of the Queen of the South, who took ſo long a journey to hear the wiſdom of Solomon; and the example of the Ninivites, who repented at the preaching of Jonah, ſhall be produced as evidence for their conviction and condemnation, who have heard and refuſed the wiſdom of a greater then Solomon, and the preaching of a greater then Jonah. The great Judgment ſhall be carried on by many, as Aſſeſſors, as Approvers, and as Witneſſes; but the Redeemer only ſhall be the viſible and determining Judge.

This day of Judgment will be very terrible. Chriſt who at his firſt coming was revealed in flaming love, ſhall be then revealed in flaming fire (2 Theſ. 1. 7.) This Judgment will be very glorious. The firſt appearing of Chriſt was ſo obſcure, that it was an appearance but to very few; many who ſaw the man, did not ſee the Saviour; but his ſecond appearing will be ſo full of luſtre and glory, that as all ſhall ſee the man, ſo all ſhall ſee the Judge. Thus the Apoſtle deſcribes it (Tit. 2. 14.) Looking for the bleſſed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God, and our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt. It is ſaid of Agrippa (Acts 25. 23.) that he came to the Judgment-ſeat and Bernice with great pomp; we may render the Text thus, He came with great phantaſtickneſs or affected vanity. When the Lord Jeſus Chriſt ſhall come to his judgment-ſeat, it will be with great pomp indeed, but it ſhall be ſerious as well as glorious pomp; For he ſhall come in the glory of his Father, with all his holy Angels (Mark 8. 38.) Chriſt ſhall have a train of Angels; as the Arch-angel ſhall give the ſummons, or cite the world to appear at the bar (1 Cor. 15. 52. 2 Theſ. 1. & 5.) ſo there ſhall be thouſand thouſands of Angels attending the Judge: He ſhall come in the glory of his Father, with all his holy Angels. The firſt coming of Chriſt, was in the form of a ſervant (Phil. 2.) Yea the Prophet ſaith (Iſa. 53. 2.) He had no form nor comlineſs. In his firſt coming, he was followed by Fiſhermen, or men of inferior quality; but his ſecond coming will be in the glory of the Father; his glory will be ſuch, as the Fathers glory is; and his followers ſhall be greater then the greateſt of men, and theſe not a few, but many, even all his holy Angels.

And 'tis but equal that Judgment ſhould be put into the hand of the Redeemer, and that he ſhould come in all this glory, when he comes to ſit in Judgment; becauſe he hath been judged, and condemned; becauſe he hath born ſhame, and diſhonour, while himſelf ſtood in Judgment. Chriſt did not only die for us, but he was condemned to death as an evil-doer; there was not only pain in his death, but ſhame; he in this humbled himſelf indeed, and which is more, he became obedient, and (which is the loweſt obedience) he became obedient unto death, and which is the loweſt and moſt ignominious death, the death of the Croſs. The Apoſtle makes this threefold humiliation, the ground of his threefold exaltation (Phil. 2. 9, 10.) Wherefore God alſo hath highly exalted him, &c. He exalted him above the grave in his Reſurrection, above the earth in his Aſcenſion, above the heavens in his Seſſion at the right hand of him the Father, That at the name of Jeſus every knee ſhould bow, both of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth; and that every tongue ſhould confeſs, that Jeſus Chriſt is Lord, to the glory of God the Father. Indeed if God be ſo careful to redeem the honour of his Saints and Servants, who have ſuffered reproach, if he will get them fame in every Land where they have been put to ſhame, and make the Sons of thoſe that have afflicted them to come bending to them, and to know that the Lord hath loved them; and if whereas they have been hated, God will make them an eternal excellency, ſurely then, much more will God be careful of the honour of his Son; he that will not let his ſervants honour lie in the duſt, but will repair their credit, and take off the reproach which they have born for his Name, how can he be unmindful of his Son, or not re-inveſt him in that Glory of which he ſtript and uncloathed himſelf, that he might perfect the work of our Redemption!

This honour of Chriſt the Redeemer, to be Judge of the world, together with the glory in which he ſhall appear when he comes to judge the world, carries a twofold effect in it, according to that twofold diſtribution of thoſe who are the objects of this Judgment, good and bad, the godly and the wicked.

Firſt, It carries terror to the wicked, who know not God, and who have not obeyed the Goſpel. What more terrible to unbelievers, then to be judged by him whom they have not believed? What more terrible then to be judged by him whom they have neglected, to be judged by him whoſe grace and mercy they have refuſed? What more terrible then to be judged by him whom they have deſpiſed, and ſaid (at leaſt in their hearts) This man ſhall not reign over us? How terrible will it be to thoſe wicked men, to ſtand before Chriſt as their Judge, whom they have trampled underfoot, and counted his blood (the blood of the Covenant) as an unholy thing, and have done deſpight unto the Spirit of Grace?

There is nothing in condemnation more dreadful, then to be condemned by a Redeemer; they who are without Chriſt, are without hope, how hopeleſs then and helpleſs are they who are caſt out by Chriſt? By whom ſhall they be ſaved, who are condemned by a Saviour? As the love of Chriſt is moſt deſirable, ſo his wrath is moſt inſupportable. Who can ſtand before his wrath as a Judge, who as a Redeemer came to deliver us from the wrath which is to come.

There are five things in this Judge, which make his wrath moſt dreadful.

Firſt, He is ſuch a Judge, as the power of the moſt powerful cannot daunt.

Secondly, He is ſuch a Judge, as the wealth of the wealthieſt cannot bribe.

Thirdly, He is ſuch a Judge, as the wit and ſubtlety of the wiſeſt and moſt ſubtle cannot delude.

Fourthly, He is ſuch a Judge, as there is no appealing from his ſentence.

Fifthly, He is ſuch a Judge as there is no repealing of his ſentence. What he ſets down ſhall ſtand for ever. All which Job applies to his friends in the laſt words of the Chapter; Be ye afraid of the ſword: for wrath bringeth the puniſhment of the ſword, that ye may know there is a Judgment.

Secondly, This carries Comfort, and ſpeaks joy to Saints. How ſweet is it to remember, that their Redeemer is their Judge. For as the Apoſtle argueth, Who ſhall condemn? it is God that juſtifies; ſo may they, Who ſhall condemn? it is Chriſt that judgeth us. The time of the Judges coming, is the time of their refreſhing. So the Apoſtle Peter calls it in his Sermon (Acts 3. 19, 20.) Repent ye therefore and be converted, that your ſins may be blotted out, when the times of refreſhing ſhall come from the preſence of the Lord. What theſe times are is expreſſed, (Verſ. 20.) And he ſhall ſend Jeſus Chriſt, which before was preached unto you, whom the heavens muſt receive, until the times of the reſtitution of all things. When Chriſt ſhall reſtore and ſet all right, which ſin hath diſordered (which will be a time of Judgment queſtionleſs, if not the time of the laſt Judgment) then it will be a time of refreſhing to all the people of God; even of ſuch refreſhing (and infinitely more) as the weary labourer or tired traveller takes in his repoſe under the cooleſt ſhades (as the word there uſed implies) which fetcheth up his fainting ſpirits, and renews his ſtrength. When God came at once to judge, and reſtore Adam after his fall, he came in the cool of the day (Gen. 3. 8.) And when Jeſus Chriſt ſhall come to judge and perfect the reſtauration of man, though it will be the heat of the day, or a day of heat to all his enemies; yet it ſhall be the cool of the day, or as the refreſhing ſhadow after heat to all his Saints. That Chriſt is Judge, cannot but be a rejoycing to the Saints. For Firſt, He being Judge, the Judge is their friend.

Secondly, The Judge is their kinſman, their brother; for though (as we ought now, 2 Cor. 5. 16. ſo) Chriſt in that day will not know any man after the fleſh, yet all believers who are as his fleſh, ſhall then be known, that is, accepted with him.

Thirdly, The Judge is alſo their Prieſt and Propitiation; he ſhall judge them, who hath ſatisfied for them, and knows how all reckonings and accounts ſtand between God and their ſouls; for he it is that hath by his own blood ballanced and made them up.

Fourthly, The Judge is their Advocate and Interceſſor; he ſhall judge them, who hath often moved for them, who hath poured out his ſoul in prayer for them, as well as he once poured out his ſoul an offering for them. Surely he who hath ſpoken ſo much for them, will not (though he hath cauſe to blame them for many things) ſpeak or pronounce any thing againſt them.

Laſtly, The Judge is he who was judged in their behalf; and ſeeing he was condemned bearing their ſins, he will not lay thoſe ſins again upon them who have laid hold on him, and ſo condemn them.

All theſe conſiderations laid together, ſhew how ſweet it is for Saints to remember that the Redeemer ſhall ſtand upon the earth to judge them. And hence the Saints are deſcribed.

Firſt, Not fearing but hoping for his appearing (Tit. 2. 14. where it is called not only the hope, but the bleſſed hope) Looking for the bleſſed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God, and our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt; it is the bleſſed hope, becauſe the thing hoped for being once attained, we ſhall be for ever bleſſed.

Secondly, They are deſcribed (not fearing, but) loving the appearing of this Judge (2 Tim. 4. 8.) Henceforth (ſaith Paul) there is laid up for me a crown of righteouſneſs, which the Lord the righteous Judge ſhall give me at that day, and not to me only, but to all them alſo that love his appearing. To be a lover of the appearing of Chriſt in Judgment, is the character and almoſt the definition of all true believers. None can love it but they, and they cannot but love it.

Thirdly, They are deſcribed (not fearing, but) praying for it, and that not coldly but earneſtly and importunately (Rev. 22. 17.) The Spirit and the Bride (that is, the Spirit in the Bride ſaith, or the Spirit preſſeth and provoketh the Bride to) ſay come, and let him that heareth ſay, come. Who is thus invited to come, and for what to come? The perſon invited to come, is Chriſt, and he is invited to come to fulfil all the Propheſies of that Book revealed to John, and therefore to come to judgment, which as it is there Propheſied, ſo it will be the utmoſt fulfilling of all the Propheſies. And to ſhew that Chriſt approved and accepted this earneſt prayer of the Bride for his coming; he anſwers (at verſ. 20.) He which teſtifieth theſe things (and that is none but Chriſt, The Amen, the faithful and true witneſs (Rev. 3. 14.) he (I ſay) anſwers, and) ſaith, Surely I come quickly; and this is the third time that he ſaith it in this Chapter; for he had ſaid verſ. 7. and again verſ. 12. Behold I come quickly. Which threefold promiſe of his coming quickly, is ſealed up with Amen, and the prayer of John, ſeconding the Churches prayer, Even ſo, come Lord Jeſus. What longing is there for his coming, who having been prayed to come, promiſeth to come quickly, and is yet again prayed to come. The preparations and prognoſticks of the coming of Chriſt, are dreadfully ſet down, to the amazement of the world (Luke 21. 25, 26.) There ſhall be ſigns in the Sun, and in the Moon, and in the Stars, and upon the earth, diſtreſs of Nations, &c. mens hearts (that is, the hearts of the men of the earth, or of earthly-minded men) failing them for fear, and for looking after thoſe things which are coming on the earth, &c. And then ſhall they ſee the Son of man coming in a cloud with power and great glory. This glory & terror of the coming of Chriſt, which ſhall dazle the eyes and aſtoniſh the hearts of all that know not God, ſhall be delight to the eyes, and rejoyce the hearts of all that obey him. Theſe Chriſt beſpeaks in verſ. 28. When theſe things begin to come to paſs, then look up, and lift up your heads (looking up and lifting up the head, is a poſture of confidence and of joy) for your Redemption draweth nigh; that is, you ſhall ſoon receive all the fruits of your Redemption, or Redemption in full. Our Redemption was wrought when Chriſt came firſt into the world, but we reap not all the benefits of our Redemption, till Chriſt comes the ſecond time into the world. Then they who are dead ſhall be redeemed from the power of the grave, and they who ſhall be found alive, ſhall be redeemed from all the troubles and ſorrows of this life. Then Chriſt will wipe all tears from the eyes of every afflicted Job; then he will heal all the ſores of his Job's; then he will ſupply all the wants, and reſtore the broken eſtates of his Job's; then he will repair the credit and honour of his Job's; then he will rightly interpret the actions and ſpeeches, the works and words of his Job's; then he will give his Job's a full eſtate, a double eſtate, a ſeven-fold eſtate to all that they had before; then he will make his Job's like himſelf; they that lay on the dunghil, ſcraping their ſores with a potſherd, when Chriſt appears, ſhall appear with him in glory (Col. 3.4.) The diſeaſed and leprous bodies of his Job's ſhall be faſhioned like the glorious body of Jeſus Chriſt, by that mighty power by which he is able to ſubdue all things to himſelf; yea, when the Redeemer ſhall ſtand upon the earth in the latter day, he will marry all his Job's to himſelf, he will take them from the duſt, and lay them in his boſom for ever. Therefore well might Job, and well may any Saint in his, or in a worſe condition then his (if worſe may be) rejoyce and triumph in this faith; I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he ſhall ſtand in the latter day upon the earth.

VERS. 26, 27.

And though after my skin, worms deſtroy this body, yet in my fleſh ſhall I ſee God.

Whom I ſhall ſee for my ſelf, and mine eyes ſhall behold, and not another; though my reins be conſumed within me.

IN the former Verſe we have conſidered and improved the confeſſion of Job's faith in the Redeemer.

Firſt, As living or eternal.

Secondly, As riſing from the dead, or raiſing the dead to life.

Thirdly, As judging both the quick and dead. He in theſe two Verſes enlargeth the confeſſion of his faith concerning his own perſonal reſurrection. Which Firſt, He aſſerts in the cloſe of Verſ. 26. In my fleſh ſhall I ſee God.

Secondly, In the ſtrong actings of his faith he aſſureth himſelf of it, notwithſtanding all the difficulties that might obſtruct and hinder it; in the former part of Verſ. 26. and in the cloſe of v. 27. Though after my skin worms deſtroy this body; though my reins be conſumed within me, yet I believe I ſhall ſee God; theſe impediments do not weaken my faith.

Thirdly, He declares the benefit or happineſs which ſhall accrew to him after the reſurrection of his body, which he doth,

Firſt, In thoſe words, I ſhall ſee God.

Secondly, In thoſe, I ſhall ſee him for my ſelf. In both which expreſſions, he ſets forth the happineſs of the Saints after the raiſing of their bodies out of the grave, and the reunion of ſoul and body.

Fourthly, He maintains the identity of his fleſh or body in the Reſurrection, or that the ſame body which falls ſhall riſe. And this in a twofold notion.

Firſt, An identity ſpecifical, it ſhall be the ſame body in kind.

Secondly, An identity numerical, or individual, it ſhall be the ſame particular body which he had on earth, and laid down in the earth. Both which are evidenced and evinced from thoſe paſſages in the Text: I ſhall ſee him in my fleſh; Mine eye ſhall behold him, and not another; I, my, mine, and not another, imply nothing, if not himſelf, or no other thing but himſelf.

From all we may collect, how excellent a confeſſion of faith Job made about that great myſtery of the Reſurrection, and how firmly his ſoul was eſtabliſhed in it.

Verſ. 26. And though after my skin worms deſtroy this body.

I will not ſtay either upon the opening or diſproving of the tranſlation of the Vulgar Latine; which as it varieth extreamly wide from the Original in the cloſe of the former Verſe, ſo at the beginning of this. There inſtead of, He ſhall ſtand upon the earth in the latter day (as we tranſlate) 'tis rendred, I ſhall riſe again in the latter day. And whereas here we ſay, Though after my skin worms deſtroy this body; that reading is, and I ſhall be again encompaſſed about (or cloathed) with my skin. This vaſt difference in the tranſlation ariſeth from hence, becauſe the word which we render to deſtroy, may be derived from a double root; either from a root that ſignifies to compaſs, or circle a thing round, or as we and moſt Grammarians derive it from a root that ſignifies to break, or to deſtroy, to diminiſh, or crumble a thing (as it were) into the ſmalleſt pieces or atoms.

Et rurſum circumdabor pelle mea. Vulg.

נקפו.

vel à radice יקף circumdedit, vel à נקף contrivit, fregit.

A ſecond reading we give in the margine of our Bibles; After I ſhall awake, though this body be deſtroyed, yet, &c. Whereas we ſay in the Text, Though after my skin, worms deſtroy this body; we put in the margine, After I ſhall awake, &c. The reaſon is, becauſe the ſame word in the Hebrew which ſignifies the skin, ſignifies in the Verb, to awake or ariſe from ſleep. Mr. Broughton gives light to this, in the expoſition of his own tranſlation, And after this my skin is ſpent. Which he gloſſeth thus, in the perſon of Job, And after worms ſpend this my skin and fleſh, I mean after my Reſurrection, and I uſe a doubtful word to contain both. As if a word were intentionally uſed by Job, which ſignifies both his skin, and his awaking or Reſurrection, that ſo we might take it both wayes, and neither of them both againſt, either the ſcope of the Text, or againſt the truth ('tis uſual in Scripture to compare death to ſleep, and the Reſurrection to awaking) When (ſaith he) I awake, though this be deſtroyed, I ſhall ſee God. Or though this skin be deſtroyed, yet I ſhall ſee God. To this ſence another tranſlates, After worms have digged through this (that is, this skin or body) I awaking ſhall ſee God in my fleſh. The interlineal varies little, And after they (that is, the worms) have conſumed this my skin, I ſhall ſee God in my fleſh. The ſtrict letter of the Hebrew is very conciſe, And after my skin deſtroy this. So that we ſupply three words in this one clauſe, to make up that which we conceive the ſence; Firſt, The word Though; Secondly, The word Worms; Thirdly, The word Body; neither of which are expreſly in the Original. Therefore our Tranſlators have put them in a different character, implying that thoſe words are added to explain the meaning of the place, which is ſomewhat dark, by reaſon of that conciſeneſs of expreſſion.

Et poſtquam vermes confoderint iſtud evigilante me. Jun.

Et poſtquam pellem meam contriverint hanc. Mont.

Some Interpreters take notice of the elegancy of Job's ſpeech, who therefore doth not name his body, or ſay, this body; either becauſe with the demonſtrative particle, This, he uſed a geſture putting his hand upon his breaſt, After worms have deſtroyed this, which I now lay my hand upon, that is, this my body, I ſhall yet ſee God in my fleſh. Or as ſome others conceive he ſaith only This, not this body, becauſe his body was ſo worn and disfigured with his ſores and ſickneſs, that it could ſcarce be called a body; after worms have deſtroyed this, call it what you will, I can hardly find a fitting word to call it by. As if he had more largely ſaid, After I am dead, and laid in the grave, where worms do not only eat my skin, and conſume this upper garment, but my whole body alſo; yea, and not only the outward limbs and members of my body, but my very bowels and entrals. Though my reins be conſumed within me; though worms devour, and rottenneſs invade whatſoever I am, or have of a body; though I am ſpent from head to toe, from skin to reins, without and within, yet notwithſtanding all this, I believe that I ſhall riſe again, and ſee God in my fleſh.

Credo carnis reſurrectionem & video interim conſumi renes meos in medio corporis mei. Brent.

Conſumor totus ab una parte ad alteram. Jun.

Hence obſerve, Firſt, Death may, yea ſhall prevail over the whole outward man.

Death ſpends both skin, and reins; it devours all. Death ſwallows up fleſh and bones. We may well ſay of death, It makes no bones of any man. It takes in one part after another, till all be taken in; skin, and fleſh, and bones, and reins, death unmakes us. Hence the ſame word in the Greek that ſignifies to unmake, ſignifies alſo to die; becauſe death is the unmaking of every creature that lives. Man is unmade man, by the firſt act of death; that ſeparates ſoul and body, and this makes him no man: The ſoul alone is not man, the body without the ſoul is not man; therefore the disunion of theſe unmakes man. And when death hath unmade man, by disjoyning ſoul and body, it proceeds to unmake the body. Though death can do no more to the ſoul then ſeparate it from the body, yet it can do much more to the body then ſeparate it from the ſoul. Death conſumes the body when 'tis alone, it pulls one member from another, till it prevaileth over all; as an old building is pulled down piece after piece, till all be laid in duſt and rubbiſh: not only doth it fade the beauty, and deface the skin, but it enters into the bones, and ſucks the marrow. The Apoſtle Peter uſeth a word of this ſence, while he ſpeaks of our death to ſin (1 Pet. 2.24.) Who his own ſelf, bare our ſins in his own body on the tree, that we being dead to ſin, &c. (ſo we tranſlate:) the word is, that we being unmade, or off-made to ſin: every converted ſoul is united to, or made up in Chriſt, and unmade to ſin, that is, dead to ſin. Now as ſpiritual death to ſin, is the unmaking of a man, the pulling him in pieces in regard of what he was; the unmaking of his ſinful nature, that he may be made up again by grace: ſo natural death is the unmaking of the body.

ἀπογενόμενοι.

There was never any body made, but death (according to the common appointment of God) had or hath a power to unmake it, one excepted, which one was the body of Jeſus Chriſt. Some indeed, as Enoch and Elias were tranſlated and did not ſee death; and others though they died, yet were raiſed to life by the power of God before death did actually unmake or conſume their bodies; but there was never any body which being dead, death had not a power to conſume, but only the body of Jeſus Chriſt. And therefore the Apoſtle (Acts 2.24.) puts it as a ſpecial excepted caſe: Chriſt died, but death could not do with his body, as Job ſuppoſed it might with his, deſtroy his skin and reins; For (ſaith he) God raiſed him up, having looſed the pains of death. The original which we render pains, cometh from a root, which ſignifieth bands or cords: for death when it ſeizeth upon man, binds him (as it were) hand and foot, with bands, and cords, and keeps him faſt; that he cannot ſtir till it hath totally devoured him. Death bound the hands and feet of Jeſus Chriſt, and laid him in the grave; But God raiſed him up, and looſed the bands or cords of death: And Jeſus Chriſt, who as Mediator, or God-man, laid down his life, had power alſo to take it up again (Joh. 10.18.) As Sampſon whom when the Philiſtines had bound with new cords, he ſnapped them aſunder, like a threed at the Candle: So Jeſus Chriſt when he was laid in the grave, broke the bands of death, or was raiſed up by God looſing thoſe bands; and why? Not only becauſe he had power to do it, for ſo he hath power to looſe the bands of death from any man as ſoon as they are tyed on, if it were his will and purpoſe to do it; but the Apoſtle aſſigns a reaſon beyond this, ſhewing that Chriſt was raiſed before death could conſume his body, not only becauſe it was poſſible, or in the power, as alſo agreeable to the will of God, ſpeedily to looſe thoſe bands, but becauſe it was not poſſible that he ſhould be holden of them. It was poſſible that death ſhould ſeize on Jeſus Chriſt, and ſo it did, he freely yielding himſelf up to it, becauſe a death was owing and to be paid to the Juſtice of God for ſin. But (ſaith the Apoſtle) death could not hold him, and keep poſſeſſion, That was impoſſible. And that upon a twofold account.

Firſt, In reference unto himſelf.

Secondly, In reference to us.

Firſt, It was not poſſible in reference to himſelf; becauſe he is life, and life eſſentially; I am the Reſurrection, and the life (ſaith Chriſt to Martha, Joh. 11.) Chriſt is the Reſurrection, becauſe he raiſeth us. He is not formally the Reſurrection (as was ſhewed before) but effectively. But Chriſt is life formally and eſſentially; now it is not poſſible for death to hold life it ſelf longer under its power, then he who is life pleaſeth. Therefore Chriſt being eſſentially life, could not but prevail over and conquer death; or as the Apoſtle ſpeaks, Swallow up death in victory (1 Cor. 15. 54.)

Secondly, It was not poſſible in reference to us; for he having undertaken the work of reſtoring us to life, if his life had been ſubdued by death, if he had been held down by the power of death, alwayes in the grave, we had been loſt for ever; as the Apoſtle argueth, 1 Cor. 15. If Chriſt be not riſen, your faith is vain, ye are yet in your ſins. We had been ſtill under the power of ſpiritual death, if Chriſt had been held by that corporal death. Therefore it was impoſſible (becauſe Chriſt was to carry the work of our Redemption through) that he ſhould be held down by the cords of death, though he ſubmitted to die. So then here is the difference; the body of Jeſus Chriſt was not deſtroyed and totally unmade by death; death could not ſend in its Armies of worms to eat up his fleſh and conſume his reins, no nor ſo much as in the leaſt to corrupt his body; as the ſame Apoſtle expreſſeth it (verſ. 27. out of the Pſalm) Thou wilt not leave my ſoul in hell, nor wilt ſuffer thy holy One to ſee corruption. He ſuffred his holy One to die, but he did not ſuffer him to ſee corruption; that is, to feel corruption, or be under the power of corruption. Therefore Jeſus Chriſt roſe the third day; and he roſe upon the firſt account, that it could be called the third day; he lay as little time in the grave, as could truly be reckoned three dayes: and ſo (I conceive) he did that he might not give the leaſt advantage to death, or that death might have him no longer priſoner then needs muſt. And upon this conſideration too, he ſaw no corruption. For three dayes (as Naturaliſts obſerve) a body may continue without corruption; eſpecially as it was with Chriſt, who dying and being buried the evening of the ſixth day, lay the ſeventh in the grave, and roſe early in the morning of the firſt day of the week. Martha ſaid to Chriſt when he came to the Sepulchre of Lazarus, Lord, he hath been dead four dayes, by this time he ſtinketh (Joh. 11.37.) When a body hath been dead four dayes, we may ſay, ſurely it is corrupted; but in three dayes there is no neceſſity of corruption: So that, God (as it was propheſied in the Pſalm) did not ſuffer his holy One to ſee corruption, no not the leaſt corruption; this was peculiar to Jeſus Chriſt. And the Apoſtle is very careful to keep this cloſe to Chriſt; for though it were ſpoken by David, yet he ſhews that David did not ſpeak this of himſelf, as if he expected any ſuch priviledge (verſ. 29.) Men and brethren, let me ſpeak freely to you, of the Patriark David, who is dead, and buried, and his Sepulchre is this day with us. David who ſpake this is dead, and buried, and lies in the duſt ſtill among us; therefore he ſpake this of another, and that other is Chriſt, whoſe body was ſo exempted from corruption, as none, beſides his, ever was. For though Chriſt (as was toucht before) raiſed ſome dead bodies before they were corrupted, yet every body that dies is naturally ſubject to corruption, and continuing under the power of death, muſt needs corrupt and be deſtroyed by worms.

Secondly obſerve, The total conſumption of the body of man, is no impediment, no bar in the way of faith to ſtop us from believing the Reſurrection.

Job ſpeaks in ſuch language as might repreſent the greateſt difficulty to faith, and yet conquers it. And we to reach his ſence, ſupply ſuch words as expreſly ſhew it, Though and though; Though after my skin, worms deſtroy this body; Though my reins be conſumed within me. Though it be thus, and thus, yet I believe; as death ſhall triumph over my body, ſo my faith triumphs over death. Chriſt himſelf puts in a Though to this point of faith about the reſurrection, ſpeaking to Martha (Joh. 11.25.) He that believeth in me, yea though he were dead, yet ſhall he live again. But it may be ſaid, Lazarus was dead at that time, why then doth Chriſt ſuppoſe that which was no more then actually was? And how can any man be ſaid to live again who was not dead? Why then doth Chriſt ſay, He that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet ſhall he live. I apprehend, that by dead in that aſſertion or promiſe, ſomewhat more is intended by Chriſt, then barely to be dead, as Lazarus was; He that believes in me, though he were dead, ſeems to ſpeak not only the ſeparation of the ſoul from the body, yea, not only (as Martha ſuſpected it was with Lazarus) the body beginning to corrupt, but even a total corruption and conſumption of it; when (anſwerably to the expreſſion of the Text) skin and bones, and reins, and all are eaten up. Now though he were thus dead (ſaith Chriſt) yet ſhall he live again. Faith ſaith to death, Do thy worſt; and to the grave, put forth the utmoſt of thy power, digeſt me fully, (the grave is a great eater, it hath a ſtrong ſtomach) aſſimilate me to thy ſelf (as by the laſt act of concoction meats received into the ſtomach are) turn me into thine own ſubſtance; make my body look like the grave, make it ſo like thy ſelf, the earth, that no man can diſtinguiſh me from the earth, yet this doth not at all weaken my faith in believing that I ſhall riſe from the dead. Put all theſe diſadvantages upon it, yet the power of God anſwers, or rather tramples upon them all. The faith of Abraham (Rom. 4. 18, 19, 20.) moved much after this rate, or in ſuch a ſphear of holy hight and ſtrength, in reference to the promiſe of a ſon; that a ſon ſhould be born to Abraham, was like the raiſing of one from the dead. So the Author to the Hebrews ſpeaks expreſly (Heb. 11. 17, 19.) By faith Abraham when he was tryed offered up Iſaac: and he that had received the promiſe, offered up his only begotten Son, accounting that God was able to raiſe him up even from the dead, from whence alſo he received him in a figure. See how Abraham's faith acted about the receiving of Iſaac in his old age, (when his body was (in reaſon) more fit to go to the grave, then to beget a ſon) like Job's for the receiving of his dead body out of the grave. He (ſaith the Apoſtle, Rom. 4. 18.) againſt hope, believed in hope. Every thing ſtood in the way of this hope, that he ſhould have a ſon, yet he believed that he ſhould become the father of many Nations, according to that which was written, ſo ſhall thy ſeed be. And being not weak in faith, he conſidered not his own body, now dead (that is, decayed with age) when he was an hundred years old, nor the deadneſs of Sarah's womb. This probably was the figure of which the Author to the Hebrews writes, when he affirms, that Abraham was willing at the command of God to offer his ſon to death, from whence (by the promiſe of God) he had received him in a figure. There were two deaths, a double death, to hinder Abraham from having a ſon, and yet his faith lived and prevailed over both. He ſtaggered not at the promiſe of God through unbelief, but was ſtrong in faith, giving glory to God. And being fully perſwaded, that what he had promiſed, he was able alſo to perform. Faith looking to the power of God, triumphs over our own weakneſs. Now as Abraham's faith triumphed over thoſe two deaths, or decayes and declenſions of his own and his wives body, believing ſtrongly that thorough theſe two figurative deaths, God would raiſe him a ſon: So faith triumphs over, and breaks all thoſe bands, by which death may ſeem to hold the body in the grave beyond all hope of riſing.

We find Faith putting many hard caſes to it ſelf; David did ſo (Pſal. 23. 4.) Though I walk in the valley of the ſhadow of death, I will fear no ill. Again (Pſal. 46. 2.) Therefore we will not fear, though the earth remove, and the mountains be carried into the midſt of the Sea. You ſee what thoughts faith propoſeth to it ſelf, and yet gets over and above them. Faith is not only a purifying, but a prevailing and a conquering grace. Faith is our victory over the world, and all worldly objections. As the grace of God towards man triumphs over all the unworthineſs of man, and will do man good, though many ſtops lie in the way, (Pſal. 106. 8.) They underſtood not his works, they remembred not the multitude of his mercies, they rebelled at the Sea, even at the red Sea. Every one of theſe were as a ſtop in the way of mercy to do that people good, yet mercy got over them all, Nevertheleſs he ſaved them. Now (I ſay) as the grace of God triumphs over the unworthineſs of man; ſo faith triumphs over all the improbabilities and impoſſibilities that ſeem to lie in the way of God, to hinder him from doing any thing for us, when once we have his word or promiſe. And as to that ſpecial word, or promiſe of God for the Reſurrection of the body, faith ſeems to ſpeak, yea to glory and boaſt thus; He that gave me a being when I had none, can eaſily reduce me to the being I am in, when I ſeem not to be what I was before, or no ſuch thing as now I am; though wild beaſts of the Earth, and birds of the Air; though Canibals, or men-eating-men devour this body; though fire conſume it, though the aſhes be ſcattered in the Air (as the Church ſtory ſpeaks in the reign of perſecuting Diocleſian) or thrown into the River, as loſt for ever, and never to be gathered up again in the opinion of man; though all theſe difficulties and encumbrances grow upon my faith, yet I believe I ſhall be repaired, and ſee God in my fleſh. Which is the next point of Job's faith.

Yet in my fleſh ſhall I ſee God.

The Hebrew is, from my fleſh; it is uſual in that language to put the Prepoſition De for In. Mr. Broughton keeps to the letter, and ſaith, Yet from my fleſh ſhall I ſee God. His meaning is, I being raiſed and cloathed with fleſh, ſhall ſee God; or, from my fleſh, When I am in the fleſh I ſhall ſee God. There are two things further in thoſe words, In my fleſh.

Non dicit, per carnem meam, ſed in carne mea, q.d. in carne mea ero cum videbo Deum.

First, He ſaith, My fleſh, that is, my own fleſh: In opposition to another fleſh, whether ſpecifical or perſonal, as was intimated before.

Secondly, My fleſh, as pointing to his preſent eſtate, My fleſh, this fleſh of mine which is now ſo miſerably worn, and will ſhortly be worm-eaten; this my fleſh, which is now unmeet for the preſence of any man, much more for the preſence of the great God; even this fleſh of mine, this diſeaſed and deſpiſed fleſh ſhall be fitted for the preſence of God, the great and glorious God; I, in my fleſh, in this my fleſh ſhall ſee God.

Shall ſee God.] To ſee, is often uſed in Scripture to note a divine and ſuper natural act; hence prophetical revelations are called viſions, and the Prophets Seers. There is a twofold ſeeing, Firſt, Seeing with the eye of the body: Secondly, Seeing with the eye of the mind: a corporal and an intellectual ſight: both which may here be underſtood, according to the twofold acceptation of the word, God. I ſhall ſee God. The word God, may be taken, either, firſt, eſſentially for the divine nature, and then we muſt expound the word ſee in the latter ſence, I ſhall ſee him with the eye of my mind, or intellectually. Secondly, The word God, may be taken perſonally for Jeſus Chriſt the Mediator, who having two natures, the divine, and humane, united in his perſon, or having aſſumed the humane nature into the divine, which is the perſon, himſelf is often called God: So that, I ſhall ſee God is this alſo, I ſhall ſee Jeſus Chriſt, God-man, who being glorified in the body, ſhall be ſeen with bodily eyes. And ſo Job aſſures himſelf that he ſhall ſee God in the firſt ſence, with the eye of the body; as if he had ſaid, I ſhall have a glorified eye to ſee a glorified Saviour with. From or in my fleſh, I ſhall ſee God. Thus one of the Ancients gives the interpretation of this Text. Whereas (ſaith he) Job ſaith, in my fleſh I ſhall ſee God, he, without doubt propheſied the reſurrection of his fleſh: yet he did not ſay, By my fleſh, which if he had ſaid, the Text notwithſtanding might be expounded of God, who being in the fleſh, ſhall be ſeen by the fleſh; yet we may underſtand it only thus, I ſhall be in the fleſh, when I ſee God.

Illud quod ait Job, in carne mea videbo Deū, reſurrectionem quidem carnis procul dubio prophetavit; non tamen dixit per carnem meam, quod quidem ſi dixiſſet poſſet Deus intelligi, qui per carnem in carne videbitur; nunc vero poteſt & ſic accipi, in carne mea ero, cum videbo Deum. Aug. l. 22. de Civ. D. c. 24.

Hence obſerve, Firſt, The body after the reſurrection ſhall be true fleſh, or ſhall have true fleſh.

That opinion hath been condemned as hereſie, which ſome held long ſince, That when the body riſeth again it ſhall be a ſpirit, ſubtile, and thin, like the Air or Wind, not ſubject to the touch of the hand, or ſight of the eye. To which one of the Ancients anſwereth well from (Luke 24. 39, 40.) where Chriſt when the Diſciples were affrighted at his appearance, after his reſurrection, thinking they had ſeen a ſpirit, verſ. 37. (for ſo abſurdly they ſpake, as if a ſpirit could be ſeen, Chriſt, I ſay) to free them at once from that abſurdity, and fear, calls to them, Why are ye troubled, and why do thoughts (that is, ſuch vain thoughts as theſe) ariſe in your hearts? Behold my hands and my feet, that it is I my ſelf (much in the language of Job, whom I ſhall ſee for my ſelf) handle me and ſee; for a ſpirit hath not fleſh and bones as ye ſee me have. Mine is a true body, compoſed of fleſh and bones, it hath the dimenſions and properties of a true body, it may be ſeen and handled: Chriſt admitteth the teſtimony of their own ſenſes, to aſſure them it was no deluſion or phanſie which was preſented to them, but his real body.

Corpus noſtrum in illa reſurrectionis gloria erit inpalpabile ventis aereq; ſubtilius. Eutic. Conſtant. Epic.

But, ſaith not the Apoſtle (1 Cor. 15. 37, 38.) treating of the Reſurrection, That which thou ſoweſt, thou ſoweſt not that body that ſhall be, but bare grain, as perchance of wheat, or ſome other grain: but God giveth it a body as it pleaſeth him, to every ſeed its own body. From this ſimilitude ſome argue, if that which thou ſoweſt is not that body that ſhall be when thou reapeſt; then the body that dies, and is laid in the Grave, is not that body that ſhall be in the reſurrection; and if it be not the ſame, but ſome other body, then it may be an ayereal body.

Non dicit grano ſeminis deeſſe quod erat, ſed adeſſe quod non erat; qui autem verũ corpus reſurgere denegat, nequaquam dicit adeſſe quod deerat ſed abeſſe quod erat. Greg. in diſput. contra Eutich.

I anſwer, It is true, corn, or grain which is ſowed, doth not riſe again in that manner, or after that likeneſs in which it was caſt into the ground. We ſow bare ſeed, but when it comes up again, it comes with a ſtalk and an ear, and ſhoots up in much beauty, glory, and verdure. There is a great difference between a grain of wheat in the buſhel, and a flouriſhing ſtem, or ear of Corn in the field. God gives it another body in the growing up, but yet it is ſtill a body; and there is the ſame nature in it ſtill, the grain remains ſtill: Only, there is an addition of beauty and greenneſs when it grows up. So the body that is caſt into the ground is like bare grain (the Apoſtle uſeth that word) it is a bare body, a naked body: but when it ſhall be raiſed again, the body ſhall have many great additions, it ſhall have a cloathing, and an excellency of glory put upon it, (2 Cor. 5. 4.) We ſhall be cloathed upon, yet ſtill it is a true body and the ſame body. The Apoſtle Paul doth not ſay, that the body ſhall be utterly caſt away or loſt in Glory; but the body that dies is uncloathed, and thoſe bodies of Saints which live at that Great day, ſhall be cloathed upon with a houſe which is from Heaven. So that in the Reſurrection there will be an adding ſomewhat to that which was before, not a taking away of that that was before; the fleſh ſhall be refined and purified, it ſhall not be laid aſide, or annihilated. The corn grows up, with ſomewhat that it had not, but it doth not loſe any thing that it had; 'tis ſtill a grain of wheat and better. So the body laid down in the grave is raiſed, not the ſame in all things, but better in many things; it will not loſe any thing of perfection which it had, but it will gain many perfections which it had not, even the excellency and perfection of glory.

Caro noſtra poſt reſurrectionem eadem eſt & diverſa, eadem per naturam, diverſa per potentiam.

Secondly, It is objected, How can it riſe fleſh, when the Apoſtle (1 Cor. 15. 50.) ſaith, Fleſh and blood cannot inherit the Kingdom of God, neither doth corruption inherit incorruption? If no fleſh ſhall inherit that ſtate, how can it be affirmed, that the true fleſh ſhall be raiſed to enter upon that inheritance?

I anſwer, by way of grant, that by fleſh and blood in that Scripture, we are to underſtand natural fleſh and blood, not fleſh and blood as it notes a ſinful, or corrupt condition: In which ſence it is alſo true, that fleſh and blood ſhall not inherit the Kingdom of God. But the Apoſtle ſpeaking there of the reſurrection of the body, he means the fleſh and blood of which the body is compoſed and made up; and of that he ſaith, It ſhall not enter into the Kingdom of Heaven. 'Tis true, it ſhall not, in the ſtate wherein it is, fleſh and blood, as it is corruptible, ſhall not enter into Heaven. Himſelf ſeems to expound that we are thus to conceive fleſh and blood in the latter clauſe of the ſame Verſe, Neither ſhall corruption inherit incorruption; that is, corruptible fleſh and blood, or fleſh and blood that hath the ſeeds and principles of corruption in it, ſhall never enter into the Kingdom of Heaven; ſuch fleſh and blood is unfit to wear the garland of glory. As our ſouls muſt be changed before they can be fit for glory, ſo alſo muſt our bodies. Meer natural fleſh and blood are too weak to bear the weight of glory. Which the Apoſtle intimated (Verſ. 44.) It is ſown a natural body, it is raiſed a ſpiritual body. As if he had ſaid, Such a body as man laid down in the grave will not ſerve his turn, when he riſeth again. Man layes down only a Natural body, or as the Greek ſtrictly ſpeaks, an Animal body, or a Soul body; that is, a body quickned and maintained only by a living ſoul, ſuch as Adam's was in the Creation, whoſe body being formed out of the duſt of the earth, and the Lord breathing into him the breath of life, he became a living Soul (Gen. 2. 7.) yet ſuch was his ſoul that it could not maintain his bodily life without helps from without. And ſo his (as alſo ours who are deſcended from him) was but a meer natural body. But when man is raiſed from the duſt, he ſhall be provided and fitted with a Spiritual body. The Apoſtle ſaith not, that the body ſhall be changed into a ſpirit, but it ſhall be raiſed a ſpiritual body, which yet ſome urge ſtrongly to prove that the body ſhall be attenuated into a ſpirit; but for the removing of that objection and the clearing of the Scripture; I anſwer, that the body raiſed to glory is called ſpiritual theſe three wayes.

Firſt, Becauſe the body ſhall ever be ſubject and ſerviceable to the ſpirit; for as the ſpirit of a man while it is ſubject to and ſerveth ſinful fleſh, is called carnal in the language of Scripture; ſo the fleſh of man when it is purely ſubject to the ſpirit, may, by the ſame proportion, be called ſpiritual.

Secondly, It may be called a ſpiritual body in regard of the great ſtrength and activity, with which it ſhall be endowed: Spirits are ſtrong, and ſo is every thing which is ſpiritual. Spirit is often in Scripture oppoſed to fleſh, to denote ſtrength. When the Prophet would have the Jews know that the Egyptian Horſes were too weak to be truſted too, he ſaith, Their horſes are fleſh, and not ſpirit (Iſa. 31. 1.) The Devil is called a ſpiritual wickedneſs, to ſhew that he is a ſtrong and a powerful wickedneſs (Eph. 6. 12.) In this reference alſo our bodies after the reſurrection are entitled ſpiritual. It muſt be a body of mighty ſtrength which is able to bear a weight of glory, or as the Apoſtle amplifies it, An exceeding weight of glory. There is ſuch a weight in Glory that our frail bodies would be cruſhed under it, unleſs being made ſpiritual, they were alſo made ſtrong to bear it.

Thirdly, 'Tis called a ſpiritual body, becauſe then the body ſhall have no need of natural helps. This the Apoſtle teacheth us in that oppoſition, It is ſowen a natural body, it is raiſed a ſpiritual body. A natural body ſtands in need of natural ſupports, but a ſpiritual body needs them not. When they in the Goſpel put that tempting Queſtion to Chriſt, whoſe wife the Woman ſhould be at the Reſurrection, who had been ſucceſſively married to ſeven husbands; Chriſt gives an anſwer, implying that ſuch Queſtions ſhall then be out of doors (Matth. 22. 13.) After the reſurrection, they neither marry, nor are given in marriage, but are as the Angels in heaven. Marriage will be out in heaven: yea the body ſhall be ſo ſpiritual in heaven, that we ſhall need, neither ſleep, nor meat, nor cloathing, as Angels and Spirits do not. I may give the ſpiritualneſs of the body in four words, according to the Schoolmen in their diſputes about the ſtate of a glorified body.

First, Clearneſs and beauty: the face of Stephen did ſhine as the face of an Angel (Act. 6. 15.) Not that an Angel hath a face or ſhines viſibly, but ſo 'tis phraſed to note excellent beauty; as excellent bread is expreſſed, by Angels bread: there was an amazing beauty ſtampt upon the face of Stephen, becauſe he began to border upon Heaven, and had received ſome beams of glory approaching. Then inſtead of thoſe filthy ulcers, with which the body of Job was ſpotted; his body, as alſo the bodies of all the Saints with him, ſhall appear (as it were) with ſtars and ſtuds of light, and reſplendent beauty; and which is the beauty of this bodily beauty in Heaven, it will be ſuch as whereof none ſhall be proud themſelves, nor yet by it be a ſnare to others.

Pro immundis ulceribus reſperſũ erit Jobi corpus atq; illuminatũ, quibuſdam quaſi punctis luminis & guttis lucis & ſtellulis clariſſimis diſtinctum & circumdatum. Pin.

Secondly, Agility, nimbleneſs, and activity; whereas now our bodies move heavily, they ſhall then aſcend and deſcend like Angels.

Thirdly, Impaſſibility, we ſhall not ſuffer hunger or cold, ſorrow, or pain in the body.

Fourthly, Spirituality, which, I conceive, may rather be the comprehenſion of the other three. Then that of the Apoſtle will be fulfilled, Chriſt will change our vile body, that it may be faſhioned like unto his glorious body (Phil. 3. 21.) Not that a glorious body ſhall be of another faſhion then now it is, in regard of the ſymmetry and diſpoſition of parts and members (the ſame fabrick and frame ſhall continue) but it ſhall be of another faſhion in regard of qualifications and endowments; ſuch as thoſe fore-mentioned, and in all thoſe our bodies ſhall be faſhioned like the glorious body of Jeſus Chriſt (which is the higheſt aſcent of honour which the body is capable of) and excepting theſe changes the body ſhall be the ſame it was; the ſame in nature, inveſted and ſublimated with thoſe noble additions of clarity, agility, impaſſibility, and ſpirituality. Thus it ſhall be ſown a natural body, but raiſed a ſpiritual body, yet ſtill a body, a true body ſtill. That's the firſt point, the body after the reſurrection ſhall be true fleſh.

Secondly, Obſerve, Saints raiſed to life ſhall ſee God.

It will be our whole work, and our whole wages, our whole buſineſs, and our whole bleſſedneſs to ſee God. Job ſpeaks as if there were nothing to be done in the next life but only to ſee God; nothing to be had or enjoyed then, but only a ſight of God; and indeed there ſhall be nothing elſe; I ſhall ſee God (ſaith he) that's enough for me, yea, that's all to me (Pſal. 16. 11.) In thy preſence is fulneſs of joy: That is, when I ſhall ſee and enjoy thee preſent (Matth. 5. 8.) The pure in heart ſhall ſee God. (2 Cor. 13. 12.) Now we ſee through a glaſs darkly; then face to face; that is, intentively and directly, not reflectively or by effects; we ſhall ſee as we are ſeen, and know as we are known; according to the utmoſt comprehenſion which a creature is capable of, our veſſels ſhall be as full as they can hold, and what would we have more? Yea, our happineſs ſhall be, that we would have no more. Our hearts ſhall be ſo full of joy, and our heads ſo full of knowledge, that we ſhall deſire no more. We ſee the World, and are not filled; The eye, ſaith Solomon, is not ſatisfied with ſeeing. But the ſight of God is ſatisfying and filling, that will not leave one empty ſpace or corner in the ſoul. God is enough for us, and we ſhall certainly have enough when we ſee him (as then we ſhall) as he is. That priviledge is aſſured to the Sons of God (1 John 3. 2.) We ſhall ſee him as he is. In this life the Saints ſee God; the life of grace is the viſion of God, as well as the life of glory: and though it be true, that here the Saints do rather ſee what God is not, then what he is; yet 'tis true alſo, that here the Saints ſee God as he is, as thoſe words may note a real ſeeing of him, though not (as they intend) a full ſeeing of him. Here we ſee God by faith; We (ſaith the Apoſtle, 2 Cor. 5. 7.) walk by faith, not by ſight. We neither walk by ſight, as carnal men do, who have no faith, nor do we walk by ſight, as glorified Saints, who are above faith. But we walk by faith, which though it be oppoſed both to the ſight of nature here below, and to that ſight of glory, which we ſhall have above; yet that alſo is a ſight, and by that we ſee God.

Firſt, In his Promiſes; Abraham ſaw my day (ſaith Chriſt, John 8. 56.) He ſaw it in the Promiſe; and there God is ſeen.

Secondly, In his Ordinances; David deſired to dwell in the Houſe of the Lord all the dayes of his life, to behold his beauty (Pſal. 27. 4.)

Thirdly, We ſee God in his Providences; in them God is ſo eminently to be ſeen, that he is as angry when his People ſee him not in Providences, as when they ſee him not in Promiſes, or Ordinances. In all theſe we have a ſight of God by faith in this life, and we ſee him truly as he is; yea, God hath been pleaſed to make himſelf viſible to ſome of his people in this life, even to their ſenſe, as well as to their faith (Iſai. 6. 1.) I ſaw the Lord, ſaith Iſaiah the Prophet; he ſpeaks not of an intellectual, but of an ocular ſight; and Job, I have heard of him by the hearing of the ear, but now mine eyes have ſeen him (Job 42. 6.) And ſo Jacob (Gen. 32. 30.) I have ſeen God face to face; and he calls the place Penuel, The face of God. Not that he (or they) ſaw God himſelf with the eyes of his body, ſo no man hath ſeen God at any time (1 John 4. 12.) and ſo no man can ſee God and live (Exod. 33. 30.) But theſe ſaw God in ſome repreſentation of himſelf, in ſome ſuch breakings forth, and evident demonſtrations of his Glory to the eye, as gave them an undoubted argument of the preſence of God with them; yea, ſometimes God hath condeſcended to appear in the form of a man. So that beſides that ſight of faith which all Saints have of God in this life in his Works and Word, ſome have had a kind of ſight by ſenſe in thoſe illuſtrious and familiar manifeſtations of his preſence with them; yet all this is but a glimpſe to that ſight which we ſhall have of God in heavenly glory, when we ſhall ſee him as he is. Which words of the Apoſtle John, as they are appliable to the perſon of Chriſt, whom we ſhall then ſee as he is, as that is oppoſed to what he was, while he was here in the form of a ſervant; ſo they are alſo appliable to the Nature of God, or to God eſſentially taken, whom we ſhall ſee in that glorified ſtate, as he is, though not with the bodily eye, nor with any full comprehenſion of our underſtandings (for how can finite comprehend infinite) yet our underſtandings ſhall have ſuch a full apprehenſion of God, that comparatively to any ſight of God which we have had here, we may be ſaid to ſee him as he is. This intellectual ſight, being unexpreſſibly far more excellent and evident then either that ſight which every Saint hath by faith, or which any have had by the eye, in thoſe appearances he ſometimes hath vouchſafed to duſt and aſhes here. And therefore that ſight of God is called by way (not only of diſtinction, but) of eminency; The beatifical viſion.

Thirdly, As this Text is expounded peculiarly of Chriſt the Mediator, then we may obſerve yet further for our comfort, that Saints glorified ſhall ſee, and ever behold the glorious body of Jeſus Chriſt.

We ſhall ſee Chriſt in our nature glorified. Therefore ſome render the Text, Not, In my fleſh I ſhall ſee God; But, I ſhall ſee God in my fleſh; that is, I ſhall ſee Chriſt ſitting in glory, cloathed with fleſh, or in the likeneſs of man. God ſent his Son in the likeneſs of ſinful fleſh, to condemn ſin in the fleſh (Rom. 8. 3.) And he ſhall appear the ſecond time without ſin unto ſalvation (Heb. 9. 28.) That is, There ſhall be no likeneſs of ſin upon him at his ſecond appearance, as there was no ſin in him at the firſt. But though he ſhall then have no likeneſs of ſinful fleſh upon him, yet he ſhall have the likeneſs of fleſh, and that, not as likeneſs is ſometimes taken, for the reſemblance of that which it is not, but as likeneſs imports the truth of that which is. Chriſt ſhall be ſeen in true humane fleſh, and this ſeeing or beholding of Jeſus Chriſt in the fleſh, will be (if we may conceive a ſecond there) the ſecond great joy in Heaven, To ſee the Saints will be great joy. The Diſciples ſaw Moſes and Elias in the transfiguration of Chriſt (which was a ſhew of Heaven, Matth. 17.) What joy then will it be to ſee the glorious perſon of Jeſus Chriſt? Chriſt is indeed the Deſire of our eyes. It was the wiſh of Auſtin, that he might have ſeen three things. Firſt, Rome in her flower. Secondly, Paul in the Pulpit. Thirdly, Chriſt in the fleſh. To have a view of Chriſt in the dayes of his humiliation and debaſement, was to them, who knew him by faith, matter of great rejoycing. Old Simeon deſired to ſee no more of this world, when once he had ſeen Chriſt; he wiſhes to depart and have his eyes cloſed, when his eyes had ſeen the ſalvation of God, that is, Chriſt, whom God ſent to be our Saviour (Luke 2. 30.) What then will it be to the Saints, when they ſhall ſee God their Saviour, Jeſus Chriſt ſitting cloathed in that fleſh that they themſelves wear, though in a more excellent cloathing of glory, then a meer creature is able to bear. The Apoſtle Peter foreſhews this joy of Saints (1 Pet. 1. 7, 8, 13.) That the tryal of your faith may be found to praiſe, and honour, and glory at the appearing of Jeſus Chriſt, whom having not ſeen ye love. As if he had ſaid, If ye love Jeſus Chriſt, now you have not ſeen him, but have only heard him ſpoken of, and ſeen him by faith; If ye having not ſeen do love him, O how will ye love him when you ſhall ſee him! for that is the ſtrength of the Apoſtles Argument, Whom having not ſeen ye love, in whom though now ye ſee him not, yet believing, ye rejoyce with joy unſpeakable and full of glory. As if he had ſaid, If ye now rejoyce with joy unſpeakable, and full of glory, believing in Jeſus Chriſt whom you never ſaw, what rivers of joy will flow in upon you when you ſee Jeſus Chriſt! And therefore at the thirteenth Verſe, the Apoſtle Peter gathers up his own ſpirit, and the ſpirits of all the Saints, to the ſerious expectation of this thing; Wherefore gird up the loins of your mind, be ſober, and hope to the end, for the grace to be brought to you at the revelation of Jeſus Chriſt. There is a twofold interpretation of that Scripture, according to the twofold ſignification of the word Grace. Some read it thus, Rejoyce for that grace that is brought to you by the revelation of Jeſus Chriſt. It is matter of higheſt and pureſt joy to remember that Grace (whether we take it for the favour of God to ſinners, that they may be juſtified, or for that heavenly principle which the Spirit works in the hearts of ſinners, that they may be ſanctified) at the revelation of Jeſus Chriſt to the ſoul in converſion.

Videbo deũ in carne mea, i. e. Chriſtum in carne reſuſcitatum.

When this grace is brought to (and through the effectual working of the Spirit) received by ſinners, there's joy in Heaven, and therefore the thought of it ſhould cauſe joy on earth. Yet

Our tranſlation refers rather to the time future; Gird up the loins of your mind,&c. for the grace to be brought at the revelation of Jeſus Chriſt. Jeſus Chriſt hath been revealed already, but he ſhall be revealed yet more plainly. But is that the time of grace? We received grace at the firſt revealing of Chriſt, ſhall we receive more grace then?

I anſwer, Grace may be put for glory, or for that unſpeakable favour and wonderful love, which ſhall be given out to the Saints when their bodies ſhall be raiſed, and Chriſt appears to them in Glory. So the word grace is uſed (1 *Pet.*3.) where the Apoſtle exhorts Husbands and Wives to walk according to knowledge, as heirs of the ſame grace of life. We are poſſeſſors and not heirs only of grace in this life; but in this life we are only heirs of the grace of life, that is, of eternal life, or glory. Such is the grace that is given at the revelation of Jeſus Chriſt; that is, when Jeſus Chriſt ſhall be ſet forth to the view of our bodily eyes, at the riſing again of our bodies. Then fulneſs of joy is promiſed, and God hath provided for it every way. He hath provided joy for the eye of the mind, by that viſion of himſelf: He hath provided joy for the eye of the body, by the viſion of Jeſus Chriſt. And ſome have piouſly conceived it one part of the deſign why Jeſus Chriſt took fleſh, that we might have compleat joy in him, both by ſeeing the Divine nature in him intellectually, and by ſeeing him glorious in the Humane nature; for ſo at once both mind and body ſhall have fulneſs of conſolation by him.

Fourthly, For as much as Job, to comfort himſelf in his preſent ſorrows, hath recourſe to this hope, I ſhall ſee God in my fleſh: As if he had ſaid, I ſee nothing but viſions of horror and amazement now; I ſee nothing but friendleſs friends, and miſerable comforters now; I ſee nothing but poverty and want compaſſing me now; but I ſhall ſee God, there's my hope, and there's my happineſs.

Hence Obſerve, Our compleat happineſs conſiſts in the viſion of God.

Chriſt placeth the future happineſs of the Saints in the viſion of his Mediatorial glory; Father, I will that they alſo whom thou haſt given me be with me where I am, that they may behold my glory that thou haſt given me (John 17. 24.) Glorified Saints ſhall for ever feed their eyes with unutterable delights in beholding the Glory of Jeſus Chriſt.

The ſight of the eye gives much contentment; It is a pleaſant thing to behold the Sun (Eccleſ. 11.) How pleaſant will it be then with the eye of the ſoul to behold God, and with the eye of the body to behold Jeſus Chriſt? Mine eye affects my heart, ſaith Jeremiah in the Lamentations: That's true of joy as well as of ſorrow. Sights refreſh: How do people flock to ſee great ſhews? Now, the clear light that comes into the underſtanding, brings infinitely more refreſhing and gladneſs to the ſoul, then that which comes in only by the body. It is joy and happineſs to Saints to ſee God now, as was ſhewed before, in his Word and Works, in his Ordinances and Adminiſtrations. Good Hezekiah lamented his feared loſs of that priviledge (Iſa. 38. 11.) I ſaid I ſhall not ſee the Lord, even the Lord in the land of the living: That is, I thought I ſhould never have gone to Church more (as we uſe to ſpeak) or to the Temple, there to behold the beauty of the Lord, and partake of his Ordinances. But what Elihu promiſes in a like caſe (Job 33. 26.) was performed to Hezekiah, He ſhall pray unto God, and he will be favourable unto him, and he ſhall ſee his face with joy. When ſhall he have this joyful ſight? Even in this life; as 'tis explained at the twenty eighth Verſe; He will deliver his ſoul from going into the pit, and his life ſhall ſee the light: That is, He ſhall be raiſed from his ſick bed to ſee the light of the Sun, and then alſo he ſhall ſee the light of Gods countenance. This will be a joyful ſight to him here, much more will the ſight of Gods Face fill him with joy hereafter.

And the reaſon why this viſion is our joy and happineſs, ariſeth four wayes.

Firſt, Becauſe our ſeeing of God makes us like him; like him two wayes, or in a double conformity. Firſt, In holineſs: And therefore, Secondly, In bleſſedneſs. Theſe two cannot be ſeparated. They that are (according to their capacity) holy as God is holy, ſhall alſo (according to their capacity) be happy as God is happy: Now that our ſeeing of God impreſſeth upon us a ſimilitude of his holineſs, is affirmed by the Apoſtle John (1 Epiſt. 3. 2.) We ſhall be like him, (Why?) For we ſhall ſee him. For if the viſion we have of God here (in proportion to it) draw a likeneſs upon our ſouls (look how much any ſoul ſees of God by faith, by ſo much is that ſoul made like to God in holineſs) We all as in a glaſs behold the glory of the Lord, and are changed into the ſame Image (2 Cor. 3. 18.) Now if here in Grace, while we in Promiſes, and Providences, and Ordinances, behold God, we are made like to him, much more ſhall we be ſo, when we ſee him face to face. The true reaſon why we are not more like God in this life, is, becauſe we ſee and truly know ſo little of him.

Secondly, Bleſſedneſs is nothing but ſatisfaction, and content. The Devil is moſt miſerable, becauſe he is nothing but diſſatisfaction, and diſcontent. And hence the Devil labours to put all into a diſcontented mood, that they may be miſerable, as he is. Now as our likeneſs to God riſeth from viſion; ſo our ſatisfaction, content, and reſt, riſeth from both. (Pſal. 17. 15.) As for me, I will behold thy face in righteouſneſs. The Pſalmiſt ſpake in the former Verſe of the utmoſt happineſs of worldly men, who have their portion in this life; and in this Verſe he ſpeaks by way of oppoſition to that, of his own happineſs, together with the happineſs of all the people of God; As for me, I will behold thy face, &c. As if he had ſaid, Let others place their happineſs in what they will, as for me, or for my part, here is my happineſs, To behold the face of God in righteouſneſs, (without holineſs no man can ſee the Lord.) But what's the benefit of beholding the face of God? The next words expreſs it; I ſhall be ſatisfied when I awake with thy likeneſs. If we underſtand the Pſalmiſt (as ſome do) of beholding God here in his favours and mercies, that confirms the point more; for if the ſoul receive ſatisfaction in beholding God here as he is pleaſed in part to reveal himſelf, then we ſhall much more be ſatisfied when he reveals himſelf fully to us. God is ſatisfied in and with himſelf, and therefore he can quickly ſatisfie us. The very gleanings of God being infinitely more then all the vintage and harveſt of the creature.

Thirdly, Our ſeeing God, is the enjoying of God. How then can we be but happy in ſeeing him? We ſee many good things now that advantage us little, becauſe they are none of ours; we do not enjoy them by ſeeing them, it is but a tranſient ſight: But this ſight is enjoyment, and the appropriation of God to our ſelves. Faith appropriates God here, viſion ſhall much more hereafter.

Laſtly, This ſight will make us happy, becauſe when once we enjoy God by ſight, we ſhall be filled with aſſurance of enjoying him for ever. There is nothing but aſſurance in Heaven, and that not only that our eſtate is ſure and ſhall continue, but that we ſhall have a continual ſight or manifeſtation of it. Glory ſhall never be hidden from our eye, It ſhall be revealed in us (Rom. 8. 18.) This evidence of Glory compleats our happineſs in glory. And ſeeing this viſion of God, and the revelation of Glory in us, are the compleature of our happineſs, no marvel if Job comforts himſelf in this expectation; After Worms have deſtroyed this body, I ſhall ſee God in my fleſh. This ſight will recompence all our ſorrows and ſufferings, yea, when once we have attained this ſight, we ſhall not only never ſee, but forget our ſorrows, and remember our ſufferings no more.

Verſe 27. Whom I ſhall ſee for my ſelf, and mine eye ſhall behold, and not another, though my reins be conſumed within me.

Job concluded the former Verſe with an aſſurance, that, In his fleſh he ſhould ſee God. This Verſe begins upon the ſame point, Whom I ſhall ſee for my ſelf; but though it be the ſame in the matter, yet it comes cloathed with new conſiderations and additions. He doth not ſay barely, Whom I ſhall ſee; but, Whom I ſhall ſee for my ſelf: There is the firſt addition. Secondly, Mine eye ſhall behold, and not another: There is a ſecond addition; and this (ſaith Job)

Job) I believe Though my reins be conſumed within me, that's a third.

Whom I ſhall ſee for my ſelf.] It is one thing to ſee, and another thing to ſee for our ſelves. In ſome caſes to do or ſee for our ſelves is ſinful. As, No man ſhould live to himſelf; ſo in that ſence, No man ſhould ſee to himſelf, or for himſelf. Job promiſeth himſelf a time, wherein he ſhould ſee, and do for himſelf without ſin. And there is a doing for our ſelves, or a living to our ſelves in this life (much more may it be ſo in the life to come) which is not ſinful, nor at all contrary to thoſe Goſpel rules of denying our ſelves, and living unto God. The Original which we render for my ſelf, is in the Dative caſe (as Grammarians ſpeak) which imports favour; I ſhall ſee to, or for my ſelf, that is, for my own good, advantage, and comfort: The Prophet ſpeaks in this conſtruction (Iſa. 9. 6.) To us a Son is given, to us a Child is born. He is given to us, or for us; that is, for our benefit, and ſalvation: There was never ſuch a birth to us as Chriſt was; and it were better for us never to have been born, then not to have an intereſt in the birth of Chriſt. The promiſe of Chriſt is the foundation of our comfort; I ſhall ſee him to my ſelf, (ſaith Job) as having my ſhare, my part in him.

Eſt Dativus benevolentiæ, favoris, commodi & utilitatis.

Or, I ſhall ſee him for my ſelf; that is, as a friend to me, as he that will take my part, and give ſentence on my ſide. Some expound the latter clauſe of the verſe ſutably to this; Whom I ſhall ſee for my ſelf; and mine eyes ſhall behold him, and not another; that is, not an adverſary: For the word in the Hebrew ſignifies not only alium, but alienum, not only another, but an adverſary. A learned Interpreter puts the word in the Accuſative, not in the Nominative caſe, thus, Whom I ſhall ſee for my ſelf, and not as my adverſary (but friend:) So it refers to God himſelf, I ſhall not ſee God as a ſtranger to me, much leſs as an enemy, but ſhall find his heart opened to me, and him ready to receive me into his everlaſting embraces.

Videbo deũ mihi, non adverſum me ſed pro me ſententiã pronunciaturum. Pin. Videre, hoc loco, mihi ſapit forum. Bold. Exiſtimo vocem zar eſſe accuſativi caſus non nominativi, nec debere referri ad alium vel alios, quam ad deum ipſum. Bold.

It hath been ſhewed from the former words, that the happineſs of Saints after the reſurrection conſiſts in viſion: Here Job riſeth up to a fuller aſſurance of that priviledge, which glorified Saints ſhall have in Heaven; Whom I ſhall ſee for my ſelf.

Hence Note; In Heaven Saints ſhall have their intereſt in God clear, undoubtedly clear to them for ever.

It is the buſineſs of faith now to believe in God for our ſelves; to take Chriſt for our ſelves. But though this be the work of faith, yet faith cannot alwayes reach it, or read its own evidences by it. There may be true faith, and yet no ſight of Chriſt for our ſelves; we may ſee him, and yet fear we have no intereſt in him. Come to Saints under temptation, or in times of deſertion, and tell them of mercy, and free grace brought in by Chriſt the Redeemer; they anſwer, yes, they believe that it is ſo, Chriſt is the Saviour, grace is free, mercy endureth for ever; But what's all this to them? They ſee this by faith in the general promiſe made to ſinners, but they ſee not this for themſelves, nor can they make out their ſhare in it; yea, poſſibly they ſee God angry; they ſee him indeed, but not for themſelves, but as an adverſary to them, or as departed from them; his face is hid, and they doubt whether he will ever unvail it again towards them. This is the ſtate of many Saints here, and there are very few who ſee God alwayes for themſelves in this life, or whoſe hearts are cleared from all ſcruples and fears about their intereſt in Chriſt. This is reſerved for Glory when love ſhall be perfected: Perfect love will caſt out fear (1 John 4. 18.) and when fear ſhall be totally and finally caſt out, we ſhall never have ſo much as one ſuſpicious doubtful thought, croſſing our ſpirits, or ſhaking our aſſurances. Heavenly enjoyments ſhall not know the leaſt interruption. Saints in this life are in a happy condition above all people in the world: but they meet with many rubs in the making out, and evidencing of their happineſs: but in Heaven the favour of God ſhall ever be in ſight, we ſhall ſee him continually for our ſelves. Job ſaid in this book, Thou holdeſt me for thine enemy. He found God againſt him, and dealing with him as if he hated him: but his faith recovered to the higheſt pitch, I ſhall ſee God, and he will never act as an adverſary any more. God will not ſo much as perſonate an enemy in Heaven, though here he ſmites and wounds his beloved ones, even with the wounds of an enemy; but there's nothing but ſmiles and embraces in glory; Whom I ſhall ſee for my ſelf.

Again, This addition to the viſion may refer (by way of oppoſition) to that ſight which wicked men ſhall have of Chriſt in the reſurrection: I ſhall ſee him for my ſelf. There are others that ſhall ſee Chriſt as well as I, but I ſhall ſee him ſo as they ſhall not ſee him, they ſhall not ſee him for themſelves (Matth. 24. 30.) There will be an univerſal viſion of Chriſt in that great day, Then ſhall appear the ſign of the Son of Man in Heaven, and then all the Tribes of the earth ſhall mourn, and they ſhall ſee the Son of Man coming in the clouds of Heaven with power and great glory. All the Tribes of the earth; he ſpeaks of all Nations in alluſion to the Nation of the Jews, who were diſtinguiſhed into twelve Tribes, All the Tribes, that is, all the Families and Kindreds of the earth ſhall ſee him: But ſhall all the Tribes of the earth rejoyce in ſeeing him? No, all the Tribes of the earth ſhall mourn. Not that every particular perſon of every Tribe ſhall mourn, but many of every Tribe ſhall mourn. And this Scripture may give us light in the explication of thoſe univerſal terms about redemption; for as it is ſaid, Chriſt dyed for all; ſo here he ſaith, All the Tribes of the earth ſhall mourn at the appearance of Chriſt; yet then many ſhall rejoyce. Lift up your heads (ſaith Chriſt to the Saints) for the time of your redemption is at hand. But all the Tribes, that is, a number of the Tribes, or the greateſt number of the Tribes ſhall mourn. All ſhall ſee him, but with a difference: The Saints ſhall ſee Chriſt coming, and it will be a welcome day to them: The wicked ſhall ſee him, but it will be a black and a ſad day to them (Revel. 1. 7.) Behold he cometh with clouds, and every eye ſhall ſee him, good, and bad. Which he addeth by way of ſpecification; Every eye ſhall ſee him, and they alſo which pierced him. If every eye ſhall ſee him, then they that pierced him muſt needs ſee him; and if ſo, why are they particularly named? It is uſual in other Scriptures, when an univerſal is firſt laid down, yet to nominate a particular kind or perſon, though that be included in the former general. As in the the title of the eighteenth Pſalm, A Song of David in the day that the Lord delivered him from the hand of all his enemies: There is the univerſal, and yet it follows, and from the hand of Saul. Saul was among his enemies, and ſo was included in the general ſtile of all his enemies; but he puts in Saul by name for ſpecial reaſon, becauſe he was his moſt mortal enemy. Samuel commands Iſrael to put away all their falſe Gods, and Aſhtaroth (1 Sam. 7. 3.) If they put away all, they muſt needs put away Aſhtaroth; but he names Aſhtaroth, becauſe that was a principal Idol. So here, Every eye ſhall ſee him, and they alſo which pierced him. Under the general they that pierced him are included; yet he ſpecifies his piercers, who were of two ſorts, and ſo according to the Text and point in hand, muſt have a twofold ſight of him. Among thoſe who pierced Chriſt, there were ſome that repented, and returned (as we read) at that Sermon of Peter) Acts 2. Peter told them they were the betrayers and murtherers of Chriſt; this pricked them to the heart, and many repented, embracing and believing on that Chriſt, whom they had betrayed and murthered. Theſe ſhall ſee Chriſt with joy, though they pierced and put him to ſorrow: The death of Chriſt hath procured mercy for thoſe, whoſe cruelty procured his death. They who judged Chriſt worthy to dye, judging themſelves ſo, were through faith delivered from death.

There were another ſort that pierced him, who never repented, and they ſhall ſee him too, but they ſhall ſee him to their ſorrow. They would withdraw from this ſight, they would not behold him whom they pierced, if they could help it; they would fain be excuſed, but they ſhall not. Every eye ſhall ſee him, even they that pierced him. What a dreadful thing will it be, when they who wilfully and maliciouſly pierced the Lord Jeſus Chriſt to death, and dyed impenitently in that ſin, ſhall be brought into his preſence? This ſight of a pierced Chriſt will pierce their ſouls with ſorrow; yet they ſhall ſee him not with ſorrow only, but with vexation of heart, and anguiſh of ſpirit. They who have not ſeen a pierced Chriſt in the ſorrows of repentance, can never ſee him whom they have pierced, but in the ſorrows of deſpair. To behold Chriſt with the eye of ſenſe will be moſt grievous to all thoſe, who have not beheld him with an eye of faith. See him! No, they had rather be covered with the mountains, and that the hills ſhould fall upon them. But they ſhall ſee him and be afraid, terror ſhall take hold of them. 'Tis a promiſe to ſome, that they ſhall ſee him whom they have pierced, and mourn (Zach. 12. 10.) Tis a threat to others, that they ſhall ſee him whom they have pierced and mourn; every eye ſhall ſee him, even they that have pierced him. To ſee the Saints in happineſs, ſhall be a part of the puniſhment of the damned (Luke 13. 28.) There ſhall be weeping and gnaſhing of teeth, when you ſhall ſee Abraham, and Iſaac, and Jacob, and all the Prophets in the Kingdom of God, and your ſelves ſhut out. You ſhall be vexed with anger and envy as well as with pain and loſs. Now as there ſhall be a different view and ſight at that day in reference to the Saints, Saints ſhall look upon one another rejoycing; but wicked men ſhall look on the Saints mourning. It will be a bleſſed meeting when we ſhall ſee Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, and our ſelves let into the Kingdom with them. But the wicked ſhall ſee Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob let into the Kingdom, and mourn that themſelves are thruſt out. Thus alſo there ſhall be a different ſight of Jeſus Chriſt; Believers ſhall ſee for themſelves, and rejoyce: The wicked ſhall ſee him againſt themſelves, they ſhall ſee him as their enemy, and mourn. I ſhall ſee him (ſaith Job) for my ſelf. That's the firſt addition.

And mine eyes ſhall behold, and not another.

ראה verbum conſpiciendi hoc loco aliud eſt à ſuperiori, & ſignificat propriè intendere in rem aliquã oculis & animo, cum peculiari quodam ſenſu & experientia rei conſpectæ.

We have in this Text, ſee, and ſee, and behold. The word in the Original is different from what we had before. I ſhall behold him. It ſignifies more then the bare ſeeing, or the gathering in the ſpecies of any object into the eye. It ſignifies a very vehement beholding; a critical diſcerning, view, and ſight of a thing. Whom I ſhall behold. That is, with deep intention, both of eye, and mind, to find out and rejoyce in all the excellency, beauty, glory, and worth that is in him. A man may come into a room adorned with goodly pictures, he ſees them in his paſſage, he hath a tranſient view of them, and he takes ſome pleaſure in this view. Another beholds them, to ſee the workmanſhip, how the lines are drawn, and features ſhadowed to the life, he views with ſkill, and art, this pleaſeth much, and gives the accurate beholder high contentment. So here, Mine eye ſhall behold him: That is, I ſhall even ſet my ſelf to take a view of him, to gather up (as it were) into my ſelf the idea's of his divine perfections, and ſo to receive all thoſe delights and contents which riſe from ſuch an excellent Object. Moſes (Exod. 3. 3.) had a viſion of the burning Buſh; The Angel of the Lord appeared in a flame of fire in the midſt of the buſh. I will now turn aſide (ſaid Moſes) and ſee this great ſight. He ſaw it before; for it is ſaid, The Angel of God appeared to him. But that did not ſatisfie? I (ſaith he) will turn aſide and ſee it: He uſeth the word of the Text; that is, I will turn aſide to view it yet more exactly, to conſider it more fully. I will ſee it with diligence and intendment, as well as I have ſeen it with wonder and aſtoniſhment. I will get near to obſerve this miraculous flame, that the buſh ſhould burn and not conſume. So the word is uſed (Eccleſ. 1. 16.) I communed with mine own heart, ſaying, lo I am come to a great eſtate, and have gotten more wiſdom then all that were before me in Jeruſalem. Yea, my heart had great experience of wiſdom and knowledge. The Hebrew is, My heart had ſeen much of wiſdom and knowledge; that is, I had not only taken a light view, and conſideration of thoſe things that concern wiſdom and knowledge, but my heart was ſtudying, and beating upon them; I experimented them from time to time, till I was greatly ſeen in wiſdom and knowledge. So here, mine eye ſhall not only take a glance, or a ſight in paſſage, but I ſhall feed and ſatiate mine eye with a fixed obſervation. But Saints in glory ſhall come nearer and nearer to God, they ſhall as Moſes ſaith, turn aſide, to ſee this great thing the Glory of God, who is an everlaſting burning. Saints in glory ſhall ever contemplate the raviſhing Excellencies of God, and have a very intimate ſight, and apprehenſion of him; they ſhall ſee, and behold him; they ſhall have as clear a knowledge of, and as free a communion with God as the ſtate of a creature can bear. This the Apoſtle diſtinguiſheth from our preſent ſight and knowledge of God, which is through a glaſs and darkly, whereas he calleth this a ſight, face to face, and a knowing even as alſo we are known. Mine eyes ſhall behold, Poſt primũ illum & jucundiſſimum ſui redemptoris conſpectam, ait deinde ſe attentiùs, obſervantiùs, diligentiùs proſpecturum, intenturumq; oculis & animo in tantam gloriam. Pin.

And not another.] The word which we render, another, ſignifieth firſt one differing in heart, condition, and affection, as was touched before: It ſignifies alſo any one differing only in name and number: Another perſon, another man, how much ſoever he be a friend, or affected to us. This ſence of the word our Tranſlators ſeem to intend: And then the meaning plainly is this, Mine eye ſhall behold, and not another; that is, the ſight which I ſhall have of God in my glorified ſtate, ſhall not be at the ſecond hand, but ſuch as I ſhall feel my ſelf: The joy which I ſhall then receive ſhall not be from any report or narrative that others ſhall give me of the Glory of God, but it ſhall be from mine own perſonal viſion, or ſight of God. I ſhall ſee with mine own eyes, not anothers, or not by another.

זר alienus, vel alius, non videbit pro me alius, nã apertim & clarum videbo ipſe.

Now we know God by the reports made to us of him; as thoſe of Samaria knew Chriſt by the report which the Woman made: So, upon the matter the knowledge which we have of God here, is upon the report made to us of God in Ordinances, and in Providences: But as thoſe Samaritans came to the Woman and ſaid, Now we believe, not becauſe of thy ſayings; for we have heard him our ſelves, &c. So we ſhall ſay at laſt to all, whether things or perſons, which have been as means reporting and conveying to us the knowledge of God; now we know, not becauſe you have ſaid it, or ſhewed it, for we our ſelves have ſeen him. We ſhall behold God our ſelves, and not by another. Such ſhall be the difference between all the knowledge we have of God here, and that which we ſhall have in glory. The knowledge we have here, is but like that which the Samaritans had of Chriſt by the Womans report; but that which we ſhall have in Heaven ſhall be like that which they had of Chriſt when himſelf came perſonally among them, and ſpake immediately. Or we may illuſtrate it by that of the Queen of the South: The knowledge which we have of God here, and of his Glory and Excellency, is like that of the Queen of the South in her own Countrey; there ſhe heard a report of Solomon's perſon, of his government, of his riches, and dignity, and ſuch a report as did not only affect and aſtoniſh her, but provoke her to undertake that great journey, that ſhe might ſee for her ſelf, and her eyes behold, and not another; and when ſhe came to the Court at Jeruſalem, and there beheld Solomon in his perſon, and attendance; when ſhe obſerved the ſervice of his table, and heard his wiſdom, there was no more ſpirit in her (1 Kings 10. 5.) that is, ſhe was as one aſtoniſhed, whoſe ſpirits are conquered, and over-matched, or as one in a ſwoon, whoſe ſpirits are ſunk and diſſipated. Where the natural Spirit doth not act, it is ſaid not to be. When we come to the Court of Heaven, as the Queen of the South to Solomon's Court, and there behold how much God is beyond and above all that we have hitherto heard of him here at home in our own Countrey, we ſhall be rapt up into admiration, and there ſhall be indeed no more of this low and narrow ſpirit in us for ever.

Further, The word is taken, not only for another perſon, or for one differing perſonally, but for one differing in condition, and in quality, or bearing any diſſimilitude in manners; and ſo it was applyed to him who was an alien from the faith, a ſtranger to the Covenant, and Commonwealth of Iſrael. As if he had ſaid, I ſhall behold him, and not another; that is, not an alien from the Common-wealth of Iſrael; not a ſtranger from the Covenant; not a man of another frame of ſpirit then I now am of, ſuch ſhall not behold him. Which ſuggeſts this Note, זר alienus à fide diſſimilitudinem quandã morum & vitæ indicare poteſt, ſignificat etiam id quod amico & familiari opponitur, & quod propter inſuetudinẽ eſt horrori & nauſeæ.

> All that behold in Glory, ſhall be of one condition, of one faith and frame of ſpirit.

No ſtranger ſhall behold him, all ſhall be brethren; they all ſhall be as one man, or as if there were not another among them all. Heaven hath no mixture. All things and perſons ſhall be as in one ſtate, ſo of one piece. No tares in that field, nor goats in that flock. Saints enjoy unmixt communion here ſometimes, and live together as if there were not another among them: This Spirit of holineſs and of unity was eminently poured out upon the firſt Goſpel-Church, (Acts 2. 1.) They were all together with one accord in one place, as if they had all but one ſoul; and they continued as in the Apoſtles doctrine, ſo in fellowſhip, v. 42. Thus it is in the truth and height of ſpiritual commution below; Saints have not a ſtranger among them. And it is promiſed as the great priviledge of Sion, The Canaanite ſhall be no more in the Land; that is, there ſhall be no Alien among them, (Nahum 1. 15.) Behold upon the mountains the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that publiſheth peace: O Judah keep thy ſolemn feaſts, perform thy vows, for the wicked ſhall no more paſs through thee, he is utterly cut off. The wicked, or Belial (in the Original) he that will not bear the yoak of God, ſhall no more paſs through thee, much leſs ſtay and lodge in thee; no man ſhall be yoaked with you, but he that bears the yoak of Chriſt: O rejoyce, and keep thy feaſts. That will be the day of Sions glorious liberty, when all (within her liberties) bear the yoak of Chriſt, and none ſhall be unequally yoaked. This is the glory of Saints below; and this ſhall be perfect in the ſtate above. There ſhall be no ſtranger, no Canaanite in Heaven, none that are uncircumciſed, or unclean: This is the harmony of Heaven, none but Saints ſhall be admitted there; and all the Saints ſhall be of one mind, and mind the ſame things there. Mine eye (ſaith holy Job) ſhall behold him, and not another.

Thirdly, Mr. Calvin carries the ſence of theſe words to an Identity of the object to be ſeen, not to an Identity or conſimilitude of the ſubject ſeeing. I ſhall behold him, and not another; that is, I ſhall behold him, and none other; I ſhall behold God alone: As he is the adequate, ſo he ſhall be the ſole object of mine eye. He ſhall fill me with himſelf, I ſhall ſee God, and not look after, or take notice of any thing beſides him: Mine eye ſhall not wander upon other objects. From that reading we are taught,

> That, as in Heaven we ſhall ſee God; ſo we ſhall eye nothing but God.

We ſhall then indeed love God with all our heart, with all our ſoul, with all our might, yea, then we ſhall ſee him with all our eye, or contemplate him with all our underſtanding. Our whole man ſhall be fixed for ever on God, and God alone. Now the Saints have their eye upon God, they behold God by believing, but there are a thouſand objects that draw us away from God, and mingle with our ſight of him. We behold God, and other things too: We behold God; but we behold men, and many times, we have mens perſons in admiration. And whereas we ſhould have God only in admiration, we have the wiſdom and knowledge, the holineſs and graces of ſome men, the power and greatneſs of other men in admiration. But then nothing beſides the wiſdom and knowledge, the holineſs and grace, the power and greatneſs of God ſhall be admired and exalted. I ſhall behold him, and not another. Then God ſhall be all in all (1 Cor. 15. 28.) All ſhall behold the Face of God, and that ſhall be an eternal ſatisfying feaſt. Glorified Saints ſhall not go for one morſel to any creature, they ſhall have all in the viſion of God. It is the duty of faith to do ſo here; faith is taught to live upon God alone, to behold God, and none other, Chriſt, and none other; to behold Chriſt for juſtification, and none other, that we may be found in him, not having any righteouſneſs of our own. This is the leſſon that faith is taught here, to look to Chriſt, and to none other; and ſo to God, and to none other (Pſal. 73. 25.) David (or Aſaph) profeſſeth that ſuch was his faith; he ſpeaks as high of his faith here, as he could of his viſion in Heaven; Whom have I in heaven but thee? And whom have I in earth that I deſire beſides thee? David's faith beheld God, and none other, in Heaven; and comparatively to God, he valued none upon this earth. I have none in Heaven, neither Saint nor Angel; I have neither Abraham, Iſaac, nor Jacob, to rejoyce in; and upon earth I have none, neither Wife nor Child, neither friend nor ſervant, that I look to, or rejoyce in, in any the leaſt degree with God; Whom have I upon earth that I deſire beſides thee? David was a man deſervedly deſired by many, and he had doubtleſs duly bounded deſires to many on earth, yet his deſire of God had ſuch a holy exceſſiveneſs in it, that he might ſay, I deſire none but him. This is the buſineſs of faith to draw the ſoul purely to God. Saints are invited (Pſal. 48. 12, 13, 14.) to walk about Sion, as if we were to make it our happineſs to behold her ſtrength and beauty; Walk about Zion, go round about her, tell her Towers, mark her Bulwarks, conſider her Pallaces, that you may tell it to the Generations following. We are to buſie our ſelves, to imploy both ſenſe and underſtanding upon Zion, upon her Towers and Bulwarks, upon her Pallaces and Walls; not as if the Saints ſhould be taken up meerly in the admiration of the beauty and glory of Zions Ordinances and priviledges. The laſt verſe tells us, we muſt not ſtay in Zions Bulwarks and Pallaces, while it concludes thus; For this God is our God for ever and ever, he ſhall be our guide even unto death. He ſaith not, It is this Zion, theſe ſtrong Walls and Bulwarks, theſe goodly Pallaces, which I call you to look on as your joy and happineſs: No, this God, the God of Zion, you are chiefly to look on, and he is your chiefeſt happineſs: unleſs you ſee God in Zions Bulwarks, and Walls, and Pallaces, it is not worth your ſight. This God is our God. He quite ſlips the mention of Walls, Bulwarks, and Pallaces, and reſts in the mention of God. Thus we ſhould live upon God, not only in the great myſtery of Redemption and Juſtification: In reference to which Chriſt by the Prophet beſpeaks the whole attention of our ſouls (Iſa. 45. 22.) Look to me, and be ye ſaved; that is, to me alone; but alſo in all our enjoyments. This, I ſay, will be perfect in viſion above, we ſhall have, we ſhall enquire after nothing there but God, to be filled with, to all eternity.

As God hath none upon the earth that he deſires to look on, but only his Saints; he cares not for all the reſt of the World, he ſcarce can give them a look: To this man will I look (ſaith the Lord) even to him that is poor and of a contrite ſpirit, and trembleth at my word (Iſa. 66. 2.) As the Prophet ſaid when there were two great Kings before him, whereof one was very wicked; Were it not that I regard the preſence of Jehoſhaphat the King of Judah, I would not look towards thee, nor ſee thee (2 Kings 3. 14.) ſo the Lord beholds all the children of men from Heaven, yet he is ſaid to look only to the Saints; He beholds the great, the rich, but he looks only to the poor in ſpirit, and to them he looks, how poor ſoever they are in the fleſh. To him will I look that is poor, &c. As if he had ſaid, Mine eye paſſeth over others lightly, but where-ever I find a man of a contrite heart, I fix mine eye upon him, and rejoyce in ſuch a ſight. There is not one humble ſoul, but the eye of God is on him, and will continue upon him for ever. Now as God is taken up with viewing and beholding Saints; ſo the Saints are and ſhall for ever be taken up in beholding God. God ſees through all the perfections that are in us in a moment; God needs not look long on us, as if he were unſatisfied what we are; there is no excellency in us, but is open to him: But we can never draw out the perfections of God, how long ſoever we ſtay beholding him; ſome new glory will break forth to us, or rather the whole Glory of God (ſo far as the moſt perfect creature is able to take it in) will be everlaſtingly new to us.

All theſe conceptions about and interpretations of the Text, are pious and profitable; but that which I rather take to be the proper meaning of theſe words (Mine eye ſhall behold, and not another) is this, Job (as was touched in giving the Analyſis of theſe two Verſes) ſpeaks here of the Identity of his fleſh in the reſurrection: I ſhall ſee him, I ſhall ſee him for my ſelf, mine eyes ſhall behold him, and not another. That is, I, the man who now ſtand here before you, this ſame Job who now ſpeaketh; I the very ſame numerical perſon ſhall ſee God in this very fleſh, and with theſe eyes; they ſhall be indeed new dreſſed and dyed, trimmed, and made fit to come into the preſence of the great and glorious God; yet it ſhall be even this fleſh, and theſe eyes, in which I ſhall come into the preſence of God, and behold my Redeemer. I ſhall be altered from what I was, but I ſhall not be another then I was; I ſhall be changed into a better condition, but I ſhall not be changed into another perſon. My qualities ſhall have a perfective alteration, but I ſhall retain the ſame matter, and be the ſame man. A man raiſed glorious and immortal, is what he was, except his mortality; and hath no more then he had, except his glory. The Philoſopher acknowledgeth there may be a ſpecifical, but not a numerical reſtauration of Idem qui ſum; & non alienus. Jun.

Hiſce oculis ego ipſe, hac ipſa carne; &c.

Reſuſcitatus & glorioſus non erit alius à ſeipſo mortali & nondum glorioſo. Bold.

Egomet non in aliud quidpiam commutatus. Bez.

that which is corrupted. But Job's faith was clearer then Ariſtotle's reaſon; He believed a perſonal reſurrection, Mine eye ſhall behold, and not another; I ſhall not be changed into another perſon, whatever changes I undergo, I ſhall be Job ſtill, the ſame Job.

Quorūcunq; ſubſtantia eſt corruptibilis, reiteratur eadem ſpecie non eadem numero. Ariſt. lib. 2. de Gener.

Hence Obſerve, Every man at the reſurrection ſhall receive the ſame body that now he hath, and be the ſame man that now he is.

Reſurget cutis mea, quæ perpetitur hæc. Sept.

The Septuagint are full in this; and therefore they tranſlate by way of explication, My skin that hath ſuffered theſe things ſhall riſe again. We ſhall be in the reſurrection what we are now, except our infirmities and imperfections, our lameneſs and blindneſs, our ſores and ſickneſſes; all theſe ſhall be done away, but we ſhall remain; we ſhall looſe nothing but that which is not worth the keeping; we ſhall looſe nothing but that which to looſe will be a gain to us. Every man in the reſurrection ſhall be, though not in every conſideration, The WHAT he was, yet he ſhall be The WHO he was, both name and perſon. Chriſt will not looſe thoſe particular parts and members of the body in the duſt of the grave, which himſelf hath redeemed from the fire of Hell. There are two Pronouns, the one poſſeſſive, the other demonſtrative, in theſe words, which ſpeak much to this point; Mine eyes, and This, Job did as it were lay his hand upon his breaſt, and ſay, This fleſh, this body; as Chriſt (John 2. 19.) Deſtroy this Temple, and in three dayes I will raiſe it again. This very Temple, though deſtroyed, ſhall be built up again. The Apoſtle uſeth ſuch Identical expreſſions (1 Cor. 15. 53.) This corruptible muſt put on incorruption, and this mortal muſt put on immortality. This corruptible, and this mortal. He doth not only ſay corruptible ſhall put on incorruption, and mortal ſhall put on immortality, but this, and this, to ſhew the ſameneſs of it. It was a cuſtom in the primitive times (as ſome have obſerved) when they repeated that Article of the Faith, I believe the reſurrection of the fleſh, to point to their own body, and ſay, even of this fleſh; I believe the reſurrection of this fleſh, of this body.

Etiam hujus carnis.

One of the Ancients hath a large diſcourſe upon this ſubject, wherein he diſcovers ſome, who though they granted the ſoul immortal, yet denyed the reſurrection of the ſame body: Such were the Marcionites, Baſilidians, and Valentinians. Theſe, ſaith he, went halves with the Sadduces in their opinion. The Sadduces denyed Spirits. Hence (Acts 23. 6.) Paul perceiving that the Aſſembly was mixed of Sadduces and Phariſees (and wiſely conſidering, that if he did but mind them of their differences between themſelves, they would not ſo ſtrongly agree and combine againſt him) he made his advantage of it by profeſſing openly that he was a Phariſee. And the ſacred Hiſtorian tells us what the peculiar tenets of the Sadduces were (ver. 8.) The Sadduces ſay there is no reſurrection, neither Angel nor Spirit (they denyed both) but the Phariſees confeſs both. They held, that there were immortal ſpirits or ſouls united to the bodies of men, that thoſe bodies ſhould ariſe and be re-united to the ſoul. They alſo confeſſed that there were Angels, who are Spirits ſubſiſting properly without bodies. Now, as the Sadduces denyed the reſurrection of the body, ſo others denyed the reſurrection of the ſame body: Theſe he calleth ſharers or halvers in the Sadduces opinion: Though not ſo groſly as they, yet too too groſly departing from the faith. And indeed they who deny the reſurrection of the ſame body, do (by implication) altogether deny the reſurrection of the body. For if the ſame numerical body ſhould not riſe, it could not be called a reſurrection: Reſurrection is the riſing of that which fell, and the taking up of that which was before laid. So that it would be the creation of a new body, not the reſurrection of the old, if it were not the ſame body. And it conduceth much to the comfort of Saints, and may be the terror of wicked men, to keep cloſe to the faith of this Article. The Apoſtle ſeems to touch it (2 Cor. 5. 10.) We ſhall all appear before the judgment ſeat of Chriſt, that every one may receive the things he hath done in his body, according to what he hath done, whether it be good or bad. That hand which hath been doing for Chriſt, that very tongue which hath been ſpeaking for Chriſt, that whole body, which hath been moved and acted for Jeſus Chriſt, as an inſtrument of his glory, that ſhall receive the reward: As alſo that hand, that eye, that tongue, that foot which hath moved, and ſtirred againſt Chriſt, that alſo ſhall be puniſhed, and receive according to the evil committed in the body. Judgment would not be exact, unleſs as there hath been a co-partnerſhip between ſoul and body in their works, ſo alſo they ſhould be co-partners both in reward and puniſhment.

Tertullianus eos qui reditum animæ non ejuſdem corporis in reſurrectione admittebāt (Marcionitas, Barſilidianos, & Valentinianos) eleganter vocat partiarios ſententiæ Sadducæorum, ut qui dimidiā tantum agnoſcerent reſurrectionē. Tertul. de reſur. car. l. 2.

Si in alio corpore reſurrexero, jam ego non ero qui reſurgo; non enim reſurrectio dici poterit, ubi non reſurgit, quod cecidit. Greg.

Judicium integrum non erit, niſi ſicut fuit inter animū & carnem operarum ſocietas, ita etiam ſit mercedis aut ſupplicii. Tertull. perſequitur hoc Argumentum l. 2. de reſur. car. c. 14, 15, 16, 17.

If it be objected, How can the ſame numerical body riſe again, eſpecially in ſuch caſes, when thouſands of carkaſſes are mingled, and their duſt promiſcuouſly heaped together, or ſcattered abroad? When the bodies of men are devoured by wild beaſts, and digeſted into the ſubſtance of fowls and fiſhes, eſpecially when the bodies of men are eaten and concocted into the bodies of other men? How can theſe numerical bodies riſe? I anſwer, Firſt, If we will not reſt in matters of faith till we have a clear rational account of them, our faith may quickly be at a ſtand. I anſwer, Secondly, That as it is eaſie to make objections againſt faith; ſo faith hath one anſwer as eaſie as theſe objections. The Apoſtle gives it, and into that all ſuch doubts muſt be reſolved (Phil. 3. 20.) for having ſhewed the preſent condition or diſpoſition of the ſpirit of Saints in the former verſe, Our converſation is in Heaven, from whence alſo we look for the Saviour, the Lord Jeſus Chriſt. He preſently ſhews what the future condition of the Saints bodies ſhall be; Who ſhall change our vile bodies, that they may be faſhioned like unto his glorious body (Who is this, who puts this vile body into ſuch a glorious faſhion? Trouble not your ſelves for that, there is power enough to do it, It is done) according to the working whereby he is able to ſubdue all things to himſelf. This is an anſwer to the hardeſt objections, Chriſt can ſubdue all things, therefore thoſe which are hardeſt.

There is no difficulty to omnipotency.

You ask how the ſame body can be reſtored? I ask how the firſt body was created? Tell me how God created Heaven and Earth out of nothing? So that as the Apoſtle ſpeaks (Heb. 11. 3.) Things which are ſeen, were not made of things which do appear: How were theſe things done? If you argue by reaſon, you will be pos'd and gravell'd in theſe as well as in that other; yea, you will be at a wall, and not able to anſwer about that which is ordinary, and every day done, and ſhall continue to be done in all the Generations of men (Solomon puts the queſtion, Eccleſ. 11. 5.) Tell me how the bones grow in the womb of her that is with child: Can you tell how the Child is framed? Thou canſt not give an account of thy own production, nor find out the work of God in forming the body; How then canſt thou tell me? Or how can I tell thee the work of God in raiſing the body? Or how that ſcattered mingled duſt is ſevered and recollected to each proper body? I muſt ſay as David (Pſal. 139. 6.) Such knowledge is too wonderful for me, it is high, I cannot attain unto it; or as he at the fourteenth verſe of the ſame Pſalm concerning his making, We are fearfully and wondrouſly made: marvellous are thy works, O God. And muſt conclude about this point of the reſurrection as the Apoſtle begins about the creation (Heb. 11. 3.) As through faith we underſtand that the worlds were framed; ſo that the body of man ſhall be raiſed by the Word of God. Therefore as to the manner how ſuch things are done, we muſt have recourſe only to the Almighty power of God, to the All-powerful God, Who is able to ſubdue all things to himſelf. Mine eye ſhall behold, and not another,

Though my reins be conſumed within me.

I toucht upon the interpretation of this clauſe before, as it ſuits with that paſſage, verſ. 26. Though after my skin, worms deſtroy this body, and though my reins be conſumed within me. Though I be totally conſumed, skin without, and reins within, yet notwithſtanding, I believe, that I ſhall riſe and ſee God. Thus it was joyned with the firſt words of the twenty ſixth verſe, to ſhew the triumph of faith over all difficulties that lye in the way of the reſurrection. In this ſence I have done with it already; and I take that to be the meaning of our Tranſlators, Though my reins be conſumed within me.

Yet a little further to open theſe words, and to give you two or three things from them. The Vulgar tranſlation is extream wide from our reading, though the abetters of it labour to make it out from the Original; This hope is laid up in my boſom. Job having given a confeſſion of his faith in the Redeemer, and of the reſurrection, he (according to this tranſlation) concludes, This hope, or the hope of theſe things is laid up in my boſom. The word rendred within me in the Hebrew, ſignifies the boſom or cheſt (as we call it) of the body; and ſo, by a Metaphor, that wherein we lay up our ſecrets, our deſires, and our hopes; theſe are all laid up in our boſoms. Jeſus Chriſt is ſaid to come out of the boſom of his Father, where his ſecrets, his hid treaſures, are ſtored up.

Repoſita eſt hæc ſpes in ſinu meo. Vulg.

כלה ſignificat conſummari vel deficere, ut aliis modis ſic peculiariter deſiderio alicuius rei. Unde etiam uſurpatur pro deſiderare & diligere. Hinc dicuntur renes כליות quaſi concupiſcentes aut conſummantes, quia in illis videntur conſummari deſideria. Hinc vulgatus vertit, ſpes, quæ cum deſiderio rei ſperatæ conjuncta eſt.

We ſay, Though my reins be conſumed within me; they ſay, This hope is laid up in my boſom. But how come they by the word hope, and the word laid up? The anſwer is thus given; The ſame root which ſignifies the reins, ſignifies alſo to conſume, or to finiſh. And becauſe our deſires conſume us, (a man by ſtrong deſires is as it were waſted and ſpent:) Or becauſe a man endeavours by all means, to perfect and conſummate his deſires, by attaining and enjoying the thing deſired; therefore the word doth alſo ſignifie to conſume, or to conſummate as well as to deſire. And becauſe the reins are the ſeat of deſire, as Naturaliſts ſpeak, they are therefore in the Hebrew expreſt by deſire it ſelf. The ſame word is rendred both reins and deſire, becauſe the reins provoke deſire, or to the fulfilling of deſire (Pſal. 26. 2.) Try my heart and my reins; that is, Lord try my deſires what the things are which I would have. So (Pſal. 7. 9.) The Lord tryeth the heart, and the reins; that is, he finds out or diſcovers the moſt ſecret deſires of men; He knows what every one would have, as well as what every one doth; He knows what the motions of the reins are, as well as what the motion of our hands are. And hence becauſe what we hope for, we deſire and wait for, therefore the Text is thus read, This hope is laid up in my boſom. It's true, Saints treaſure up in their breaſts the hope of the reſurrection, the hope of the glory of the life to come: This they keep among their chiefeſt treaſures; this is the riches, the gold and ſilver which they lay up in their boſoms; whatſoever they loſe in the world, when they are ſtripped of all, yet they have a cheſt full of this treaſure. This hope is laid up in my boſom. Saints have their boſoms full of this hope, when ſtript of all. But becauſe this reading, though the ſence be pious, ſtrains too hard upon the Text, therefore I will not inſiſt upon it.

כלו
כליותי

Further, Whereas we ſay, Though my reins be conſumed within me. The word Though, is not in the Hebrew; there 'tis only My reins are conſumed. Now becauſe ordinarily in Scripture reins are taken for deſires, therefore this ſence is very clearly made out from it, that Job having ſpoken of the ſight he ſhould have of God, and the aſſurance of his own reſurrection, concludes with this expreſſion, My reins, or my deſires are ſpent; that is, I have nothing more to deſire, nothing more to wiſh and ſeek after then this, a bleſſed reſurrection, and the enjoyment of God for ever.

Deſideria, vota intima animæ cogitationes & affectiones conſũmata, ad finem & perfectionẽ deducta ſunt. Nihil habeo quod deſiderem.

Hence we may Note, All the deſires of Saints are conſummate, yea (I may ſay) conſumed in the hope of a happy reſurrection, and of the viſion and enjoyment of God.

Theſe are the conſummation, and the very utmoſt of their deſires: The ſeventy-ſecond Pſalm concludes thus, The Prayers of David the Son of Jeſſe are ended: Which ſome render, The deſires of David are conſumed and finiſhed; David had no more to deſire. Why doth he put ſuch a concluſion to that Pſalm, The prayers, or deſires of David are ended? That Pſalm is a Propheſie of Chriſt; David was ſetting faith on work upon the Kingdom of Chriſt; and when he had done this, he ſhuts up all, I have no more to deſire, here I make an end; here is the utmoſt of my joyes and comforts; not an end of conſumption, but an end of perfection, I can go no further; being come to Jeſus Chriſt, I have no more to ask.

Cum hic Pſalmus ſit de petendo & expectãdo Meſſia non ſolum eo Pſalmo ſuum pſalterium clauſit David, ſed etiã videtur fuiſſe ſumma ſuæ ſpei deſideriorum & precum.

So alſo David (2 Sam. 23.) having elegantly deſcribed the bleſſings which follow a righteous Government, ſhuts up thus (ver. 5.) Though my houſe be not ſo with God: That is, Though I have not ſuch a glorious poſterity, and ſuch an illuſtrious ſucceſſion upon my throne; or, as the former Verſe ſpeaks it, Though my houſe be not as the light of the morning when the Sun riſeth, even a morning without clouds; as the tender graſs ſpringing out of the earth by clear ſhining after rain; though my houſe be not ſo with God, yet he hath made with me an everlaſting Covenant, ordered in all things, and ſure, that is all my ſalvation, and all my deſire; here is the end of my reins: What though my houſe do not flouriſh, nor ſhine in that outward brightneſs that now it doth? Are theſe my chief hopes? Do theſe carry my ſtrongeſt deſires? No, my hope is laid up in the Covenant of life and peace, the good whereof is all my deſire: Doubtleſs David deſired that his Children ſhould proſper, and that the Throne of Iſrael might continue in his line, but comparatively with the ſpiritual benefits of the Covenant of God in Chriſt, and the enjoyment of him, thoſe were no deſires, and therefore referring to them he ſaith, this is all my deſire, or I have no more to deſire, My reins are conſumed within me.

Again, Some render thus; My reins are conſumed by reaſon of my deſire: As if he had ſaid, I have ſpoken of death, I have ſpoken of glory, of the viſion of God, and now my reins are conſumed, my very deſiring part is conſumed with deſire after theſe things: I deſire theſe things, ſo that I am conſumed with the deſire of them, and my deſiring faculty is ſpent with deſiring. Not only were all his deſires terminated in this, but his deſiring power was ſwallowed up in the purſuit of this deſire; he had ſuch ſtrong affections to God, that he was even ready to fall into a ſwoon, and faint away.

Hence Note, Saints upon the diſcovery of the glory of God, and the happineſs of the next life, are filled with longing deſires after thoſe enjoyments.

Lord, I have waited for thy ſalvation, ſaith Jacob (Gen. 49. 19.) Jacob ſpeaks this upon his death-bed, as that which he had been looking for all his life; as if that were the account of all his actions in the world, and the ſtory of his whole life; Lord, I have been waiting for thy ſalvation (Pſal. 119. 81.) My ſoul fainteth for thy ſalvation; that is, it fainteth with deſire after thy ſalvation; and (v. 127.) I have longed for thy ſalvation. All deſires are ſummed up in longing. There is a ſtrong deſire in Saints here to ſee God, and ſuch as makes them faint, even to ſee and enjoy him in his Ordinances. (Pſal. 27. 4.) One thing have I deſired of the Lord, and that I will ſeek after (that is, never give over ſeeking after till I reach and attain it) to behold the beauty of the Lord, and enquire in his Temple. Again (Pſal. 42. 1, 2.) As the Hart panteth after the water-brooks, ſo my heart panteth after God: When ſhall I come and appear before God? That is, When ſhall I behold and enjoy him in theſe lower Heavens, his ſpiritual Diſpenſations and Ordinances. Now if there be ſo great and ſo longing a deſire to ſee the Lord through theſe mediums, or in theſe glaſſes, how much more to ſee him immediately and face to face? And if that be The one thing, the only thing which David deſired, if all his deſires were ſummed up in that here, how much more in Heaven, how will that deſire ſwallow all our deſires in glory? And indeed we could not abide in Glory with any other deſire but that. The Saints are deſcribed in their preſent ſtate by this Periphraſis, Such as love the appearing of Chriſt; as if they loved nothing elſe. What then will Chriſt be to them when he ſhall appear? They who love Chriſt, whom they have not ſeen, how ſhall they love Chriſt when they ſee him!

We may ſpeak of the precious things of the Goſpel, and of the glorious enjoyments of Chriſt to carnal hearts, and they never deſire them; they are ſo far from having their reins conſumed in the hot love of them, that their ſpleen is only ſtirred againſt them.

From the whole context, conſider upon what ſubject Job falls when himſelf was fallen into that ſad condition; he was fallen into the depth and gulf of worldly miſery, and outward affliction, the hand of God was heavy upon him; What was his reſolve, whither doth he betake himſelf? He meditates the reſurrection; he meditates the eſtate of Saints after this life, and this bears up his ſpirit in the midſt of all the afflictions with which he was burdened in this life.

Hence Obſerve, Faith in the reſurrection to life encourageth us in or againſt all the troubles and afflictions of this life.

As Saints find preſent ſupport and ſtrength in affliction, by what Chriſt every day adminiſters and gives forth unto them; ſo by what they hope and are aſſured he will give and be unto them in that great day. The hope of future good is a preſent comfort. (2 Cor. 4. 17.) For this cauſe we faint not; What cauſe was that? Becauſe we have this hope, this faith (ver. 14.) That he which raiſed up the Lord Jeſus, ſhall raiſe us up alſo by Jeſus, and ſhall preſent us with you. Expectations from Chriſt are as the cordials which keep us from fainting under our burthens, and revive us in the ſorrows of death it ſelf. The faith of Chriſt in the reſurrection of his own body to life, is ſpoken of prophetically, as that which bare up his ſpirit in the hour of death (Pſal. 16. 9, 10.) Thou wilt not leave my ſoul in hell, nor ſuffer thy holy One to ſee corruption. Now as that was Chriſts ſupport in his ſorrows, and ſufferings, that he ſhould not be left in the grave, that he ſhould not ſee corruption: So it is the ſupport of Saints, that though they ſee, yet they ſhall not for ever lye under the power of corruption. (Pſal. 17. 15. Pſal. 49. 15.) Thou wilt redeem me from the power of the grave. The Apoſtle makes his Doctrine the Canon of Conſolation (1 Theſ. 4. 18.) Comfort one another with theſe words: What words were theſe? All thoſe words, beginning at the thirteenth Verſe to the end of the Chapter: I would not have you to be ignorant brethren, concerning them which are aſleep (he means dead) that ye ſorrow not even as others that have no hope: for if we believe that Jeſus dyed and roſe again, even ſo them alſo which ſleep in Jeſus, will God bring with him, &c. The Author to the Hebrews is abundant in teſtifying how the Jewiſh Martyrs comforted themſelves with this thing in the midſt of thoſe various deaths with which they were encompaſſed. (Heb. 11. 35.) They did not accept of deliverance, that they might receive a better reſurrection. Why it is called a better reſurrection was ſhewed in opening the fourteenth Verſe of the fourteenth Chapter of this Book. The hope of the reſurrection was a ground of ſuch ſtrong conſolation to the Saints of former times, that it was called expreſly, The Conſolation. We may collect this from the diſcourſe which Chriſt was pleaſed to maintain with Martha concerning the death of her Brother Lazarus, whom Jeſus loved. For whereas Chriſt tells her (John 11. 23.) Thy Brother ſhall riſe again. Martha ſaith, I know he ſhall riſe in the reſurrection at the laſt day: What the Greek calleth The Reſurrection, the Syriack Paraphraſe calls The Conſolation, reading it thus, I know that he ſhall riſe again in the conſolation. What ſtrong conſolation did the Believers of thoſe Ages draw from their aſſurance of a reſurrection, ſeeing reſurrection and conſolation were terms equivalent? When this was but named, the other was underſtood; we have now the firſt-fruits of conſolation, but our harveſt will not be, till our dead bodies, which the Apoſtle compares to ſeed ſown, ſpring out of the earth again.

I might further ſhew, that the reſurrection is not only the conſolation of Saints, but the conſolation of the whole creation: The Apoſtle ſpeaks of it under that notion (Rom. 8. 19, 22.) For the earneſt expectation of the creature waiteth for the manifeſtation of the Sons of God. And again, The whole creation (not only living, but ſenſleſs creatures, theſe muſt be taken in to make up the whole creation) groaneth, and travelleth in pain until now. But what would the creature have? It waiteth for the manifeſtation of the ſons of God, and to be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God. We are now the Sons of God (ſaith the Apoſtle John, 1 Epiſt. 3. 2.) and it doth not yet appear what we ſhall be. But we know, that when he ſhall appear, we ſhall be like him: At the appearance of Chriſt, the Son of God by nature, his Adopted ſons ſhall appear what they are, there will be a glorious manifeſtation of them when Chriſt ſhall appear in glory. This glory (which will be compleat at the reſurrection) the whole creation now groaning waiteth for, being ſubjected under hope to participate (each creature according to its capacity) in the glory of it. Now if all creatures are ſuſtained by this hope, much more man, who is chiefly concerned in it. Job is a great example of it, who upon his ſorrowful and ſick bed raiſed his ſoul into conſolation, by thoughts of the reſurrection. His friends preſſed him with hopes and promiſes of a temporal reſurrection, if he did repent: but he diſclaimed the hope of ſuch a reſurrection, or was not much affected with it, he little minded a reſurrection to temporal glory; but he had an aſſurance of that which ſerved his turn a thouſand times better, making him even then, if not joyful, yet patient under all his tribulations. I ſhall ſee God for my ſelf, and not another, though my reins be conſumed within me.

Job having thus declared his faith, makes an application of all particularly to his Friends in the two laſt verſes; But ye ſhould ſay, why perſecute we him? &c.

VERS. 28, 29.

But ye ſhould ſay, why perſecute we him, ſeeing the root of the matter is found in me?

Be ye afraid of the ſword: for wrath bringeth the puniſhment of the ſword, that ye may know there is a judgment.

THus Job concludes, and his concluſion conſiſts of two parts.

Whereof the firſt is a direction.

The ſecond a commination.

He gives direction (ver. 28.) where he tells his Friends their duty, or what reſolutions became them concerning him; Ye ſhould ſay, why perſecute we him? He ſubjoyns a reaſon, or the ground of that direction, Seeing the root of the matter is found in me?

The commination or threat is laid down (ver. 29.) Be ye afraid of the ſword. While he bids them be afraid of the ſword, he fore-warns them that the ſword is coming, and that the judgment of God was ready to overtake, and fall upon them, if they ſtill perſiſted in their hard thoughts, and uncharitable cenſures of him.

Here alſo he ſubjoyns a reaſon or ground of this commination; For wrath bringeth the puniſhment of the ſword. I warn you of the ſword, and I ſee the reaſon why; wrath ſeems to awaken, and who knows what work it may make among you ere long: This I know from many Authorities and experiences, That, Wrath bringeth the puniſhment of the ſword, that ye may know that there is a Judgment.

Firſt, Conſider the direction.

Verſe 28. But ye ſhould ſay, why perſecute we him?

Ye ſhould ſay.] The Hebrew is rendred three wayes.

Firſt thus, For, you will ſay, as implying a future ground, or occaſion, yea, an urgent neceſſity, which they ſhould ſee and be convinced of at laſt, to ſay, Why perſecute we him?

Secondly thus, Wherefore do ye ſay? Intimating their preſent action, or aſſertion.

Thirdly, We render it, Ye ſhould ſay; at once ſhewing their duty, and convincing their neglect of it. As if he had ſaid, O my friends, ye ought to ſay, or it is beſt for you to ſay thus; look to your ſelves, this is your duty to ſay, why perſecute we him? So the Prophet (Mal. 1. 6.) A ſon honoureth his father; the meaning is, a ſon ought to honour his father: There are many ſons who diſhonour their fathers; but it becomes every ſon to honour and obey, or by obeying to honour his father. Thus here, For you ſay; that is, you ſhould ſay, or you ought to ſay, בו תאמרו Potentiale eſt dicere debueratis, vel veſtrum erat dicere. Merc.

Why [perſecute] we him?] We had this word (ver. 22.) Why do ye perſecute me as God, and are not ſatisfied with my fleſh? Here he puts it to them again, Ye ſhould ſay, why perſecute we him?

The word which we tranſlate to perſecute, is a Metaphor taken from wild beaſts, or ravenous birds, whoſe hunger or cruelty makes them ſwift and fierce to overtake, and ſo to ſatiate themſelves with their prey. The Greek Tranſlators of the old Teſtament uſually render it by that word which is uſed in the Greek of the new Teſtament, to expreſs the vexation of the Saints or Goſpel-profeſſors by the World, for the Faith of Chriſt, and the teſtimony of a good Conſcience. And becauſe this word bears in it the ſence of a moſt earneſt and vehement purſuit, therefore when the Spirit of God would put Saints upon the ſtrongeſt, and moſt vehement purſuit of any grace, or duty, he uſeth this word, and exhorts them even to perſecute it (1 Cor. 14. 1.) Follow after charity; Perſecute charity; that is, be be as eager after charity as a cruel man is eager to perſecute him that is innocent and godly (Heb. 12. 14.) Follow peace with all men, and holineſs: It is this word: As it is the ſtrongeſt evidence of the ſinfulneſs of any man to perſecute thoſe perſons who have received grace; ſo it is an evidence of pureſt holineſs to perſecute or earneſtly to purſue the higheſt attainments of grace. There is nothing of freer gift then Grace, and the Kingdom of Heaven; yet the Kingdom of God delights to ſuffer violence, and then 'tis beſt when the violent take it by force. The Grace of God to man is free; yet man ſhould be fierce in following the Grace of God. The love of good hath made as hot perſecutions as ever wrath hath made againſt it. But to the Text.

רדף Inſecutus, proſecutus, perſecutus; διώκω.

Why perſecute we him?] This word may be conſidered two wayes. There is a perſecution in a ſtrict ſence; and a perſecution in a large ſence. I conceive that we are not here to take perſecution in a ſtrict ſence, as if Job did imagine his Friends were (as we may ſay) bloody Bonner's, or Nero's, or Diocleſian's, that they did oppoſe and vex him directly (or eo nomine) for truth and righteouſneſs ſake, or that in oppoſing him, they oppoſed or ſuppreſſed their own light: But here perſecution is taken in a large ſence, for unfriendly dealing, or for ſuch unkind carriages as are very wide from and unſuitable to thoſe who profeſs love. There is a threefold perſecution, Firſt, A mental perſecution, when the ſpirit of a man riſeth up, and oppoſeth another. Secondly, There is a verbal perſecution, when men give hard words, and uncharitable cenſures. Thirdly, There is a real perſecution (there is real perſecution in both the former, as real is oppoſed to imaginary) or a perſecution by the hand; ſuch as is the dragging of innocent perſons before the Tribunal of the Magiſtrates: As Chriſt foretells his Diſciples, Ye ſhall be brought before Governours and Kings for my Names ſake (Matth. 10. 18.) Here we are to take perſecution in the ſecond ſignification. Job's Friends did not hate him, they thought indeed that he had done very wickedly, and that he was very wicked, they concluded that he was leavened with hypocriſie; but I cannot conceive that they were leavened with malice againſt him, nor was theirs perſecution in the third ſence; they did not hale him before the Magiſtrate, nor bring him to judgment and tryal. But it was perſecution of the middle rank, hard language, and unfriendly cenſures. Job was under the perſecution of the tongue, he complained of that (Chap. 12. 4.) I am as one mocked of his neighbour. And again (Chap. 17. 2.) Are there not mockers with me? Mocking is called perſecution (Gal. 4. 29.) He that was born after the fleſh, perſecuted him that was born after the ſpirit. Iſhmael perſecuted Iſaac with ſcornful language, he mocked him (Gen. 21. 9.) Such was Job's perſecution, and he bids his Friends give him any reaſon if they could, why they perſecuted him thus. But ye ſhould ſay, why perſecute we him? There are three or four readings of the words as joyned together.

First, Some thus, Becauſe you will ſay, who perſecutes him? As if he had ſaid, You put it off from your ſelves, you think you do not perſecute me at all, ye ſay it is the hand of God on me, not yours; we do not touch you, God hath, and Satan hath by his permiſſion. You will ſay, who perſecutes him? Is it we that have done it? Is not the hand of God on you? Doth not that lead us to ſpeak thus concerning you, and to judge thus of you? Why do you ſay that we perſecute you? It is God who knows very well what you deſerve, and now renders to you according to your deſervings? It is he (not we) that perſecuteth you.

Quia dicetis, quis perſecutus eſt eum? i. e. quis perſecutus eſt eum niſi Deus qui omnia merita novit? Cajet.

Secondly, Thus, For I truſt you will ſay, why perſecute we him? As if he had ſaid, I have therefore made this profeſſion; becauſe, I hope, that when you have once heard it, you will deal more gently, favourably, and friendly with me, then hitherto you have done; you will ſay, why perſecute we this man? You will begin to queſtion your ſelves for what you have done, and take up better counſels and reſolves for the future. This is a proper ſence of the words, and comes near that intended in our tranſlation.

Nam confido dicetis, quid perſequimur illum? Coc.

Thirdly, The vulgar Latine renders, Wherefore do ye now ſay, let us perſecute him? This tranſlation makes it a reproof of their purpoſe to oppoſe him, or a deſcription of his Friends, ſtill conſpiring to perſecute him. As if Job had heard them combining together, and encouraging one another againſt him; as ſome are expreſſed, againſt whom David prayeth (Pſal. 64.) Hide me from the ſecret counſel of the wicked (ver. 2.) Who whet their tongue lik[illegible] ſword, &c. (ver. 3.) They encourage themſelves in an evil matter; they commune of laying ſnares privily (Ver. 5.) They ſearch out iniquities, they accompliſh a diligent ſearch: both the inward thought of every one of them, and the heart is deep (v. 6.) Solomon warns his ſon not to hearken when ſuch ſollicite (Prov. 1. 10.) If ſinners entice thee, conſent thou not; if they ſay, Come, let us lay wait for blood. Job according to this tranſlation is here conceived reproving and chiding his Friends for ſuch a combination, Wherefore do ye ſay, let us perſecute him?

Quare ergo nunc dicitis, perſequamur eũ. Vulg.

Fourthly, Our Tranſlation gives the words the ſence of an Exhortation, either to conſider why they had already oppoſed him, or to repent of that oppoſition, Ye ſhould ſay; that is, it is your duty, I exhort or adviſe you to ſay, Why do we perſecute him? It is but time that you ſhould now recollect your ſelves, and be in a better mind, that your hearts ſhould ſmite you for what you have done, and that you ſhould put this queſtion home to your own ſouls, Why have we thus far troubled him? Or why ſhould we trouble him any further?

Æquũ jam eſſet ut in cordibus veſtris compungeremini, dicentes, quare perſequimur virum probũ, & rectè de deo, deque divinis ſentientem? Rab. Lev.

Some joyn this verſe with the former, thus, My grief and ſorrow are ſo great, my pain is ſo painful, that my very reins are conſumed within me; ſo that unleſs you had put off all humanity, unleſs your compaſſions were totally conſumed in you, you would have ſaid before this time, Why do we perſecute a dry leaf? Why do we perſecute a carkaſs, a dead man, a man whoſe reins are conſumed within him. From the third of thoſe readings, which reproveth their perſevering or reſolvedneſs to perſevere in the way they were in.

Obſerve, To adviſe and reſolve upon any ſinful way, is a high aggravation of ſin.

It is bad enough to ſin for want of advice; but to ſin adviſedly is far worſe. To fail or ſin is common to men, yea, even to the beſt of men; but to reſolve to ſin, or to be reſolute in ſinning, is proper to the Devil, and the character of the worſt of men. I have elſewhere in this Book had occaſion to raiſe Obſervations of near aſſinity with this, and therefore I only touch it here.

From our reading, But you ſhould ſay, why perſecute we him? Job ſeems to tax his Friends with raſhneſs and inconſiderateneſs; You ſhould ſay; but you have not, you have not yet examined your own hearts, nor my condition as you ought.

Hence Obſerve, That as ſome ſpeak they know not what, ſo others do they know not why; their actions out-run their reaſon, and they are more buſie then wiſe.

Chriſt was perſecuted to the higheſt, he was perſecuted to death: But had his enemies ſaid, Why do we perſecute him? had they looked to their ground? Chriſt (Luke 23. 34.) makes their inadvertency the ground of his prayer for them; Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do. They have not ſaid, Why perſecute we him? They were reſolved, but not adviſed; Crucifie him, crucifie him; down with him, down with him: It muſt be ſo; but no true cauſe was ſhewed why it ſhould be ſo. Many may ſay of their ſinful wayes according to the letter of the Apoſtle (Rom. 7. 15.) What we do we know not. Paul ſpeaks of himſelf as over-powered by corruption, What I do I know not; we tranſlate, That which I do I allow not. Paul ſpeaketh not of his ſins of ignorance, or that he had done what was indeed ſinful, not knowing, or not being convinced that it was a ſin; and therefore we do not tranſlate, I know not, as if Paul had been in the dark about his own doings; but, That I do I allow not; though I cannot but know that I have done ſinfully, yet I do not favour or take part with any ſin that I have done. When a godly man ſins, he alwayes doth the evil which he allows not: but when ignorant men ſin, they do the evil which they know not; and wicked men do the evil which they have no mind to know, they cannot endure to conſider (as to ſinfulneſs) either what they are doing, or what they have done. The fool offers a ſacrifice, and Solomon would not have true worſhippers like him; Keep thy foot when thou goeſt into the Houſe of God, and be more ready to hear then to offer the ſacrifice of fools, for they conſider not that they do evil (Eccleſ. 5.1.). Some by the ſupplement of an adverſative particle, render the Text thus, They know not but to do evil. They do evil while they do good, even while they worſhip God, and they cannot do otherwiſe. Our rendring is clearer, when they do evil they conſider it not, they care not to be acquainted with the evil which they have done, or they act at a venture, whether good or whether evil, fall back or fall edge, never troubles them. Ignorant perſons are ſuch fools, that they know not when they do evil; wicked men are ſuch fools, that they never conſider or regard it when they have done evil.

Secondly, Obſerve, Before we do any thing we ſhould take account of our ſelves why we do it.

There are two things we ſhould take account of our ſelves about before we ſet upon any action. Firſt, For what end we do it? Secondly, By what rule we do it? Theſe two Queſtions we ſhould put before all our actings: What is my deſign? What is my warrant? For according to the deſign, the heart and hand too are ordered in every undertaking. Singleneſs of eye, makes all our wayes ſingle. Yet we muſt look as well to our warrant, as to our deſign; to our rule, as well as well as to our end. The Apoſtle bids us walk circumſpectly (Epheſ. 5. 15.) No man can walk circumſpectly, unleſs he take notice of his ground, and ſee where he treads. To walk circumſpectly, is to walk looking round about us. And unleſs we do ſo, we ſhall ſoon looſe our way, and miſs our end. We have a proverbial ſpeech, Look before you leap; that is, conſider before you act; A fools bolt is ſoon ſhot; he ſhoots before he ſees his mark, and before he takes his aim; he neither obſerves the art of ſhooting, nor the mark at which he ſhoots. And becauſe his bolt is ſoon ſhot, therefore his mark is never hit. To queſtion our ſelves about what we do, is a great means to preſerve our ſelves from doing amiſs: And they moſt uſually do well, who fear they may do ill. The Prophet gives this as the reaſon why many went on ſo groſly and fearleſly in idolatrous wayes (Iſa. 44. 19,20.) None conſidereth in his heart, neither is there knowledge nor underſtanding to ſay, I have burnt part of it in the fire, &c. therefore it is, that he feedeth of aſhes; a deceived heart hath turned him aſide, that he cannot deliver his ſoul, nor ſay, Is there not a lye in my right hand? He is not able to put this thing to himſelf, or to queſtion his heart whether he be right or wrong; he had never fed upon aſhes had he but conſidered, that he had burnt part of his Idol in the fire. That man may do any thing ſooner then that which is right and lawful, who never enquireth whether that be right or wrong, lawful or unlawful, which he doth: He cannot deliver his ſoul from the groſſeſt Idolatry, from worſhipping wood and ſtone, the works of his own hands, while he cannot queſtion, Is there not a lye in my right hand? Am I not out of the way? Am I not deceived? If this man would but have asked himſelf the queſtion, it is probable he might have ſeen or diſcovered the lye in his right hand: But he had not a heart to ſay this, and ſo his heart was deceived. An unconſidering perſon may ſoon be deceived: And the reaſon why he is not alwayes deceived (if he be not) is only this, becauſe he is not alwayes tempted by deceivers. And hence it is that they, who love errors in opinion, or ſinful wayes in practice, do not love to make doubts, or to raiſe queſtions concerning either their practices or opinions. As the way to faſten our ſelves upon duty, is to take up a reſolution to do it, yea, to perſevere in doing it; and where there is no reſolving about what we do, there is nothing but unſetledneſs in doing it; as the Prophet toucheth (Jer. 5. 24.). This people hath a revolting back-ſliding heart: They are altogether unfixed, you know not where to have them, or what they will be at. What is the reaſon? Neither ſay they in their hearts, let us now fear the Lord our God, that gives us rain, the former, and the latter rain in ſeaſon. This was the reaſon why they revolted; they did not ſo much as ſay in their hearts, or pitch upon this thing, Let us fear the Lord. Now as men are unſetled in good, becauſe they do not reſolve to do this or that which is good; ſo they fall into evil, becauſe they do not queſtion, Why do I do this? Or is this which I do good or evil? They do not ſo much as ſay, Is there not a lye in my right hand? They ask no queſtion for Conſcience ſake (as in ſome caſes the Apoſtle adviſeth we ſhould not) and therefore they act ſo much againſt Conſcience.

Thirdly, The words may have reference as well to what had been done, as to what they intended ſtill to do, Ye ſhould ſay, why perſecute we him? That is, Why have we perſecuted him? He may ſpeak of an acted or antecedent, as well as of a ſubſequent or intended perſecution.

Hence Note, To queſtion our ſelves for what we have done, is an excellent means to bring us to repentance, and to break our hearts for the evil we have done.

What have I done? Is the queſtion of repentance. The Prophet Jeremy (Chap. 8. 6.) brings in the Lord taxing that people for their impenitency, and layes all upon this, I hearkened, and heard, but they ſpake not aright, no man repented of his wickedneſs, ſaying, What have I done? Every one turned to his courſe, as the horſe ruſheth into the battel: They ſinned reſolutely, becauſe they never queſtioned themſelves about their ſin. We can never return, till we ſtop; nor recover out of an evil way, till we check in it. This Queſtion is as it were the ſtop, the check, or arreſt of the ſoul, What have I done? We cannot ſay to the Lord as Paul (Acts 9. 6.) Lord, what wilt thou have me to do? Till we have firſt ſaid to our ſelves, What have we done? This ſhews us the very genius of repentance, or of a repenting perſon, he is a man queſtioning what, or calling himſelf to a reckoning for what he hath done. Repentance is the review of our lives, and makes the ſoul anſwer to every particular, What haſt thou done?

Further, If we look to this queſtioning in reference to the particular act of perſecution; you ſhould ſay, Why perſecute we him?

Hence Note, Fourthly, We ſhould be ſure of a good ground before we oppoſe or perſecute others.

We ſhould queſtion our ſelves in any ordinary thing we do, even in what we do for a friend we ſhould queſtion, Do I well in helping him? Much more when we oppoſe any man, ſhould we ſay, Why perſecute we him? What! perſecute a man hand over head, oppoſe him without ground? It is hard to reprove a brother duly, much more to oppoſe him duly. We ſhould examine our love, much more our anger. Be angry, and ſin not, is the Apoſtles rule (Eph. 4. 26.) which implyes that it is no eaſie matter to be angry and not to ſin. If we had a hundred eyes, and as many tongues, 'tis but need we ſhould imploy them all to look about us, and enquire whether we are right or wrong, when we oppoſe or perſecute a Brother. Where it is ſo eaſie for us to do wrong, we ſhould conſider and conſider, whether what we do be right.

Fifthly, Note, To perſecute or oppoſe another without juſt cauſe, is very ſinful.

'Tis ſinful not to ſhew kindneſs, and expreſs love to thoſe who deſerve it; how ſinful then is it to expreſs unkindneſs and wrath towards thoſe who deſerve it not? It is a great ſin to hold an error, or not to do good; then how great a ſin is it to oppoſe another for doing good, or for holding the truth. To perſecute him that walketh in holineſs, or holds the truth, is to perſecute Chriſt himſelf, who is The Holy One and the True. Perſecution oppoſeth him whom all ſhould adore, even Jeſus Chriſt. Saul, Saul, why perſecuteſt thou me? Chriſt was perſecuted in perſon while he was on earth, and he is perſecuted in his members and ſervants now he is in Heaven. As to ſuffer perſecution for righteouſneſs ſake, is one of the higheſt acts of grace: So to perſecute the righteous, is one of the higheſt acts of wickedneſs, ſeeing this oppoſeth not only the Saints, but him, who is infinitely better and more excellent, then all the Saints.

The Apoſtle (Rom. 1. 32.) deſcribing the extream ſinfulneſs of the Gentiles, gives it thus, They knowing the judgment of God, that they that commit ſuch things are worthy of death, not only do the ſame, but have pleaſure in them that do it. He makes it the blackeſt part of their ſinfulneſs, that they had pleaſure in thoſe that did evil. On the other ſide, we may ſay it is the blackeſt part of ſin to oppoſe thoſe that do good? not only not to have pleaſure in them that do good, but to be vexed at and vex them that do it, is the do it, is the fulleſt diſcovery of an evil heart. Moſt wicked men take pleaſure in thoſe that do wickedly, but they are moſt wicked who reſiſt thoſe that do good. As to love truth and goodneſs is better then to know them; ſo to hate truth or goodneſs is far worſe, then to be ignorant of, or to neglect them.

fulleſt

Sixthly, Job's Friends thought they were upon their duty; or that they were employed in a great ſervice for God, while they dealt thus rigidly with this diſtreſſed man.

Hence Note, Some perſecute others, and yet think they do God and man good ſervice.

There are two ſorts of perſecutors. Firſt, Such as oppoſe Conſcience; or perſecute others for their Conſcience ſake. Secondly, Such as perſecute others for their own Conſcience ſake; they do (in their own opinion) conſcientiouſly: They think that a duty, which upon tryal will be found their ſin. They do not perſecute, as the bloody Heathens did, to ſatisfie their cruel luſts; or as ſome bloody Chriſtians (in name) have done, and do, oppoſing the Truth againſt their light: But they do it according to their light. There are very few, but as they perſecute the Conſciences of others; ſo they perſecute upon the dictate of their own Conſcience; and think they have done a work acceptable to God, while they thus reject and reprobate their Brethren; yea, they glory in it, and put it among their moſt meritorious acts, as having deſigned the glory of God, and being carried on with zeal (ſuch as it is) for his glory. Theſe are deſcribed by the Prophet (Iſa. 66. 5.) Your brethren that caſt you out for my Name ſake (as there are many perſecuting enemies, ſo there are ſome brethren-perſecuters) Your brethren that caſt you out for my Name ſake, ſaid, Let the Lord be glorified. This was their aim, they did it to glorifie God: Thus they licked themſelves whole, when they wounded their brethren; they did no offence, but ſervice. So (Jer. 50. 7.) All they that found them have devoured them, and their adverſaries ſay, we offend not, becauſe they have ſinn'd againſt the Lord, the habitation of Juſtice, even the Lord the hope of their fathers. Chriſt is expreſs in this point (John 16. 2.) The time cometh, that whoſoever killeth you will think that he doth God ſervice. This was once Paul's caſe (Acts 26. 9.) I verily thought that I ought to do many things againſt the Name of Jeſus; I was bound in Conſcience, I could not ſuffer theſe men, and theſe wayes in peace, unleſs I would break my own peace. He ſpeaks as if his own Conſcience would have troubled him, unleſs he had troubled others for that which was, indeed, their Conſcience. Job's Friends were far enough from owning the name or title of perſecuters, and yet they did the thing, and ſpake the words which were very ſwords. Many love to perſecute; but all hate to be called perſecuters. As many hate vertue and goodneſs, who yet are proud to be called good and vertuous: So many love evil acts, which they diſdain to be denominated by. Job adviſeth his Friends, who eſteemed themſelves nothing leſs then perſecuters, to beſpeak their own ſouls, and ſay, Why perſecute we him,

Seeing the root of the matter is found in me?

Job was aſſured (it ſeems) that the root of the matter was found in him; but it is not eaſie to find what this root of the matter was in Job. In general, by root we are to underſtand the bottom, baſis, or foundation, that which gave him eſtabliſhment, as the root doth to the tree. The Hebrew is, The root of the word. It is ordinary in Scripture to put word for thing, or matter. The root of the word is the root of the thing in controverſie between Job and his Friends (Eccleſ. 12. 13.) Hear the concluſion of the whole matter, or, the end of the word, Fear God, and keep his Commandments. There is nothing impoſſible to God; the Text is, There is no word impoſſible to God; that is, he can do whatſoever pleaſeth him. This root of the matter, or root of the word, is (as ſome ſay) the bottom of the buſineſs, the ſtate of the cauſe, or the cauſe ſtated. The Civil Lawyers call, the cauſe, the thing. And the Orator uſeth an expreſſion very near this of Job, where he titles the main matter in queſtion, the root of the queſtion, upon which all dependeth. What root he intendeth, we ſhall conſider further.

שרש דבר Radix verbi, verbum pro re ſenſu quo apud Juriſconſultos cauſa dicitur res. Bold. Radix verbi nihil aliud eſt quam fundamentū cauſæ ſeu rei; Cicero vocat ſtirpem queſtionis. Diſſero etiam (inquit) partem quæ eſt quaſi ſtirps quæſtionis. Cic. lib 4. de Finibus.

The Vulgar renders the whole Verſe thus; Wherefore do ye now ſay, let us perſecute him, and, we ſhall find the root of the matter againſt him? The root of the matter, according to that tranſlation, is taken two wayes.

Radicem verbi inveniamus contra eum. Vulg.

Firſt, For ſome word which Job might unwarily let fall, upon which they would ground a further accuſation, or charge upon him, or juſtifie the charge and accuſation already brought againſt him. As if they had ſaid, Let us follow him cloſe, and he will quickly ſpeak ſomewhat to the diſadvantage of his own cauſe. It is indeed the uſual policy of perſecutors to ſeek matter againſt another, when none appears: And to provoke a man to ſpeak, till he ſpeak awry, or give them an occaſion to enſnare him in his ſpeech. Uſually in the multitude of words there is no want of error; and he that ſpeaks a multitude of words (as 'tis poſſible) without error, may ſoon have ſome of them erroneouſly interpreted. Perſecutors are greedy to hunt for and find out faults; they will rake in every channel, and never give over interrogating and ſifting, till ſomewhat drop, or fall, that at leaſt may bear ſome colour of offence. They make a man an offender for a word, ſaith the Prophet (Iſa. 29. 21.) A good man may quickly offend in a word; but it is the ſign and the work of an evil man, to make a man an offender for a word; eſpecially for a right, though a ſharp word; of ſuch the Prophet ſpeaks, as appears in the next clauſe; They lay a ſnare for him that reproveth in the gate: They get a word from him, and make that matter of offence. That is alſo the meaning of the Prophet when he ſaith, All my familiars watched for my halting. They would be glad to ſee him halt, that they might accuſe him for his halting. It is a duty to reprove him that halteth, that is, him that ſinneth; and it is a greater duty to watch over another to keep him from halting. But it is a wickedneſs to watch for a mans halting, in hope that he will halt, and that we may have an occaſion or ground to reprove him; ſuch reproofs proceed not from a ſpirit of love, but of revenge, as the Prophet diſcovers them; Peradventure he will be inticed (into ſome ſin or ſnare) and we ſhall prevail againſt him, and we ſhall take revenge on him. They were glad to ſee him halt, that they might ſay ſomewhat againſt him for halting. This was the diſpoſition of the perſecuting Phariſees (Matth. 22. 16.) They ſent ſome to entangle Chriſt in his talk. They had no matter ready, but they ſought it. Another Goſpel ſaith (Mark 12. 13.) They ſent certain Phariſees to catch him in his words: Chriſt ſpake the word, that he might catch men to ſave them: Theſe men laboured to catch Chriſt in his words, that they might accuſe and deſtroy him. This ſome would faſten upon Job's Friends, but I forbear them.

Qui malo ſtudio benè prolata audiunt, quid aliud quam contra aliquem radicē verbi quærunt ex qua loquendi originem ſumant & ramos pravæ loquacitatis in accuſatione dilatent. Greg.

Secondly, The root of the matter according to that reading is, Some ſecret ſin; let us follow him hard, let us but continue with him in diſpute, and we ſhall make him diſcover his boſom and heart at laſt; we ſhall find that hidden under ground evil, which is the root of the matter; even of all his diſtempered ſpeeches and paſſions againſt us, and of all the judgments and rods of God that have been upon him. Some one ſecret ſin is indeed often the root of many open ones; and though we may conclude, that any ſin may be the root of miſery and affliction, yet uſually it is ſome ſpecial ſin, that gives ſuck and ſap to the ſpecial troubles that either afflict the godly, or render the lives of wicked men miſerable. For though God might make every ſinful failing bear gall and wormwood, yet he doth not, but ſpares his people after many failings. And though death (which contains all penal evils) be the wages of every ſin, yet in this World God rarely payes it to wicked men, till their ſins become very full of ſinful evil: This Job's Friends are likewiſe here conceived to call the root of the matter, a diſcovery of which they ſuppoſed he would ſoon make (according to this expoſition) were he but a little put to it, and preſſed. Let us perſecute him, and we ſhall find the root of the matter againſt him.

But though this reading may yield ſome profitable meditation, yet I ſhall not inſiſt upon it, becauſe the words plainly appear as ſpoken by Job, and not by his Friends.

Ye ſhould ſay, why perſecute we him, ſeeing the root of the matter is found in me?

Secondly, Some have given this ſence of the words, Ye ſhould ſay, why perſecute we him, ſeeing (ye ought to ſay each one of you judging himſelf) the rcot of the matter is in me? That is, The fault is in me, or I am the cauſe of this contention; I by my prejudices and unfriendly jealouſies have been an occaſion to ſtir the paſſion of this afflicted perſon, and to draw out this troubleſome debate between us. Thus the latter words are made that form of acknowledgment, which Job's Friends ſhould make, in charging the blame and fault, the root and riſe of all upon themſelves. But

Radix παῤῥησίας & fiduciæ alloquendi deū eſt fides in ſervatore in quo habemus acceſſū. Co. Cum pia fide in deum radicatus ſim, qua perrexi adhuc in mea integritate & nunc verba veritatis coram eo profero, ut fidei radicatæ in ipſo fructus, non autem folia aut fallaces verborum flores quales vos effunditis, &c. Jun.

Thirdly, Rather ſay, Theſe words have the form and force of a reaſon, upon which Job would perſwade his Friends to forbear perſecuting him, or why they ſhould reflect upon and conſider themſelves as having perſecuted him; The root of the matter is found in me.

The root of the word or matter, according to this interpretation is, firſt, grace and faith in his heart: As Believers are ſaid to be rooted in grace, in love, &c. (Eph. 3. 17.) ſo grace of any kind is as a root in Believers. Faith in the heart is the root of the word in every mans mouth who believeth; and it is the root of the work in every mans hand that believeth. And ſo Job's ſcope in this ſpeech may be thus repreſented: As if he had ſaid, O my friends, ye wonder that I have ſpoken and done thus, I tell you the root of the word and work is in me; Faith makes me ſpeak and do (faith is the root of our holy liberty and boldneſs in ſpeaking and doing both towards God and man) (Pſal. 116. 10.) I believed (ſaith David) therefore have I ſpoken: We alſo believe (ſaith the Apoſtle, 2 Cor. 4. 13.) and therefore ſpeak. When once with the heart man believeth unto righteouſneſs, then (preſently) with the mouth confeſſion is made unto ſalvation (Rom. 10. 10.) So that Job having made ſuch an excellent confeſſion with his mouth in the former words, here he would have his Friends know, that he did not ſpeak by rote, but by the root of the matter which was in him: He believed with his heart, and therefore they ſhould take heed, how they did oppoſe or perſecute him, he being a true Believer. As if he had further ſaid, This profeſſion of my faith, ſhould move you to bethink your ſelves better then to perſecute me; for though you may find me a ſinner, yet you may find that in me alſo, which doth intereſt me in the Redeemers love, who takes away ſin. I am rooted in the Redeemer by faith, and through his ſtrength I have walked in mine integrity, I have not ſpoken theſe things, in a vain flouriſh or oſtentation of my ſelf, but as an evidence of the grace of God in me, from whence as from a root, I bring forth not leaves and bloſſoms only, but I have my fruit in holineſs, waiting for the end, Everlaſting life.

Job nihil aliud vult dicere quā veritatem à parte ſua ſtare, illam autem eleganti periphraſi vocat radicem verbi. Mendacium enim cum nihil ſit, illud vere verbum dici debet, quod in veritate fundatur. Bold.

ἐπερώτημα.

Secondly, By the root of the matter, we may underſtand his ſincerity, or the uprightneſs of his heart. The teſtimony which God gave of him was, A man perfect and upright; and his own heart gave him that teſtimony alſo: As he profeſſed faith in the Redeemer, ſo he loved him in ſincerity. He had, as the Apoſtle Peter phraſeth it (1 Ep. 3. 21.) The anſwer of a good conſcience in himſelf, as well as a good anſwer in his mouth to them. He whoſe conſcience makes a good anſwer to himſelf, can anſwer any man. As if Job had ſaid, When my conſcience asks me the queſtion, What I am, and what I hope for? I can give it a good anſwer; and therefore I can eaſily anſwer you, and you ſhould not eaſily trouble me. And indeed when once a man can anſwer himſelf honeſtly, he may anſwer all the world boldly. Sincerity is the root of the matter in every godly man. And he who is upright in what he ſaith and doth, needs not trouble himſelf what others ſay of him, or do againſt him. Men may (as we ſpeak proverbially) caſt their caps at him that is upright, they cannot much hurt him; Ye ſhould ſay, why do we perſecute him (what can ye gain by it, or what can I looſe by it) ſeeing the root of the matter is in me?

Our Annotators gloſs it thus; Gods promiſes are rooted in my heart, and true piety is found there (both parts fall in with, or fill up the expoſitions given) therefore I ſhould not be condemned by you. Now for as much as Job urgeth one of, or all theſe Conſiderations, namely, that he had the grace of faith, that he had made a right confeſſion of his faith, that he was ſincere, and right-hearted towards God, In all, Seeing (I ſay) he urgeth theſe conſiderations as a reaſon to ſtop, or give check to his Friends oppoſing, and perſecuting of him. We may obſerve; Firſt, from the expreſſion; and then from the connexion. From the expreſſion, that Grace and truth are the root of a godly man.

They are as a root under a twofold notion.

Firſt, For eſtabliſhment: The root is to the tree as the foundation to the building, the ſtrength and ſtay of it; ſo are grace and truth, faith and ſincerity to a godly man: By theſe (for in theſe the ſtrength of Chriſt is) he ſtands (Heb. 13. 9.) Be not carried away with divers and ſtrange doctrines; for it is a good thing that the heart be eſtabliſhed with grace, not with meats. The Apoſtle means the doctrine of grace, in oppoſition to the doctrine of meats. The ceremonial Law about meats doth not eſtabliſh the heart; but the doctrine of grace doth: now as the doctrine of grace, ſo grace much more eſtabliſheth the heart, and will not ſuffer us to be carried away as the waves of the Sea, or as the clouds of the Air by contrary winds, to contrary points and practices, now forward, and then backward. They who are come to the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the meaſure of the ſtature of the fulneſs of Chriſt, thenceforth are no more children, toſſed to and fro and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the ſleight (or cogging) of men and cunning craftineſs, whereby they lye in wait to deceive. But ſpeaking the truth in love, they grow up into him in all things who is the head, even Chriſt (Eph. 4. 13, 14, 15.)

Secondly, Grace in the heart is a root, becauſe it ſends out juice or ſap, and is the next cauſe of our fruitfulneſs in life: Grace in the heart, buddeth and bloſſometh at the hand, and tongue, in good actions, and ſavoury ſpeeches. The whole man is filled with good fruit, where grace is a root in the heart. There is a root of this root, Jeſus Chriſt is the root of our graces: But as Chriſt is the root of our graces; ſo the Grace of Chriſt in us is the root of all our holy actions. Chriſt is (Origo originans) the original and the originating root of our graces. Grace is (Origo originata) the originative root, or that root which Jeſus Chriſt planteth in us, that by the continual ſupplies and moiſtenings of the Spirit, we may bring forth fruit in him and to him. As Original corruption is the natural root of the matter in us, as to the production of ſin, and our unhappy fruitfulneſs in evil; ſo Grace infuſed or wrought in us, is the Supernatural root of the matter in us, as to our germination in holineſs, and our happy fructification in goodneſs.

Secondly, From the connection, or argument couched in theſe words; Ye ſhould ſay, why do we perſecute him, ſeeing the root of the matter, Grace and Truth, are in me?

Obſerve, He that hath Grace and holds Truth, root-truths, ſhould not be perſecuted.

The Apoſtle (Heb. 12. 14.) exhorts to follow (or as the propriety of the word is, to perſecute) holineſs, that we our ſelves may reach and attain the higheſt degree of it: But we muſt take heed of following thoſe with perſecution (though it be but in hard words) who have (through mercy) attained, the leaſt or loweſt degree of it. For Dam arbor radicem habet, ſperari poteſt eam repullulaturam & plus fructuum progenituram; ita homines inter vitia & nævos ſuos ſanitatem præcipui capitis fidei retinentes, nemo temere debet rejicere.

Firſt, They ſhould not be perſecuted by men, who are imbraced by Chriſt, nor be caſt out by us, who are received by him. Them that hold the fundamentals of faith and holineſs, Chriſt owns, therefore we ſhould own them too. Job poſſibly had failings and errors; but he had the root of the matter: What though you my Friends and I do not agree in all things, yea, what though we differ in many things, and cannot reconcile theſe differences, yet I have told you the root of the matter. Why do you perſecute me? Such a profeſſion of faith as Job made contains the ſum of the Goſpel, or of the myſtery of Chriſt; therefore they who hold it are not to be ſlighted, much leſs vexed, though they hold not all the truth, or are deceived into ſome things which are erroneous.

Secondly, They that hold out the ſame fundamental truths, have the ſame Spirit of truth at leaſt to enlighten them.

Thirdly, They who make ſuch an outward profeſſion of faith from a root of faith within, ſhall certainly be ſaved; Heaven ſhall receive them, and ſhall not we receive them? Heaven will open its gates to entertain them, and ſhall we thruſt them out of the World? Why perſecute ye me, ſeeing the root of the matter is in me?

And if they be not to be perſecuted, who hold the fundamentals or chief doctrines neceſſary to ſalvation, what ſhall we think then of their perſecution, who oppoſe thoſe that do not only hold fundamental, but moſt ſuperſtructive truths too, which belong to faith and a good life. Many ſuch have fallen under perſecution upon their diſſenting about ſome outward forms of order or worſhip.

Further, Job ſeems to be here his own witneſs, he doth not ſtay to receive teſtimony from his brethren, that the root of the matter was in him; but himſelf ſaith, the root of the matter is found in me; which may teach us,

Firſt, They who have the root of the matter in them, may know they have it.

Grace comes from Light, and is Light. Grace carrieth Light to diſcover it ſelf by, unleſs God hide it from us, and put our light into darkneſs, our candle under a bed, or under a Buſhel. He that hath Grace, doth not alwayes know it; this root may lie ſo deep under ground, that he in whom it is, cannot ſee it, or ſay it is in me: Yet this root how deep ſoever, is diſcernable in it ſelf, and is often clearly diſcerned by thoſe in whom it is.

Secondly, It is lawful, and a duty in ſome caſes, for a man to give teſtimony to himſelf.

Job's Friends thought there was nothing in him but a root of wickedneſs and hypocriſie; but he ſaith, the root of the matter is in me. Let another praiſe thee, and not thine own mouth (ſaith Solomon.) That's moſt comly, and ſo it ſhould be; yet ſometimes a man muſt, and may ſpeak for himſelf, to maintain his own innocence, and advance the Glory of God, which may be darkned by the ſilence of man.

Thus far I have opened the firſt part of Job's Concluſion; namely, the direction and counſel which he gives his Friends to take them off from their bitter oppoſition, and to ſweeten or meeken their ſpirits towards him; Ye ſhould ſay, Why perſecute we him? ſeeing the root of the matter is found in me. He proceeds to a Commination, threatning them into this duty, if he could not perſwade them to it; Be ye afraid of the ſword, &c.

VERS. 29.

Be ye afraid of the ſword; for wrath bringeth the puniſhment of the ſword; that ye may know that there is a judgment.

IN the former Verſe Job counſelled and directed his Friends; here he warns and threatneth them.

Be ye [afraid] of the ſword.

גור Timere aut expaveſcere in alicujus præſentia aut conſpectu terribili. Fugite ergo à facie gladii. Vulg.

The word notes ſtrong fear; ſuch a fear as makes us flee or run from it: So ſome tranſlate the word here; whereas we ſay, Be afraid of, they ſay, flee from the face of the ſword: Fear puts many to their feet.

Flee from the ſword; or be afraid of the ſword.

The ſword is an inſtrument of death. The ſword may be looked upon in a twofold hand.

Firſt, In the hand of the Souldier; and ſo it is the ſword of war.

Secondly, In the hand of the Magiſtrate; and ſo it is the ſword of peace. Both ought to be the ſword of Juſtice? yet the latter is more properly called ſo. He (that is, the Magiſtrate) beareth not the ſword in vain: He beareth it to do juſtice, and to maintain peace. The ſword is one of the chief Emblemes of Magiſtracy and Power. We may take the ſword here as in either of theſe hands; Be ye afraid of the ſword; the ſword of the Souldier, and the ſword of the Judge or Magiſtrate.

Gladii nomine vindicta ſignificatur per Metonymiam inſtrumentalis cauſæ pro effectu.

Again, By ſword in Scripture, all manner of evils, puniſhments and revenges are underſtood; becauſe the ſword brings ſo many evils, and is ſo great a puniſhment, therefore any kind of evil, puniſhment or rovenge comes under this title, the ſword. The Children of Iſrael cry out upon Moſes, that when he came to deliver them, he did but more enthral them; and therefore tell him (Exod. 5. 21.) Thou haſt put a ſword into the hand of Pharaoh to ſlay us, that is, thou haſt been ſo far from mollifying the heart of Pharaoh towards us, that thou haſt provoked Pharaoh to lay new troubles, and lay heavier burdens upon us, not only to our further ſorrow and affliction, but to our ruine and utter undoing. So the Lord ſpeaketh (Deut. 32.41.) If I whet my glittering ſword, and my hand take hold of vengeance, that is, if I prepare my judgments of what ſort ſoever, then I will render vengeance, &c. The whetting of the ſword notes the fitting and preparation of thoſe judgments, by which the hand of God taketh hold of vengeance.

Improbus vocatur gladius Dei, quia Deus eo utitur tanquam gladio ad puniendum quos vult. Druſ.

And hence in Scripture, wicked men and oppreſſors, who bring the greateſt troubles, whether upon perſons or Nations, are called the ſword of God. (Pſal. 17. 13.) David prayes, Deliver my ſoul from the wicked, which is thy ſword. He calls them the ſword of God, becauſe they are often uſed by God as inſtruments to puniſh whom he pleaſeth, or rather thoſe (whoſoever they be) that have diſpleaſed him.

Cum dicitur à facie gladii, præſentem & jam conſtitutam & paratam ultionem ſignificat. Pined.

Further, Job doth not only ſay, Be afraid of the ſword; but be afraid of the face of the ſword: Yea, the Original is plural; Be afraid of the faces of the ſword. The ſword hath and makes many faces, and they are all ill and ſad ones. In Scripture, ordinarily the face of a thing, notes that very thing whoſe face it is, or the preſence of it; ſo, the face of the ſword is the ſword preſent. Be afraid of the face of the ſword, that is, of the ſword when it appears. The ſword ſometimes wraps up its face in the ſheath, its face is hid; but when the ſword is drawn, then we behold the face of the ſword. So that to be afraid of the face of the ſword, is to be afraid of the ſwords appearance, of the ſword looking out of its ſcabbard, of the ſword drawn and brandiſhed. Some are very buſie and curious about the Phyſiognomy of the ſword, to tell us what the face is. The ſword hath its face. The two flats of it are as the cheeks of the face; and the glitterings of the ſword are as the eyes of the face which ray from it; and the edge of the ſword is the mouth of the face; and the point of the ſword is the tongue of the mouth. Thus they allegorize. I will not ſtay upon ſuch niceties. The face of the ſword is the inſtant preſence of the ſword; and ſo the phraſe is uſed in reference to other things (Pſal. 38. 5.) My wounds ſtink and are corrupt, becauſe of my fooliſhneſs. The Hebrew is, Becauſe of the face of my fooliſhneſs; or, before the face of my fooliſhneſs, that is, at the preſence of my ſin, or when I ſee the face of my ſins. Some have abundance of ſins, yet their wounds ſtink not, nor are corrupt, that is, they are never troubled for their ſins; Why? becauſe they do not ſee the face of their ſins: but at the face of my ſins, or the faces of my ſins, my wounds ſtink and are corrupt, that is my ſoul is troubled, and my conſcience is in a ſad condition. The Prophet uſeth this ſtrain in that famous promiſe of deliverance from the Babyloniſh yoke (Iſa. 10. 27.) It ſhall come to paſs in that day, that his burden ſhall be taken from off thy ſhoulder, and the yoke ſhall be deſtroyed, becauſe of the anointing: So we render it. The Hebrew is, His yoke ſhall be deſtroyed before the face of the anointing. Grammarians tell us, that before the face, in the Hebrew, ſupplies the place of the Prepoſition becauſe; which is the reaſon why we render, becauſe of, or for the anointing. But ſtrictly, the yoke ſhall be broken at the face of the anointing, or (as the word is) at the face of the oyl; that is, at the face of him who is anointed with oyl. Literally, Hezekiah, but ſpiritually and typically, Jeſus Chriſt, the Meſſias, the anointed of God. At the face of Chriſt, at his appearing, the Babyloniſh yoke is broken off from the neck of his people. When Chriſt appears, his enemies diſappear, and his people are freed from the yoke of Bondage. But to the point; as we read of the face of ſin, and the face of oyl (in thoſe Scriptures) ſo here, of the face of the ſword. It may well be ſaid, Be afraid of the face of the ſword; becauſe the ſword, of all things, hath the moſt dreadful face. Some men have terror ſtampt in their faces, they ſcare others with their looks. The ſword hath a terrible aſpect. The face of the ſword is as the face of Goliah was to the Army of the Iſraelites (1 Sam. 17. 24.) All the men of Iſrael (like women or children) when they ſaw the man, fled from him (we put in the Margin, they fled from his face) and were ſore afraid. Goliah was a monſter among men. A whole Army gave ground at his approach: The face of the man was dreadful, much more was the face of his ſword.

A facie inſipientiæ meæ, Heb. i. e. quam ſemper habeo ante oculos meos.

A facie, ſumitur apud Hebræos loco Præpoſitionis propter.

Peculiare eſt gladio & univerſo armorum generi ut faciem habere videantur, cum vel ſola facit & primo aſpectu terrorem injiciant.

ſword. 'Tis ſaid (Iſa. 21. 15.) That as ſoon as the ſword appeared and ſhewed its face, they feared, and fled; They fled from the ſwords, from the drawn ſword, from the bent bow, and from the grievouſneſs of war. Now foraſmuch as the ſword in kind is ſo great an evil to man, and ſo terrible, therefore when that is threatned, we may expect any kind of evil. This one threatning comprehends all threatnings. Where the ſword comes, fear will not ſtay behind (Jer. 6. 25.) Go not forth into the field, nor walk by the way; for the ſword of the enemy, and fear is on every ſide. When the ſword is abroad, all keep at home. So, Ezek. 21. 12. Cry and howl Son of man, for it ſhall be upon my people, it ſhall be upon all the Princes of Iſrael; terrors by reaſon of the ſword ſhall be upon my people, ſmite therefore upon thy thigh, that is, uſe the moſt ſignificant geſtures and expreſſions of grief and ſorrow. Hence obſerve,

First, The ſword is a very dreadful evil.

That which is put for all evils, muſt needs be a very great one; we may ſpell and read any judgment in the ſword. As it ſhews that peace is a great good, an exceeding great good, becauſe peace is put for all good. When it is ſaid, Peace be to you, all good is wiſhed to you, every mercy is included in peace. So when 'tis ſaid, The ſword be to you, you may write any evil under that menace. While the ſword is threatned, all miſeries are threatned in one. The ſword is a great evil, conſidered barely in it ſelf; and it is a greater, conſidered in the conſequents and effects of it. It hath it ſelf a very dreadful face, but it leaves a more dreadful face of things behind it. That Land which before it, is as the Garden of God, behind it, is as a deſolate Wilderneſs.

Secondly, In that Job thus threatens his friends, and warns them, Be ye afraid of the ſword; take heed leſt ſome ſudden judgment fall upon you; obſerve,

We may uſe arguments from fear of judgments, both to diſſwade from ſin, and to perſwade to duty.

Job was a preacher to his friends, and here he is upon a vehement dehortation, to take them off from that perſecuting ſpirit ſpoken of in the former verſe; here we have his argument or motive, the fear of the ſword: you may run upon the ſwords point, while you run this courſe. The Apoſtle Jude (v. 23. of his Epiſtle) gives direction; Of ſome have compaſſion, making a difference; others ſave with fear, that is, make them afraid, terrifie and threaten them, that they may be ſaved. Some ſpirits muſt be dealt with gently, others roughly; therefore (ſaith he) make a difference; but rather then let any periſh, ſave them with fear, skare them to heaven. Some muſt be led to heaven by the way of hell, and be caſt into the fire, that they may be delivered from it: Save them with fear, pulling them out of the fire. 'Tis a deſireable fear which is a means to pull a ſoul out of the fire. We are ſaved by faith, as that receiveth and taketh hold of Chriſt; we are ſaved by fear, as that takes hold of us, and driveth us to Chriſt. By faith we ſee and apply our help in Chriſt, and by fear we are brought to ſee our need of his help. Chriſt (Luke 12. 4, 5.) uſeth the argument of the fear of hell, to cure his friends of the fear of man, and to diſſwade them from deſerting him and the truth of the Goſpel. I ſay to you my friends, be not afraid of them that can kill the body, and after that, there is no more that they can do. But I will forewarn you whom ye ſhall fear; fear him, which after he hath killed, hath power to caſt into hell; yea, I ſay to you, fear him. See how he doubles upon that point of fear; fear him, yea, I ſay unto you, fear him. We may parallel it with that expreſſion of Paul to the Philippians, Rejoyce in the Lord, yea, I ſay again, rejoyce. I eat not my word, but I aver it, and ſtand to it; as I bid you rejoyce, ſo I again bid you rejoyce. So ſaith Chriſt to his friends, fear. Some might object, Is this ſuitable counſel to a friend, to bid him be afraid? ſhould they be kept in heaven-way for fear of hell? Enemies have cauſe of fear, but ſhould friends? Yea, ſaith Chriſt, I ſay again to you my friends, fear him. 'Tis good to bid a friend fear, when that fear tendeth to his good. Paul (Rom. 8. 13.) writing to Saints, and applying the doctrine of free grace to the believing Romans, yet tells them, If ye live after the fleſh, ye ſhall die, even die eternally; he threatens them with hell, who were candidates of heaven, and points them to death, who were paſſed from death to life, that he might keep them out of the wayes of death.

Some ſay, this is baſe to be kept from evil by fear; they take ſcandal at thoſe who preach fear, calling it legal preaching.

I anſwer, It is indeed moſt noble to obey out of love, To fear the Lord and his goodneſs (Hoſ. 3. 5.) But yet it is good to fear the Lord and his wrath. It is moſt excellent to ſay, we fear the Lord, becauſe there is mercy with him; but it is our duty to fear the Lord, becauſe there is juſtice and judgment with him. A good heart will improve the judgments of God as well as his mercies, and the wrath of God as well as his love: A good heart is bettered by all the diſpenſations of God, both in his word, and in his works; if God ſpeak death, it is an advantage to his ſpiritual life; and he mends upon threatnings as well as upon promiſes. Every word of God is good, and hath a ſavour of life unto life in it, by the working of the Spirit: It is beſt and moſt Goſpel-like, when we can ſay as the Apoſtle directs (2 Cor. 7. 1.) Having theſe promiſes, we cleanſe our ſelves from all filthineſs of fleſh and ſpirit, perfecting holineſs in the fear of the Lord; but it is well, when we can ſay, Having theſe threatnings, let us cleanſe our ſelves, and perfect holineſs in the fear of the Lord. It is a choice frame to ſay, as the Author to the Hebrews calleth us (Heb. 12. 28.) Seeing we have a Kingdom that cannot be moved, let us have grace to ſerve him acceptably with reverence and godly fear. Yet it is our duty to ſay, and a mercy when we can ſay it, Seeing we live in a Kingdom or in a State that is moved and ſhaken with judgments and troubles, therefore let us have grace to ſerve him acceptably with reverence and godly fear. Fear, either of trouble threatned, or of trouble felt, may be improved to purer actings of Grace, and a more acceptable ſerving of God.

I ſhall only add three things to ſhew what this fear rightly improved, will do upon the heart.

Firſt, It doth not ſtraighten, but enlarge the heart towards God. Thus the Prophet ſpeaks of that holy fear which ſhould follow, or be an effect of that glory of the Church, in the abundant acceſs of the Gentiles to the Goſpel (Iſa. 60. 5.) Then thou ſhalt ſee and flow together, and thy heart ſhall fear, and be enlarged. Fear and enlargement go together. Fear, under a natural conſideration, ſhuts and ſtraightens the heart. A man ſurprized with fear, is leſs then he was in all his abilities, and ſeldom hath the uſe of any but thoſe which diſcover his weakneſs. But ſpiritual fear, or fear ſpiritualiz'd, maketh a man more then he was, and better then he was; he is enlarged to God, and only ſtraightned towards evil.

Secondly, This fear of threatnings and judgments will not cauſe us to run from God, whoſe the word of threatning or the works of judgment are; but it brings and keeps us nearer to God. As holy fear is a bridle to reſtrain us from ſin, ſo it is a bond to hold us to duty (Jer. 32. 40.) I will put my fear in your hearts, and (what will this fear do? will it cauſe you to withdraw from me? No;) you ſhall never depart from me; the more you fear me, you ſhall keep the cloſer to me: None live ſo near God as they that fear him; as the fearing of God and the eſchewing of evil are joyned together in Scripture, ſo are our fearing of God and ſtricteſt obedience to him.

Thirdly, It is ſuch a fear as proceeds from high thoughts of God, not from hard thoughts of God. Some when they hear of judgment or of the ſword of God, they have hard thoughts of God, he is ſevere (ſay they) wrathful, terrible, and therefore they tremble and are afraid of him. But the fear intended hath a better ſpring, it flows from pure reverential thoughts of God in his greatneſs and unparallell'd excellency (Jer. 10. 6, 7.) Foraſmuch as there is none like thee, O Lord, thou art great, and thy Name is great in might. Who would not fear thee, O King of Nations? for to thee doth it appertain (or, it liketh thee) foraſmuch as among all the wiſe men of the Nations, and in all their Kingdoms, there is none like unto thee. Here are high thoughts of God indeed; There is none like thee, thou art great, and thy Name is great, and among all the Nations there is none like thee: The wiſeſt are not like thee in wiſdom; the greateſt are not like thee in greatneſs; the holieſt are not like thee in holineſs; therefore, Who would not fear thee? To be afraid of the judgments of God from high thoughts of his juſtice, righteouſneſs, holineſs and purity, moving him to do ſuch things, is not a ſlaviſh argument, as ſome have ſaid, but that which may work upon the moſt ingenious and gracious ſpirit; and not only ſo, but (which may be a third Note from theſe words, Be afraid of the ſword.)

It is our duty to fear the judgments of God.

We ſhould fear the judgments of God while threatned, and only heard of; What though we ſee them not? What though we feel them not? What though we are not the perſons intended in them, or to be ſmitten by them? yet the report of them, as directed againſt others, ſhould make us tremble. When God threatned the old world with the floud, Noah was excepted; yet ſuch was the temper of his ſpirit, that though he were the only favourite of God in all that age, yet his very hearing of that judgment (which he was aſſured not to feel) had this effect upon him (Heb. 11. 7.) By faith Noah being warned of God, of things not ſeen as yet, moved with fear, prepared an Ark to the ſaving of his houſe. He heard, and was afraid of the judgment, therefore he applied himſelf to thoſe means which God had directed him to for the ſaving of himſelf and family. We read (Rev. 14. 7.) of a Viſion which John had: I ſaw an Angel fly in the midſt of heaven, having the everlaſting Goſpel to preach to them that dwell on the earth, and to every Nation, and Kindred, and Tongue, and People, ſaying, fear God, and give glory to him. Why? for the hour of his judgment is come. When God ſends the everlaſting Goſpel to be preached, he calls it the hour of his judgment. The preaching of the Goſpel is the hour of mercy to ſome, but it is the hour of wrath to others, even to all refuſers and contemners. Upon this denunciation or threatning of judgment, which ſhould overtake the ſlighters and neglecters of the Goſpel, all are warned to fear God and give glory to him.

Now, if we are to fear God for his judgments threatned, then we are to fear him more for his judgments inflicted. (Rev. 15. 3, 4.) Who would not fear thee, O Lord, and glorifie thy Name? &c. for thy judgments are made manifeſt. In the old Law when judgments were executed, 'tis ſaid, They ſhall hear and fear, and do no more preſumptuouſly (Deut. 17. 13.) They ſhall hear what hath been already executed upon offenders, and fear to offend. Moſes there ſheweth what all ought to do, not what all did, upon the appearances of judgment, and the executions of divine wrath upon high tranſgreſſors.

Fourthly, Obſerve how Job was dealt with by his friends when he thus beſpake them, and warned them of the ſword. Their words were as a ſword in his bowels, they were very ſowr and bitter againſt him; yet foreſeeing their danger, and what evils their ill uſage of him might bring upon themſelves, he forgets both their former unkindneſſes, and his own preſent pains, and minds them of thoſe evils which were like to overtake them, if they perſiſted in the ſame mind. Hence note,

A good man will warn others of dangers, and labour to prevent their ſorrow, though they have cauſed his.

Vir ſanctus cum à pravis talia ſuſtinet, non contra eos, ſed magis pro ipſis dolet, ac mala eis quæ fugiant oſtendit. Merc.

While they are doing him hurt, he will be keeping them from hurt; while they trouble him, he diſcovers much tenderneſs towards them. He doth not rejoyce, and ſay, their day is coming, let it come, let it overtake them: No (ſaith he, as Job) I ſee a black day coming, even the face of the ſword; therefore be ye afraid of it, and labour to get out of the reach of it. The Prophet ſpeaks much this ſence to that hardned generation, who cauſleſly contrived and called for his death (Jer. 26. 15.) I am in your hands, do as it ſeems good and meet, (I do not ſo much ſtand on it, what you do with me, it ſhall be well with me; but I warn you to look to your ſelves, and to take heed of your own ſouls) but know for certain, if you put me to death, you will ſurely bring innocent bloud upon your ſelves, and upon this City, and the inhabitants thereof; for of a truth the Lord hath ſent me to you to ſpeak all theſe words in your ears. He doth not plead to be freed from their hands, but only lets them know their danger if they laid violent hands on him. He was not afraid of their ſword, but he would have them afraid of the ſword of God; Be ye afraid of the ſword.

For wrath bringeth the puniſhment of the ſword.

Quia ira iniquitates gladii Heb.

The Hebrew is, For wrath the iniquity of the ſword. It is a ſhort, and (as to words) an imperfect ſentence in the Original. Hence the ſence is ſupplied by Interpreters, with ſome variety of conjecture; Wrath bringeth the puniſhment of the ſword. We ſupply the word bringeth; and render that word which properly ſignifieth iniquity, puniſhment (as it is alſo uſed in other places) by a Metonymie of the effect for the cauſe; puniſhment being cauſed by, or being the effect of iniquity; Wrath bringeth the puniſhment of the ſword. There are divers other readings; I will briefly touch them, but inſiſt only upon this.

Trunca & conciſa oratio. Merc.

First, thus; For, or becauſe the ſword is the revenger of iniquities. When the revenger of iniquity comes, it is high time to look to our ſelves, that we do no iniquity, or repent ſpeedily of that which we have done. The ſword (take it literally) is uſually the great inſtrument in the hand of God to revenge his quarrel upon men of iniquity.

Quoniã ultor iniquitatum gladius eſt. Vulg.

A ſecond thus; Be afraid of the ſword; for wrath (namely, the wrath of God) is the deſolation of iniquity. As if he had ſaid, Go not on in this iniquity; for the wrath of God will be the deſtruction of iniquity and of you too, if you perſiſt in this iniquity. The reaſon why it is rendred deſolation, or deſtruction, is from a different rendring of the Hebrew; in which Language, a word of the ſame ſound written with a different Letter, ſignifies both the ſword and deſolation: And as they are near in ſound, ſo nearer in ſence; where the ſword comes, deſolation ſeldom ſtayeth behind. How many Cities and Nations have been made deſolate by the ſword?

Quia ira (ſupple dei) iniquitatis deſolatio eſt.

חרב Gladium.

כרב Deſolationẽ ſignificat.

Thirdly, Wrath to the iniquities of the ſword, that is, wrath hangeth over the iniquities of the ſword. But what doth this tranſlation mean by the iniquity of the ſword? By the iniquities of the ſword (ſome ſay) thoſe iniquities are meant which are worthy to be puniſhed by the ſword. Wrath hangs over the iniquity of the ſword, that is, Over great iniquities; or, as another, For bloody iniquities ſtir up the heat of anger; the iniquity of the ſword is bloody iniquity, becauſe great and bloody iniquities call for revenge by blood, and where revenge acts its part, anger is boiled up. Again, the iniquities of the ſword, may be taken more ſtrictly for thoſe iniquities, of which he ſpake in the former verſe, the iniquities of perſecution, and undue vexation of our innocent brethren; theſe are ſword-iniquities, and theſe provoke the wrath of God to take vengeance on perſecuters by the ſword. Hence another tranſlates, For the ſins of the ſword are wraths. And ſo 'tis a direct predication, like that (Iſa. 65. 5.) Where the Prophet brings in the Lord ſpeaking of thoſe hypocrites, that ſay, Stand by thy ſelf, come not near us; Theſe are a ſmoke in my noſe, a fire that burneth all the day: That is, theſe are ſuch as ſtir up a ſmoke in my noſe, they make me angry, and theſe kindle a fire that burns in my breaſt all the day long, that is, theſe make me extream angry with them. So here, the iniquities of the ſword (that is, the vexations of brethren) are wrath, that is, they kindle up the wrath of God, and make that wrath flame out to the conſumption and deſtruction of thoſe who have ſo provoked him. Thoſe are the iniquities of the ſword. From this laſt reading, and theſe two ſences given upon it, take two brief Notes thus,

Ira iniquitatibus gladij. Reg. i. e. ira imminet iniquitatibus gladii. Cajet.

Vel ira & divina ultio manet & ulciſcitur iniquitates gladii, i. e. iniquitates gladio dignas. Nam æſtum iræ (excitant) iniquitates cruentæ. Jun.

Nam delicta gladii, i. e innocentium & fidelium perſecutio eſt ardor, i. e. excitat ardorem dei, qui ipſum impellat, ut gladio vindicet in perſequentes. Coc.

First, Harſh judgment, or rigid cenſuring of others, is a provoking ſin.

It is the iniquity of the ſword, it is a ſin which hath blood in it. Hence ſome put the Text into this Paraphraſe; In as much as, you provoke me thus to anger, it is ſuch a ſin as very well deſerves to be revenged by the ſword, or by the ſevereſt judgment. Another thus; Your harſh and bitter words againſt me, are no leſs wickedneſs, then if you ſtabbed me, or thruſt me through with a ſword, and it deſerveth the puniſhment of the ſword. David's complaint reacheth that interpretation (Pſal. 42. 10.) As with a ſword in my bones, mine enemies reproach me.

Nam æſtus ſunt delicta gladii. i. e. excitant fumum & incendium in naribus meis faciunt me ardere ira. Quia iraſci facitis me, eſt ex iniquitatibus, quæ dignæ ſunt ut gladio ulciſcantur. Pag.

Hæc veſtra tam acerba adverſũ me commotio, non minus eſt ſcelus quam ſi gladio me transfoderetis. Bez.

Secondly note, Harſh judgment upon others, calls for ſevere judgments upon our ſelves.

This alſo takes up the ſence of our reading.

Wrath bringeth the puniſhment of the ſword.

The word tranſlated wrath, ſignifies burning. All wrath is hot. Some wrath is ſo hot, that there is no abiding it. Job having before threatned the ſword, here tells us whence the ſword cometh, what ſendeth the puniſhment of the ſword; wrath doth it. What wrath? There is a twofold wrath, with either of which this Text may comply.

אף Iram, חרה excandeſcentiam, קצף efferveſcentiam ſubitam, quandoque ſpumam bullamve ſignificat. חמה calorem iræ denotat.

Firſt, The wrath of God, who is provoked and ſtirred up by the iniquity of man; as if he had ſaid; you have provoked God to wrath by your unkind dealing with me, that wrath will bring the puniſhment of the ſword, that is, all manner of evils upon you.

Secondly, The wrath of man againſt man, that alſo ſtirreth up and bringeth the puniſhment of the ſword. Whence are wars? &c. is the Apoſtles queſtion (James 4. 1.) He anſwers, Are they not from your luſts that ſtrive in your members? And is not wrath among thoſe luſts? So that in reference to both, it is a truth, Wrath bringeth the puniſhment of the ſword: The wrath of God againſt man, brings it, and the wrath of man againſt man, brings it. Hence obſerve,

First, If the wrath of God be kindled, terrible judgments may be expected.

What puniſhments, what conſuming judgments doth wrath bring forth? The wrath of God may be ſpecificated into any judgment, it produceth every evil. As the love of God carries in it any good, any mercy or bleſſing to his people, ſo doth his wrath every evil (Pſal. 2. 12.) If his wrath be kindled, yea but a little, bleſſed are they that put their truſt in him. When he ſaith, Bleſſed are they that put their truſt in him, he means, wo to thoſe that do not put their truſt in him. If his wrath be kindled but a little, if it be but as a ſpark, it will quickly grow up to a flame, and conſume all (Numb. 16. 46.) Moſes bids Aaron haſte to make the atonement; for (ſaith he) wrath is gone out from the Lord, the plague is begun. As ſoon as wrath goes abroad, it brings forth a plague. What that particular plague was, (intended by Moſes) is not clear. Some take it literally for the ſword; The plague is begun, that is, the ſtroak of the ſword is among us. However, any plague or ſtroak may ſoon riſe, when wrath is once riſen.

Secondly, As wrath is put here for the wrath of man againſt man; Note,

The wrath of man brings a ſword.

The wrath of man againſt man, brings the ſword two wayes.

Firſt, It brings the ſword as it ſtirs up man to revenge; when men are angry, and give bitter words, they ſhortly after give blows: moſt of the wars that have been in the world, have riſen from wrath. What the Apoſtle James (chap. 1. 15.) affirms of ſin, the ſame we may affirm of wrath, though it be not ſinful. When wrath is finiſhed (or is come to its height and heat, it bringeth forth death. Dying Jacob giveth this as the effect of his two ſons anger and wrath (Gen. 49. 6, 7.) In their anger they ſlew a man, and in their ſelf-will they digged down a wall; curſed be their anger, for it was fierce; and their wrath, for it was cruel. It is good to appeaſe wrath, to heal breaches, to quiet ſpirits; for if wrath begin its work, who knows where it may end?

Secondly, The wrath of man bringeth the puniſhment of the ſword, as it ſtirs up God to puniſh man; the wrath of man againſt man, is a ſin which God will puniſh with further wrath. God often powreth out wrath, and he ſuffers men to powr out more of their wrath upon wrathful men. The Apoſtle ſpeaks as much to the Church of Galatia (Gal. 5. 15.) If ye bite and devour one another; What was this biting and devouring? Did they like dogs gnaw one another? or like Canibals eat one anothers fleſh? No; ſee (verſ. 14.) what he means; Thou ſhalt love thy neighbour as thy ſelf; but if ye bite and devour one another. Every act oppoſite to that love which God commands us to exerciſe towards our neighbour, is a biting and devouring of our neighbour. They that are civil and well bred, yet in this ſence may be found men-eaters, and devourers of their brethren. We bite and devour one another, when we are unkind, wrathful and vexatious one towards another. What then? Take heed ye be not conſumed one of another. Take heed leſt by walking ſo unlike Chriſtians, and ſo unanſwerably to the Law of Goſpel-love, you provoke God to kindle ſuch a fire among you and in you, as may prove an utter conſumption, When Chriſtians are not careful and ready to walk in love, as Chriſt hath loved us, God ſometimes gives them up to a ſpirit of contention, and their breaches are like the Sea, which cannot be healed. Paul ſpake this to a Church, a very faulty Church, and this was one of their faults, want of love. What he ſpake to them, we may ſpeak to any, whether brethren or others. Take heed that you do not bite and devour one another, leſt you may be conſumed one of another. Your unjuſt and unrighteous walkings, your cruel and harſh dealings, which are yet but to the vexing and heating one of anothers ſpirits, or to the devouring and eating one of anothers credit, may provoke ſuch judgments, as ſhall deſtroy your perſons, families and eſtates, till nothing be left; thus the wrath of man brings the puniſhment of the ſword: As wrath works man to revenge himſelf, ſo it provokes God to execute revenges. When men are fierce towards each other, God is angry with them all, and will not ſuffer them to live in peace, who loved diſſention. This judgment of God upon men is both the fore-runner and demonſtration of a further, and that the Final Judgment. Job concludes and cloſeth his Diſcourſe with a ſerious premonition of it.

That ye may know there is a judgment.

That ye may know.] That is, that you may be made to underſtand what ye have taken ſo little notice of, or do not at all remember.

Secondly, Take it for the event; then, That you may know, is, that you may feel what you will not be perſwaded of. I tell you theſe things that you may know them, that is, that you may be convinced and perſwaded that there is a judgment; or if you will not be perſwaded of it, you ſhall feel it by your ſad experience. Thus David prayeth againſt his enemies (Pſal. 9. 20.) Put them in fear, O Lord, that they may know themſelves to be but men; that is, that they may be convinced and perſwaded of it. He ſpeaks not of ſuch as had either ſo high an opinion of themſelves, that they were Gods; or ſo low an opinion of themſelves, that they were Beaſts or Devils; only they acted as if they had been more then men, and were not ſenſible of their own mortality. They who thus know themſelves be to men, will not (in the Apoſtles ſence, 1 Cor. 3. 3.) walk as men; that is, proudly or contentiouſly. And as there are but few who thus know themſelves to be men; ſo there are as few, who know that God is the Lord. (Exod. 7. 8.) The Egyptians ſhall know that I am the Lord; that is, when I bring my judgments on them, then they will be conſtrained to acknowledge me in my almighty power and greatneſs, confeſſing that I am God alone, and that beſides me there is none other. When men will not know God in his Word, nor in his Works of Creation and common Providence, he will make them know him in his Rod, and his works of Judgment and extraordinary Providence. So here, Wrath bringeth the puniſhment of the ſword. That you may know, is, that you may be convinced by the Logick of the ſword, by pains and puniſhment.

Hoc dico ut eum ad quem provoco juſtum judicẽ prius cogitetis quam id reipſa experiamini. Bez.

Ut cognoſcatis quod ex jure eſt. Jun. i. e. ut ſaltem metu & horrore judiciorum ejus ad officium perfungendum erga afflictũ revocemini. Jun.

That there is a judgment.] The Hebrew word is infinitive, that to judge. The meaning is, that there ſhall be a time of judgment, or ſuch a proceeding as we call judgment. Judgment is of two ſorts. Firſt, There is a Judgment of abſolution Secondly, A Judgment of condemnation. We may take in both here; God will make you know there is a Judgment.

שרון pro אשר רון Quod judicare, i. e. judicatio Infinitivus, pro nomine verbali.

Firſt, A Judgment of abſolution on my part; God will determine for me according to the innocency of my cauſe in that day; he will ſet me right before all the world.

Secondly, A Judgment of condemnation on your part; you will be found faulty, and receive ſentence according to your fault. But when ſhould this Judgment be given? There are two times of Divine Judgment.

First, In this world.

Secondly, In the world to come.

We may underſtand it of both; That ye may know that there is a Judgment; that is,

Firſt, That God doth moderate, order and guide things according to his infinite wiſdom in this world: The world is not left to chance or hap-hazard; there is a providence of God, and he will bring a ſword upon you, that you may know that there is a judgment, or an unerring wiſdom that orders all things. To every purpoſe (ſaith Solomon, Eccl. 8. 6.) there is time and judgment. That is, a proper ſeaſon and a ſpecial manner of acting, upon the due obſervation whereof, the good ſucceſs of every action doth depend: Now as there is a skill or judgment of man requiſite to eve- your ſelves in the wrong judgment you give of me, yet ry purpoſe, to effect it; ſo there is a wiſdom and a judgment of God to every purpoſe, to order and diſpoſe of it, to reward or puniſh it.

Again ſecondly, That ye may know there is a Judgment, is, as if he had ſaid, That ye may know a day is coming, wherein God will judge the world in righteouſneſs,though now you judge unrighteouſly; though now you pleaſe your ſelves in the wrong judgment you give of me, yet know there ſhall be a right judgment given of me and you too.

Hence obſerve, Firſt, Man is not eaſily perſwaded that God will judge him, that Judgments are coming, or that Chriſt will come to Judgment.

Though Job's friends were (in the main) holy and good men, yet he ſpeaks of them as very inſenſible of their liableneſs to this judgment. The wicked (Iſa. 28. 15.) make a covenant with death, and with hell they are at an agreement: There is no perſwading of them that judgment ſhall overtake them; though all the world be overflowed with a deluge, yet they hope to ſtand dry; When the overflowing ſcourge ſhall paſs through, it ſhall not come unto us; for we have made lies our refuge, and under falſhood have we hid our ſelves. But will any man knowingly make lies his refuge, and ſecure himſelf by falſhood? I anſwer, Firſt, Some will. The lies and falſhood, the ſubtilty and guile which they have uſed or reſolve to uſe, is that which they truſt to; they live by their wits and ſhifts, and ſo they hope to make an eſcape from death and danger.

But ſecondly, I conceive the Prophet repreſents theſe men ſcoffingly ſpeaking the opinion which others, eſpecially the holy Prophets had of all the plots and projects, of all the helps and means which they had prepared for their ſhelter in that rainy day fore-threatned; as if they had ſaid, we know very well that you call all theſe (our outward ſtrengths and ſecret policies,yea, our gods, whom you blaſpheme for Idols, all theſe you call) lies and falſhood; well, let them be ſo, yet we will venture our ſelves upon their fidelity, not doubting but that the overflowing ſcourge will have nothing to do with us, though others are nndone by it. A man that pleaſeth himſelf in doing evil, cannot eaſily believe that he ſhall ſuffer evil for doing it. And though the heart cannot put off the terror of preſent judgments, yet it will of future judgment, We are unwilling to know that which checks us in that which we are willing to do.

Secondly obſerve, They who do not act according to common principles, may be ſaid not to know them.

Job ſpeaks to his friends, who were not ignorant that there ſhould be a judgment; but they judged him as if they had never looked to have been judged themſelves, their actions did not ſpeak what they knew; therefore he charges them with ignorance (1 Sam. 2. 12.) The ſons of Eli were children of Belial,, they did not know the Lord. Did not they know him, and yet Prieſts! not know him, and yet bred up under Eli the High Prieſt, a godly man! Could it be ſaid of them, they did not know the Lord? Though they had a form of the knowledge of God in the letter of the Law, yet becauſe their lives were unſuitable, and they acted as they who know not God, therefore 'tis ſaid expreſly, they knew not God. They threw off the yoke of obedience, they were ſons of Belial, they walked not in the power of their knowledge, and therefore they are ſaid not to know. When Manaſſes being carried away to Babylon in chains, began to come to himſelf (the Lord having thus humbled him by his affliction) the Text ſaith, Then Manaſſes knew that the Lord he was God (2 Chron. 33. 13.) Manaſſes being ſon to Hezekiah, a godly King, no doubt was tutored, and inſtructed to know that God was the Lord; yet Manaſſes never knew God to purpoſe, till he was taught by the Rod. Whatſoever truth we do not hold forth in life, we may be ſaid not to know it, how much knowledge ſoever we have about it.

Thirdly, From hence note alſo, There ſhall certainly be a Judgment.

This point was handled before (verſ. 25.) conſult that verſe about it.

Fourthly, From the connexion, when he ſaith, Wrath bringeth the puniſhment of the ſword, that ye may know, &c. From the Connexion we may learn,

That, The preſent judgments of God are arguments of a future judgment.

When we ſee the face of the ſword, ſome viſible judgment, that teacheth us to believe a judgment as yet unſeen. The dayes of judgment in this world, are intimations of that great day of judgment at the end of the world: Thoſe are leſſer dayes of judgment. And, as when God doth not bring judgments on ſinners in this life, it hardens many in this opinion, ſurely there will never be a day of judgment. Atheiſts are extreamly ſtrengthened in that miſ-belief, they flatter themſelves that there ſhall be no judgment, becauſe they ſee none, and that ſinners ſhall eſcape puniſhment alwayes, becauſe they are not alwayes puniſhed. Now as ſome are ſtrengthened in their unbelief, that there ſhall be no judgment at all, becauſe they do not ſee a preſent judgment; ſo when God doth viſibly bring forth judgments here, it is a confirmation of faith to others, that God will reckon with all men, and bring every work and ſecret thing to judgment.

Again, Why doth Job ſay, That ye may know that there is a judgment? Was there no judgment then? Job found Judges, and judgment too: True, he complained often of his friends for judging him, but he looked on theirs as wrong judgment, and ſo as no judgment. Intimating that another kind of judgment ſhould paſs upon him, then what had yet paſſed. They ſhould know that there is a judgment.

Hence obſerve, The judgment of God is an exact and perfect judgment.

In the day of mans Judgment, ſome receive good for evil, and others receive evil for good. But when we ſhall appear before the judgment-ſeat of Chriſt, then every one ſhall receive according to what he hath done in his body, whether it be good or evil, Some men are blind and cannot judge aright, others are brib'd or byaſſed, and ſo will not judge aright. But Chriſt knoweth all things and perſons, and nothing can turn him aſide againſt his knowledge. His judgment will be ſtraight and equal judgment.

Sixthly, In reference to the perſons upon whom he preſſeth this, That ye may know. You my friends, have judged me harſhly and ſeverely; he particularly applies his ſpeech to them; which gives us this Note further.

They who judge others harſhly, have cauſe to fear judgment.

Chriſt ſpeaks as if judgment ſhould paſs upon none but ſuch (Matth. 7. 1.) Judge not, that ye be not judged; for with what judgment ye mete, it ſhall be meted to you again. Judge not, doth not prohibit the judgment of man on man; not the judgment of the Magiſtrate, no nor all private judgment; but wrong, harſh, haſty, groundleſs judgment: with ſuch judgment judge not; why? that ye be not judged: As if Chriſt had ſaid, ye ſhall certainly be iudged if ye do ſo. But ſhall only ſuch be judged, ſhall not all be judged? Yes all ſhall be judged; but all ſhall not be judged as this ſort of Judges ſhall, with a judgment of condemnation. In that ſpeech of Chriſt, to be judged, is to be condemned. Again, 'tis true, this argument is applicable to all ſorts of ſins and ſinners; Swear not, lie not, ſteal not, that ye be not judged. But though it be true of all, yet it is more ſpecially applicable to wrong judgment, and injurious Judges. Judge not, that ye be not judged. Such ſhall ſurely be condemned. The Apoſtle (1 Cor. 4. 5.) is ſtrict upon that point; Judge nothing before the time till the Lord come, that will bring to light the hidden things of darkneſs. As the former, ſo this Scripture doth not take all judgment from man, as (if in all caſes) we ſhould only appeal to God, or refer every cauſe to the laſt Judgment. But when he ſaith, Judge nothing before the time, his meaning is, judge nothing unſeaſonably, judge no perſon in reference to his ſpiritual ſtate peremptorily or finally. We may judge the facts of men but take heed of judging their hearts. We may judge perſons as they are, but we cannot conclude what they may be. We may judge what appeareth, but we muſt not judge by gueſs or by conjecture concerning thoſe things which are hidden and appear not. The Lord (at laſt) will bring to light the hidden things of darkneſs, and will make manifeſt the counſels of the hearts: The Judgment of hidden things and of hearts, are reſerved to him to whom nothing is hidden, and who knoweth the heart (James 4. 11, 12.) Speak not evil one of another (Brethren) he that ſpeaketh evil of his brother, and judgeth his brother, ſpeaketh evil of the Law, and judgeth the Law; but if thou judge the Law, thou art not a doer of the Law, but a Judge. There is one Law-giver, who is able to ſave and to deſtroy. Who art thou that judgeſt another? Our Law-giver is our Judge, and he who is the Judge of all, is as able to deſtroy by a ſentence of condemnation, as to ſave by a ſentence of abſolution.

Laſtly obſerve, The remembrance of the righteous judgment to come, ſhould keep us in a holy fear, leſt we judge our brethren unrighteouſly.

The remembrance of that judgment, ſhould keep us in a holy fear of falling into any ſin, but eſpecially of falling into this ſin of unrighteous judgment. The Apoſtle Paul (Rom. 14.) takes brethren off from judging and vexing one another about either the obſervation or forbearance of meats and dayes, which once had a plain and direct inſtitution from God, and were then indeed aboliſhed and laid aſide; yet ſome judging their brethren for the uſe, and others for the diſuſe of them, being unſatisfied about their abolition, In this quarrel the Apoſtle interpoſeth (verſ. 10.) Why judgeſt thou thy brother? Why doſt thou ſet at naught thy brother? (Thus he rebukes and chides them) we ſhall all ſtand before the judgment-ſeat of Chriſt; for it is written, as I live, ſaith the Lord, every knee ſhall bow to me, and every tongue ſhall confeſs to God. This thought that we muſt all bow to God in the day of Judgment, may abate our keenneſs, and cool our heats. This will cauſe us either in a loving compliance to bow one to another, or to take heed of wrathful violence, whether in word or action, to cauſe others to bow to us. Whereas they who have blotted the notion of that laſt Judgment out of their hearts and conſcisciences, will not ſtand upon thoſe acts which are greateſt blots in their lives and converſations. The Chaldee Paraphraſe gloſſing upon the Hiſtory of the murder of Abel by Cain (Gen. 4.) aſſignes this as the occaſion of it; Cain and Abel went out into the field, where diſcourſing ſome points of Religion, Cain ſaid there was no day of Judgment, no account to be given of what is done here, no reward after this life; ſuch were the Tenents of Cain: Abel held the contrary, and ſaid there was a Judgment, and an eſtate after this life, a reward for the righteous, and puniſhment for the wicked. Cain having drunk in thoſe falſe principles, not only judged, but roſe up and murdered his Brother preſently. Whether Cain and Abel had ſuch a Dialogue or no, is queſtionable; but it is clear, as to the point in hand, that when a man hath once reſolved, that there is no judgment, or hath not the notion freſh upon his ſpirit, he is apt to judge his brethren harſhly, and then to act cruelly againſt them. No man knows whether either his hand or his tongue will ſtop in ſinning, when once he hath thrown away this Bar, or laid aſide the holy Bridle of this principle, That there is a Judgment.

Thus far Job's anſwer to the ſecond ſpeech of his ſecond friend Bildad hath been opened; wherein he hath laboured to take all his three friends off from the fierceneſs of their oppoſition againſt him, and the harſhneſs of their opinion of him, by the confeſſion of his own faith, in the former context, and by remembring them in this of the account which they were to give to God of all their words and works, in the Judgment of the great Day. His third Friend Zophar takes up the Cauſe, and perſecutes Job again upon the old quarrel, that ſurely he was a wicked man, a man of an evil life, becauſe his life was ſo full of evils.

CHAP. XX. Verſ. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5.

Then anſwered Zophar the Naamathite and ſaid;

Therefore do my thoughts cauſe me to anſwer, and for this I make haſte.

I have heard the check of my reproach, and the ſpirit of my underſtanding cauſeth me to anſwer.

Knoweſt thou not this of old, ſince man was placed upon earth,

That the triumphing of the wicked is ſhort, and the joy of the hypocrite but for a moment.

ZOPHAR no whit moved with the miſeries, nor with the cries of Job, not at all ſatisfied with the ſerious confeſſion which he made of his own faith, nor terrified with the ſevere threats of the ſword of God againſt them, proceeds in his turn and time, to charge Job afreſh with ungodlineſs, and that by an elegant deſcription of the ſudden and dreadful downfal of ungodly men.

For the clearing of the whole Chapter, we may conſider,

First, The ſum of what he here delivers, or his Argument.

Secondly, His ſcope.

Thirdly, The parts into which we may divide his Anſwer.

The ſum or argument which he handleth is this, and he is only in this to teach and inform us, that wicked men enjoy but a very uncertain eſtate, how high and glorious ſoever they appear in this world. And that after a ſhort time of pleaſure, they are caſt down and periſh for ever.

His ſcope or aim in holding out this Doctrine, is to convince Job, that he was juſtly cenſured and dealt with by them as a wicked man, becauſe God dealt with him as with a wicked man. The high proſperity in which he formerly lived, being vaniſhed as a dream, his light turned to darkneſs, and all his joy wrapt up in ſorrow: As if he had ſaid, The change which thou haſt had in thy outward ſtate, ſaith to us that thy heart is not changed. If thy converſation had not continued bad, thy condition had continued good.

The parts of his Anſwer are three.

Firſt, A ſhort Exordium, in verſ. 2, 3.

Secondly, A long Narration, from verſ. 3. to the end of verſ. 28.

Thirdly, We have a quick and cutting Concluſion in the cloſe of the Chapter: This is the portion of a wicked man from God, and the heritage appointed to him by God.

VERS. 1, 2.

Then anſwered Zophar the Naamathite, and ſaid;

Therefore do my thoughts cauſe me to anſwer, and for this do I make haſte.

THeſe words are a part of his Preface, wherein he moveth for attention; and he doth it from a kind of neceſſity that lay upon him to ſpeak; from whence he would infer, that it was ſurely a duty in Job to hear: When Paul ſaid, A neceſſity is laid upon me to preach the Goſpel, he implied a neceſſity in others to hear the Goſpel preached. Therefore now, and for this, &c.

What doth this refer to? We may give it three wayes.

Firſt, Upon the whole matter; as if he had ſaid, I having well weighed and conſidered the tenor of thy diſcourſe upon this great point of Gods dealing with man, and ſeeing how erroneous thou art in thy apprehenſions about it, therefore my thoughts cauſe me to anſwer.

Secondly, And more principally, therefore, that is, becauſe of what thou ſpakeſt at the cloſe of thy laſt diſcourſe, threatning us with the ſword; Be ye afraid of the ſword, for wrath bringeth the puniſhment of the ſword; Therefore do my thoughts cauſe me to anſwer: As if Zophar had ſaid, You ſpeak terribly to us, you have threatned us with the ſword, and have brandiſhed or waved it before our eyes, like that flaming ſword, which turning every way, was ſet to keep the way of the Tree of Life in Paradiſe, leſt Adam ſhould meddle with it. So, ſaith he, thou terrifieſt us with the ſword, as if it were drawn againſt us in caſe we ſhould attempt further againſt thee; but I am ſo far from being terrified by thy threats, that for this very reaſon do my thoughts cauſe me to anſwer, and for this do I make haſte. Perceiving how wrongfully you apply the judgments of God, it is time for me to rectifie and reduce you; conſidering alſo that the terror you powr out upon us, is fallen upon your ſelf, and that you are wounded with the ſword you ſpeak of. Have you not felt the ſmart of it? doth not this argue that you are the man, and that you have hit your ſelf while you aimed at us?

Thirdly, It may be referred to thoſe reproaches (as he interprets them) and ſevere cenſures of their dealing with him. And then the reaſon is plain in the third verſe, where the account of that therefore, is thus given; I have heard the check of my reproach, therefore do my thoughts cauſe me to anſwer, and for this do I make haſte; we may put both theſe together, as if he had thus more plainly expreſſed himſelf, Thou haſt not only threatned, but reproached; not only terrified, but checked and cenſured me; for this my thoughts cauſe me to anſwer, and for this do I make haſte.

חעפי

Therefore do my thoughts.] Thoughts are the firſt-born of the ſoul, our inward motions. The word which is here uſed in the Hebrew for a thought, is very elegant, properly ſignifying the boughs of a tree, becauſe our thoughts ſhoot out from our minds, as branches do from a tree, the force of which word was opened, chap. 4. 13. Therefore do my thoughts

שוב Convertere, redire, eſt in Hiphil, ubi propriè ſignificat redire facere, & quando de verbis agitur, reſpondere ſignificat. Bold. Studium eloquendi ſtimulat, urget ac accelerat me. Jun.

Cauſe me to anſwer.] The expreſſion notes an active putting forward, or a thruſting him on to anſwer, as if he had not been maſter of his own ſpirit, or could not withſtand the impulſes which were upon him. His thoughts did not only contain the matter which he had to anſwer; but they provoked, and (as we render) cauſed him to anſwer; or (according to the Letter) to return; my thoughts cauſed me to return; my thoughts preſs me: As if he had ſaid, It was my purpoſe to have given thee over, and to have medled no more with thee; but thy carriage hath been ſuch, that I am compelled to anſwer; I muſt anſwer whether I will or no. The old Prophets when they received impreſſions from the Spirit of God, were no more in their own power, or they had not the command of their own words, they muſt ſpeak what the Spirit dictated to them, they could not forbear. They could not ſay as the wicked are deſcribed (Pſal. 12. 4.) Our lips are our own; no, their lips moved as the Spirit of God moved them. Thus the Apoſtle Peter deſcribes them (2 Pet. 1. 21.) The Propheſie came not in old time (or at any time) by the will of man; but holy men of God ſpake as they were moved by the holy Ghoſt. Such a force there is in the word of the Text. Some interpret, as if Zophar would have Job underſtand ſo much, that he was moved with the Spirit of God, or that God inſpired him to ſpeak, and he could not be ſilent. David was under ſuch a conſtraint (Pſal. 39. 3.) My heart was hot within me, while I was muſing, the fire burned, then ſpake I with my tongue. His thoughts cauſed him to anſwer. And in that Zophar ſaith, My thoughts cauſe me, &c. he ſeems to intimate, that though he ſpake zealouſly, yet he did not ſpeak raſhly, but had ſeriouſly premeditated or thought of the whole matter before hand.

Hence obſerve, Thoughts preſs us to words.

They force their way out; it is a hard thing to keep in our thoughts: our thoughts are as conceptions, and our anſwerings are as the birth. Where the firſt is, the ſecond muſt follow. Where there is a conception, there alwayes ſucceedeth either timely production, or abortion. Thoughts once conceived and formed, ſtrive and ſtruggle to come to the birth and ſee the light. The Apoſtle Paul uſeth ſuch an an expreſſion (Acts 18. 5.) Where the Text ſaith, that when Silas and Timotheus were come from Macedonia, Paul was preſſed in ſpirit. Paul ſpake before; he reaſoned in the Synagogue every Sabbath (verſ. 4.) But after they came from Macedonia, Paul was preſſed in ſpirit, or conſtrained; ſo preſſed in ſpirit, that he could not hold; therefore it follows, I teſtified to the Jews that Jeſus was Chriſt; he had a new gale, a freſh breathing from Chriſt upon him; or as ſome render, a Spring-tide came in upon him, his ſpirit ſwell'd high, and overflowed the banks. The ſame word is uſed (2 Cor. 5. 14.) The love of Chriſt conſtraineth me, that is, the love wherewith Chriſt loveth me ('tis true alſo of the love wherewith we love Chriſt) this love conſtraineth me. Paul was not conſtrained by an outward violence, but by an internal virtue, to do, to ſuffer, to ſpeak, to act whatſoever was his duty in the ſervice of Jeſus Chriſt.

Συνείχετο, Intus apud ſe æſtuabat.

Again, Whereas he ſaith, My thoughts cauſe me to anſwer; obſerve,

That, Before we anſwer, we ſhould conſider.

We ſhould not ſpeak till we think; nor utter a matter till we have beaten it out plain in our own ſpirits: Thoughts muſt form our words, and words ſhould bear the form of our thoughts. He that ſpeaks what he thinks not, ſpeaks hypocritically; and he that thinks not of what he ſpeaks, ſpeaks inconſiderately. Unleſs the heart work before the tongue, the tongue will make but ill-favoured work. As we ſhould deliberate long before we determine to do any thing, ſo we ſhould uſe ſome deliberation before every thing we ſay. When Chriſt ſaith to his Diſciples in that caſe of their being brought before Governors and Kings for his Names ſake (Matth. 10. 19, 20.) Take no thought how or what ye ſhall ſpeak, for it ſhall be given you in that ſame hour, what ye ſhall ſpeak; for it is not ye that ſpeak, but the ſpirit of your Father that ſpeaketh in you. In this Chriſt doth not (as I conceive) forbid all care and fore-thought what to ſay (no more then he forbids all care and fore-thought about the things of this life) when he ſaith (Matth. 6. 25.) Take no thought for your life: He only forbids anxious diſtruſtful cares and thoughts what to ſay; or that they ſhould not like Orators or Advocates, ſtrive to make ſtudied Rhetorical Pleas and Apologies for themſelves; foraſmuch as in the due improvement and management of their talents, the Spirit would aſſiſt and ſupply them, yea, and if need were, give them immediate ſupplies, and be with their mouths (as he promiſed Moſes, Exod. 4. 12.) to teach them what they ſhould ſay. If their own thoughts could not, he would teach and move them to anſwer.

And for this I make haſte.] The Hebrew is, Therefore haſte is in me; I find a motion in me, and that motion forbids all delayes; ſome expound this haſte by a kind of delight; for this I delight in anſwering, it is pleaſant to me; we uſually make haſte to do thoſe things we delight to do. That's a good ſence; as it was propheſied of Chriſt (Pſal. 40. 7, 8.) Lo I come, I delight to do thy will; there was haſte and delight both together in Chriſt: It was written in the volume of Gods Book that he ſhould do the will of God; and Chriſt came with haſte and delight to do it: Zophar ſpeaks near the ſame; It is my delight to anſwer: we render, for this I make haſte, or, for this my haſte is in me: There is a twofold haſte; firſt, a fooliſh; ſecondly, a wiſe haſte; a haſte of indiſcretion, and a haſte of diligence; a haſte that precedes deliberation, and a haſte that follows deliberation; Zophar would be underſtood of the beſt haſte, when he ſaith, I make haſte; his meaning is, he made the haſte of a diligent man, who having wiſely deliberated what to anſwer, makes haſte to anſwer; he would be underſtood to make the haſte of an induſtrious man, not of a paſſionate man. Hence note,

חוש Et deliciis affluere & feſtinare ſignificat.

That, In a good work it is good to make haſte.

The Apoſtles rule (Rom. 12. 11.) is, Not ſlothful in buſineſs. Some haſte makes waſte; and many make waſte, becauſe they make no haſte; ſome make more haſte then good ſpeed; others have good ſpeed, while they make haſte. David (Pſal. 31. 22.) ſpake in too much haſte, he ſpake before he had well thought of it; I ſaid in my haſte, I am cut off from before thine eyes. And again (Pſal. 116. 11.) I ſaid in my haſte all men are liars; take heed of ſuch haſty ſayings as theſe: He tells us alſo of a commendable haſte which he uſed (Pſal. 119. 60.) I made haſte, and delayed not to keep thy teſtimonies; this was the haſte of diligence, the other was the haſte of unbelief; he that believeth, will not make haſte; either to do or ſpeak what he hath not conſidered, or finds no warrant for, when he hath conſidered. To run on in a wrong way, is from our unbelief, or from our ignorance; but he that believeth and knoweth, will run in a right way; nothing provokes ſo much to a holy haſte, as Faith doth. Faith moveth us to do the will of God, and not to delay: The Motto of one of the Ancients was, Make haſte ſlowly: Another gives it as a rule, in the obſervation whereof, he obtained all his ſucceſſes, Making no delay. The right ſtating of our haſte and delay, gives a good iſſue to all our actions; ſometimes haſte is beſt, ſometimes ſtay is beſt; ſometimes we cannot be too haſty, ſometimes we can hardly be too ſlow. Paul was reſolute (Gal. 1. 16.) he made no ſtop, he would not ſtay for a conference; When it pleaſed God to reveal his Son in me, that I might preach him among the Heathen, immediately I conferred not with fleſh and blood: He went not to counſel, either with his own heart, or with the wiſeſt heads, when once the mind of God was cleared up to him, and his conſcience was attached with it. We cannot do that too ſoon which is alwayes to be done. Yet about many things we may ſay (as one was wont) Let us not make much haſte, that ſo we may have done the ſooner.

Again, Zophar looking upon Job as a man miſtaken, and in a wrong way, ſaith, For this I make haſte. Hence note,

> It is our duty to haſten the recalling and reducing of thoſe that are engaged in any errour, or departed from the way of truth and holineſ.

Zophar's ſuppoſition is a rule for us to walk by, though his practice be not; he was miſtaken in the object of his haſte, not in the ground or riſe of it. He that ſeeth his neighbours houſe on fire, ſhould make haſte to quench it; he that ſeeth him fallen into a pit, ſhould make haſte to pull him out; in a deſperate diſeaſe, we make haſte to the Phyſitian; ſuch were Zophar's apprehenſions concerning Job: He ſuppoſed his ſoul diſeaſed, and ready to gangrene with erroneous opinions or ſinful practices; and for this he made haſte. As Paul ſpeaks (Gal. 2. 5.) about falſe brethren in the things of the Goſpel, to whom he gave not place, no not for an hour. Paul made haſt to reduce them, he did not delay, no not an hour; ſo ſhould we. As the Sun ſhould not go down upon our wrath (we muſt make haſte to be reconciled to an offended brother) ſo the Sun ſhould not go down upon our zeal, we muſt make haſte to recover a lapſed brother. He that maketh the former delay, giveth place to the Devil (as the Apoſtle ſpeaks) to take an advantage againſt and prevail upon himſelf; and he that maketh the latter delay, giveth place to the Devil, to take advantage againſt, and prevail upon his brother.

Verſe 3. I have heard the check of my reproach, and the ſpirit of my underſtanding cauſeth me to anſwer.

Some conceive that as theſe words hold forth what Zophar had heard from Job, ſo with what frame of ſpirit he heard it; as if he had ſaid, I have heard it, and let it go; I will neither trouble my ſelf nor thee about it, but take it patiently: I will not check or reproach thee, though I have heard the check of my reproach; that is, ſuch a check or reproof as tends to my reproach and diſgrace.

יכלם Ad confuſionem & erubeſcentiam pertinet.

The word ſignifies to make one bluſh; you have ſpoken ſuch things (ſaith Zophar) as might make we bluſh if I were guilty; poſſibly he aims particularly at thoſe words of chap. 19. 22. Why do you perſecute me as God, and are not ſatisfied with my fleſh? Where Job chargeth his friends with higheſt cruelty; ye have (upon the matter) eaten my fleſh, and will ye deſtroy my ſpirit too? Now, ſaith Zophar, I have heard the check of my reproach. What! do we perſecute you, who are come to comfort you? have we eaten your fleſh, who mourn over your ſoul? why do you ſhame and diſhonour us with this reproach?

Yet I conceive that which Zophar calleth the check of his reproach, was Job's ſtiffneſs and perſiſtance in his opinion, ſtill diſſenting from his friends, and refuſing to be brought over to their judgments. Hence note,

> Man is apt to account it a reproach to be diſſented from and gainſayed in what he affirms as truth.

Every diſſent carrieth a reproof, yea, a reproach in it; he muſt have a patient ear that can hear himſelf reproved: Zophar's patience was ſo much moved with it, that he preſently adds,

The ſpirit of my underſtanding cauſeth me to anſwer.

Theſe words are near in ſence with the cloſe of the forformer verſe; there he ſaid, My thoughts cauſe me to anſwer; here, the ſpirit of my underſtanding cauſeth me to anſwer. Firſt, Some interpret it of God, who is the ſpirit giving underſtanding: As if he had ſaid, God hath cauſed me to anſwer. But rather, Secondly, The ſpirit of the underſtanding is the higheſt, chiefeſt and moſt ſublimate faculty of the underſtanding; as if he had ſaid, Not only doth my underſtanding in general, but the moſt refined part of it, that which is moſt free from the dregs of paſſion, the very ſpirit of my underſtanding moves me to anſwer. The Apoſtle uſeth ſuch an expreſs (Eph. 4. 23.) Be renewed in the ſpirit of your mind; not only be renewed in the outward man, in practice and converſation, but be renewed in your mind; yea, in the ſpirit of it. Holineſs is not only the renewing of the outward man, but of the mind, and not only of the mind, but of the ſpirit of the mind, that is, of whatſoever riſeth up neareſt to God, as the ſpirit of the underſtanding doth; our minds need renewing, and ſo doth the very ſpirit of them, both becauſe corruption is got into the higheſt powers of the mind, and becauſe we muſt ſerve God and anſwer one another with thoſe higheſt powers, even with the ſpirit of our underſtanding.

Thirdly, The ſpirit of the underſtanding may be expounded by the force and power of the underſtanding. The ſpirit of every thing is the beſt and the ſtrongeſt of it. And thus he ſeems to ſpeak in oppoſition to the manner of Job's ſpeech, which was ſuch as made it (in his conſtruction) a check rather then a counſel, and a reproach rather then a reproof. A check and a reproach proceed from paſſion, or from ſpleen; whereas counſel what to do, and reproof for what hath been done amiſs, proceed from compaſſion, or from love. Thou haſt ſpoken my reproach, and therefore thou haſt ſpoken from thy own paſſion; but I will not imitate thee, I intend not to anſwer thee with my paſſion, but with my reaſon and with my ſpirit, the force and beſt of my underſtanding.

Laſtly, When he ſaith, The ſpirit of my underſtanding cauſeth me, &c. He (poſſibly) would intimate, that he had underſtanding or knowledge enough to anſwer for himſelf, to retort Job's reproach, and make good his own aſſertion.

From this laſt clauſe of the Verſe, obſerve,

> We ſhould not anſwer paſſionate ſpeeches with paſſion.

The more we ſee others diſturbed and heated with paſſion, the more cool and compoſed we ſhould be; we ſhould diſpoſe our ſelves to the higheſt degree of patience, when we ſee others impatient; what others ſpeak or write in anger, we ſhould anſwer in love, and fall to work with our reaſon, yea, with (that, which hath more of the ſpirit of our underſtanding in it) our Graces. When we perceive thoſe we have to deal with, over-wrought with their own diſtempers and corruptions, when we ſee plainly that the ſpirit of pride and contentiouſneſs cauſeth them to ſpeak to us, then we ſhould ſtrive to ſpeak with them in the ſpirit of meekneſs, and the ſpirit of underſtanding ſhould cauſe us to anſwer. Man hath this priviledge above beaſts, that he hath an underſtanding; and not only ſo, but in this he is like to Angels, yea, to God himſelf; but unleſs he exerciſeth his underſtanding, he acts as a beaſt: So the Pſalmiſt concludes (Pſal. 49. 20.) Man that is in honour, and underſtandeth not (that is, doth not exerciſe his underſtanding, or act ſuitably to it, but is led meerly by ſenſe, or hurried by paſſion, this man) is like the beaſts that periſh. It is good to be full of affection; but it is beſt to work in the full aſſurance of underſtanding; affections without underſtanding, are blind, and quickly run us upon a thouſand inconveniences. That duty which calls up all our affections, yet calls for a work of the underſtanding (Pſal. 47.7.) Sing praiſes with underſtanding. And if we ought not to perform any publick duty in the Church (thoſe in particular of praying and ſinging) ſo, as that others cannot ſet their underſtandings on work, then much leſs are we to perform any duty without the work of our own underſtanding (1 Cor. 14.14,15.) If I pray in an unknown tongue (that is, in a tongue which others who joyn with me, know not, though I do) my ſpirit prayeth, but my underſtanding is unfruitful, that is, to them with whom I pray; my underſtanding in prayer is no benefit to them, unleſs they alſo underſtand what I pray. What is it then? I will pray with the ſpirit, and will pray with the underſtanding alſo; I will ſing with the ſpirit, I will ſing with the underſtanding alſo; that is, I will ſing and pray in an unknown tongue by that extraordinary gift of the Spirit, or as the Spirit dictates unto me; yet I will ſing and pray with the underſtanding alſo, that is, I will ſo explain or interpret my Pſalm or Prayer, that others may underſtand it. He is a Barbarian to others, who either ſpeaketh or prayeth what they underſtand not; and he is worſe then a Barbarian to himſelf, who ſpeaketh what himſelf underſtandeth not. An ignorant perſon wants underſtanding, and a paſſionate perſon cannot uſe his underſtanding; both are unfit to object or anſwer. When we anſwer like men, the ſpirit of our underſtanding cauſeth us to anſwer.

From the Preface thus briefly opened, Zophar deſcends to the matter of his anſwer, which he layeth down first, more generally, at verſ. 4, 5.

Verſ. 4. Knoweſt not thou this of old, ſince man was placed upon earth?

Theſe words charge Job either with groſs ignorance, or a reſolved oppoſition of the truth againſt his own knowledge: As if he had ſaid, Job, thou wouldeſt perſwade us that thou art a knowing man; haſt thou not this among thy experiences? Is not this laid up among thy treaſures of knowledge? Knoweſt thou not this? Thus the words are a check of his ignorance or inadvertency. What haſt thou not known this? Knoweſt thou not that which every one knoweth? children can ſpeak of this; this hath been the courſe of God of old. As if he had ſaid, I am not ſpeaking paradoxes to thee and novelties, or things which fall out only now and then, but of the fixt and conſtant tenor of Gods dealings and adminiſtrations even from the firſt, or of old, long ago, from all ages and generations it hath been thus.

Fixa hæc & conſtituta divinæ providentiæ ratio omnibus nota eſt. Pined.

מני־עד Ex eo quod olim à ſæculo, à ſemper ab æterno, quod frequenter ſumitur pro magna duratione.

The word ſignifies ſometimes Eternity ſtrictly taken (Iſa. 57.17.) Thus ſaith the high and holy one that inhabiteth Eternity, that is, who hath neither beginning nor ending. Chriſt (Iſa. 9.5.) is called the everlaſting Father, or, the Father of Eternity; not only in regard of the eternity of his being, but as he is the author of eternal life (here begun, hereafter to be perfected) unto all thoſe that believe on him, or have intereſt in him; as alſo becauſe of the everlaſtingneſs of his fatherly care of, and tenderneſs towards them. In other places the word ſignifies only a long time or a diuturnity (Pſal. 132.14.) There will I dwell for ever; that is, for many ages. So here, Haſt thou not known of old? Which is explained in the next words, ſince man was placed upon the earth? That is, ever ſince or from the creation of the world; for then man was firſt placed upon the earth. We may read the word Man, not as an Appellative, but as the Proper Name of the firſt man; Haſt not thou known this of old ſince Adam was placed upon the earth? The ſame word was the proper name of the firſt man, and is the common name of all men. Thus it hath been ever ſince Adam was formed and faſhioned out of the earth by divine art, and made up into that goodly fabrick, and then diſpoſed by a divine order to dreſs the Garden. The original word ſignifies to ſettle or place a man in his buſineſs or calling, as Adam was preſently after his Creation (Gen. 2.15.) And the Lord took the man (or Adam) and put him into the Garden of Eden to dreſs it and to keep it. Knoweſt thou not this, or that it hath been thus of old ſince man was (thus) placed upon the earth? Hence obſerve, שים Poſitus arte & induſtria fabricatus, diſpoſitus certo loco, non caſu.

> Firſt, That, We ſhould acquaint our ſelves with the hiſtory of Gods dealing in all ages.

Doſt thou not know?] He ſpeaks it as a reproach to him, that he waa not acquainted with what God had done in former times; there are ſome extraordinary caſes, that fall not out in every age: the providence of God hath ſome excentrical motions; but we may draw a line, and ſee the footſteps of many of his diſpenſations in all ages. Many works of divine providence are uniform, and run parallel in all times: Or if their face and appearance be not one and the ſame, yet it is not divers or contrary. Now, as it is a ſhame not to know common principles, ſo not to know common experiences. That which any man may know, every man ought to know, if it be that which is uſeful, and a duty for us to know.

Secondly, From the particular here intended, obſerve,

> That, In all ages God hath declared himſelf againſt wicked men.

God never ſhewed himſelf a friend to ſinners, or a lover of iniquity; he declared himſelf againſt Adam when he ſinned, though he receiveth him into favour again. He declared himſelf againſt wicked Cain, he excommunicated him, and caſt him out; he declared himſelf againſt the old world by water: When they were grown ſo vile, that all the imaginations of the thoughts of their hearts were evil, he ſent a deluge, not to waſh, but drown them. He declared himſelf againſt the wickedneſs of Sodom and Gomorrah by fire, not to purifie, but conſume them. God never ſhewed good will to wicked men (he is alwayes conſtant to himſelf) as he never ſhewed ill will to any of the godly; there is not one teſtimony of either upon record in any age of the world.

Thirdly, From thoſe words, Since man was placed upon the earth; he doth not ſay, Since man was upon the earth; but placed.

> Note, There is a divine ordination that ſets every man in his place upon the earth. Or, Man is placed and diſpoſed of by a divine ordination.

God hath appointed to every man where he ſhall be, and how he ſhall be employed. Time and place are ſet down by God; And as he hath determined the times before appointed, and the bounds of their habitation (Acts 17.26.) So the buſineſs of every man in that place of his habitation. When the Lord made man, he took and put him into the Garden of Eden; there was the bound of his habitation: And being brought thither, he ſhewed him his work, to dreſs it, and to keep it (Gen. 2.15.) He left him not at large to the whole world for a place, but ſingled him his place; nor did he leave him at large for an employment; but ſhewed him his work. Adam did not thruſt himſelf into the Garden, but the Lord took him by the hand, led him to, and placed him in it, directing him what to do. Here was the divine ordination to a Calling. It is our happineſs when we are able to ſay, whereſoever we are, God hath placed us there, we have not thruſt our ſelves in. This is a great ſupport in any ſervice or buſineſs, when we can ſee that God hath called, and his hand conducted us to it; that we have not taken, but received it; that we are not come, but ſent unto it.

Zophar proceeds to expreſs or name that common truth, to which all ages have born, or may bring in their witneſs.

Verſe 5. That the triumphing of the wicked is ſhort, and the joy of the hypocrite for a moment.

Job having gained thus much upon his Friends, at leaſt, upon Zophar, that wicked men may enjoy outward proſperity in this world, is yet oppoſed upon the ſame account, becauſe, though they do proſper, yet it is but for a little time, ſo little, that they can hardly be known to have been at all in proſperity. For (ſaith Zophar) to this Aſſertion all ages give their ſuffrage; The triumphing of the wicked is ſhort, &c. We have in the two parts of the Verſe three pair of parallel terms. Firſt, Triumphing and Joy. Secondly, The wicked man and the hypocrite. Thirdly, Short and a moment, Theſe in ſubſtance are the ſame.

The triumphing of the wicked is ſhort.

The word which we tranſlate triumphing, ſignifies not only joy, but joy proclaimed, that all may know it: Such is

רננת: Ovatio, triumphus, læta

is that of triumphers after victory obtained in battel. It is applied both to honeſt and to ſinful joy; yea, the word is alſo ſometimes applied to ſorrow, when ſorrow is loud, and maketh an out-cry or lamentation: From this root the Hebrews derive that word whereby they expreſs a Peacock; and they give the reaſon, both from the ſhrill cry of the Peacock, as alſo from the cauſe of that cry; the Peacock ſhouts (ſay Naturaliſts) looks upon his painted wings and goodly feathers, then he triumpheth; and ſo do wicked men, when they reflect upon their painted and ſpreading plumes, when they look upon their worldly ſplendor and greatneſs, then they triumph and ſing. Some read, the praiſe; others, the ſong of the hypocrite. All rendrings laid together, do but reach the fulneſs of the Text, in ſetting out the hypocrites vanity, who aſcending (as it were) his Chariot of pride and ſelf-confidence, rides in triumph, and bleſſeth himſelf, as the only happy man. But, proclamatio ob fœlicitatem & verā ſucceſſū; hinc Pavones dicti Rananna, à clamore, vel quia quaſi gaudent de pulchritudine alarum ſuarum. Laus impiorum brevis eſt. Vulg, Cantum improborum à propinquo. Jun.

The triumphing of the wicked is ſhort.] Or according to the Hebrew, It is of near: This nearneſs may be taken two wayes; Firſt, In reference to its beginning; it is not long ſince the triumph of ſuch began. Secondly, In reference to its ending; the triumph of ſuch ſhall not long continue; 'tis but a while ſince it roſe, and within a while it will fall. We read of new Gods (Deut. 32. 17. It is this word in the Hebrew, Gods of near new Gods) which your fathers knew not; ye have a certain race of Gods that were never heard of but of late, Gods of a late Date or Edition, and it will not be long but they will be out of date again; ſuch is the triumphing of the wicked, it is not long ſince he began to triumph; a child may number the years which his proſperity hath lived, and the oldeſt man may out-live it. I find ſome Interpreters expreſſing the word by a local diſtance, rather then a diſtance of time. The triumph of the wicked is near, that is, it is not come from far: its pedigree and original is not from heaven, the far Countrey; but from the earth, to which it is a neighbour; and therefore (as all earthly things) it is fading, tranſitory, and quickly paſſeth away.

מקרוב De propinquo.

Hence obſerve, Firſt, Wicked men may flouriſh in great proſperity.

Triumph is the height of proſperity: If ever Heathen Rome were ſeen in her glory, it was when her Cæſars having gotten ſome great victory, rode in triumph: To ſuch a ſtate may a wicked man aſcend. I have ſeen the wicked in great proſperity (ſaith David, Pſal. 37.) flouriſhing like a green Bay-tree; yea, they may flouriſh like the Cedars of Lebanon, or like the Oaks of Baſhan. Let not their proſperity ſcandalize the Saints, or make them to ſtumble. Some know not what interpretation to put upon it, or how to bear it. Wherefore lookeſt thou upon them that deal treacherouſly, and holdeſt thy tongue, when the wicked devoureth the man that is more righteous then he? (Hab. 1. 13.) This Point I have met with before; therefore I ſhall not ſtay upon it. But (which may eaſily take off this ſcandal) obſerve,

Secondly, That, A wicked mans proſperity is of no continuance.

It is but like a Statue of Snow before the Sun, ſoon defaced and melted down. It is but like ſome goodly Characters drawn upon the ſand, which the next puff of wind blots out. He may have the pleaſure of ſin, but it is but for a ſeaſon; his pleaſures are ſcarce ſweet at all; his pleaſures are at beſt but a bitter-ſweet, and that ſweetneſs which is in them, doth not hold long: The triumphing of the wicked is ſhort, both becauſe lately begun, and becauſe it ſhall ſoon end: yea, ſhort, if we conſider the utmoſt poſſibility of its continuance. How many caſualties, decayes, changings and declinings are ready to invade and ſeize upon it every moment?

Further, The ſhortneſs of their triumph may be conſidered three wayes.

Firſt, In reference to the conſtitution or nature of the things about which they triumph, or in which they rejoyce. Thus 'tis ſhort.

Secondly, Short in reference to the general curſe which God hath laid upon the creature; the creature at the beſt, is but a ciſtern, not a fountain; there is no water in it, but what is put into it: And ſince the fall of man, the creature is a broken, a crackt ciſtern, and cannot hold the comforts that are put into it; they quickly leak out and paſs away like water ſpilt upon the ground, which cannot be gathered up again.

Thirdly, That which makes the triumphing of a wicked man yet ſhorter, is, a particular curſe upon him for his perſonal ſins and crooked wayes wherein he walketh. All his enjoyments are in themſelves vaniſhing, and he by his own folly makes them more vain to him then they are in themſelves.

From all it follows, That, A wicked man is a very miſerable man.

His triumphing is ſhort, but his declining is for ever; his proſperity is but for a while, but his miſery is everlaſting; all his good things will ſoon be gone, but his evils ſhall never end; his light is quickly put out, but when once it is dark with him, he ſhall ſee the light no more. The affliction which a Believer meets with in this life, is conſiſtent with his happineſs; or, he is not unhappy, though afflicted, becauſe his afflictions are ſhort, and his comforts everlaſting (1 Cor. 4. 17.) Our light afflictions which are but for a moment, &c. This makes the life of a Saint happy while he is in affliction, his afflictions are light when heavieſt, and ſhort when longeſt, compared with that far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory: This alſo makes the life of a wicked man miſerable while he is in proſperity, becauſe his proſperity is but light and for a moment; and we may carry the latter part to the contrary ſence, that light, ſhort proſperity worketh for him an eternal weight of miſery: For as earthly things are temporary in their nature and uſe to all, ſo being ill uſed and enjoyed without God in Chriſt, and a good Conſcience, they prove eternal in their puniſhment; for the puniſhments and miſeries that follow them, are eternal, and ſo they may be ſaid to work an eternal weight of puniſhment; whereas the afflictions of the Saints are ſhort in their burdenſomneſs, yet eternal in their fruitfulneſs; for they work (not by the way of price, but of preparation) an eternal weight of Glory.

And the joy of the hypocrite but for a moment.

Leſt the Title of a wicked man ſhould be too broad, and Job ſhould not take himſelf as concerned in this concluſion, becauſe all knew him to be a worſhipper of God, and one that made profeſſion of Religion, therefore Zophar in this latter clauſe, adds the word hypocrite; which is moſt proper to thoſe who are higheſt in profeſſion. The joy of the hypocrite but for a moment.

Triumphing, in the former clauſe, ſignifies a more open deportment: There's no diſſembling nor concealing of a Triumph. Joy may be more ſecret and retired; ſo ſome conceive Zophar ſpeaking properly in reference to the uſual diſtinct temper of the wicked and the hypocrite. A wicked prophane man triumphs and rants it, he makes all ring with his jollity. The hypocrite and falſe profeſſor takes ſome ſtiller delights, and more moderate contentments; now (ſaith Zophar) this joy, though it be more reſerved and cloſe, is yet but for a moment, 'tis but like a punctum or point, which in the Mathematicks is ſo ſmall a thing, that it hath no dimenſions, unleſs imaginable; a point is leſs then the leaſt line, or only the beginning of a line, it is but putting down his pen, and 'tis done; there needs no drawing, as in making lines. The worldly felicity of an hypocrite toucheth him only as a Globe doth a Table (in puncto) in a point; he hath but a touch of it, and then 'tis gone. A point is to a place, as a moment is to time, the leaſt and laſt diviſion of it: A point is indiviſible in place, as a moment is in time. Thus the joy of the hypocrite is brought down to the loweſt that words or thoughts can make of it. A hypocrite (againſt his will) toucheth worldly joy in regard of the time of his enjoying of it, as a Godly man willingly and deſignedly toucheth it, in regard of that frame or ſpirit with which he enjoyeth it, only in a point. He hath as little to do with worldly things as he can, he doth not lay the whole dimenſion of his ſoul upon them. He rejoyceth in the world as if he rejoyced not. Now this which is at once the duty and happineſs of the Saints, ſhall be the puniſhment of hypocrite. Theſe whether they will or no, ſhall have but a point or moment of worldly Felicity; whereas the other reckon reckon upon, and chearfully make account of it, as of no more. Though true joy in worldly things be theirs, yet they lightly eſteem that joy. As for ſpiritual joy, that belongs to them alone. The Apoſtle (Phil. 4.4.) exhorts all ſuch, and only ſuch, when he ſaith, Rejoyce in the Lord; I ſay again, rejoyce. The hypocrite hath no right to any joy (ſorrow is his portion) yet he can as hardly be kept from rejoycing in the world, as the godly are hardly got to rejoyce in the Lord. Now though the hypocrites joy is moſt in outward things (he rejoyceth in Corn, Wine and Oyl) yet the joy of the hypocrite may go further, he may have joy in ſpirituals; for the hypocrite doth not rejoyce meerly as a wicked man, in the things of the world, he ſometimes rejoyceth in the things of heaven (Mat. 13.20.) The ſtony ground received the word with joy. The hypocrite may get a ſmatch or ſome taſtes of the powers of the world to come, as the Apoſtle ſpeaks (Heb. 6.5.) For ſeeing hypocrites are not only enlightened about the things of this world, but alſo about the things of the world to come; they may have ſome joy in them; yet this ſtrictly taken, is but a ſenſitive joy, or at the moſt, a rational, not a truly ſpiritual joy: A man may have a joy in and about ſpiritual things, yet have no ſpiritual joy; as a man may rejoyce in and about many worldly things, and yet his not a worldly joy; or as a man may have much knowledge about ſpiritual things, yet no ſpiritual knowledge of them; thus an hypocrite hath flaſhes of joy about ſpiritual things, but no ſpiritual joy: When a hypocrite hears a well ordered quick diſcourſe and diſcovery of the joyes and happineſs of heaven, of the grace and goodneſs of God, this from rational grounds may affect his heart, and ſo cauſe joy; but this joy of the hypocrite about ſpirituals, though it be better then his worldly joy, in regard of its object, yet it is no better in regard of its duration; for of this we may alſo conclude, 'tis but for a moment. As the hypocrite himſelf, ſo his joy is not built upon the rock, but upon the ſands; it is not a Maſter-joy, a joy that can carry him out when ſorrow cometh: A hypocrite cannot be as ſorrowing, yet alwayes rejoycing; he cannot (as Paul ſaith, Rom. 5.3.) rejoyce in tribulation, becauſe he is not indeed united unto Chriſt, the true Iſaac, or laughter of his people, the fountain of their joy. The hypocrites ſorrow will laſt for ever, but all his joyes are only for a moment.

Improbis in mundo tribuitur Jubilum, quia non diſſimulant quo gaudent, Hypocritis lætitia animo magis abſcondita, quam verbis ſignificata. Coc.

עדי רגע Ad inſtar puncti, ad momentum.

Licet vitam integram hominis duret humana fœlicitas, momentum durat.

Laſtly, Conſider the oppoſite ſtate which Zophar would have Job take notice of.

The triumphing of the wicked is ſhort, and the joy of the hypocrite is but for a moment.

Hence it follows that there are ſome whoſe triumphing, and whoſe joyes are permanent and ſtable: The triumphing of the godly is for ever, and the joy of the ſincere ſhall continue to everlaſting. The joy of the Saints here is everlaſting in the nature of it, though not in the actings of it; 'tis everlaſting, as everlaſting is oppoſed to a period, though not as to a pauſe. Their joy dieth not in this world, though ſometimes it be ſick, and languiſh. Some Saints have had their joy abiding in ſtrength, when themſelves were weak, and their joy not only alive, but lively as long as they lived; they have been carried to the grave in the embraces of Chriſt, and in the ſmiles of divine love. And as the moment of this life hath been a kind of eternity of joy to them, ſo eternity ſhall be to them but as a moment of joy; and yet every moment ſhall have (as it were) an eternity in it. Saints ſhall rejoyce for ever, yet their joy ſhall be alwayes as freſh and green as if new begun; as there ſhall be no removing of this joy, ſo no abatement of their ſweetneſs in the enjoyment of it.

VERS. 6,7,8,9.

Though his excellency mount up to the heavens, and his head reach up to the clouds.
Yet he ſhall periſh for ever, like his own dung; they which have ſeen him, ſhall ſay, Where is he?
He ſhall flee away as a dream, and ſhall not be found; yea, he ſhall be chaſed away as a viſion of the night.
The eye alſo which ſaw him, ſhall ſee him no more; neither ſhall his place any more behold him.

ZOphar having given his opinion about the vaniſhing proſperity of a wicked man, proceeds to amplifie and confirm it. He amplifies it,

Firſt, By an hyperbolical ſuppoſition, verſ. 6. Though his excellency mount up to the heavens, &c. The Antitheſis whereof is laid down, verſ. 7. Yet he ſhall periſh for ever, like his own dung, &c.

Secondly, He amplifies it by elegant ſimilitudes; Firſt, Of a dream. Secondly, Of a night viſion, verſ. 8. Both which are proſecuted, verſ. 9. The eye alſo which ſaw him, ſhall ſee him no more, &c.

Verſe 6. Though his excellency mount up to the heavens.

It is a ſtrong way of arguing, when we put the worſt of our caſe, and yet conclude it good. We ſhew our ſelves able to hold out in the worſt that is or can be, when we profeſs a ſtedfaſtneſs in that which is worſe then is or indeed can be.

It is alſo a ſtrong way of arguing, when we put the beſt of another mans caſe, and yet conclude it bad. He is not able to hold out in the beſt that is or may be, who cannot continue in that eſtate, which is better then any is, or indeed can be. Such is the intended ſtrength of Zophar's argument in this place.

Though his excellency mount up to the heavens.

The Vulgar renders, If his pride aſcend even up to heaven. The word in the original which we tranſlate Excellency, he tranſlates Pride. Properly it ſignifies that which is lifted up. There is an eaſie cognation between theſe two. For that which is high, or he who lifts up himſelf high, may be ſaid to be proud. The Etymologie of the Latine word, to be proud, is to go over another, or to go above him. And uſually they who are exalted above others, in high places of worldly honour and excellency, are alſo lifted up with pride. A lowly ſpirit in a high place, is very rarely found. The Hebrew word for a Prince, is derived from this Root, both becauſe all Princes are exalted above the ordinary ſort of men, and becauſe moſt Princes are proud in the exalting of themſelves. The word is uſed often in a good ſence, as Pſal. 62.4. They only conſult to caſt him down from his excellency: That is, to caſt David from that Royal Throne to which God had exalted him.

Si aſcenderit uſq; ad cœlum ſuperbia ejus. Vulg.

Superbire eſt ſuper ire.

Princeps dicitur נשא quaſi elevatus aut ſublimis.

The Septuagint tranſlate, If his gifts aſcend up to heaven. Gifts may be expreſſed by this word, becauſe they do indeed lift him up in honour who is endued with them; as alſo becauſe we are very apt to be lifted up with gifts; as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh, 1 Cor. 8.1. Knowledge puffeth up, but charity edifieth. This ſence is very ſuitable to Zophar's diſcourſe of a hypocrite, who, though he hath not ſo much as one talent of true Grace, yet he may have five, yea ten talents of gifts; the gift of Prayer, the gift of Propheſie, the gift of utterance, &c. And with theſe gifts of heaven he is exalted and impregnated with thoſe worſt fumes of hell, Pride and Self-conceit.

Si aſcenderint in cœlū dona ejus. Sept.

This form of ſpeaking, to mount up to heaven, implies a gradation of four ſteps.

Firſt, Heaven is high. Therefore to mount up to heaven, is to be in a high ſtate of honour and excellency.

Secondly, Heaven is higheſt, and therefore to mount up to heaven, notes the higheſt aſcent and elevation which man is capable of, or is attainable here on earth. When thoſe Builders (Gen. 11.4.) conſulted and reſolved, Go to, let us build a City and a Tower, whoſe top may reach to heaven, their purpoſe and plot was to build a Tower as high as it could poſſibly be builded. When Bibulus was extolled by the higheſt praiſes and acclamations of the people, Cicero the Orator ſpeaks it thus, Bibulus is in heaven. The Poet ſpeaks the ſame language, With my exalted head I will touch the Stars. As to be caſt down to hell, ſignifies in Scripture-phraſe the loweſt dejection or depreſſion; ſo to be lifted up to heaven, the higheſt exaltation. We find theſe two ſet in oppoſition (Iſa. 14.13,14.) Thou (meaning the proud Aſſyrian) haſt ſaid in thy heart, I will aſcend into heaven, I will exalt my Throne above the Stars of God, I will aſcend above the heights of the clouds, I will be like the moſt high. But thou ſhalt be brought down to hell, to the ſides of the pit, that is, thou ſhalt be caſt into the loweſt condition, as thou haſt aſpired to the higheſt. And thus Chriſt himſelf threatens that city which did not repent at the ſight of his mighty works(Mat. 11.23.) And thou Capernaum, which art exalted to heaven, ſhalt be brought down to hell. Capernaum was lifted up both in her own opinion, and by thoſe real priviledges, the perſonal preſence of Chriſt there, his frequent preaching and Miracles; the contempt or non-improvement of theſe ripened her for ruine, bringing her to deſtruction, which looked like a hell upon earth, and ſweeping her at laſt from the face of the earth into that utter deſtruction in hell. Hell notes the loweſt degree of temporal as well as eternal miſery. And heaven notes the higheſt degree of temporal as well as of eternal happineſs.

Bibulus in cœlo eſt. Cic. ad Attic.

Sublimi feriam ſidera vertice. Hor.

Thirdly (which is more) to mount up to heaven, implies a kind of rivality with God in happineſs, or man preſuming to ſomewhat more then a man, a kind of Divinity among men. They who can patiently receive ſuch flattery as the Tyrians and Zidonians with the reſt of that throng beſtowed upon Herod, crying out, The voyce of God and not of man (Acts12.22.)and they eſpecially who affect or require to be adored as God, as m any Princes and very many of thoſe Luciferian Popes have done, theſe indeed may be ſaid to mount their excellency unto heaven, though in ſo doing, they have had but a phanſie of exaltation unto heaven, and have really debaſed themſelves below the earth; yea (as it follows in the next verſe) they have become in the eſteem of God and of Godly men, baſer then their own dung. For as that honour which is due and but commenſurate unto man, exalts and ennobles him that receives it, ſo every exceſs, eſpecially this ſpoken of (which is the moſt irregular and exorbitant exceſs) ſhames and depreſſeth him.

Fourthly,*To mount up to heaven,*carrieth in it not only the ſignification of a high, or of the higheſt eſtate on earth, but alſo of that, which is more then the earth can produce or advance any man unto, a certain, yea, an unchangeable and an unremoveable eſtate. There are no changes in heaven, and only there (except in hell) there are none. This earthly world paſſeth away,and the faſhion of it; therefore to have an excellency mounted up to heaven, is a preſumption to be (what God can make, and hath promiſed to make his Jacob or choſen people to be) an eternal excellency.

Take in theſe four aſcents, and then conceive how comprehenſive a ſuppoſition Zophar makes of the wicked mans worldly felicity, in theſe words, Though his excellency mount up to heaven. The next and laſt clauſe of the verſe is alſo of the ſame largeneſs and comprehenſion.

And his head reach unto the clouds.

The word properly ſignifies thick and dark clouds. As if, ſay ſome, Zophar would intimate thus much; Though the wicked man lift up his head above all ſtorms and darkneſs, and ſeemeth to himſelf a ſuperiour to all dangers and diſaſters, yet he ſhall periſh. The head of a wicked man is above the clouds of heaven in aſpiring projects, while his heart is among or below the clods of the earth in covetous and curſed practices. Yea, he kicks at the God of heaven with his heel, while his head reacheth unto the clouds of heaven. While he ſaith in his heart, I will aſcend above the clouds of heaven, I will be like the moſt High (Iſa. 14. 14.) He ſets himſelf as an enemy, and is moſt unlike to the moſt High. Heathens have often perſonated proud men in ſuch a ſtile as Zophar expreſſeth them in, walking like the ſtars, and reaching the poles of heaven with their head. As when the Pſalmiſt would ſhew the ſuper-eminency of the mercy and faithfulneſs of God, he ſaith (Pſal. 36. 5.) Thy mercy, O Lord, is in the heavens, and thy faithfulneſs reacheth unto the clouds. So to ſhew the ſuper-eminency of the pride and folly of man, he is deſcribed mounting to the heavens, and reaching out his head unto the clouds.

עב Nubes obſcurior & craſſior; nubes etiam à ſuperiori radice dicuntur Neſhim, quaſi elevationes.

Æqualis aſtris gradior, & cunctos ſuper, altum ſuperbo vertice attingens polum. Sen. in Theiſt.

This whole alluſion may be unto a Tree, full and highgrown, like an Oak, or a Cedar of Lebanon. To which the flouriſhing condition of the Amorite is compared (Amos 2.9.) I (ſaith the Lord) deſtroyed the Amorite before them, whoſe height was like the height of the Cedars, and he was ſtrong as the Oaks. Nebuchadnezzar, the greateſt Monarch then living, was repreſented to himſelf in a dream under this ſimilitude of a Tree, the height whereof was great, and whoſe height reached unto heaven (Dan. 4. 10, 11.) Thus Daniel interprets it (verſ. 22.) It is thou, O King, that art grown and become ſtrong, for thy greatneſs is grown, and reacheth unto heaven, and thy dominion to the end of the earth. When a mans dominion reacheth to the end of the earth, he in the ſtricteſt ſence of this alluſive language, may be ſaid (as to a worldly felicity) to reach his greatneſs, or that his greatneſs reacheth unto heaven. Hence obſerve, > Firſt, A wicked man may get to the higheſt of worldly heights, to the greateſt of a worldly greatneſs.

There is nothing of this world ſo good, but an evil man may enjoy it. No power or honour on earth ſo high, but he may reach after and attain it, whoſe portion is in the loweſt hell. He may have any thing of, or all things upon the earth, about him, who hath nothing of heaven in him. His excellency may mount up to heaven, who hath not the leaſt ſhare in the leaſt heavenly excellency. Though Zophar's ſuppoſition be of impoſſibilities in the letter, yet according to the figure and tendency of them, they are very poſſible, yea, and have been often reduced to act by many Inſtances, both of prophane perſons and of hypocrites. advanced as high as the world could ſet them, or ſet upon the higheſt places and pinacles of power on the earth; and what is that but, in Zophar's ſtile, to be lifted up to heaven, and reach the clouds. Obſerve,

> Secondly, The higheſt worldly height and greatneſs cannot ſecure a wicked man againſt the hand of God.

The Lord by his Prophet (Iſa. 14. 15.) ſpeaks thus to that proud Prince, who would aſcend above the heights of the clouds, yet thou ſhalt be brought down. Climbing high hath been the cauſe of many a mans fall, it never protected any man from falling. Edom is threatned in the ſame Language by the Prophet Obadiah (verſ. 3,4.) The pride of thine heart hath deceived thee, thou that dwelleſt in the clefts of the rocks, whoſe habitation is high, who ſaith in his heart, who ſhall bring me down to the ground? Though thou exalt thy ſelf as the Eagle, and though thou ſet thy neſt above the Stars, thence will I bring thee down, ſaith the Lord. Poſſibly there was no man on earth that durſt accept Edom's challenge, when he thus threw down his Gauntlet, and bid defiance in his heart to all the powers of the world; Who ſhall bring me down to the ground? But preſently the Lord accepted (or rather diſdained) the challenge, and undertook that vain boaſter upon higher terms then himſelf propoſed; not only though thou dwelleſt in the clefts of the rock, but, though thou ſet thy neſt (where no man ever ſet his neſt) above the ſtars, yet thence will I bring thee down. God is the high and lofty one (Iſa. 57. 15.) And therefore the loftineſs of man ſhall be bowed down, and the haughtineſs of men ſhall be made low (Iſa. 2. 17.) God is the high one, and he inhabiteth Eternity, that is, he is eternally high, his happineſs is as ſteady as it is lofty. But the higheſt of men (when they inhabit their higheſt longeſt) do but inhabit time; and moſt that are high, inhabit but a little time; yea, commonly they who are higheſt, inhabit the leaſt time. The triumphing of the wicked is ſhort. Men are high, but their time is in his hand who is higher then the higheſt; who is not only high as the heavens (which is the utmoſt ſtretch of mans ambition) but higher then the heavens; and not only higher then the heavens, but the maker of the heavens. And as it is the honour of God to exalt them who are low, ſo to abaſe thoſe who are exalted. He caſteth down the mighty from their ſeats, but exalteth the humble and meek. Many have ſtood faſter by caſting themſelves down before them; but none have ſtood by lifting up themſelves againſt him. As a godly man needeth not to fear, though he walk in the very valley of the ſhadow of death (Pſal. 23.4.) So a wicked man hath cauſe enough to fear, and then to fear moſt, when he walketh upon the tops of the mountains, and ſets his foot upon the hills. This Zophar aſſures us in the next verſe.

Verſe 7. Yet ſhall he periſh for ever like his own dung.

The Septuagint renders theſe words paraphraſtically; For when he ſeemeth to be eſtabliſhed, then he ſhall periſh to the end: The word carrieth total periſhing, as well as the adjunct of time, for ever, ſpeaks it final. The word comes from a root ſignifying to overcome. For ever overcomes all. That which periſheth for ever, can never be recovered from periſhing. All ſhall be loſt, and it ſhall be alwayes loſt; his wound ſhall know of no healing, He ſhall periſh, not to a not-being, but from being what once he was. He ſhall neither be, nor be any more accounted, happy.

Ὅταν γὰρ δοκῇ ἤδη κατεσχηκέναι, τότε εἰς τέλος ἀπολεῖται. Sept.

And as he ſhall periſh utterly, ſo he ſhall periſh baſely, not only ſhall miſery be upon him, but contempt; He ſhall periſh

גלל Stercus à convolutione.

Like his own dung.] And becauſe the word which we render dung, ſignifies to turn or roll together, in its original. Therefore ſome tranſlate here, He ſhall periſh, as ſoon as turned about. Mr. Broughton gives that ſence, rendering thus; Turning a little he falls for ever. But our reading hath a fuller, though that alſo hath a true ſence in it. He ſhall periſh like his own dung. What is more baſe then dung? Becauſe Idols or falſe Gods, are the baſeſt and moſt abominable things in the world, they are therefore expreſſed by this word in the Hebrew; As if we ſhould call them, Dung-gods, or ſtinking dunghil-gods, fit only to be thrown away, and ſhovell'd out of the world. For nothing makes a thing indeed ſo bad as an ambition that it ſhould be accounted that which is beſt, when it hath not the leaſt good in it. An Idol is accounted God, who is the higheſt and infinitely the moſt perfect being, when as in truth, it hath no being at all, or is as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh, nothing in the world. And hence alſo hypocriſie is juſtly called the worſt of ſins, becauſe it would be taken for grace, or reckoned for that which is the gathering together of all Graces, Holineſs. Now as the Scripture calleth Idols dung, compared with God, or as being honoured (to whom they are ſo unlike) with the like priviledges of worſhip and dependence, as God is: ſo, all our real inherent righteouſneſs, yea all things compared with Chriſt and our union with him upon Goſpel Termes, are alſo called dung (Phil. 3.8,9.) When the Apoſtle would teſtifie with what holy indignation he rejected thoſe things which were good in themſelves, when joyned with, and taken in as a ſupplement to the pure worthineſs of Chriſt, for our acceptance and Juſtification before God; he ſaith, I count them but dung, that I may win Chriſt, and be found in him, not having mine own righteouſneſs. Thus any thing which either is in it ſelf, or comparatively to ſomewhat elſe, moſt vile, is wrapt up in this Title, Dung. The Lord threatens the Houſe of Jeroboam to bring evil upon it, and (ſaith the Lord) I will take away the remnant of the houſe of Jeroboam, as a man taketh away dung, till it be all gone (1 King. 14. 10.) Dung is filthy and noyſom, and becauſe (as in homogeneal bodies) the leaſt part of dung hath in it the nature of the whole, therefore when we take it away, we take it all away. A little of it offends and ſtinks, and therefore we ceaſe not ſweeping and removing it till it be all gone. The leaſt of that which is naught is too much and too bad, unleſs it be all gone, we have the trouble of its all. The Lord hath a beſom very fit for this dung (Iſa. 14.23.) I will ſweep it with the beſom of deſtruction, ſaith the Lord of hoſts. And when the Lord would teſtifie with how much loathing he rejected the ſacrifices and ſolemn ſervices of the Jews, becauſe of their hypocriſie and formality; he tells them by the Prophet (Mal. 3. 2.) I will ſpread dung upon your faces, even the dung of your ſolemn feaſts, and one ſhall take you away with it. The beſt things corrupted or corruptly uſed, are worſt. The ordinances of God are pure, but to the unbelieving all things are impure. God becomes droſs, and holy things but dung to them who are ſo. Their ſervices are reputed ſo, and their perſons ſhall periſh ſo, as the Pſalmiſt ſpeaks of the Midianites, of Siſera and of Jabin, who periſhed at Endor, and became as Dung for the earth (Pſal. 83. 10.) Thus Zophar concludes of the wicked, ſpecially including Job (whom ſome perſonate as ſitting upon a dunghil) that he ſhould periſh for ever as dung, the vileſt excrement, and which holds out yet more abhorrency in it.

Stercus hominis extremæ abjectionis & contemptus ſymbolum.

As his own dung.] The dung of ſome creatures is a perfume, and gives a delightful ſmell; the dung of many creatures is Medicinable and Phyſical; the dung of almoſt all creatures is ſome way or other profitable and uſeful; but the dung of man, or a mans own dung, is both uſeleſs and contemptible, loathſom and noyſom. When railing Rabſhakeh would expreſs the utmoſt extremity of famine, to which Jeruſalem ſhould be reduced; he ſaith (2 Kings 18. 27.) Hath my Maſter ſent me to thy Maſter, and to thee, hath he not ſent me to the men which ſit on the wall, that they may eat their own dung, and drink their own piſs with you? Implying, that if they preſently ſubmitted not, they ſhould quickly feel the utmoſt miſeries of hunger and thirſt, and be forced (which is an utter abomination to the apprehenſion of man) to take in what they had caſt out, and be glad to ſtop the cry of their appetite with that, at which formerly they were wont to ſtop their noſes. Ezekiel (to typifie a dreadful judgment) was commanded (among other things concurring in that woful ſcene) to bake his bread with dung that cometh out of man in their ſight. And becauſe this was very grievous to the Prophet, therefore though his uſing dung to bake bread with, could not be diſpenced with, yet (by way of favour) the Lord condeſcended to a commutation of the dung (Ezek. 4. 15.) Then he ſaid unto me, lo, I have given thee cows dung for mans dung, and thou ſhalt prepare thy bread therewith. Now if it were ſo loathſom to prepare or bake bread with mans dung, how loathſom is it to eat mans dung in ſtead of bread? All dung is vile, mans dung is vileſt. To periſh as dung, notes a very contemptible condition; but for a man to periſh as his own dung, is to be caſt into the loweſt imaginable degree of contempt. He ſhall periſh for ever as his own dung.

Hence obſerve, Firſt, Wicked men ſhall periſh.

They ſhall not only be troubled, but ruin'd. We (ſaith the Apoſtle of himſelf and fellow-Saints in ſuffering, 2 Cor. 4. 8, 9.) are troubled on every ſide, but not deſtroyed. Trouble ſo far as tryal and correction is the portion of the godly, but trouble to deſtruction and perdition, is the lot of the wicked.

Secondly note, Wicked men periſh finally.

They periſh for ever, yea they ſhall be for ever periſhing. They ſeldom recover when they are down, or riſe when they fall in this life; but none of them ſhall riſe or recover in the next. The Church ſaith, Rejoyce not againſt me, O mine enemy, when I fall I ſhall riſe; when I ſit in darkneſs, the Lord ſhall be a light unto me (Mich. 7. 8.) But the wicked have cauſe to mourn when they fall, not only becauſe they are fallen, but becauſe they ſhall riſe no more, and being once in that darkneſs, they ſhall never ſee light. Some have ſaid (how uncomfortably and erroneouſly is no place here to diſcuſs) that a godly man may fall from grace totally and finally; but that wicked men perſevering in ſin, ſhall fall ſo, both from their hopes and comforts, is aſſured us by the truth of God.

Thirdly obſerve, Wicked men ſhall periſh diſgracefully, as dung, as their own dung.

Their memory ſhall rot, and nothing ſhall remain of them but a ſtink or an unpleaſing ſavour. It is recorded of King Jehoram (2 Chron. 21. 20.) that he died undeſired. Many wicked men die not only undeſired, but abhorred: As the Prophet Iſaiah concludes (Chap. 66. 24.) They ſhall go forth and look upon the carkaſſes of the men that have tranſgreſſed againſt me: for their worm ſhall not die, neither ſhall their fire be quenched, and they ſhall be an abhorring to all fleſh. It is ſome abatement of miſery to find pity, but to be at once deſtroyed and abhorred, or which is more, to be an abhorring, eſpecially an abhorring to all fleſh, is perfect miſery. There are few men ſo bad but now they are eſteemed by ſome; but ere long they ſhall be abhorred of all. And though all who ſee their miſery ſhall abhor them, yet the perfection of their miſery ſhall not be ſeen; as Zophar implieth in the latter part of this verſe.

They which have ſeen him, ſhall ſay, Where is he?

To be ſeen may be taken two wayes.

Firſt, Largely or vulgarly, for the bare beholding or view which we have of any thing or perſon.

Secondly, Strictly or ſpecially, to ſee with reverence and reſpect, with much intention and obſervation; or to be ſeen as a wonder, with much aſtoniſhment and admiration. What is it that either ambition or hypocriſie deſires ſo much as to be ſeen, and pointed at, there's the man? The Phariſees (who were hypocrites of the higheſt form) did all to be ſeen of men (Mat. 6. 5.) If the ambitious proud man act not in an open ſcene, and have not ſtore of ſpectators, all his coſt and projects miſcarry and are loſt. Who puts on his beſt cloaths, or makes himſelf very fine to ſtay at home, and ſit in a corner? It ſatisfieth not a proud man, that he ſeeth himſelf (for though many a man is proud in his own eyes, yet he never thinks his own eyes enow to ſee him) nor is he pleaſed to ſtand in the view of a few, eſpecially of his friends and daily familiars, he muſt ſet himſelf in the Sun or in the ſight of all. He is never feaſted, till he conceives the many feaſting their eyes with ſeeing him. He would alwayes ſtand upon the ſtage, and be in pride (what the holy Apoſtles were made in ſcorn) a ſpectacle to the world, to Angels, and men. Some ſinners are all for ſecrecy, ſuch Job deſcribeth (Chap. 24. 13, 17.) They are of thoſe (the murderer, the theif, and the adulterer he means) that rebell againſt the light. The morning is to them as the ſhadow of death, if one know them, they are in the ſhadow of the terror of death. But there are another ſort of ſinners (the vain-glorious, the ambitious, the hypocrite I mean) who deſire nothing more then worldly light. To lie in obſcurity, is to them as the ſhadow of death, if one know them not (as to their appearances) if no man ſee them, they are in the ſhadow of the terror of death: Popularity is the Element in which this ſort of men live; take them out of it, you take them out of the world. A hypocrite dies, unleſs (as Jehu deſired) you come and ſee his zeal for the Lord of hoaſts. A proud man is quite defunct and diſpirited, unleſs you take notice of his port, and come ſee how large a ſail his veſſel beareth in the world, how he is attended, how ſued and ſought unto. In reference to ſuch a ſight as this, I ſuppoſe Zophar chiefly ſpeaks here, They who have ſeen him, that is, who have ſeen and admired his ſplendor and greatneſs, even theſe ſhall ſay,

Pulchrum eſt ſpectari & digito monſtrarier hic eſt.

Irritamentum eſt omnium in qua inſanimus Admirator & Conſcius, Ambitio ſcenam deſiderat. Sen. Epiſt. 94. Ne concupiſcamus efficies ſi ne oſtendamus effeceris. Id.

Where is he?] He who was lately a mark of honour in every mans eye, he who was lately ſo great and ſpreading, that he over-ſhadowed all, and you could ſcarce ſee any man for him; is now diminiſhed into an Atom, which no man can ſee; he is now to be numbred (though not in his nature, yet as to his former ſtate) among inviſibles: The man is not to be ſeen, they who have ſeen him ſhall ſay, Where is he? And they ſhall ſay this firſt in ſcorn; as thoſe prophane enemies reproached holy David with his God, Saying daily (Pſal. 42. 10.) where is now thy God? Thou didſt not only promiſe but aſſure thy ſelf of help from him, haſt thou not boaſted of him, as thy ſtrength, thy buckler, thy high tower, and thy deliverer? Thus thou didſt phanſie thy god, and pleaſe thy ſelf in theſe high Elogium's of him, and delightful dreams of deliverance by him; but where is he? As theſe (I ſay) ſpake prophanely and blaſphemouſly of the great and faithful God, ſo we may ſpeak truly and ſoberly of the greateſt among faithleſs men, where are they? Or where is he? Where is that rich oppreſſor? Where is that ambitious Prince? Where is t'other cunning Polititian, what's become of them and their wealth, of them and their honour, of them and their wit and wiſdom?

They ſhall ſay this, ſecondly, in wonder and aſtoniſhment, at the ſtrangeneſs of his fall, and the totality of his deſtruction. Men ſhall be amazed to ſee him at ſuch an ebb, at ſuch a dead low water, who lately ſwell'd over all banks with ſuch a ſpring-tide of proſperity. Men ſhall be amazed to ſee him groveling in a valley, who ſo lately walked upon the hills, and neſted among the Stars. This ſhall make them ſay, Where is he? What, is he there? O the vanity of man! O the uncertainty of all worldy happineſs! We find ſuch queries, filled with this double mixture of ſcorn and wonder, propheſied concerning Babylon (Iſa. 14. 4, 12, 16.) Thou ſhalt take up this proverb againſt the King of Babylon, and ſay, How hath the oppreſſor ceaſed? The golden City ceaſed? How art thou fallen from heaven, O Lucifer, ſon of the morning? How art thou cut down to the ground, which didſt weaken the Nations? They that ſee thee ſhall narrowly look upon thee, and conſider thee, ſaying, Is this the man that made the earth to tremble, that did ſhake Kingdoms; That made the world as a wilderneſs, and deſtroyed the Cities thereof. Is this the man that did theſe things? Is this he? How like a wilderneſs he looks himſelf? Behold how he ſhakes and trembles? Behold in how ſordid and low a condition he now lies proſtrate? He is now ſo little, that no man can tell what to make of him, or in what place he is to be found; he is now not only like a river running under ground, but quite exhaled and dried up, in ſo much that all may ſay, Where is he?

Hence obſerve, The ſin of many men is viſible, and may be read in the ſpecial judgments which are brought upon them.

The Lord is righteous in all his judgments, and he is (as we may ſay with reverence) even curious in ſome of them. What more exact and ſutable, then to ſee vain-glory puniſhed with obſcurity; and that they ſhould be No-body's in the world, who had an itch not only to be Some-body's (which hath a ſpice of ambition in it) but the Only-body's in the world? What more ſutable then that they whoſe greateſt deſire was to be ſeen and taken notice of every where and by every one, ſhould be reduced to ſuch a little, to ſuch a nothing, that no man can ſee where they are? Hypocrites do all to be ſeen, and anon themſelves are not to be ſeen. Honour me before the people, ſay the ſons of pride and ambition; and anon all the people ſee and ſcorn them, or ſcorn at them becauſe they cannot be ſeen. They love the uppermoſt ſeats at the Table, and greetings in the Market-place, and anon themſelves have not a Table to ſit at, and are the cheapeſt ware, yea the traſh and refuſe of all the Market.

Licet arma vacent ceſſentque doli, ſidant ipſo pondere magna, ceditq; oneri fortuna ſuo. Sen. in Agamem.

Now, beſides the nature of worldly things and ſtates in themſelves (which are all ſubject to change, and the greater any worldly thing is, the more ſubject to change and to oppreſs it ſelf with its own weight, as the very Heathens have often told us; I ſay, beſides what is intrinſecal to the nature of worldly things) we muſt chiefly aſcribe theſe eminent changes to the ſpecial providence of God, who being moſt high himſelf, and though inviſible, yet only to be ſeen and adored in all we have or are, cannot bear it to ſee the creature ſet up himſelf to be ſeen. God would draw, (and it is his due) all eyes and hearts to himſelf, and therefore he will not long endure thoſe who affect the drawing of mens eyes upon themſelves. The eye of God will not ſpare thoſe who either think highly of themſelves, or love to be highly thought of by others. The Lord is pleaſed to ſet ſome of his ſervants not only high among men, but high in the hearts and thoughts of men; yet he is highly diſpleaſed when they or any in a vain oſtentation make it their buſineſs to be ſo. And they who would thus be ſeen and exalted, ſhall ſee a day wherein (through their fall) God alone will be exalted. When any are deſigning to build high and reach Heaven with their Towers, (as they did, Gen. 11.) Then the Lord ſaith, Go to, let us go down and confound their language. Wo to high ſpirits and their high Towers when God ſaith, I will go down, for then both they and their Towers ſhall aſſuredly go down. No creature can ſtand when once God goes thus down. If God appear thus where is man? How and whether is he gone? Zophar ſeems to anſwer theſe queſtions in the next words.

Verſ. 8. He ſhall fly away as a dream, and ſhall not be found, yea he ſhall be chaſed away as a viſion of the night.

This verſe contains two ſimilitudes, both which illuſtrate that one poſition which Zophar laid down in the two former verſes, That wicked men ſhall periſh for ever, and be ſeen no more.

He ſhall fly away.] To run is more then to go, and to fly is more then to run. Wings are too nimble for legs, and therefore in Scripture thoſe things which move or paſs from us with greateſt celerity (though they have no wings, yet) are ſaid to fly away. As for Ephraim (ſaith the Lord by the Prophet Hoſ. 9. 11.) their glory ſhall fly away like a bird, from the birth, and from the womb, and from the conception; that is, whatſoever Ephraim moſt gloried in, and that was the multitude of their people (according to the Propheſie of Jacob (Gen. 48. 19.) and the Etymology of their name (Gen. 41. 52.) This glory ſhall depart ſuddenly, their numbers ſhall ſoon be leſſened, either by the death of their coildren as ſoon as they are born, or by abortion in the womb as ſoon as they are formed, yea as ſoon as they are conceived. They who make ſuch haſt out of the world, that they die as ſoon as they began to live, may well be ſaid to fly from the birth, and from the womb, and from the conception. Thus ſaith

Zophar of the wicked man, He ſhall flie away. And how ſhall he fly? As a bird? That's very ſwiftly; and the original word implies the flying of a bird, but the ſimilitude leads to that which will out-fly a bird, A dream or viſion of the night. A bird, even the King of birds an Eagle is but a ſlug or as a ſlow-worm to a dream. This wicked man ſhall fly away,

As a dream.] We may expound it two wayes; Firſt, Of the dream it ſelf. Secondly, Of the thing dreamed. Though ſometime both the dream and thing dreamed are fixed, the dream in the phanſie, and the thing dreamed in its fulfilling; yet many times the dream it ſelf is ſpeedily gone (as 'twas from Nebuchadnezzar, Dan. 2.5, 8, 10.) and the thing dreamed rarely comes. Yet Interpreters carry it rather to the matter or ſubject of the dream, then to the dream it ſelf. Many can retain the memory of a dream, but the matter dreamt of (which poſſibly pleaſed them much while they ſlept) is fled, or proves no ſuch thing when they awake. The Prophet deſcribes this elegantly and fully (Iſa. 29.7,8.) And the multitude of all the Nations that fight againſt Arial, even all of them that fight againſt her and her mountains, and that diſtreſs her, ſhall be as a dream of a night viſion. It ſhall even be as when a hungry man dreameth, and behold he eateth, but he awaketh and his ſoul is empty; or as when a thirſty man dreameth, and behold he drinketh, but he awaketh and he is faint, and his ſoul hath appetite, &c. I may add, a beggar dreameth of Gold, but he awaketh, and his purſe is empty: The priſoner dreameth of liberty, but he awaketh and findeth himſelf in irons. Such is the wicked man in his proſperity; his joy is but the joy of a dreamer, which quickly vaniſheth. Hence the Ancients phanſied that a dream had wings like a bird of the Air. The Pſalmiſt having learned in the Sanctuary, that the wicked are ſet in ſlippery places, and that as in a moment they are utterly conſumed with terrors, concludes in anſwer to Zophars alluſion (Pſa. 73.20.) As a dream when one awaketh, ſo O Lord when thou awakeſt, thou ſhalt deſpiſe their image. When the Lord puts forth his power to the deſtruction of wicked men, then he is ſaid frequently in Scripture to awake. Now when the Lord is pleaſed thus to awake, he quickly awaketh wicked men out of their pleaſant waking dreams, and maketh them ſee that their felicity was but ſuppoſed and imaginary; for he ſhall deſpiſe their image, that is, he ſhall utterly ſpoil and make deſpicable, the painted pageant of their outward pomp. Which is elegantly called an Image, becauſe as an image it is a thing only to be looked upon, or for a ſhew. Though an image be made to the life, yet it hath no life in it; and ſo is valuable only for its appearance, not for its uſe. Such a dumb ſhew is the glitter and greatneſs of the world, and therefore rightly called, not only by the Holy Ghoſt, but by thoſe common Writers (who had any true judgment of the things of the world) an Image or an Idol; which alſo complies fully with the ſimilitude of a dream, in which the mind frames within it ſelf many images and repreſentations of things, which yet like Characters fairly drawn upon the ſand, are diſcompoſed and ſcattered by the next puff of wind. And becauſe an ordinary dream hath in it the leaſt, the ſhorteſt, and moſt uncertain enjoyment; therefore when we would ſhew that we never had the leaſt thought, or the leaſt to do about ſuch a thing we ſay proverbially, I did not ſo much as dream of it, or I had not ſo much as to do with it in a dream.

Antiqui ſomniū Deū fingebant volatilem & alitem. Bold.

Ne in ſomnio quidem, proverbialiter dicitur pro nulla ratione nullo tempore aliquid eſſe.

Hence obſerve, Firſt, The proſperity of a wicked man hath no real comfort in it.

There is no true ſatisfaction in a dream. And that which hath only a ſhadow or appearance of good in it, leaveth, when 'tis paſt and (as the Text ſpeaks) fled away, real impreſſions of evil. True ſorrows ſucceed imaginary joyes; and every man is made by ſo much the more unhappy, by how much he thought he had attained happineſs when indeed he had not. For, as thoſe things which have only an appearance of terror, are more terrible afar off then at hand; ſo thoſe things which have only an appearance of comfort, afflict more when they are afar off, then ever they comforted us when near at hand, and in a conceited poſſeſſion. As they who have been in a real poſſeſſion of good, ſo they who have had but an imagination of it, are more troubled when it is gone, then ever they ſhould have been, if they had never had it; diſappointments and failings of expectation about thoſe things which we hope to have, are as grievous, if not more grievous then the loſs of what we once really enjoyed. Now though a wicked man hath many good things while he proſpers, yet that which we properly call the dream of his proſperity, he never hath. For ſo much as he imagineth more in what he hath then is or can be in it (and ſo he alwayes doth) ſo much he dreameth.

Secondly note, The proſperity of a wicked man hath no tack or conſiſtence in it.

As a dream is not real, ſo it is not laſting. Many things which are real ſtay with us but a while, but thoſe things which are not real, cannot be ſaid to ſtay with us at all. I have from other Texts in this Book met with this point before, and therefore I ſhall not here ſtay upon it; yet there remains one clauſe more of this ſimilitude, which I ſhall only touch to heighten the intendment of it; He ſhall fly away as a dream,

And ſhall not be found.] When the Lord would ſhew how fully and clearly he pardoneth ſin, he ſaith (Jer. 50. 20.) In thoſe dayes, the iniquity of Judah ſhall be ſought for, and there ſhall be none; and the ſins of Judah, and they ſhall not be found; for I will pardon them whom I reſerve. Now as when a ſin is ſo pardoned that it cannot be found, it is an argument of the fulleſt pardon; ſo when a man or his proſperity is ſo fled and deſtroyed that neither can be fonnd, it is an argument of the fulleſt deſtruction. We may apply theſe words to both; the wicked man, his wealth and greatneſs ſhall ſo fly away, that neither of them ſhall be found. We may enquire as was ſaid in the former verſe; Where is he? And where is his? and find neither him nor his. What Peter ſaid to Simon Magus (Act. 8.20.) is verified of him, his money, his honour is periſhed with him; or as another Scripture ſpeaketh, his memorial is periſhed with him. And as if Zophar thought it too little to give but one illuſtration of this truth, he confirms it by a ſecond, which is yet of near cognation with that already opened, and therefore I ſhall but name it.

Yea he ſhall be chaſed away as a viſion of the night.

He ſhall fly as a bird (ſaid Zophar before) here he ſhall be chaſed as a beaſt; the former word implieth a voluntary motion, this a violent. He ſhall be chaſed away,

As a viſion of the night.] There are two ſorts of viſions, as to the time of their appearance. Firſt, Viſions of the day; Secondly, Of the night. Viſions of the day fix more ſtrongly upon us, and are more permanent, viſions of the night paſs ſooner out of our memory, and are more tranſient. Therefore to ſhew the vaniſhing ſtate of the wicked man more fully he compares him to a viſion of the night. A viſion hath ſomewhat in it beyond ordinary dreams. All viſions are accompanied with the repreſentation of ſome outward ſhape to the eye or phanſie which many dreams have not; as was further ſhewed, Chap. 4. 13. to which place I refer the Reader, and ſhall proceed to the next verſe which bring up the concluſion of both theſe Alluſions.

Verſ. 9. The eye which ſaw him ſhall ſee him no more, neither ſhall his place any more behold him.

Theſe words Zophar takes out of Job's mouth (who ſpake the ſame thing in his own caſe, Chap. 7. 8, 10.) as if he would caſt him for a wicked man by his own confeſſion, and turn what he had ſaid upon himſelf. For the ſence of the Text the Reader may conſult that Chapter, there being nothing in theſe words of any ſpecial obſervation, beyond what was there offer'd.

The letter of the Hebrew may be thus rendred, The eye hath ſeen, and ſhall not add. 'Tis uſual in Scripture-phraſe, to ſay that he adds to do a thing, which doth that again which he hath done once or often before. And becauſe the Original leaves out the object of this ſight; therefore ſome refer it to the night viſion; tranſlating thus, The eye alſo which ſaw it (ſc. the viſion) ſhall ſee it no more. As if he had ſaid, the wicked man is like a night viſion, which being once ſeen diſappears and is ſeen no more. We fix it upon the wicked man himſelf. The eye which hath ſeen him ſhall ſee him no more. They who ſaw him

Oculus vidit & non addit. Heb.

Ut ſit Apodoſis praecedentis ſimilitudinis.

flouriſhing ſhall ſee him fading, till he fade quite out of ſight.

Neither ſhall his place any more behold him.

Which words may be expounded by a double figure, both frequently uſed in the holy Scriptures. Firſt, By an Enallage, His place ſhall not ſee him; that is, he ſhall not ſee his place, or he ſhall not be ſeen in his place: Secondly, By a Proſopopeia, by which thoſe acts which are proper to living creatures, or the perſon of a man, are aſcribed to things without life. The ſum and ſence of all returns to that which hath been already obſerved, the total ruine and extirpation of the wicked man, whether hypocrite or prophane.

VERS. 10, 11.

His children ſhall ſeek to pleaſe the poor, and his hands ſhall reſtore their goods.
His bones are full of the ſin of his youth, which ſhall lie down with him in the duſt.

IN the former words Zophar expreſſed the fleeting proſperity, the uncertain happineſs of hypocrites and wicked men; here he goeth on to enumerate ſome of thoſe evils which overwhelm wicked men, when once their worldly ſtate begins to totter, and the tide of their outward proſperity to turn: The firſt evil which he reckoneth up falls upon the children of the wicked man.

Verſ. 10. His children ſhall ſeek to pleaſe the poor.

Theſe words, in the face and letter of them, ſeem to ſpeak the ingenuity and piety of the wicked mans children; is it not a vertue to be courteous, civil and charitable to the poor, eſpecially to be ſo courteous and charitable, as not only to relieve, but even to ſeek to pleaſe the poor? Induſtriouſly applying themſelves to their ſupport and help, who were unable to help themſelves. This ſounds like a rare virtue; but if we examine the matter further, we ſhall ſee a very great curſe wrapt up as the portion of the children of the wicked man, in that they are here ſaid, To ſeek to pleaſe the poor.

They ſhall ſeek to pleaſe.] It is but one word in the Hebrew, and the root of it ſignifies to favour, to comply with, to pleaſe, or to be pleaſed with; it is often uſed in reference to the ſacrifices which were offered to God when he either did, or did not accept of them (Pſal. 51.19.) Then ſhalt thou be pleaſed with the ſacrifices of righteouſneſs: and in the negative (Mal. 1.8.) Offer them to your Governor, will he accept them, will he be pleaſed? Read, Levit. 19.7. & 22.25. The word is uſed in the ſame ſence (Job 33.26.) He ſhall pray to God, and he will be favourable to him; he will ſhew him favour by deliverance from his affliction. The old Counſellers ſpake this language to Rehoboam (2 Chron. 10.7.) when he asked their advice how he ſhould anſwer the people that came to have the burden of their Taxes lightened, and their grievances redreſſed; they tell him, If thou ſpeakeſt favourably to this people (if thou be kind and pleaſe them as becomes a noble and gracious Prince) then they will be thy ſervants for ever. That Prince who hath got the love of his people, ſhall not want their ſervice: they will act obediently and ſerviceably unto thee, if thou doeſt but ſpeak favourably unto them; if thou doeſt but pleaſe them with good words, thou mayſt have thy pleaſure of them: So here, His children ſhall ſeek to pleaſe the poor; that is, they ſhall ambitiouſly, as it were, deſire the favour and friendſhip, the good will, and good word of the pooreſt; but how comes it to paſs, that theſe deſire to pleaſe the poor, and to have their favour? I anſwer, We are not to take it as if this ſprung from their charity or good nature, from the openneſs of their hearts, or compaſſion to the poor. Thus to pleaſe the poor is an act of Grace, at leaſt a very commendable work in us (as was intimated before) as well as it is a mercy to them. But when he ſaith, His children ſhall ſeek to pleaſe the poor, his meaning is, they ſhall be forced whether they will or no; they ſhall be neceſſitated to ſubmit to thoſe who are moſt neceſſitous.

רצה Favit, placuit, complacuit: propriè ſignificat gratum habere benevolentia proſequi.

The word which we render Poor, ſignifies thoſe that are ſpent and drawn dry; and it is ſometimes referred to the weakning of a man in his ſtrength, ſometimes to the weakning of his eſtate, when his purſe is drawn dry. Poor perſons are exhauſted perſons, ſuch whoſe veſſels are run down to the very lees; his children ſhall ſeek to pleaſe ſuch poor, the meaneſt of the poor.

דלים à דלל Hauſtus, exhauſtus fuit, viribus aut facultatibus.

The Vulgar reads theſe words thus, his children ſhall be waſted with poverty; prodigality waſteth the eſtate, and poverty waſteth the perſon. The reaſon of this reading is becauſe that tranſlator derives the word which we render to pleaſe, from a root which ſignifies to break, to ſpoil, to daſh one againſt another; ſo it is uſed (*Gen.*25.22.) The children ſtrugled in the womb, or daſhed one againſt another, as if they had been contending for place before they had a place in the open world. Thus here (ſaith he) his children ſhall be daſhed or waſted with poverty, or by the poor. When the poor riſe and rage, the rich cannot ſtand before them. The poor ſhall impoveriſh his children; the Septuagint renders it, The leſſer ones, the minors, perſons of the inferior and lower rank ſhall deſtroy his children. This tranſlation carrieth a clear ſence as to the mind of Zophar, and the ſcope of the place; it ſheweth the miſery of a wicked man to the full, to ſay, The poor ſhall deſtroy his children; the needy, the hungry ſhall devour and eat them up. There is a ſpecial finger of God in that, 'tis more then to ſay his children ſhall be deſtroyed by the mighty and ſtrong; as when a poor word pulleth down the ſtrength of ſin, and Satan, this advanceth the name of God. And the Apoſtle tells us, that the deſign of God, in ſending out his word in ſo mean a dreſs, and by ſuch powerleſs inſtruments, is, that his own power may be the more ſeen, and magnified. Thus when poor men ſubdue the mighty, the might and revenging power of God is in it. And as this ſpeaks the juſtice and power of God, ſo the miſery of thoſe men. To be oppreſſed by the poor is the foreſt oppreſſion (Prov. 2.3.) A poor man that oppreſſeth the poor, is like a ſweeping rain that leaveth no food.

Filii ejus atterentur egeſtate Vulg.

à רצץ Quod eſt conterere, confringere, quaſſare.

Abſtractum pro concreto; egeſtate, i. e. per egenos, q. d. viliſſimi in illos ſævient & dominentur. Pined.

Filios ejus diſperdant minores. Sept.

There is a ſecond reading which differs ſomewhat from ours; whereas we tranſlate, His children ſhall ſeek to pleaſe the poor, this ſaith, His children being poor ſhall pleaſe; that is, all ſhall be pleaſed to ſee his children poor; this hath a clear ſence, ſhewing the portion and puniſhment of a wicked man; every one ſhall like it well to ſee his children go a begging. The evil which befals them will be a kind of good to the beholders, and they will ſay, 'Tis well beſtowed. Yea, as ſome give the intendment of this rendring; The poor ſhall think themſelves well paid for all the wrong they have received, and the miſeries they have undergone, when they ſee his children in miſery. That curſe is threatned (Pſal. 109.12.) Let there be none to extend mercy to him, neither let there be any to pity his fatherleſs children; while all is pulled from him, and they left not worth a groat, none ſhall think them worthy of compaſſion, or beſtow a tear upon them. It is a great miſery when none grieve to ſee us in miſery. If ſympathy be no eaſe to the afflicted, yet it is an honour to them.

Filii ejus placebunt egeni.

But I ſhall pitch upon our own reading; The children of wicked men ſhall be brought ſo low, that they ſhall be glad to ſeek the favour and good will of thoſe who are poor; or thus, His children ſhall ſeek to appeaſe the poor, even thoſe poor whom their father wronged and oppreſſed. They ſhall be conſtrained to flatter and fawn upon thoſe, over whom their father inſulted, and upon whom he trampled. Which ſuites well with the next clauſe; And his hands ſhall reſtore their goods. The ſum of all is this, His children ſhall be poorer then the pooreſt, and more miſerable then the moſt miſerable.

Filii ejus placabunt mendicos vel pauperes. Reg. Pag. Mont.

Adeo miſeri erunt ut cogantur placare iratos, tenuis fortunæ homines. Vatabl.

Erunt pauperiores pauperibus & miſerrimis miſeriores.

Hence obſerve, That Children of evil parents fare ill, and are ſcourged as a ſcourge to their parents.

This point hath riſen from former paſſages, I ſhall only take notice of one dreadful example out of Scripture to verifie and illuſtrate it. We read (2 Kings 2.23, 24.) that more then forty children were deſtroyed by two ſhee-bears for mocking the Prophet Eliſha. Juſtine Martyr queries upon it; why did the Prophet call for revenge upon children, who hardly underſtand what they do, much leſs do any thing upon deſign? He anſwers, though we ſhould ſuppoſe they were children ſo young that they could not underſtand the evil of this action, yet having learned this from their parents, God ſent this judgment at once to puniſh

Voces ipſas pueri à parentibus edocti erant, quare puerorum clade parentes flagellavit. Illud enim aſcende calve, proſcindendi per detractionem Eliæ aſſumptionis gratia proferebant. q.d. abripiat te quoq; ſpiritus ut itidem à te liberemur. Juſt. Mart. queſt. 8.

the children and the parents; that they might be ſmitten in this deſtruction, which fell upon their children, becauſe they had given their children no better inſtruction, or rather becauſe they received ſuch bad inſtruction from them. For doubtleſs they had learned that ſcoffing language from their Elders, at leaſt by hearing them ſpeak ſo, if not by teaching them to ſpeak ſo; Go up thou bald head, go up thou bald head. Which ſcoff and reproach they caſt upon Eliſha in alluſion to the rapture or carrying up of Eliah; as if they had ſaid, Go thou up alſo to Heaven, even as Eliah did, that we may be rid of thee as well as we are of him. Children are apt to imitate their parents in every thing, but they are beſt at imitating thoſe things which are worſt. They quickly write after ill Copies. And they who imitate the moral evils of their Fathers, ſhall be ſure to inherit their penal evils, and have new ones prepared for them.

> Secondly obſerve, It is a great puniſhment upon parents, either to ſee their children come to miſery in the world, or if miſery come upon their children after themſelves are gone out of the world.

Though Zophar here deſcribes the miſery of the wicked mans children, yet his ſcope is to ſet forth the miſery of their parents, who are ſmitten upon their childrens backs. When Noah awoke from his Wine, and knew what his younger ſon had done unto him, as alſo how Cham ſaw his nakedneſs, and mocked, he (not out of a vain paſſion as ſome parents will when their children diſpleaſe them, but) by divine inſpiration, or being fill'd with a prophetick ſpirit, pronounceth a curſe upon him; yet he put his ſons name into the curſe, not his: And he ſaid, Curſed be Canaan (Gen. 9. 24, 25.) why Canaan? It was Cham the father of Canaan that ſinned, yet when Noah comes to curſe, he doth not ſay, curſed be Cham, but Canaan; not that Canaan ſhould be curſed, and his father eſcape, but it was to ſhew that Cham ſhould certainly be under a curſe; for ſeeing his poſterity ſhould be under a curſe, then much more he; for as much as beſides what fell upon him perſonally, the curſe falling upon his poſterity, was alſo his. When a curſe falls upon children the father is curſed, as in the bleſſing of the children the father is bleſſed (Gen. 48. 15, 16.) Joſeph brought his two ſons Manaſſeth and Ephraim to his aged father Jacob, that they might receive his bleſſing, who laying his hands upon their heads, Bleſſed Joſeph, and ſaid, God before whom my fathers Abraham and Iſaac did walk, the God which fed me all my life long unto this day, The Angel which redeemed me from all evil, bleſs the lads. Now as Jacob in bleſſing the children of Joſeph, bleſſed Joſeph himſelf; ſo Noah in curſing the children of Cham, curſed Cham himſelf. A very Heathen hath obſerved concerning the Tyrant Dyoniſius, that though he eſcaped free and untoucht in perſon from the vengeance which his ſacrilegious wickedneſs deſerved; yet his ſons were involved in ſo much miſery, that in them he being paſt feeling ſuffered, and being dead paid dearly enough for his ſtoln dainties. The light of nature, as well as Scripture, tells us that evils falling on poſterity are reckoned upon the parents ſcore.

Valerius, lib. 1. cap. 2.

> Thirdly obſerve, It is an eminent piece of divine juſtice when either they or the children of ſuch as have afflicted others, and made them poor, are forced to ſue, and ſubmit to them, though poor, and to ſeek their favour.

This piece of divine retaliation the Prophet doth at once threaten, and promiſe; he threatens the enemy with it, and makes a promiſe of it to the children of God. (Iſa. 60. 14.) The ſons alſo of them that afflicted thee ſhall come bending unto thee, and they that deſpiſed thee ſhall bow themſelves down at the ſoles of thy feet, and they ſhall call thee the City of the Lord, the Zion of the holy one of Iſrael. This is the honour that ſhall be done to Zion, and the ſhame that ſhall fall on Zions enemies. The poſterity of thoſe that afflicted Zion ſhall come bending to her. We have a promiſe near that (Rev. 3. 9.) Behold, I will make them of the Synagogue of Satan (who are they? Such as oppoſe the Church of God, bitter yet ſecret enemies to Chriſt) which ſay they are Jews, and are not, but do lie; Behold, I will make them to come and worſhip at thy feet, and to know that I have loved thee. Some will never know nor acknowledge, that God loveth his people, till themſelves are put under their feet, and ſubdued to their power. 'Tis propheſied (Pſal. 45. 15.) The rich among the people ſhall intreat thy favour. That Pſalm holds out the effect of grace; but when the Lord ſaith in this propheſie, I will make them come, and worſhip at thy feet; it implies only an act of Juſtice. They who have ſcorned and trampled thee under their impure feet, ſhall fall down at thy feet and give thee reverence.

> Fourthly obſerve, That man is brought to the loweſt ſtate of affliction who is put to ſeek the favour of thoſe who are low; how poor are they who ſeek to pleaſe the poor?

It was the curſe of Cham, A ſervant of ſervants ſhall he be; that is, he ſhall ſeek and ſubmit to thoſe who are meaneſt; to be a ſervant is to be in a mean low condition, and therefore Chriſt is ſaid to humble himſelf when he took upon him the form of a ſervant. To be a ſervant of Rulers and great ones is to be leſſened; but to be a ſervant of ſervants is to be as low as low can be. And therefore Abigail ſpake of her ſelf at the loweſt rate when David ſent for her to be his wife and companion (1 Sam. 25. 41.) Behold let thy handmaid be a ſervant to waſh the feet of the ſervants of my Lord. Solomon tells us (Prov. 29. 26.) That all men ſeek the Rulers favour. When men are in great place and power, no wonder to ſee all ſeek to them; but to ſee a great throng, at the door of a poor man, to ſee many wait and attend at his gates, putting up petitions to him, doth it not conclude that theſe ſuiters are brought to a very low conditon? yet God will make thoſe who have been proud and lifted up, ſtoop thus low. I find Job aggravating his ſorrow in a ſtrain near this; for having ſaid at the cloſe of Chap. 29. I choſe out their way, and ſate chief, and dwelt as a King in the Army; but now (as he begins Chap. 30.) they that are younger then I have me in deriſion, whoſe fathers I would have diſdained to have ſet with the dogs of my flock. As to be derided and deſpiſed by thoſe that are our inferiors, is an affliction in a high condition; ſo much more to be forced to ſubmit to them and ſeek their favour. And this not only becauſe it is a diſparagement to condeſcend to the pleaſing of thoſe who are poor, and inferior, but becauſe it is ſo hard to pleaſe them. Uſually the lower ſort of people are people of a low ſpirit. And commonly they who are Maſters of no eſtate, are Maſters but of little reaſon or ingenuity; how rude a thing is the ragged multitude? How hard a task hath he, who muſt make it his buſineſs to pleaſe them? 'Tis no ſmall skill and toil to pleaſe ſome Princes and rich ones; wiſe men have their humors ſometimes, which will neither ſuffer them to be eaſily pacified towards thoſe who have offended them, nor pleaſed with thoſe that ſerve them. But how ſhall we pleaſe them at any time who ſeldom if at all know what will pleaſe themſelves; and who through their want of breeding and diſcretion inſult over and grow upon thoſe moſt who ſeek moſt to pleaſe. Any man of a lowly mind may eaſily be pleaſed. But men of low eſtates are for the moſt part, hardeſt to be pleaſed. To pleaſe ſome is a pleaſure; but he ſhall never want work or trouble, who is forced (as theſe in the Text) to pleaſe the poor.

And his hands ſhall reſtore their goods.

Some render, For his hands, &c. making this clauſe the reaſon of the former, why the wicked mans children ſhould be in ſo low a condition as to pleaſe the poor, even becauſe their father before his death reſtored all his ill gotten goods to the right owners, and ſo had nothing left in ſtock, wherewith to make proviſion for them his children.

To reſtore is a good work; ſhall the wicked man be in this good mind, to reſtore the goods which he hath taken from the poor? This were an act of Juſtice (à parte poſt) and an argument of his repentance for all his injuſtice which he had acted (a parte ante.) Reſtitution flowing from true repentance and godly ſorrow is a work of Grace; but here is reſtitution without either repentance or ſorrow, except becauſe he could hold what he had gotten no longer. For

There is a twofold reſtitution.

Firſt, Willing, upon the touch of conſcience, that we have done wrong to others. So Zacheus (Luke 19.8.) Behold half my goods I give to the poor, and if I wronged any man by forged cavilation, behold I reſtore four-fold.

Secondly, There is a forced reſtitution, when the providence of God, not any motion of repentance, maketh a man reſtore: when either juſtice or violence compels him to reſtore; that's the reſtoring here meant; he ſhall reſtore not what he would, but whether he would or no. He ſhall not reſtore from any trouble of his own mind at what he hath done, but becauſe troubled and queſtioned for what he hath done, or as (verſ. 20. of this Chapter ſpeaks) he ſhall vomit it up again. God will give him that, which will make him diſgorge himſelf of his ſweet morſels. Thus we muſt underſtand it of a violent act upon him, and not of any intendment by him. He hath no mind to do thoſe right whom he hath wronged, but they whom he hath wronged, call upon him for, and demand their right.

There are different readings. Some thus, His hands ſhall reſtore his iniquity; that is, the things which he hath gotten by iniquity; others thus, his hands ſhall reſtore his violence, or that which he hath gotten by violence. The ſin by which any thing is gotten is ſet as a mark upon it; that is elegantly and juſtly called violence, which hath been gotten violently. As that (with like elegancy and juſtice) may be called fraud, which was fraudulently gotten. A third ſaith, His hands ſhall reſtore his ſtrength; which may run in the ſame channel of interpretation; his ſtrength, that is, that which he by his ſtrength hath forcibly taken away from others. Laſtly, the Text is read, His hand ſhall reſtore his ſorrow; which may be explained thus, his hand, or his act (our hands being the chief inſtruments of action, are put for action) ſhall bring ſorrow upon him. He by his ſin ſhall bring upon himſelf that miſchief, or thoſe evils which he hath brought upon others; and this (not unfitly) may be called, the reſtoring of them. A wicked man draweth down miſery upon himſelf, and is the contriver of his own troubles. For as he that doth good to others, doth good to himſelf; ſo (by the rule of contraries) he that doth evil to another, doth worſe to himſelf; therefore their own hand may well be ſaid to reſtore or bring ſorrow and miſery upon themſelves, even that ſorrow and miſery, which themſelves had brought upon their brethren. Thus the Pſalmiſt concludes of ſuch a man (Pſal. 7. 16.) His miſchief ſhall come down upon his own head; His miſchief is the miſchief which he hath loved and acted. Sin is like a ſtone caſt againſt the wall, which bounds back; or rather like a ſtone caſt up to heaven, which falls on his head who caſt it up. One of the Ancients giveth this ſence of the words, He ſhall burn his fingers with what he hath done, or ſorrows ſhall burn his hands: he put out his hand to take away what belonged to others, but he burnt his fingers by it. Theſe various readings are occaſioned by going to a different root for the pedigree of this word; yet all fall into that general ſence which our tranſlation holds forth; His hands ſhall reſtore their goods which he hath taken by violence and ſtrength of hand, or by any ſecret evil and unlawful way. So Mr. Broughton, and his hands recompence his wrongs.

Manus ejus reddent dolorem ſuum, ſc. quem aliis intulit

70. ὀδύνας.

Manus ejus urant dolores. Ambr.

אונו ex הון vel ex אנן

Hence obſerve, Firſt, That as he who repents truly doth willingly reſtore what he hath unlawfully gotten, ſo God will force the impenitent oppreſſor to reſtore what he hath gotten whether he will or no.

As his oppreſſion was an act of violence upon others, ſo his reſtitution ſhall be an act of violence upon himſelf. One Lion makes another Lion give back his prey; all ſhall be reſtored, if not into that particular purſe from whence it was taken, yet into ſome common purſe.

Secondly, Note further, It is a vexation to a wicked man, to part with, and reſtore that which he hath unjuſtly gotten.

He doth it not as a duty, but as of neceſſity, as a thing which he cannot avoid. It is his puniſhment not to continue in his ſin; though indeed it is his greateſt puniſhment to continue in the love of his ſin, while he parts with, or rather is ſeparated from the matter of it. I ſhall not here further inſiſt upon the nature of this great duty, the reſtoring of what hath been unduly gotten. That will fall in more properly at verſ. 18. of this Chapter.

Only take notice of this one thing from the Text; which ſaith, His hands ſhall reſtore; as implying a puniſhment upon the wicked man, not only in this, that they who had been wronged by him ſhould recover their goods again from him, but that he ſhould be forced to return them with his own hands. As a godly man rejoyceth to do good with his own hand, ſo 'tis a pain to a wicked man to do it; he would willingly do every duty by proxy, or by his Deputy, eſpecially thoſe (and ſuch is reſtoring) which charge ſhame upon him for his former doings.

Verſ. 11. His bones are full of the ſin of his youth, which ſhall lie down with him in the duſt.

Zophar ſeems to retain the ſame order in ſetting down the puniſhment of a wicked man, which God did in the affliction of Job; God ſpoiled the outward eſtate of Job, firſt, deſtroying his Cattel and his Children, and then filled his body with diſeaſes. Thus the proſperous eſtate of a wicked man, is firſt broken; ſecondly, his Children ſhall be poorer then the poor; thirdly, his body, or bones are full of the ſins of his youth: The miſery of the wicked man is here ſet forth from the cauſe of it, The ſins of his youth. The alluſion ſtands thus, That look as a deboiſt young man by his wanton and riotous courſes gets bodily diſeaſes which ſoak into his bones, and ſuck out his marrow; ſo the judgments of God of any kind conſume and waſte all the comforts of a wicked man, which together with his wickedneſs, follow or rather drive him out of the world.

The original runs thus, His bones are full of his youth, or of his youths. The word is plural, and in propriety ſignifies to hide, or to lie hid. For youth or young men come not abroad to action, but are kept cloſe in their Fathers houſes, or in Schools of learning and education. When he ſaith, His bones are full of his youth, the meaning is, they are full of thoſe miſeries and ſorrows, which the ſins of his youth have deſerved and acquired. Upon this account ſome render the Text thus, His bones are full of his ſecrets, that is, of his ſecret ſins: Man commits many ſins in ſecret, the world takes no notice of them; and his ſin may lie long in ſecret, as ſecretly as the marrow lieth in his bones, though indeed it be not marrow but rottenneſs and poyſon in his bones. The word is uſed (Pſal. 90. 8.) where Moſes thus complaineth, Thou haſt ſet our iniquity before thee, and our ſecret ſins (or ſins of youth) in the light of thy countenance; that is, thou ſeemeſt to call us to an account for the ſins of our youth, or for our ſecret ſins; thoſe ſins which have lain in the dark, are not only brought to light, but ſet in the light, and that not only in the light of mans knowledge, but in the light of the knowledge of God. As it is our higheſt mercy when God lifts up the light of his countenance upon our perſons, ſo it is our ſaddeſt affliction, or a fore-runner of very ſad afflictions when God ſets our ſecret ſins, or the ſins of our youth in the light of his countenance; ſo that in either reading the meaning is the ſame.

Oſſa ejus replebuntur ipſius adoleſcentia, i.e. pœnis quas ſibi ſceleribus adoleſcentiæ acquiſivit.

Oſſa ejus repleta ſunt occultis. Mont.

There is a twofold expoſition of theſe words, ſome referring them to the puniſhment of this wicked man, others to a further deſcription of his ſin; we may take in both: Mr. Broughton's tranſlation gives this as a deſcription of the puniſhment of this wicked man; His bones ſhall feel full pay for his youths pranks; that is, he ſhall be fully puniſhed, being an old impenitent. Sin is often put in Scripture for puniſhment. But what are we to underſtand by theſe bones? His bones are full; bones in a ſtrict ſence are (as it were) the timbers and rafters of the body which maintain and keep up the whole fabrick. Here by bones we may underſtand, firſt, any thing that is ſtrong or firm. So, His bones are full of the ſins of his youth, is, his greateſt ſtrength hath fill of puniſhment; for the bones are the ſtrongeſt part of the body.

Secondly, By bones we may underſtand the whole outward man (Pſal. 141. 7.) Our bones lie ſcattered at the graves mouth, that is, our whole body is ready to drop into the grave; again, All my bones ſhall ſay, &c. (Pſal. 35. 10.) that is, my whole man, body and ſoul ſhall ſay. Sometimes the bones are put ſpecially for the ſoul (Pſal. 51. 8.) David prayeth, that God would reſtore to him the joy of his ſalvation, and that the bones which he had broken might rejoyce.

Where by bones, he means the ſpirit, the inward part; for though the mind of a man be an immaterial ſubſtance, and hath no corporiety in it, yet the ſtrength of a man is in his ſpirit; as the bones are the ſtrength of the body, ſo the mind is the ſtrength of the whole man. When a mans ſpirit is broken, we may well ſay, His bones are broken. In this ſence we may underſtand that of David (Pſal. 6. 2, 3.) Have mercy upon me, O Lord, for I am weak; O Lord, heal me, for my bones are vexed; that is, my ſpirit: ſo (Pſal. 38. 3.) There is no ſoundneſs in my fleſh, becauſe of thine anger, neither is there any reſt in my bones; that is, the outward, the inward man, my fleſh and ſpirit, are unſound and reſtleſs, by reaſon of my ſin; ſo that we are not to interpret bones, as oppoſed to fleſh, but as they denote the beſt and ſtrongeſt of man, body and ſoul; and then, to ſay, His bones are full of the ſins of his youth, is as much as to ſay, his youthful ſins draw trouble quite through him, they leave nothing of him untoucht or untainted. Thus we may expound the words, as implying the univerſality and extenſion of the wicked mans puniſhment, it ſhall ſoak into his very bones and marrow. When Satan deſired leave of God to touch the ſkin and bones of Job, his meaning was, let me have liberty and commiſſion to ſtrike him quite through, without and within to afflict both ſoul and body. So that, this phraſe, His bones are full of the ſin of his youth, intimates him both ſinſul and miſerable all over.

Hence obſerve, Firſt, That youth is very ſubject to, and uſually very full of ſin.

Every young man commits ſin enough to fill his bones when he is old; young men are ſo prone to ſin, that Solomon tells us (Eccleſ. 10. 11.) Childhood and youth are vanity, and ſurely youth is more vain then childhood. Children are vain, becauſe little and ſo unable to do good; youth is vain, becauſe ſo able and active to do evil. The ancient Poet ſaid of youth, it is like wax to evil, you may work it into the ſhape of any monſter, and put what ſtamp you will upon it, as upon wax; yet this Text and the point now iſſued from it are ſpecially intended of thoſe young men, whoſe wayes have been fouleſt, and whoſe lives moſt vitious; ſuch as act not only vainly, but reproachfully, or ſo as deſerves reproach. What Ephraim (Jer. 31. 19.) being upon his repentance, ſpake of himſelf nationally taken, many have cauſe to ſay of themſelves perſonally, I am aſhamed becauſe I have born the reproach of my youth; that is, now I feel, and am ſenſible of thoſe ſins of my youth, which expoſe me to reproach: 'Tis our duty to repent of our old-age ſins, but repentance inſiſteth uſually moſt upon the ſins of youth; which argueth that thoſe ſins preſs moſt. David in ſpecial prayeth (Pſalm 25. 7.) Remember not againſt me the ſins of my youth, thereby implying the ſinfulneſs and ſlipperineſs of that age. The Apoſtles exhortation to Timothy and Titus, (1 Tim. 4. 12. Tit. 2. 15.) both young men, Let no man deſpiſe thy youth, warned them and teacheth us, that as unconverted young men uſually run ſuch courſes, ſo converted young men are apt to fall into ſuch acts of ſin, as render them deſpicable; and the ſame Apoſtle faſtens ſome ſins in ſpecial upon youth, as haunting that age and ſtate (2 Tim. 2. 22.) Fly youthful luſts; old age hath its proper luſts, and ſo hath youth.

Cereus in vitia flecti, monitoribus aſper. Horat. in Arte Poet.
Habet pueritia innocentiam, ſenectus prudentiam, Adoleſcentia ſola eſt invalida viribus, infirma conſiliis, vitio calens, &c. Ambroſ.

There are ſeven ſorts of ſpecial ſins: Firſt, Such as appertain to, and moſt commonly ſhew themſelves in this or that age of mans life. Secondly, There are ſins more proper to ſome Countries and places. Thirdly, To the ſeaſon or times wherein we live. Fourthly, There are ſpecial ſins of mens ſpecial callings, dealings and tradings in the world. Fifthly, Of their conditions, whether poor or rich, great or ſmall. Sixthly, There are ſpecial ſins following the conſtitution of the body, whether Sanguine, Chollerick, Flegmatick, or Melancholly. And ſeventhly, There are ſpecial ſins hanging about our relations. The bones of ſome are full of the ſins of their relations and conſtitutions; the bones of others are full of the ſins of their conditions and callings; the bones of not a few are full of the ſins of the place, time, or age wherein they live; the bones of many are (as the bones of Job were ſuppoſed to be) full of that ſpecial age of their lives, their youth. The ſins of their youth-age, are viſible in their old-age, and the ſins of their firſt age prove the ſorrows of their laſt.

Secondly obſerve, Till ſin be repented of, and pardoned, the puniſhment of it remains.

It is impoſſible to remove the puniſhment of ſin from the guilt of it; and it is impoſſible to remove the guilt of it by any means, but the pardon of it. Bones full of ſin, ſhall not want pain: caſt out ſin by repentance, take hold of pardon by believing, and then puniſhment is caſt out, and muſt let go its hold.

Thirdly, As bones are taken extenſively for the whole man;

Obſerve, That the puniſhment of ſin reacheth as far as ſin reacheth.

If ſin get into your bones, puniſhment will follow; as there are ſins of the fleſh, and ſins of the ſpirit, ſo puniſhments of the fleſh, and puniſhments of the ſpirit; there is nothing ſo ſtrong, ſo deep, or retired, but puniſhment will find it out: not only the ſkin and fleſh, but the very bones ſhall ſmart, yea and the ſoul too. Wo to them (ſaith the Prophet, Iſa. 29. 15.) that ſeek deep to hide their counſel from the Lord, and their works are in the dark; for though their counſel be deep and their works in the dark, yet wrath will ſee its way to overtake them, and fill their hearts with wo. An impenitent perſon ſhall have puniſhment enough, he ſhall have his fill of it, till he vomit, yet he cannot vomit it up, or diſburden his pained conſcience. As he filleth up his meaſure of ſin, ſo he ſhall have his meaſure of ſorrow full; the time will come when all the ungodly ſhall be filled with the wrath and righteous judgments of God, as now they are filled with wrath and unrighteouſneſs one againſt another. Saints have their fulneſs of grace in Chriſt, and having received grace, they fill up their meaſure, Till they come to the meaſure of the ſtature of the fulneſs of Chriſt; and when once they have attained and are arrived to a fulneſs of Grace, they ſhall receive fulneſs of joy in glory. In thy preſence is fulneſs of joy; all their bones ſhall then ſay, Who is a God like to thee? (Pſal. 35. 10.) Not a bone but ſhall have its fill of joy; every mans bones ſhall be full at laſt, Good meaſure, preſſed down and ſhaken together, and running over ſhall God give into their boſoms. The bones of the Godly ſhall be filled with the goodneſs of God, and the bones of the wicked ſhall be filled with that wrath of God which their own ſins have deſerved. His bones are full of the ſins of his youth.

Again, Theſe words may be expounded as a deſcription of a wicked mans perſeverance in ſin. The ſins which he had in his youth, he hath them ſtill, he hath not loſt nor put off one of them. Thoſe filthy luſts which like ſo many running ſores corrupted the forepart of his life, corrupt the latter, running ſtill upon him, and ceaſing not.

Hence note, All the ſins of youth remain in and upon the oldeſt of impenitent perſons.

Old impenitents keep a ſtock or treaſure of their youth-ſins, laid up not only in their bones, but in their hearts; as God maketh them to poſſeſs the ſins of their youth in puniſhments; ſo they poſſeſs the ſins of their youth, if not in practice, yet in affection and pleaſing contemplation. Suppoſe a wicked man grown old and unable by weakneſs to act ſin, yet the habit of ſin is not weakned; his ſin remains as it were young and green, though he be a ſinner of a hundred years old; though he be ſpent and dry, yet his ſins are vivid, warm, vigorous and youthful; Time weakens ſinners, but it cannot weaken ſin; though the marrow be ſpent out of his bones, yet his ſpirit is as full of ſin as ever his bones were of marrow. Man is a veſſel ſtrongly ſented and ſeaſoned with ſin by nature, and till the grace of God cleanſe, and regenerate him, the taſte of the cask never goeth out. And as this is true in reference to the pollution and filthineſs of ſin, ſo alſo in reference to the guilt of it. A wicked mans bones are full of that alſo. Sin unpardoned and unmortified, carries death and wrath in it continually. He is ſaid, To treaſure up wrath againſt the day of wrath (Rom. 2. 5.) Why ſo? becauſe he treaſureth up guilt; every ſin bringeth in ſome further guilt, and the guilt of them all, as well as the filth of them all, as alſo that wrath which is due to them all, is treaſured up with them; no guilt can be got off from any ſin, but by the blood of Chriſt, and that through the free mercy of God; now this man hath nothing to do with the blood of Chriſt, and therefore he hath nothing to do with mercy.

Further obſerve, It is the greateſt miſery to perſevere in ſin.

As ſin brings all miſery with it, ſo it ſelf is all miſery. No evil can be added to a ſinner ſo bad as his ſin is. As grace and holineſs conſidered abſtractly are a greater good, then all outward, yea then many inward bleſſings and rewards. So ſin conſidered abſtractly, is a greater evil then all outward, yea then all thoſe inward curſes which are only puniſhments (*Rev.*22.11.) He that is unjuſt, let him be unjuſt ſtill; and he that is filthy, let him be filthy ſtill; that is, let him ſin his bones full and his belly full. (Ezek.24.13.) Becauſe I have purged thee, and thou waſt not purged; that is, I have given thee means to purge thee, but thou waſt not purged; thou ſhalt not be purged from thy filthineſs any more; as if he had ſaid, thy remaining ſin ſhall be thy puniſhment, and that ſhall draw down puniſhments in kind, as the Prophet adds, Till I have cauſed my fury to reſt upon thee. Sin is a bad bed-fellow, the company of it for a night is burdenſom and dangerous, then how bad a grave-fellow is ſin; yet ſo it will be to all impenitents, as Zophar further expreſſeth himſelf at the cloſe of the verſe.

Which ſhall lie down with him in the duſt.

Hac dicendi formula ſignificat non prius ceſſare peccare quam vivere impium.

Or, ſleep with him when he lieth down; that is, when he dieth, and goeth to the duſt, his ſin ſhall live and go with him. It is an Hyperbolical ſtrain, noting that ſin will never leave the wicked man neither alive nor dead, neither in this world, nor in the world to come. It filled his bones while he lived, and it will fill his grave when he dieth: unleſs a man die to ſin before he dieth, his ſin will live with him when he is dead. The damned in Hell have all their ſins about them; when they ſhall have been in Hell millions of years, yet then their bones will be full of ſin; that which was the cauſe of their being caſt to Hell, ſhall be their everlaſting companion there. For as (*Rev.*14.13.) Bleſſed are the dead that die in the Lord, they reſt from their labours, and their works follow them. When a believer dieth, his righteouſneſs and holineſs die not: the good works which he hath done, die not, but lie down in the duſt with him; they perfume his memory on earth, and they go up with him into Heaven. So we may ſay, Wo to thoſe that die out of the Lord, from henceforth, and for ever, for they ſhall not reſt from their labours, and all their ſins, their works of wickedneſs ſhall follow them: How glad would ſinners be if they might go to the duſt of the grave, yea to the flames of Hell, and ſin not go with them. Hell is as full of ſin as it is of miſery; and if it were not full of ſin, the miſery would be but little in compariſon of what it is; there is weeping in Hell, but neither repenting, nor pardoning; man cannot repent there, and God will not pardon there. And hence it is, that though there be continual weeping in Hell, yet there can be no removing of ſin out of Hell; repentance and pardon remove ſin, but weeping alone will not do it; therefore Hell is full of ſin, though full of tears. So we may apply that of Moſes (*Deut.*29.20.) The Lord will not ſpare him, but then the anger of the Lord, and his jealouſie ſhall ſmoak againſt that man, and all the curſes that are written in this book ſhall lie upon him. The curſe ſhall lie upon him as long as ſin lieth upon him. When Chriſt ſpake the utmoſt evil of the ſins of the Jewes, and the utmoſt of their miſery in their refuſal of himſelf who came to take away ſin; he tells them, I go my way and ye ſhall ſeek me, and ſhall die in your ſins (John 8.21.) Ye ſhall ſeek me, but it will be too late; it is a miſery to live in ſin, but O what a miſery is it to die in ſin? They that die in ſin ſhall riſe in ſin, and ſtand before Chriſt in ſin, and how ſhall they be able to ſtand before him? The Prophet (*Ezek.*24.6.) compareth the people of the Jews, to a pot whoſe ſcum is in it; we may ſay of all impenitent unbelievers, their ſcum boils in; ſometimes the ſcum appears to them, and they may be thinking to take it off, but the ſcum boils in again, and there it remains for ever. This is the Hell of Hell, ſin goeth down to the duſt with ſinners. We may ſay (in alluſion to that of Peter, Act. 12.) that every wicked man ſleeps in the grave, as he in the priſon, bound not only with two, but with a thouſand chains. The ſins of believers go to the grave before them. Sin dieth while they live, and they have a life which ſhall never die. The ſins of unbelievers go to the grave with them; while they live they are dead in ſin, and by ſin they fall into that death from which there is no recovery unto life. Some ſinners are long lived in the body, and they have a hope of dying to ſin, when they are ready to die in nature; as if they carried repentance in their ſleeves, and could command it when they pleaſed: No man hath repentance in his power; and the longer any man lives in ſin, the more power ſin gets to hinder repentance. And they ſeldom receive this power of repentance from God, who have long abuſed his patience; therefore die they ſhall in their ſins. When they ceaſe to live here, ſin ſhall not, nor ſhall they ever want a will to ſin, when they are in that ſtate, wherein (properly) they cannot ſin.

VERS. 12, 13, 14.

Though wickedneſs be ſweet in his mouth, though he hide it under his tongue:
Though he ſpare it, and forſake it not, but keep it ſtill within his mouth:
Yet his meat in his bowels is turned, it is the gall of Aſps within him.

Introducit impium tanquam guloſū atq; voracē, & quæ ſumma aviditate voravit, paulo poſt fœdiſſimè vomentem. Pined.

J*OB* proceeds to deſcribe the miſeries of a wicked man, moſt of all of an Hypocrite, by an elegant metaphor or ſimilitude taken from meats, which are ſweet in the taſte, but deadly in the effect; and however the paſſages of this ſimilitude are ſomewhat obſcure and dark, yet the ſence and meaning of it is plain and eaſie; in which we may take notice in general, that a wicked man is compared to a glutton, eating greedily and vomiting filthily. More diſtinctly,

First, That ſin is compared to meat.

Secondly, That the actings of ſin are compared to the eating, chewing, and digeſting of meat.

Thirdly, The delight that goeth with ſin, is compared to the ſweetneſs, and well taſtedneſs of meat.

Fourthly, Continuance in ſin, to the holding of meat under the tongue, and keeping it in the mouth.

Fifthly, The puniſhment of ſin is compared to poyſon mingled with meat, or to poyſonous meat.

Sixthly, The effects which follow this puniſhment are compared to torments vexing the bowels, and to vomiting.

Seventhly, The iſſue of all is compared to death; He ſhall ſuck the poyſon of Aſpes; The Vipers tongue ſhall ſlay him.

Though wickedneſs be ſweet in his mouth.

The word which we tranſlate Wickedneſs, ſignifies any kind of ſin, yet ſome reſtrain it here to that particular ſin of the mouth, or tongue, evil ſpeaking, oaths, and blaſphemy; theſe are ſweet and pleaſant to prophane mouths, as the praiſe of God is to the mouths of the righteous. There is a ſecond reſtriction of this wickedneſs (which is more proper) to the ſins of oppreſſion and fraudulent gain (*Gen.*6.7.) God ſaw the wickedneſs of man that it was great in the earth; but what was the ſpecial wickedneſs of that age? The holy Story tells us it was an age of violence, there were mighty men, who were mighty oppreſſors of men: They are called, men of renown, at *verſ.*4. whoſe chief was Nimrod, A mighty hunter before the Lord. We may take wickedneſs in the Text both wayes; firſt, in the General; ſecondly, in Particular; for the ſin of violence, and wrongfully obtaining the things of this life, which is ſpecified at *verſ.*15. He hath ſwallowed down riches.

Though wickedneſs be ſweet in his mouth.] Sweetneſs is the ſuitableneſs of the humour which is in meat and drink, to the ſalival humour in the mouth or palate; ſweetneſs to the taſte is nothing but this ſuitableneſs; wickedneſs is ſuitable to corrupt nature, therefore wickedneſs is ſweet, and hath a pleaſant taſte, as thoſe meats which are moſt congruous to appetite; Though it be ſweet in his mouth; the mouth is added, becauſe ſenſation is made there; for when the meat is paſſed from the mouth to the ſtomach, there's no more taſte of it, unleſs it ſend back fumes to the mouth, which are uſually unpleaſant and diſtaſtful. The ſenſitive part of the ſoul which is affected with the pleaſure of ſin, is here compared to the mouth; ſo that, whatſoever internal delight a man takes in the committing of any iniquity, or in any iniquity committed, that is the ſweetneſs of it in his mouth; while the inferior faculties of the ſoul are pleaſed and take contentment in ſin, they may be ſaid to taſte it.

Optimè per os ſignificatur voluntas inferior & appetitus ſenſitivus. Tunc peccator verſat malum in ore ſuo dum in concupiſcentia & voluntate inferiori illo delectatur. Bold.

From the ſimilitude in general,

Obſerve, That, ſin is as food to the ſoul of a natural or carnal man.

Yea it is as food to the natural part of a regenerate man; ſin is the food of luſt. The firſt ſin was committed by eating the forbidden fruit, and now every ſin is the eating of ſome forbidden fruit. Sin is meat and drink to the ſinner, not only in reference to the effect, becauſe it brings in the bread which ſome men eat: as Solomon ſpeaks (Prov. 4. 17.) They eat the bread of wickedneſs, and drink the wine of violence; that is, they eat and drink that bread and wine, which hath been gotten by wickedneſs and violence; now (I ſay) ſin is food not only in the effect and conſequence of it, but alſo (as obedience and doing the will of God is to godly men) in the very act; the adopted ſons of God ſay (in their proportion) as Chriſt ſaid, John 4. This is my meat and drink to do the will of my Father which is in Heaven: Wicked men ſay alſo 'tis their meat and drink to do the will of Satan, who is indeed their Father: Nature is as hungry and thirſty after wickedneſs, as grace is after righteouſneſs. As there is a hunger and thirſt after ſpirituals, ſo after carnals: The natural man is not content, till he have his fill of them. The reaſon why there is ſo much labouring pains taken to commit ſin, is, becauſe there is a hungring pain provoking to it; we ſay of natural hunger, It breaks through ſtone walls; that is, it ſtirs us to overcome all difficulties, and labour hard for the ſupply of nature. Many have ſo much bread at home, that it is a trouble to them becauſe they are no more hungry, who yet are ſo hungry after ſin, that it puts them to a continual trouble of breaking through ſtone walls, the greateſt difficulties to come at it. The Philoſopher calls thoſe who are given up to pleaſure, who (as the Apoſtle ſpeaks of the wanton widdow, 1 Tim. 6. 5.) Live in pleaſure, as if that were their only element, or who account it their bleſſedneſs to do ſo; he (I ſay) calls ſuch, The moſt importunate men; I conceive he meaneth that ſuch are moſt eager in purſuing all thoſe means which may ſatisfie them with pleaſures, and are reſtleſs till they have attained them. A poor man pinched with want is an importunate man, you cannot get him from your doors; he is hungry, hunger putteth him on; ſo it is with every man whoſe heart is ſet upon ſin, he is an importunate man, nothing can ſtop him; though he meet with denials, yet he reneweth his motion; though he meet with rebukes, yet he is not anſwered; yea though he meet with blows, yet he will on again. Hunger muſt get ſomewhat, or looſe all; and many of theſe hungry ones for the getting of a poor ſomewhat (a dry cruſt, a bare bone, indeed a very nothing) have loſt all.

Qui beatitudinem in voluptate collocant ſunt homines importuniſſimi. Ariſt. l. 1. Eth. cap. 5.

Secondly obſerve, There is a preſent ſweetneſs in ſin.

Sin is not only meat, but ſweet meat; not only bread, but pleaſant bread to an evil heart. Daniel for ſome weeks eat no pleaſant bread; he eat bread to keep life and ſoul together, but he forbare feaſting or good chear. Sin is a feaſt to a carnal man, it is his good chear, yea it is dainties to him. We have that word (Pſal. 141. 4.) where David ſpeaks of wicked men, Incline not my heart to any evil thing with them that practiſe wicked works, and let me not eat of their dainties. Theſe dainties may be expounded (as was ſaid before) either for the proſperity that comes in by wicked practices (ſome by wicked wayes get not onely ordinary food but dainties) or thoſe dainties are ſin it ſelf, they feaſted themſelves in doing evil; Lord let me not eat of their dainties, if that be their food I had rather ſtarve then eat with them (*Prov.*9.17.) Stolen waters are ſweet, and bread eaten in ſecret is pleaſant: Stollen water and ſecret bread are ſinful practices, which are ſo much the more ſweet, by how much they are more ſecret. This bread of ſecreſies is pleaſant bread and ſweet meats to a wanton ſpirit; as the Word of God and holy actings are pleaſant bread to a gracious heart. David ſaith of the Commandments of God, They are ſweeter to me then honey, and the honey comb (Pſal.119.103.) What was thus ſweet to him? Not the bare word of the commandment only, but obedience to the Commandment, or theſe Commandments requiring his obedience; the word of the Commandment is ſweet to none but ſuch as do and obey it; the word is gall and wormwood to a diſobedient ſpirit, but to a David it is ſweeter then the honey, yea then the ſweeteſt part of honey; if there be any part of the honey that is more honey then other, thy Commandments are that part; therefore he adds, They are ſweeter then the honey, or the honey comb. But what ſweetneſs is there in the honey comb? We are not to take the comb alone without the honey; but when he ſaith, ſweeter then the honey comb, the meaning is, ſweeter then the honey that cometh immediately out of the comb: That honey which drops from the comb without preſſing is counted pureſt and ſweeteſt. There is not only meat and drink to believers in obedience, but honey and ſweetneſs; and ſuch likewiſe for a while is wickedneſs to the wicked.

Thirdly, From the intendment or ſcope of the ſimilitude, which is to ſhew what putteth carnal men upon the purſuit of ſin, what it is that provokes them to it; no man acts but he ſeeth ſome reaſon for it: a beaſt is provoked with ſomewhat proportionable to a reaſon, though he hath no reaſon. Zophar giveth us this ſweetneſs as a reaſon why a wicked man purſues and is ſo greedy of his ſin.

Hence obſerve, It is ſome expected ſweetneſs in ſin, which provokes to the acting of it.

When Satan tempts to ſin, he playes the Orator, and preſents ſome conſideration of profit, or pleaſure, or credit. In the Parable of the Sower it is ſaid the Word of God was choaked (Luke 8. 14.) The thorny ground received the Word, but it was choaked; by what? There are three choakers mentioned in that place; firſt, The cares of the world; ſecondly, The deceitfulneſs of riches; thirdly, Pleaſure: Theſe choak the Word; that is, they will not ſuffer a man to practice, and ſubmit to the Word. Pleaſure is one of the three choakers, if not the firſt and chiefeſt of the three; pleaſure quickens the principles of ſin, and hightens deſire after it. When the woman was tempted to eat the forbidden fruit, the Text ſaith (Gen. 3. 6.) The woman ſaw that the tree was good for food, and pleaſant to the eye, a tree to be deſired to make one wiſe, and then ſhe did eat; here were all ſorts of motives, external, internal, ſenſitive, and intellective, to draw her to that ſin. And thus the Lord deals with his people, to draw them on in the wayes of holineſs; he tells them of the ſweetneſs, pleaſantneſs, peaceableneſs of his wayes (Prov. 3. 17.) The wayes of wiſdom are peace, all her paths are pleaſantneſs: Thus he allures the ſoul to walk in his wayes. The wayes of wiſdom conſidered abſtractly, are not only the beſt, and moſt honourable wayes, but 'tis ſweeteſt alſo to walk in them; yet becauſe the Lord knows we are fleſh as well as ſpirit, therefore he tells us of ſweetneſs and pleaſantneſs, of peace and profit, of gold and ſilver to be had in his wayes; and indeed he infinitely out-bids ſin and Satan for our ſervice. Godlineſs is profitable for all things. Firſt ſeek the Kingdom of Heaven and the righteouſneſs thereof, and all other things ſhall be added to you. What can we deſire more then that by which we may obtain all our deſires. As God himſelf is not any particular, but an univerſal good; ſo godlineſs is not profitable only for this or that particular good thing, but for all good things. Thus God is pleaſed to invite us to himſelf, and into his wayes by the ſweet bait of benefits; and thus Satan provokes into the ways of ſin, he perſwades, and many find by experience, that wickedneſs is ſweet in the mouth. The carnal man is led by ſenſe, and liveth like a beaſt; Satan handles and fits him accordingly. He feeds him with ſweet meats; But though wickedneſs be ſweet in his mouth,

Voluptatum blanditiis deliniti; ad ea gerenda omnia quæ prava ſunt impellimur. Ariſt. l. 2. Eth. cap.3.

Voluptas bonum pecoris eſt. Sen. Epiſt. 92.

Though he hide it under his tongue.

Theſe words carry on the former alluſion to eating. For as a glutton that gets a ſweet morſel between his teeth, is loath to looſe the delightſom taſte of it, and therefore doth not haſtily chew and ſwallow it down, but eats it by degrees; ſuch men of appetite and palat-pleaſures will ſay to others when they are eating, Think what you are doing, taſte pleaſure. Thus doth the carnal man deal with his ſin, he chews it long, he keepeth it cloſe, and hideth it under his tongue.

The word in the Hebrew which we tranſlate to hide, is more proper to the work of the tongue in ſpeaking then in eating; and may imply thus much, that as a man who hath got a ſweet morſel, hides it under his tongue in eating, ſo a carnal heart that lives and delights in ſin, uſeth his tongue to hide or keep it from revealing. The word ſignifies hiding with the Tongue. The heart is the ſhop wherein, and the tongue the inſtrument whereby thoſe artificial coverings and vails are made, by which the wicked man hideth his ſin. The tongue hideth both what we are, and what we have done, as Rachel hid her fathers images, or as Rahab hid the ſpies who came to Jericho, leſt the ſearchers ſhould have found them. Thus the carnal man covers his ſin with his tongue. And this is the right character or property of a falſe hearted hypocrite; ſo that Zophar ſtruck at Job ſecretly, as a hypocrite, while he ſpake of hiding ſin under the tongue.

כחד Eſt negare, negando celare diſſimulare.

הכחיד Eſt plerumq; de medio tollere ἀφανίζειν abolere, ut dicere poſſis non fuiſſe. Teget peccatum ſermone ficto & fraudis pleno. His verbis figurat hypocritam & obliquè Jobum perſtringit. Jun.

Hence obſerve, The wicked mans tongue is the cover of his ſin.

The tongue of a ſincere heart is the diſcoverer of his ſin. For as with the heart man believeth, ſo with the tongue or mouth confeſſion is made (of our faith in God) unto Salvation (Rom. 10. 10.) as alſo of our ſins againſt God unto pardon and remiſſion. I ſaid I will confeſs my ſin unto the Lord (ſaith repenting David, Pſal. 32. 5.) and thou forgaveſt the iniquity of my ſin. Now as the tongue of a good man diſcovers his ſin, ſo the tongue of a wicked man hides it; and that three wayes.

Firſt, By plain denying that he hath done it.

Secondly, By diſſembling or concealing what he hath done.

Thirdly, And moſt ordinarily by excuſing it; though he cannot conceal the evil done, much leſs deny it, yet he hath ſomewhat to ſay, to render the doing of it leſs culpable then others conceive it. To which purpoſe the heart promps the tongue with a thouſand excuſes; the hypocrite is elegantly ſaid to hide his ſin under his tongue, becauſe by carnal reaſonings and fair words he makes ſo many excuſes for it; he guilds over the rotten poſt, and paints the filthy ſepulchre of his heart and life with oyly words, dropt from a diſſembling tongue. A deceitful heart and a diſſembling tongue cannot live aſunder. As it is the glory of God to conceal a thing, that is, a ſinful thing (Prov. 25. 2.) So it is the glory of God for man to declare his ſin. Thus Joſhua exhorts Achan, My ſon give glory to God, and make confeſſion (Joſh. 7. 19.) But it is the ſhame of a man, and a diſhonour to God for a man to hide his ſin. Many hide their ſins for ſhame, but that hiding will produce greater ſhame. He that covers his ſin ſhall not proſper, (Prov. 28. 13.) If we do not cover our ſins God will. Our covering of our own ſins by excuſing them, brings the curſe, (few ſins hurt except we cover them) but if God cover them by forgiving them, we are bleſſed (Pſal. 32. 1.) Bleſſed is he whoſe ſin is covered. God covers the ſin of a believing and repenting ſoul; but the impenitent unbeliever covers his own. He hideth it under his tongue.

Again, We find the word uſed to another ſence in Scripture, which may further clear up this point; to hide under the tongue, is ſometimes to meditate, or revolve a thing in the mind; for when once a word is ſpoken, it is out of the tongues keeping, but while we meditate we keep it under the tongue (Cant. 4. 11.) Thy lips, O my Spouſe, drop as the honey comb; honey and milk are under thy tongue; honey and milk, that is, honey words, ſweet pleaſant words are under thy tongue; my Spouſe is now meditating and conſidering how to ſpeak ſweat and pleaſant words to her beloved, theſe words are not yet upon but under her tongue. That of David (Pſal. 66. 17.) reacheth this ſence; we tranſlate, I cried to him with my mouth, and he was extolled with my tongue: The Text may be rendred thus, I cryed to him with my mouth, and his exaltation was under my tongue; that is, I was conſidering and meditating how I might liſt up and exalt the name of God, and make his praiſe glorious; holy thoughts are ſaid to be under the tongue when we are in a preparation to bring them forth; and ſo are unholy thoughts (Pſal. 10. 7.) His mouth is full of curſing, and deceit, and fraud; under his tongue is miſchief and vanity; that is, he ſpeaketh evil and is deviſing how to ſpeak worſe; his words are wicked, and his deviſings are more wicked. Thus as in reference both to good and evil, there is a hiding under the tongue to prepare for ſpeaking; ſo there is a hiding under the tongue that the thing may be concealed, and not at all ſpoken; that's the hypocrites art; for as prophane perſons care not to proclaim their ſins, they make their tongues the trumpet of their vanity, they declare their ſins as Sodom; ſo the hypocrite is buſie to make ſhadows for his ſin, and to gloſs it over with fair pretences, leſt it come to light.

Again, We may expound this latter banch as an effect of the former, which alſo comes up clearly to the point in hand. Becauſe wickedneſs was ſweet in his mouth, he will therefore hide it under his tongue: To which ſence the Chaldee Paraphraſt ſpeaketh, If wickedneſs was ſweet in his mouth, he did bely it, or hide it by a lye, under his tongue. As lying is it ſelf a great ſin, and every ſin hath ſomewhat in it of a lye, ſo many ſins are concealed by lying. That ſweetneſs which cauſeth a wicked man to commit it, cauſeth him alſo to retain and hold it, or as the Text ſpeaks, To hide it under his tongue. We read of an antient Glutton who wiſhed his neck were as long as a Cranes, that ſo he might keep the taſte of his meat; there is ſuch ſweetneſs upon the taſte of a natural man in ſinning, that he wiſheth he might retain it long upon his ſpirit, and is troubled if he quickly part with the pleaſure of his dainty morſels.

Cum enim dulce fuerit in ore ejus malum abſcondet illud ſub lingua ſua. Vulg. Si dulceſcebat in ore ejus malitia mentiebatur eam ſub lingua ſua, i.e. mentiendo tegebat. Tharg. Philoxenus.

Zophar hath not yet done with theſe ſuppoſitions, we have had two of his Thoughts already; Though wickedneſs be ſweet in his mouth, though he hide it under his tongue, he is not ſatisfied in theſe two; but gives us two more in the next verſe, one expreſly, the other by implication.

Verſ. 13. Though he ſpare it, and forſake it not, but keep it ſtill within his mouth.

This verſe is of the ſame tendency with the former, which hath been already opened. In verſ. 14. we have the application of the ſimilitude, whereof this is but a further illuſtration; Though he ſpare it, and forſake it not, but keep it ſtill, &c. This expreſſion for the manner of it, ſuits that which we read (Joh. 1. 20.) where John being asked whether he was the Chriſt, he confeſſed and denied not, but confeſſed I am not the Chriſt; ſo 'tis here ſaid of a wicked man, he ſpares his ſin, and forſakes it not, but keeps it, to ſhew the intentneſs of his ſpirit upon his ſin, he will by no means let it go.

The words ſtill purſue the metaphor of eating, for a gluttenous perſon (as was intimated before) eats for eating ſake, or for pleaſure; not for ſtrength to glorifie God, which ſhould be the end of our eating. Now though this moral glutton be not ſparing at all in the eating of his meat, that is, in the committing of his ſin; he eats, that is, ſins heartily, yet he ſpares his meat while he is eating it, he will not eat it haſtily, but with a kind of deliberation; as ſome eat their meat ſo greedily that they ſcarce taſte what they eat, ſo others eat it ſo ſlowly, as if they thought they could never taſte it enough, or have enough of it. 'Tis thus alſo in ſinning; ſome ſin in a kind of hurry or ſuddain paſſion, they ſcarce know what they do, while they are doing evil; or they are to any ſinful occaſion what a carnal heart is to any good occaſion or to any occaſion of doing good, glad when they are rid of it; but others ſin lingringly, and think they never ſtay long enough upon it; they ſin feelingly and deſire (as that Roman Tyrant deſired men ſhould die) to feel themſelves ſin. Such as theſe (I conceive, according to Zophar's ſcope and mind) may be ſaid to ſpare their ſin. They do not ſpare to commit it, but they commit it ſparingly, as being loath it ſhould ſpend off their hands too faſt. The Original word here uſed, ſignifies to ſpare, as we ought out of pity and compaſſion; hence not ſparing and not pitying are put together, Ezek. 5. 11. it ſignifies alſo to ſpare what ſhould not be ſpared; to ſpare not only that which is in our our power, but which is our duty to deſtroy. Some ſpare being moved with a fooliſh pity, and others with covetouſneſs. We may find a mixture of both in Saul's ſparing the Amalekites. His Commiſſion ran ſtrictly, thus (1 Sam. 15. 3.) Go and ſmite Amaleck and utterly deſtroy all that they have, ſpare them not; but verſ. 15. Saul being queſtioned by Samuel, anſwers, The people ſpared the beſt of the ſheep, &c. they would ſpare Amaleck, when God had ſaid, ſpare them not. Saul pretends devotion, it was for ſacrifice; but indeed 'twas pride or covetouſneſs, or at the beſt a groundleſs pity which prevailed with him. In this ſence we are to take it here: Though he be very tender towards ſin, as if he were afraid the winds ſhould blow upon it; though he deal gently with it, as David gave inſtructions to his Army concerning Abſalom; though (according to the Alluſion in the Text) he ſpare it as a pleaſant morſel, which he would be alwayes eating and never eat up, yet it will be bitter to him, &c.

Parcius agitũ peccato non ſtatim tranſmittens aut deglutiens elabi ſinens. Pined.

חמל Dimittere relinquere intactum. Propitius eſſe.

Hence obſerve, A carnal man is merciful to his ſin, and favourable to his luſts.

The Apoſtle ſaith (Rom. 8. 32.) God ſpared not his Son; that is, he did not deal with him in a way of pity when he was in the place of ſinners, but delivered him up (namely to death) for us all; but ſinful hearts are kind and pitiful to their ſins; though they hear that ſin will damn them, yet they will not give their ſins an ill word, much leſs a wound; they ſpare them, as Saul ſpared Agag and the fat cattle. Sin is ſpared three wayes, Firſt, When not confeſſed; we bring ſin forth to tryal and arraignment by confeſſion.

Secondly, When we do not paſs ſentence upon it, nor judge our ſelves for it; ſo the Apoſtle ſpeaks (1 Cor. 11. 31.) If we would judge our ſelves, we ſhould not be judged of the Lord. We ſhould ſay this ſin deſerves death, and we deſerve to die for it, elſe we ſpare it.

Thirdly, We ſpare ſin when it is not actually put to death, though we condemn it; ſome confeſs the iniquity of their ſin, who yet will not part with it. And ſin like a malefactor caſt by the ſentence of the Judge crieth for mercy, or as a priſoner of war for quarter, when the life of it is in danger; ſin ſaith as thoſe ten men to Iſhmael, (Jerem. 41. 8.) Slay us not; Why? What hath ſin to ſay for it ſelf why it ſhould not dye? Uſually it ſaith as thoſe men in the Prophet did, We have treaſures hid in the field. Spare us ſay covetouſneſs and oppreſſion, deceit and fraud, We have treaſures and riches for you; ſpare me ſaith uncleanneſs, I have pleaſures and delights for you; ſpare me ſaith another, I am but a little one; ſpare me, this is the firſt time, I have been committed but once, or twice; ſpare us cry they all, we are your kindred, fleſh of your fleſh, and bone of your bone. Thus ſin cryeth for ſparing, and the Hypocrite is very willing to hear this cry, and ſpare his ſin, though he thereby wound and be cruel to his own ſoul. Therefore what Solomon ſaith concerning the chaſtning of a child, I ſay, concerning the deſtroying of thy ſin, ſpare not for its crying. Fooliſh pity deſtroyeth that which is more worth then a City, yea then a world, the pretious ſoul; we may ſay (as it was to Ahab in that caſe when he ſpared Benadab and let him go (1 King. 20. 40.) Becauſe thou haſt let a luſt go which God hath appointed to deſtruction, therefore thy life ſhall go for its life; take heed of ſparing, and pitying your ſins, as you bear any pity to your own ſouls, or deſire that God ſhould ſpare and pity them; if we ſpare our ſins, God will not ſpare us, Deut. 29. 20. Remember God hath appointed every luſt to death, if it hath not a death of mortification here, you ſhall have a death of miſery hereafter; if you ſpare what God hath appointed to death, your lives ſhall go for its life. There is a ſparing cruelty as well as a puniſhing mercy; it is mercy to puniſh ſome perſons, and cruelty to ſpare others; but it is mercy to puniſh all ſins, and cruelty to ſpare ſo much as any one; we may call every ſin as Chriſt doth Judas the traytor, A ſon of perdition, either actively or paſſively; if it be not deſtroyed, it will deſtroy. Sin is actively a deſtroyer, therefore let it be deſtroyed; if you deal not with it as a ſon of perdition, it will be your perdition.

Crudelitas parcens miſericordia puniens.

Further, The Septuagint read it with a negation, Though he ſpare it not; their negative hath the ſame ſence with our affirmative. Though he ſpare it not; that is (in alluſion to meats) though he eats freely of it; we ordinarily ſay when friends are at Table with us, Pray do not ſpare; ſo when a wicked man gets ſin under his tongue, he eats like a glutton, greedily, ſo the Apoſtle deſcribes ſuch, Being paſt feeling they commit iniquity with greedineſs; They eat and ſpare not, they do not ſin with moderation or temperately, but are like Epicures in ſinning, they ſin inſatiably. But becauſe the negative is not in the Hebrew reading I ſhall not ſtay upon it; yet (I ſay) the general ſcope and intendment of both readings is the ſame. For if he ſpareth it, it is becauſe he loves it, and if he ſpare it not, it is becauſe he liketh it. Though he ſpare it,

Quamvis non parcet ei. Sept. i.e. non parcè & moderatè aget cum iniquitate, ſed ardenter & inſatiabiliter.

And forſake it not.] In purſuance of the ſimilitude of eating, the ſenſe is made out thus; Though he ſpare it, as loath to let it go down into his ſtomach, for when once the meat is down, 'tis loſt to the pallate, therefore he parts with it by leiſure. But more properly to forſake, notes theſe two things; Firſt, To withdraw outward communion; Secondly, To withdraw inward affection; the withdrawing of communion is the effect of withdrawing affection; for if once a man withdraw his heart from another, he quickly withdraws his preſence. Every where in Scripture carnal men are ſaid to forſake God both wayes (Jer. 2. 13.) This people hath committed two great evils, they have forſaken me the fountain of living waters; that is, I have no more of their company, they do not love me, therefore they deſire not communion with me. The word is uſed by David the figure of Chriſt (Pſal. 22. 2.) as alſo by Chriſt himſelf when he hung upon the Croſs, My God, my God, why haſt thou forſaken me? The Lord at that time did interclude or ſtop his preſence from his Son, he did not manifeſt himſelf to him; there was as it were, for that preſent, a kind of intermiſſion of the ſencible actings of the love of God towards him: Chriſt being thus denied that communion which he had alwayes enjoyed with the Father, cryed out, Why haſt thou forſaken me? But as the wicked man ſpares his ſin, and will not hurt it, ſo he would never be out of its company, much leſs forſake it utterly.

עזב Dereliquit

Hence note, That, a wicked man is very faithful and conſtant to his ſin.

Solomon gives that rule of love, Thy friend and thy fathers friend forſake not (Prov. 27. 10.) a man ſhould not forſake his own friend, much leſs ſhould he forſake his fathers friend, or a friend to the family: Thus ſaith a carnal heart, this ſin is my friend, and he looks upon it as his fathers friend; his ſin poſſibly is as the Apoſtle ſpeaks, (1 Pet. 1. 20.) A vain converſation received by tradition from his fathers; ſin deſcends as well as land. Many inherit vanity, and hold it (as it were) by their fathers copy. And if at any time a Hypocrite forſakes the practice of ſin, yet he doth not forſake his reſpect to it; he may leave off the exerciſe, yet not withdraw his love. Many conſiderations may break off his actions, but nothing breaks off his affections. A wicked man ſaith to his ſin, as God to Joſhua, I will not leave thee nor forſake thee.

The laſt clauſe of this verſe, is but the affirmative of this negative.

But keep it ſtill within his mouth. Never confeſſing it.

Solomon puts thoſe two together, He that confeſſeth and forſaketh his ſin ſhall have mercy. He that hath no mind to forſake his ſin, hath no deſire to confeſs it. He that would keep it in his hands, would alſo keep it within his mouth. But what gets he by this concealment? Let the next verſe enform us, which contains the Application of the whole ſimilitude.

Nulli manifeſtabit, & propter hoc nullus ei peccatum occultum diſſuadebit nec aliquid remedium adhibebit, quod adhibetur peccata ſua confitentibus. Aquin.

Verſ. 14. Yet his meat in his bowels is turned.

Though wickedneſs be ſweet, though he hide it under his tongue; though he ſpare it, &c. Suppoſe all this, that a wicked man hath been very tender of his ſin, and nouriſhed it long, what's the benefit? Where's the fruit? Yet his meat in his bowels is turned; that is, the many diſhes and courſes that he hath had in this banquet of ſin, all this meat in his bowels is turned; how turned? Every thing that is eaten, if there be a digeſtion made of it, if the ſtomach can do its work, is turned. Naturaliſts call it Aſſimilation, when the meat eaten is changed or turned into the ſubſtance of the body. But here the meaning is, It is turned into another thing then what it was when it was in his mouth; that is, he finds the effect of it in his ſtomack to be ſuch as if the meat were not that which he had eaten, it doth not turn to nouriſhment, but to poyſon, as the next clauſe expreſſeth; His meat in his bowels is turned.

It is the gall of Aſps within him.

So Mr. Broughton reads it, His meat in his bowels turneth into the gall of Aſps within him; We ſay, His meat in his bowels is turned, it is the gall of Aſps within him; The ſence is the ſame; For this turning of his meat in his bowels (as our tranſlation expreſſeth it) is not the turning of it into nouriſhment, but into poyſon.

The gall of ſome creatures is poyſon, yea the moſt deadly poyſon; Ariſtotle, Pliny, and others that write the Hiſtory of Animals, tell us that the gall of Serpents is full of poyſon, and they have exceeding copious galls; yet there is a further elegancy in the words, ſuiting a ſecret in nature: it was ſweet in the mouth, now it is gall. Thoſe meats which are ſweeteſt to the taſt turnes moſt to bitterneſs and choller in the ſtomack. So there is a gradual continuance of the metaphor, ſweetneſs turns to bitterneſs, and not only to bitterneſs, but to gall; and not onely to gall, but to the gall of Aſps, which is not onely bitter, but poyſonous. There is a bitterneſs that hath wholeſomeneſs in it, and is medicinable, there is alſo a poyſonous bitterneſs. The wild bitter Gourd put into the pot was deadly; but of all poyſonous bitterneſſes, the bitterneſs and poyſon of Aſps is moſt deadly. There are many remedies or antidotes againſt Poyſon. And there may be remedies found againſt the poyſonous bitings of all Serpents, except that of the Aſp, which as the ancients affirm, killeth in four hours, notwithſtanding the uſe and application of the moſt ſoveraign remedies; inſomuch, that the biting of the Aſp is gone into a proverb, for An immedicable evil.

Fel ſerpentū portione maximè copioſum. Plin.

Quæ dulcia ſunt facilè in bilem & amaritudinem convertuntur. Gal.

Adverſus viperarum omniumq; ſerpentum morſus remedium invenitur, aſpide una excepta. Ælian.

Morſus aſpidis proverbio dicitur de malo immedicabili.

There is another conſideration in the gall of Aſps, that carrieth the point more fully; for though that gall be death, and death without remedy, yet it cauſeth a kinde of a pleaſant death. The biting of the Aſp ſtupifies, and then kills. The perſon bitten falls preſently into a ſleep, which is a ſhort death, and then dies, which is a long ſleep. Though the perſon bitten be in preſent danger of death, yet the pains of death are not felt. It is ſtoried of Cleopatra, Queen of Egypt, that when ſhe ſaw her Husband Mark Anthony ruined and dead, having laid violent hands upon himſelf; when ſhe ſaw all loſt, the City of Alexandria (where ſhe thought to ſecure her ſelf) taken, and her power utterly broken; ſhe ſo much diſdained to be a captive, and to be brought in triumph to Rome, that out of the greatneſs of her ſpirit, ſhe choſe to put Aſps to her breaſts and die; which ſhe did upon this natural conſideration, not onely becauſe ſhe knew they were preſent death, but becauſe they would put her to 'leaſt pain, or make her altogether ſenſeleſs of pain in dying.

Aſpidis veneno afflicti ſomno in mortem ſolvuntur.

Hence obſerve, Firſt, That how pleaſant ſoever ſin is in the acting, it is bitter in the end.

Holineſs is ſweet in the way and end too: wickedneſs is ſometimes ſweet in the way, but alwayes bitter in the end. Solomon gives this in plain aſſertions (Prov. 20.17.) The bread of deceit is ſweet to a man, but afterward his mouth ſhall be filled with gravel. And again (Prov. 23.31, 32.) Look not upon the wine when it is red, when it gives its colour in the cup; that is, take heed leſt the ſight of it enſnare thee to intemperance and drunkenneſs. Some love to ſee their wine ſparkle and brisk in a clear chriſtal glaſs, it pleaſeth them to look upon it, and ſee it as well as to taſte and drink it. But look not on it, ſo as to luſt after it; why? At the laſt it bites like a Serpent. The bread of deceit is gravel afterwards, and the ſweet wine bites at laſt; 'tis pleaſant to look to in the cup, and pleaſant to the taſte, but if you be overtaken with it, your bowels will find it turned to the gall of Aſps. The Prophet (Jer. 2.19.) ſaith to ſuch, Thine own wickedneſs ſhall correct thee, and thy backſlidings ſhall reprove thee. But is ſin it ſelf a correcter and a reprover of ſinners? The acts of ſin do neither correct nor reprove, but the effects of it do both; ſo the Prophet ſeemeth to expound himſelf in the latter part of the ſame verſe, Know therefore and ſee (namely, by the event) that it is an evil thing and a bitter, that thou haſt forſaken the Lord thy God; that is, thy forſaking of God (ſuch is every turning aſide to, and embracing of ſin) will procure thee much evil, and provoke God to make thy life bitter unto thee. We may ſay to every one who delights in ſin, as the charge is given againſt Babylon (Rev. 18 7.) How much thou haſt glorified thy ſelf, and lived deliciouſly, ſo much torment and ſorrow ſhall be given to thee; how much of the one, ſo much of the other. Thy ſin was ſweet in thy mouth, but it will be turned to the gall of Aſps in thy bowels.

Secondly note, Sin hath not only bitterneſs in it, but there is death in it.

All gall is bitter, but the gall of Aſps is deadly. Sin is a deadly poyſon; for though it be pleaſing a while, yet 'tis killing in the end. The bitterneſs that floweth from ſin, is the bitterneſs of death: If after it hath yielded us a little unſatisfying pleaſure, it ſhould only conclude in pain, this might not only diſcredit it in our opinion, but provoke us to caſt it for ever both out of our affection and practice; how then ſhould our hearts be turned from it, and riſe againſt it, when we are aſſured that this pain is as a poyſon, and that this poyſon is unto death?

Thirdly note, Though ſin be deadly, yet it leaves the ſinner ſenſeleſs of death.

Sin deſtroyes, and the man knows not what hurts him. Every Evil is by ſo much the worſe, by how much it leaves us leſs apprehenſive of the evil it doth us. Thoſe wounds may be moſt mortal, of which at preſent we feel leaſt pain.

Laſtly obſerve, It is a dangerous thing to keep ſins counſel, or to conceal it.

The wages of ſin (committed) is death. But the wages of ſin concealed, is the worſt of that death. Every ſin acted, hath in it the ſeed of death, but ſin hidden under the tongue, and kept in the mouth, by denying, diſſembling, or excuſing it, is a deadly poyſon. The Goſpel hath a remedy againſt that death which is deſerved by the acting of ſin; but it hath no Antidote againſt the poyſon of a ſtudied and continued concealment of ſin; 'Tis the gall of Aſps within him.

VERS. 15, 16, 17.

He hath ſwallowed down riches, and he ſhall vomit them up again. God ſhall caſt them out of his belly.
He ſhall ſuck the poyſon of Aſps, the Vipers tongue ſhall ſlay him.
He ſhall not ſee the rivers, the floods, the brooks of honey and butter.

THE ſimilitude between ſin in general, and pleaſant, though poyſonous meat, which Zophar purſued in the three former verſes, is here contracted to a particular ſin, the unjuſt obtaining of riches, the root of which is covetouſneſs, or the love of money, and that the root of all evil (1 Tim. 6. 10. 'Tis the root of all moral evil or ſin, and ſo the root of all penal evil or trouble, whether to our ſelves or others, as appears in this context.

He hath ſwallowed down riches.

The word implieth eating with inſatiable appetite; every man that eateth muſt alſo ſwallow, but a glutton is rather a ſwallower then an eater. He throws his meat whole down his throat, and eats (as we ſay) without chewing. The rod of Moſes (turned into a Serpent) ſwallowed up the rods of the Egyptian-ſorcerers. The word is often applied to expreſs oppreſſion (Pſal. 35.25.) Let them not ſay in their hearts, ah, ſo would we have it, let them not ſay we have ſwallowed him up; that is, we have made clear riddance of him, he is now a gone man for ever. The ravenous rage of the adverſary is deſcribed in this language (Pſal. 124.3.) If it had not been the Lord who was on our ſide, when men roſe up againſt us (that is, if we had one leſs then God, though the greateſt of creatures on our ſide) then they had ſwallowed us up quick. The Church is comforted

(Iſa. 49. 19.) with an aſſurance of freedom from ſuch ſwallowers; They that ſwallowed thee up are far away; thou hadſt thoſe by thee that were ready to devour thee (as it is ſaid Revel. 12. 4. The Dragon ſtood before the woman for to devour her child as ſoon as it was born) But thy oppreſſors ſhall be ſent packing; they who heretofore ſwallowed thee, ſhall not ſtay within ſight of thee. Thy ſwallowers are ſwallowed up. The metaphor is taken from wild beaſts which greedily devour their prey; He hath ſwallowed down riches.

Eſt Metaphora ducta ab immanibus beſtiis, quæ alias feras uno rictu degluttiunt.

Hence obſerve, Riches are a ſweet morſel to a worldly minded man.

And he is uſually moſt pleaſed with thoſe riches which he gets by unrighteouſneſs. What he tears from the backs, and pulls out of the bellies of others, delight his back and belly moſt. Some care not ſo much for the riches they get, as for the ſinful wayes by which they get them; It contents them more to over-reach another, then to enrich themſelves. Auguſtine confeſſeth of himſelf, that in his youth he would ſteal fruit, not becauſe he cared for the fruit, but becauſe he delighted to ſteal; ſo we may ſay of theſe, it is the wrong, not the gain which pleaſeth them: Stollen waters are ſweet, and this makes them ſweeteſt to ſome, that they are ſtollen. 'Tis rare, if he that ſwalloweth down riches, be not a ſwallower of the poor, if his particular riſing and filling, be not the falling and emptying of many.

Appoſitè ſignificatur per verbum devorare, quod eſt ſine delectu quicquid objicitur, ſive ſalubre ſit, ſive nocivū carpere.

Again, When a man ſwallows and devours greedily, he doth not well diſcern what he eats, he takes little notice whether his meat be wholſome and fit for nouriſhment or no, he eats without due reſpect either of quantity or quality. This ſets forth the temper of worldly men, and gives us a ſecond Obſervation.

Greedy covetous perſons care not what it is they have, ſo they may have it.

A juſt man conſiders every penny he gets, and asks his own heart, how he came by it; A righteous man is as careful what money he puts in his purſe, as a temperate man is what meat he puts into his ſtomach: He examines his title and enquires whether it be his right or no. He would not enjoy any thing without the good will of God, or with the wrong of his brother. The way in which he gains is more conſiderable to him, then the gain; and whence he hath it, then what he hath. But all is fiſh that comes to a wicked mans net, though it prove a Serpent not a fiſh; as appears by the iſſue of his greedy getting, or ſwallowing, laid down in the latter part of the verſe; He hath ſwallowed down riches, and,

He ſhall vomit them up again.

קיא Vomuit, evomuit, propriè de cibis.

קאה Pelicanus à vomitu, conchas enim à calore ventris coctas rurſus evomit ut teſtis rejectis eſculenta ſeligat. Plin. lib. 10. cap. 30.

What we eat moderately, we digeſt, concoct, and turn to good bloud for the ſupport of nature; but if a man eats intemperately, his ſtomach turns and he falls a vomiting; A glutton gets more meat down then others, but he gets leſs ſtrength by it. The Pelican hath his name in Hebrew from this root, becauſe having eaten Shell-fiſhes he vomiteth them out again as ſoon as they are a little boiled in his craw, that he may pick out the fiſh and leave the ſhell. The Prophet (Jer. 25. 27.) tells us of a vomit which the wrath of God gives a ſinful people; Therefore thou ſhalt ſay to them, thus ſaith the Lord of hoaſts the God of Iſrael, drink ye, and be drunken, and ſpue and fall, and riſe no more. What was it they ſhould drink? it was a cup of judgment, they had been drinking liberally the cup of ſin before, now God puts a cup of ſorrow and bloud to their mouths, and they muſt drink till they ſpued, and ſtagger till they fell, and ſo fall as not to riſe any more. And as wicked men ſhall drink the cup of wrath till they ſpue, ſo themſelves ſhall at laſt be ſpued out. They are to a Land as unwholſome meat is to the ſtomach, the burden of it. Hear that ſevere warning to the people of Iſrael (Lev. 18. 26, 28.) Ye ſhall therefore keep my Statutes and my Judgements, and ſhall not commit any of theſe abominations, neither any of your own Nation, nor any ſtranger that ſojourneth among you, that the Land ſpue not you out alſo, when ye defile it, as it ſpued out the nations that were before you.

But whence is it that the wicked man vomiteth up what he hath devoured? To clear that, conſider there are four ſorts of vomiting.

Firſt, From the fulneſs of the ſtomach, by exceſſive eating and drinking.

Secondly, From the filthineſs or foulneſs of the ſtomach, by eating and drinking thoſe things which are unwholeſome and unclean.

Thirdly, From the weakneſs of the ſtomach; Some are not able to retain, no not a little, and that good food, becauſe their ſtomachs are ill.

Fourthly, From a ſecret antipathy, or averſeneſs to that which is eaten. The vomit in the Text is not cauſed any of theſe wayes. A wicked man doth not vomit from the averſeneſs of his ſpirit to his ſin, he liketh it well enough; nor from the weakneſs of his ſpirit to ſin, he is mighty to act and digeſt the worſt of ſins; nor doth he vomit becauſe of the foulneſs of his ſpirit, that never troubles him; the fouler any mans ſpirit is, the more retentive it is of ſin: nor doth it proceed from his fulneſs of ſin; for how full ſoever he is, yet he is hungry ſtill, and ſaith not, it is enough.

Whence is it then that he vomiteth?

I anſwer, By diſtinguiſhing again of a two-fold vomiting.

Firſt, Free and natural: Secondly, Forced or artificial.

Some vomit alone, others have vomits given them; ſome vomit by the ſtrength of medicines, others vomit by the ſtrength of nature. The wicked man doth not vomit up his ill-gotten goods naturally, but violently; not freely but forcedly. The gain of fraud and oppreſſion may be ſaid to be vomited up two wayes.

Firſt, By repentance; Secondly, by expence.

Repentance in general is called by the ancients, The vomit of the ſoul, and that is applicable to any ſpecial repentance. And repentance upon this ſpecial account of unlawful gain (as alſo repentance upon what account ſoever may be) is two-fold.

Firſt, There is a repentance riſing from godly ſorrow; thus repenting Zacheus vomited up his ill-gotten goods. For when Chriſt was come to his houſe, Zacheus ſtood and ſaid unto the Lord, the half of my goods I give to the poor, and if I have taken any thing from any man by falſe accuſation, I reſtore him fourfold (Luk. 19. 8.) This gracious vomit his ſoul received by the power of the Spirit of God, provoking him to repentance; and happy it is for them that have ſwallowed down riches unduly, if the Lord give them this repentance of godly ſorrow to vomit them back again.

Secondly, There is a vomiting of riches by a repentance which ariſeth only from worldly ſorrow and gripes of conſcience, not from any change of the mind; ſo Judas having ſwallowed down the thirty pieces of ſilver (the price of bloud) for betraying Chriſt, vomited them up by repentance, ſuch as it was, a repentance proceeding from worldly not from Godly ſorrow (Matth. 27. 4.) Then Judas when he ſaw that he was condemned, repented himſelf, and brought the thirty pieces of ſilver to the chief Prieſts, and Elders, and caſt them down, and departed, and went and hanged himſelf. The Apoſtle (2 Cor. 7.) ſaith that worldly ſorrow cauſeth death. Sin cauſeth eternal death, and this kind of ſorrow for ſin cauſeth temporal death; ſome pine and languiſh to death in worldly ſorrow, and others (like Judas) by the violence of it thruſt themſelves violently out of the world, and die. Meer vexation enforceth ſome wicked men to be honeſt, and to caſt up what they have unjuſtly gotten; 'Tis not the tenderneſs of their conſciences, but the ſickneſs and pain of them, which puts them upon this. As ſome men ſay the reaſon why they refuſe or abſtain from eating ſuch or ſuch meat, is not becauſe they do not love it, but becauſe it doth not love them; it makes them ſick if they eat it: So the reaſon why ſome vomit up the unrighteous mammon which they have ſwallowed, is not becauſe they do not love it, but becauſe it doth not love them, but hath made them ſick. The Whale that ſwallowed up Jonah, found him hard meat, his ſtomack could not digeſt that morſel, he muſt vomit him up for his own eaſe. Riches in the belly of many an oppreſſor is like Jonah in the Whales belly, a trouble to his ſtomach, and he muſt vomit them up again, not out of love to righteouſneſs, or hatred of ſin, not out of pity to the oppreſſed, or charity to the poor, but for his own preſent eaſe, and yet, if go no further, how poor an eaſe will that prove? Such as this deſcribed is all the vomiting here meant. And in this Zophar doth not ſet forth the duty, but the puniſhment of a wicked man; For though it be better to reſtore any way, then to retain that which is ill gotten, yet a man is not made better who reſtoreth only thus. And we may ſay of ſuch a repentance, it is to be repented of.

Again, As there is a vomiting of riches by repentance, ſo ſecondly, by expence. And this alſo is twofold.

Firſt, By a willing expence; ſome men ſwallow down riches for prodigality; they ſpend profuſely, what they get ſinfully. What one luſt brings in, another luſt carrieth out. One luſt is as a rake to gather, and another as a fork to ſcatter. A conjunction of both theſe may be found in the ſame man. For there are two ſorts of covetous men. Some get meerly to hoard and lay up, their neſt is full of eggs, and yet they can ſcarce afford themſelves one, but ſit brooding upon them to hatch more. A ſecond ſort of covetous perſons extort and get meerly to ſpend; By covetous practices, they make proviſion for wanton and luxurious practices. Theſe vomit what they have ſwallowed, by a willing expence.

Secondly, Others vomit what they have ſwallowed by forced expence; ſuch troubles and Law-ſuits are brought upon them, that what they have violently or fraudulently gotten from others, they are compelled to refund, and pay back again; as appears yet more clearly in the next clauſe.

God ſhall caſt them out of his belly.] Theſe words ſhew what kind of vomit his is. The word in the Hebrew ſignifies both God and an Angel. The Septuagint render, An Angel ſhall caſt them out of his belly; And their Interpreters expound it of an evil Angel, who is the tormenter of this evil man; we refer it to God, as being a part of his divine juſtice, thus to repay unjuſt men; God ſhall caſt them out of his belly. An oppreſſour having gotten riches into his poſſeſſion hopes to hold them; But God ſends out his writ of ejectment, and turneth him out of their poſſeſſion, or them out of his. The word which we render caſt out, carrieth a double, and that a contrary ſignification; it ſignifies both to poſſeſs, and to diſpoſſeſs, to put in, and to thruſt out of an inheritance. So the word is uſed (Joſh. 23. 5.) in reference to the Canaanites, whom God diſpoſſeſſed; And the Lord your God, he ſhall drive them out of your ſight, and ye ſhall poſſeſs their Land. In both parts of which verſe we find the ſame word. As God caſt the Canaanites out of their Land to place his own people there, according to his promiſe; ſo God will caſt all ill-gotten riches, thoſe riches eſpecially, out of the belly of wicked men, which they have gotten from his people, contrary to his command. (Zach. 9. 4.) Behold the Lord will caſt her out (that is, Tyrus) why will the Lord caſt out Tyrus? Tyre was a merchandizing City, an oppreſſing City; Tyrus heaped up ſilver as the duſt, and fine gold as the mire of the ſtreets, verſ. 3. yet the Lord will make her poor, and naked, he will level her heaps of gold and ſilver, and ſmite her power in the Sea. The lot of proud oppreſſing Tyrus and her riches ſhall be the lot of every oppreſſour and his riches, God ſhall caſt them

ירש Hæreditavit poſſedit etiam hæreditate & poſſeſſione ejecit.

Out of his belly.] That is, out of his barns and gardners, out of his cheſts and ſtore-houſes; whereſoever he hath hoarded his riches, that's his belly, and from thence they ſhall be caſt.

> Hence obſerve, Firſt, The worldly man is unwilling to part with his worldly portion.

Here's an act of violence, God caſts them out of his belly, and pulls them from him by an act of juſtice, as he had unjuſtly pulled them from others. He can let his bloud go as eaſily as his wealth.

> Secondly, Note, Man may get, but he cannot hold what he hath got unjuſtly.

What God giveth he will maintain, what is ſinfully ſwallowed down ſhall be vomitted up with ſhame. I will puniſh Bell in Babylon, and I will bring forth out of his mouth what he hath ſwallowed up (Jer. 51. 44.) What was that? he had ſwallowed the riches of the Nations round about him. Thus the Prophet Iſaiah repreſents him boaſting (Chap. 10. 13, 14.) I have removed the bounds of the people, and have robbed their treaſures, my hand hath found as a neſt the riches of the people. But as ſome Princes politickly connive at their Subjects oppreſſions, till they get great eſtates, and then ſqueeſe all into their own coffers, and leave them naked; ſo the great God permits ſome to fill themſelves like ſpunges, by ſucking in the ſubſtance of others unrighteouſly, and then makes them return and render it back by his righteous judgments, Whatſoever is gotten by ſin, is not given by God; and whatſoever is not given by God, he threatens to take away: they who are rich, but not by the bleſſing of God, ſhall be made poor by the curſe of God; therefore the Pſalmiſt concludes, A little that the righteous man hath, is better then the great riches of the ungodly; This betterneſs, ariſeth two wayes: Firſt, From the excellency of the conveyance, and that in three reſpects; Firſt, the little which the righteous man hath, comes to him by the purchaſe of Chriſt. Secondly, He hath it by the promiſe. Thirdly, by the ſpecial providence and fatherly goodneſs of God to him. A little thus conveyed to the righteous man is better then the greateſt riches of many ungodly. Secondly, It is better in reference to the ſureneſs of it: there is a flaw in the title of wicked men, and therefore God will one time or other queſtion their poſſeſſion. The righteous hold their temporals as well as their ſpirituals (in capite) by Chriſt their head: and hence it is that they have a ſure eſtate in and hold of both.

This ſhould admoniſh all to conſider what riches they ſwallow down; He that hath got much honeſtly, may ſpoil all by mingling a little with it diſhoneſtly gotten. For as he that hath eaten divers wholeſome meats, may yet loſe the comfort and nouriſhment of them, by feeding upon ſome one unwholeſome diſh; and by this means undergoes a double evil; Firſt, in eating that which is bad, and then in vomiting up good and bad together; ſo 'tis in this caſe. Chriſt uſeth an argument (warning men to take heed of unjuſt gain) much higher then this (Mat. 16. 26.) What ſhall it profit a man if he gets the whole world, and loſeth his own ſoul? Put all unjuſt gain into the ballance with your ſoul, and ſee what you get by that, while you loſe this? The argument in the Text is alſo very preſſing; What ſhall it profit a man to get a maſs of worldly riches unjuſtly, and by that gain loſe all that he hath juſtly gotten. If injurious dealing did indammage our eſtates only, what advantage is there in dealing injuriouſly? But Zophar urgeth yet further in the next verſe.

Verſ. 16. He ſhall ſuck the poyſon of Aſps.

Theſe words may be taken either as a diſtinct ſimilitude, or as the concluſion of the former. There is a double reading; ſome thus; He ſhall ſuck the head of the Aſp. The ſame word in the Hebrew ſignifies the head and poyſon, becauſe the head in thoſe venomous Serpents holds the poyſon. We tranſlate this word (Roſh) Gall. (Deut. 29. 18.) Leſt there be among you a root that beareth Gall (or a head) and Wormwood, That is, leſt any perſon among you ſhould commit this wickedneſs (namely, Idolatry, or the worſhip of ſtrange gods) which will be as diſtaſtful to God as Gall is to man, and which will be bitter as Gall to the man who commits it, whether we conſider the bitterneſs of repentance if it be pardoned, or the bitterneſs of pain, if he (perſiſting in it impenitently) be puniſhed. And hence this very word is uſed again to ſignifie Gall, in that Prophetick Pſalm of the paſſion and pains of Chriſt for our ſins (Pſal. 69. 21.) They gave me alſo gall for my meat. Any Gall is ſo bitter and unſavoury to the taſte, ſo offenſive and troubleſome to the ſtomack, that 'tis a kind of poyſon, and ſome venomous creatures carry their poyſon in their Gall.

ראש Significat tum caput tum venenũ, quod capite aut dentibus ſerpentis venenum ineſt. Caput aſpidis ſuget. Vulg.

He ſhall ſuck the poyſon of Aſps.] That is, He ſhall find that moſt bitter and deadly to him, wherein he thought to find much ſweetneſs and delight. As if he had ſaid; Thou who hungerſt after the eſtates of the poor, I tell thee, when thou art ſucking them as at a honey-comb, thou art but ſucking the poyſon of Aſps. While the covetous oppreſſour is in the act of ſin, he ſaith, it is ſweet and good, he little thinks he is ſucking poyſon, the deadly poyſon of the Aſp: It is miſery enough to ſuck poyſon at any time, but to ſuck poyſon while we think we are ſucking milk or honey is a greater miſery. There are none ſo miſtaken as they who take wrongfully from others. As there is a ſinful ſparing, ſo a ſinful getting which tends to poverty; and he who thus Perinde cedet ei maleficium ac ſi venenũ hauſiſſet potentiſſimum, aut à vipera fuiſſet morſus. Jun.

thus gathers, do worſe then ſcatter; For, He ſhall ſuck the poyſon of Aſps, and (which ſpeaks the ſame or a worſe fate to him)

The Vipers tongue ſhall ſlay him.] That is he ſhall ſurely die, the iſſue ſhall be his ruine. The poyſon of Aſps is deadly, and that the Vipers tongue is preſent death, we have clear evidence (beſides what is aſſerted by natural Hiſtorians) from Scripture record. When Paul had eſcaped from Ship-wrack, and was come on ſhoar at Malta, the Barbarians ſhewed him kindneſs, and made him a fire, out of which when a Viper came and faſtned upon his hand, they looked when he ſhould fall down dead, concluding he was a murtherer, whom, though he eſcaped the Sea, yet, vengeance followed him to land, or (as that Text gives it) would not ſuffer him to live (Acts 28. 4.) So that, when Zophar ſaith, The Vipers tongue ſhall ſlay him; The meaning is, he ſhall be as certainly and ſuddenly ſlain, as if a Viper had bitten him. The Vipers tongue is worſe then the Lyons tooth, and gives ſo mortal a wound that every touch is death. When John the Baptiſt, as alſo Chriſt would ſhew how hurtful and dangerous the Scribes and Phariſees (among the Jewes) were, they call them, A Generation of Vipers (Matth. 3. 7. Matth. 12. 34.) Theſe Vipers never gave over till they had ſlain Chriſt. There's no eſcaping if a Viper bite; and of them Chriſt ſaith (Matth. 23. 33.) O Generation of Vipers, how ſhall ye eſcape the damnation of hell? It ſhews that the moral Viper is as dangerous as the natural, when we read that the former ſhall not eſcape the wrath of God, as man cannot eſcape, being ſtung, by the latter. The Vipers tongue is the Embleme of any remidileſs evil. And ſuch ſhall befal the covetous oppreſſour, The Vipers tongue ſhall ſlay him.

Nullum animal tanta celeritate linguam movet ut ſerpens, adeo ut triplicem linguam habere videatur, cum unam ſit. Plin. l. 6. c. 37. Iſid. lib. 12.

Hence note, The miſchief that a wicked man doth to others, ſhall return upon his own head.

While he impoveriſheth his neighbour, he undoeth himſelf; while he is ſucking others, he is ſlaying himſelf. Solomon deſcribes a combination of evil-doers, whoſe feet run to evil, they make haſt to ſhed bloud; But he concludes (Prov. 1. 18.) They lie in wait for their own blood, and lurk privily for their own lives; ſo are the wayes of every one that is greedy of gain, which taketh away the life of the owners thereof: They made haſt to ſhed the blood of others, but the event proved that they laid wait for their own bloud. Sin is the great Deceiver; The harm-doer is always the greateſt harm-receiver. He that layeth ſnares, layeth them for others, but he catcheth himſelf. And therefore Solomon reſolves it directly (which yet we are to underſtand of the event, not at all (which makes their caſe more miſerable) of their intention) They lurk privily for their own lives. All their lurking and plotting recoyles upon themſelves; Their own iniquities ſhall take them, and they ſhall be holden with the cords of their ſin, as the ſame Solomon expreſſeth it, (Prov. 5. 22.) As, He that is wiſe (that is, holy and righteous) ſhall be wiſe for himſelf (Prov. 9. 12.) That is, though he only intended the Glory of God, and the good of others, wholly denying and leaving out himſelf, yet himſelf ſhall be the chief gainer by it in the end; ſo he that is fooliſh (that is, wicked and unrighteous) ſhall be fooliſh to himſelf. Though he only intended the hurt of others, yet he ſhall be the chief, poſſibly, the only hurt-receiver in the end, as it follows in the latter part or croſs part of the ſame Proverb, If thou ſcorneſt, thou alone ſhalt bear it. The greateſt hurt which any man can do his brother by any wrong done to him, is ſo little comparatively to what he doth to himſelf, that the Scripture caſts the whole upon himſelf; He alone ſhall bear it. While he gives his brother a bitter portion to drink, himſelf drinks the poyſon of Aſps; While he wounds his brother with hand or tongue, the Vipers tongue ſhall ſlay him.

Further, By the Vipers tongue, we may underſtand any oppoſer, who riſeth up againſt and accuſeth this fraudulent or violent oppreſſour. An accuſing tongue, eſpecially a falſely and maliciouſly accuſing tongue, may well be called a Vipers tongue. In which ſence, principally, the Scribes and Phariſees are called a Generation of Vipers. Detraction wounds deeply, and a wound in the reputation is hardly healed. When the Ægytians would deſcribe a man ſmitten with a detracting tongue, they were wont to paint a Baſilisk, who kills ſuch as come near to him with his breath. And the Vipers tongue hath alſo been (among the Ancients) an Emblem of the ſame ſignification.

Per linguam viperæ ſignificari poteſt alius impius contraria loquens. Pined. Viperæ lingua ſymbolū eſt linguæ detractatoriæ.

Hence note, Oppreſſours ſhall not want accuſers, and they who have ſmitten others in their eſtates, ſhall be ſmitten in their names.

Such get riches to themſelves, a name, and they (ambitiouſly, as the Pſalmiſt hath it) call their Lands after their own name, hoping thereby to immortalize their memories. But their project fails them, and as they never deſerved nor had a good name, ſo they ſhall not long have a Great one. If good men do not cry them down, ſome or other as bad as themſelves ſhall. The Vipers tongue ſhall ſlay them.

Deus quibuſdam malis tanquam carnificibus uſus eſt ad ſumendas de aliis malis pœnas. Plut. de ſer. Num. vindicta.

Verſ. 17. He ſhall not ſee the rivers, the floods, the brooks of honey and butter.

Theſe words continue the miſery befalling a wicked man; He hath gained unjuſtly, but he ſhall not poſſeſs what he hath gained. He ſhall not ſee; that is, he ſhall not enjoy. Seeing is not taken here for a naked hungry ſight of theſe things. He may ſee the floods, rivers, and brooks of honey and butter with his eye, but he ſhall not have a comfortable uſe of them. Sight is ſo noble a ſenſe, that it is put for all the ſenſes; eſpecially for that which is the deſire of all the ſenſes, enjoyment. We render that of the Preacher (Eccl. 2. 1.) Enjoy pleaſure; the Text is, See pleaſure. Pleaſure is the object of every ſenſe, and that which every ſenſe naturally looks for, is the enjoyment of pleaſure. The ſight of the beſt things without enjoyment, doth rather afflict us then pleaſe us. Thus here, they ſhall not ſee, that is, they ſhall not have a comfortable or pleaſurable enjoyment, of the rivers, floods, and brooks; here is an elegant heap of words, all being of a near ſignification, and concurring to make an Hyperbolical ſpeech, ſignifying greateſt abundance of good things; honey and butter are put ſynecdochically for all good things. Rivers, brooks, floods, denote the fulleſt ſtore and plenty of them. Or theſe words may note theſe three things to us diſtinctly.

Non ſumitur pro jejuno viſu ſed pro delectabili, qualis cum poſſeſſione & uſu rerum ſocietur; inde videre pro uti & experiri; viſus ad actiones reliquorum ſenſuū transfertur. Aug. lib. 10. Confeſſ. c. 35. & Epiſt. 112. ad Paulin.

Firſt, Plenty in the word flood; we may have water in a pond or ciſtern, but floods are the exceſſes and over-flowings of water.

Secondly, Perpetuity in the word river; floods fall quickly; Torrents riſe with the fall of rain, or the diſſolving of ſnow, and when this hath been a while diſſolved and that fallen, they fall again. But rivers keep a conſtant ſtream, being fed by conſtant ſprings. When the Lord ſaith (Iſa. 48. 18.) Then had thy peace been as a river; The meaning is, that in caſe of their obedience, their peace had been continued. And when the Lord promiſeth (Iſa. 66. 12.) I will extend peace to thee as a river; He aſſures them that their peace ſhall continue for ever.

Thirdly, The joyning of theſe three together, floods, rivers, brooks, may imply variety of kinds, or the confluence of all ſorts of good things, both little and great together. Brooks are little rivers, and rivers are great Brooks. Floods are the inundations or ſwellings of both beyond their banks.

He ſhall not ſee theſe rivers, floods, and brooks, of honey and butter.

And who ever did ſee them? Rivers and brooks of water, as they are uſeful and delectable, ſo every where ſeen. But where ſhall we ſee rivers or brooks of honey and butter? This is a high ſtrain of Rhetorick, noting only (as was toucht before) greateſt abundance; yet in ſome Countries there is ſuch abundance of honey and butter, that, they may be ſaid to have (almoſt) in the letter, rivers and brooks of them. It is ſaid (1 Sam. 14. 25.) that when the people of the Land (in purſuit of the Philiſtims) came to a wood, there was honey upon the ground, and (verſ. 26.) the honey dropped. Here were rivers of honey, flowing honey. The land of Canaan is often deſcribed by this Periphraſis, A Land flowing with milk and honey (Exod. 3. 8, 17, &c.) Job ſpeaking of his former flouriſhing eſtate, gives it in this language (Chap. 29. 6.) I waſhed my ſteps with butter, and the rock poured me out rivers of oyl. They who eat butter and honey are ſuppoſed by ſome to have more then neceſſaries (though others expound it for plain Country food) even dainties to feed upon (Iſa. 7. 22.) Butter and honey ſhall every one eat that is left in the Land. And this is the food which the the Virgins ſon our Immanuel was propheſied to eat at the 15th verſe of the ſame Chapter; Butter and honey ſhall he eat, that he may know how to refuſe the evil and chooſe the good. That is, that he may grow up to years of diſcretion, and ſo be able to diſtinguiſh between that which is morally good and morally evil.

Further, Some underſtand butter and honey allegorically, for ſpiritual good things; The butter and honey of the Land of promiſe were indeed ſhadows of heavenly things. And this amounts to a ſorer judgment upon the wicked man, whoſe portion, how great ſoever it is in temporals, ſhall be nothing in eternals; His whole lot falls on this ſide heaven, and the things of heaven. But I rather keep to the literal ſence, which ſuits clearly with the words foregoing; He ſhall ſuck the poyſon of Aſps, the Vipers tongue ſhall ſlay him: there's an end of him; he ſhall not ſee the rivers, &c. of honey and butter which he looked for.

Laſtly, Some give the meaning as if the ſordid diſpoſition of a covetous worldling were here deſcribed; who though he doth abound with the things of this life, yet he doth not ſee them; that is, he hath not a heart to make uſe of them, but keeps all in priſon; His rivers and brooks when in their higheſt flood, are as dried up to himſelf; This (I grant) is a judgement viſible upon many covetous wicked men, who as much want what they have, as what they have not. But I paſs this alſo, and ſhall inſiſt only upon our firſt interpretation, He ſhall not ſee the rivers, &c. Then he had hopes to ſee, that is, to poſſeſs and enjoy them; He made ſure of them, but they paſſed away, and proved not ſure to him.

Hic deſcribitur ſordidum avari hominis ingenium, qui quamvis bonorum omnium copia abundet nihil ſibi ex bonis aſſumit. Cajet.

Hence obſerve, Firſt, A worldly man hath great expectations, he promiſeth himſelf huge things in the world, whole rivers, brooks and floods of honey and butter.

Small matters will not ſerve his turn, he dreams not only of Gold, but of golden mountains, and golden ſhowers; he dreams of rivers and floods of gold; What pleaſant dreams of eſteem, honour, and riches hath he; He phancieth that all ſhall not only honour, but humour and adore him; He promiſeth himſelf, that he ſhall be able to do what he will, and make whom he pleaſeth ſtoop to him, that none ſhall dare to ſpeak a word, or riſe up againſt him: What fine imaginations have many about this world, but they reckon (as we ſay) without their Hoaſt. For,

Secondly, Obſerve, God often cuts wicked men ſhort of their expectations.

He ſhall not ſee the rivers, &c. of honey and butter; He looks for them, but he ſhall not ſee them; He hopes, but he ſhall be aſhamed of his hope. What the Poets phancied of Tantalus, is true and accompliſht in him. He is Tantaliz'd, ſtanding up to the chin in thoſe floods and rivers, of which he cannot drink; he hath pleaſant apples touching and playing upon his lips, which yet he cannot taſte. He thought himſelf happy in getting great things, but, his miſery is, he cannot enjoy what he hath gotten. Solomon ſaith of a ſloathful man (Prov. 12.27.) He roaſteth not what he hath gotten in hunting; his meaning is, he will not hunt for his meat, he will take no pains for his living; if he have any roſt-meat, it is not what himſelf, but what his friends or forefathers have hunted and caught for him. We may ſay the ſame of many covetous men, who though they take pains enough in hunting for their living, who though they riſe early, go to bed late, and compaſs Sea and Land in the purſuit of riches, yet they roſt not what they have got; though they have gotten much in this hunting, yet God denieth them the comfortable enjoyment of it: And he doth it two wayes; Firſt, God ſometimes taketh the man away from his gettings, as is inſtanced (Luke 12.) in the rich man, who ſaid to his ſoul, Thou haſt goods laid up for many years; He had rivers and brooks, which would never fail, nor be dried up, as he dreamed, but he ſaw them not; for God ſaid to him, Thou fool, this night thy ſoul ſhall be required of thee; then whoſe ſhall thoſe things be which thou haſt provided?

Secondly, God takes away what he was poſſeſſed of, he pulls all out of his hands, or from between his teeth. When he hath good things about him, and is reſolving to take his fill of them, then God ſends a flood of wrath, and ſweeps away his floods of riches; ſo that he cannot ſo much as behold them any longer with his eye. Thus the Lord threatned his ancient people in caſe of diſobedience (Deut. 28.31.) Thine oxe ſhall be ſlain before thy eye, and thou ſhalt not eat thereof; thine Aſs ſhall be violently taken away before thy face, and ſhall not be reſtored to thee. That which he hath laboured for, ſhall be taken away, and not reſtored; his loſs ſhall be irrecoverable. Or himſelf ſhall be compelled to reſtore what he hath laboured for, he ſhall not ſwallow it down, as Zophar ſhews in the next verſe, where he gives us in plain words, without a figure, a further account of the wicked mans non-enjoyment of what he had wrongfully ſpoiled and ſtript others of, in hope to make himſelf a happy man.

VERS. 18, 19.

That which he laboured for ſhall he reſtore, and ſhall not ſwallow it down; according to his ſubſtance ſhall the reſtitution be, and he ſhall not rejoyce therein.

Becauſe he hath oppreſſed, and hath forſaken the poor, becauſe he hath violently taken away a houſe, which he builded not.

IN the former verſe Zophar aſſures Job that the wicked man ſhall not ſee the rivers, the floods, and brooks of honey and butter; that is, he ſhall not enjoy the golden abundance he dreamed of. Here Zophar tells him why or whence this comes to paſs.

What he laboured for he ſhall reſtore, and ſhall not ſwallow it down.

The Hebrew is, He ſhall reſtore his labour; The original is conciſe; What we render by eight words in our language, is but two there. But how can labour be reſtored? We may clear it three wayes.

מֵשִׁיב יְגָע Reddet laborem.

Firſt, Taking labour for the miſery and trouble which the wicked man brought on others. Then to reſtore labour, is to be puniſhed and troubled in proportion to the trouble which he put others to. Troublers of others ſhall not want trouble themſelves. Trouble ſhall be reſtored or paid back again into their own boſomes.

Dabit pœnas pro labore & moleſtia quam aliis inflixit. Pined.

Secondly, He ſhall reſtore labour; That is, the profit and fruit of their labours, whom he had wickedly oppreſſed or defrauded.

Thirdly, By labour, we may underſtand any fruit or profit of his own labour as well right as wrong; our Tranſlation holds forth that ſence; That which he laboured for (or the profit which came in by his labour) ſhall he reſtore. The word which ſignifies labour, is extendable to all kind of labour, but properly to that which bringeth in profit, and advantage, ſuch as men take in trading and commerce, (Hoſ. 12.8.) where the Prophet ſpeaks of Ephraim under the Title of a Merchant; And Ephraim ſaid, yet I am become rich, and have found out ſubſtance; in all my labours (which I have taken for my profit) they ſhall find none iniquity in me. (Prov. 23.4.) Labour not to be rich; and it notes ſuch a labour for riches as is accompanied with much toyl of body, eſpecially with reſtleſneſs of mind: it implyeth not only (as is commanded Gen. 3.) Eating bread in the ſweat of the face, but in the vexation of the heart.

Græco κοπιάω reſpondet, & notat laborem cum moleſtia & laſſitudine.

Zophar doth not ſay, He ſhall reſtore his goods or eſtate, but what he laboured for; teaching us that the things of this world are ſuch as men toylingly yet willingly labour for; riches are ſo much laboured for, that the ſame word ſignifies both labour and riches.

Hence obſerve, Man is very ready to take pains for worldly things, for the things of this life.

We can freely beſtow many thoughts upon, What ſhall we eat? what ſhall we drink? and wherewith ſhall we be cloathed? Chriſt ſeeing the thoughts of men run ſo much to the world, pull'd them quite out of the world; Take no thought (Matth. 6.26.) not that it is ſinful to think what we ſhall eat, only we muſt not be thoughtful or full of thoughts about it; or Chriſt ſpeaks comparatively, take no thought for this world in ballance with the next. Beſtow your thoughts upon better queſtions then, What ſhall we eat? what ſhall we drink? how ſhall we be cloathed? Labour an anſwer to theſe queſtions, How ſhall we be ſaved? how ſhall we make our calling and election ſure? how ſhall we honour God? how ſhall we ſerve our generation? Man is ſo apt to over-act his labour for the world, that Chriſt in another place ſeemeth to put a total prohibition upon that labour (Joh. 6. 27.) Labour not for the meat that periſheth, but for that which indures to everlaſting life; though a man labour very hard for the things of the world, yet all the way is down-hill to his nature, and the wheels of his ſpirit move ſo faſt, that (as the Ancient Moraliſt ſaid in another caſe) He hath need of trigging. In all theſe worldly labours man needeth not a ſpurr, but a bridle. Our ſpirits are ſo fleet in this purſuit, that we muſt have weight laid on us. Labour not for the meat that periſheth. The Prophet (Iſa. 55. 1.) calls aloud to buy ſpirituals; Come and buy wine and milk without money, or without price: But men had rather beſtow their pains and labour for the world, then take heavenly things at the loweſt rates, upon the eaſieſt price, yea without price; as the Prophets rebuke intimates in the next words, Wherefore do ye ſpend your money for that which is not bread, and your labour for what ſatisfieth not. Bread in Scripture comprehends every good thing, and that which is not bread is good for nothing. Bread ſatisfies the hunger of man and renews his ſtrength, but that which is not bread cannot ſatisfie. All the things of this life (which are our bread) are no bread in compariſon of the things of Chriſt, eſpecially of Chriſt himſelf, who is living bread, the bread of life, and that an eternal life; yet Chriſt who is the beſt bread, better then bread, is little laboured for; and that which hath ſo little of bread in it, that it is not bread, is every mans labour, and the only labour of moſt men.

Etiamſi labore ſuo, lacunam damni à Deo illati expleturus ſibi videatur, fructum tamen non percipiet. Jun.

Again, Labour ſignifieth that which a man hath gotten by honeſt endeavours, and in righteous wayes. That which is unduly gotten, is not (properly) ſaid to be gotten by labour, though a man hath laboured much in getting it. Thus labour is oppoſed to ſtealing (Epheſ. 4. 28.) Let him that ſtole ſteal no more (what ſhall he do then?) but rather let him labour working with his hands the thing that is good, that he may have to give to him that needeth. So we may take it here, this man hath gotten much wickedly, and he hath gotten ſomewhat honeſtly, he ſhall ſuffer damage in his honeſt gains, becauſe he hath gained diſhoneſtly. He ſhall reſtore his labour, or what he hath laboured for. A little ill gotten poyſons that which is well gotten; as was touched before.

And ſhall not ſwallow it down.] The word was opened at the 15th verſe; where it is ſaid, he hath ſwallowed down riches; It may be enquired, how Zophar ſaith here, He ſhall not ſwallow it down? To clear that you may conſider of a two-fold ſwallowing.

Firſt, There is a ſwallowing by rapine, and violence; thus the wicked man ſwallowed down riches at verſe 15.

Secondly, There is a ſwallowing for nouriſhment, and ſuſtenance, for ſtrength and ſupport; Thus 'tis ſaid here, He ſhall not ſwallow it down. A man may be ſaid to ſwallow down what he hath gotten, and to digeſt it, when his eſtate thrives, as the body doth with meat well digeſted. This is the ſence of the place here, What he hath laboured for he ſhall reſtore, he ſhall not ſwallow it down; That is, it ſhall not be converted either to his perſonal benefit, or to the benefit of his family. As before, He ſhall not ſee, is, he ſhall not enjoy, ſo now, he ſhall not ſwallow, is, he ſhall not thrive or wax ſtrong in ſtate by all his gettings.

Illis non fruetur diu. Merc. Cum mox vomit perinde eſt ac ſi non abſorbiſſet.

Yet we are not to underſtand the Text, as if this were plainly the lot of every wicked man, but thus it is with many, and thus in ſome ſence it is with every wicked man. For, Either God doth not ſuffer him to hold that long, which he hath gotten unjuſtly, or it doth him ſo little good while he hath it, that he may be ſaid not to have had it; The longeſt contents of this life, are of ſo ſhort a being, that they may be ſaid not to be at all.

> Hence obſerve, A wicked man hath no true profit by all his labours.

The promiſe to the Godly is (Pſal. 128. 2.) Bleſſed is the man that feareth, he ſhall eat of the labour of his hands: He that feareth God, ſtands under the influence of that ſweet promiſe; He ſhall eat the labour of his hands. It is ſaid of Chriſt in the Prophet (Iſa. 53. 11.) He ſhall ſee of the travail of his ſoul, and ſhall be ſatisfied. Chriſt laboured hard and he did eat the fruit of his labour; He ſaw and daily ſeeth of the travail of his ſoul; many believe and are ſaved; The ſaving of ſouls is the fruit of the travail of Chriſts ſoul. Thus in proportion a Godly man ſeeth of the travail of his ſoul, and is ſatisfied, he labours, he takes much pains, in his place and calling, he hath many weary dayes, and ſome waking nights, but by the bleſſing of God, his labours are fruitfull; He eats his labour to the refreſhing of himſelf and family, and to the bearing up of his credit in the world. The ungodly ſhall not find it ſo at all, or ſhall not long find it ſo; he muſt reſtore his labour, and not ſwallow it down.

According to his ſubſtance ſhall his reſtitution be.

תמורתו Reſtitutio dicitur permutatio, quia ſemper fit per aliquod cambium, nam pro alienis inique raptis ſua dantur. Tantum reſtituet, quantum ex alieno didatus eſt. q. d. juxta menſuram opum quas rapuit vice rerum jam mutatâ reſtituet. Merc.

The word which we tranſlate reſtitution, ſignifies any kind of change. It is rendred by recompence (Job 15. 31.) Vanity ſhall be his recompence, or the change that he ſhall have is from bad to worſe, even into vanity: ſo the word is uſed, Ruth 4. 7. Levit. 17. 10, 23. Some give the ſence thus, He ſhall be as poor as ever he was rich; His change ſhall be according to his ſubſtance. Our Tranſlation ſuppoſeth Zophar giving the rule of reſtitution, According to his ſubſtance ſhall his reſtitution be.

> Hence obſerve; If that which is ill gotten be not reſtored, it ſhall.

If men will not reſtore willingly, God will make them reſtore whether they will or no; though man hath no mind to it, yet he muſt. It is a duty to reſtore what we borrow, much more what any man hath violently taken away! Owe nothing to any man, but to love one another (Rom. 13. 8.) Love is a debt which is alwayes owing, and ſhould be alwayes paying; There can be no diſcharge of that bond. When we have paid much love, we ſtill owe more. But other debts muſt not only be paid, but may be diſcharged. If a man muſt not alwayes owe what he hath borrowed, then much leſs where he hath defrauded. Oppreſſion whether ſecret or open is a crying ſin; and until reſtitution be offered or really made where the party offending is able, or really deſired where he is unable, the mouth of it cannot be ſtopped. This being ſo neceſſary a duty, I ſhall for the clearing of it briefly touch theſe five things, And ſhew

Firſt, What reſtitution is; Secondly, what muſt be reſtored; Thirdly, who muſt reſtore; Fourthly, to whom we muſt reſtore; Fifthly, the proportion of it.

To the firſt queſtion, What is this reſtitution? I anſwer, It is an act of communicative juſtice, whereby the wrong which we have done to another is recompenced, and he again re-eſtated in his own. To give to the poor is a duty, yet an act of charity. But to reſtore (though to the rich) is not only a duty, but an act of Juſtice.

Secondly, What muſt be reſtored? That which hath been unjuſtly gotten; yet the meaning is not that a man muſt alwayes reſtore what he hath taken away in ſpecie, or the thing it ſelf in kind. If the value and worth of it be reſtored, that ſufficeth; yet it doth not ſuffice to reſtore the bare value of that which hath been taken away. For (as Caſuiſts ſpeak) there are two things to be conſidered in reſtitution.

Damnum emergens lucrum ceſſans.

Firſt, The damage done to the perſon wronged, by detaining his goods.

Secondly, The hindrance of that profit or benefit, which probably he might have made by their continued enjoyment and poſſeſſion. In ſtrictneſs the wrong doer muſt account to the wrong ſufferer in both theſe, elſe the wrong done is not repaired according to the nature of reſtitution.

Thirdly, 'Tis queſtioned, Who muſt reſtore? Some may be concern'd in making reſtitution who were not the immediate actors of the wrong. There are ſeven ſorts of perſons who may be involved under the duty of reſtitution.

Firſt and principally, they who perſonally did the wrong.

Secondly, If they have not made reſtitution, their heirs who poſſeſs their eſtate are bound in conſcience to do it.

Thirdly, They are engaged to reſtore who have given aſſiſtance to the damage of others, either by force, command, or counſel.

Fourthly, They, who though antecedently they had no hand in doing it, neither as principals nor abetters, yet gave their after-conſent or approbation to it.

Fifthly, They, who having power in their hands to prevent the damage or wrong of others, having knowingly neglected to put it forth for them.

Sixthly, They, who having lawfull power in their hand to relieve the wronged, have yet ſuffered them to lie under thoſe wrongs unrelieved.

Seventhly, They, who willingly conceal the wrong which they know hath been done to another, or being called refuſe to give teſtimony, or bear witneſs according to their knowledg, that ſo he might be righted. All theſe are under an obligation to reſtore, becauſe they are all partakers in and ſo guilty of the wrong.

Fourthly, To whom muſt we reſtore? I anſwer; Firſt, Reſtitution muſt be made to the perſon wronged; For to wrong one man and reſtore to another, will not make up a reſtitution. This diſcovers their error and miſtake, who having by their extorſions ground the faces of the poor, yea to enrich themſelves, have impoveriſht many rich, yet think it a ſufficient amends, if they build an Hoſpital for thoſe poor whom they never ſaw, much leſs wronged in perſon; Whereas the Laws of reſtitution ſay, The perſon wronged muſt be repayed. To give to the poor at large is charity, but no reſtitution; yet to give to the poor what is not juſtly ours, is no charity. No man can indeed do an act of charity, but he that hath done or is ready to do all acts of Juſtice. God doth as much hate robbery for charity to the poor now, as he did of old for ſacrifice or burnt offerings to himſelf. So that till a man hath reſtored and done all men right, he is not in a capacity to give to the poor; and to how many poor ſoever he gives, he makes no reſtitution, unleſs he gives to thoſe individual perſons (if they may be found and will receive it) whom he hath perſonally wronged. Secondly, If ſuch be not living, then reſtitution muſt be made to their heirs or Executors, to whom the right and diſpoſition of their eſtate doth belong. Thirdly, If neither the man himſelf, nor his heirs are to be found, then the perſon offending muſt reſtore to God; he muſt put his ill gotten goods into Gods Treaſury. The earth is the Lords, and the fulneſs of it; he gives to all, and yet he looks to receive from many. Honour the Lord with thy ſubſtance (Prov. 3. 9.) God hath a double treaſure, to which we are to bring our ſubſtance, that we may honour him. Firſt, All the godly are Gods treaſury; ſuppoſe they are not in extreme want, and ſo need not the gifts of charity, yet God takes it well, and as done to himſelf, when we beſtow upon ſuch the gifts of bounty, for their encouragement and more comfortable ſubſiſtance in this world. Secondly, The poor, chiefly the godly poor are Gods treaſury; I do not ſay we muſt examine every poor man to know whether he be godly or no before we give; but ſuch as we know to be godly we ſhould not fail to give to before others. That's the rule of the Apoſtle; Do good to All, eſpecially to thoſe who are of the Houſhold of faith (Gal. 6. 10.) Thus there will never want perſons to whom reſtitution may be made; if the man cannot be had, nor any of his who was wrong'd, then reſtore to God. Any godly man, eſpecially a godly poor man is Gods Treaſury.

The fifth thing queſtioned is the proportion, or how much muſt be reſtored. The Text Anſwers and reſolves it, thus; He ſhall reſtore all his ſubſtance, or, all that he hath in the world ſhall go to make good the wrong which he hath done; yet more clearly to the rule of reſtitution, according to his ſubſtance is this. Suppoſe he be not able to make full reſtitution, yet according to his ſubſtance, that is, ſo far as he is able, ſo far as his eſtate will reach he ſhall reſtore; Half a loaf is better then no bread, in reference both to the receiver and the reſtorer. When we cannot do what we ſhould, yet we muſt do what we can. Further, divers Scriptures reſolve the proportion of reſtitution. The Law given the Jewes ſaid (Exod. 22. 1.) If a man ſhall ſteal an oxe or a ſheep and kill it or ſell it, he ſhall reſtore five oxen for an oxe, and four ſheep for a ſheep. The reaſon of this difference why the Law made the proportion fivefold in oxen, and but fourfold in ſheep, might be this; becauſe the owner loſt the labour of his oxe, and the profit of that was to be valued in reſtitution; but ſheep are not for labour. Solomon makes the proportion higher (Prov. 6. 34.) If he (that is, the thief) be found, he ſhall reſtore ſevenfold. But ſuppoſe the man were not worth ſo much as he had ſtoln, how could he reſtore ſevenfold? The next clauſe anſwers that caſe; He ſhall give all the ſubſtance of his houſe; That is, if he be poor, yet let him not be ſpared, but take all. But ſeeing the Law of Moſes made the proportion fivefold, why is it there ſaid, He ſhall reſtore ſevenfold. To ſalve this, Junius tranſlates (Septies) ſeven times. And gives the meaning thus; Let him reſtore often, even as often as he is found ſtealing; or this phraſe of reſtoring ſevenfold, imports not any addition in thoſe times to the penalty of the Law, becauſe of the encreaſe of that ſin, and the proneneſs of men to it, as ſome (I conceive unwarrantably) expound the place; but only that the thief ſhould make full ſatisfaction. So the word is uſed Pſal. 12. 6. In the 22. of Exodus v. 4. it is ſaid; If the theft be certainly found in his hand alive, whether it be oxe or aſſe or ſheep, he ſhall reſtore donble. At the firſt verſe the ſtoln oxe was to be reſtored fivefold, and the ſheep fourfold; how doth this conſiſt with the 4th verſe, He ſhall reſtore the oxe and ſheep double. The reaſon is, becauſe the firſt verſe ſpeaks of the oxe and ſheep either kild or ſold; This 4th verſe ſpeaks of the thief taken (as we ſay) in the manner, or preſently apprehended with thoſe goods in his hand; The owner being by this ſpeedy diſcovery and recovery of his goods, put to leſs dammage, the penalty of reſtitution was leſſened. Another Scripture ſpeaks of reſtitution in an example (Luk. 19. 8.) Zacheus ſtood, and ſaid to the Lord, behold Lord, the half of my goods I give to the poor, and if I have taken any thing from any man by falſe accuſation I reſtore him fourfold. Zacheus makes a double diſpoſition of his eſtate; firſt, to thoſe who were poor; Secondly, to thoſe whom he had impoveriſht whether poor or rich; Zacheus was ſure his eſtate would hold out to reſtore fourfold to thoſe that he wronged, elſe he could not have given half his eſtate to the poor.

Now though we cannot in theſe times enforce theſe rules of proportion taken from the Judicials of Moſes, ſtrictly upon the conſciences of men; yet we may draw down theſe two concluſions for our direction in this thing.

First, That in Reſtitution the Dammage of the perſon wronged ſhould be fully repaired.

Secondly, That if the wrong-doer be not able to give ſo much as will fully repair the dammage, then according to his ſubſtance, or to the utmoſt of what he hath he is bound to reſtore.

Reſtitution muſt be made according to the ſubſtance unjuſtly gotten, or according to the ſubſtance of the unjuſt getter. They who reſtore willingly as true Repentants do, will always give back (if they have it) according to the ſubſtance unjuſtly gotten. But they whom divine vengeance forceth to reſtore, ſhall give back, ſore againſt their wills, according to their own ſubſtance, how much ſoever it is, yea though it be much more then they have unjuſtly gotten: God will take all from him who hath no will to reſtore any thing. That's Zophars meaning when he ſaith here; According to his ſubſtance ſhall his reſtitution be.

And he ſhall not rejoyce therein.

Wherein ſhall he not rejoyce? It may be taken two ways.

Firſt, In this reſtitution, it pleaſed him well enough to oppreſs and do wrong, but he ſhall take no pleaſure in reſtoring and doing right; he ſhall not do it willingly as Zacheus, who rejoyced more in reſtitution then ever he had done in oppreſſion; but the wicked man here ſpoken of is forced to reſtore, and therefore cannot rejoyce therein.

Secondly, It refers rather to the eſtate which he had gotten by oppreſſion: He ſhall reſtore it, and ſhall not rejoyce therein; that is, his ill gotten goods ſhall adminiſter no content to his mind. Beſides, there is more meant by this expreſſion then is expreſſed, when Zophar ſaith, He ſhall not rejoyce in it; the ſence is, he ſhall have ſorrow with it, or it ſhall be a vexation to him. The word which we render rejoyce, is emphatical, it ſignifies to rejoyce with boaſting, yea with inſulting, a proud rejoycing. The word is applied unto the Peacock; Gaveſt thou the goodly wings unto the Peacock, or wings and feathers unto the Oſtrich? (Job 39. 13.)

Solent hujuſmodi extenuationes frequentèr inveniri in ſacris.

13.) Gaveſt thou the rejoycing wings to the Peacocks; the Peacock is brag of his feathers, and ſpreads his plumes, and then cryeth out, and ſtrutteth as it were exulting and boaſting in his beauty. This word is alſo uſed (Prov. 7. 18.) Where the Adultereſs ſaith, Come let us take our fill of love until the morning, let us ſolace our ſelves with loves. Such is the joy of wicked men in worldly enjoyments, they ſpread their plumes, they look upon their eſtates, houſes, and lands, upon their gold and ſilver, as a Peacock on his tail, or as filthy lovers forethink their unclean embraces, and then boaſt and pride themſelves. So did Nebuchadnezzar walking in his palace and diſcourſing with his own vain heart, Is not this great Babel, which I have built,&c. Thus the worldly man always would, but his joy is often ſtopt. He ſhall not rejoyce therein.

Hence note, Firſt, The things of this world are the matter of a carnal mans rejoycing.

When a godly man hath the world at will, he hath no will thus to rejoyce in it: he rejoyceth in theſe things (as the Apoſtle directs 1 Cor. 7. 30.) As though he rejoyced not; His joyes indeed are in God. Many ſay, who will ſhew us any good? David anſwers (Pſal. 4. 6.) Lord lift thou the light of thy countenance upon us, thou ſhalt put gladneſs in my heart more then in the time when their corn and wine increaſed. Job (Chap. 31. 25.) gives us this proteſtation of his own integrity, and uprightneſs, that he lived not in worldly joyes, though he had much of the world; If I rejoyced becauſe my hand hath gotten much,&c. It is a duty to bleſs God for what we have, and to take comfort in the uſe of it; but to rejoyce in the creature, is to put it into the place of the Creator, and to commit Idolatry with it. As it is the higheſt act of Grace to make our boaſt of God all the day long; ſo it is the higheſt and vaineſt acting of corruption to make our boaſt of the world, though but a moment. Let not the wiſe man glory in his wiſdome, neither let the mighty man glory in his might, let not the rich man glory in his riches; But let him that glorieth glory in this, that he underſtandeth and knoweth me, that I am the Lord, &c. (Jer. 9. 23, 24.) Theſe checks given to humane gloryings, ſhew in what man delights to glory. And when man is moſt ſet and bent upon theſe gloryings, God delights to check him moſt, and to ſay, He ſhall not rejoyce therein. We are never ſo near the loſs of theſe rejoycings, as when we make ſureſt of them.

Again, We may take this rejoycing in a lower ſence, for thoſe common contents and refreſhings which by the ordinary providence and bleſſing of God are received in the uſe of the creature. Thus God is ſaid to fill the hearts of men with food and Gladneſs (Acts 14. 17.) He gives not only meat but mirth, and a kind of natural muſick with it. And indeed when he ſpreads a Table for us, he likes it well to ſee us eat our meat with gladneſs, as well as with ſingleneſs of heart (Acts 2. 46.) If we take rejoycing in this ſence; Then the words, He ſhall not rejoyce, yield us this Obſervation.

God can ſeparate joy from the injoyment of the creature.

Many enjoy that which they cannot rejoyce in; there is a vaſt difference between the having of outward things, and taking comfort in them; theſe are diſtinct gifts of God (Eccleſ. 5. 19, 20.) Every man alſo to whom God hath given riches and wealth, and hath given him power to eat thereof, and to take his portion, and to rejoyce in his labour, this is the gift of God. Whoſoever lives hath a natural power to eat, yet many live in the abundance of riches and wealth, who have not a hearty power to eat; They have a portion, but they cannot take it, or rejoyce in it; They have meat, but no muſick. God can make muſick at a poor mans Table; Though he hath but a cruſt of bread, and a cup of water, yet he ſhall have muſick with it, he ſhall rejoyce in it; whereas though the rich man hath muſick at his Table, yet he ſhall have none in his ſpirit. (Eccleſ. 5. 17.) All his dayes he eateth in darkneſs, he hath much ſorrow: this alſo is a ſore evil. But how is it ſaid, that All his dayes he eateth in darkneſs? What hath he not a candle to eat by? yes he may eat by Sun-light and Candle-light too, he may have outward light enough, yet he eats in darkneſs, that is, with diſcontent, and trouble of mind; he hath no joy in what he hath, his ſweeteſt morſels are eaten with four ſawce. He poſſeſſeth much, yet is as having nothing. For this word is gone out againſt him; He ſhall not rejoyce therein.

Zophar having thus deſcribed the puniſhment, returns to the ſin of this wicked man.

Verſ. 19. Becauſe he hath oppreſſed and forſaken the poor, becauſe he hath violently taken away a houſe which he builded not.

This verſe, as it ſtands between, ſo it gives the reaſon both of the 18th and 20th verſes. Here's the reaſon why he ſhall reſtore what he hath laboured for, ver. 18. Becauſe he hath oppreſſed the poor; this alſo is the reaſon why he ſhall not feel quietneſs in his belly (ver. 20.) The word which we tranſlate to oppreſs, ſignifies oppreſſion joyned not only (as all oppreſſion is) with injuſtice, but with extremity, tyrannical oppreſſion, without mercy, or moderation, without hoe or hold. Some give full ſcope to their rage, and wrath, they put neither bond nor bridle upon their covetouſneſs and cruelty; ſuch are characteris'd by this word, which moſt properly notes, breaking in pieces; we ſay uſually when men fail in their eſtates, ſuch are broken; ſome break through their own neglect and careleſneſs, many are broken by the harſhneſs and ſeverity of others. And as the wrath of man breaks many, ſo the juſtice of God breaks not a few (Iſa. 24. 19.) The earth is utterly broken down, the earth is clean diſſolved, the earth is moved exceedingly. Wicked men break and oppreſs the poor, God breaketh the richeſt Nations for their wickedneſs. We read in Scripture, firſt, of breaking the head; ſecondly, the teeth; thirdly, the horns; fourthly, the bones; fifthly, the armes of the wicked: All ſhew the breaking of their power, till there be no healing. And thus (to the utmoſt of his power) doth the oppreſſour break the poor. And for this God puniſheth the oppreſſour. Becauſe he hath oppreſſed, &c.

רצץ confregit, contrivit, ad ſummam inopiam reduxit.

Hence note, Oppreſſion is a vengeance-bringing-ſin.

The Lord tells the Jewes that it was but a vain thing for them to think of freeing themſelves from feared judgments by prayer and faſting, unleſs they did let the oppreſſed or broken go free, and break every yoke (Iſa. 58. 6.) The Scripture every where thunders againſt this ſin. They ſhall have judgment without mercy who have ſhewed no mercy (Jam. 2. 13.) With what face can they ask or expect mercy from God, who ſhew none to man?

Secondly, Note; The poor are moſt ſubject to oppreſſion.

They meet with moſt oppoſition, who are leaſt able to make defence. We may be deceived and cozened by the weak, but all oppreſſion is from a greater power. And they uſually are oppreſſed, who have very little, or no power at all, The poor. And this diſcovers not only the ſinfulneſs, but Firſt, The diſingenuouſneſs of that ſort of men. They are low-ſpirited and cowardly, they dare not meddle with their match, but oppreſs the poor who are not able to deal with them.

Secondly, It diſcovers their inhumanity and incompaſſionateneſs; they oppreſs the poor, whom they ſhould pity and relieve; they take away from thoſe to whom they ſhould rather give. The Prophet ſpeaks of ſuch (Mic. 3. 2.) Who hate the good, and love the evil, who pluck off their skin from off them, and their fleſh from off their bones; That is, they take from thoſe who have leaſt, and they take all from them; to take away a mans cloaths is an act of extream oppreſſion, but to pull off a mans skin, that's inhumane, yet there is a degree further, they take not only skin but fleſh too; they who are very poor, may be ſaid to have nothing but skin upon them, yet the oppreſſour will have that. Zophar proceeds yet further Becauſe he hath oppreſſed and forſaken the poor.

Or according to the letter of the Hebrew, left men poor; that is, having ſpoiled and peeled them, he left them in a poor condition. Some read it as a puniſhment, not as a ſin; Therefore he ſhall leave them poor, that is, his own children. But I rather take our ſence, as a diſcovery of his ſin; He hath forſaken the poor. To forſake is to withdraw help, aſſiſtance, counſel, protection, any thing which might do another good. Theſe words may be expounded as an aggravation gravation of the former ſin, oppreſſion; As if Zophar had ſaid, becauſe he hath not only oppreſſed but forſaken the poor, denying them all help, when he hath made them unable to help themſelves, Therefore evil ſhall be upon him, &c.

עזב deſerere, derelinquere, negligere.

Hence note, That as it is ſinful to forſake the poor, though we have never oppreſſed them, ſo to oppreſs and then forſake them is far more ſinfull.

Though we have not taken from them, yet if we have not given them; though we have not made them naked, yet if we have not cloathed them, this will be charged in that Great day (Math. 25. 35, 36.) we find the poor complaining (Act. 6. 1.) In thoſe dayes when the number of the Diſciples was multiplied, there aroſe a murmuring of the Grecians againſt the Hebrews, becauſe their widdows were neglected in the daily miniſtration. Neglect of the poor, eſpecially of the Godly poor, is a ſin in all, eſpecially in the Churches. How great then is their ſin, who make many poor, and then neglect them; let them ſink or ſwim, 'tis all one to them. For a man to take ſome care of, or beſtow ſome Almes upon the poor whom he hath oppreſſed, is no ſatiſfaction for his ſin, but not to take care of the poor whom he hath oppreſſed, is a great aggravation of his ſin.

Becauſe he hath violently taken away the houſe which he builded not.

גזל rapuit, aperte abſtulit res aut perſonas.

Theſe words are (upon the matter) the ſame with the former; He hath violently taken away; 'tis but one word in the Hebrew, He hath not taken away by ſtealth, by tricks, and deceits, but in open view. Some take away houſes which they builded not, craftily, and upon pretenſions or colours of Law and right; others take them away violently without any colour of right. The former is as unjuſt a way of taking as the latter. But the latter hath not only injuſtice in it, but impudence. Theſe are ſo far gone in ſin, that they are paſt ſhame; They declare their ſin as Sodome, they hid it not. Theſe are the Nimrods of the earth, mighty hunters. They violently take away, &c. There is a twofold interpretation of the words; ſome make the latter part of this clauſe as the puniſhment of the ſin ſpoken of in the former part: He hath violently taken away a houſe, and he ſhall not build it; That is, he ſhall not have ability or opportunity to build. He took away a houſe, intending to fit it for himſelf, but before he could do it, God took him away. He took away a houſe, therefore he ſhall not build it. His oppreſſion of others ſhall be puniſhed with his own diſappointment. Again, Others read thus; He pulls down mens houſes, but he never thinks of repairing them: He is ſo far from reſtoring four-fold, that he would not reſtore a fourth, no nor a farthing. But rather, as we render, the whole clauſe is a deſcription of his ſin; He hath violently taken away a houſe which he builded not; That is, he hath by force invaded and ſeiz'd upon that which he had no title to, upon that on which he never beſtowed either pains or coſt: Houſe, is here expreſſed by a Synecdoche for any thing, whether lands, or goods, or money, which belong properly to another man.

Domum rapuit & non ædificavit.

Hence note, It is a crying ſin to take that which others have laboured for.

The idle ſervant (Math. 25. 24.) layed this aſperſion upon his Maſter, I know thee that thou art a hard Maſter; how proved he that? Thou reapeſt where thou haſt not ſown; if a man ſow he ought to reap, and he that hath ſtrawed ſhould alſo gather. What the idle ſervant charged God with, is indeed the temper of many earthly minded men; let whoſo will build the houſe, they will take it if they can; if power ſtand not between them and their neighbours houſe, between them and their neighbours eſtate, their own conſcience doth not. As to do this to any man is a great ſin, ſo for a man to have this done to him is a great affliction. God threatens it as a ſore judgement upon his own people (Deut. 28. 30.) Thou ſhalt build an houſe, and thou ſhalt not dwell therein. Then who ſhall? An enemy ſhall, He ſhall take away the houſe which thou haſt builded, and turn thee out of houſe and home. Many rich men gather in the labours of the poor; ſuch ſeem to act by that rule (which will be no rule for them) to him that hath ſhall be given, but he that hath not from him ſhall be taken away even what he hath. Some becauſe they have much think they muſt have all; as for thoſe who have not, that is, who have but little, they think they muſt have nothing at all. As there are many Idle poor who will not labour for bread to eat; ſo there are ſome covetous rich, who eat the bread which the poor have laboured for. The Apoſtles command to the Theſſalonians was, That if any would not work, neither ſhould he eat (2 Theſ. 3. 10.) Drones deſerve no honey. All the bread which is eaten and not (where ability is) in ſome way or other laboured for, is ſtollen. Idle perſons ſhall be judged as Thieves, though they eat that which is freely given them, yea though they have bought it with their money. How then ſhall they be judged, who will not ſuffer thoſe who work to eat; nor them to have a houſe to dwell in, who have been at the pains and charge of building one, who violently take away what they never brought together, nor laboured for; This is the oppreſſours practice, and his ſin, ſet down in this verſe; his puniſhment hath been ſpoken of before, and is again expreſſed in another kind and form with the additions of a ſtrong aſſeveration to ſeal it faſt upon him in the next verſe.

VERS. 20, 21, 22, 23.

Surely he ſhall not feel quietneſs in his belly, he ſhall not ſave of that which he deſired.
There ſhall none of his meat be left, therefore ſhall no man look for his goods.
In the fulneſs of his ſufficiency he ſhall be in ſtraits: every hand of the wicked ſhall come upon him.
When he is about to fill his belly, God ſhall caſt the fury of his wrath on him, and ſhall rain it on him while he is eating.

Z*ophar* purſues his former purpoſe, ſtill drawing out the ſad eſtate of a wicked man: he ſhew'd us his ſin in the former verſe, Becauſe he hath oppreſſed and forſaken the poor, &c. Now follows his puniſhment, Surely he ſhall not feel quietneſs in his belly. He that hath diſquieted ſo many ſhall have little quiet himſelf; and he that would not ſuffer others to reſt in their houſes, ſhall have no reſt in his own heart. Surely he ſhall not feel quietneſs. This verſe may contain both a deſcription of the ſin, and of the puniſhment of this wicked covetous man. Some interpret it as a deſcription of his ſin; of the fury of that ſin of covetouſneſs which is never quiet; He ſhall not feel quiet in his belly; That is, his mind ſhall never be ſatisfied. Others interpret it as a deſcription of his miſery. I conceive we may take in both; This is his ſin, and this is his puniſhment; not only becauſe his ſin is his puniſhment, but becauſe this puniſhment falls upon him for his ſin; his ſin was unquiet unſatiſfiable deſires, and now he is puniſhed with an addition of freſh deſires, which will not be ſatisfied; As he gave up himſelf ſinfully, ſo God gives him up judicially to vile and earthly affections. The Lord hath many external puniſhments for ſin, and he leaves many under internal puniſhments, or penal ſins. When ſin is made a puniſhment, it is the moſt dreadfull puniſhment. But to the words.

Surely he ſhall not feel quietneſs.

The Hebrew is, He ſhall not know peace or quietneſs, he ſhall not find his craving appetite, his hunger and thirſt after the world appeaſed, how much ſoever of the world he hath devoured; no, though he ſhould have devoured the whole world. He ſhall not (as it were) know the meaſure of his own belly; nor how to proportionate his deſire to a comfortable enjoyment, being meerly led by unſatiſfiable and boundleſs luſts. Thus he feels no quietneſs in his belly. Zophars language continues in the former alluſion to a gluttonous eater, who eats till his belly akes, and crammes himſelf till his ſtomach is rather ſick then ſatiſfied.

Non novit pacem, i.e. Non ſentiet ſedatam ſitim aut famem etiamſi nulla voraverit.

By the belly, we are to underſtand the appetite, thoſe powers of deſire which take in, and concoct faſter then the ſtomach can, and hold infinitely more then the belly can. When the natural belly is full, this is empty and hungry. This Zophar might intend while he ſaith, He ſhall not feel quietneſs in his belly. For as when there is a convenient portion received into the body; this fulneſs is the quieting of the ſtomach, and of thoſe natural powers, that draw and ſuck in the food, and pray for it: ſo there is a filling of the mind to the ſtaying, appeaſing, and quieting of its appetite, which uſually exceeds the bodily appetite. There is a moral appetite as well as a natural appetite, and that is moſt hardly ſatisfied, and filled. It is ſo hard to be filled that all the good things in the world cannot fill up the room and ſtowage of it; and therefore the covetous wretch cannot feel, or know quietneſs in his belly. This is his puniſhment, after all that he hath ſcraped, and hoarded together, yet the man ſaith not, it is enough. David (Pſal. 17. v. 14.) deſcribes the men of the world, who have their portion in this life, whoſe belly thou filleſt with thy hid treaſure: they are full of Children, and leave the reſt of their ſubſtance for their babes. That is, thou giveſt them enough to ſatisfie nature, thou filleſt their bellies; thou openeſt they treaſures, thy ſtore-houſe, thy granery, thy wardrobe; thou openeſt all that wherein any good thing is laid up, either for back, or belly: (ſo by a ſynecdoche we are to underſtand it) thou filleſt them with thy hid treaſures, with treaſures hidden in the bowels of the earth; but when they are at the fulleſt, when they are ſtuffed till their bellies are ready to break, and enough remains of outward enjoyments for their children after them, yet (as Zophar here ſpeaks) They feel no quietneſs in their belly. So the Tygurine tranſlation renders it excellently; The man ſcrapes together a huge heap of wealth, but yet he ſhall not find that he is wealthy. He ſhall not at all feel his wealth when he hath all this.

Non ſentiet in ventre ſuo quòd opulentus ſit. Tygur.

Hence obſerve, The deſire of a wicked man is never full, how full ſoever his eſtate is.

He hath a moral belly which nothing can fill, though his natural belly be filled (Prov. 13. 25.) The righteous eateth to the ſatisfying of his ſoul. 'Tis poſſible a righteous man may not have enough to eat for the ſatisfying of his body, he may riſe a hungry from his dinner, he may riſe with an appetite, becauſe he hath not enough; yet if he hath but a little, a morſel of bread, a ſallet of green herbs, when ever he eats, he eats to the ſatisfying of his ſoul, that is, he bleſſeth God though he have but a little, and is content: though his hunger be hardly ſatisfied, yet his ſoul is plentifully ſatisfied. But, as for the wicked man (ſaith Solomon there) The belly of the wicked ſhall want. I conceive, belly in that place of the Proverbs is to be underſtood as here in Job. The puniſhment which is ordinarily inflicted upon wicked men, is not want in their purſes, but want in their ſpirits; their hearts are in want, while their houſes abound. As it is better, ſo far eaſier for a man to fill his belly then his eye. Here in the Text the covetous mans belly is his eye, nothing of this world can fill that, and yet he neither deſires nor endeavours to have it filled with any thing but the world. Hence, when he is at his higheſt food and feaſting (ſeeing he hath nothing to feed his ſpirit with, not a diſh for his ſoul) he doth but increaſe, not appeaſe his ſouls appetite; creatures can no more quench that thirſt than wood can quench and extinguiſh fire. For as the Moraliſt telleth us, The thirſt of covetous men is not from want, but from a diſeaſe. And that deſire which proceeds from a diſeaſe, and not from want, is not ſtopped but provoked by what it receives; ſo that whatſoever you beſtow upon ſuch a man, is not the end of his former longings, but a ſtep to new and freſh ones. What can appeaſe deſire, when deſire is a diſeaſe? Labour to get the diſeaſe, the diſtemper that is in your deſires cured, and the wants which your deſires move about will ſoon be ſupplied, or not complained of.

'Avarorum ſitis non eſt vera aliqua naturæ indigentia ſed morbus. Quod non ex inopia ſed vitio naſcitur, quicquid illi congujjeris non ſinis erit cupiditatis ſed gradus. Sen. de Conſol.

The Dog-Appetite, or hunger of which Phyſitians ſpeak, is like the covetous mans appetite. Some men have ſuch a bodily appetite, they eat, and eat, and yet are hungry; the more they eat, the more they may; they eat, and cannot be ſatisfied: ſuch is the ſoul appetite of a covetous worldling; he feels no quiet in his belly, he ſtill calls for more, and when he hath it he would have more, and the more he hath, the more he would have. The horſe-leach hath two daughters, Crying, give, give. There are three things that are never ſatisfied, yea four things ſay not it is enough (Prov. 30. 15.) This Horſe-leach is deſire, by the two daughters of the Horſe-leach may well be meant covetouſneſs and prodigality; both theſe cry, give, give; The former cries give, To keep; the latter cries give, To ſpend; neither of them ſaith, it is enough: The one would ever have more to keep, and the other would have more to ſpend: They feel no quietneſs in their bellies. Their preſent havings kindle freſh deſirings; and in ſtead of ſtaying, do but whet their appetite.

The Naturaliſt obſerves, that the Horſe-leach hath no thorough paſſage, he takes much in, but he lets nothing out, and therefore breaks, and kills himſelf with ſucking. The covetous man is like the Horſe-leach in this, he is all for taking in, he would not have any paſſage out; he would let nothing go by way of expence, but never thinks enough comes in by way of revenue. Nothing can ſatisfie deſire but God, not riches, not greatneſs, nor power; The bleſſing and favour of God with what we have ſatisfieth, and that will ſatisfie with a little. Therefore if you would feel quiet in your belly, if you would have deſire ſatisfied; Say not, If I had ſo much I ſhould be quiet, if I had ſo much I ſhould be well; if I had ſuch a proportion of eſtate I ſhould be content. That which gives quiet in any portion, is, firſt the favour and preſence of God; ſecondly, that it is received from the hand of a father; thirdly, that it comes to us in the Covenant of grace; fourthly, that it is the purchaſe of the bloud of Chriſt; fifthly, that it is an anſwer of prayer, and a bleſſing from above upon honeſt endeavours. Such conſiderations as theſe, whether it be much or little which you have, will make you feel quietneſs in your belly with what you have. Elſe the greater your portion is, the greater is your unquietneſs.

Plinius lib. 11. *Nat. Hiſt cap.*34.

Secondly, Note further, That as this non-ſatisfaction is the puniſhment of a wicked man, ſo it is his ſin; It is a ſin not to be ſatisfied, as well as it is a miſery not to be ſatisfied. The Apoſtles rule is, Be content with the things that you have; that is, be quiet, ſit down; we ought to feel quiet in our belly with our portion, and bleſs God for our allowance in every condition. Contentation is a liberal portion; contentation hath been highly honoured as a vertue, by Heathens, It is a grace among Chriſtians. Contentation, is the reſt of the ſoul, or to uſe Zophars language, The quietneſs of the belly. We may further expound this Negative, He ſhall not feel quiet in his belly, as Negatives often are in Scripture, by an Affirmative of the contrary; And ſo, He ſhall not feel quiet, is, he ſhall feel much vexation, trouble, and diſtreſs; his belly ſhall be pained, that is, his mind ſhall be in perpetual turmoyle. There are many Scriptures of the like form with this, which carry more in the interpretation then in the expreſſion, (1 Cor. 15. 58.) Know that your labour is not in vain in the Lord. The Apoſtles meaning is, your labour in the Lord ſhall have abundant reward. Again, Iſa. 57. 21. There is no peace (ſaith my God) to the wicked; the ſence is, Trouble is their portion. Thus here, he ſhall not feel quietneſs, is, he ſhall be much diſquieted. There is no middle of participation between theſe two.

He ſhall not ſave of that which he deſired.

This clauſe contains another part of the covetous mans puniſhment: He is much for getting, and more for ſaving. But

He ſhall not ſave.] The Hebrew word ſignifies ſometimes to ſave by flight (1 Sam. 22. 1.) David eſcaped to the cave of Adullam. He ſaved himſelf by flight. It is uſed alſo to ſignifie bringing forth, or deliverance in Childbirth (Iſa. 66. 7.) Before ſhe travailed ſhe brought forth, before her pain came ſhe was delivered of a manchild. We tranſlate it to another ſence, He ſhall not ſave; that is, keep, preſerve, or maintain that which he hath deſired.

מלט Liberatus fuit, evaſit; peperit, in lucem emiſit.

That which he deſired.] The letter runs thus; He ſhall not ſave in or of his deſire: The word in the original ſignifies an earneſt deſire, a thing earneſtly deſired, or extreamly coveted. (Joſh. 7. 21.) Achan makes this confeſſion of ſin; When I ſaw among the ſpoils a goodly Babyloniſh garment, and two hundred ſhekels of ſilver, and a wedge of gold, of fifty ſhekles of weight, then I coveted them and took them. It is the word here uſed; He ſhall not ſave of that which he deſired; that is, of that which he coveted to have with ſtrong deſire. Achan got a goodly garment and a golden wedge, but he was ſo far from ſaving them that he loſt his own life. The Prophet Daniel is called a man of deſires (Chap. 9. 23.) that is, a man greatly deſired, or beloved; God was (as it were) in love with

חמד Summè deſiderare. Ad verbum, in (i.e. de) optato ſuo non ſervabit. q. d. non fruetur optatis aut iis, quæ ei in deliciis erant. Druſ. De deſiderabili ſuo non ſervabit. Merc.

with him. So (Cant. 2. 3.) As the apple trees among the trees of the wood, ſo is my beloved among the ſons: I ſate down under his ſhadow with great delight. Or delighted, and ſate down, or I deſired to ſit down with great delight. Chriſt is the Deſire of Nations, that is, he whom all Nations (to whom his beauty is revealed) greatly deſire. Here is the puniſhment of this wicked man, he ſhall not ſave that wherein his chief pleaſure lay, his Benjamin, the ſon of his right hand, the child of his deſire; The deſire of his eyes ſhall be taken, yea pulled from him. Now according to the two-fold interpretation of the verb before, given, we may here give a double expoſition of the whole ſentence.

Firſt thus, By that which he deſired he ſhall not be ſafe, or eſcape, he ſhall not deliver himſelf. So divers render it. And the Seventy alſo expreſs the former clauſe in the abſtract, rendring it thus, He ſhall not be ſaved in his deſire; that is, he ſhall not ſave nor deliver himſelf by it. So Mr. Broughton, By that which he deſired he ſhall not be ſafe.

Ἐν ἐπιθυμίᾳ αὐτοῦ οὐ σωθήσεται. Sept. Cum re deſiderabili ſua non proripiet ſe. Jun.

Hence note, When a wicked man hath gotten what he would, he is never the near, or not the nearer to ſafety.

He is not ſafe by that which he deſired. He ſaith, if I could get ſuch an eſtate, and make ſure ſuch an intereſt, and engage ſuch friends, I ſhould be ſafe. But by that which he moſt deſired, he ſhall not be ſafe, be it riches, or friends, or correſpondency with the beſt and greateſt in the world, none of theſe ſhall be his ſafety. There is ſuch a threatning upon men of the world (Iſa. 44. 9.) They that make a graven image are all of them vanity, and their delectable things ſhall not profit. It is this word, their deſirable things. Which you may underſtand, either by their gold, or by their Gods; either by their riches, or their Idols: Which were their deſire, and as they ſuppoſed, their ſafety. Michah in the book of Judges, when he had got an Idol to worſhip, and a Levite to his Prieſt, concluded; Now know I that the Lord will do me good (Judg. 17. 13.) But their delectable things ſhould not profit them, or be their ſafety, whether they be things deſired ſuperſtitiouſly or covetouſly, whether they be things of the world, or an Idol, which is nothing in the world, as the Apoſtle ſpeaks (1 Cor. 8. 4.) that is, it is of no worth or value, it hath no power or vertue to do good or deliver from evil. Theſe delectable things ſhall not ſave them, when God will deſtroy them. Though a wicked man had his choice of all that he deſires for his protection, yet he cannot be ſafe. His deſires riſe not above the creature, which cannot ſave it ſelf, much leſs be ſafety to others. There is no ſafety but under the ſhadow of the Almighty; we are never hid till we hide our ſelves in his pavilion. The wicked come not under that ſhadow, nor ſhall they ever enter that pavilion. Their deſires never carry them indeed that way, and therefore they ſhall not be ſafe by that which they deſire.

Secondly, As his deſireable things cannot ſave him (according to the former reading) ſo (according to ours) he ſhall not ſave of that which he deſired; that is, he ſhall ſave nothing of it. All ſhall be waſted and vaniſh away upon which he built his felicity; Though he have it, yet he ſhall not be able to hold or keep it; not ſo much as a bit or a ſhread of it, not ſo much as the gleanings or parings of it. That's the meaning of, He ſhall not ſave of that which he deſired. All will eſcape, get out, and break priſon. He thought he had laid up his goods, his gold and ſilver, ſafe enough, even as priſoners within Iron grates, under lock, and key, yet theſe will eſcape and be gone. Thus Mr. Calvin renders, He ſhall not keep his deſire, or that which he hath ſo much deſired.

Hence obſerve, When a wicked worldling hath gotten all that he deſires, yet he cannot hold it.

When he hath what he would, he cannot keep what he hath. There are two uſual expreſſions in Law Conveyances about Lands or houſes; To have, and to hold. Many come to the habendum, but not to the tenendum; they have, but cannot hold: Their goods and gains ſlip away between their fingers.

The deſirable things of the Saints are ſafe to them; As they have, ſo they ſhall hold them; they ſhall ſave the things they deſire; and the things they deſire ſhall ſave them: their great deſire is after ſpirituals, and theſe will ſtick by them: O how great is the goodneſs that thou haſt laid up for them that fear thee, (Pſal. 31. 19.) The goodneſs of God is great, and God hath laid it up: it is in the treaſury of God, and his is a ſafe treaſury. When he hath laid up goodneſs and mercy for us, we need not fear, nor go to any Enſurance Office for ſecurity. The moth cannot corrupt, nor can thieves break through and ſteal theſe treaſures. But as for the ungodly man it is not ſo with him, for he and his, he and his golden mountains ſhall be as the chaffe which the wind driveth away; He ſhall not ſave of that which he deſired.

Zophar yet enlargeth this dolefull Narrative.

Verſ. 21. There ſhall none of his meat be left, therefore ſhall no man look for his goods.

Zophar had ſaid immediately before, He ſhall not ſave of that he deſired, there ſhall not be a ſcrap left; Here he ſaith, None of his meat ſhall be left. It being of the ſame ſence with the former, I will only open the words and note the different reading.

Firſt, Some for, None of his meat ſhall be left, or remain, render it by a perſon; There ſhall none be left; The word is uſed moſt frequently for a remainder of men, not of things; none ſhall be left for his meat. If he ſave any of his worldly eſtate, if ſome of his meat be left, yet no heir ſhall be left to enjoy it after him.

Non deſunt qui שריד in maſculino accipiunt; non erit reſiduus ei, ſc. ſuperſtes hæres qui ejus bona fruatur. Merc.

Some of the Rabbins interpret it as a further aggravation of the greedineſs and cruelty of this man; There ſhall none of his meat be left. He will eat up all at once; he is reſolved to oppreſs and ravine for more againſt the next meal; he cares not though all be ſpent to day, he will oppreſs afreſh to morrow. He is reſolved not to want as long as any about him have any thing. Such Nimrods (as Chriſt ſpeaks, but in a quite other ſence then Chriſt ſpake it, Matth. 6. 34.) Take no thought for the morrow; Chriſt would have us do ſo with dependance upon his proviſion, they do ſo upon preſumption of their own. Greedy Lyons have no ſtore-houſes, but make an end as ſoon as they can of what is gotten, and then out to get more.

Nihil fecit reſiduū cibo ejus, i. e. nihil reliquit ex iis quæ manibus habebat quod in poſterum comederet, confidens ſe ſtatim rapturum unde viveret. Rab. Lev.

None of his meat ſhall be left.] The Hebrew ſtrictly thus; Nothing ſhall be left to eat. Though he may leave many eaters behind him, yet nothing ſhall be left to eat, or, none of his meat ſhall be left.

There is a threefold apprehenſion about theſe words.

Firſt, Some expound them as intimating the baſeneſs of this mans ſpirit. He keeps ſo poor a houſe (as we ſay) though he be a rich man, that when dinner is done, there's none of his meat left, there's not a ſcrap nor a cruſt, not a bit of broken bread left to give to a beggar waiting and craving at his door. His proviſion is but juſt enough to ſerve for himſelf and his family.

Tam parcus eſt in victu quotidiano, ut cum vix ſibi ſatis ſumat, nullæ remaneant reliquiæ ſibi. Cajet.

Secondly, Others expound it not of the baſe narrowneſs and niggardlineſs of this mans ſpirit, but of his luxury, and laviſhneſs. He is profuſe in his own expences; he cares not what he layes out upon his own back and belly; but as for the poor, they may ſtarve at his door, he hath nothing left for them. The rich man (Luk. 16.) fared deliciouſly every day, but had not a crum for Lazarus, all was waſted in gluttony and drunkenneſs. When David in diſtreſs (1 Sam. 25. 11.) ſent for ſome relief to Nabal, the Text ſaith, Nabal kept a feaſt at his houſe like a King, yet he had nothing for David; Shall I take my bread, and my water, and my fleſh, which I have killed for my ſhearers, and ſend it to men whom I know not whence they are? Some feaſt like Kings at home, and all their bounty keeps at home. 'Tis truly ſaid of theſe, None of their meat is left.

Deſcribitur guloſitas impii qui de abundantia menſæ ſuæ nulli peregrino refectionem præbet.

But thirdly, I rather underſtand this Text as a deſcription, not of his expenſiveneſs, or penuriouſneſs to himſelf, or others, but of his extream poverty, ſent upon him as a puniſhment by the hand of God.

None of his meat ſhall be left. That is, he ſhall ſcarce have enough for himſelf. The wicked are oft reduced to a morſel of bread: God never leaves taking from them till all be gone. As David profeſſing his own experience, ſaith, I have been young and now am old, yet I never ſaw the righteous forſaken, nor their ſeed begging bread; they had alwayes ſome of their meat left. So Zophar (it ſeems) had obſerved in his experience, many wicked men forſaken and themſelves begging bread. They who have nothing left of their own, muſt of neceſſity ask or ſteal from others; None of his meat ſhall be left. And this interpretation ſuits beſt with that which followeth:

Ita omnibus ſpoliabitur bonis ut nihil reliquum ei erit, quo veſci poſſit.

Thereſore

Vocem Hebræam deducunt à חול parturire, & legunt, non parturiet, vel non multiplicabitur bonum ejus. Pagn. Vatabl. Peg.

Therefore no man ſhall look for his goods.] There is a threefold expoſition of this paſſage alſo: Some derive the word which we render to look, from a root that ſignifies to bring forth, or to multiply. And ſo the ſence is given thus; None of his meat, that is, of his eſtate or goods, ſhall bring forth for his good, or multiply to his profit. If a man do not encreaſe, he comes to nothing; if he ſpend, ſpend, ſpend, if he be always giving out, and never bring in, though his eſtate be great, 'twill ſoon be gone; Unleſs a mans eſtate be growing and multiplying, he cannot (as we ſay) hold his own. In a ſhort time there will be none of his meat left. As vegitables grow properly, ſo alſo inanimates have a kind of growth. A mans eſtate groweth; gold and ſilver grow by addition and multiplication, though not by augmentation. Thus riches bring forth. Now I ſay, if there be continual ſpending, and carrying out, and no coming in, no growing, or increaſe, ſuch a man muſt needs come to poverty. What God ſaid at firſt to the cattle, and beaſts of the earth; he ſaith to all that a man hath, Encreaſe and multiply; And when he ſaith, Multiply not, all muſt needs decreaſe, and the owner muſt lie under the curſe of want, when what he hath is under the curſe of Barrenneſs.

A חיל quod ſignificat robur. Non roborabitur bonum ejus. Rab. Abra. Propterea non manebit proſperitas ejus. A יחל quod eſt expectare.

Secondly, Others derive the word from a root that ſignifies to be ſtrong, or ſtrength; rendring thus; His meat or eſtate ſhall not be ſtrengthened; that is, his proſperity ſhall not continue. Mr. Broughton renders it ſo; therefore his goods continue not; there ſhall be no tack in them.

Beſides theſe two rendrings we take a third, and all three meet in the general puniſhment of the wicked man; Let no man look for his goods. We derive the word from a root ſignifying to expect and wait for a thing; therefore no looking for his goods; we put in thoſe words (no man) Therefore no man ſhall look for his goods. Which is as much as to ſay, he ſhall have nothing left; for if a man hath any thing, ſome or other will be looking for it, and making title to it. He that hath abundance ſhall not want heirs. So that, when Zophar ſaith, No man ſhall look for his goods; The plain meaning is, He ſhall die a beggar, and leave no eſtate worth the looking after, or ſuing for. He ſhall not need to make his Will, or appoint Executors; The wrath and juſtice of God ſhall diſpoſe of all before he dieth, there is no man needs to gape for his death. When a rich man is ſick, many gape for his death, hoping that ſomewhat will fall into their mouths. Sometimes children are poring upon the day of their fathers death, and looking for his goods before he leaves them. But this man ſhall have nothing to leave, and therefore none ſhall look for what he hath.

Filius ante diem patris inquirit in annos.

Laſtly, They who render the former part of the verſe by a perſon, There ſhall none be left for his meat, give the ſence of this latter part thus; Seeing none of his children, family, or kindred are left, Therefore there ſhall be none to look for his goods.

Verſ. 22. In the fulneſs of his ſufficiency, he ſhall be in ſtraits, &c.

The ſcope of this verſe and the next, is to ſet forth the ſeaſon or nick of time in which the Lord will reckon with this ſinful oppreſſour (verſ. 22.) In the fulneſs of his ſufficiency, (verſ. 23.) When he is about to fill his belly. Theſe are the times, or the advantages that God picks out to deal with this man in.

כמלאוח טפקן Cum replebitur ſufficientia ejus.

In the fulneſs of his ſufficiency he ſhall be in ſtraits.] The letter of the Hebrew is, When his ſufficiency ſhall be filled. The word ſignifies to ſuffice, or ſatisfie, and fill up. So (1 King. 20. 10.) In that threatning raging Letter ſent by Zenacherib; The duſt of Samaria ſhould not be enough for handfuls for the men that follow me. It ſhall not ſuffice for handfulls. The word alſo ſignifies to clap the hands together, or to ſmite the hand upon another part of the body, and this under a threefold notion.

Firſt, To clap the hands in anger, and vexation, (Numb. 24. 10.) Balak clapt his hands together (his anger being kindled againſt Balaam) when he could not have his will.

Secondly, In ſorrow; Jer. 31. 19. After I was turned, I repented, and after I was inſtructed I ſmote upon my thigh.

Thirdly, It notes clapping the hands for joy; and that two wayes.

Firſt, For joy at the hurt of others: (there is ſuch a wickedneſs in the heart of man to rejoyce at the fall of his neighbour) (Lament. 2. 15.) All they that go by clap their hands and hiſs, ſeeing Jeruſalem in ſorrow.

Secondly, For joy at our own good; or when our ſelves receive good; ſo in the Text; In the fulneſs of his ſufficiency, or when he hath ſo much that he claps his hands for joy, when he is in the higheſt plauditie of his own happineſs, then he ſhall be in ſtraits.

In the fulneſs of his ſufficiency.] Here is a gradual elegancy: for a man to have a ſufficiency, is a very comfortable eſtate; enough, (as we ſay, for meat, and cloathing) is all. Give me neither poverty, nor riches, feed me with food convenient, was Agurs prayer. Sufficiency is, at leaſt, a competency; but the fulneſs of ſufficiency is more. Such ſufficiency is abundance, if not ſuperfluity, or ſuperabundance. There is an abundant grace of God (where ſin abounds, grace abounds.) But beſides abounding grace, there is ſuperabounding grace, or (as it were) an exceſs of grace, an hyperbole of grace (Rom. 6. 20.) So ſome in this life have an hyperbolical eſtate, an exceſſive vaſt eſtate in riches and creature-comforts. They have enough, and more then enough; ſuch is the importance of this expreſſion; In the fulneſs of his ſufficiency,

Cumputabit ſibi abundè, ſatis ſuperq; ſuppetere & ſufficere omnia ad fæliciter & lautè vivendum neceſſaria, tum, &c. Merc.

He ſhall be in ſtraits.] There is nothing more oppoſite to ſufficiency then ſtraits, eſpecially to fulneſs of ſufficiency. He ſhall be in ſtraits; in outward ſtraits, and inward ſtraits, in ſtraits on the right hand, and in ſtraits on the left. In the fulneſs of his ſufficiency, he ſhall be full of ſtraits. The word is applicable to any kind of trouble, becauſe what trouble ſoever a man is in, it ſtraitens him; it ſtraitens his ſpirits, it ſtraitens his deſigns, every way he is ſtraitned. To be in ſtraits is to be in ſuch affliction, that a man knows not which way to turn himſelf, or what to do next. Every affliction is a kind of priſon; great afflictions, ſtraiten greatly, and ſhuts us up faſt in priſon.

> Hence obſerve, When it is beſt with wicked men in their own opinion, or according to their preſent poſſeſſion, then their worſt is approaching.

I will not ſtay upon the general diſcourſe of this common theam, but only ſhew four wayes diſtinctly in which a carnal man may be ſaid to be in ſtraits in the midſt of his ſufficiency, or in the fulneſs of it.

Firſt, Carnal men are in ſtraits in the time of their ſufficiency, as being troubled what to do with their abundance. That's the caſe of ſome. I need give no other proof of it then that repreſented (Luk. 12. 19.) which at leaſt ſuppoſeth, that ſuch a thing may be. There was a certain rich man, whoſe ground brought forth abundance, and he ſaid, What ſhall I do with all this? The man was troubled what to do with it; he was hard put to it for ſtowage, or where to beſtow it: He muſt pull down his barns, and make bigger. This is a ſtrait that carnal men are in, in the midſt of their ſufficiency: but I queſtion whether that be here intended.

In anxietate erit ſollicitus quomodo eam conſervat. Druſ.

Magna navis magna cura.

Secondly, A real ſtrait is upon him, how to keep his abundance, how to protect what he hath gotten. He is in many ſtraits about this point, how to protect his ſtore that it be not loſt, and taken from him. What ſhall I do to keep this treaſure? how ſhall I hold it? I am afraid it will get away from me. It is a common ſpeech; A great ſhip, is a great care; a great deal of the things of the world are a great worldly burthen; they that are in the fulleſt ſufficiency of outward things, their eſtates and poſſeſſions bring them in as great an increaſe of troubles as of revenues. As they have plenty of riches, ſo they cannot avoid plenty of buſineſs and labour about them. Some old rich men have ſaid, they were then as hard put to it to keep their riches, as they were in their younger dayes to gather and heap up riches.

There is a third ſtrait, which is worſe then the former; as he is ſtraitned to keep what he hath; ſo God in judgement gives him this ſtrait in his fulneſs, that he fears his fulneſs is not full enough, and that his ſufficiency is unſufficient for him; in the fulneſs of his ſufficiency, he is thus in ſtraits. There is an inward ſtrait in his outward enlargements; when, indeed, he is rich, he is, in conceit, poor. For as it is with hypocrites in reference to ſpirituals, they think they have a fulneſs of ſufficiency in them, when indeed they are in ſtraits, in poverty and want: as Chriſt tells the Church of Laodicea (Revel. 3.) Thou ſaiſt I am rich, and full, and need nothing, and knoweſt not that thou art poor, and empty, and naked, and blind, and wanteſt all things. Now I ſay, as in ſpirituals hypocrites oft conceit themſelves full, when they are really empty: ſo in temporals, a worldly man often conceits himſelf empty, when he is really full. He ſaith, I have nothing, I am a poor man, I have ſcarce enough to ſerve another year, when indeed he is rich, and hath gold and ſilver, lands and goods enough for many years. This ſtrait God brings wicked men into, in the midſt of their ſufficiency. This is a grievous curſe, that while a man is laying field to field, land to land, bag to bag, and heap to heap, yet withal his mind and ſpirit is troubled and ſtraitned, as if he had nothing, or were worſe then nothing. One of the Ancients deſcribes this ſtrait of a covetous man, with abundance of lively Eloquence; Give me (ſaith he) a covetous man, daily eeking and ſtretching out the bounds of his habitation, as if he meant to live alone, and exclude all neighbourhood. Tell me now, doth this man (whom the whole earth cannot hold) ſeem to thee to be enlarged or ſtraitned? Surely how far ſoever he extends the line of his poſſeſſion (while that which he hath is not enough to him) he is locked up within the narrow compaſs of his own opinion.

Conſtitue mihi avarū villarū quotidie terminos proferentem excludentem vicinos: utrū is tibi dilatari an coarctari videtur, quem tellus ipſa non capit? quantacunq; ſpatia domus ſuæ porrexerit, clauditur anguſtis opinionis ſuæ finibus, cui quod habet non eſt ſatis. Ambroſ. ſer. 6. in Pſal. 128.

Fourthly, Beſides this internal and metaphorical ſtrait, there is a plain literal ſtrait into which God caſts the wicked man, when he ſuppoſeth himſelf ſetled in the fulneſs of his ſufficiency. That's the time God takes to bring him to it, when he ſtands upon the higheſt pinacle of worldly proſperity, then down he goes. In the Propheſie of Daniel (Chap. 4. 4.) we read what the Golden head Nebuchadnezzar ſpeaks of his fulneſs. I Nebuchadnezzar was at reſt in my houſe, and flouriſhing in my palace (here was a fulneſs of ſufficiency) (ver. 29, 30.) At the end of twelve months he walked in the palace, and ſaid, Is not this great Babylon that I have built for the houſe of the Kingdom, by the might of my power, and for the honour of my Majeſty? Here he boaſts of the fulneſs of his ſufficiency; now (verſ. 31.) While the word was in the Kings mouth, there fell a voyce from heaven, and ſaid, O King Nebuchadnezzar, to thee it is ſpoken, The Kingdom is departed from thee, &c. Thus he was brought to ſtraits in the midſt of his fulneſs. Again, Chap. 6. While Belteſhazzer was in his height with his Nobles, in his chear and wine, he ſaw a hand-writing upon the wall, which made him tremble, and that very night Babylon was taken, and himſelf taken away in the fulneſs of his ſufficiency. So in the Propheſie of myſtical Babylon, in the fulneſs of her ſufficiency ſhe ſhall be in ſtraits, (Rev. 18. 7, 8.) She ſhall be glorifying her ſelf, the very moment before her ruine (they who glorifie themſelves, judge themſelves in a fulneſs of ſufficiency) By how much ſhe glorified her ſelf, ſo much torment give her: for ſhe ſaith in her heart, I ſit as a Queen, and am no widow, and ſhall ſee no ſorrow: therefore ſhall her plagues come in one day. When ſhe ſaith, I ſit as a Queen, not only free from plagues, but full of majeſty; then her plague comes. When the Apoſtle ſaid to the Corinthians, Ye have reigned as Kings without us (1 Cor. 4. 8.) he checks their conceit of their own ſpiritual ſufficiency, or ſufficiency in ſpirituals, without the contribution of his aid and help, as the former words of that verſe expound his meaning; Now ye are full, now ye are rich. And when Babylon ſaith, I ſit as a Queen, her meaning is, that ſhe hath a fulneſs of ſufficiency, both in ſpirituals and in temporals, and then, even then, her plague comes. (Pſal. 92. 7.) When the wicked ſpring as graſs, and all the workers of iniquity flouriſh, it is that they may be deſtroyed for ever. And (to give but one inſtance more, 1 Theſ. 5. 3.) When they ſhall ſay, peace and ſafety, (not only peace, but ſafety, all is quiet, and all will be quiet,) then ſudden deſtruction ſhall come on them as travail on a woman with child, and they ſhall not eſcape. The ſtraits of a woman in travail, and her ſorrows, how terrible are they? and as theſe are alwayes unavoidable to her that is with child, ſo they are often ſudden, when immediately before ſhe was eating or ſleeping, at eaſe and quiet: This is the wicked mans doom, he is not only puniſhed but ſurpriſed; In the fulneſs of his ſufficiency, he ſhall be in ſtraits.

Every hand of the wicked ſhall come upon him.] Then there will be many hands upon him, for there are many wicked; yet there is a difference about that word which we render wicked; It hath two other ſignifications beſides that in the Text.

First, It ſignifies a labouring man, and in the verb to labour; ſo the rendring is made in theſe termes; Every hand of the labourer ſhall be upon him. There are two wayes in which that may be underſtood. Firſt, ſay ſome, The hand of the labourer is, the hand of thoſe who labour to help him. The ſence which is intended by theſe Interpreters ſeems to be that of Solomon (Prov. 11. 21.) Though hand joyn in hand, the wicked ſhall not be unpuniſhed; That is, though many with united forces labour to uphold and defend him, yet the curſe of God ſhall break through and conſume him; his helpers ſhall help in vain, and they who labour for him, ſhall labour in vain; for the decree is gone out againſt him, down he muſt; All the world cannot ſave him. In the fulneſs of his ſufficiency, he ſhall be in ſtraits, even while many are labouring to keep him out of them. This is a truth, but I paſs it, as ſuppoſing it not intended here.

עמל Significat 1 impium. 2 calamitoſum. 3 laborioſum. Omnis manus laborantis veniet ſuper eum. Etiamſi acceſſerit ei omnis manus laborãs. i. e. etiamſi omnes homines laborent in ejus commodum. Rab. Abra. & Iſid. clar.

Again, The hand of the labourer may rather be the hand of ſuch poor as he ſet to work. Every hand of the labourer ſhall be on him. He found many poor labourers work, but he did not find them bread, he pinched them, and uſed them hardly, he oppreſſed and deceived them in their wages; as the Apoſtle James complains, (Chap. 5. 1, 4.) Go to now ye rich men, weep, and howl, for the miſery that ſhall come upon you; behold the hire of thoſe labourers which have reaped down your harveſt cryes. Theſe poor men who ſweat at his work, and were ſent home ſad with tears in their eyes, not with money in their purſes; every hand of theſe labourers ſhall be upon him: So Mr. Broughton renders it, Each hand of the injured and grieved ſhall come upon him; he injured and grieved the labourers, they laboured in body for him, and his cruel uſage was worſe then labour to their ſpirits. But as he took from the labourer, ſo the labourer ſhall take from him. Every hand of the labourer upon him.

Manus laborãtis, i. e. pauperum & mercenariorum, quos impius ſua mercede & labore fraudavit. Rab. Lev.

Secondly, The word ſignifies, a man any way diſtreſſed or brought to miſery. And then the meaning may be this; not only as before, that the hand of the poor who had laboured for him, but the hand of the rich whom he had impoveriſht, the hands of all thoſe whom he had unjuſtly vexed, ſhall come upon him and vex him.

Thirdly, The word as it ſignifies a labourer, and a man in miſery; ſo a wicked man, as we tranſlate it here, and frequently in other places of Scripture. The ſame word ſignifies labour, miſery, and wickedneſs; becauſe there is ſo much labour, and miſery, ſo much trouble and vexation in wickedneſs; every hand of the wicked ſhall come upon him; God will let out the ſpirits of evil doers to take vengeance on him for his evil deeds.

In vadent eum omnes iniqui parati ad injuriam inferendam. Vatabl.

Hence note, God often makes one wicked man ſcourge another.

As God uſually makes wicked men the ſcourge to his own people, ſo ſometimes to one another. One Lyon deſtroys another, and a ravenous wolf ſucks the bloud of a ravenous wolf. This point hath been formerly hinted, and therefore I inſiſt not upon it; but proceed to the next verſe, which inſiſts ſtill upon the reaſon of the wicked mans deſtruction.

Verſ. 23. When he is about to fill his belly, God ſhall caſt the fury of his wrath on him.

This verſe, as was ſaid before, is of the ſame ſence with the former, ſetting forth the ſpecial time of Gods wrath upon the wicked man.

When he is about to fill his belly.] The Vulgar renders the words thus; O that he had filled his belly, that God might pour on him the fury of his wrath! As if he had wiſhed for the filling up of the meaſure of the ſin of this man, that he might come to his puniſhment; becauſe till ſin hath finiſhed its work, the work of Judgment ſeldom begins. But the words ſound threatning, not wiſhing, and are rather a propheſie then a prayer; When he is about to fill his belly, God ſhall do this.

Utinam impleatur venter ejus ut emittat in eum iram furoris ſui. Vulg.

Non votum eſt ſed prophetia. Merc.

A ſecond renders thus; Let it be that he fill his belly, yet God will pour upon him the fury of his wrath. As if he had ſaid, all his riches and fulneſs ſhall be no fence againſt the wrath of God. The wicked call riches, their ſtrong Tower, but the ſtrong Tower that riches can make, is no defence, it is but as a paper-wall againſt the wrath of God. His full belly makes but the fairer mark for the arrows of the Almighty.

Eſto ut impleat ventrem ſuum, Deus tamen emittet ei furorē iræ. Tygur.

We render it as reſpecting his action; When he is about to fill his belly, when the man thinks to take the fruit of his labours, he having been buſie in projecting, and acting, intendeth to ſit down in quiet, and feed upon what he had gotten; but when he is about to fill his belly, even in the very act, God ſhall caſt the fury of his wrath upon him.

God ſhall caſt,] Or ſend it out. The wrath of God is ſometimes (upon the matter) reſtrained, and kept in; as the Prophet ſpeaks of the compaſſions of God, what is become of them? are they reſtrained? (Iſa. 63.15.) The compaſſions of God uſed to come forth, but then they were reſtrained, or did not ſhew themſelves. God was pleaſed to deal with them as if he had laid aſide or put off all bowels of compaſſion. So the wrath of God is reſtrained, or held in ſometimes. Men ſin and wrath ſtirs not; God deals as if he had forgotten to be angry; But anon wrath lets flie. God ſhall caſt fury and wrath, or the fury of his wrath upon him; he ſhall caſt, and ſend it, as a dart, or an arrow out of a bow, or as a ſtone out of a ſling, or as a thunderbolt from the clouds: God ſhall caſt it upon him; the Text doth not expreſs who, but the ſcope clears who it is; He, that is, God ſhall caſt, either immediately, or mediately by ſome hand, commiſſion'd by him for that work of judgment. God ſhall unpriſon, and let looſe the fury of wrath, that is, his furious wrath, or hot fuming ſmoaking wrath upon him. Thus he ſpeaks to ſhew how extreamly the Lord is heated and heightened againſt wicked men. Thus Mr. Broughton renders; God will ſend his hot anger upon him. The anger of his noſtrils. A phraſe often uſed to ſignifie Anger, becauſe of the appearance and tokens of Anger there, Exod. 11.32. Iſa. 5.25. And in divers other places which the reader may conſult. This anger in the noſtrils is oppoſed to the anger in the heart; for when the Scripture ſpeaks of the anger of the noſtrils, it notes anger acted, and put forth in execution. The Lord hath treaſured wrath, he hath wrath in his heart when he ſeems to favour wicked men, and to ſhine upon them: wrath is not alwayes in his noſtrils breathed and poured upon them.

Dimittet iram, non cohibebit neq; continebit indignationem ſuam, ſed faciet liberam poteſtatam ſuæ juſtitiæ ſæviendi in impium.

Iram naſi. Heb.

God ſhall caſt the fury of his wrath upon him, or upon it.

It is taken both wayes. If we ſay upon it; The meaning is, upon his goods, or upon what he hath; When he is about to fill his belly, God ſhall pour his anger upon his Table, or upon his meat. We take it perſonally, upon him, upon the wicked man himſelf, who when he thinks to receive the greateſt pleaſure, ſhall feel the greateſt ſmart, God ſhall pour fury upon him. The obſervation which this paſſage offers, is the ſame with what was obſerved in the cloſe of the former verſe, therefore I ſhall but name it.

בו Utroq; modo poteſt accipi. 1. In ipſum impium. 2. In id quod paravit ad ventrem explendum. Maſculine tamen potius accipiendum videtur ex eo quod ſequitur. Merc.

When wicked men are full of hopes to take their fill of worldly joy, then God fills them with worldly ſorrow.

This was ſaid before, In the fulneſs of their ſufficiency they ſhall be in ſtraits. So that when we ſee wicked men at the fulleſt, or in their fulneſs ſitting down to reſt, to eat, drink, and be merry with what they have gotten, we may look on it as the preſage of their approaching ruine. The Angel Intelligencer, who was ſent abroad to ſee what was done in the world (Zech. 1.11.) brought back this report, that he had gone to and fro, and Behold all the earth ſate ſtill, and was at reſt; All were about to fill their bellies. By earth, he means Babylon, or the Babylonians, the temporal power of that State, in oppoſition to the Church of God, they were all at reſt, and ſaid in their hearts, ſurely the world will never change, yet preſently after they felt the greateſt change, ruine fell on that Empire. This may comfort the people of God, when they ſee the real enemies of truth and righteouſneſs in higheſt ſecurity; for then the day of their calamity is near, even at the doors. There is a twofold fulneſs, which wicked men uſually have before their ruine. Firſt, a fulneſs of ſin. Secondly, a fulneſs of proſperity; they come to their fulneſs in both, and then comes their end. (Gen. 15.16.) The ſins of the Amorites are not yet full; therefore the Amorites cannot be deſtroyed yet; and the Church of God cannot be delivered yet, but when the ſin of the Amorites is full, God will deſtroy them, and deliver his Church. God leaves them as Chriſt ſpeaks to the Phariſees (Mat. 23.32.) to fill up the meaſure of the iniquity of their fathers, and then he will deal with them. Now as there is a fulneſs of iniquity, ſo there is alſo a fulneſs of worldly proſperity; when the wicked have had their portion, their reward in the world, when as beaſts they are fed and fatted with good things, or are about to fat themſelves, then they are for the ſlaughter. So the Lord concludes concerning thoſe oppreſſours (Amos 4.1.) Hear this word ye Kine of Baſhan that are in the mountains of Samaria, which oppreſs the poor, which cruſh the needy, &c. The Lord God hath ſworn by his holineſs, that lo the day ſhall come on you, that he will take you away with hooks, and your poſterity with fiſh-hooks; when the fulneſs of your worldly proſperity and fatneſs is come, then God ſhall take you away, or ſend leanneſs among your fat ones. And again (Chap. 6.1.) Wo to them that are at eaſe in Zion, and truſt in the mountains of Samaria, which are named chief of the Nations, to whom the houſe of Iſrael came. Theſe (verſ. 3.) put far away the evil day, and cauſed the ſeat of violence to come near; They lay upon beds of Ivory, and did eat the Lambs out of the flock, &c. While they were thus diſſolved into mirth and muſick, a woful voice ſounded in their ears (verſ. 7.) Therefore now ſhall they go captive with the firſt that go captive, and the banquet of them that ſtretched themſelves ſhall be removed. The very now of their freeſt joy, was the now of their captivation and ſorrow. Zophar, as if this were hardly believed at all, or could never be enough believed, preſſeth and repeateth it again, in the laſt word of the verſe in hand.

And ſhall rain it upon him while he is eating.

This is but an explication or repetition of the former words; When he is about to fill his belly, God ſhall caſt the fury of his wrath, and rain it on him while he is eating. There are two words to be conſidered in this clauſe.

Firſt, Raining.

Secondly, While he is eating.

He ſhall rain it.] Here is a terrible ſhower, a ſhower of fury, of wrath, God ſhall rain it. God is ſaid to rain wrath.

Firſt, To note the ſuddenneſs of it; rain (many times) comes very unexpectedly.

Secondly, To note the unavoidableneſs of it: there is no ſtopping of the rain, who can ſtop the bottles of the clouds but God himſelf? he can ſtop them up when he pleaſeth; but all the power on earth cannot. This rain is ſuch that there is no avoiding of it; we may get out of the ordinary rain into our houſes, or under covert; but the rain of Gods wrath ſoaks through every houſe, how ſtrongly ſoever leaded or covered; There is no ſhelter (but Chriſt) againſt the ſtorms of divine wrath. He is a hiding place from the wind, and a covert from the tempeſt (Iſa. 32.2.) but beſides him nothing is.

Ideo pluviendi verbo utitur, quia ut pluviæ vehementi è cœlo decidenti nemo poteſt reſiſtere, ita, &c. Merc.

Thirdly, He is ſaid to rain wrath, to ſhew the quantity of it, there ſhall be abundance, he will pour it down on you. Rain is oppoſed to dew: it ſhall not only come as the dew, or as a few heat drops, but as a ſoaking ſweeping rain. The Prophet exhorts (Hoſ. 10.12.) Sow to your ſelves in righteouſneſs, reap in mercy, break up your fallow ground: for it is time to ſeek the Lord till he rain righteouſneſs, that is, till he ſend Chriſt, who is made to us of God righteouſneſs in abundance; or till he pour out his Spirit upon you, who will cauſe you to bring forth the fruits of righteouſneſs abundantly. As the raining of righteouſneſs, ſo the raining of wrath, notes abundant wrath. It ſhall rain upon him

While he is eating.] There is a threefold rendring of that. For the word which we tranſlate eating, ſignifies fleſh, either that which is eaten, or that which doth eat; living or eating fleſh moſt properly, though it alſo ſignifie dead fleſh, or that which is eaten. So Mr. Broughton, He will rain upon him into his fleſh; That is, upon his body; and the body by a ſynechdoche is put for the whole man, body, and ſoul. As if he had ſaid, God hath not a quarrel only with this mans eſtate and his goods, but with his fleſh, and bones, yea, and with his ſoul, too; he will vex him ſoul and body: So that as before he ſhewed what God would do upon his eſtate, that ſhould be conſumed; ſo now what upon his perſon; wrath falls upon his body, upon his very back; He ſhall rain it upon him, into his fleſh.

לחם Caro pluet ſuper eum, etiam in carnem ſive corpus ejus.

Secondly, The word ſignifies as the fleſh of a man, or living fleſh, ſo, any fleſh, dead fleſh prepared to be eaten, or any thing which is eatable. Hence the name of the place where Chriſt was born was called Bethelem, that is, the houſe of bread. And thus it is rendered here, he ſhall rain it upon him, even upon his bread, or upon his meat. As God, when his own people are eating, and their table ſpread, he not only rains a bleſſing upon them, but upon their meat alſo, that is, he commands their meat to ſtrengthen and refreſh them. So when the wicked man is about to fill his belly, the curſe falls not only upon him, but upon his meat; God ſhall rain on him, even upon his meat.

לחם Cibus omnis eſca hinc בית־לחם Bethlechem dicta quaſi regio frumenti ferax, domus panis. Merc.

Our tranſlation refers to the perſon in the act of eating, not to the meat which he eateth. The general meaning of either tranſlation meets in one; For though wrath may fall upon a mans perſon, and not upon his meat; he may thrive with what he eats, grow luſty and ſtrong, while he is under wrath; yet whenſoever wrath falls upon the wicked mans meat, it is in order to his perſon or himſelf. He ſhall rain it upon him while he is eating. How exact is the wrath of God? For at the inſtant when a man is eating, he of all other times would lay aſide fear, be chearful, and rejoyce; Then he unbends himſelf, though he have been buſie all the day; If any come to him he ſaith, I pray let me alone at meal, that I may be merry with my wife and children, with my friends or neighbours; when I am at my meat, let me be quiet. But when he is eating, wrath is dropping; God picks out that time on purpoſe to put a ſting into his puniſhment, and to make his miſery more remarkable. Such (Mat. 24. 38.) is the deſcription of the judgment that came upon the world, it rained upon them indeed, when they were eating; As it was in the dayes before the flood, they did eat and drink, and were marrying, and giving in marriage, till the day that Noah went into the Ark. Chriſt expreſſeth thoſe things eſpecially wherein men take moſt worldly contentment, eating, and drinking, marrying, and giving in marriage. To theſe that age let themſelves looſe, or ſet themſelves upon; theſe are not ſinful in themſelves, but they uſed them ſinfully, that is, ſenſually, to ſatisfie their luſts, and pleaſe their ſenſes; therefore the Spirit of God fixeth the judgment upon that ſeaſon, they were eating, and drinking, marrying, and giving in marriage, and then God rained upon them the fury of his wrath. The children of Iſrael luſted after fleſh (Pſal. 78.) and the Lord gave it them; He rained fleſh upon them as duſt, and feathered fowls like as the ſand of the Sea (verſ. 27.) But he rained wrath upon them with it (verſ. 30, 31.) While their meat was yet in their mouths, (while they were eating) the wrath of God came upon them, and ſlew the fatteſt of them, and ſmote down the choſen men of Iſrael.

All theſe inſtances concenter fully in Zophars Text; That In the fulneſs of his ſufficiency, and while he is taking his ſweeteſt content in his ſufficiency, God rains down wrath.

Pluet ſuper eum bellum ſuum. Vulg. מלחמה Bellum à לחם veſci, edere, quia in bello homines ſe invicem cædendo devorant & abſumunt.

Further, The old Latine Tranſlator gives the words thus; And he ſhall rain his war upon him. This difference ariſeth from the copiouſneſs of the Original word, Lechem, which as it ſignifies eating, or any thing eaten; ſo alſo war and battel. The reaſon is, becauſe the ſword is a devourer, and in war men eat up one another; Nation eats up Nation; as men eat other fleſh, ſo war is an eater, and devourer of men: therefore the ſame word may well ſignifie, to eat, and to make war. And this Tranſlation, though the Grammatical form of the Hebrew is wreſted by it (and therefore I lay it by) yet renders the ſcope of the Text fully, and anſwers that of the eleventh Pſalm (verſ. 5, 6.) The Lord tryeth the righteous, but him that loveth violence his ſoul hateth; upon the wicked he ſhall rain ſnares, fire, and brimſtone, and an horrible tempeſt, this ſhall be the portion of their cup. Which (I conceive) may (in purſuance of Zophars ſimilitude) be thus illuſtrated, as if he had ſaid, when he is drinking, when he hath a cup of ſweet wine in his hand, or ſome delicious liquor at his lips, God ſhall rain fire and brimſtone, and an horrible tempeſt into or upon his cup; the wrath of God ſhall fill his cup, and ſo be (as it were) the portion of it. While the wicked man is drinking, wrath is the portion of his diſh. God ſhall rain it on him while he is eating.

Zophar having thus far carried on this point, ſhewing what God will do with the wicked man in all his enjoyments, ſhews yet other wayes and inſtruments, which God prepareth and armeth to vex and ruine him.

VERS. 24, 25, 26.

He ſhall flee from the iron-weapon, and the bow of ſteel ſhall ſtrike him through.

It is drawn, and cometh out of the body, yea the glittering ſword cometh out of his gall: terrors are upon him.

All darkneſs ſhall be hid in his ſecret places: a fire not blown ſhall conſume him: it ſhall go ill with him that is left in his Tabernacle.

ZOphar having ſaid (verſ. 22, 23.) That God pours the fury of his wrath upon the wicked man when he thinks himſelf ſafeſt and furtheſt removed from it, even in the fulneſs of his ſufficiency, and when he is about to fill his belly (then God deals with him, and rains upon him while he is eating, mingling his blood with his bread, his tears with his wine) He proceeds in this context to ſhew,

First, The inſtruments.
Secondly, The effects of that wrath or judgment.

The inſtruments are four,

First, The iron-weapon.
Secondly, The bow of ſteel.
Thirdly, The glittering ſword.
Fourthly, A fire not blown.

Here are ſtore of arms to make war upon the wicked man. We have here alſo the effects of this dreadful war, and theſe are of two ſorts.

First, Upon himſelf.
Secondly, Upon others.

The effects which appear upon himſelf, are of two ſorts.

First, Outward.
Secondly, Inward.

The outward effects, Firſt, he ſhall be ſtricken through with them. Secondly, he ſhall be conſumed with them. The inward effects are fears or terrours; which are teſtified by that conſequent, his flight, He runs from the iron-weapon, and the bow of ſteel.

The effect which is upon others is laid down in the cloſe of verſ. 26. It ſhall go ill with him that is left in his Tabernacle: not only ſhall wrath overtake him, but it ſhall overtake thoſe that appertain to him. Thus of the analyſis or parts conſiderable in this context.

Verſ. 24. He ſhall flee from the iron-weapon.

He ſhall flee.] Flight is the pace of a coward. So the word is uſed all the Scripture over; The wicked man hath no heart for good, and he hath as little againſt evil. His ſpirit is gone, and at the approach of danger his body is going or rather running; his ſpirit is fallen from his heart into his heels; and he defends himſelf by his feet, not by his hands: when the iron-weapon comes, the righteous will rather die, then run, if duty bids them ſtay: but the wicked

Shall flee from the iron-weapon.

The word which we tranſlate iron-weapon, ſignifies all ſorts of hand weapons, or weapons with which we ſtrike at hand, ſuch as are the ſword, and ſpear. The word properly ſignifies to ſalute, or kiſs: And the reaſon why theſe kind of arms and weapons, are expreſt by that word, is, becauſe a man fights with them face to face: and comes near to an adverſary, even as if he came to ſalute or to kiſs him. There are weapons with which we may fight at a diſtance, and never come near our enemy.

נשק Denotat omne genus armorũ quæ manu agitantur; radix ſignificat oſculari eò quod hujuſmodi armis non niſi cominus à à parte anteriori vultûs cui oſcula intigi ſolent, feriunt. Bold.

He ſhall flee from the iron-weapon.] That is, from all ſorts of hand-weapons, with which we oppoſe and ſmite our aſſailants, or defend our ſelves.

Some interpret this iron-weapon, not literally, but tropically for the plague, or peſtilence, or ſome deadly diſeaſe, which according to the language of Scripture, is compared to that iron-weapon the ſword, or to an arrow (1 Chron. 21. 27.) when the Angel was ſent to deſtroy the People of Jeruſalem with the peſtilence, after David had numbred them, the Text ſaith, The Lord commanded the Angel, and he put up his ſword again into the ſheath thereof. The peſtilence is the ſword, and the ſtroak of it is like ſmiting with the ſword. In the ninety firſt Pſalm, that other inſtrument of death, the Arrow, ſignifies the plague (verſ. 5.) Thou ſhalt not be afraid of the terrour by night, nor of the arrow that flieth by day; That is, of the peſtilence. And even in prophane Authors, terrible diſeaſes, ſuch as the peſtilence, are called the weapons of their Gods, with which they contended, and made roar with mortal men. This metaphorical ſword, and arrow of the peſtilence, is a weapon from which many flee as faſt as from the ſword of the fierceſt enemy. Yet I conceive, that is not intended in this Text; the iron weapon here, including all manner of outward inſtruments of divine wrath which wound the wicked man. He ſhall flee from the iron weapon. We tranſlate it as a direct aſſertion; He ſhall flee. Some render it as a ſuppoſition; If he flee from the iron weapon; Or as Mr. Broughton, When he flees from the iron armour. And then the other part of the verſe joyns with it thus; When he fleeth, or if he flee from the iron weapon, the bow of ſteel ſhall ſtrike him through. And though there be not that particle of ſuppoſition expreſt in the Hebrew, yet it is uſually underſtood in Texts of this ſignificancy. Mal. 1.4. They ſhall build, and I will pull down; That is, if they build, I will pull down; or whenſoever they begin to build, I will begin to pull down. So here, He ſhall flee from the iron weapon, and the bow of ſteel ſhall ſtrike him through; That is, if he flee from the iron-weapon, or whenſoever he thinks to make an eſcape by flying from the iron-weapon, then the bow of ſteel ſhall ſtrike him through. According to this reading the whole verſe is a proverbial ſpeech, implying thus much; That while a wicked man flies, or ſeeks to avoid one evil, he ſhall fall into another; When he flees from the iron-weapon, the bow of ſteel ſhall ſtrike him through. Like that of the Latines; He fell upon the rock, while he thought to eſcape the gulph.

Βέλη ἑκηβόλου Ἀπόλλωνος. Homer.

Fugientū ab armis ferreis, tranſverberat eū arcus chalibeus. Merl.

Ubi ſe putarit leviora pericula effugiſſe, in graviora incidet. Merc.

Incidit in Scyllā cupiens vitare charybden.

The bow of ſteel ſhall ſtrike him through.

The bow, that is, the arrow of the bow, or the bullet put into the bow: for from the bow of ſteel ſometimes arrows, ſometimes bullets are diſcharged; the arrow, or the bullet with which this ſteel bow is charged ſhall ſtrike him through. The word rendered to ſtrike through, ſignifies exciſion or cutting off; and hence the Hebrew phraſe, A Son of Exciſion, anſwering that of the Greek, which we expreſs, a ſon of perdition, that is, a man devoted to total deſtruction. The bow of ſteel ſhall ſtrike him through, cut him off, or, quite deſtroy him. A bow of ſteel is the ſtrongeſt bow. David, to ſhew the extraordinary ſtrength which he expected to receive from God, ſaith, A bow of ſteel ſhall be broken by mine arms (Pſal. 18.34.) To draw a bow of ſteel, ſhews ſtrength, and to break it ſhews more ſtrength. A bow of ſteel gives a deadly blow, and ſmites home.

חלף excindo unde בני חלוף filii exciſionis. Druſ.

Again, This word, which we tranſlate, to ſtrike through, others render, to change. The bow of ſteel ſhall change him, that is, kill him; death is our great change. Further, The word is rendred to paſs by. The arrow often miſſeth the mark, ſometime it glides by the mark, or doth but graze upon it. Taking this Tranſlation, the ſence of the whole verſe riſeth thus; Suppoſe the wicked man flee, and make his eſcape from the iron weapon; ſuppoſe alſo that the ſteel bow be diſcharged at him, and the arrow paſs by, and not hit him; ſuppoſe, that he eſcape the firſt weapon, and the ſecond, yet (ſaith he in the next words) The glittering ſword ſhall come out of his gall; another weapon is ready to do it.

חלף Pertranſire; pertranſibit eum arcus, q.d. eia, ita ſit quod impius fugerit ab armis ferreis, ſed & pertranſierit eum arcus, numquid ideo immunis erit. Bold.

According to this expoſition, theſe two verſes are connected as they connect the two parts of this verſe, who give it (as was lately touched) thus, If he flee from the iron-weapon, the bow of ſteel ſhall ſtrike him through. Now the ſuppoſition is carried one ſtep further. If he flee from the iron-weapon, and the bow of ſteel miſs him, or glance away, yet the glittering ſword ſhall come out of his gall. But rather take it according to our reading: He ſhall flee from the iron-weapon, and the bow of ſteel ſhall ſtrike him through. Here are many terms, and variety of warlike inſtruments; The Text being (as it were) the Inventory of a little Magazine, or Armory of weapons.

Whence Obſerve, God hath inſtruments of all ſorts at command, with which to puniſh wicked men.

We have here the Iron-weapon, and the bow, here is ſword, and fire. God cannot want means to take revenge upon thoſe who rebel againſt him. As the Lord hath various inſtruments of mercy for the protection and defence of his cauſe and people. (Cant. 4.) In the Tower of David there hang a thouſand ſhields, that is, ſhields enow. God hath many and manifold inſtruments of defence to protect and ſafegard thoſe that truſt upon him; he hath a thouſand ſhields for them. Now as the Lord hath a thouſand ſhields, or defenſive weapons, for the protection of his own people, ſo he hath a thouſand bows and arrows, and ſpears, and ſwords, to wound and deſtroy his or their enemies. How can God want weapons, who can make any thing a weapon? For as the Baptiſt told the Jews who gloried in their fleſhly deſcent from Abraham, as if God were tied to Abraham's line, or as if they being out of the way, God knew not how to be ſupplied with a people; I tell you (ſaith John) God is able of theſe ſtones to raiſe up Children to Abraham, (Mat. 3.9.) As if he had ſaid; Think not that God will be ſtraitned for a people, if he remove you, for he can raiſe another people to himſelf out of thoſe who are as unlikely, and in humane reaſon as much indiſpoſed to ſhew forth his praiſe as theſe ſtones are. Even thus, if all weapons and viſible means for the deſtruction of wicked men were removed, God can make any thing a weapon, he can make an iron weapon out of a ſtraw, or the graſs of the field. As God can eaſily ſupply himſelf with inſtruments to ſerve his providence for the good of thoſe who are veſſels of mercy and heirs of ſalvation, ſo he can quickly have a ſupply of inſtruments to annoy thoſe who are veſſels of wrath and children of perdition.

Secondly, We may take notice how theſe weapons are deſcribed in their Effectualneſs, Striking through, &c.

Whence Obſerve, The weapons and means which God uſeth for the puniſhing of wicked men, ſhall be effectual, they ſhall do their work.

What ever weapon God ſends on his errand ſhall do it to purpoſe, the bow of ſteel ſtrikes through. It doth not give a light wound, and ſkare the fleſh a little, but goes to the heart, and cleaves the bones. God hath a mighty arm, and according to the might of his own arm, is the might of his inſtruments. As they act not by their own will, ſo not by their own might. What the Apoſtle ſpeaks about the weapons of our ſpiritual warfare (2 Cor. 10.4.) They are not carnal, but mighty through God. What to do? To pull down ſtrong holds, to lay all level, to ſubdue all ſinful powers, or the power of ſin within us. What, I ſay, is ſpoken of thoſe ſpiritual weapons, is true alſo of theſe corporal and viſible weapons, the ſword, the bow, and the arrow; when God ſends them forth to execute his will, and fulfil his counſels, they are not carnal, but mighty through God. Though they are weapons of fleſh, yet they are not, like fleſh, frail and powerleſs; though they are weapons of fleſh, as to matter and form, yet they will declare themſelves weapons of ſpirit, as to the effect and ſucceſs; they ſhall prevail over the ſtrongeſt enemies, and ſtrike through the thickeſt of their defences. The Lord can weaken the ſtrongeſt weapons of the enemies, and ſo blunt their ſharpeſt edge, that they ſhall do no hurt, but be as a wooden dagger in the hand of him that wields them, of how well tempered metal ſoever they are made, and how well ſoever their edge be ſet. This is it which the Prophet aſſures the Church of in the name of the Lord (Iſa. 54. 17.) For having made a promiſe of ſalvation and ſafety to the Church, it might be objected, how can we be ſafe, who have ſo many enemies, ſo many weapons formed againſt us? how can we be ſafe when ſo many Smiths are at work, making ſwords, and forging inſtruments of death againſt us? The Lord anſwers (verſ. 17.) No weapon that is formed againſt thee ſhall proſper. I grant there are many forming weapons, whetting and preparing their ſwords againſt thee; but no weapon that is formed againſt thee ſhall proſper. Now (I ſay) as the Lord gives check to all weapons that are formed againſt his people, and ſaith, they ſhall not proſper, they ſhall not hurt the leaſt of my children, the meaneſt of my ſervants. So, if himſelf form a weapon againſt the higheſt and mightieſt of his enemies, it ſhall proſper to their deſtruction; the bow of ſteel ſhall ſtrike them through, and the fire ſhall conſume them to the very ſtumps. That is a ſecond note from the effectualneſs of theſe weapons here deſcribed.

Thirdly, When God is about to rain down judgment and war upon the wicked man; what doth he? The Text ſaith, He flees from the iron weapon; that is, he endeavours to flee from it, he doth what he can to eſcape.

> Obſerve this from it, The ſtudy of a wicked man, when trouble is upon him, is not how to improve, or make good uſe of it, how to get his heart humbled under it, and his life bettered by it; but only how to get it off, or how to get away from it.

Here is not a word in the Text of humbling himſelf when he ſees the iron weapon, here is no mention of ſuing to God, and ſeeking to make his peace with him, here is no acknowledgment of his ſin, that he deſerved to be wounded and deſtroyed; but all the matter is how to eſcape, how to get out of the reach of danger. He never labours to make his peace with God, but only ſtrives how to avoid the war of God. There is another frame of ſpirit in believers, they do not make it their work to run from the judgments of God, but to make a right uſe and improvement of them; when the ſword comes, or the arrow comes, they enquire how to give God the glory of his ſmitings and woundings, they flee from thoſe weapons only by fleeing to God. Whereas wicked men flee theſe weapons, by fleeing from God; godly men flee them, by flying to God, that is, they make God their refuge, their hiding-place; If they hide themſelves from the iron weapon, they hide themſelves in God; If they run from the iron weapon, they run to God. God is a godly mans Tower, and Fort, and hiding place; he flies unto, and into God, that he may be ſafe.

Fourthly, As this ſhifting and fleeing, when the iron weapon comes, notes the impenitency of wicked men, who never think of turning to but only of running from God: ſo it notes alſo the cowardiſe and baſeneſs of their ſpirits.

> Hence Obſerve, A wicked man hath no courage in an evil day.

When troubles riſe, his ſpirit falls; though he may make a buſtle, yet he hath no heart, no true fortitude; he either flees, or is meditating a flight. And 'tis no wonder that a wicked man ſhould flee being purſued; when Solomon tells us that he fleeth, when none purſues him. It is no marvel if he flee at the ſight of the iron weapon, when he flees meerly from a fanſied weapon. How can he but flee from the ſtroak of the ſword; when another Text tells us, that he flees at the very ſhaking of a leaf. They who are fearleſs of doing moral evil, are moſt fearful at the appearance of pœnal evils.

Fifthly, He flees, but what doth he get by it? When he fleeth from the iron weapon, the bow of ſteel ſhall ſtrike him through. What gets he now by his flight?

> The point is this, The ſhifts and evaſions of a wicked man ſhall not profit him.

That is, when he fleeth, he ſhall not flee, or he ſhall not eſcape. If he get out of the ſtroak of one weapon, another weapon ſhall ſtrike him; or according to the ſecond interpretation of the words, ſuppoſe he flee from the iron weapon, and the bow of ſteel miſs him alſo, yet the ſword ſhall come out of his gall. So that by all his evaſions, he ſhall not evade the face of danger. As a carnal heart hath a thouſand deviſes and ſhifts to excuſe his ſin; but his deviſes and excuſes do but faſten ſin more upon him: his conſcience gets no eaſe at all by his wit; yea his conſcience is more wounded by the excuſes and pleas that he makes for his ſin. Such alſo is the fruit of all the evaſions and deviſes of a wicked man to get out of danger; they bring him and danger nearer together, or they entangle him in worſer dangers. We have a clear Text for that, (Iſa. 24. 18.) And it ſhall come to paſs, that he who fleeth from the noiſe of fear ſhall fall into the pit, and he that cometh up out of the midſt of the pit ſhall be taken in a ſnare. He is remedileſs after all his remedies. There was but a noiſe of fear, when he fled, danger was at a diſtance; but while he is fleeing from the noiſe of fear, he falls into the mouth of danger, a pit: And being in the pit, he ſtrives and ſtruggles to get out, hoping yet to find his deſired ſafety and enlargement, but then he falls into a ſnare, a worſe evil then the pit: He that falls into a pit, is at liberty to get out; but he that is in a ſnare is bound faſt, he can get no further, ſtill his caſe is worſe and worſe. We find the ſame ſucceſs in the Propheſie of Amos, (9. 1.) I ſaw the Lord ſtanding upon the Altar, and he ſaid, ſmite the lintel of the door that the poſts may ſhake, and cut them in the head, all of them, and I will ſlay the laſt of them with the ſword. As if he had ſaid, there ſhall be an utter ſlaughter; for the firſt two or three men may be ſlain, yea hundreds may be ſlain, yet the laſt may eſcape: but when he ſaith, The laſt ſhall be ſlain, the meaning is, I will ſlay them all, or all of them ſhall be ſlain. But will theſe men ſtand till the ſword come to them, will the laſt man ſtand when he ſees the ſword deſtroy thoſe ſo faſt that were before him? No, it may be he will flee, yet ſaith God, I will ſlay the laſt: for, He that fleeth ſhall not flee away, that is, he ſhall not deliver himſelf, nor eſcape by flight. The ſame Prophet ſpake as much before (Amos 5. 18, 19.) Wo to you that deſire the day of the Lord, to what end is it for you? The day of the Lord is darkneſs, and not light; As if a man did flee from a Lyon, and a Bear met him; or went into the houſe, and leaned his hand on the wall, and a Serpent bit him. It will not be either unprofitable or beſides the point, to open this Text a little. Wo to you that deſire the day of the Lord. Why doth the Prophet thunder out wo againſt them that deſired the day of the Lord? Was there ſin in that deſire? was it a fault to wiſh for the day of the Lord? The day of the Lord, of which he there ſpeaks, is a day of judgment, or a day of tryal; why ſhould the Prophet denounce a wo againſt thoſe who deſire that day? It is a part of the character of the Saints in the New Teſtament, To love the appearing of Chriſt (1 Tim. 4. 8.) Saints long for the day of the Lord, they pray for it, and O that the day of the Lord would come; why then doth Amos ſay, Wo to you that deſire the day of the Lord?

I anſwer, The Prophet may be underſtood,

Firſt, Of thoſe, who in a kind of prophane boldneſs deſired the day of the Lord, as ſome will do, calling God to judge them, or wiſhing that God would come to judgment; not that they have ground of confidence in the day of judgment, but only to clear themſelves in the judgment, and from the cenſure of men. The Prophet might well ſay, Wo to you who thus deſire the day of the Lord; you think you are hardly dealt with now by man; But it will be worſe with you in the day of the Lord.

Secondly, As there are ſome who in a bold prophaneneſs of ſpirit ſeem to deſire the day of the Lord, ſo there are others who call for and invite it impudently in ſcorn and mockery. Such are deſcribed by the Prophet (Iſaiah 5. 19.) Wo to them that draw iniquity with cords of vanity, and ſin as it were with a Cart-rope. That ſay, let him make ſpeed, and haſten his work that we may ſee it, and let the counſel of the holy One of Iſrael draw nigh and come, that we may know it. They who draw iniquity with cords of vanity; that is, who make haſt to ſin, ſaid, let him make ſpeed, and haſten. What ſhould he haſten? The day of judgment, or thoſe judgments which the Prophet had often threatned. As if they had ſaid to the Prophet, You have often told us of the day of the Lord, and that he would reckon with us ſhortly; let him make ſpeed, and haſten the work that we may ſee it, and let the counſel of the holy one of Iſrael draw nigh; you have long ſpoken of it, as near, even as at the doors, but as we feel, ſo we believe no ſuch thing. The Apoſtle Peter Propheſieth of ſuch (2 Pet. 3. 3.) In the laſt dayes there ſhall come ſcoffers, walking after their own luſts, and ſaying, Where is the promiſe of his coming? for ſince the fathers fell aſleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning of the Creation. Where is the promiſe of his coming? Pray, let us ſee the performance of it. Wo to you that ſcoffingly deſire the day of the Lord, you will find it no jeſting matter when once it comes, it will be a ſad a black day to you, who now make your ſelves merry with it.

Thirdly, Thus, Wo to you that deſire the day of the Lord, being conceited of your own innocency, as ſure (in your own ſence) that God will acquit and pronounce you innocent. For the Prophet ſpeaks of thoſe who had fallen under and were vext with the reproofs of the word; theſe deſired the day of the Lord, ſuppoſing he would deal more gently with them then thoſe Prophets had done, he would not be ſo ſevere, or not judge them ſo bad as the Prophets reported them to be; ſaith he, Wo to you that deſire the day of the Lord, becauſe you think his Prophets and Miniſters handle you too roughly; you know not what you ſay; if our day be ſo terrible, how terrible will the day of the Lord be? It will be as if a man ſhould flee from a Lyon, and a Bear ſhould meet him: you think we are Lyons, if you flee from our day, the day of the Lord will be as a Bear, it will tear you worſe. When (in this caſe) you appeal from us to the tribunal of God; it is as if a man leaning on a wall, and a Serpent ſhould bite him; ſuch you will find the day of the Lord when 'tis too late. What's our day to the day of the Lord? The day of the Word is a terrible day of judgment upon the conſciences of wicked men. But the day of the Lords Judgment is far more terrible. Some have had a hope that the hell of the damned beyond this life, is not ſo bad as the hell of conſcience, when a man is condemned of himſelf in this life, and have therefore even wiſht for that hell, that they might be eaſed of this; yea ſome have ventured upon hell, thruſting themſelves by a violent hand out of this world, that they might eſcape the hell of a perplexed conſcience, which they felt in it. Whereas alas, it is but fleeing from a Lyon to meet with a Bear, or going from the heat of the Sun into the heat of the fire. Thus the Text in Amos (taken in either of theſe ſences) is a proof of the point in hand, that wicked men who would avoid this or that judgment of God in this life, do but run themſelves upon ſome worſer judgment here; even as they who would avoid the judgment of God in his word ſhall find a ſorer judgment at the end of the world. Moſes uſeth that phraſe of fleeing ſeven wayes, twice in one Chapter (Deut. 28.7.25.) At the ſeventh verſe, it is threatned againſt the enemies of the people of Iſrael, in caſe they did obey; and in the twenty fifth verſe 'tis threatned againſt Iſrael, in caſe they diſobeyed, that they ſhould flee ſeven wayes. The meaning is not that they ſhould have ſeven or many wayes of eſcaping, or that in any of theſe wayes they ſhould be ſafe; for the intent of Moſes is to ſhew that they ſhould no way or no where be ſafe: For they ſhould be aſſaulted and compaſſed about with ſo many dangers, that they ſhould flee ſeven wayes, that is, all manner of wayes, endeavouring to eſcape, but they ſhould eſcape in never a one of them: though they fled ſeven or ſeven hundred wayes, yet God would ſend a ſword, as many wayes after them, or if they miſt and eſcaped one ſort of evil, another ſhould be ready at their ſide; As Zophar hath it, He ſhall flee from the iron weapon, and the bow of ſteel ſhall ſtrike him thorow.

Verſ. 25. It is drawn, and cometh out of his body.

גוה & גו proprie corpus metaphoricè vagina. Egrediens de vagina ſua. Vulg.

What is drawn? We may refer it to the arrow of the bow before ſpoken of; The bow of ſteel ſhall ſtrike him through; it is drawn, and cometh out of his body. Out of what body? Some by the Original word which we tranſlate body, underſtand the Quiver in which the arrow was; for the quiver is to the arrow as the body is to the ſoul, The ſheath of it. Now ſaith he, it is drawn, and cometh out of his body; that is, it is pulled out of his quiver, and put into the bow ready to be ſhot: Thus Mr. Broughton, The Arrow ſhall be drawn and come out of the quiver: Others conceive, that by body, we are to underſtand the body of him that ſhoots, becauſe the Archer hangs his quiver by his ſide, and when he pulls out an arrow, it is as if he pulled it out of his body.

Exiit è corpore i. e. evagina, quæ eſt velut corpus gladio intra quam continetur, vel ſi ad ſagittam referas eſt pharetra. Merc.

Laſtly, Take it properly, it is drawn, and cometh out of his body, that is, out of the body of the wicked man, againſt whom it was ſhot, it ſtrikes him through, and cometh out of his body beyond him. And ſo it is a circumlocution to expreſs a deep and deadly wound. It is (that is, the bow is) drawn, and cometh out of his body; That is, the ſhot hits the man and comes out of his body. So the next clauſe ſuits it.

Yea the glittering ſword cometh out of his gall.] As if he had ſaid; As ſoon as he is ſtricken through with the arrow, he ſhall be run through with the ſword too. The word which we tranſlate glittering ſword, properly ſignifies lightning, and in that language the blade of a ſword, becauſe when a man brandiſheth a well furbiſhed ſword, it glitters and flaſhes in the eye like lightning. So the Prophet Ezekiel deſcribes the ſword, (Chap. 21.9, 10.) A ſword, a ſword is ſharpned, and alſo furbiſhed; It is ſharpned to make a ſore ſlaughter, it is furbiſhed that it may glitter. And as it ſignifies a ſword, ſo alſo (upon the ſame ground) the head of an arrow; For if the head of an arrow, of ſteel, or braſs, be made very bright, it glitters in the air like lightning, as a ſword doth; And we read in Scripture of making arrows bright as well as ſwords; as the ſame Prophet ſpeaks in the ſame Chapter (verſ. 21.) The King of Babylon ſtood at the parting of the way, at the head of the two wayes to uſe divination: he made his arrows bright. And (Zech. 9.14.) His arrows ſhall go forth as lightning. Thus we may render it here, keeping ſtill to the alluſion of lightning; The bow of ſteel ſhall ſtrike him through, it is drawn, and cometh out of the body, and glittering it comes out of his gall. So, Mr. Broughton; The arrows ſhall be drawn and come out of the quiver, the head ſhall be in his gall; That is, the head of the arrow. But whether we expound the word (Barak) of the ſword or of the arrow-head, it makes no difference as to Zophars ſcope, which is only to ſhew that the wicked man ſhall certainly receive a deadly blow.

Acies vel lamina gladii appellatur Hebraicè ברק fulgur, quod fulgoris more ſplendeat.

There is yet another tranſlation, which draws up the Text into the form of a ſimilitude, taking the word (Barak) in its proper ſenſe, for lightning, thus; The bow of ſteel ſhall ſtrike him through, it is drawn, and cometh out of his body, and ſhall paſs through his gall like lightning; As if he had ſaid, it ſhall paſs ſpeedily and ſwiftly; an arrow or a bullet from a ſtrong bow paſſeth like lightning. What makes ſuch ſpeed as lightning? Indeed the motion of an arrow is ſlow and ſluggiſh in compariſon of lightning; and therefore in Scripture the coming of a thing or perſon like lightning, notes the moſt ſudden coming. When Chriſt would ſet forth the quickneſs and unexpectedneſs of his appearance, he ſaith, As the lightning cometh out of the Eaſt and ſhineth even unto the Weſt, ſo ſhall the coming of the Son of man be (Mat. 24.27. And thus to ſay, a ſword or an arrow ſhall paſs through the gall as lightning, carrieth this ſenſe, it ſhall paſs ſuddenly. The vulgar tranſlation keeping it to that literal conſtruction of the Hebrew, uſeth the participle, and lightning in the bitterneſs of it; that is, in the bitterneſs of that death which follows the wound inflicted: Death is bitter, and thoſe things which death in them, may well be ſaid to have bitterneſs in them. Theſe words being thus an enforcement of the ſame thing more lively to deſcribe the unavoidable deſtruction and ſudden death of this wicked man, by ſome killing weapon, ſword or bow, or any of like uſe and nature, I will only give this Note from it;

Et fulgurans in amaritudine ſua. Vulg.

The wound which God gives his enemies, is an incurable wound.

He that is ſtricken through the gall, is paſt cure; we had that word (Job 16.) Where complaining, he ſaith; He hath poured my gall upon the ground; that is, he hath given me a deadly wound. When a beaſt is kill'd for food, the gall is poured out, leſt that ſhould imbitter the parts about it: And if once the gall be wounded through, there's no remedy againſt death. The Lord can ſend a Judgment, which ſhall be like an arrow paſſing through the gall, which all the Phyſitians in the world cannot heal. When the people of Iſrael ſaw their wound, they went to this King, and to that King, to the Aſſyrian, and to King Jareb, yet they could not heal them, nor cure their wound, (Hoſ. 5.13.) They were as a people ſtricken through the gall. God can give wounds which no Balſom of mans deviſing or compounding can cure.

Terrors are upon him.] Theſe words ſhew the inward effects of the judgments of God upon a wicked man; Terrors are upon him. The word is Emims, which in Scripture is ſometimes uſed, to note a ſort of terrible people (Deut. 2.10.) The Emims dwelt there in times paſt, a people great, and many, and tall, as the Anakims. The Emims were a great and tall people, a race of Giants; and they had their name Emams from a root ſignifying fear, becauſe their great ſtature, and vaſt limbs raiſed the paſſion of fear in their beholders. Emims are terrible ones. So, ſome render it here, The Emims ſhall fall upon him, that is, men of fierce and cruel ſpirits, men of mighty power, and implacable malice.

But we take the word properly, as noting inward terrour: fear, and anguiſh take hold of a man, worſe then any Emims or Giants in the world; A man were better to have all the ſons of Anak take hold of him then the fear of which the Text ſpeaks. This argueth the compleatneſs of a wicked mans miſery, he ſhall not only feel the iron weapon, and the bow of ſteel, and the glittering ſword, outward terrours, but he ſhall be fill'd with inward terrours. His ſoul is wounded worſe then his body. Some interpret it near this ſenſe, of evil ſpirits and furies that vex the minds of wicked men, as if legions of theſe ſhould be alwayes about him. The vulgar Latine ſaith, The horrible ones ſhall fall upon him. This point hath been ſpoken to at large (Chap. 15.24. & Chap. 18.21.) and therefore I ſhall not proſecute it in this place, but refer the Reader to thoſe former diſcuſſions of it. Only take this Obſervation:

Venient ſuper eum horribiles. Vul.

God can wound within, as well as without.

He hath weapons to ſmite the ſpirit, as well as the fleſh; when the arrow and the ſword are in the fleſh, fears and terrours ſhall beſet the ſpirit of his enemies. Man can both ſpeak and act terrible, but God only can ſend out Terrours. Terrours are upon him.

Verſ. 26. All darkneſs ſhall be hid in his ſecret place.

All darkneſs] Imports darkneſs of all ſorts, and of all degrees. All darkneſs, is whatſoever can be called darkneſs. Or all darkneſs, is perfect darkneſs, pure darkneſs, darkneſs without the leaſt mixture of any light; Darkneſs which hath nothing but darkneſs in it. God is all light; Therefore the Apoſtle ſaith, He is light, and in him is no darkneſs at all. There is not the leaſt tincture of darkneſs in him. The portion of this man is all darkneſs, and no light, no comfort at all, wholly darkneſs. So the word (Col) is uſed (Eccleſ. 12.13.) Fear God, and keep his Commandments, for this is (Col ha Adam) All man, that is, the whole duty of man. Thus here, All darkneſs ſhall be upon him. We may diſtinguiſh this darkneſs, into outward, or inward darkneſs; ſpiritual or corporal darkneſs. I have upon other paſſages ſpoken of both: therefore I forbear here. All darkneſs ſhall

Be hid in his ſecret place.] Trouble ſhall lie cloſe like a thief to ſurpriſe him; As men hide themſelves in darkneſs, ſo this mans darkneſs ſhall be hid. Both words ſignifie to hide, or to lay a thing up. We may interpret it firſt of trouble upon the ſpirit of the wicked man. The mind and conſcience are ſecret places; Now as the mind and conſcience of the wicked man is defiled (Tit. 1.15.) as well as his hand and tongue, ſo his mind and conſcience ſhall be darkned, there ſhall be nothing but darkneſs there.

Quaſcunque quæſierit latebras, ubi ſe tutū fore putat & immunem à dei Judicio, id nihil ei proderit, ubiq; ei abditæ erunt tenebræ calamitatū. Merc.

Secondly, Whereas he ſaid before, The wicked man ſhall flee; and he that flees, betakes himſelf to ſome ſecret place (hiding places are ſecret places.) Some therefore interpret it thus; He ſhall flee to ſome hole, or thicket in his retirement; but when he comes thither, all darkneſs ſhall be hid there, that is, he ſhall find no ſafety in thoſe places to which he flees for refuge. When he flees from affliction, he ſhall find affliction. The place whither he goeth for refreſhing, ſhall be filled with ſorrows. And the houſe of his expected freedom from trouble, will be but a ſtorehouſe of trouble, or his houſe of bondage. He that is himſelf unholy and prophane in all places, ſhall never find any place a Sanctuary to him.

All darkneſs ſhall be hid in his ſecret place.

Another renders it thus; All darkneſs ſhall be hid becauſe of his ſecret, that is, his ſecret ſins; As if he had ſaid, would you know why this wicked man is followed with ſword and arrow without, and with terrours within; all this pœnal darkneſs is upon him, becauſe ſinful darkneſs is hid in his ſecret place, or becauſe he keeps his ſin ſecret. He (as was ſhewed in the former part of the Chapter) hides it under his tongue, and keepes it cloſe. All darkneſs ſhall be upon him, becauſe of this beloved darkneſs remaining in him. Mr. Broughtons tranſlation ſeems to hold out this meaning, All darkneſs ſhall be hid up for his ſtore; and he puts in the margine, for his ſtore of ſin; he hath ſecretly laid up a ſtock and ſtore of ſin; which ſtock and ſtore of ſin is anſwered with all manner of darkneſs, with a ſtock and ſtore of puniſhment. This ſenſe hath occurred in divers paſſages, therefore I will only name the Obſervation,

The darkneſs of ſin bringeth darkneſs of ſorrow.

They who lay up ſtore of iniquity in ſecret, ſhall one time or other find a ſtore of miſery laid up for them. If we hide ſin and provide ſecret places for it, God will hide darkneſs for us in our moſt ſecret places. They who (when light comes towards them) love darkneſs more then light, ſhall be ſure to meet with darkneſs, where they moſt expected light.

A fire not blown ſhall conſume him.

What is this fire not blown? This circumlocution ſpeaks more then ordinary fire; we ordinarily make fires by blowing; but this is A fire not blown.

There are divers apprehenſions about this fire.

Firſt, A fire not blown, is expounded by ſome, metaphorically, of a fire in the conſcience; Many a wicked man finds fire in his boſome; an evil conſcience is like a flaming furnace, much worſe then Nebuchadnezzars furnace of fire when heated ſeven times more then ordinary. None have been ſo tormented and ſcorched, as they who have been caſt into theſe burnings; but I paſs that.

Secondly, Others by this fire not blown, underſtand corporal diſtempers; As if Zophar in this touched upon Job's diſeaſed body; A fire not blown, ſhall conſume him. The Text may very well bear that notion; for there are many hot and fiery diſeaſes. Such fires are threatned (Deut. 28.22.) The Lord ſhall ſmite thee with the conſumption, and the feaver, and with an inflammation, and an extream burning. Here are three bodily diſeaſes, which (without ſtraining) may be called, A fire not blown; A feaver, and an extream burning, and an inflammation. God conſumes ſome men by ſuch fires. Job had much and very ſad experience of them.

Thirdly, Many of the Greeks interpret this fire not blown, of hell. There needs no bellows to kindle that fire. The breath of the Lord as a river of brimſtone ſhall kindle it, Iſa. 30. ult. Tophet is prepared of old. It needs no blowing to make it burn. But though the fire of hell may be called a fire not blown, yet I conceive this Scripture hath no relation to it.

Ignis Gehennæ cum ſit incorporeus, neque ſtudio humano ſuccenditur, neque lignis nutritur, ſed creatus durat inextinguibilis, & ſuccenſione non indiget, & ardore non caret. Greg.

Fourthly, Others expound this fire not blown, of thoſe extraordinary fires which God ſends from heaven, to deſtroy enormiouſly wicked men. Thus he rained fire upon Sodom and Gomorrha, which conſumed thoſe Cities (Gen. 19.24.) We read alſo of ſuch fires in the firſt Chapter of this Book, where it is ſaid, The fire of God deſtroyed Job's ſheep; poſſibly his friends would mind him of that here, as in many other paſſages, they cloſely hint to him the manner of Gods dealing with him.

Fifthly, A fire not blown, may be taken for the extream heats and ſcorchings of the Sun; Theſe in Scripture are called burnings, yea they are called fire, and we may truly call them, A fire not blown. (Joel 1.20.) The beaſts of the field cry unto thee: for the rivers of water are dried up, and fire hath devoured the paſtures of the Wilderneſs. What fire? only the heat of the Sun. God ſent heat and drought which burnt up the paſtures of the wilderneſs; and this the Prophet calls a fire. And beſides the heat of the Sun by day, the very cold of the night is a fire not blown; In the ſpring of the year, while the fruits and corn of the earth are young and tender, God many times ſends a Blaſting, which by a ſtrange kind of cold burns and ſcorches the budding fruits. The Latines call this uredo, which properly ſignifies a burning, we call it Blaſting.

חסיל à rad. חסל Conſumere; aptiſſimè illa frugum uredo ignis non ſuccenſus dicitur quia non ab homine ſed à deo ſuccenditur.

Sixthly, A fire not blown may be interpreted of that which is the kindler of all penal fires, namely, the anger and wrath of God. The wrath of God is often in Scripture compared to fire, Pſal. 78.21. Pſal. 18.4. Deut. 4.24. And ſo the ſenſe is, A fire not blown ſhall conſume him, that is, the anger of God ſhall conſume him. There is no ſtanding before the wrath of God: when that burns, it burns to conſumption. Hence the Apoſtle exhorts the Saints to beware of this fire (Heb. 12. ult.) Let us have grace to ſerve him acceptably with reverence and godly fear, (take heed of provoking God to anger) for our God is a conſuming fire.

Seventhly, A fire not blown, is any great or terrible judgment. War is ſuch a fire (Ezek. 20.47.) Behold I will kindle a fire in thee, and it ſhall devour every green-tree in thee, and every dry-tree; That is, all ſorts of people, rich and poor, ſtrong and weak, young and old, ſhall be conſumed; The flaming fire ſhall not be quenched. Great fires need no blowing, the buſineſs is to quench, not to kindle them. Fires made of green fewel will not kindle without much puffing and blowing; but dry light fewel is ſo conceptive of fire, that the very ſmell of fire puts it into a flame. The Judgments of God take oftentimes as ſuddenly as fire doth in ſtubble fully dry, as ſuddenly as a ſpark in tinder or Gun-powder; yea the green-tree, is as combuſtible in this fire as the ſear and dry. And as this fire is eaſily kindled, ſo it is as hardly quenched. That which the Church ſpeaks of her love to Chriſt (Cant. 8. 6,7.) is as true of the wrath of Chriſt againſt the wicked; The coals thereof are coals of fire, which hath a moſt vehement flame. Many waters cannot quench this wrath, neither can the floods drown it. Mr. Broughton renders the Text, thus; An unquenchable fire ſhall eat him up. That fire needs no blowing to kindle it, which cannot be quenched.

Eightly, A fire not blown, may be a ſoft gentle fire; as if he had ſaid, he ſhall conſume ſecretly, and without noiſe.

Laſtly, That which I rather pitch upon, is, by the fire not blown, underſtand thoſe judgments which come no man knows how, ſudden unexpected judgments. We have two ſorts of fires; ſome fires are intentional, that is, we purpoſe to make them; ſuch fires are for our uſe and ſervice; nor is any thing more ſerviceable to us then fire; this intentional fire, is a fire blown. But Secondly, there are caſual fires, accidental fires; A fire takes in a houſe, we ſee all on a flame, no man knows how. Thoſe Judgments of God, whoſe beginnings and inſtruments we ſee not, are to us, as a caſual fire, a fire not blown. I conceive, this is it which Zophar chiefly aims at, A fire not blown ſhall conſume him. He is conſumed, but he can give no account who or what kindled the fire.

Hence Obſerve, God can raiſe up troubles, conſuming troubles, immediately, or without any appearances from the creature.

He cauſeth ſome fires without mans blowing; God needs not the help of the creature, either to do good or to do evil; As he himſelf forms the light, ſo he creates darkneſs, (Iſa. 45.7.) What the Apoſtle ſaith of our glorious eſtate hereafter (2 Cor. 5.1.) If the earthly houſe of this Tabernacle were diſſolved, we have a building of God, an houſe not made with hands; that is, a houſe not made by the hand of man, but built by the immediate power of God; the ſame may be ſaid of the calamitous ſtate of many here, Their houſe is unmade or pull'd down, not with hands; They are ruin'd, but they cannot ſay which way; they are conſumed, but they cannot ſay by whom the fire was kindled. There are many fires in the world, that is, troubles and evils which we may eaſily ſee how they come, and by whom they were blown up; there are bellows which blow up fires, the fires of diſcord and contention among brethren. Theſe fires conſume, Cities, and Countries, and Nations. The Prophet (Amos Chap. 7.4,5.) ſpeaks of God contending by fire, which as we may interpret of war and drought, ſo of diſcords and jealouſies in the bowels of that nation. Theſe fires are too much blown in many places, to the conſumption of many, and the hazard of all. And 'tis no hard matter to find out the bellows: We commonly call men of ſtrife Incendiaries; they blow up and foment unnatural fires, by bitter ſpeeches and provoking language. 'Tis the ſtudy of ſome men to kindle fires between party and party, between State and State, yea to make them of the ſame ſtate and party ſuſpitious of one another, till all be in a flame. How hath this fire been blown in theſe dayes? and we have ſometimes ſeen the bellows themſelves (as they well deſerved) burnt in it. By the bleſſing of the righteous (ſaith Solomon, Prov. 11.11.) the City is exalted; But it is overthrown by the mouth (that is, by the contentious words, and dividing counſels) of the wicked. Theſe ſtir the coals, and blow up the fire. (Prov. 29.8.) Scornful men bring a City into a ſnare, or, ſet a City on fire, as the Margin expreſſeth it. But though ſuch men, and their enflaming practices are often diſcernable by all, yet ſometimes the fire of trouble and contention kindles, while every one ſtands wondring who blowed it, or which way it was kindled: both Nations and perſons have been ruined by an inviſible hand; they are conſumed and undone, that they know; but how it came about, they know not: as to them it was by a fire not blown. Some have complained, that it was more then all their miſery to be under miſery whoſe original they knew not. The Heathens have taken notice of this, as a great aggravation of ſufferings. Not ſo much as this eaſe is given to the miſerable, to know whence their miſery came, or by what hand they were undone.

Nec hoc levamen denique ærumnis datum eſt, Videre ſaltē & noſſe quo pereant malo. Sen. in Agam. Act. 3.

The Lord hath infinite wayes to kindle fires upon us, and we ſhall not ſee who are the bellows that do it. That which is ſaid of the fire in hell, It hath heat in it, but no light in it, is verified of many Judiciary fires here on earth; They have heat in them, but no light in them; Not only hath the afflicted no light of comfort in them, but no light of knowledge about them. 'Tis a ſmothering fire, and in this ſenſe it may alſo be called a fire not blown; for the breath of the bellows in blowing draws the more ſubtile vapour out of the fuel, and cauſeth the flame: where there is no blowing, there is little flame: Such fires like the fire of hell, have heat, but no light. This ſhould make us afraid to blow up the fire of divine diſpleaſure againſt us, either by open or ſecret ſins; ſeeing the Lord can conſume ſinners by ſecret fires, and kindle a flame upon them without blowing. It may be terrible to the Monarchs and Powers of the world to remember, what is propheſied by Daniel, That they ſhall be deſtroyed by a ſtone cut out without hands (Dan. 2.34.) that is, without any viſible means, or humane preparations. It ſhould make all Nations tremble before God, and take heed how they lift up their hands againſt him who can break in pieces the iron, the braſs, the clay, the ſilver, the Gold, that is, all their power, even their moſt ſolid and beſt compacted power, by a power they never ſuſpected, and whoſe original and riſing they are not acquainted with. A ſtone cut out without hands, and a fire kindled without blowing, are expreſſions of the ſame general tendency; teaching us what great things God can do without noiſe, by unobſerved yea unſuſpected wayes.

Secondly, Note, If God ſend a fire, it will take.

A fire not blown ſhall conſume him. Though it may ſeem a fire that lies dead, as that commonly doth which is not blown, though it look like a fire that hath no force, no flame in it, yet God will make it a conſuming fire. There is no ſtanding before the leaſt of Gods judgments: when he commands them, execution ſhall be done. As was further ſhewed in opening the effects of the Iron-weapon, and of the bow of ſteel, which ſtrike and paſs through the gall of thoſe who are the marks of Gods provoked indignation. Neither ſhall theſe arrows ſmite, and this fire not blown conſume the wicked man in perſon only, but they ſhall reach all that relate and appertain unto him, as appears in the laſt clauſe or cloſe of this verſe.

It ſhall go ill with him that is left in his Tabernacle.

The word which we tranſlate to go ill, ſignifies in the root of it, moral evil, as much as penal evil. Theſe two are ſo near that they may well be expreſſed by one word: where moral evil goes before, penal evil will follow after. It ſhall go ill with them that do ill, unleſs their evil deeds be pardoned. It went ill with Chriſt while he was procuring pardon for evil-doers; and therefore it muſt needs go ill with them who are unpardoned. It ſhall (ſurely) go ill with him, or he ſhall be wringed, ſaith Mr. Broughton, ירע aut à רעע contero, aut à ירע male habuit. Druſ.

That is left in his Tabernacle.

This is expounded two wayes.

Some thus, A fire not blown ſhall conſume him, and though he be left in his Tabernacle, yet he ſhall be afflicted. So 'tis meant of the wicked man himſelf, who if he eſcape the danger abroad, yet ſhall not be ſafe in his own houſe. They who give this ſenſe relate it to Job; For when the fire of affliction had conſumed his eſtate, yet Job was left in his Tabernacle, and ſupervived thoſe calamities. Now ſaith

Zophar, ſuppoſe he be left in his Tabernacle, yet it ſhall be ill with him: As if he had ſaid, Thy children, and thy ſubſtance are conſumed, and thou art left in thy Tabernacle; but doth it not go ill with thee? Thou art full of diſeaſes without, and haſt a troubled mind within. There is a truth in that.

But I rather conceive that this latter clauſe reſpects thoſe who belong to the wicked man, then the wicked man himſelf. This renders the judgment more compleat and extenſive. The Original word which we tranſlate left, is applicable to things and perſons. Some reſtrain it here in the firſt ſignification to his eſtate and goods. As if he had ſaid, Fire ſhall conſume him abroad, and if there be any thing left in his Tabernacle, any goods, fire ſhall deſtroy them too. It ſhall go ill with that which remains, if there be a poor pittance left, he ſhall be wringed in that, or that ſhall be wrung from him.

שריד Tum ad perſonas, tum ad res referri poteſt. Merc.

Secondly, We refer it to a perſon, to his children, and relations. As he himſelf ſhall fare ill, ſo they that are his ſhall fare no better. That the ſins of wicked men redound to, and draw judgments upon their poſterity, or thoſe who are left in their Tabernacle, hath been obſerved from other Texts of this Book, and therefore I forbear to draw out or enlarge upon that point here.

VERS. 27, 28, 29.

The heaven ſhall reveal his iniquity: and the earth ſhall riſe up againſt him.

The increaſe of his houſe ſhall depart, and his goods ſhall flow away in the day of his wrath.

This is the portion of a wicked man from God, and the heritage appointed to him by God.

ZOphar having in the former paſſages of this Chapter ſet forth the miſerable eſtate of a wicked man; in theſe three verſes he winds up all, and concludes his diſcourſe with a re-inforcement of his miſery, by the joynt ſuffrage of heaven and earth againſt him, and by the determinate counſel and purpoſe of God concerning him.

The heaven ſhall reveal his iniquity, &c.

In the ſixteenth Chapter, verſe the eighteenth and nineteenth, Job had appealed to heaven, and earth, and as it were provoked both, to declare and ſpeak what they could againſt him; O earth, cover not thou my blood, my witneſs is in heaven. Here Zophar tells him he ſhall have his wiſh, heaven and earth ſhall unite to diſcover his blood, that is, the bloody ſins which he had committed, they ſhall bring in their teſtimony, and condemn him; The heaven ſhall reveal his iniquity, and the earth ſhall riſe up againſt him.

The heaven ſhall reveal.

There is a twofold revelation.
Firſt, Formal and expreſs.
Secondly, Virtual and equivalent.

In proportion to this twofold revelation, there is a twofold notion of heaven.

Latini per Metonymiā cœlum pro incolis cœleſtibus terram pro terrigenis accipiunt.

Firſt, Some by heaven, underſtand the inhabitants of heaven, or they whoſe place and ſeat, is chiefly in heaven; The heavenly dwellers ſhall reveal his iniquity. Who are they? Firſt, God himſelf, whoſe throne is heaven, as the earth is his footſtool. Secondly, The Angels. Thirdly, The Saints; who though they dwell upon the earth while they are in the body, yet even then their converſation is in heaven; and when they go out of the body, their ſpirits go to heaven, or return to God who gave them; and therefore they may well be reckoned among the dwellers in heaven. If we expound heaven in the Text of theſe, and theſe revealing the iniquity of this wicked man, then the revelation is formal and expreſs: God himſelf, the good Angels, and good men, ſhall in their ſeveral degrees and capacities reveal his iniquity.

Secondly, Take the heavens properly and literally, and ſo they may be ſaid to reveal his iniquity virtually, or equivalently, while they by the powerful diſpoſe of God, hold out that which carrieth a ſignification of it. As the heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament ſheweth his handy-work (*Pſal.*19.1.) ſo (in a ſence) the heavens declare the ſin of man, and the firmament ſheweth what his hand hath wrought. Thoſe judgments which fall from heaven cry out of and reveal the iniquity of wicked men on earth; ſin troubles not only our own houſes, but the powers of heaven. Some interpret the preſent place, as if Zophar did here intimate the fire which fell from heaven upon Job's flocks of ſheep, and devoured them; as alſo the wind which ſmote the houſe where his children were feaſting, and deſtroyed them. 'Tis proper enough for us to ſay, and very profitable for us to confeſs, that the heavens reveal or declare the wickedneſs of men, as often as extraordinary fires from heaven, or impreſſion from the air by winds and ſtorms ſcorch and ſmite them in perſon, or ſpoil their poſſeſſions.

Further, The heavens declare, when the heavens are ſhut up, when their influences are ſtopt, when they withhold the rain. As God threatens in the old Law (*Deut.*28.23.) The heaven that is over thy head ſhall be braſs; That is, It ſhall yield thee no more moiſture then braſs doth. When the heavens are as hard braſs, they declare the hard-heartedneſs of men, or that their hearts are like braſs; as the Prophet concludes of the ſtubborn and unreformed Jews (*Jer.*6.28.) Thus the heaven ſhall declare his iniquity.

Hence Note, The iniquity of man ſhall be revealed.

There is nothing hid, but it ſhall be made known; and rather then it ſhall not, ſenſleſs creatures ſhall make it known; and that which hath not a mouth ſhall utter it. The heaven ſhall reveal, &c. Yea if nothing elſe will reveal the iniquity of man, mans iniquity will reveal it ſelf. Sin will prove like the ointment of the right hand of which Solomon ſaith (*Prov.*27.16.) that it bewrayeth it ſelf. There is no way for us to get our ſin covered, but by revealing it, nor hid, but by confeſſing it, *Pſal.*32.1. Bleſſed is the man whoſe iniquities are forgiven, and whoſe ſin is covered. Covered, how? Not with any covering of our own. The Prophet complains of ſuch coverings, and ſhews the uſeleſneſs of them. (*Iſa.*31.1.) They cover with a covering, but not of my Spirit. There are ſome that cover their ſins, but it is with a cover of their own making, not with that covering which the Spirit of God hath made. The covering which the Spirit makes is only the free-grace and love of God in the righteouſneſs of Chriſt; this is a covering of the Spirits making. Now they who cover with a covering which is not of this making, do indeed diſcover their ſinfulneſs inſtead of covering their ſin. For as the Prophet there adds, Theſe coverings are narrower then that a man can be wrapped in them. And with whatſoever of our own we hide our ſin, we do but ſhew our nakedneſs. Mercy covereth thoſe iniquities which we confeſs, and thoſe which we conceal, ſhall be diſcovered by Juſtice. The heavens ſhall declare his iniquity.

Cœlum & terra tanquam teſtes in ipſam judicis ſententiam exequuntur, negando benedictionem & vim ſuam. Coc.

Secondly, Obſerve, The extraordinary motions or ſuppreſſions of the heavenly powers, reveal the ſins of men.

Unuſual apparitions in the heavens, fiery meteors and lightning, ſtormy winds and tempeſtuous confuſions in the air, mind us of thoſe confuſions which rage in the lives and hearts of men. When the clouds of heaven are not diſſolved into refreſhing ſhowers, when they do not give out their vertue to cheriſh and quicken the earth, theſe ſtops and checks are witneſſes of mans iniquity; The heaven ſhall declare his iniquity;

And the earth ſhall riſe up againſt him.

That is, all earthly things ſhall appear his enemies, and proclaim war againſt him. Inanimates, the very ſtones of the field, Vegetables, the trees of the wood, Senſitives, the beaſts of the earth ſhall riſe up againſt him. As when 'tis promiſed (*Chap.*5.23.) that the ſtones ſhall be in league with the godly man, and the beaſts at peace with him (that is, he ſhall have benefit by them, and no hurt) this reveals his integrity and innocency. So when the Lord cauſeth the ſtones to fall out with a wicked man, and the beaſts to turn upon him and rent him, this reveales his iniquity; yea not only theſe creatures, which are upon the earth, but the whole body or bulk of the earth declares it ſelf his enemy; when God ſtrikes the earth with barrenneſs, that it doth not bear nor yield its ſtrength, when he denies the wicked man bread to eat, wine to drink, with other common conveniences for this life, then the earth may be ſaid to riſe up againſt him. When man looks to the earth for corn, wine, and oyl, and findeth none, but it is as iron under him; when the graſs withers, and the fruits of the earth are burnt up, this reveals his iniquity, and convinceth him of his barrenneſs in doing good, and fruitfulneſs in doing evil. Thus the earth riſeth up (as an enemy, or as a witneſs) againſt him.

Hence Note, All creatures arm againſt the wicked.

The wicked are Gods enemies, the creatures will take part with their Lord. He is the Lord of Hoſts, he can muſter an hoſt of worms, of lice, of flies, of any thing, of the moſt contemptible things upon the earth againſt the wicked of the earth; The earth is the Lords, and the fulneſs thereof. As the earth and the fulneſs of it is at the Lords command and diſpoſe, ſo alſo is the earth and the emptineſs of it, the earth and the barrenneſs of it, at his command and diſpoſe. The earth ſhall riſe up againſt him.

Verſ. 28. The increaſe of his houſe ſhall depart, his goods ſhall flow away in the day of his wrath.

The increaſe of his houſe.] The word which we render increaſe, ſignifies properly, a bud, a bloom, or bloſſom. And it is interpreted two wayes.

Firſt, For the children of the wicked man; and though I find not the word applied in Scripture to children, yet indeed they are the chief increaſe of a mans houſe, they are his buds and bloſſoms. This increaſe of his houſe

Shall depart.] Or as the Original may be tranſlated, go into captivity. So ſome take it here, His children ſhall go into captivity, they ſhall be made bond-men and bond-women in a ſtrange Land, or unto ſtrangers.

Secondly, As the word is applied to their children, in a metaphor, ſo properly to their riches or profits; Theſe alſo are the increaſe of a mans houſe, his buds and bloſſoms: many wicked men bloſom, bud, and grow green in outward proſperity, as David ſpeaks, I ſaw the wicked like a green bay-tree. Theſe buds and bloſſoms, or (as we render) this increaſe of his houſe ſhall depart. His treaſure ſhall be led captive, taken and ſpoiled, or become the portion of ſtrangers.

גלה Revolare migrare.

Again, As the verb ſignifies to depart and be led captive, ſo likewiſe to reveal, or to make a thing appear. Thus 'tis tranſlated in the former verſe; The heaven ſhall reveal his iniquity. Some give it that ſence here; The increaſe of his houſe ſhall be revealed, or made to appear: which may be taken two wayes.

Firſt, Thus, He hath ſecret riches, or riches in ſecret, he hath hidden treaſures (treaſure is expreſſed by a word in the Hebrew, which imports hiding, becauſe men are apt to hide and lay up their treaſures) treaſures do not lie abroad, they are cloſely lodged. But ſaith Zophar, his treaſures that were hid ſhall appear, or be brought forth. Thoſe treaſures which have not ſeen the Sun for many years, ſhall be ſeen in the open light. So the words are a predictive threat upon the increaſe of the wicked mans houſe; he hoarded and ſhut all up, he kept his gold and ſilver priſoners under lock and key, under irons and bolts, but a time ſhall come, when God will reveal the increaſe of his houſe, and bring all to light, the locks ſhall flee open, and the priſoners ſhall come forth. God will take away their converings, and preſent thoſe concealed treaſures to the view of ſpoilers. The increaſe of his houſe ſhall be revealed. That's one way.

Secondly, The revealing of his increaſe may be expounded thus; God will make it appear at laſt how this man came by his increaſe, how he got his eſtate; he hath gotten much, and hath gone long for an honeſt man in common reputation; but God will make it appear, that he compaſſed this increaſe by indirect courſes, by fraud, oppreſſion, by deceit, and guile, by grinding the faces of the poor, or by wronging the rich; God will make it appear, that his ſin, not his diligence, much leſs a bleſſing from above, gave him that great increaſe. This is a good ſence; The increaſe of his houſe ſhall be revealed, the man ſhall be laid open, and it ſhall be maniſeſt that his goods were ill gathered.

We render according to the ſignification of the word, not by revealing, or maniſeſting, but by departing. The increaſe of his houſe ſhall depart, or go into captivity; his treaſures ſhall be taken, and tranſmitted into other hands. Thus the Lord threatned Hezekiah, a good King, (yet God threatned him) that the increaſe of his houſe ſhould depart, and depart in this ſence, that it ſhould be carried captive (2 Kin. 20.17.) Behold the dayes come that all that is in thy houſe, and that which thy fathers have laid up in ſtore unto this day, ſhall be carried into Babylon, nothing ſhall be left, ſaith the Lord. Hezekiah fell under that temptation of pride and vain-glory; He was ambitious to have it known in Babylon, what a rich Prince he was; therefore the Lord laid this judgment on him; The increaſe of thy houſe ſhall depart and be carried captive. Thou haſt been forward to ſhew thy riches to ſtrangers, therefore ſtrangers ſhall ſpoil thy houſe, and tranſport thy riches into a far Countrey. Our glorying in riches, or in any thing but God, provokes God to ſtain our Glory. Thus Zophar threatens the wicked man; The increaſe of his houſe ſhall depart.

And his goods ſhall flow away in the day of his wrath.

The Hebrew is, Flowing away in the day of wrath; we ſupply thoſe words, his goods, yet the ſence is full in the Original without them; The increaſe of his houſe ſhall depart, and flow away in the day of his wrath. We ſay, And his goods ſhall flow away in the day of his Wrath.

Flow away.] It is a metaphor taken from waters; and that two wayes; Either from water ſpilt upon the ground, of which the wiſe Woman of Tekoa ſaid, There is no gathering it up again. Or from the ordinary flowing of water; there is an ebbing of water, and a flowing in of water. Here flowing away is ebbing. The flowing in of water is the flood; but the flowing away of water is the ebb. His goods ſhall ebb, they ſhall decreaſe, and flow away. The motion of ſome waters flowing away is ſwift, and with a kind of violence. Thus the increaſe of his houſe ſhall flow away, there ſhall be no ſtopping, no ſtaying of it. What the Pſalmiſt ſpeaks of perſons, is true alſo of things, (Pſal. 90.5.) Thou carrieſt them away as with a flood. Floods are carried with a mighty force; ſo the goods of a wicked man flow away, or are carried as with a flood.

Again, The alluſion may be to thoſe waters which flow away inſenſibly. The decreaſe of ſome waters is not to be ſeen, yet they flow away and decreaſe. Such alſo is the decreaſe of ſome wicked men in their worldly enjoyments, they do not flow away violently, but ſlowly, and are long in decaying. In deep ſtill Rivers you can hardly perceive the water move, and yet it moves; or that it ebbs, but yet it doth, till it comes to a dead low water. As it is with all trees and plants, we may perceive they have grown, but we cannot ſee them grow; ſo it is with many waters, we may perceive they have fallen, but we cannot ſee them fall. Thus inſenſibly at leaſt the wicked mans Higheſt-flown eſtate, and the increaſe of his houſe ſhall flee away.

Thirdly, We may apply the alluſion to waters which are carried or divided into many ſtreams or rivolets. Thus the wicked mans increaſe flows away; God makes many cuts and ſluces, to draw out his eſtate this way, and that way; this part runs into ſuch a channel, and that into another; fire ſhall conſume ſome, and water ſome, violent enemies ſhall take ſome, ſecret thieves, and unfaithful ſervants ſhall take the reſt. Thus it ſhall be divided into ſeveral channels, till the flood be made dry. The increaſe of his houſe ſhall flow away.

And when?

In the day of his wrath.

Of whoſe Wrath? In the day of the wrath of God. That is, when God appears angry, and maniſeſts his wrath. There is no change in God; As he is not at all moved by any paſſion, ſo that which for our underſtanding is expreſſed of him by a paſſion, doth never move. His love and his wrath, his favour and his diſpleaſure, are fixed from everlaſting to everlaſting. The Scripture calls that a day of Gods wrath, when he puts forth his wrath in the viſible tokens and evidences of it; as that alſo is called in Scripture a day of his mercy, and grace, of his patience and long-ſufferance, when he declares himſelf in grace and mercy to his people: ſo then, the day of wrath is that ſeaſon, whenſoever it is, wherein nothing but wrath and viſions of amazement appear to wicked men. There is a twofold day of wrath, a leſſer, and a greater. The leſſer day of wrath is here in this world; when judgment breaks forth, and divine anger is ſtampt upon every former enjoyment. The great day of wrath is in the world to come. Then wrath ſhall be poured out to the utmoſt. That will be a day, as of the revelation of the righteous judgment of God to all, ſo a day of the revelation of the dreadful wrath of God to moſt. Zophar here intends the former, the leſſer day of wrath. The increaſe of his houſe ſhall flow away in the day of his wrath.

Hence Note, When judgment goes forth, wrath goes forth.

There are dayes of great affliction to the godly, which are not dayes of wrath, but of love, Whom I love I chaſten. There may be a time, when the increaſe of a believers houſe departs, and all his goods flow away like a ſtream, and yet that no day of wrath, but only a day of trial. Floods of temptation do not drown, but waſh the furniture of grace, that increaſe of the ſoul never flows away. But judgment is ever mingled with the wrath of God, in the cup of ungodly men: perſonal Judgments are ſo, and ſo are publick judgments: Wo to a provoking people when judgment appears, for that is the appearance of wrath, and bears in its face the image of a fiery indignation to conſume the Adverſary. Moſes ſaw wrath in that plague with which God ſmote the people of Iſrael (Num. 16.46.) There is wrath gone out from the Lord, the plague is begun. And therefore he haſtens Aaron to the duty of his place. Take (ſaith he) a Cenſer and put fire therein from off the Altar, and put on incenſe, and go quickly to the Congregation, and make an Atonement for them. Thoſe ceremonial atonements, typified the Atonement of Chriſt, who alone delivers us both from preſent wrath, and from that wrath which is to come.

Secondly, From the effect of this day of wrath; The increaſe of his houſe ſhall depart, and his goods ſhall flow away in the day of wrath.

Obſerve, If the wrath of God go forth againſt a man, no good thing will ſtay with him.

His increaſe will be gone, riches will ſay, we muſt depart and flow away; credit will depart, health will depart, friends will depart, if once wrath come in preſence. God is wroth with thouſands of wicked men, whoſe increaſe doth not depart, nor do their goods flow away, they rather flow in abundantly; but if once God declare and let out his wrath, their fulneſs turns to emptineſs, and their increaſe haſtens to be gone. If God be for us, who can be againſt us? And if God be againſt us, what can be for us? As the love of God eſtabliſheth the creature to us, and makes that which (like quick-ſilver) can hardly be fixed, as firm to us as a rock of Adamant; ſo the wrath of God ſhakes our hold of the creature, and makes thoſe things which we looked upon as a rock of Adamant, our lands, our friends, our comforts and relations, diſſolve like ſnow before the Sun, and flow away like water. There are three wayes, in which the increaſe of a mans houſe departs and flows away in the day of Gods wrath.

Firſt, By prodigality, and that ſometimes his own; God gives up ſome to ſcatter and ſpend that vainly, which they got here unjuſtly; but moſt uſually it flows away, and the houſe of the wicked man with the whole increaſe of it, is (as we ſay) thrown out at the windows, by the prodigality of a ſpend-thrift heir.

Secondly, His increaſe departs by the oppreſſion of others. As he took violently or fraudulently from others; ſo God gives him up to ſons of violence and fraud, who take all from him. Thus the Prophet threatens (*Iſa.*33.1.) When thou ſhalt ceaſe to ſpoil, (A wicked man may ceaſe from ſome ſin, not becauſe he repents of it, but becauſe he is glutted with it, or barred from it; now when thou ſhalt thus ceaſe to ſpoil) thou ſhalt be ſpoiled, and when thou ſhalt (upon theſe terms) make an end to deal treacherouſly, they ſhall deal treacherouſly with thee.

Thirdly, His increaſe flows away by a ſecret curſe. A man ſees the increaſe of his houſe departing he knows not how, he perceives his goods flowing away, but he can give no reaſon of it. For as ſome men increaſe, and goods flow in unto them they ſcarce know how themſelves, their care and labour hath not been more then other mens, yet they grow rich beyond other men. As the Lilly attains her beauty (as Chriſt ſaith, Mat. 6.) without labour or ſpinning, ſo it is with ſome, they get the beauty of the world, though (comparatively) they neither labour nor ſpin for it; wealth drops into their boſoms, and golden ſhowers fall into their laps. Now, (I ſay) as ſome grow rich they know not how; ſo others grow poor they know not how. When they are called to an account, they cannot ſay how their eſtate waſted: Ask them, have you had bad debts? No: Have you had loſſes at Sea? No: They are undone, but ſee not what hath done it. What the Prophet (*Hag.*1.6) ſpeaks of wages earned, is true of all their wealth gained, it is as put into a bag with holes, or pierced through. While a man takes his mony out at the mouth of the bag, he knows how it goes away, and what becomes of it; but if his bag have holes in it, and his mony ſlip out there, he cannot ſay what's become of it; Holes in the bag are nothing elſe but a ſecret curſe. That alſo is meant by the ſame Prophet (*verſ.*9.) When ye brought it (that is, your goods) home, I did blow upon it, or blow it away. If God do but blow or breath upon our good things in anger, they are blaſted and preſently blown away, or they melt and flow away. The Prophet (*Iſa.*64.1.) ſpeaks of the flowing down of the Mountians; O that thou wouldeſt rent the heavens, that thou wouldeſt come down, that the mountains might flow at thy preſence. Mountains are firm and abide for ever in their place; Rivers flow, but who ever ſaw mountains flow? What mountains doth he mean? not natural, but metaphorical mountains; the mountains of humane ſtrength, riches and greatneſs: theſe, ſome pile up as ſo many mountains, to ſecure themſelves by; they call riches their mountain, and worldly power their mountain. (Holy David looked upon his power and riches as a mountain, Pſal. 30.7. Lord in thy favour thou haſt made my mountain to ſtand ſtrong.) But if the Lord rent the heavens, and come down in a day of wrath, theſe mountains flow away; and what was ſuppoſed as ſtedfaſt as a rock, proves as unſtable as water.

Zophar in the laſt verſe of this Chapter, winds up all in a rhetorical acclamation.

Verſ. 29. This is the portion of a wicked man from God, and the heritage appointed him by God.

As if he had ſaid, Review what I have ſpoken, conſider my words again, I cannot abate you one ſyllable, this, and all this that I have ſaid is true, I will not recal a tittle of it; This is the portion of a wicked man from God, and the heritage appointed him by God. Both parts of this verſe carry the ſame mind and meaning.

This is the portion of a wicked man from God.] The word which we render portion, ſignifies ſweetneſs, as alſo flattery, becauſe many are delighted with flattery; flattering words are ſweet words. So 'tis rendred Chap. 17.5. Some taking that ſence of the Original, conceive Zophar ſpeaking ironically, or in a kind of ſcorn to Job. As if he had ſaid, Thou haſt expected good from God, or that he ſhould ſpeak kindly to thee; thou haſt waited when ſweet ſuggered words ſhould drop from heaven into thine ear: here are the flatteries, theſe the ſoothings which God will give thee; remember what I have at large diſcourſed; that's thy portion; Thy glory ſhall be made as dung; thy Children ſhall beg; the enemy ſhall devour thy ſubſtance; the ſteel bow and the ſword ſhall ſtrike thee through; wrath ſhall rain upon thee when thou art eating; Theſe are delicates prepared for thee, theſe the pleaſant morſels thou art like to have. We render, This is thy portion, or thy part. And ſo it is an alluſion to the manner of feaſting, and banquetting, where the meat is divided into ſeveral diſhes and meſſes, every one hath his part, or portion, or ſo many have their meſs: Now ſaith Zophar, this is the meſs of meat that God hath provided for a wicked man, here are the diſhes, and the courſes which ſhall be ſerved up to his Table, in ſorrowful feaſt; This is the portion (or proviſion) of a wicked man.

Pars, portio tralatio à conviviis, ubi cuiq; ſua portio etiam calix dabatur. Druſ.

From God.] The word is Elohim, which is applied to God as a Judge; As if he had ſaid, God the moſt wiſe juſt and impartial Judge, hath ſet this out for his portion. He hath not ſaid this in haſt, or given it out in paſſion, but as a Judge upon mature deliberation, and the ſerious weighing of his caſe. God loveth judgment, and this is the award, the Judgment, which he hath paſſed concerning ſuch a wicked man.

And this is the heritage appointed him by God.

נחלת אמרו Hæreditas dicti ejus. Hæreditas verborum ejus. Vulg. Hæc eſt portio quā ipſe ſibi comparat ſermonibus ſuis & maledicentia ſua. Jun. Portio ſermonis ejus, i.e. ejus quod adverſus eum dictum eſt & decretum à domino. Merc. Rab. Sol. מאל à deo forti & potenti ad exequendum decreta & judicia ſua in impiū Merc.

The Hebrew is, This is the heritage of his word from God: ſo ſome render it; we put in the margine, This is his decree from God. The Original may be taken, either for the word of the wicked man, or the word of God himſelf. Some interpret in the firſt ſence; This is the heritage of his word, by, or from God; that is, God hath ſet out this heritage as due to him for his word, or words; all this ſhall come upon him for his ill words, or blaſphemies. This is the heritage of his word; this he hath got by his ungoverned tongue, and unſavory language; Words coſt many a man dear.

But underſtand it rather of the word ſpoken againſt him by God; And ſo word is put for decree or appointment; as we tranſlate, The heritage appointed him by God: That is, God hath determined thus concerning him by an irrevocable decree. As mercies are under an appointment, ſo alſo are Judgments. Every heritage of man is laid out by God.

We have God in both parts of the verſe, but under two different titles in the Original. In the former part, Elohim, here El. This is the portion of the wicked man from Elohim the Judge, and the heritage appointed him by El, the ſtrong God, or the puiſſant. As if he had ſaid, Let not the wicked man think (though it be a hard ſentence) to avoid the execution of it; for as the Judge is juſt to determine that which is his due, ſo he is ſtrong to ſee the execution done. This is the heritage appointed him by the ſtrong, the mighty, the powerful God; who will not abate any thing in the execution of what he hath ſpoken, and declared againſt him.

παρὰ τοῦ ἐπισκόπου. Sep. ab epiſcopo à viſitatore dei haud dubio providentiā & pervigilē oculū in impios qui ſe eum latere putant ſignificare voluerunt. Deus eſt πανεπίσκοπος. Dionyſ.

The Septuagint render this word ſomewhat differently; This is the heritage appointed him by the Biſhop or Overſeer, which is a periphraſis of God, who hath the view and inſpection of all, who is the viſitor General and ſuperintendent of mankind. Hereby intimating the provident and watchful eye of God over all the wayes of men, to protect and reward the righteous, to puniſh and take revenge upon the wicked.

Obſerve Hence, Firſt, The portion of a wicked man is decreed, and appointed by God.

The portion and heritage of the Saints is of Gods appointment. And as he doth it, ſo they are willing he ſhould do it, yea, it is their comfort that he doth, and will do it. They would not be their own carvers, nor have the ſetting out of their own portion, either in temporals or eternals; It pleaſeth them beſt that all ſhould be of Gods appointment. Thus it is with wicked men too, whether they will or no. They would fain be their own carvers, they would have another portion, either for matter or meaſure in this world then God aſſigns them. If he aſſign their portion in good things (as he doth ſometimes) yet they would have it larger then he gives, they would have more then he appoints, they are not ſatisfied with his proviſion. But when their portion is aſſigned in wrath and judgments, they cannot at all ſubmit to that, yet they muſt, for it is appointed them by God. The portion of a wicked man may be conſidered under a double notion. Sometime it is called wages, ſometimes, an inheritance. Wages, is due to a ſervant, an inheritance is due to Children, or to a Son; under both theſe notions the portion of a wicked man is ſet out in Scripture. It is wages for his ſin-work; He is the ſervant of ſin; and, The wages of ſin is death, all manner of deaths; ſin payes all its ſervants in Black-money. And as the wages, ſo the inheritance of ſin is death, the portion which wicked men receive as children of wrath, as children of the Devil (ſo Chriſt calls them, Joh. 8.44.) is nothing elſe but death, their whole eſtate lies in the valley of the ſhadow of death. The troubles of this life are at leaſt the ſhadows of death, or a kind of death, and they are their portion; The diſunion of ſoul and body at the end of this life, is death in kind, and that is their portion. The everlaſting ſeparation of ſoul and body from the face or favourable preſence of God, is the moſt deadly death. This alſo is the portion of a wicked man from God, and the heritage appointed him of God.

That this is their portion, ſtands in a double oppoſition.

Firſt, To the opinion which others have of them. The men of the world account them very happy, and think they have a good portion. But this is the portion appointed them by God; though many flatter, and applaud, admire and adore their felicity, as if they were the only men in the world, yet in oppoſition to this, ſaith God, miſery is their portion, they are the moſt unhappy men in the world.

Secondly, This portion appointed by God ſtands in oppoſition to what their own hearts appoint them, or at leaſt point them to; their own hearts ſpeak peace, and aſſure them all is well, and ſhall end well; For as flatterers and fawners never deal plainly with them, nor tell them of their miſerable end, ſo neither do their own hearts. (Pſal. 36. 2.) The wicked man flatters himſelf in his own eyes, till his iniquity be found hateful. He thinks his way is good, and that his end ſhall be better; he hears of, and delights in nothing but flattery; others flatter him, which is bad and dangerous enough; and he flatters himſelf, which is worſt and moſt dangerous of all. In oppoſition to both theſe flatteries, 'tis ſaid, This is the portion of the wicked man from God. God tells him it will be thus, and he doth not flatter. (Pſal. 11. 5.) The Lord tryeth the righteous; he layes many afflictions upon his own people, but upon the wicked he will rain an horrible tempeſt, this ſhall be the portion of their cup. And again (Pſal. 75. 8.) In the hand of the Lord there is a cup, the wine is red; (red with wrath, in the day of Gods wrath) It is full of mixture (it hath no mixture of good, no ſweetneſs at all in it, but all ſorts of evil are mingled in that cup) and he powres out of the ſame (upon many occaſions he powres it out in the world) but the dregs thereof all the wicked of the earth ſhall wring out and drink. They have not only the cup, but the dregs of the cup, that is, the worſt of the cup; For as in a good cup, the deeper the ſweeter, ſo in an evil cup, the deeper the worſer: the dregs are the worſt, the bottom is the bittereſt of a bitter cup. Therefore God puts this word into the Prophets mouth (Iſa. 3.) Say to the righteous it ſhall be well with him: ſay to the wicked it ſhall be ill with him; tell him, evil ſhall be his portion, tell him from me it ſhall be ſo. The wrath of God is revealed from heaven, againſt all unrighteouſneſs; Tribulation and anguiſh upon every ſoul of man that doth evil; That is, on every ſoul that lives and dies doing that which is evil.

But here a Queſtion ariſeth; Is it thus with all wicked men? How are we to underſtand this propoſition; This is the portion of a wicked man from God, and the heritage appointed him by God? Do not wicked men divide the good, the beſt things of this world among them? Is not pleaſure their portion, and riches their heritage? Do not the tabernacles of robbers proſper? as Job ſaid, Chapter the twelfth, Have not they the fatteſt ſhare, and the faireſt lot in this life? How then doth Zophar (ſpeaking of temporal judgments and troubles) ſay, This is the portion of a wicked man from God? when we daily ſee wicked men, not a few, enjoying a pleaſant portion. Do not the diſpenſations of God vary from his threatnings and and comminations? or how ſhall we reconcile this propoſition with our experiences?

I anſwer, Though God gives wicked men, many portions of outward good things in this world, yet that doth not abate, much leſs croſs and contradict this commination. God gives ſome wicked men a great portion in the good things of this life upon many accounts, yet the event is not good to them upon any account.

Firſt, God gives them a portion as they are his creatures, how ſhould they live, and ſubſiſt elſe? God maintains all that he hath made, he is the houſholder. Under that relation of creatures they have alwayes ſomewhat in the world, and under another relation they may have very much. For

Secondly, Some wicked men are in the relation of his ſervants. And we may call the good which they have in the world, their wages, or a reward for ſome good ſervice they have done in the world. The purpoſes of God are fulfilled, and his providences ſerved, even by wicked men, and ſome wicked men do him eminent ſervice. They who are evil, may do that which is good, for the matter, in the eyes of God. For though it be not poſſible to pleaſe God without faith (Heb. 11.7.) yet it is poſſible to ſerve him without faith; or though God be never pleaſed with the perſon doing a work without faith, yet he may be pleaſed with that work which is done without faith. A wicked man may do what God would have done, that pleaſeth him, and he throws him in ſomewhat as wages for his work; ſometimes, very great wages. Jehu, a wicked man, a man of a naughty heart, yet he did the work that was in Gods heart, in deſtroying Ahabs houſe. Now, ſaith God, take the Throne for four generations, a great reward, a whole Kingdom, and for four Generations to a wicked man (2 Kings 10.30.) God will not be behind-hand with any. They that have been inſtrumental for him, ſhall have ſo much as their work comes too; they who do it for a temporal reward (many will be very zealous for an outwardly real reformation, both in matters of Religion and civil adminiſtration, while not only their hearts are unchanged, but their lives unreformed, and all this they do to ſet themſelves up in a worldly intereſt; now, even theſe) ſhall have their peny, they ſhall not looſe their reward.

Thirdly, There is a kind of neceſſity that ſome wicked men ſhould riſe high, and be great, that they may be fitted to do the works which God hath appointed; as thoſe others (of whom I ſpake laſt) are raiſed high, to reward and pay them for the work which they have done. As Firſt, For the ſcourging of other wicked men. God ſuffers one wicked man to proſper to vex another. Sometimes he ſcourgeth a whole Nation, by one wicked man; therefore he muſt proſper much. Uſually there is a proportion between the work and the inſtrument. Great ſcourges are made of Great men.

Secondly, For the trying of his own people; if wicked men were not high, powerful, and proſperous, they could not perſecute the righteous. They who will live godly in Chriſt Jeſus, muſt ſuffer perſecution. And there are ſome kinds of perſecution which ungodly men (though they never want will, yet) cannot act till they have gotten power. Weak ones can mock and ſcoff; but they who kill and deſtroy muſt be ſtrong.

Fourthly, Wicked men proſper that they may have opportunity to ſhew what is in their hearts, how vile they are. Half the wickedneſs of man appears not, if his portion be alwayes ſhort in the world. Many wickedneſſes in the heart of man cannot diſcover themſelves and appear above-board, till they themſelves are above and aloft in the world. For as afflictions upon the people of God, diſcover many corruptions in them which they did not think of, as murmuring, unbelief, and diſcontent, &c. They thought in their proſperity, that they could have born ſuch a croſs patiently, and quietly, and have taken it well at Gods hands; but when it comes upon them, they find corruptions ſtir, which till then ſtirred not. Therefore (Deut. 8.2.) God cauſed the people of Iſrael to wander forty years in the wilderneſs, to prove and try what was in their hearts. God knew, intuitively, what was in their hearts, but they did not know it, they did not conceive that there was ſo much vanity, and unbelief there, till God led them about and about to try them. So, wicked men, though their corruptions flow out faſt enough, yet if they ſhould be alwayes kept to hard meat and want, their luſts would be ſtifled and ſtarved, though not at all mortified. As the wit and parts of ſome are kept down by their poverty, ſo alſo are the luſts and wickedneſſes of many. But worldly affluence and warmth draw out corruption, as well as affliction doth: riches and power let the luſts and wickedneſſes of men looſe as well as their wits and learning. Hazael was a cruel man, but he did not believe that there was ſo much cruelty in his heart as indeed there was (2 King. 8.13.) When the Prophet told him what he would do; Doeſt thou think I am a dog (ſaith he) that I ſhould do ſuch things as theſe? The Prophet replied; The Lord hath ſhewed me that thou ſhalt be King of Syria. As if he had ſaid, thou ſhalt have a great portion, and much power put into thy hands, and then the wickedneſs of thy heart will appear fully; thou doſt not know how nought thou art now, thy luſt lies cloſe in thy own ſpirit; But when thou art King of Syria, thou wilt have ſcope for thy cruelty, and then it will appear that I am a true Prophet in foretelling thee what bloody, what cruel work thou wilt make. It would never be known how bad ſome are, if they ſhould not enjoy much worldly good.

Fifthly, The Lord gives ſome wicked men a rich portion in temporals, to take off the loves and to dull the deſires of the godly to them. For when they ſee the beſt things of the world in their hands who are evil, they cannot but remember that God hath provided better things for them. And if God beſtow ſo much upon thoſe who rebel againſt him, and are his enemies, what hath God in ſtore for them who love him, and are loved of him?

Sixthly, Hereby God commends his own patience, long-ſufferance, and goodneſs. Theſe Attributes are highly honoured and advanced by it. We alſo by this pattern are inſtructed to patience, long-ſufferance and goodneſs towards others, though evil men and our enemies. Chriſt preſſeth love to enemies, by the example of God himſelf, (Matth. 5.45.) He makes his Sun to ſhine upon the good, and upon the evil, and the rain to fall upon the juſt and unjuſt. The Lord gives wicked men a portion here for our inſtruction; That we might learn to do good to our enemies; to feed them when they hunger, and when they thirſt, to give them drink.

Seventhly, The good which evil men receive from God, leaves them without excuſe, this ſtops their mouthes for ever; What can they ſay, when God pours out the vials of his wrath upon them who kickt againſt him, while he fed them and fill'd their veſſels with abundance of outward bleſſings. As they who deſpiſe this riches of his goodneſs treaſure up to themſelves wrath againſt the day of wrath; ſo, they ſhall have nothing to plead for themſelves in the day of wrath. Theſe are ſome of thoſe accounts upon which wicked men, to whom God hath appointed miſery as their portion, do yet at preſent receive a portion of outward proſperity.

But though upon theſe, and other conſiderations which might be added, the Lord puts exceptions to this general rule, That miſery is the portion of a wicked man; yet the truth ſtands firm. For in that ſome wicked men are priviledged from it, it is a confirmation that all are lyable to it; Exceptions ratifie the rule: that ſome wicked men are exempted and excuſed from trouble, ſhews that is the proper portion of them all.

Again, I anſwer, Firſt, This is fulfilled in the letter upon very many wicked men: look upon their lives, their portion is miſery; though they ſcrape and heap much together, though they bud and bloſſom, yet their encreaſe goes into captivity, and their goods flow away: Their pompe is brought down, and their beauty is ſtained. 'Tis rare to find a wicked man flouriſhing to the end of his dayes, or his hoary head going to the grave in peace. As David obſerved of the Godly (Pſal. 37.25.) I have been young and now am old, yet have I not ſeen the righteous forſaken, nor his ſeed begging bread. So they who have been young and now are old, have often ſeen the wicked who proſpered a while, yet at laſt forſaken, and their ſeed begging bread.

Secondly, The Propoſition ſtands firm upon this ground; becauſe miſery is the deſert of wicked men; 'tis their heritage as they are children of diſobedience, and their wages as they are workers of iniquity. Wrath is the portion appointed for them, though they have it not preſently in their hands. We ſay of a child who is heir to a great eſtate, ſuch lands are his heritage, his portion, though he hath nothing in poſſeſſion, but the bread he eats, and the cloathes which he puts on. We ſay of a condemned maleſactor, death is his portion, becauſe he deſerves death, and the ſentence is gone out againſt him, though he be reprieved for many years after.

Thirdly, Though ſome wicked men are not actually in a miſerable outward condition, yet they are ſubject to it every moment. The cloud hangs over them, and who can tell how ſoon it may break? The word is out, the decree is paſt, and who can tell how ſoon God may ſeal the Writ for execution, or command the judgment written to take hold of them, or be done upon them. They have no fence for it, no plea, nothing to keep it off, or avoid it with. He that may juſtly expect evil at any time, is at no time free from it.

Fourthly, The very preſent proſperity of wicked men is a puniſhment to them; their Table is their ſnare, and that which (according to the nature and uſe of it) ſhould have been for their welfare, becomes (as the Pſalmiſt ſpeaks, Pſal. 69. 22.) a trap. Their good is evil to them, and it had been better for them if they had never had ſo much good. For as it had been better for a man not to have known the way of righteouſneſs, then after he hath known it to turn from the holy commandment delivered to him, (2 Pet. 2. 21.) ſo it had been better for a man not to have enjoyed worldly happineſs, then while he hath it, to be found out of the way of the holy commandment; ſeeing as the knowledge of truth, ſo the fruition of good, encreaſe the ſin, and ſo the miſery of thoſe who abuſe and walk unworthy of them. And becauſe evil men alwayes abuſe the good which they enjoy, therefore the enjoyment of good is worſe to them then the ſuffering of evil. And as God chaſtens and ſmites his own children in love, ſo he forbears to ſmite the wicked in anger; not to be puniſhed is their puniſhment. The ſoareſt ſtroak which revolting Iſrael felt, was expreſſed in theſe words, Why ſhould ye be ſtriken any more? (Iſa. 1. 5.) When wicked men proſper, it is a fore-runner of their perdition. So that if they have not miſery their portion in kind or in the letter at all times, yet they have it in truth and reality. There is a threefold evil ſpringing to a wicked man out of his preſent proſperity.

Firſt, Proſperity hardens his heart; that's a ſpiritual judgment in temporal enjoyments.

Secondly, Proſperity is but fuel to his luſts, it draws out and multiplies the acts of ſin. Now that which makes the heap of ſin greater, makes the heap of wrath greater. Our ſuffering of evil is not only deſerved, but proportioned by our doing of evil.

Thirdly, Preſent proſperity hath this evil conſequent in it to him that is and continues evil, that, evil, when it comes it is the more grievous to him, by how much he hath been the more a ſtranger to and unacquainted with it. When God actually powers miſery in kind upon a wicked man, who hath had a long time of worldly contentments, this makes him more miſerable, becauſe he was in a ſeeming ſtate of happineſs. It will increaſe his ſorrow, when God comes to reckon with him (as poſſibly he will, in this life, and 'tis certain he will in the life to come) that he hath had a few years of joy. His ſhort joyes will lengthen his ſorrows, and he will be for ever the more ſorrowful, becauſe he hath had theſe taſtes and glaunces of joy. For as the afflictions of a godly man are a bleſſing to him many wayes, and eſpecially this way; becauſe as the Apoſtle ſpeaks, (2 Cor. 4. 17.) Our light afflictions that are but for a moment, work for us (not by way of merit, but of preparation) a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory: ſo we may ſay, the preſent proſperity of a wicked man is his curſe, becauſe it works for him, a far more exceeding and eternal weight of miſery.

Laſtly, (to ſhut up the point) As we may ſay of believers, that outward proſperity is their portion, and the heritage appointed to them by God, becauſe they alwayes ſtand under thoſe promiſes of outward proſperity (Matth. 6. 33.) Seek ye firſt the Kingdom of God, and the righteouſneſs thereof, and all other things ſhall be miniſtred unto you. (1 Tim. 4. 8.) Godlineſs is profitable for all things, having the promiſes of this life, and of that which is to come. Upon theſe and the like Scripture-promiſes (I ſay) we may conclude that proſperity in this life is the portion of every godly man (becauſe they are the heirs of thoſe promiſes which concern the good things of this life, as well as of thoſe which concern eternal life) though it pleaſe God in his wiſdom to exerciſe them under outward wants, and to keep them in heavineſs through manifold temptations all their dayes. So it is a truth, that in this life miſery is the portion of wicked men, becauſe they alwayes ſtand under all the threatnings which are written in the book of God. Though it pleaſeth God for the reaſons before remembred, or for any other reaſon lockt up in his own boſom, to give them a rich portion in outward bleſſings, and to cauſe their cup to overflow with the fading dying comforts of this preſent life.

Thus far Zophar hath ſpoken, and he ſpeaks no more. Job gives anſwer in the next Chapter, with which poſſibly he was ſatisfied, and ſo joyned in opinion with him; or gravell'd, and ſo had no more to ſay againſt him; or ſo deeply offended, that he either would not, or ſaw it bootleſs to ſay any more.

CHAP. XXI. Verſ. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6.

But Job anſwered, and ſaid,

Hear diligently my ſpeech, and let this be your conſolation.

Suffer me that I may ſpeak; and after that I have ſpoken, mock on.

As for me, is my complaint to man? and if it were ſo, why ſhould not my ſpirit be troubled?

Mark me, and be aſtonied, and lay your hand upon your mouth.

Even when I remember, I am afraid, and trembling taketh hold on my fleſh.

JOB having received this ſecond charge from his three friends; all three concluding, as in the firſt, that they are the worſt of men, whoſe ſufferings are worſt. Having (I ſay) heard out his friends in their ſecond charge, he now deſires that they would hear him, verſ. 1. But Job anſwered, and ſaid,

Verſ. 2. Hear diligently my ſpeech.

In which ſpeech, Job anſwers their Arguments, and refutes them more clearly and convincingly, then he had done in his former anſwers; affirming contrary to what Zophar had laſt, and his other friends before him, aſſerted, That the beſt men are not priviledged from the ſoareſt evils, and that the vileſt are ſometimes not viſited with any evil.

The ſcope and ſum of his whole diſcourſe may be drawn out into theſe three propoſitions.

Firſt, That all wicked men are not alwayes afflicted with great evils in this life.

Secondly, That only wicked men are not afflicted with evils in this life.

Thirdly, That many wicked men enjoy much good in this life, and have all things to their hearts content, even unto their laſt breath; and not only ſo, but their children inherit and ſucceed them in the poſſeſſion of thoſe outward bleſſings which themſelves enjoyed. Which three aſſertions being confirm'd, the whole building of Zophar, and of his two other friends, muſt needs ſhake and fall to the ground.

And as in theſe three aſſertions, we have the ſum of Job's argumentative part: ſo the whole Chapter may be conſidered in three parts.

Firſt, An Exordium, or Preface.

Secondly, A refutation of their arguments, or his anſwer to their propoſals.

Thirdly, The concluſion, or pre-oration of the whole.

The Exordium or Preface is contained in the ſix former verſes of the Chapter.

His anſwer to their arguments extends from verſ. 27. incluſively to the end of verſ. 33.

The concluſion is verſ. 34. How then comfort ye me, &c.

The context under preſent diſcuſſion, contains the Preface; Hear diligently my ſpeech, and let this be your conſolation. This Preface hath two things chiefly in it.

Firſt, It tends to the gaining of attention, to what Job had further to ſay.

Secondly, It carries in it a reprehenſion of what his friends had already done.

Firſt, It carries in it a deſire of attention to what he had to ſay; and that by a fourfold argument, or he moves for attention upon four grounds.

Firſt, Becauſe if they did hear him diligently, it would be matter of conſolation.

Secondly, He moves for it from the common duty of man, who ſhould not judge, much leſs condemn another, before he hath heard him; and this he layes down, verſ. 3. Suffer me that I may ſpeak, and after that I have ſpoken, mock on: As if he had ſaid, It is a duty which all men owe their brethren, to hear them ſpeak before they judge them, eſpecially before they mock them: therefore ſuffer me to ſpeak, and then mock on if you pleaſe.

The third argument, by which he craves attention, is from the principal object, whom his diſcourſe and complaint concerned, verſ. 4. As for me, is my complaint to man, &c. As if he had ſaid, I complain to more then man, I complain to God, and God hear's me, therefore ſurely ye ought; if God be intereſſed in what I have to ſay, ye ought not to take your ſelves diſingaged.

The fourth argument is from the greatneſs of his preſent ſorrows; great enough they were to work aſtoniſhment, therefore ſurely great enough to deſerve attention (verſ. 5.) Mark me, and be aſtoniſhed, and lay your hands upon your mouth. And (verſ. 6.) he tells them, that the very remembrance of them did terrifie him, and that his fleſh did tremble, while he thought of the diſpenſations of God to him; therefore the matter was not light, or unworthy of a hearing.

Further, As in the Preface he challengeth attention to what he had to ſay, upon theſe four grounds, ſo likewiſe he cloſely reprehends what his friends had already done, and that in three things.

Firſt, He reprehends them for not having given him a due liberty of ſpeech (verſ. 3.) Suffer me that I may ſpeak; as if he had ſaid, Ye have cut me off heretofore, and interrupted me, now ſuffer me to ſpeak. While he begs this at their hands, he intimates, that as yet he had been denied it, or that it had not been granted him with ſuch freedom as his caſe and ſtate called for.

Secondly, He reprehends them as having mocked him when he ſpake, or as having ſlighted him when he anſwered; that is implied in the cloſe of verſ. 3. After that I have ſpoken, mock on. While he ſaith, mock on; he chargeth them that they had mocked already: no man can proceed or continue to do that he had not done before. To ſay, mock on, is to reprove them for mocking.

Thirdly, He reproves or reprehends them, as not having been duly affected, nor touched with what had touched him, with what he had both ſpoken, and felt: they were inſenſible of his condition, and regardleſs of his diſcourſe. He implieth that (verſ. 5.) when he ſaith, Mark me, and be aſtoniſhed; as if he had ſaid, Ye would have been grieved, yea, even aſtoniſhed with my condition, had ye markt me, but to this day ye are not; therefore mark me, and be aſtoniſhed. You ſhould have trembled in ſilence to hear how God hath dealt with me, whereas you have rather inſulted over me; Mark me, and be aſtoniſhed, lay your hand upon your mouth. Thus I have opened the ſcope, and parts of the whole Chapter; as alſo the tendency of theſe ſix verſes, which I have laid together as making up the Preface of his anſwer. Wherein we may note, Firſt, His expectation of attention upon four grounds, and their reprehenſion upon three.

Hear diligently my ſpeech, and let this be your conſolation.

Thus he begins, this is his firſt Argument to move attention, and it may be framed thus;

Ye ought to hear him, whom your very hearing will be a conſolation to:

But if ye give me a diligent hearing, it will be a conſolation to me.

Therefore ye ought to hear me diligently. There are two things upon which this Argument may be enforced.

Firſt, From the common duty of that relation in which they ſtood to him; they told him they were his friends; now the common duty of a friend, coming to his friend in trouble, is, to comfort and counſel him. Ye ſay ye are my friends: now if your diligent attention will be my conſolation, ye ought to hear me, conſidering your relation, and that ye bear your ſelves in profeſſion as my friends.

Secondly, There is another argument which lies cloſely preſt in this, from the deſign of their coming to him; your relation as friends obligeth you to comfort me. But do ye not remember your own errand to me? Do ye not know why ye came this long journey to viſit me? Did ye not ſet this down in your propoſals (Chap. 2. 11.) That ye would come to mourn with me, and to comfort me? Now for as much as your ſpecial aim was to comfort me, and ſeeing I ſhall take it as a ſpecial comfort to be heard, ye ought to give me the hearing, for that reacheth your own deſign, and anſwers your intendment in viſiting me.

Hear diligently my ſpeech.] The Original ſpeaks double, hearing hear, a frequent Hebraiſm. The Septuagint render it, Hear ye, hear ye; ſo that here is Job's O yes, O yes, as a Cryer ſpeaks when he calls for ſilence and attention in a Court; Hear ye, hear ye; hearken, hearken. And we render it well to the ſence of that Hebraiſm, hear diligently. To hear, and hear, or hearing to hear, is diligent hearing. The doubling of that word hath theſe two things in it.

Ακουσατε ακουσατε. Sept. Non leviter ſed ſolicitè audite & date operam ſedulam ut intelligiatis. Merc.

Firſt, It hath an excitation of them to attend his ſpeech.

Secondly, It ſhews the confidence of his own ſpirit about what he was to ſpeak. I ſpeak that which I care not if it be twice heard, yea, a hundred times heard. Some ſpeak ſo, that they are content if they have but half a hearing; they who ſpeak ſlightly, care not to be heard ſlightly; but they that ſpeak confidently and weightily, care not if they be heard over and over. Hearing hear, or diligently hear, carries as a motive to hear, ſo the boldneſs and aſſurance of his ſpirit about what he was to ſpeak, he cared not who heard him, or how oft it was heard.

Again, When Job ſaith, Hearing hear, or hear diligently, he ſeemeth to require another manner of hearing then he had before: When he openly calls upon them to hear diligently, he ſecretly taxeth them for their indiligence in hearing; as if he had ſaid, Ye heard me before, but it was as if ye did not hear; let me have a hearing indeed, now hear diligently. Which may more diſtinctly be conceived in theſe two things.

Firſt, Hear me with more calmneſs and quietneſs, then as yet ye have done. Meekneſs is more then one thing neceſſary, 'tis almoſt The one thing neceſſary toward diligent hearing. If the ſpirit be wild, if a mans mind be unfixed and uncompoſed, he will never hear diligently. Hear diligently, be not moved with paſſion or prejudice againſt the ſpeaker, be not moved with impertinent thoughts while I am ſpeaking: Make it your work, to hear what I have now to ſay.

Secondly, It hath this in it alſo, hear with a patient ſpirit. In ſome ſence a patient hearer is the ſame with a quiet hearer, but in a peculiar ſence, a patient hearer is he who not only hears himſelf reproved, or told of his faults, and takes it well; but a patient hearer is he that will hear all out, or continues hearing to the length or end of what is ſaid. A patient hearer is content the ſpeaker ſhould make out his matter, he doth not ſnap him off with replies, before he hath fully opened and unburdened his mind. Such patient hearing is diligent hearing. Job now calls his friends to the higheſt exerciſe of the duty of hearing; he would not have them hear him any more with troubled ſpirits, and impatient ears, but deſires they would ſet themſelves to it, and make a buſineſs of it. And there is ſomewhat of argument for this in the word ſpeech; Hear diligently my ſpeech. The Hebrew ſignifies, Firſt, A plain ſpeech; as if he had ſaid, I do not intend to flouriſh it over, and catch your ears with ſtudied oratory, or eloquence: I will ſpeak plainly, therefore hear me.

Secondly, It notes allſo conciſeneſs of ſpeech; as if he had ſaid, Do not think, becauſe I call you to hear me diligently, that I intend to ſpeak tediouſly: I have but a word or two to ſay, I purpoſe to contract my ſelf, and to ſpeak much in a little. Do not fear that I will burden and tire you out in hearing me, I intend brevity: Therefore hear diligently my ſpeech.

Hence obſerve, Firſt, It is no eaſie work to hear well.

'Tis no hard matter to hear, but 'tis hard to hear well: we may hear eaſily, but it put's a man to it to hear diligently. Hearing may be conſidered as a threefold work.

Verbum ait, quod brevitatem pro mittendo audientiam exambiret.

Firſt, As a natural work, and ſo it is an eaſie thing to hear; no man ſtudies, nor is any man taught to hear; we do it naturally and freely. Thus we uſe to deſcribe the ſpiritual actings of believers, when we ſay, they perform duties naturally; that is, they do them with a kind of eaſe, even as the ear hears, or the eye ſees; the natural work of the eye is an eaſie work, and ſo is the natural work of the ear, there's no labour in it.

Secondly, We may conſider hearing as it is a moral work; or as it tends to the receiving of inſtruction in any point of knowledge or learning; if a man do but receive inſtruction about a worldly buſineſs or truſt, it requires ſome pains, to take his errand right: and hence when we ſpeak to a ſervant to do ſuch a thing, and we perceive he hears but ſlightly, we uſe to ſay, You are gone without your errand; there's need of diligent hearing to receive any direction in civil matters, or inſtruction about morals.

Thirdly, Hearing may be conſidered as a ſpiritual work; and ſo it is hardeſt of all, and requires double diligence, hear diligently, hearing hear. Let every word that is ſpoken once, be twice heard. Spiritual hearing hath a fourfold work in it.

Firſt, A work of the ear to take in the impreſſion of words.

Secondly, It hath a work of the underſtanding, which (as it were) garbleth the words which are ſpoken, conſiders, and makes choice of them, trying their truth, their goodneſs, their fitneſs, and their profitableneſs.

Thirdly, There is a work of the affections in ſpiritual hearing; a work of love, a work of joy and delight; many receive the truth, who do not receive the love of it, nor rejoyce in it. Hearing is a work of the internal powers as well as of the external organs, and this requires diligence.

Fourthly, In ſpiritual hearing, there is a work of our graces: there may be a work of the underſtanding, and a work of the affections, without a work of grace. The ſtony ground underſtood the Word, and received it with joy; the underſtanding acted, and the affections acted, but the work went no further. In ſpiritual hearing, there is a work of our graces; Firſt, A work of faith to believe what is ſpoken. Secondly, A work of meekneſs to ſubmit to what is ſpoken. Thirdly, A work of new obedience to practice and follow what is ſpoken. The work of all theſe graces, attendeth ſpiritual hearing. Here is diligence, and we have not heard double, or hearing heard, till we have had this fourfold work in hearing the Word of God, though ſpoken by man: Hear diligently my ſpeech.

Secondly obſerve, Double, or diligent hearing is our duty in all weighty matters.

That which is ſinful and vain, ſhould not be heard at all; 'tis our duty to ſtop the ear from hearing vanity; ordinary matters, the affairs of the world, the buſineſſes, and concernments of our callings, call only for ſingle hearing; ordinary attention will ſerve the turn for ordinary things. But we cannot be too diligent (we are ſeldom, if at all, diligent enough) in hearing the Word of eternal life. Some words are loaded with the concernments of eternity; there is a ſound, yea a ſavour in them of life, or death, of heaven, or hell, of ſalvation or damnation for ever. Words of this worth, of theſe concernments, call for double hearing: Diligent hearing is more then due in matters thus weighty; we have reaſon to hear that Word judiciouſly, by which we muſt be judged; to hear as for our lives, when we are hearing the Word of life. The ſpeaker hath then reaſon to cry aloud, hear diligently my ſpeech; and the hearer hath reaſon to anſwer, I will attend with diligence.

Thirdly, Job had before (and he doth it here again) called his friends to diligent hearing. I do not find in all his diſcourſe that he called upon them to anſwer, or provoked them to ſpeak, but ſtill to hear, he is frequent upon that; he thought them forward enough with their tongues, but too ſlow with their ears.

Hence note, Man is more ready to ſpeak, yea to judge and cenſure others, then he is to hear.

Job's friends came quick upon him with their cenſures and replies, they were ready with their tongues to cenſure, and reprove him; but he ſuppoſed them dull of hearing, or ſlight in weighing what they heard. The Apoſtles exhortation intimates that moſt men are readier to ſpeak then to hear; or that they who are readieſt to ſpeak, are often indiligent in hearing (Jam. 1. 19.) My beloved brethren, let every man be ſwift to hear, ſlow to ſpeak, ſlow to wrath; he puts a bridle upon the tongue, but (as it were) ſpurs the ear, Be ſwift to hear.

I have from other paſſages (Chap. 11. 2. & 18. 2.) noted this before, and therefore I only touch it. Hear diligently my ſpeech,

And let this be your conſolation.

Let this, what's that? Your attention to me; let that be your Conſolation. The word which we render Conſolation, ſignifies three things in the Verb.

נחם 1 Doluit ſuis vel alterius rebus. 2 Pœnituit vel ſententiam mutavit. 3 Per antiphraſin dolere deſiit conſolationē invenit.

Firſt, To grieve, or to be ſorrowful, whether upon our own account, or upon the account of others: to be ſorrowful becauſe of our own ſins or ſufferings, which is the ſorrow of paſſion; or to be ſorrowful, becauſe of the ſins and ſufferings of others, which is the ſorrow of compaſſion; both are comprehended in this word.

Secondly, It ſignifies to Repent, ſo it is applied to God himſelf (Gen. 6. 6.) It repented the Lord that he had made man upon the earth. As alſo (1 Sam. 15. 11.) The Lord repented that he had made Saul King. Some take this ſignification of the word here, and render the Text thus, Hear diligently my words, and repent, or it will be repentance to you; that is, you who have ſtood ſo ſtifly all this while in your own opinion, and have maintained thoſe poſitions which are ſo unſutable to the common diſpenſations of God; if you would but hear me out, and hear me diligently, you would repent of this your opinion, and change your minds. That rendering is uſeful, there is only this againſt it, that howſoever the Verb ſignifieth to repent, yet Grammarians tell us that the Noun is never found to ſignifie repentance; and therefore I paſs it.

Thirdly, By a contrary kind of ſpeaking (which is very frequent in the Hebrew) as it ſignifies to grieve and repent, ſo to take comfort. And the reaſon why the ſame word notes both repentance and comfort, is, becauſe true repentance, wrought by godly ſorrow, is the way to and concludes in the trueſt conſolation: the neareſt way to peace is by humble confeſſion of, and converſion from our ſins. The word is uſed in this ſence (Gen. 24. ult.) Iſaac was comforted concerning his Mother. So (2 Sam. 13. 39.) The ſoul of King David longed to go forth unto Abſalom; that is, he extreamly deſired to ſee him again, and rather then not, even to fetch him home himſelf, or at leaſt (could he do it with a ſaving to his Honour and Juſtice) to meet him (upon his return) half way; for he was comforted concerning Ammon, ſeeing he was dead. Mourning could not recover him from the grave, why then ſhould he continue mourning? The Prophet uſeth the word of the Text, while he deſcribes that woful time wherein many ſhould be mourners, but there ſhould be no comforters, (Jer. 16. 7.) Neither ſhall men tear themſelves for them in mourning to comfort them for the dead; neither ſhall men give them the cup of conſolation to drink for their father, or for their mother; that is, none ſhall be ſo courteous or ſenſible of the ſorrows of others, as to uſe any means of comforting them, when they are in the ſaddeſt condition, even mourning for the death of father or mother. That expreſſion (note it by the way) The cup of conſolation, is an alluſion to an ancient cuſtom, when in great ſorrows ſome cordial or comfortable drink was given to mourners. Solomon intimates that uſage (Prov. 31. 6.) Give ſtrong drink to him that is ready to periſh, and wine to thoſe that be of heavy hearts; that is, give them a cup of conſolation, or a conſolatory cup. Job being in heavineſs and ſorrow, doth but deſire to be diligently heard, and this ſhould be to him, as if his friends in tendereſt compaſſion of his condition, had given him a cup of conſolation. As I ſhall now (paſſing from the ſignification and uſe of the word) further ſhew in opening the matter.

For here 'tis queſtioned, whoſe conſolation Job means it ſhould be, when he ſaith, Hear me, and let this be your conſolation.

Firſt, Some underſtand it thus, It ſhall be your conſolation; that is, it ſhall be a comfort to you: if ye will hear me ſpeak, my ſpeech ſhall be your conſolation, I ſhall ſpeak ſuch things, and in ſuch a manner, that ye ſhall have reaſon to ſay, it hath been good for ye to hear, or that ye have received benefit by what ye have heard. This is a fair ſence, and carrieth a general truth in it: to hear another ſpeak, may be our great conſolation: And not only to hear a doctrine of conſolation may be conſolatory, but to hear a doctrine of reproof. Sowre and bitter words often prove ſweet to the hearer. A doctrine ſteeped in vinegar, words of gall and wormwood, may be honey and ſugar (in their effects) to the ſoul. Any word of truth and ſoberneſs diligently heard, may turn to conſolation. As the ſweet words of flattery and falſhood being received are bitterneſs in the end, ſo the bittereſt words of ſobriety and truth being received, are ſweetneſs in the end. Paul gives that charge to Titus concerning the Cretians (Tit. 1. 13.) Rebuke them ſharply, that they may be ſound in the faith. Cutting words have done great cures. Many a diſeaſed feſtred ſoul hath been made ſound, both in faith and manners, by ſevereſt reprehenſions. Thus Job might ſay to his friends, Hear diligently my ſpeech, and though I ſhould ſpeak nothing but rebukes, yet make uſe of it; Let that be your conſolation.

Talia taliq; modo loquuturus ſum ut maximā ex meis verbis relaturi eſtis conſolationem. Bold.

But ſecondly, and more generally, 'tis conceived that Job intends here his own conſolation, or conſolation to himſelf, Hear diligently my ſpeech, and let this be your conſolation; that is, let this be inſtead of thoſe conſolations which you as friends, ſhould adminiſter to me, and which I have long waited to receive from you: As if he had ſaid, You came purpoſely to comfort me, but I find very little comfort by your coming; all that you have ſaid to me doth not comfort me, now therefore I deſire you to hear what I have to ſay to you, and I will take that for the comfort which you intended me: hear me ſpeak, and that ſhall go for the conſolation which you promiſed, and I expected at your coming. Job puts the word in the plural number, he ſaith not, this ſhall be your conſolation, or I will take this in part of payment for the conſolation you promiſed me: but, as if this were the whole ſum or the full payment, he expreſſes it in the plural number, This ſhall be your conſolations. I will give you an acquittance and diſcharge for all the conſolations you owe me, if I may now at laſt have a more reſpectful and friendly hearing. Hear diligently my ſpeech, and this ſhall be your conſolations.

Si me patienter audieritis, id mihi veſtrarum conſolationum loco erit. Merc.

> Hence note, Firſt, 'Tis a comfort to any man, eſpecially to a man in affliction, to be diligently and patiently heard.

The afflicted ſhould hear words of comfort, and 'tis a comfort to the afflicted when their words are heard.

Firſt, When their words of petition, or their prayer-ſpeech is heard by God, that's conſolation indeed. And 'tis no ſmall comfort, when their prayer-ſpeech or petitions are heard by man. If a poor diſtreſſed creature puts up his petition to a man in power, and can but get it received, and heard, he rejoyceth; my petition is heard (ſaith he) ſomewhat will be done upon it.

Secondly, The afflicted take comfort when their counſel and advice, when their opinion in any caſe, or their pleadings in their own, are heard. As it is a multitude of conſolations to the afflicted when God hears them (all conſolations are wrapped up in that one) ſo many and very great conſolations, yea poſſibly all the conſolations which a man deſireth of man, may be found in this, if he will but hear what he hath to ſay for himſelf. When the afflicted ſpeak, they give vent to their ſorrows, and when they are heard, 'tis an income of joy: Though to be heard, be not comfort formally, or directly, yet effectively and virtually there is much comfort in it; yea, God ſpeaks as if he were comforted when he is but heard, or as if we comforted him when we hear him. God beſeecheth us, and ſpeaks intreaties to us, that his counſels and commands may be heard (Pſal. 81. 13.) O that my people had hearkned unto me. The Lord tells them indeed it would have proved their conſolation (verſ. 14.) I ſhould ſoon have ſubdued their enemies, and turned my hand againſt their adverſaries. Yet while he ſpeaks ſo pathetically, he ſeems to include his own conſolation in it as well as theirs. O that my people had hearkned unto me! It would have been good for them, and it would have given high content to my ſelf. And on the contrary we find the Lord ſpeaking of it as a trouble, and a burthen to him, yea as the breaking of his heart when his people ſtop their ears, and will not hear him. I am broken (ſaith the Lord) with their whoriſh heart which hath departed from me, and with their eyes which go a whoring after their Idols (Ezek. 6. 19.) Now, when or how doth the heart depart from God? Is it not by refuſing to hear his voice, or the voice of thoſe who ſpeak in his Name. This is a grief to God whoſe the Word is, and a grief to thoſe who are the Meſſengers of his Word. The faithful Miniſters of Jeſus Chriſt can ſay this from their ſouls to thoſe that hear them, Hear our ſpeech diligently, and this ſhall be your conſolation. This ſhall comfort us more then all the good things you can beſtow on us; do but receive this gift, the truth, the Word of truth ſpoken to you, and this ſhall comfort us more then all that you can give. As all the ſorrows and miſeries which the wicked feel, and ſhall be compaſſed about with for ever, ariſe from this, becauſe they have not diligently heard that which hath been ſpoken; ſo, much ſorrow ariſeth to many who are godly, becauſe what they ſpeak is not diligently heard. How often do they ſay to ſtubborn children, to evil ſervants, to ſcandalous and looſe-walking friends, What joy would it be to our ſouls, if you would but attend and follow the counſel which we give you? We ſhould look upon this as a great mercy to us as well as to you. Why did Paul call the Philippians his joy and crown? (Phil. 4. 1.) Why ſaith he the ſame of the Theſſalonians, and more, Yea are our glory and joy? (1 Epiſt. 2. 19.) Was it upon any other account then this, becauſe they had received the Goſpel at his mouth and diligently heard his ſpeech? Paul received ſo much conſolation and joy when his ſpeech was heard, that he calls his hearers his joy, yea his joy and his crown; that is, his chief, his principal joy, or that which he rejoyced in more then he could in any earthly crown; it would not have pleaſed him ſo much to have been Emperor of the world, as to ſee ſouls brought off from the world, by his miniſtry, to the obedience of the Word. This made them his crown and joy, his glory and joy at preſent, and this gave him hope (in which ſence he calls the Theſſalonians his hope, verſ. 19.) that he ſhould rejoyce and glory on their behalf for ever, yea, that through Free Grace he ſhould receive the crown of righteouſneſs, as himſelf calls it (2 Tim. 4. 8.) or as the Apoſtle Peter ſpeaking to the ſame point, calls it (1 Pet. 5. 4.) A crown of glory that fadeth not away. How can it be but a conſolation to be heard, when ſuch are the conſequences of being heard in ſome things; and in what things ſoever we are heard, we judge it to be of ſome conſequence to us, if we get nothing but a hearing. We ſometimes hear a poor man thus beſpeaking the rich; Sir, if you will but hear me open my caſe to you, though you do nothing for me, I will take it as a favour, and thank you for it: though you give me no relief, yet if you do but lend me your ear a little, that will be an Almes to me. Thus poor Job, Hear diligently my ſpeech, and let this be your conſolation.

Verſ. 3. Suffer me that I may ſpeak, and after I have ſpoken, mock on.

We have here the ſecond argument whereby Job beſpeaks attention, Let me ſpeak, and after that mock on; do not judge before you hear. As approving, ſo mocking or diſapproving ſhould follow judgment, and judgment ſhould follow hearing; no man ſhould judge till he hath heard the matter, nor ſhould he either approve it till he hath judged it ſound and good; nor mock at it, till he hath judged it vain and worthleſs. Suffer me that I may ſpeak, and after I have ſpoken, mock on.

נשׂה Ad pondus referri ſolet. Indicat ſuā orationem oneroſam & gravem viſam fuiſſe amicis.

Suffer me that I may ſpeak.] The word which we render to ſuffer, ſignifies to bear a thing as a burthen, and ſo ſome underſtand it here. Bear me though I am burdenſom to you, and though my ſpeech be as a preſſure upon you. Some words are preſſing burthens, and require ſtrong ſhoulders to bear them. Some men are never ſo burdenſom as when they are ſpeaking, it were eaſier to bear any part of them then their tongues; vain words burden the wiſe, and the words of the wiſe are alwayes burdenſom to fools. The Sermons of the Prophets are called burthens; The burthen of Babylon; The burthen of Moab; The burthen of Judah, was the word which the Prophet ſpake concerning Babylon, &c. Theſe Propheſies were called burdens, becauſe they foreſhewed the heavy judgments of God, which ſhould fall upon thoſe places. And not only is that word burdenſom, which carrieth wrath and judgment in it; but that alſo is burdenſom to many, which carrieth any thing of holineſs or truth in it. And becauſe no man is very willing to bear a burthen, therefore Job begs, Suffer me to ſpeak; that is, bear with me that I may ſpeak, or bear me while I am ſpeaking.

Further, the words imply that as it was a burden to Job's friends to hear him ſpeak, ſo likewiſe to Job, that he was not ſuffered to ſpeak, Suffer me to ſpeak; his ſpirit was troubled becauſe he had not freedom to ſpeak, Give me leave, let me have a fair hearing; ſuch ſpeeches proceed from a troubled ſpirit, from a ſpirit troubled with ſome ſtop, or meeting with ſome impediment in doing that which it hath a great mind to do.

Hence note, Firſt, Interruptions are troubleſom.

When a man cannot be permitted to ſpeak his mind, he is moved to ſpeak his paſſion. 'Tis as grievous to be hindred in doing ſome things, as to be enjoyned to do ſome others.

Secondly note, Words which do not pleaſe our ſpirits, nor hit our opinions, are very burthenſom.

Job ſpake the apprehenſion of his friends about himſelf. He ſuppoſed his ſpeech would be burdenſom to his friends, becauſe he knew it would croſs their judgment. Men hear that pleaſantly which ſuits their humour, and complies with their opinions or corruptions. They can hear ſuch diſcourſes all day long with delight; but if that be ſpoken which oppoſeth their judgment, or their intereſt, they are weary to bear it: A few ſuch words are as heavy as a mountain of lead. The falſe Prophet cenſured the words of Amos ſo heavy, that they were enough to ſink the earth out of its place; The land is not able to bear all his words (Amos 7. 10, 11.) for thus Amos ſaith, Jeroboam ſhall die by the ſword, and Iſrael ſhall ſurely be led away captive out of their own land. This was a burdenſom word indeed, and ſo is every unpleaſing word. The Apoſtle ſpeaks this ſence (2 Cor. 11. 1.) Would to God you could bear with me a little in my folly, and indeed bear with me. Folly is alwayes burdenſom, and a fool is uſually moſt burthenſom when he ſpeaks. Solomon ſaith (Prov. 27. 3.) that the wrath of a fool is heavier then a ſtone, or then the ſand. His wrath is extream heavy, and his breath is not much lighter; he is not to be born when he is angry, and 'tis hard enough to bear him if he do but utter a word; and if nothing elſe be burdenſom in his ſpeech, yet the lightneſs of it is. Therefore Paul, as Job in the Text, ſpeaks according to the opinion or ſence that ſome, at leaſt, among the Corinthians had of him, You judge me but a babler, or that I do but diſcover my own folly when I ſpeak; and I know that cannot but be burthenſom to wiſe men, yet I would to God you would bear with me in my folly; if you call it folly, bear it a while, though it be a troubleſom burden. For (as he grows further upon them in that Chapter verſ. 19.) Ye ſuffer fools gladly, ſeeing ye are wiſe; therefore for once ſuffer me too. 'Tis a ſuffering to hear fools ſpeak, yet you ſometimes ſuffer this, knowing that your ſelves are wiſe, and able to judge what is ſpoken, Ye ſuffer fools gladly; ſuffer me patiently while I do that which may incur a ſuſpition of folly, commend my ſelf. For a man to commend himſelf, though truly, hath in it a ſavour of vain-glory, and that is folly. Therefore Paul with a rhetorical inſinuation begs their pardon, and their patience, while he doth that for their benefit, and the vindication of his Apoſtleſhip, which had a ſhew of vanity in it. Now as all fooliſh ſpeaking is grievous to the wiſe, ſo alſo may that which is wiſely ſpoken, if it croſs the grain of their ſpirits, as was toucht before. Therefore ſaith Job, Suffer me that I may ſpeak.

Thirdly, Job might thus crave their patience, becauſe he had been taxed by his friends with too much ſpeaking; Should not the multitude of words be anſwered? (ſaid Zophar, Chap. 11. 1.) Should a wiſe man utter vain knowlidge, and fill his belly with the Eaſt-wind? ſaid Eliphaz, Chap. 15. 2. As if they had both ſaid, This man will never have done, he talkes everlaſtingly. Now Job as to this alſo anſwers their ſence of him; for as they diſtaſted what he ſpake, ſo, as they thought, he ſpake too much; therefore he now adds, Be it that I have ſpoken too much, yet give me leave to ſpeak a little more, Suffer me to ſpeak, I have yet ſomewhat to ſay. From this ſuppoſition, Obſerve, That a man of many words is very burthenſom.

This hath been noted from other paſſages, whither I refer the Reader; talkativeneſs hath been diſtaſtful in all times: One of the Ancients in his Character of much ſpeaking, puts this Odium and ſcoff upon it; If a man (ſaith he) would avoid an Ague, or a fit of a Fever, let him keep out of the company of men given to talk. It is enough to make a man ſick, or to turn his ſtomach to hear ſome ſpeak; and 'tis not eaſie to hear any man ſpeak very much; ſome knowing this, run into a further error, burdening their hearers with many words to excuſe their many words; and (which makes the matter worſe) make long Apologies for their long and much ſpeaking. Job ſeems to make an Apology for his, but 'tis a very ſhort one; Suffer me that I may ſpeak.

Id genus hominis fugiat oportet quiſquis febre carere voluit. Theoph. l. de Char. c. de Garuli.

And after I have ſpoken, mock on.] The Hebrew is in the ſingular, After I have ſpoken, mock thou on; and hence ſome conceive that Job applies himſelf, eſpecially to Zophar, having obſerved him, more then the reſt, contemptuous, and ſcornful, mock thou on Zophar; yet under the ſingular number, all may be comprehended, and what he ſpeaks to one he means of the whole three, mock on.

Rogat ut priuſquam habenas laxent ad ridendum, audiant quæ ſit dicturus; fore fortè quod conſiliū mutent, vel ſi non ſe non curaturum. Merc.

In ſaying ſo, Job doth not encourage them to mock, or counſel them to ſcorn him or his words; he had checkt and reproved them for mocking more then once before. But we may underſtand him,

Firſt, That he ſpeaks permiſſively, or by way of grant; Do but hear me, and then I give you leave to mock. Or when I have ſpoken again, if I do not ſpeak to purpoſe, if I do not anſwer your arguments, and offer that which may ſatisfie any reaſonable man, I am content to be laught at, mock on. As if he had ſaid, Before you give your ſelves full ſcope in mocking me, before you let your ſelves looſe to contempt, and ſcorn, let me adviſe you to hear me once more, and I deſire it for your own ſakes as much as for mine own, that it be not ſaid that you condemn me, much leſs, ſlight and mock me unheard: therefore hear me firſt, and then mock on; you will have time enough, and more occaſion, if I ſpeak beſides the point, or not home to it, to mock when I have done ſpeaking. From this firſt interpretation we may obſerve,

That, He who hath ſpoken his conſcience, and hath ſpoken it conſcientiouſly, is at a point (ſo far as concerns himſelf) how his ſpeech is entertained.

Poſtquam quod ſui muneris eſt præſtant ſancti doctores, ſi rideantur ab auditoribus, ſuſtinent patienter. Greg.

Let me ſpeak my mind, and then come on't what will. The Prophet Ezekiel received his Commiſſion in this ſtile, Thou ſhalt ſpeak to them, whether they will hear, or whether they will forbear (Ezek. 2. 7.) Do you your duty; if they hear it, well and good, if they forbear, yet you are accepted. He that faithfully delivers the truth and mind of God (as Job was about to do) whether his ſpeech be received or rejected, he is ſatisfied. If it be received he rejoyceth, and he is not diſcouraged if it be rejected: whether they conſent or diſſent, whether they return approbation or ſcorn, whether they imbrace or mock, as to himſelf the care is taken, though (as Jeremy ſpeaks, Chap. 13.) his eye ſhall weep in ſecret for the pride of thoſe who reject and mock, as alſo for the miſery that is coming upon them, except they repent. 'Tis ſinful, and ſo, dangerous enough when the Word of God is not received, much more when it is ſcorned and mocked; yet the faithful Miniſters and Servants of Jeſus Chriſt may take comfort in that diſpenſation, which the hearers receive with ſcorn; they have done their Maſters will, and are, as the Apoſtle ſpeaks (2 Cor. 2. 15.) unto God a ſweet ſavour of Chriſt, in them that periſh; in them that entertain the Word, and in them that mock at it.

Secondly note, Some are readier to mock thoſe who oppoſe them, then either to anſwer their arguments, or to recover them from their ſuppoſed errors.

Surely Job took notice of ſuch a ſpirit moving in his friends, elſe he had not ſuggeſted this unto them. A man of judgment and underſtanding falls upon the Arguments of his opponent with reaſon, not upon his perſon with ſpleen. A tender heart pities thoſe that are miſlead, and mourns over them whom he conceiveth in an error, he doth not mock or triumph over them. Yet 'tis often ſeen that when men of contrary perſwaſions ingage upon a diſpute, whether about matters of Providence (as Job and his friends did) or of Faith; they who judge themſelves victors, deride the weakneſs and hiſs at the miſtakes of their brethren; and they who are overcome and have nothing more to ſay, will yet wrangle and revile, rather then ſay nothing.

And thus 'tis not only in ſpeaking, but in writing; pens as well as tongues drop ſcorn, when they think they have their adverſaries at an under, or are not indeed able to deal with their adverſaries. We may ſay to ſuch (though they are, not only in their own conceits, but in common eſteem, as ſtrong as Oaks in judgment, and as tall Cedars in knowledge) as the Lord doth in the Prophet to Jeruſalem, becauſe of her ſpiritual adulterers (Ezek. 16. 30.) How weak are your hearts, ſeeing ye do all theſe things, the work of an imperious whoriſh woman. To mock and ſcorn any man upon ſuch terms as theſe, is below a man, yea below any humble-minded modeſt woman; How much then do they degrade themſelves, below man, below reaſon, and good manners, who fall to mocking the perſon, inſtead of anſwering his arguments, or who mock thoſe who may poſſibly fail either in arguing or anſwering? He is weak who indeed fails thus, but he is weaker who mocks thus.

Secondly, After I have ſpoken, mock on, carrieth in it the ſence of an ironical conceſſion; as if he had ſaid, Let me ſpeak out, and then mock if you can. I doubt not but I ſhall take you off from mocking, or I believe you will have little mind to mock by that time I have done with you. Hence the Septuagint render by a direct Negative, Let me ſpeak; and when I have ſpoken, you will not mock me. One of the Greek interpreters gives it in this Affirmative, When I have done my ſpeech you will be quiet; I ſhall make you as quiet as Lambs, you will give over mocking, by that time I give over ſpeaking.

Deinde non ridebitis me. Sept. Poſt ſermones meos quieſcetis, i. e. ceſſabitis a ludibriis & irriſione. Sym.

Hence obſerve, When truth is put home, it will put the wittieſt beſides their jeſting, and the proudeſt beſides their ſcorning.

Truth is ſtrong and will prevail. The wit of man is no match for the Word of God. Some have come purpoſely to mock at a Sermon, who before they have gone away have had little mind to mock; they who have come to laugh at the Preacher, or his Doctrine, have found it no laughing matter, they have been ſent weeping and crying home; they who have come to catch at the Word, rather then to hear it, the Word heard hath caught them; the Word hath arreſted and laid hold upon them with irreſiſtible, unanſwerable convictions, and ſo (which proves the nobleſt freedom) they and their wits have been led captive to the obedience of Chriſt. Auſtin, ſome where, confeſſeth of himſelf, that he came to hear Ambroſe (a man of an excellent ſpirit) rather to pick quarrels, then to receive inſtruction; but before he went away his heart was toucht, and then he had little leiſure and leſs deſire to play the critick with what was ſpoken. The word of God ſubdues the ſoul, it makes a man ſtoop, and take in his flag, it makes the ſcorner ſerious, and the lofty lowly. They who were moſt quarrelſom, have not had a word more to ſay againſt the Word, much leſs to ſcorn it.

Laſtly, Theſe words, After I have ſpoken, mock on, may very well bear the ſence of a dreadful threatning.

Hence obſerve, The greateſt threatning of evil againſt ſinners, is to bid them ſin, or go on in doing evil.

There are many terrible threatnings in the Word of God againſt thoſe who continue in ſin; but to be bid continue in ſin, is the moſt terrible threatning in all the Word of God. That ſeemingly favourable permiſſion or diſpenſation granted to wicked men, is a moſt fearful commination or threat againſt them (Rev. 22. 11.) He that is unjuſt, let him be unjuſt ſtill; and he that is filthy, let him be filthy ſtill; you that are mockers, mock on ſtill; and you that are deſpiſers, deſpiſe ſtill; to be given up to vile affections, and to be given up to wicked actions, is an argument of wrath given out to the utmoſt. And as it is unſpeakably ſad to be given up to do evil, ſo it is unſpeakably worſe to be given up to mock at that which is good. Let mockers fear and tremble, leaſt God give them up to a ſpirit of mocking. How ſhall they eſcape or be delivered from evil, who mock at that which is for their good? Now therefore be ye not mockers, leſt your bands be made ſtrong (Iſa. 28. 22.) 'Tis ſinful enough not to obey the Word, but it is the height of ſin to mock at it: They ſhall have ſtrong bands that obey not the Word, how ſtrong then ſhall theirs be that mock at it? The bands that are upon the moſt ſober ſinners (ſo we may call ſome ſinners comparatively to others) are ſtronger then they ſhall ever be able to break, but God will make bands for mockers ſevenfold ſtronger. Their danger is great, who walk in the counſel of the ungodly, theirs is greater who ſtand in the way of ſinners; but their caſe ſeems deſperate, paſt help or hope, paſt cure or recovery, who ſit down in the ſeat of the ſcornful.

VERS. 4, 5, 6.

As for me, is my complaint to man? and if it were ſo, why ſhould not my ſpirit be troubled?

Mark me, and be aſtonied, and lay your hand upon your mouth.

Even when I remember, I am afraid, and trembling taketh hold on my fleſh.

THe firſt ſix Verſes of this Chapter (as hath been ſhewed already) are a preface to the whole. In which, upon many preſſing conſiderations, Job beſpake his friends attention. Two of them were diſcovered in verſ. 2, 3. He comes now to a third in verſ. 4.

Verſ. 4. As for me, is my complaint to man? and if it were ſo, why ſhould not my ſpirit be troubled?

The word which we render Complaint, ſignifies either a complaint formed out in words, or a complaint onely wrought and retained in the heart; here we may underſtand it both wayes; Job was much in meditation, and he was much alſo in diſcourſe; he was anſwering his friends, and he enquired of them, Is my complaint, my open complaint, the bill of complaint which I bring in, is it to man? Job was both Plaintiff and Defendant; while he defended himſelf againſt man, he was forced to complain of men to God. But to whom was Job ſpeaking? Was he not before his friends? Had Job a Congregation of Angels to ſpeak to, or was he admitted immediate acceſs to God? Or why, ſaith he, Is my complaint to man? Some render the word, Le Adam, againſt man, or, of man; Is my complaint againſt man? As if he had ſaid, Had I no greater trouble to complain of then man is able to give me; though I might have, and upon that ground have juſt cauſe of complaining; yet I ſhould have leſs cauſe to complain: but the truth is, I have greater cauſe of grief then that, for the hand of God hath touched me, and the terrors of the Almighty encamp againſt me.

שיח Meditatio conqueſtio.

לאדם Contra hominem vel ad hominem? Numquid contra hominem diſputatio mea? Vulg.

Ad hominē, i. e. ſuper ulla re humana, de qua apud hominem conqueri poſſim, nihil malorū meorum illatū eſt humana induſtria ſed divina providentia res omnes moderante.

קצר Abbreviatus, decurtatus, denotat contriſtationem animi, quod afflictis ſpiratio fit brevior ob anguſtiā ſpiritus.

me. But rather as we, Is my complaint to man? Is he the object of my complaint? Or do I make my moan to him? Others interpret, to man, by, about, or concerning the things or dealings of men; as if he had ſaid, Do I complain of the wrongs received from men, or do I complain becauſe I receive no help from man, my wound is from the hand of God, and from him my help muſt alſo come. Is my complaint to man?

And if it were ſo, why ſhould not my ſpirit be troubled?

And if (it were) we ſupply thoſe words: The Original is only, And if; If it were ſo, why ſhould not my ſpirit, (my breath ſay ſome) be troubled? The words which we render to trouble, ſignifies to abbreviate or ſhorten. Why ſhould not my breath be ſhortned; and then the ſence is made up in this manner; Did I ſpeak to men only, why ſhould I not quickly make an end, and ſhorten my ſpeech, why ſhould I ſpend ſo much breath upon them? Others by the word ruarkh, underſtand the mind, or, the whole inward man; Why ſhould not my mind be troubled, or ſhortned? Shortning of the mind, or ſhortneſs of mind is applied in divers Scriptures to men under grief and trouble of mind, (Exod. 6. 9.) Moſes ſpake to the Children of Iſrael, but they hearkened not to Moſes, for the anguiſh of their ſpirit, or, for ſhortneſs of ſpirit. Again (Numb. 21. 4.) And they journeyed from mount Hor by the way of the Red Sea to compaſs the Land of Edom, and the ſoul or ſpirit of the people was much diſcouraged (we put in the margine, ſhortned) becauſe of the way: Either becauſe of the troubleſomneſs and danger of the way, or becauſe of the length of the way, their ſpirit was diſcouraged; there was a Lion (danger) in the way: or, the way was long, and this ſhortned their ſpirits, that is, they thought they ſhould never get thorough that vaſt wilderneſs. The ſoul of the people was diſcouraged or ſhortned, becauſe of the way.

We find this Negatively expreſſed concerning the ſpirit of God (Mic. 2. 6, 7.) while ſome were about (as it were) to ſilence and ſuſpend the ſpirit it ſelf; Propheſie not, ſay they, to them that propheſie. They ſhall not propheſie to them, that they ſhall not take ſhame. O thou that art named of the houſe of Jacob, Is the ſpirit of the Lord ſtraitned? ſo we render, and put ſhortned in the margine: As if the Prophet had ſaid, You may ſhorten or ſtraiten the ſpirit of man, but you cannot ſtraiten the ſpirit of God, you cannot ſhorten his ſpirit. Is the ſpirit of God ſhortned? Cannot he inlarge himſelf, and ſpeak out by the meaneſt of his meſſengers, notwithſtanding all your oppoſitions and contradictions? Or, Is the ſpirit of the Lord ſtraitned? that is, Is the ſpirit of the Lord ſo weakened that he cannot make his word effectual? ſo it follows in the cloſe of the ſame verſe; Do not my words do good to him that walketh uprightly? As if he had ſaid, Is the ſpirit of the Lord ſtraitned from doing good to thoſe that receive the word? And if the word threaten you with evil, you may thank your ſelves for it: you ſhould not hear of evil from my word were it not for ſin, nor ſhould you feel it, did you not continue and perſiſt impenitently in your ſins; therefore know that the Spirit of the Lord is not ſtraitned, either in doing good to thoſe who accept and obey the Word, nor in bringing evil upon thoſe who reject and diſobey it.

In Job's Text the word is applied to grief or ſorrow, this ſhortneth the ſpirit every way. Sorrow ſhortneth the ſpirit of man, as ſpirit is taken for life: ſorrow cuts aſunder or breaks the thread of life. The ſorrow of the world cauſeth death, (ſaith the Apoſtle 2 Cor. 7. 10.) 'Tis a killing ſorrow. 'Tis a ſhortner of the Spirit alſo, becauſe we cannot do that good we might; ſorrow over-acted, weakens the whole man, and leaves him unable to put himſelf forth in action. Joy is the dilatation or widening of the heart; a heart full of joy, is enlarged, much joy makes the ſpirit free to act. Therefore the Sun is ſaid to rejoyce as a ſtrong man to run a race (Pſal. 19. 5.) A ſtrong man rejoyceth, and joy makes him run ſtrongly, and put himſelf forth mightily. Now as joy enlargeth and openeth the heart, ſo ſorrow is a ſtraitner of it, it makes a man narrow-hearted, and narrow-handed, it ſtops him in his actings, or ſtayes him from acting. Therefore when the Jews were overpreſſed with ſorrow, away with it ſaith Nehemiah (Neh. 8. 10.) The joy of the Lord is your ſtrength; and I may ſay, the ſorrow of man is his weakneſs, and the ſhortneſs of his ſpirit.

Why ſhould not my ſpirit be troubled, and ſhortned?

Job ſpeaks paſſionately and appeals to their judgment. Can ye ſhew me any reaſon why I ſhould not be troubled under my afflictions, yea though they were but ſuch as men uſually inflict, whereas mine ſpeak the arm of God. Being thus preſſed you will confeſs, that it is as hard for me not to complain, as it is to keep due bounds in complaining.

Having given theſe touches from the ſingle tearms, I ſhall offer three or four interpretations upon the whole.

As for me, is my complaint to man?

The queſtion denies, my complaint is not to man. Though Job ſpake to man, yet man did not determine, or bound his ſpeech, he ſpake beyond man. Taking the queſtion in this negative ſence, the latter branch of the verſe may be underſtood as a proof that he did not ſpeak to, or that his ſpeech was not bounded in man. As if he had ſaid, If I were to deal, or had to do with men alone in proving this point, or in approving my perſon; if I had not an outlet to God, if my thoughts did not work towards him, my ſpirit muſt needs be troubled; it could not be otherwiſe, but my ſpirit muſt be ſhortned, or ſtraitned, I muſt fail and ſink under the burthen you have laid upon me; but I ſubſiſt, and my ſpirit bears up, I maintain and ſtand my ground ſtill, yea my heart is enlarged, therefore this is an argument I have not to deal with man only but with God, who ſupplies me with freſh ſpirits, and renews my ſtrength.

Secondly, Theſe words (as hath been toucht before) are an argument to move attention; As for me, is my complaint to man? As if he had ſaid, My work is not with you, not with you alone; my ſoul aſcends to heaven, and there I have liberty of ſpeech, God admits me, and I have acceſs to him: therefore why ſhould I not have audience and acceptance with you alſo?

Others upon that account interpret thus, Let me have your attention, for I ſpeak not of earthly mundane matters, but of the weightieſt heavenly truths; I ſtand up to maintain the honour and juſtice of God in his diſpenſations to the children of men, therefore hear me; theſe things require much ſeriouſneſs from me in ſpeaking, and no leſs diligence from you in hearing.

Hæc attentum auditorem & ſerium poſtulant oratorem.

Thirdly, The words may be expounded disjunctively, and ſo like a bell that rings out, they ſtrike on both ſides; As for me, is my complaint to man? And if it were ſo, &c. As if he had ſaid, Which ſoever of theſe you take, whether you ſay my ſpeech and complaint is to man; or whether you ſay it is not to man but to God; which of theſe ſoever you take, why ſhould not my ſpirit be troubled? If you ſay my complaint is to man, have I not reaſon to be troubled at his hard dealings, and unkind cenſures? When my words find ſuch ill conſtruction, and my perſon ſuch ill entertainment, have I not reaſon to be troubled? Or be it that my complaint is to God, have I not reaſon to be troubled? For doth he not deny me preſent deliverance, doth he not hold me yet in darkneſs? Is he not pleaſed to hide himſelf and all thoſe comforts from me, which I am waiting for? So, that whether my complaint be to man, or to God, why ſhould not my ſpirit be troubled, conſidering the preſent poſture of my condition; ſeeing things go thus with me. As for me, is my complaint to man?

First obſerve, Great and painful ſufferings put the beſt to complaints.

Job denied not that he complained, he only denied that man was the ſole object of his complaint. What man in pain, eſpecially in ſuch pain as Job's was, can forbear complaining? An eminent Martyr in the Marian perſecution, ſaid thus to the Smith that was faſtning the chain with which he was to be bound to the ſtake; Be ſure you make it faſt, for the fleſh will have its courſe: Though the inordinate courſes of ſinful fleſh are ſtopt and mortified, yet ſenſitive fleſh, being pinched and pained will have its courſe, even in thoſe that are ſpiritual. The title of Pſal. 102. is A prayer of the afflicted when he is overwhelmed, and poureth out his complaint. And again (Pſal. 55. 2.) I mourn in my complaint, and make a noiſe. Such confuſion was upon his ſpirit, that he rather made a noiſe then ſpake; to utter a voice is an act of reaſon; inanimate and irrational creatures make a ſound, or a noiſe. David was ſo diſturbed in his complaint, that he rather made a noiſe, like the winds, or like a beaſt, then formed an articulate voice like a man, I make a noiſe in my complaint. So when he made his prayer in the cave (Pſal. 142. 2.) I poured out my complaint before him. David was ſhut up in the cave, and though it were a willing impriſonment (for he went thither to ſecure himſelf, he was glad to go to the cave for ſhelter) yet he complained and begged of God that he might not have occaſion of going to the cave for ſhelter. We find Aſaph in ſuch complaints (*Pſal.*77.) and Heman (Pſal. 88.) and Hezekiah (Iſa. 38. 14.) He complained and chattered like a Crane or a ſwallow. Indeed that queſtion put by the Prophet hath a negative ſence in it, (*Lam.*3.39.) Wherefore doth a living man complain, a man for the puniſhment of his ſins? As if he had ſaid, What reaſon hath a man to vex himſelf or murmur againſt God, as if he dealt rigorouſly and roughly with him, when all his ſufferings are procured by his own ſins? And hence an ancient Verſion renders the Text thus, Why doth the living man complain? Let each man complain for his own ſin.

There is a twofold complaint.

The firſt ariſeth meerly from the ſence of affliction, or the feeling of what we ſuffer; this is natural, this even Chriſt himſelf was under, while he was on earth in a ſuffering condition.

Secondly, There is a complaint which ariſeth from diſcontent and murmuring at our afflictions, vexing our ſelves at the things we ſuffer. This is ſinful, ſuch complaining becomes not the people of God; though they complain under the feeling of affliction, yet they muſt not murmur at affliction, but bewail their own tranſgreſſion; the beſt of Saints under affliction have cauſe to complain of their own ſin, and the ſin of many is the cauſe of all their afflictions. Every complaint which hath murmuring in it, is evil, and all the complaints of evil men are murmurings. The Apoſtle puts ſuch murmurers and complainers together (Jude 16.) Theſe are murmurers, complainers, walking after their own luſts. Complaining, which comes from, or is accompanied with murmuring, hath its original in luſt, and is their work who walk after their own luſts. We may complain, but we muſt not murmur; God doth not deny us to bemoan our ſelves, when he is pleaſed to lay his hand upon us, but he will not bear it if we murmur at his hand.

Secondly, From the object of Job's complaint, As for me, is my complaint to man?

Obſerve, A good man eyes God chiefly even while he is complaining to man.

Job was before men, but his complaint was to God. There is little gotten by complaining barely to man; and as there are but few who can give any eaſe to our complaint, ſo there are not a few, who encreaſe and add to it. To tell them that it is ill with us, makes our caſe worſe. For,

Firſt, Many are inſenſible of the ſufferings of others, they lay them not to heart, they are to the complaints which come before them about matters of affliction, as Gallio was to thoſe who complained about matters of religion; he cared for none of thoſe things, he regarded them not; you were as good ſpeak to a wall, or a rock, as to ſome men, they are inſenſible of what others feel, therefore why ſhould they be complained to?

A ſecond ſort are over-ſenſible, and account it a great burthen to receive complaints from the poor and diſtreſſed; 'tis indeed a burthen, yet ſuch a burthen as we ought to bear; and we may number it among thoſe which the Apoſtle ſpeaks of (Gal. 6. 2.) Bear ye one anothers burthens, ſo fulfilling the law of Chriſt. That we have our ears open, to receive the complaints, and our hearts ready to grieve for the miſeries of our brethren, is a burthen which the law of Chriſt hath laid upon us; and the bearing of that burthen is therefore called the fulfilling of the law of Chriſt, becauſe much love (which is the fulfilling of the law) goes out and is acted in bearing it.

Thirdly, There are others, who though they give the hearing contentedly, and will haply tell you they are ſorry to ſee your afflictions, yet they ſay little and do leſs to eaſe your ſorrow: at moſt they give you but a mouth-full of good words, a breath of charity, or charity only upon the breath. Of ſuch the Apoſtle James ſpeaks (Chap. 2. 15, 16.) If a brother or ſiſter be naked and deſtitute of daily food, and one of you ſay to them, depart in peace, be ye warmed, and filled; notwithſtanding you give them not thoſe things that are needful for the body, what doth it profit? Such kind of cheap relief, a wiſh it were otherwiſe with you, be you warmed, and filled, and cloathed, is all that many give; they give nothing that is real ſuccour, either for ſoul or body; and who would complain to ſuch a generation as this?

Fourthly, There are a ſort who anſwer complainings with deſpiſings, who mock at miſery, and take advantage to inſult over others in their neceſſities; they will not give ſo much as a parcel of goods words, nor be at the charge of a good wiſh to thoſe who are compaſſed about with evil. Such entertainment David's complaint had when he ſent to Nabal (1 Sam. 25. 10.) And Nabal anſwered and ſaid, who is David, and who is the ſon of Jeſſe? There be many ſervants now adayes that break every man from his Maſter: as if he had ſaid, what is he but a fugitive? Thus he reviled him, Shall I take my bread, and my water, and my fleſh that I have killed for my ſhearers, and give it unto men whom I know not whence they be? A company of runagates and wanderers, do you think I will have to do with ſuch as he and his, or give them relief? How common is it to ſnap up complainers, with, What are you? whence come you? what's that to me? what can I do for you? or why ſhould I though I can? upon what acquaintance, pray? An ingenuous ſpirit can eaſier die under his burthen, then aſk help at the hands of ſuch.

Fifthly, Complain to ſome, and they will tell you, they have it not for you, they cannot relieve you, when yet it is in the power of their hand to do it. Some who never want money for a good bargain, or a profitable purchaſe, will alwayes be in want when they ſhould do a good work, or give to thoſe who have nothing. They who have enough to buy out two or three rich men, have not enough to relieve one poor man; they will rather make themſelves poor then help the poor, and be accounted weak rather then ſupport thoſe who are ready to ſink under their burdens; who would complain to men of ſuch a temper as this?

Sixthly, There want not ſome to whom if you complain, they will tell you plainly they will not relieve your wants, they make no excuſes, but refuſe down-right.

In the ſeventh and laſt place, very many are indeed unable to help thoſe who complain to them; though they are free enough, and have cordial deſires to do what is deſired, yet they cannot. They cannot reach ſuch relief as the complainers caſe calls for; they are not able to do it though they would. The line of the creature when it is longeſt and ſtretched to the utmoſt, may yet be too ſhort for our help. A great King had not wherewith to ſtop the cry of a poor woman (2 King. 6. 26.) And as the King of Iſrael was paſſing by upon the wall, there cryed a woman unto him, ſaying, help my Lord O King. And he ſaid if the Lord do not help thee, whence ſhall I help thee? out of the barn-floor, or out of the wine-preſs? There was nothing in the barn-floor, nothing in the wine-preſs; therefore he turns her over to God: the Lord muſt help thee, I cannot. As in that caſe ſo in many the creature is ſhort-handed, it hath no help. The Prophet gives an elegant deſcription of this, (*Iſa.*3.6,7.) When a man ſhall take hold of his brother of the houſe of his father, ſaying, thou haſt cloathing, be thou our ruler, and let this ruine be under thy hand. In proſperous times men are ambitious of preferment, they bribe and beg for places of truſt and power, but in calamitous and confuſed times preferments and great places go a begging, and are refuſed. In that day ſhall he ſwear, ſaying, I will not be a healer: for in my houſe is neither bread, nor cloathing, make me not a ruler of the people; as if he had ſaid, What do you mean to make me a ruler? I have nothing ſuitable to ſuch a ſtate; your ruine cannot be under mine hand; your ruine is too ruinous, and your trouble is too troubleſom for me to engage in. As 'tis ſaid of ſome diſeaſes, they are the Phyſitians reproach, they cannot cure them; ſo the wounds and breaches of a State may be ſuch as no man dares undertake their cure and healing. And as publick, ſo private and perſonal evils are ſometimes ſo deſperate, that every man ſtands off, and ſaith, I will not, I cannot be a healer, I have neither bread nor cloathing enough for it; this ruine cannot be under my hand.

All theſe conſiderations tell us aloud, that as 'tis ſometimes in vain to complain to man, ſo 'tis alwayes beſt complaining to God, either immediately, or whenſoever we complain to man, to have God in our eye.

For the contrary of thoſe ſeven diſcouragements, in reference to our complaint to man, may be affirmed of God,

Firſt, He is ſenſible of our ſorrows.

Secondly, To hear our complaint is no burthen to him.

Thirdly, He doth not uſe to ſend any away with good words only.

Fourthly, He doth not deſpiſe thoſe who complain to him.

Fifthly, He doth not deny himſelf able to help.

Sixthly, 'Tis rare that he gives any a flat denial.

Seventhly, He never denies help to any becauſe their condition is paſt his help; he needs not to anſwer in my houſe is no bread nor cloathing, no help, nor healing, for with him is all power at all times: therefore let us complain to him. And beſides all this, we have not only a command from God to complain to him, but his promiſe to hear and help when we complain; and which is yet more, we honour God in complaining to him. We do a great honour to man, when we complain to him, yea it puts a piece of divinity upon him; and upon this account Magiſtrates to whom complaints are both moſt commonly and moſt properly made, are called in Scripture language, Gods. This is originally the Honour of God; for this ſpeaks our faith, that all power is in him, and that he is able to ſupport and relieve us in all our complaints. A beggar doth not make his complaint to a beggar who hath not a penny in his purſe, or is as poor as himſelf: but he complains to thoſe of whom he hath an opinion that they are able to help him. This perſwaſion of faith, that God is able to help, is not only a motive, but the ground of our complaining to him. He that cometh to God muſt believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently ſeek him, (Heb. 11.6.) As it is our duty to believe this when we come to God with our prayers and complaints, ſo unleſs we believe this, we have neither any true foundation nor hope when we come. He that conſiders the Allſufficiency of God, and Inſufficiency of man, will ſee reaſon enough in all his troubles to ſay with Job, As for me, is my complaint to man? In this Job did well, and ſpake both wiſely and holily; But,

When he ſaith in the latter part of the verſe, And if it were ſo, why ſhould not my ſpirit be troubled? Was this a becoming ſpeech? Should not Job rather have laboured to ſtop the trouble of his ſpirit, then thus encourage it? Should he not rather have checkt then backt his own unquiet heart? We may learn this from it,

> That Good men ſometimes are ready to give too much way to their own grief and unquietneß of ſpirit.

Why ſhould not my ſpirit be troubled?] Is the language of many in their troubles. Many reaſons may be given why we ought to ſit down in the midſt of our troubles with quiet ſpirits. 'Tis dangerous to perſwade our ſelves that we have reaſon to be troubled at any thing but ſin. Our ſpirits are rarely troubled enough with the evil of ſin, and uſually too much with outward evils. Rachel weeps, and refuſeth to be comforted; ſome faſten upon ſorrow, and are greedy of grief; that which we tranſlate (Job 10. 20.) Let me alone that I may take comfort a little, is by ſome rendred, Let me alone that I may mourn a little; let me have my ſcope in mourning. In Pſal. 77. Aſaph ſpeaks out the trouble of his ſpirit, My ſore ran in the night, and ceaſed not; my ſoul refuſed to be comforted. They give too much way to their troubles, who argue againſt their comforts, and put by the offer of them. When the Lord reproved Jonah for his paſſion (Chap. 4. 9. Doeſt thou well to be angry?) He replied, I do well to be angry to the death. What he ſaid of his paſſion of anger, others ſay of their paſſion of ſorrow; We do well to be ſorrowful; why ſhould not our ſpirit be troubled? They think they have reaſon for it, though their reaſons have no more reaſon in them, then that of Micah had (Judg. 18. 23.) who when the children of Dan asked him, What ayleth thee? Anſwered, Ye have taken away my gods which I made, and the Prieſt, and what is this that ye ſay, What ayleth thee? Have I not reaſon to complain, and be troubled when you have robbed me of my gods? Thus when they have loſt but an Idol (as he had) ſomewhat that they over-prized and put in the place of God, yet being queſtioned, why are ye thus troubled? They anſwer, why ſhould we not be troubled?

Chriſtians ſhould rather remember David's queſtion, then imitate Job's (Pſal. 42. 5.) Why art thou diſquieted O my ſoul? why art thou caſt down? He put his ſoul to anſwer for it, why art thou diſquieted? He ſaith not with Job, Why ſhould not my ſpirit be diſquieted? But, Why art thou? Give an account of it. When we find ſuch gueſts bluſtering upon our ſpirits, we may do much towards the quieting of them, by asking why they are ſo diſquieted? And 'tis both our wiſdom and our duty, if that will not do, to uſe all holy means to quiet them. When Chriſt (John 14. 1.) foreſaw a ſtorm, a black day, a day of trouble coming upon his Diſciple, he prevents and way-layes the trouble of their hearts, by forbidding it, Let not your hearts be troubled; be not diſturbed in your minds with cares and ſorrows concerning the iſſue of my abſence from you; ſay not, Our Lord and Maſter is gone, O what will become of us? For I go to prepare a place for you, and I will come again and receive you to my ſelf, that where I am there ye may be alſo. Chriſt tells them he went to prepare a place for them, that he might thereby prepare their hearts patiently to bear his going away? Chriſt knew well, that if once trouble of heart did gather and grow upon them, it would work ſtrange effects, and either carry them beyond or leave them ſhort of the bounds of duty. Our danger is great when ſorrow is in power. I will ſhew you a twofold danger of it.

Firſt, Satan makes great uſe of any over-powerful paſſion. As he tempts ſome with joy, ſo others with ſorrow: ſome are drowned while they intend only to ſwim, and bath themſelves in pleaſures: Others are drowned while they ſwim and bath in ſorrows. Satan takes advantage of all extreams. Hence the Apoſtle adviſeth about the inceſtuous perſon, who was much grieved and afflicted, that the Corinthians ſhould comfort him (2 Cor. 2. 7.) He would not have him lye too long under thoſe troubles of ſpirit, Leſt he ſhould have been ſwallowed up of too much ſorrow. And (verſ. 11.) Leſt Satan ſhall get advantage of us; for we are not ignorant of his devices. Now as Satan would get an advantage againſt the whole Church by blemiſhing their diſcipline (which ſhould alwayes be tempered with love, and tend only to the ſalvation of the offender) as rigorous and immoderate; ſo he would be buſie to work his advantage upon the poor man himſelf, and ſwallow him up with too much ſorrow. We know what black work ſome have made by the over-workings of ſorrow. Satan doth his work in us, or tempts us to do his work in darkneſs; and that in a twofold darkneſs; Firſt, in the darkneſs of Ignorance; Secondly, in the darkneſs of Sorrow, or of a troubled mind. And as he who lets the Sun go down upon his wrath (that is, who continues long in, and cheriſheth his wrath) gives place to the Devil (Eph. 4. 26, 27.) ſo alſo do they who let the Sun go down upon ſuch ſorrow.

Secondly, Such ſorrow or trouble of ſpirit, unfits the ſoul for duty, ſuch can neither pray nor hear as they ought. As ſome trouble of ſpirit is an occaſion of quickning us to duty, ſo there is a trouble which dulls and deadens us. And as it unfits for ſpiritual, ſo for civil duties and employments: it makes a man careleſs, and ready to throw up all: take heed of ſuch ſorrows; ſay not, Why ſhould not my ſpirit be troubled?

Job having by this third Argument provoked his friends to attention, brings forth a fourth.

Verſ. 5. Mark me, and be aſtoniſhed, and lay your hand upon your mouth.

Mark me.] The word ſignifies properly to turn the eye or face upon ſome remarkable object. And as it ſignifies an attentive view of the eye, ſo likewiſe the ſerious attention of the mind. When Job ſaith, Mark ye me, he doth not ſo much call for their eyes, as for their underſtandings. Nor was it his perſon which he would draw them to look at, but his cauſe. He was in no ſuch comly caſe to invite beholders, his ſores and ſickneſs rendred him little pleaſing to the eye.

Mark me, that is, Firſt, Mark what I ſpeak, or attend my ſpeech.

Secondly, Mark what I ſuffer, mark what is fallen on me. As if he had ſaid, Surely my friends, though ye have been a great while with me, yet ye have not heeded me. 'Tis poſſible to be long in the preſence of a man, and not ſee him; that is, not conſider his ſtate and condition. Therefore after all this diſcourſe Job admoniſheth his friends to take better notice of him. Mark me,

And be aſtonied.] The word imports ſuch aſtoniſhment as is cauſed by ſtanding upon a high place, or beholding things from on high. He that ſtands upon a high cliff or tower, is aſtoniſhed to look down. Look down upon me, ſaith Job, mark the huge deep of ſorrow, which I am in, and be aſtonied. Aſtoniſhment is the conqueſt of ſenſe, and and of reaſon too; we are never aſtonied while either ſenſe or reaſon can act orderly, but when they are in a kind of huddle, this is our aſtoniſhment. Strange events, things ſeldom heard of, or rarely ſeen, breed aſtoniſhment. Aſtoniſhment is a degree beyond admiration; a man may wonder at that whereat he is not aſtoniſhed. Thus the Prophet repreſents the poſture of the neighbouring Nations at the fall of Tyrus (Ezek. 28. 19.) And all they that know thee among the people ſhall be aſtoniſhed at thee; thou ſhalt be a terror, and never ſhalt thou be any more. The fall of mighty Princes is matter of amazement and terror to all who hear of or behold it. Thus 'tis ſaid of the Babylonian (Iſa. 14. 16.) They that ſee thee ſhall narrowly look upon thee, and conſider thee, ſaying, Is this the man that made the earth to tremble, that did ſhake kingdoms? And (verſ. 10.) Art thou alſo become weak as we, art thou become like us? Who could have believed this? Who ever expected to ſee ſuch a change? And the Lord himſelf calls the heavens to aſtoniſhment at the ſtrangeneſs of his peoples dealing with him, (Jer. 2. 12.) Be aſtoniſhed O ye heavens at this, and be horribly afraid; be ye very deſolate ſaith the Lord; for my people have committed two evils, &c. And thoſe evils were ſuch and ſo great, as few if any had ever committed before them; they had ſinned without and beyond example, as is plain by the former verſe, Hath a Nation changed their gods, which are yet no gods? Where can you find a Nation changing their gods? The moſt barbarous Nations are tenacious of and zealous for their gods? They ſtick to their gods, though they be but Idols; Hath a Nation changed their god? Can you give me an inſtance of a people that have changed their gods, and turned them out of doors, though they are yet no gods: But my people have changed their glory, that is, their God (God is the glory of a people, his preſence is at once our honour and our ſafety.) Now when ſuch a thing as this was done, which was never done before, of which no example could be given for any records, then be aſtoniſhed O heavens. Now, as the ſin of Jeruſalem was an unparalleld ſin, ſo alſo was her puniſhment; and therefore ſhe calls all to behold and be aſtoniſhed, Lam. 1. 12. Is it nothing to you all ye that paſs by? Behold and ſee, if there be any ſorrow like unto my ſorrow, which is done unto me, wherewith the Lord hath afflicted me in the day of his fierce anger. Thus Job ſeems to beſpeak his friends, was there ever any mans ſorrow like mine? Mine is a rare caſe, and may therefore juſtly breed aſtoniſhment. Mark me, and be aſtoniſhed.

בהל Vehementis ſignificationis verbum, quod vix uſurpatur niſi ob aliquod inopinatum eventum, aut ob aliquam rem ineffabilem & admiratione digniſſimam. Bold.

Hence note, Firſt, A man, eſpecially a man in affliction, loves to have his caſe and diſcourſe throughly weighed.

Unleſs you mark his affliction, you encreaſe it; and unleſs you mark his words, you diminiſh his perſon. Slight attention is diſpleaſing to man, much more to God; yet how oft doth God ſpeak, and we ſcarce mark? He hath reaſon to call upon us, mark me, both in what he ſaith, and in what he doth. We neither mark the words, nor the works of God as we ought. If men take it ill when they are not marked, how ill may the great God of Heaven take it?

Secondly, Job's friends had cenſured and judged him, but they had not markt him.

Hence note, Some are more forward to cenſure then to conſider.

They give judgment before they hear, and paſs ſentence before they mark; common reaſon bids us mark before we judge, and conſider before we give our opinion either about the actions of others or their doctrines. The Apoſtles rule and counſel leads us to this (1 Theſ. 5. 21.) Prove all things, hold faſt that which is good. The rule holds alſo, Prove all things, and then reject that which is evil. 'Tis not praiſe-worthy to hold that which is good, till we have proved it ſo; nor can we be excuſed in rejecting that as evil which is evil, till we have proved it to be ſo.

Thirdly, While Job ſaith, Mark me, and be aſtonied, He ſeems to intimate thus much to his friends; hitherto ye have neglected me and my ſufferings, but did ye mark me, ye would be aſtonied: He ſpeaks not imparatively, as commanding their attention; but optatively, deſiring them to mark him, and ſheweth what would follow, Mark me, and (certainly) ye will be aſtonied.

Hence note, The reaſon why we are little affected with great things, is becauſe we do not enough conſider and mark them.

That which ſcarcely moveth us, would aſtoniſh us; that which is ſmall in our eyes and eſtimations, would be great, if we did but weigh it. Did we throughly conſider what ſin is, many would tremble, who now make a ſport of it. The mercy of God, the unſpeakable love of Jeſus Chriſt, are little valued and prized by many, becauſe they enter not into a due conſideration of them, they take no pains to know what Redemption, Juſtification, and Salvation mean, and therefore (as the Apoſtle ſpeaks, Heb. 2. 3.) they neglect ſo great ſalvation. The Apoſtle Peter writing of the things of the Goſpel (1 Pet. 1. 10.) ſhews how induſtrious ſome of old time were about them, Of which ſalvation the Prophets have enquired and ſearched diligently. And (ver. 12.) Which things the Angels deſire to look into them. Angels pry into the ſecrets of the Goſpel, they (as the word uſed by the Apoſtle implieth) do, as it were, ſtretch out their necks to ſee the glory of thoſe myſteries. Were we but thus buſie and intent upon them, how ſhould we be ſwallowed up and tranſported with the riches of that Grace, with the freeneſs of that love which is manifeſted to the ſons of men! The works of providence, whether works of mercy, or of judgment, are full of myſtery, they are great, and ſought out of all that have pleaſure in them (Pſal. 111. 2.) If we would ſeek them out, and ſcan their circumſtances, we ſhould ſtand amazed, both at the wiſdom and power of God diſcovered in them. At this time it would be ſaid, What hath God wrought? How unſearchable are thy judgments, and thy wayes paſt finding out; who is a God like unto thee, glorious in holineſs, fearful in praiſes, doing wonders?

Fourthly obſerve, That the dealings of God with ſome godly men are full of aſtoniſhment.

David himſelf ſaid (Pſal. 119. 120.) My fleſh trembleth for fear of thee, and I am afraid of thy judgments. Thoſe Judgments which cauſe trembling before they come, being come cauſe aſtoniſhment. As the mercy which God ſometimes beſtows upon his ſervants, is beyond their faith, ſo many of his chaſtnings are beyond their fear; and as themſelves are aſtoniſhed at what God hath laid upon them, ſo others alſo ought to be. The Judgments of God upon Jeruſalem were ſo ſtrange, that the Kings of the earth and all the inhabitants of the world, would not have believed them; where faith ends, wonder muſt needs begin. What God did to Jeruſalem for the puniſhment of her ſin, he did to Job for the tryal of his graces; even ſuch things as no man who knew his integrity would have believed, though it had been told him before he ſaw it; and therefore he had reaſon to ſay, Mark me, and be aſtonied,

And lay your hand upon your mouth.] This action follows aſtoniſhment before ſpoken of (Mich. 6. 16.) The Nations ſhall ſee and be confounded at all their might (that is, to ſee their own might confounded and weakned) and ſhall lay their hand upon their mouth. The Image of Harpocrates (whom the antient Idolatrous Egyptians adored as the God of Harpocratis ſimulachrum qui Deus putabatur ſilentii, ſic exprimebatur ab Ægyptiis ut digitum apprimebat labris. Car. Steph. Lex.

Cum veniet contra digito compeſce labellum. Juv. Sat.

of ſilence) was formed and ſet up in the Temple of Iſys, with his hand laid upon his mouth. And this hath long obtained the honour and authority of a proverbial ſpeech, ſignifying thus much, that we will ſay no more, or that we have no more to ſay. This phraſe is often uſed in Scripture; for, beſides that it is uſed twice more in this book (Chap. 29. 9. & 40. 4.) we alſo read, how the Danites ſaid to Michah's Prieſt, who began to make a buſtle againſt them, and to demand, What do ye? (Judg. 18. 19.) hold thy peace, lay thy hand upon thy mouth. Solomon gives advice, (Prov. 30. 32.) If thou haſt done fooliſhly in lifting up thy ſelf, or if thou haſt thought evil, lay thy hand upon thy mouth; that is, if thou haſt done evil, do not defend it, but repent of it; or if thou haſt framed evil thoughts in thy heart, yet let not thy mouth ſpeak them out in evil words; ſmother thoſe ſinful conceptions, let them never ſee the Sun, for 'twil encreaſe thy ſin, and procure thee ſhame. Among the ſeveral ſtations which the Iſraelites made through the wilderneſs, one was in Punon, or Phinon (Numb. 33. 42.) which as one of the Ancients obſerveth, ſignifieth, ſilence or ſparingneſs of ſpeech; upon which he maketh this uſeful application, Let us be careful to take up our ſtation here ſometimes, while we are travailing through the wilderneſs of this world. It may be our wiſdom to pitch in ſilence. The hand is well imployed while we ſtop the mouth with it from broaching and maintaining that which is evil, or from oppoſing that which is good. As to open the mouth, importeth readineſs to ſpeak, and boldneſs of ſpeech; ſo to lay the hand upon the mouth, notes ſilence, and properly ſilence upon conviction; that is, when a man hath heard ſuch reaſons as he cannot oppoſe or contradict. We uſe an expreſſion near this, Lay your hand upon your heart; that is, take the thing deeply to heart, apply it home. As to lay the hand upon the heart, notes internal ſpeech; ſo to lay the hand upon the mouth, notes the ſtopping of external ſpeech. Lay your hand upon your mouth, is as if Job had ſaid, Mark me, and you will have little reaſon and leſs forwardneſs to ſpeak any more; or, My counſel to you my friends, is, That ye would hear more and ſpeak leſs; yea, that in this caſe ye would now be ſilent and ſpeak no more.

Ambros de 42. filiorum Iſraelis manſionibus.

There are two things which ſhould ſtop the mouth, and impoſe ſilence.

Firſt, The plainneſs and evidence either of reaſon or of proof (Rom. 3. 19.) What the law ſpeaks, it is to thoſe that are under the law, that every mouth may be ſtopped, and all the world may be guilty; that is, the law brings ſuch plain evidence and conviction, that no man ſhall have a word to ſpeak againſt it. If God ſhould ſpread before men their lives, and his law in the purity and ſpiritualneſs of it, every man muſt ſit down ſilent, and lay his hand upon his mouth.

Secondly, The mouth is ſtopped by the depth and darkneſs, by the inevidence and obſcurity of that which is before us; when things are ſo vailed and clouded that we cannot ſee into them, what can we ſay to them? 'Tis then high time to lay our hand upon our mouthes, and inſtead of ſpeaking to admire. We may conceive Job intending both theſe ſtop-mouthes to his friends. Firſt, That the reaſon of Gods dealing with him was ſecret and dark. Secondly, That he intended to anſwer their objections with ſo much plainneſs of ſpeech, and evidence of reaſon, that either they ſhould not be able to reſiſt him, or it would be very dangerous for them if they did; and therefore (ſaith he) lay your hand upon your mouth. Which he preſſeth upon them yet further in the words following.

Verſ. 6. Even when I remember, I am afraid, and trembling taketh hold on my fleſh.

This verſe contains Job's laſt Argument, moving his friends to attention. The reaſon ſtands thus; the very remembrance of that which I am about to ſpeak to you makes me afraid and tremble, therefore you have reaſon to attend and mark what I ſpeak; ſurely I ſpeak not of ſlight matters, nor do I tell you ſtories of I know not what, I am ſerious, be you ſo.

When I remember, I am afraid.] When I remember, what? Firſt, ſay ſome, The trouble and affliction, the pains and ſorrows which I am in. Secondly, ſay others, When I remember what proſperity God gives the wicked; as in the next verſe, Wherefore do the wicked live, become old, yea are mighty in power? When I remember theſe diſpenſations of God, it ſtrikes me with terror.

Doctis quibuſdam placet hic ſenſus Jobum partim doloris ſui recordatione, partim mira Dei adminiſtratione de qua mox dicturus eſt, ſic conturbari ut totus horreat. Merl.

Trembling taketh hold of my fleſh.] This clauſe hightens the former, I am altogether afraid, I do not only tremble, but trembling taketh hold of me. Moſes ſpeaks in this form (Exod. 15. 13.) Thou in thy mercy haſt led forth the people which thou haſt redeemed, &c. God had but juſt put them over the Sea, and yet, by the ſpirit, Moſes ſaw them put into the poſſeſſion of Canaan, and his faith propheſied what poſture other Nations ſhould be in when God ſhould do theſe things, The people ſhall hear and be afraid, ſorrow ſhall take hold of the inhabitants of Paleſtina. He ſaith not that they ſhall be full of ſorrow, but ſorrow ſhall take hold of them, as a Sergeant takes hold of a man to arreſt and carry him away: So it follows, Sorrow ſhall take hold of the Dukes of Edom, the mighty men of Moab, trembling ſhall take hold of them. In this the Scripture ſets forth the exceſſiveneſs of their troubles, that fear ſhould not only fall upon them, but take hold of them. Thus ſaith Job, I am not only afraid, but trembling hath taken hold of my fleſh. And if the remembrance of theſe things makes me afraid and tremble, how can you who are preſent but be troubled and deeply affected with the ſight of them?

Si tanta calamitatis ſola recordatio me conſternaret quanto magis vos præſentes ſi animum advertetis neceſſarium eſt obſtupeſcere ob calamitatem meam. Jun.

I need not draw out particular Obſervations here, having ſhewed upon other places how dreadful the judgments of God are, and what effects they have produced upon the ſpirits of good men. Habakkuk who had only a prophetical viſion of them, expreſſeth his ſence in the higheſt language of amazement (Chap. 3. 16.) When I heard, my belly trembled, my lips quivered at the voice, rottenneſs entred into my bones, I trembled in my ſelf, that I might reſt in the day of trouble.

Only here obſerve a double difference.

Firſt, Between the godly and the wicked at all times.

Secondly, Between the godly of thoſe times under the law, and the godly who live in theſe Goſpel times.

To the firſt, A godly man trembles at the judgments of God, a wicked man is little moved at them: The foreſight or remembrance of Judgments makes a godly man fear, but a wicked man is hardned in the ſight and under the feeling of them.

To the ſecond, The people of God under the Law, being dealt with more by viſible diſpenſations of mercy and judgment in the times of the Law (as is evident, eſpecially throughout the twenty-ſixth Chapter of Leviticus, and the twenty-eighth of Deuteronomy) they were more ſubject to fear and deſpondings of ſpirit, upon ſad providences and appearances, then now believers are under the Goſpel. The grace of God appearing more eminently in theſe Goſpel times by Jeſus Chriſt, and the love of God being more abundantly ſhed abroad in the hearts of believers by the Holy Ghoſt, they are delivered from that ſpirit of bondage, and the preſſures of ſervile fear, under which formerly they were extreamly held in ſubjection; and have therefore clearer cauſe of rejoycing and glorying in tribulation then they had; and of ſaying with Paul, We are only as ſorrowing, yet alwayes rejoycing, as having nothing, yet poſſeſſing all things: For as perfect love caſteth fear (that fear which hath torment) quite out, (1 Joh. 4. 18.) ſo the more love is perfected, the more is fear caſt out.

VERS. 7, 8, 9, 10.

Wherefore do the wicked live, become old, yea, are mighty in power?

Their ſeed is eſtabliſhed in their ſight with them, and their off-ſpring before their eyes.

Their houſes are ſafe from fear, neither is the rod of God upon them.

Their bull gendreth and faileth not, their cow calveth, and caſteth not her calf.

JOB having finiſhed his Preface, proceeds to refutation, which he grounds not only upon reaſon, but (and that chiefly in this place) upon experience, teaching his friends by their ſenſe, and bidding them ask their own eyes, whether he did not ſpeak truth, and themſelves an error?

Verſ. 7. Wherefore do the wicked live, become old, yea are mighty in power?

As if he had ſaid, Do yon ſee all or many wicked men in an afflicted eſtate? Why then have you thus concluded againſt me that I am wicked, becauſe afflicted? The whole context of the ſeven verſes next enſuing, are a continued deſcription of the wicked mans proſperity.

His proſperity is deſcribed;

Firſt, What it is in life, or while he liveth.

Secondly, What it is when he is dying, or in the manner of his death.

The proſperity of his life may be conſidered, either, as to his perſon, or as to his relations. His perſonal proſperity is deſcribed (verſ. 7.) His proſperity in relations, is deſcribed, Firſt, In his children (verſ. 8.) Secondly, In his whole family, or in all within doors (verſ. 9.) Thirdly, In his cattel or ſubſtance without doors (verſ. 10.) And all this outward proſperity is hightned by the joy, mirth, and gladneſs with which he and his abound, while he aboundeth in theſe outward enjoyments, They ſend forth their little ones like a flock, and their children dance. They take the Timbrel and Harp, and rejoyce at the ſound of the Organ (verſ. 11, 12.) Thus we have the reſolution of this context in the deſcription of the wicked mans proſperity, while he lives. His proſperity in death is ſet down, verſ. 13.

Verſ. 7. Wherefore do the wicked live?

This verſe contains the perſonal proſperity of the wicked man, and therein we have a gradation of three ſteps; or his proſperity riſeth by three ſteps.

First, He lives.

Secondly, He becometh old.

Thirdly, He is mighty in power.

To all this Job prefixeth a wherefore, and why all this? Or how comes it to paſs, that the wicked man liveth, and not only liveth, but becometh old, and not only becometh old, but waxeth mighty in power; Wherefore is all this? He ſpeaks either admiringly, or chidingly; give me an account of it. If (as you my friends have often told me) wicked men are alwayes puniſhed in this life for their ſins, I wonder whence it comes to paſs, that ſo many wicked men live, and not only live, but proſper? And whence is it that I ſuffer all theſe miſeries (as you ſay) for my ſins, if the wicked, as your eyes may teach you, enjoy ſo much proſperity? Unriddle theſe queries, reſolve theſe doubts.

Wherefore do the wicked live, become old, and mighty in power?

This wherefore may have a double reference; Firſt, To the opinion of his friends, who held that God diſtributeth evil to wicked men, and good to good men in this life. Now, ſaith he, for as much as this is your principle and your opinion, reconcile your principle, and this experience together, Wherefore do the wicked proſper? For as much as you have ſaid, God gives out allowances, and lots to men, as men are good or bad; to the good he gives good things (ſay you) and to the evil, evil. As the wherefore is thus applied, take this note from it.

No reaſon could be given why wicked men ſhould proſper in this life, if God dealt with all men in this life according to their deſervings.

If deſert were the rule, we were not able to give a reaſon why wicked men proſper, who indeed deſerve not to live in the world; nor why godly men, whom the world doth not deſerve, ſuffer ſo much while they live. As the world is not worthy that it ſhould have godly men to live in it, ſo ungodly men are not worthy to live in the world; how then ſhall we anſwer if ſelf-worthineſs carry it, when commonly 'tis worſt with the beſt, and beſt with the worſt?

Again, The word wherefore may have reference to Job's own doubt; wicked men proſper, why do they proſper? Wherefore do the wicked live? And this is a quere which hath all along troubled the ſpirits of the Saints, eſpecially in thoſe times, nor are they alwayes or eaſily ſatisfied in theſe about it; many were then puzzled, and ſo they are now when they ſee wicked men proſper, and godly men afflicted. That a wicked man is vexed or afflicted, no man wonders at it; every one can tell why, and give you a wherefore: but that he ſhould live, and proſper, this is hard to reſolve. Again, that a godly man is bleſt, and thrives, and lives comfortably, no man wonders at this; for he hath the promiſes of this life as well as of that which is to come. But to ſee godly men afflicted, trod under foot, and ſtript of all; theſe diſpenſations put many to a ſtand, Wherefore is it that the wicked proſper? And, Wherefore is it that the godly are afflicted? That God is juſt, a godly man knoweth, and ſaith as Abraham (Gen. 18. 25.) Shall not the judge of all the earth do right? God is juſt, and therefore doth juſtly. The people of God have it alwayes upon their ſpirits, to honour God thus. And they give him glory in that other principle which David aſſerts (Pſal. 5. 5.) That the fooliſh ſhall not ſtand in his ſight, and he hates all workers of iniquity. Theſe things are unqueſtionable with them, and therefore they are often ſcanning upon, queſtioning and enquiring about this point, Why do the wicked proſper?

Hence obſerve, It is ſome trouble to good men to ſee evil men flouriſh and live free from trouble.

It hath been ſo, and 'tis ſo to this day; many a good man hath had much ado to digeſt this morſel, and to get above this temptation. While David admoniſheth (Pſal. 37. 1.) Fret not thy ſelf becauſe of the wicked man, and be not envious at the evil doer; he more then intimates that the beſt of men are ready to envy and fret when they proſper. And either he or Aſaph tells us how he found it working upon his own heart (Pſal. 73. 3.) I was envious at the fooliſh, when I ſaw the proſperity of the wicked. And he ſtaid not here, but was over-born by the ſtrength of this temptation, to make a very unbecoming and dangerous concluſion (verſ. 13.) Verily I have cleanſed my heart in vain, and waſhed my hands in innocency; for all the day long have I been plagued and chaſtned every morning. He indeed corrects himſelf, verſ. 14. If I ſay I will ſpeak thus, behold I ſhould offend againſt the generation of thy children; and when he thought to know this (that is, to ſee the reaſon of it) it was too painful for him, till he went into the ſanctuary of God, (that is, till he conſulted with God) then he underſtood the end of thoſe men. Till we look to that reckoning which lyeth beyond this life, we get no reſolution of this doubt.

We may anſwer this quere further (Why the wicked proſper in this life?) two wayes.

First, Negatively.

Secondly, Affirmatively.

If you ask, Wherefore do the wicked proſper?

I anſwer, Firſt, Negatively; and I ſhall give you a fivefold negation.

Firſt, It is not becauſe God loves their perſons, or bears them (as ſuch) any good will.

Secondly, It is not becauſe God approves their wayes, or likes their doings.

Thirdly, It is not becauſe God intends them good, or hath a purpoſe to beſtow further bleſſings upon them.

Fourthly, It is not becauſe God cannot pull them down, lay them low, and cut them off: he can weaken the ſtrongeſt, and cauſe the greateſt to fall before him; he can cruſh them as the moth.

Fifthly, It is not becauſe he dares not deal with them, or is affraid to provoke their power. Some Princes of the world have been forced to let ſome wicked men alone, to live long and grow mighty in power; they durſt not provoke them, they knew not what fires they might ſtir againſt themſelves. The ſons of Zerviah were too hard for David, but there are none too hard for God. For none of theſe reaſons doth the Lord ſuffer wicked men to live, become old, and mighty in power.

We may anſwer the queſtion Affirmatively three wayes.

Firſt, In reference to God.

Secondly, In reference unto the godly, and

Thirdly, In reference to the wicked themſelves.

Firſt, Wherefore do the wicked live, and proſper? They are ſuffered to do ſo in reference to God himſelf.

Firſt, To glorifie his patience, and long-ſuffering. Theſe attributes would not ſhine forth with ſuch luſtre in the world, did not wicked men live and thrive in the world;

If God ſhould immediately deſtroy every one that doth wickedly, he ſhould be very juſt, and his holineſs would appear in this; but thoſe Attributes of patience and long-ſuffering would not appear: but when God ſuffers the wicked to continue, and thoſe whom he is able every moment to deſtroy, to ſurvive many years, how doth this lift up his glory, and tell us, that he is ſlow to wrath, though he be great in power.

Secondly, In reference to God. The Apoſtle gives us an account why (Rom. 9. 22.) What if God willing to ſhew his wrath, and make his power known, endured with much long-ſuffering the veſſels of wrath fitted to deſtruction? What hath any man to ſay, if God reſpecting the further manifeſtation of his own wrath, ſeem to favour wicked men? If it be thus (ſaith the Apoſtle) what hath any man to ſay to it? If as God ſuffers them, to ſhew forth his own patience and long-ſuffering here, ſo to have the fuller blow at them hereafter, and to take (as it were) the more advantage in making his power known, even the power of his wrath: For this reaſon he endureth with much long-ſuffering the veſſels of wrath, fitted to deſtruction; they are fitted to deſtruction already: and they are veſſels of wrath, ſuch as deſerve to be filled with wrath, brim-full with wrath every day; yet they are full of comforts, and continue ſafe a long time, that their periſhing at laſt may make God more known in the greatneſs and irreſiſtibility of his power. The power of God is the more known when once it acteth, by how much it ſtayeth the longer before it acteth upon wicked men.

Thirdly, It is, becauſe the Lord hath appointed a day wherein he will judge the world by Jeſus Chriſt in righteouſneſs. A day is coming which is the day of the revelation of his righteous judgment (Rom. 2. 5.) Therefore he lets things go thus at preſent. He will at laſt render to every man according to his work; but now he doth not: And becauſe he hath this in his heart, he ſpares wicked men a while, gives them a reprieve, and doth not ſeal the Writ for their execution.

Secondly, We may anſwer this Queſtion (Wherefore do the wicked live?) affirmatively, in reference to the godly.

Firſt, To teach them patience towards all men, to love their enemies, to do good to thoſe that hate them, as was further ſhewed, chap. 20. v. 29.

Secondly, God ſuffers the wicked to proſper in ſin for trial of the Graces of his ſervants. There are many Graces which would come to little trial, if wicked men ſhould not thrive in their ſins. The grace of Patience is tried by this means; becauſe wicked men proſpering, get power to vex and perſecute them; yea, their patience is alwayes tried by the proſperity of the wicked, though they hurt them not with their power; though they are not thorns and briars to tear and trouble them, yet to ſee them proſper, is an exerciſe of patience under, and ſubmiſſion to the will of God.

This alſo trieth the ſoundneſs and ſteddineſs of their judgment, whether they will alter their opinion, either concerning themſelves or wicked men, becauſe of outward diſpenſations. Then a godly man is eſtabliſhed indeed, when he neither thinks the worſe of himſelf becauſe he is afflicted, nor the better of wicked men, becauſe they thrive and proſper.

Laſtly, We may anſwer this Query (Why do the wicked proſper?) affirmatively alſo, in reference to the wicked themſelves, in two things.

Firſt, It renders them more inexcuſable in the day of wrath.

Secondly, This gives them opportunity to ſhew what they are, both which points were inſiſted upon, chap. 20. v. 29. Whither I refer the Reader.

Thus we may anſwer Job's Queſtion, Wherefore do the wicked live, become old, yea, are mighty in power?

I ſhall now ſpeak more diſtinctly to theſe words, as they lie in this gradation.

Wherefore do the wicked live?

Some read in the time paſt, Wherefore have the wicked lived? Others in the time to come, Wherefore ſhould the wicked live? We tranſlate in the preſent time, Wherefore do they live? To live, in Scripture is taken two wayes.

Firſt, For a bare ſubſiſtence in the world, or for the holding (as we ſay) of life and ſoul together, to be kept out of the grave, or to be above ground; this is to live: So ſome reſtrain it here; Wherefore do the wicked live? That is, wherefore have they ſo much as a breathing-time in the world? that's too much for them. Wherefore are not their filthy and unclean ſouls preſſed by death out of their bodies? why are they not tumbled into the grave? why are they not tumbled down into hell? why do they cumber, ſtill cumber the world? A wicked man is not worthy to live, much leſs is he worthy of the comforts of this life. If a wicked man had his deſert, he ſhould have nothing but wrath. The wrath of God is revealed againſt all unrighteouſneſs. The wages of ſin is death; that's all he earns, why then doth he live?

Secondly, To live, ſignifies not barely to live, but to live comfortably, to have content with our life; to live is to proſper. Thus the word is often uſed in Scripture (Pſal. 118. 17.) I ſhall not die, but live. David did not look upon himſelf as immortal, or that he ſhould never die; he knew he was ſubject to the ſtatute of death: but his meaning is, I ſhall not die now, I ſhall not die by the hands of theſe men, I ſhall not die the death which they have deſigned me to; or when he ſaith, I ſhall not die, but live; his meaning is, I ſhall live comfortably and proſperouſly, I ſhall live as a King. That which we tranſlate (1 Sam. 10. 24.) God ſave the King, is, Let the King live, that is, let him proſper and have good dayes; let him have peace with all, or victory over his enemies. 'Tis ſaid in that Propheſie of Jeſus Chriſt (Pſal. 72. 15.) He ſhall live. Chriſt hath not only a being, but a glorious being. Though Jeſus Chriſt had no outward pomp, while he was in the world, yet they who knew him, honoured him; and all power was committed to him. He ſhall live, and to him ſhall be brought of the Gold of Sheba; prayers ſhall dayly be made to him, and dayly ſhall he be praiſed. Chriſt lives and reigns, all his foes ſhall be made his footſtool. When Paul ſaith (1 Theſ. 3. 8.) Now I live, if ye ſtand faſt in the faith; he would have the Theſſalonians know, that his life would be a continual death, if he ſaw them go back in Grace, and decline in Faith; and that it would add joy, yea, a Crown to his life, if they ſtood faſt in the faith, and keep cloſe to the profeſſion of the Goſpel. The two witneſſes (Rev. 11. 8.) are ſaid to be ſlain; which is underſtood, not of a corporal, but of a civil death. While the witneſſes of Chriſt live in the body, they are ſaid to be ſlain and dead, becauſe they live in affliction and trouble; and as that Text ſpeaks, propheſie in ſackcloath, that is, are poor and low in the world. To be ſtript of the comforts and contentments of this life, is in Scripture-language, to be ſtript of life it ſelf. As there is a life of Grace, and a livelineſs of Grace; a living hope, and a lively hope (1 Pet. 1. 4.) ſo there is a life of Nature, and the livelineſs of Nature. We may underſtand this Text of both, ſpecially of the latter; 'tis more then a wicked man can expect, that he ſhould live; but that he ſhould be lively and ſtrong, that he ſhould live richly, comfortably, joyfully, this offends and ſtumbles many, and they cannot but put Job's Queſtion, Wherefore do the wicked live? yet that which follows, offends more; they do not only live, but become old.

Non eſt vivere ſed valere vita.

The ſecond ſtep of their proſperity is the length of life. Zophar (chap. 20.) grants that a wicked man may triumph, he may have his fill of joy; but (ſaith he) the triumphing of the wicked is ſhort, the joy of the hypocrite is but for a moment. Here Job oppoſeth Zophar, affirming not only that wicked men live, but live long; they do not only proſper, but proſper many years; they become old in proſperity. The word which we render to become old, ſignifies ſo to become old, as to continue ſtrong in old age, and to have, as a renewing of years, ſo, of abilities. The old age of ſome men is nothing but weakneſs, infirmities ann diſeaſes overtake them, and make their lives a burden, both to themſelves and their friends; but others are ſtrong and luſty, they have a good old age. The word is uſed to expreſs the antiquity of God himſelf (Dan. 7. 9.) Where he is called The ancient of dayes. Now though the Lord be the ancient of dayes, yet there is no decay upon the Lord; he is as ſtrong and powerful now, as he ever was, and ſo he ſhall be to everlaſting. As his years fail not, or have no end (Pſal. 102. 22.) So his ſtrength ſtrength faileth not, nor hath any end, his power is not abated, his hand is not ſhortned by time, no, nor by eternity. Thus (in proportion) we are to underſtand it here; Job ſaw wicked men, having an old age like youth, a winter with a ſpring in it, natural vigour flouriſhing, when (as Solomon deſcribes old age, Eccleſ. 12. 5.) The Almond tree flouriſhed. There is yet a third ſtep; Job obſerved wicked men not only to live and grow old, but,

עתק Veteraſcere, ſeneſcere.

עתיק יומין Durabilis cujus dies non deficiunt, qui ſemper idem eſt.

חיל Pollent opibus. Nam in opibus potentia hominis conſiſtit. Confortavi divitiis. Vulg. Etiam comparant divitias. Tharg.

To be Mighty in power.] In the two former words, to live and become old, we had their natural power; in this, their civil. They are mighty, or, ſtrengthened in power. The word which we tranſlate power, ſignifies alſo riches. Thus ſome render it here; They are mighty in riches, ſaith Mr. Broughton. Riches are ſo expreſt, becauſe there is a power in them; and moſt rich men are powerful men. The Chaldee Paraphraſe gives this reading, yea, they gather riches. Some grow old and poor, they loſe their wealth, while they heap up dayes; Theſe grow old, and gather riches. So that now we are at the height of the wicked mans proſperity; he lives many dayes, and with many dayes, he hath abundance of riches; and with his riches, power and authority; for that is a ſecond ſignification of the word, which our Tranſlation rather enclines to. He is not only a rich, but a powerful man; he is cloathed with authority and command; he is advanced to Magiſtracy, and all ſubmit to him: He is the Head, and doth what he pleaſeth; he ſpeaks, and all obey him; He is mighty in power. This is the higheſt ſtep of the wicked mans proſperſty. The Orator long ago ſpake with indignation concerning Cataline the Conſpirator, The man lives; he adds, and comes into the Senate: As if he had ſaid, It is too much for this man to live, yet behold he lives in power and authority. So, Job, to ſet forth the glory of wicked men, ſaith, They live, and become old, and are mighty in power. They are placed upon the very pinacle of honour, and are lifted up above their brethren. From the perſonal proſperity of wicked men, Job proceeds to that of their Relations.

Vivit, imo in Senatum venit. Cic. de Catal.

Verſe 8. Their ſeed is eſtabliſhed in their ſight with them, and their off-ſpring before their eyes.

Not only are they, but their children alſo are eſtabliſhed. This is a great addition to their worldly happineſs. Abraham was a man poſſeſſed of great riches and power, and (which was more then all his poſſeſſions) God told him (Gen. 15. 1.) I am thy Shield and thy exceeding great reward; yet Abraham ſaid, Lord God, what wilt thou give me, ſeeing I go childleſs? verſ. 2. This want ſowred all his enjoyments; though he were the beloved of God, yet he was pinched with this, I go childleſs: A child was more to him then all other worldly gifts; yet, I grant, it was not a meer natural child which he waited for, but a child of promiſe. So that his fear was not (indeed) ſo much that he ſhould have no children, but leſt the promiſe of the bleſſed Seed ſhould not be accompliſhed in him: Such a child was moſt in his eye, nevertheleſs, a child was much in his eye, as that bleſſing, without which all his outward bleſſings would come ſhort of his deſires, and be imperfect. Therefore Job deſcribes the proſperity of wicked men, not only by their riches and abundance, but by their children. Their ſeed is eſtabliſhed in their ſight.

Their ſeed.] That is, by an ordinary Metonymie, their children are eſtabliſhed.]

The word ſignifies to ſtabliſh, firſt, Firmly. Secondly, To eſtabliſh orderly and rightly, or an exactneſs of eſtabliſhment. David uſeth this word in his prayer to God about the ſettlement of his own houſe (2 Sam. 7. 26.) Let thy name be magnified for ever, ſaying the Lord of Hoſts is the God over Iſrael, and let the houſe of thy ſervant David be eſtabliſhed before thee, that is, let the poſterity of David be orderly ſtabliſhed. And it is applied to the ſettlement of all the Saints in their generations (Pſal. 102. 28.) The Children of thy ſervants ſhall continue, their ſeed ſhall be ſtabliſhed before thee. They ſhall continue, and not only continue, but be ſtrong; they ſhall have an orderly and a firm eſtabliſhment. Thus (ſaith Job) The ſeed of the wicked is eſtabliſhed. And which is more, they are eſtabliſhed in their ſight. It is a bleſſing to have them eſtabliſhed; but 'tis a greater bleſſing to have them eſtabliſhed in their ſight. It adds to the bleſſing, that their children ſhould not only proſper, but that they ſhould ſee it. The Hebrew is, before their face; it is a great aggravation of our ſorrow when our children come to miſery before our face. As it is ſaid, Jer. 39. 6. The King of Babylon ſlew the ſons of Zedekiah before his eyes. He not only ſlew his ſons, but made him witneſs of it; Zedekiah's own eyes were put out ſhortly after (his ſorrow had been leſs if they had been put out before he had beheld that doleful ſpectacle) the cruel death of his own children. The glory of the children of God ſhall afflict the wicked, becauſe they ſhall ſee it. Chriſt puts that in expreſly (Luke 13. 28.) When you ſhall ſee Abraham, Iſaac and Jacob ſit down in the Kingdom of heaven, and ye your-ſelves ſhall be thruſt out. They ſhall enter heaven before your eyes, or in your ſight, you ſhall ſee them. If they ſhould not ſee them there, it would not trouble them ſo much; but to ſee them happy, will be their miſery. Now, as it is an affliction for any man to ſee his children ſlain before his eyes, or to ſee the proſperity of others before his eyes, in which he cannot partake; ſo to have our children proſper before our eyes, and our ſeed exalted in our ſight, is a great advancement of our happineſs. If a father hath only a promiſe that when he is dead, his children ſhall proſper, this comforts him; but when himſelf lives to ſee it, this is much more comfortable. This mercy Job took notice of as the portion of the wicked; Their ſeed is eſtabliſhed in their ſight.

Ad facies eorum. Heb.

Further, The word in the Original, which we tranſlate in their ſight, is uſed ſometimes comparatively, or by way of ſimilitude (chap. 4. 19.) They ſhall be cruſhed before, or as ſoon as the moth. The Hebrew is, They ſhall be cruſhed before the face of the moth, that is, as ſoon as you can cruſh a moth, ſo are the proudeſt cruſhed by the hand of God. Thus ſome expound here, Their ſeed is ſtabliſhed in their ſight, that is, as much as they; as they live long, ſo do their children, as they become old, ſo do their children. They and theirs proſper together, or theirs proſper as well as they.

Ad facies eorum, i. e. ſicut vel quantum ipſi.

And their off-ſpring before their eyes.] This clauſe is of the ſame meaning with the former; the word off-ſpring, ſignifies the ſhoot of a tree, or a ſprig that grows out of the earth; children are as plants and ſprigs. In both parts he anſwers what Zophar ſpake (chap. 20. 10.) Where he told Job, That his children ſhould ſeek to pleaſe the poor, that is, his children ſhould be brought to ſuch a low and mean condition, that they muſt ſubmit to the loweſt, and ambitiouſly purſue the favour of the meaneſt, even ſeek to pleaſe the poor. Now, ſaith Job, my obſervation (and ſo may yours) hath taught me otherwiſe; I have often ſeen the ſeed of wicked men eſtabliſhed in their ſight, and their off-ſpring before their eyes. He anſwers alſo that of Eliphaz (chap. 15. 33.) He ſhall ſhake off his unripe grapes as the Vine, and ſhall caſt off his flower as the Olive; that is, his children ſhall come to an immature end, they ſhall die in their youth, yea, in their infancy. But (ſaith Job) I have ſeen the ſeed of the wicked eſtabliſhed, they have lived long, and taken root, and come to maturity; they have not been ſhaken off as unripe grapes, and as the flower of the Olive.

צאצאים Germina, appellantur ab exeundo, quaſi ἐκπεφυκότα dicas. Druſ.

The Prophet Iſaiah ſeems to oppoſe Job's experience, and to ſubſcribe to the opinion of his friends (Iſa. 14. 20, 21.) The ſeed of evil doers ſhall never be renowned: Prepare ſlaughter for his children, for the iniquity of their fathers.

I anſwer, The original Text may be thus rendred in the Letter; The ſeed of evil doers ſhall not be called (or renowned) for ever; as if he had ſaid, ſuppoſe they have a name for a while, or be eſtabliſhed in the ſight of their fathers, that is, while they live; yet this ſhall not laſt alwayes, ere long they ſhall be cut off: we tranſlate, not for ever, by never, or, not at all; which muſt be underſtood of the continuance of their ſeed in renown. Nor doth that which Job aſſerts, the proſperity of ſome one or more of the ſeed of a wicked man, ſtand in the light of the Prophets poſition; That the ſeed of evil doers are not renowned for ever; or, that they ſhall never be renowned. For the Prophet ſpeaks according to the general rule and law of Gods proceedings with wicked men, by which, as themſelves are uſually cut off, ſo alſo are their ſeed and poſterity too; yet as moſt other general rules have their exceptions, ſo alſo hath this. Grammarians give general rules about the government of words, yet they have Heteroclites and Anamolies, which vary from the ordinary conſtruction; ſo the Wiſdom and Juſtice of God propoſe general rules of adminiſtration towards men; and this amongſt the reſt, is a ſure and noble one, that The ſeed of evil doers ſhall never be renowned; yet the Lord hath ſome except caſes, wherein he ſheweth his own liberty and ſoveraignty in permitting the ſeed of evil doers to proſper for a time; but he will make it good in the cloſe, that the ſeed of evil doers ſhall never be renowned.

Verſe 9. Their houſes are ſafe from fear, neither is the rod of God upon them.

This temporal flouriſhing eſtate of a wicked man is here further deſcribed: We heard before, Firſt, Of his perſonal proſperity. Secondly, Of the proſperity of his Children. This verſe extends it to his whole Family.

First, Affirmatively.
Secondly, Negatively.

We have the affirmative part in the beginning of the verſe, Their houſes are ſafe from fear; that is, they have peace in their houſes. Underſtand by their houſes, not only the dwelling place it ſelf, their ſeat, but all they have in and about their houſes, all are ſafe from fear. The Hebrew is, Their houſes are peace from fear, that is, their houſes are ſo far from fear, that there is nothing in their houſes but peace; a houſe full of peace, is a houſe full of good things. This may be expounded two wayes; Their houſes are full of peace, that is,

שלם Domus eorum pax à timore, i. e. ſumma quædam tranquilitas omnis timoris expers. Benevola conſenſio domeſticorum.

Firſt, Their houſhold, their ſervants, their children, all that belong to them are at peace one with another, there is no contention, no bitterneſs of ſpirit, no breach among them. The conſent of domeſticks is a great mercy. Diſſentions endanger Families as well as Nations, and hinder the proſperity of them; where ſome go one way, and ſome another; uſually (as to common good) they all go wrong. A houſe (ſaith Chriſt) divided againſt it ſelf, cannot ſtand.

Secura poſſeſſio bonorum.

Secondly, As it notes harmony and good agreement among the perſons, ſo the quiet poſſeſſion of the goods of the houſe: All that he hath laid up in his houſe is at peace from fear; thieves do not break through and ſteal, nor any of the ſons of violence come openly upon him to make him afraid. And as they are free from preſent danger, ſo from the very fear of it; Their houſes are ſafe or peace from fear. This word was uſed ordinarily by the Jews in their ſalutations, as containing the wiſh of all welfare to a perſon or family (1 Sam 25. 5.) Thus ſhall you ſay to him that lives in proſperity (that is, to Nabal) Peace be to thee, and to thy houſe, and to all that thou haſt. Here is a threefold diſtribution of peace; firſt, Peace to him. Secondly, To his Family. And thirdly, To all that he had. Thus here, they have peace from fear, or are ſafe from fear; they, their families and their goods, they have no breach, no diſſention among themſelves, no invaſion, no violence from abroad. What can be deſired more to the compleating of outward proſperity?

Neither is the rod of God upon them.

These words contain the negative part of their proſperity. The rod of God may be oppoſed unto the rod of men. Their houſes are ſafe from fear, that is, from any violence uſed by men; Neither is the rod of God upon them. There are ſome houſes that are not viſited with any evil from the creature; the thief doth not break through nor ſteal their treaſures, yet their treaſure is deſtroyed by the rod of God. There are ſome whoſe cattel are ſafe from the violence of men, Sabeans and Chaldeans do not invade them, yet the rod of God diſſipates their flocks, and his curſe eats them up; therefore Job to ſet out the perfect happineſs of a wicked man in temporals, tells us, that as he hath no trouble either from neighbours or ſtrangers, ſo neither is the rod of God upon him. Immediate evils are properly called the rod of God; when we ſee no hand that ſmites us, then (in ſtrict ſence) the rod of God ſmites us.

Μάστιξ δὲ παρὰ κυρίου οὐκ ἔστιν ἐπ' αὐτοῖς. Sept.
Plaga divinitus inflicta eſt virga Dei. Druſ.

Secondly, By the rod of God we may alſo underſtand thoſe afflictions which we receive mediately by the hand of man. Cruel men are expreſly (in Scripture) called the rod of God (Iſa. 10. 5.) O Aſſyrian, the rod of mine anger, and the ſtaff in their hand is mine indignation. God made that Prince his rod, to ſcourge and vex his own people. And ſome of the great troublers of the world, and ſpoilers of the Nations with fire and ſword, have with a kind of ambition, taken that ſtile upon them, and would be known by this name, The Scourge of God.

Flagellum Dei ſe vocavit Attilas.

Further, The Rod of God may be conſidered in oppoſition to the rod of man, not only as to the difference of the hand that ſmites, but alſo as to the difference of the degree or meaſure in which we are ſmitten. So ſome expound this Text, The rod of God is not upon them; that is, there is no heavy, no ſore rod upon them. Thus, as by a known Scripture-Hebraiſm, The river of God notes any very pleaſant and commodious river; and the mountain or hill of God, a very high and ſtrong hill or mountain; ſo the rod of God (by the ſame Hebraiſm) is a heavy rod, or any extreamly preſſing or painful affliction. We have this oppoſition intimated (2 Sam. 7. 14.) I will be his father, and he ſhall be my ſon; if he commit iniquity, I will chaſten him with the rod of men, and with the ſtripes of the children of men. As if he had ſaid (in compliance with this expoſition) If thy ſon ſin, he ſhall not eſcape the rod, only I will correct him gently; I will chaſtiſe him with the rod of men, that is, with ſuch a rod as men chaſtiſe with, or are chaſtiſed with. I will chaſtiſe him with ſuch rods as the weak arm of man uſeth; I will not bring heavy and breaking judgments upon him, I will not put out my power to cruſh him, I will not chaſten him with the rod of God; but I will chaſtiſe him with ſuch a rod as a man may wield. What are the ſtripes and ſtroaks which men give, in compariſon of thoſe which God can give?

1. Virga Anaſchim ferte, Nobilium qui mitius aliis caſtigari ſolent. 2. Virga filiorum Adam, i. e. fragilium utpote ex terra conſtantium. Bold.

Again, Take the rod of men for ſuch rods as men uſe to be corrected and chaſtiſed with; ſo we may take notice of two words uſed in that Text of Samuel; firſt, The rod of men (Anaſchim) that is, ſay ſome, ſuch a rod as is laid on the children of honourable men, who are not corrected as ſlaves and inferior perſons uſually are. The children of great men are chaſtened with a leſſer rod, or they are not ſo ſeverely dealt with as others. Secondly, The ſtripes of the children of men, or of Adam, that is, of weak and frail ones; whoſe original is from the duſt: As if the Lord had ſaid, If thy ſon ſin, and ſo provoke me to puniſh him, yet I will remember that he is but earth and clay, and ſhall accordingly moderate my hand; his ſhall be but ſuch ſtripes as one of the children of men, duſt and aſhes may well bear. Beſides the Hebrew word which we tranſlate ſtripes, ſignifies rather touches; I will chaſten him with the touches of the children of men, he ſhall have but a touch. Now as that affirmative promiſe in Samuel, I will chaſten him with the rod of men; ſo this negative experience of Job, The rod of God is not upon them, may import only ſome eaſier and more gentle affliction. As if Job had ſaid, I ſee the houſes of the wicked ſafe from fear, and if trouble come upon them, 'tis not alwayes to ruine and preſent deſtruction. The rod of God is not upon them, as you my friends, affirm.

Job having thus diſcovered the happineſs of wicked men in the ſettlement of their ſeed, and in the ſafety of their family; ſhews it alſo in the increaſe of their flocks and cattel. Job's proſperity was deſcribed by Oxen and Sheep, by Aſſes and Camels (chap. 1.) And he alſo had obſerved the worſt of men abounding in this peice of proſperity.

Verſe 10. Their Bull gendereth, and faileth not; their Cow calveth, and caſteth not her Calf.

Of theſe words I ſhall only ſay, that they are an expreſſion of the fruitful breeding of Cattel, and that a very full one. Job ſpeaks of the fruitfulneſs both of the male and female Cattel, of the Bull and of the Cow diſtinctly; and of both (to aſſure the truth more) he ſpeaks two wayes. Firſt, Affirmatively. And ſecondly, Negatively. Their Bull gendreth, their Cow calveth; there's the affirmative part. Their Bull faileth not, their Cow caſteth not her Calf. There's the negative part of this outward bleſſing. When cattel have conſtant conception, and no abortion, they muſt multiply exceedingly. Jacob uſeth this argument to convince his ungrateful uncle Laban, of the great bleſſing which his ſtock had under his care (Gen. 31. 38.) Theſe twenty years have I been with thee, thy Ewes and thy Shee-goats have not caſt their young. The Lord puts this into the form of a promiſe to the Nation of the Jews (Exod. 23. 26.) There ſhall nothing caſt their young, or be barren in the Land. And again (Deut. 7. 14.) Thou ſhalt be bleſſed above all people, there ſhall not be male or female barren among you, or among your cattel. The Pſalmiſt numbers this among the bleſſings which render a people happy; Happy (ſaith he, Pſal. 144. 13, 14, 15.) is that people that is in ſuch a caſe, having their oxen ſtrong to labour, and their ſheep bringing forth thouſands and ten thouſands in their ſtreets: But moſt happy (as he there concludes) is that people whoſe God is the Lord. The men of this world receive thoſe bleſſings from the general providence of God, which his own people receive by ſpecial providence. And though many wicked men have Corn and Cattel from the Lord, yet none of them have the Lord for their God. Thus far Job hath ſhewed us the wicked full of dayes, and full of riches: In the next place, he ſhews them and their children rejoycing in this fulneſs, and ſaying to their ſouls, Let us eat, drink and be merry till we die. How many are there who have goods laid up for many years, who yet never had one ſerious thought of laying up any thing for eternity?

VERS. 11, 12, 13.

They ſend forth their little ones like a flock, and their children dance.

They take the Timbrel and Harp, and rejoyce at the ſound of the Organ.

They ſpend their dayes in wealth, and in a moment go down to the grave.

JOB hath already deſcribed the outward felicity of many wicked men; Firſt, By long life. Secondly, By their riches. Thirdly, By their power. Fourthly, By the flouriſhing of their children. Fifthly, By the ſecurity of their eſtate; they are ſafe from the violence of men, and free from the rod of God. Sixthly, By the abundance of their Cattel. He proceeds in theſe three verſes to deſcribe their felicity, by the pleaſure and worldly pomp in which they live, and by the eaſineſs of their death. Some men live and encreaſe in riches, they have much Corn, many Children, a full and ſecure eſtate, no conſiderable croſs upon them, yet they take no pleaſure, no contentment in all this. Solomon deſcribes ſuch a man (Eccleſ. 6. 2.) to whom God hath given riches, wealth and honour, ſo that he wanteth nothing for his ſoul of all that he deſireth; yet God giveth him not power to eat thereof, but a ſtranger eateth it; this is vanity, and it is an evil diſeaſe. Therefore to compleat the outward felicity of wicked men, Job adds, Verſe 11. They ſend forth their little ones like a flock, and their children dance. Thus they live in pleaſure.

To which he ſuperadds the ſweetneſs, peaceableneſs and quietneſs of their death, verſ. 13. They ſpend their dayes in wealth, and go down to their grave in a moment.

They ſend forth their little ones like a flock.

They ſend them forth under Guardians and Guides, ſo a flock is ſent forth; Children are not ſcattered, but ſent in an orderly way. The Original which we tranſlate little ones, ſignifies any ſort of children, who are yet under government and tuition. The word hath a double derivation; Firſt, From a root which ſignifies a yoke or labour, importing ſuch young ones as are fit to be ſent forth to ſeek employment, or to labour in the world. Secondly, From a root which ſignifies evil or wickedneſs, unrighteouſneſs, naughtineſs; intimating what our little ones are, both by nature and in their lives, till converted, even corrupt and depraved; for though children are ſo called from their purity (ſay ſome) in the Latine, yet it is only comparatively, not abſolutely. Children may be called white paper, compared with thoſe who have lived long, and blotted their lives with many abominations; yet children have impurity in them, our little ones are conceived in ſin, and brought forth in iniquity. The Spirit of God uſually gives names or denominations proper to the ſtate of things and perſons. Children are polluted in nature, polluted alſo in life and converſation; they are ſinful, and what they do, they do ſinfully: If children did not carry corruption in their natures, they ſhould not bear it in their names. And if little ones are corrupt, how corrupt are they who have perfected their corruption, having heightened and improved the ſtock of ſin which they brought into the world?

עוילים forte à עלך ut ſit ea ætas qua homo agendi ſimilitudinē exhibet; vel potius à עול quia in pueris nihil niſi injuſtitia eſt, & quia dum agunt pravè agūt omnia. Coc. Puer ſic dictus, quaſi purus. Becn. de orig. Ling. Lat.

Theſe little ones they ſend forth like a flock, that is, like a flock of ſheep; which implieth three things.

Firſt, That they had many children, a flock of them; flocks conſiſt of many; to ſend forth a flock is a proverbial ſpeech, noting a multitude ſent forth: So the word is uſed (Pſal. 107. 41.) Yet ſetteth he the poor on high from affliction, and maketh him families like a flock, that is, he maketh him to have a numerous family, a great houſe: Abraham, who had an army in his family (he armed two hundred men, all of his own houſe) he had his family like a flock, that is, many in his family; ſo, Ezek. 36. 38. When the Lord would ſhew what a multitude his people ſhould encreaſe to, he ſaith, As the flocks of Jeruſalem in her ſolemn feaſts, ſo ſhall the waſte Cities be filled with flocks of men. Jeruſalem was filled with flocks of Cattel three times in the year, or at their three ſolemn feaſts; the Lord promiſed that the waſte Cities which had no Inhabitants, ſhould be filled with flocks of men, that is, they ſhould have abundance of Inhabitants, or be very populous.

Secondly, As the ſending forth of little ones like a flock, imports their number great, ſo, that they are under an order, that they are governed; for a flock is ever under inſpection: Savage and wild beaſts have none to take care of them, or to overſee them; but flocks of ſheep have their overſeers.

Thirdly, Some interpret theſe words, They ſend forth their Children as a flock, to note the union and love which was amongſt them, they lived together like a flock. The union of the Church of Chriſt is ſignified under that notion, the Church is called a flock; Fear not little flock (ſaith Chriſt, Luke 12. 32.) The Church is a little flock, in oppoſition to the huge herds and droves of the men of the world; Saints are but few. Firſt, It is called a flock, becauſe of the care and government of Jeſus Chriſt over it. Secondly, It is called a flock, becauſe it is at unity within it ſelf. Though the Church be ſcattered over the world, yet it hath a holy combination of the members; every breach there is a departure from their Duty and Order.

They ſend forth their little ones as a flock.] Thus he deſcribes their felicity in the education and diſcipline of their little ones.

And their children dance.] He ſtill proſecutes the alluſion of a flock; for the word which we render to dance, is applied to Calves (Pſal. 29. 6.) Where the Prophet thus deſcribes the glorious power of God, He maketh them alſo to skip like a Calf; Lebanon and Syria like a young Unicorn. The word is applied alſo to Rams and Lambs, Pſal. 114. 4. The mountains skipped like Rams, and the little hills like Lambs. Thus they ſend forth their little children like flocks; they dance and skip; which argues the proſperity of their family.

Dancing may be taken two wayes; either, firſt, Strictly, for the exact motion of the body in meaſure, which is artificial dancing; or ſecondly, Dancing is taken more largely, for any kind of joyful moving of the body, for any bodily exerciſe in ſport or play; this in a common ſence is called dancing. We may take it here four wayes; their children dance, that is, they are inſtructed and taught the art of Muſick and dancing; or, there is rejoycing among them; this is proper to the age and ſtate of children. Some derive the Greek word for children, from a root which ſignifies to play or ſport, as if playing were the work of children, and ſporting all their labour. Chriſt himſelf ſpeaks as if this were the trade of children (Matth. 11. 16.) Whereunto ſhall I liken this generation? They are like children ſitting in the market-place (what do they there? are they buying or ſelling? are they bargaining or trading? No, that's the buſineſs of men; what do the children there?) They call to their fellows, and ſay, we have piped to you, and you have not danced; we have mourned to you, and you have not lamented. Piping and dancing is the delight and buſineſs of children. We find it given as a promiſe of bleſſing upon the Church of God, that their children ſhould be ſo employed (Zech. 8. 4, 5.) Thus ſaith the Lufus ita naturalis eſt pueris, ut à ludo puer Græcè vocetur.

Lord of Hoſts, there ſhall yet old men and old women dwell in the ſtreets of Jeruſalem, and every man with his ſtaff in his hand for very age, and the ſtreets of the City ſhall be full of boyes and girles (what ſhall they do?) playing in the ſtreets thereof. To ſhew the felicity of the people of God in Jeruſalem after their return from Babylon, 'tis promiſed, that as they ſhould have old men leaning upon ſtaves, ſo boyes and girles playing in the ſtreets. And thus Job expreſſeth the external felicity of wicked men in family-bleſſings; Their children dance. And they have muſick to their dance, as it followeth.

Verſ. 12. They take the Timbrel and the Harp, and rejoyce at the ſound of the Organ.

They take the Timbrel.] They, who? Who is the antecedent to they? doth he mean the parents or their children, or both? I conceive we may beſt expound it collectively, they, that is, they and their children, old and young, they take the Timbrel and the Harp, yea they are taken with the Timbrel and the Harp; thus they delight and ſport themſelves in the abundance of all things. They take the Timbrel, &c. We have here a ſpecification of thoſe muſical Inſtruments which were then chiefly uſed. There is a threefold reading of theſe words; They take the Timbrel and the Harp.

Firſt, They lift up their voyces with the Timbrel and Harp, that is, they play and ſing, which ſheweth the compleatneſs of their muſick, it was both by Voyces and Inſtruments; or they lift up their voyces like muſical Inſtruments. 'Tis ſaid of Balaam (Num. 23. 7.) He took up a Parable, that is, he ſpake, or he pronounced a parable.

'Attollunt, ſc. vocem ſicut tympanum, perſonant velut tympano. Merc. In Hebræo eſt נשא cũ ב quod alias ſignificat ferre partem rei, ferre cum alio. &c. Coc.

Secondly, They take or lift up their bodies in dancing with the Timbrel and the Harp. When the Muſick ſounded, they followed or anſwered it with the motion of their bodies.

Thirdly, They take the Timbrel, may be rendred, They play upon the Timbrel and the Harp, they touch them artificially. 'Tis ſaid, Gen. 4. 21. (where the original of muſical Inſtruments is reported) His brothers name was Jubal, he was the father of all ſuch as handled (or touched) the Harp and the Organ. Thus we have their mirth and muſick: They take (or touch) the Timbrel and the Harp, they live in pleaſure. Hence obſerve, Worldly men breed their children vainly.

Here is a deſcription of their education; they are ſent forth as a flock in a Dance, playing upon the Timbrel, &c. Here's all the knowledg and literature they are brought up to; here is all their Religion, all the Catechiſm that they are taught. The Lord giveth this report of Abraham, who had a numerous Family; I know him that he will command his children, and his houſhold after him, and they ſhall keep the way of the Lord (Gen. 18. 19.) (Abraham did not teach his to dance, but to keep the way of the Lord) to do juſtice and judgment; that the Lord might bring upon Abraham what he had ſpoken. Here was education in the fear of the Lord. Abraham gave his children ſuch breeding as became the father of the faithful. This doth not condemn the inſtruction and teaching of children in Muſick, that skill is commendable, and the gift of God: To learn a due poiſe and compoſure of the body, is not unlawful; only we forbid the exceſs, when it takes up the whole time, and is made a buſineſs; or when 'tis uſed as a provocation to luſt, or a nurſe of pride and vanity. When much time is ſpent in this, time is miſpent; when this which ſhould be as Sauce, is made the whole Diſh; when this which is but an unneceſſary circumſtance, is inſiſted upon, as if it were all man, then it is ſinful.

'Muſicam & honeſtam voluptatem non damnat Scriptura, ſed eorum damnat ſecuritatem, qui his velut inebrietati Deum contemnunt & ejus opera negligunt, Merc.

Again, Conſider the trade of carnal men and their children; They dance and ſing, they and their Families.

Hence obſerve, Senſitive joyes and contentments are all that carnal men are taken up with.

They rejoyce at the ſound of the Organ.] Here's not a word of rejoycing in the goodneſs of God; here's not a word of thankfulneſs and praiſe to God, who gave them good things, and enricht them with thoſe outward bleſſings; they only ſeek to make themſelves merry, they never ſought to make the Name of God glorious. The holy Patriarchs had riches and children, cattel and great ſubſtance, ſo we read of Abraham, Iſaac and Jacob; yet how different a character doth the Holy Ghoſt give of them (Heb. 11. 13.) They accounted themſelves pilgrims, they had no mind to their countrey; but they ſought a City whoſe builder and maker was God. This was their frame in their greateſt worldly enjoyments; they had riches, but they did not rejoyce in them; they had them, but they did not give up themſelves unto them. Worldlings cry (Pſal. 4. 6.) Who will ſhew us any good? What ſaith David? Lord, lift up the light of thy countenance upon me; that will cauſe joy in my heart, more then when corn and wine encreaſe; as if he had ſaid, worldly men take the Timbrel when corn and wine and oil encreaſe; but if the Lord lifteth up the light of his countenance upon me, this ſhall be my muſick and my ſong. And though in the good providences of God to him, he called for the Timbrel, and awakened his muſical Inſtruments, yet he adds, I my ſelf will awake right early; his was not bare rejoycing in the creature, but in God. A godly man can rejoyce when he hath none of theſe creature-comforts, he can then rejoyce in the Lord; then the Lord is to him more then an Organ, Tabret or Harp, infinitely more then in all theſe; he can rejoyce in the Lord more then in all manner of muſick, even then when he wants not only muſick, but meat (Hab. 3. 17.) Though the labour of the Olive ſhall fail, &c. yet will I joy in the Lord, and rejoyce in the God of my ſalvation; and the Lord is my ſtrength, and he is my ſong. Thus he rejoyceth when ſtript of all thoſe things which alone occaſion the worldly mans joy. God is a feaſt to him in famine; and when there is not any thing of the world to be had, he hath all in God; and how much ſoever a godly man hath of the world, he rejoyceth not in that, but in God, the creator, diſpoſer and giver of it. He rejoyceth when he hath the creature, but he rejoyceth not in the creature; his joy is in the Lord. He rejoyceth to ſee the good hand of God with him, but he rejoyceth not becauſe his hand hath gotten good. We find this holy man Job profeſſing, that he had not, and uſing a ſtrong imprecation upon himſelf if he had done ſo (chap. 31. 24, 25.) If I have made Gold my hope, if I have rejoyced becauſe my wealth was great, and becauſe mine hand had gotten much, then, &c. Job was not a man of a dark ſpirit, he knew how to rejoyce when the Candle of God ſhone upon him; but, ſaith he, whatſoever my worldly eſtate was, my rejoycing was in God, it was not in my worldly eſtate: But the carnal man rejoyceth in the world it ſelf, and indeed he hath nothing more to rejoyce in; he hath not a God or a Chriſt to rejoyce in, he hath not pardon of ſin, or the Grace of God to rejoyce in.

Before I paſs this point, I ſhall add ſomewhat more diſtinctly, concerning our rejoycing in and about the things of this life. We do not cenſure all joy, or think that they muſt needs be wicked who rejoyce and live comfortably in a proſperous outward condition. There is a threefold joy ſpoken of in Scripture; Firſt, A ſpiritual: Secondly, A ſenſitive or natural: Thirdly, A ſenſual joy.

Spiritual joy is either purely in ſpiritual things, when we rejoyce in God, in the grace and favour of God, in the light of his countenance, and in the pardon of our ſins. Or when we rejoyce ſpiritually about worldly things, and the good providences of God to us, either publick or private. There may be ſpiritual joy about that which is not ſpiritual; we may rejoyce ſpiritually, though the things be temporal in which we rejoyce; and it is one of the higheſt actings of Grace, to rejoyce ſpiritually about temporal things.

Secondly, There is a natural ſenſitive rejoycing, which in it ſelf, is neither good nor evil; it belongs to man as man; and Job ſpeaks of this at the twenty fifth verſe of this Chapter; Another dieth in the bitterneſs of his ſoul, and never eateth with pleaſure; he meaneth not ſinful pleaſure; but thus, he hath no natural contentment, no reliſh of, or joy with his meat; we ſay, a mans meat rejoyceth him, when it ſuits with his ſtomack, and pleaſeth his palat. As there is natural ſorrow and fear, which are ſpecificated good or evil, as we act and put them forth; ſo there is alſo natural joy or pleaſure. In this ſence the word Pleaſure is uſed (Eccleſ. 12. 1.) Where Solomon gives advice to the young man to remember his Creator in the dayes of his youth, before the evil dayes come, and the time wherein he ſhall ſay, I have no pleaſure in them; he meaneth not ſinful pleaſure, but natural pleaſure, ſuch as a man takes in what he eats and drinks. When David called Barzillai to Court, What ſhall I do there? (ſaith he) Can I taſte what I eat? &c. As if he had ſaid, thoſe dayes are come upon me in which I have no pleaſure.

Thirdly, There is ſenſual pleaſure, when the heart is as it were ſteeped, drenched and drunken with delights (Jam. 5. 5.) Ye have lived in pleaſure on the earth, and been wanton, ye have nouriſhed your hearts as in a day of ſlaughter. Which ſome render, unto a day of ſlaughter, as beaſts are fatted to be killed; or as in a time of feaſting, which is a day of ſlaughter to beaſts and fowls, for the feeding of man. Therefore he threatens them (verſ. 1.) Go to now ye rich men, weep and howl; pleaſure hath been your element, ye have lived in that: now ſorrow ſhall be your element, and your employment weeping (1 Tim. 5. 6.) She that liveth in pleaſure, that is, who giveth her ſelf up to delicacy, wantonneſs, laſciviouſneſs; he doth not ſay, ſhe that takes pleaſure in her life; there is no hurt in that: but, She that lives in pleaſure, is dead while ſhe liveth: And if ſhe be dead while ſhe liveth, how dead will ſhe be when ſhe dieth?

Further, We may conſider theſe ſenſual pleaſures or joyes in their ſinfulneſs, two wayes.

Firſt, There are ſome joyes ſinful in their very nature, others in reference to circumſtance, in both ſences we are to underſtand this Text, They rejoyce, that is, they rejoyce with ſuch a kind of joy as is ſinful in it ſelf; and though there be no ſin in the Harp, Timbrel and Organ, yet there may be a ſinful way of rejoycing in theſe (Heb. 11. 21.) Moſes choſe afflictions with the people of God, rather then to enjoy the pleaſures of ſin for a ſeaſon: Whether thoſe pleaſures were ſinful in their nature, or ſinful in their circumſtances, Moſes refuſed them. He did not refuſe pleaſure and comfort in his life, but the pleaſures of ſin; any evil that was in the pleaſure of this life, he refuſed, that pleaſure was a pain to him, and he choſe affliction rather.

But when are our rejoycings ſinful in their circumſtances? or what makes them ſinful to us when they are lawful in themſelves.

I anſwer, Joy may be lawful in it ſelf, yet ſinful; firſt, In the meaſure of it, if exceſſive. Which the Prophet gives us (Iſa. 41. 8.) Therefore hear now this thou that art given to pleaſures, that dwelleſt careleſly. When a man is given to pleaſure, he will ſoon be exceſſive in it; for this ſhews that pleaſure overſwayes his ſpirit, and hath gotten his heart. The Apoſtle would have Believers given to hoſpitality, that is, he would have them given to hoſpitality, but not given to pleaſure. Some are given to hoſpitality meerly becauſe they are given to pleaſure; they love not ſo much to feed others, as to glut themſelves.

Secondly, There is a ſinfulneſs in rejoycing, when unſeaſonable; There is a time to rejoyce, and a time to mourn. To rejoyce in ſome times is matter of great mourning; yet ſome will rejoyce let the time be what it will, the ſeaſons and dayes what they will; ſuch rejoycing is not good. Our rejoycing may be ſinful upon this account of unſeaſonableneſs, three wayes.

Firſt, When much of any time is ſpent in it. The time we ſpend in rejoycing, ſhould be but ſo much as may fit us for our ſerious and working times. When the Apoſtle exhorts Saints to rejoyce evermore (1 Theſ. 5. 16.) he means it of ſpiritual, not of worldly rejoycing.

Secondly, It is ſinful in regard of the ſeaſon, to be taken up with worldly rejoycings in any time ſet apart for the holy duties of faſting and humbling the ſoul before the Lord. The Prophet complains of this (Iſa. 58. 3.) They find their own pleaſure upon a day of faſt. To give the leaſt portion of time to worldly pleaſure upon a ſolemn day of Faſt or holy reſt, is ſinful.

Thirdly, Joy may be ſinful, as ſpecially in a day of faſt, ſo when ſad, troublous, calamitous ſeaſons continue many dayes (Iſa. 22. 13.) In that day the Lord called for weeping, &c. but behold mirth and rejoycing, ſlaying oxen and killing ſheep. So, Amos 6. 4, 5, 6. They ſit upon beds of Ivory, and ſtretch themſelves upon their couches, and eat the lambs out of the flock, and the calves out of the midſt of the ſtall; they chaunt to the ſound of the Viol, and invent to themſelves inſtruments of Muſick like David; but they are not grieved for the affliction of Joſeph. They had muſick like David, but they were far from ſuch a heart as David had. Many pattern themſelves by holy men in the things they do, who will not imitate their pattern in doing them. 'Tis our duty to ſympathize with the ſeaſons, and to forbear our perſonal comforts, when the publick ſits in ſorrow. They who rejoyce when the people of God mourn, ſhall mourn in their rejoycings. They ſhall not rejoyce in the joy of Gods people, nor be glad with his inheritance, who have been at all glad at their mournings, or have not refrained gladneſs in the dayes of their mourning.

They rejoyce at the ſound of the organ.] And, which is a further deſcription both of their worldly proſperity, and of their ſin.

Verſe 13. They ſpend their dayes in wealth.

They ſpend.] There is a double reading of the word, but the ſence of both is the ſame. Some thus; They grow old, or they conſume all their dayes; the indefinite is univerſal; They ſpend their dayes, that is, their whole life, in wealth; ſo we render. The Hebrew is, in good: What good? There are three ſorts of good. Firſt, Spiritual. Secondly, Civil. Thirdly, Corporal good; when he ſaith, they ſpend their dayes in good, he means not the firſt; they are far enough from ſpending their dayes in what is ſpiritually good; they deal but little in that which is morally or civilly good; their time and ſtrength are laid out chiefly in thoſe things which are but corporally good, or good only for the body; and, as they uſe them, ſcarce good for, yea, moſtly hurtful unto that; therefore we tranſlate well, they ſpend their dayes in wealth; wealth is but our bodily good. In common ſpeech a mans poſſeſſions and riches are called his goods, becauſe theſe are a good to the outward man; ſo the Vulgar tranſlates the Text, They ſpend out their dayes in good, or in good things, in the good things of this life. The word is uſed (Luke 16. 25.) Abraham in the Parable ſpeaking to the rich man, tells him, Son, remember that thou in thy life time receivedſt thy good things, and likewiſe Lazarus his evil things, that is, ſores and ſorrows, his pain and poverty. When David (1 Sam. 25. 8.) ſent his meſſenger to Nabal, deſiring ſome recruits of victual for his Army, which had been a good neighbour to him; Send thy bleſſing to thy ſon, for we are come to thee in a good day; what day was that? a day of feaſting; when there was a plentiful proviſion made of good things: It was ſheep-ſhearing day, and then they had ſtore. The things of the world are expreſſed under this title, good, (and they are all the good which ſome look after) in a threefold conſideration.

In Scriptura eſt יבלו vetuſtate conſumant in Lectione.
יכלו
Conſumunt ſimpliciter ſcriptum Beth, lectu Caph, ſenſus in idem recidit. Dr.
Ducunt in bonis dies ſuos. Vulg.

Firſt, In reference to the judgment of the world, or the vulgar opinion. They are good things, and many account them very good, yea ſome account them the chief good, placing felicity in them. The Holy Ghoſt ſpeaks the hearts of worldly men, They ſpend their dayes in good.

Secondly, Riches and the things of the world, are good as they are the creatures of God; theſe he made, and he made all things good.

Thirdly, They have not only a goodneſs of entity, but a goodneſs of uſe in them; the Lord hath made them very ſuitable to the needs and neceſſities, to the relations, affairs and buſineſſes of this life. And in theſe good things, worldly men ſpend all the dayes of their lives. They ſpend their dayes in ſpending it, or in beſtowing it upon their luſts. The Text intends the latter; having gotten enough to ſpend, they give themſelves to the ſpending of it all their dayes.

They ſpend their dayes in wealth.

Hence obſerve, That, The chief buſineſs of a worldly man is about his wealth.

He mindeth little or nothing but his wealth; he ſpends his dayes in a threefold care about it.

Firſt, In getting.

Secondly, In keeping.

Thirdly, In taking out thoſe pleaſures which wealth brings in.

Some get wealth, but have no heart to uſe it; others get wealth, and over-uſe or abuſe it; they ſpend their dayes in ſpending it, in feeding their luſts, in pleaſing their appetite with it. The rich Glutton would have his ſhare of what he had; he would not leave all to his Children, or to Executors. How poor an account is this of the expence of a mans dayes, that he hath ſpent them in wealth? Yet 'tis hard for thoſe who have much wealth, not to do it. A godly man who hath much wealth, is hard put to it, to keep himſelf from ſpending his dayes in it. Riches have more of the ſnare in them, then of comfort in them. Some have periſhed with want, but more have periſhed with abundance. Hypocrites make a gain of godlineſs; and when they have gained their ends, they lay by their godlineſs, and ſpend thoſe dayes in wealth, which they once profeſſed they would ſpend in walking with God. Many really godly, loſe much in ſpirituals, having gained much in temporals; they have been impoveriſhed by their riches; their beſt part hath decreaſed, while their worſer hath encreaſed. Now if it be ſo hard for thoſe who have a good ſtock of Grace, and a ſeed of eternal life in them, to mind heaven, while they have a great ſtock on the earth; how is it poſſible but that a hypocrite ſhould quite loſe thoſe ſpirituals which he ſeemed to have, when he hath gotten much in temporals? and that prophane men ſhould not be quite drowned and ſwallowed up in temporals, who did never ſo much as ſeem to have any thing in ſpirituals. Therefore (ſaith Chriſt, Mat. 19. 24.) It is eaſier for a Camel to go through the eye of a needle, then for a rich man to enter into the Kingdom of God. Mammon calls for the whole man, and ſtands in the way both of Grace and Glory. The poor have the Goſpel preached to them (Matth. 11. 5.) But is not the Goſpel preached alſo to the rich? Yes, the rich hear the Goſpel, but the poor receive it, or, as the word imports, are Goſpelized; they receive the love of it, and impreſſions from it; they receive the ſtamp of the Goſpel, and feel the power of it: Whereas uſually the rich hear only a ſound of words, and have only a form of knowledge, but have no knowledge of the power. Riches fill with cares; a multitude of riches with a multitude of cares: And they who have many cares about thoſe things which are but acceſſories, take little care about that one thing neceſſary, the due hearing of, and believing application of the Goſpel. They who are very diligent either about aſſuring or employing worldly wealth, about laying up or laying out the treaſures of the earth, ſeldom give any diligence about making their calling and election ſure, or about laying up treaſure in heaven. They are indeed rich in grace, whoſe graces are not hindred by riches, whoſe ſouls proſper when their bodies proſper; as the Apoſtle John ſpeaks in his third Epiſtle. Or, who (as 'tis propheſied, Pſal. 45. 12.) being full of worldly bleſſings, are yet hungry and eager in their purſuit after Chriſt. The daughter of Tyre ſhall be there with a gift (ſaith the Pſalmiſt) the rich among the people ſhall intreat thy favour, that is, either the favour of Chriſt himſelf, or the favour of the Church, by reaſon of that ſpiritual excellency and inward glory which ſhe hath received from Chriſt. Now to ſee the rich bring their gifts, and which is the thing chiefly aimed at there, giving up themſelves to Chriſt, this is a rare ſight, and a remarkable work of Grace.

And becauſe there is ſo much danger that they who have wealth, ſhould ſpend their dayes in it, or give themſelves up to it, and not to Chriſt, take two or three Rules of caution or admonition about this thing.

Firſt, When God puts wealth into your hand, ſuſpect your own hearts, and pray that ye may put it under your feet. The woman (Rev. 12. 1.) cloathed with the Sun, had the Moon (that is, all earthly things) under her feet; ſhe kept them under, and had them only for her uſe, her heart was above them.

Secondly, Labour to get a right value of wealth, if you would not ſpend your dayes in it. We ſeldom err in our affections, till we err in our judgment; if we did not over-value wealth, we ſhould not beſtow our all upon it; no man will lay out his time and ſtrength about that which he thinks meanly of. Know then, Firſt, That though riches are good things, yet they are an inferior good. Secondly, Though they are good, yet but a mutable good. Thirdly, They are to us as we uſe them; ſome things are ſo good, that he who hath them, cannot but be good. The Grace of God to us, and the Graces of his Spirit in us, find us evil, but make us good. But no man was ever made good by riches and worldly wealth; theſe have found ſome really good, and made them leſs good then they were; and they have found many ſeemingly good, whom they have made ſtark naught.

Thirdly, Uſe the Creature, but do not enjoy it; what we uſe, is uſed for ſome other end; what we enjoy, is enjoyed for it ſelf. The creature muſt only be uſed, becauſe it ſhould alwayes be directed to ſome further end; God ought to be loved for himſelf, and therefore he only is to be enjoyed. They who underſtand this diſtinction, will not ſpend their dayes in ſatisfying their luſts with wealth, but in ſerving the living God. Job's character of theſe men, may ſerve all men, who having wealth, have no faith in God; They ſpend their dayes in wealth.

And in a moment go down to the grave.

There is a double interpretation of this laſt clauſe; ſome expound it of the miſerable end of wicked men; others of their comfortable end.

Firſt, The words may hold out the miſerable end of a wicked man, who, though he hath all outward good things, though he be mighty in power, and his houſe be eſtabliſhed, yet in a moment he goeth down to the grave; he ſuddenly vaniſheth out of this world; and whither then? We read, he goeth down to the grave: others read, He goeth down to hell. The Hebrew word ſignifies both, and the doctrine of the Text is true both wayes; his body goeth down preſently to the grave, and his ſoul to hell; that's his place, and thither is his downfal, there's the end of his wealth and voluptuous life. Thus he is concluded in the Parable (Luke 16. 22, 23.) The rich man died and was buried, and in hell he lift up his eyes, being in torment, &c. This rich man was cloathed in purple and fine linnen, and fared deliciouſly every day (verſ. 19.) He is deſcribed fully, ſpending his dayes in wealth, and ending his dayes in wo; he in a moment went down to hell. But,

Et in puncto ad inferna deſcendit Vulg.

Secondly, I rather interpret this clauſe in a ſuitableneſs to what went before, as a deſcription of the comfortable death of a wicked man; who, as he flouriſhed all the dayes of his life, ſo (to compleat his bodily comforts) he hath a very kind and peaceable death. The word which we render moment (implying the ſuddenneſs of his change) ſignifying alſo quietneſs or peaceableneſs, and to be quiet and reſt (Iſa. 51. 4.) Hearken unto me, my people, and give ear unto me, O my Nation; for a Law ſhall proceed from me, and I will make my judgment (that is, the doctrine of holineſs) to reſt (that is, I will quietly ſettle it) for a light to the people, that is, to enlighten their minds with the clear and ſaving knowledg of the truth. In this ſence (for reſt) the word is again uſed (Jer. 50. 34.) It may bear both ſences in this place; They ſpend their dayes in wealth, and go to the grave in a moment and ſuddenly, or in quiet and in peace, they have no trouble in death. This their reſt or quietneſs in death, may be underſtood two wayes.

ורגע Significat punctum, momentum & placidā quietem, vel quievit, per antiphraſin.

In quiete deſcendunt in infernos

Firſt, They have no inward trouble of Conſcience, no gnawing of the worm though the worm of Conſcience be hungry, and hath matter enough in them to feed upon, yet it is not permitted to feed upon them, that is, to vex and torment them. A wicked man may die quietly, without any the leaſt queſtion upon his ſpirit about his ſpiritual condition, as if all were well, and would be well with him for ever; Whereas indeed, the quietneſs that he hath, is not from any knowledge of his good eſtate, but from ignorance of his ill eſtate; he knoweth not that the wrath of God hangs over him, and that the juſtice of God is bent againſt him, and therefore he goeth quietly to the grave. A godly man dieth in peace, becauſe he knoweth his eſtate is good; but if a wicked man die in peace, it is becauſe he knoweth not his eſtate is evil.

Multi cum hac ſpe ad æternos cruciatus deſcendunt.

Secondly, They have no outward trouble, no pain in the body, or diſturbance in their outward affairs; thus wicked men may die a peaceable, yea, a pleaſant death; they are not tired with long ſickneſſes, they are not put upon the rack of tormenting diſeaſes before they die; they are not afflicted with nauſeous medicines and tedious courſes of phyſick, which to many are more grievous then ſickneſs or death it ſelf. Many who have eſcaped the ſorrows of eternal death, meet with much ſorrow in their temporal death. They whoſe peace is made by the death of Chriſt, find much pain and trouble when they come to die; whereas many wicked men die (as it were) in health, and go not only quickly, but quietly to the grave, having reſt, ſuch as it is, both in body and mind, when their bodies are laid down to reſt, even their dying may look like ſleeping.

Morte placidiſſima & quæ diuturnitate non affligit de medio tollitur, quaſi ſponte naturæ concedēs Pin.

And as this word ſhews the eaſineſs of their death, ſo the ſpeed and ſuddenneſs of it. Thus we tranſlate expreſly; In a moment they go down to the grave. He dieth without ſtop or ſtay, his is not a lingring death; if a man have not much pain in ſickneſs, yet if he lie long ſick, his living is a kind of dying. David or Aſaph (Pſal. 73. 4.) deſcribes the proſperity of wicked men both in life and death; I was envious when I ſaw the proſperity of the wicked, &c. There are no bands in their death, their ſtrength is firm, that is, when they die they are not bound by diſeaſes, nor held down by chronical or laſting and grinding pains; they die, and it can hardly be diſcerned that they were ever ſick; they fall off as fruit from the tree fully ripe, with the leaſt touch, and this is their proſperity in death. The Prophet Jeremy aggravates the miſery of the Jews in their captivity upon this conſideration (Lam. 4. 6.) The puniſhment of the iniquity of the daughter of my people is greater then the puniſhment of the ſin of Sodom, that was overthrown as in a moment, and no hands ſtayed on her. Sodom was deſtroyed in a moment, but Jeruſalems deſtruction was long a working, ſhe maintained a war, which procured many miſeries, eſpecially that of Famine; which as it is the moſt painful, ſo the moſt dilatory or lingring way of dying. Job to ſhew the happineſs of wicked men in death, tells us, they die in a moment, they ſlip out of the world they know not how, or before they are aware of it.

Mors eo crudelior quo ſegnior.

Mors jucunda cujus nulla præceſſit expectatio aut metus.

Sudden death is alwayes evil, but ſpeedy death is good. The ſloweſt death is the moſt cruel. Tyrants kill men by piece-meal, they will have them take notice that they are dying, they will not diſpatch them at a blow, but let them die limb by limb. Dyoniſius the Tyrant is ſaid to have envied a Beaſt whoſe throat he ſaw cut, becauſe he died ſo ſoon. Cæſar reading in Zenophon, what care Cyrus took in his life for his Funeral, ſcorned him for it, wiſhing he might die ſpeedily. That's a good death to Nature, which is neither feared nor expected; yet that is the beſt death which hath been longeſt expected and prepared for. And hence,

Some may ſay, It were better wicked men ſhould have ſome delayes in death, for then poſſibly they might repent.

I anſwer; Firſt, Job ſpeaks not to the ſpiritual or eternal ſtate of wicked men; and as to their temporal ſtate, a ſpeedy death is better then a lingring death. I may anſwer,

Secondly, Sick-bed repentance is uſually a very ſick repentance. We ſet no limits to the mercy and grace of God, but we ſpeak what is uſual among men.

Thirdly, They that neglect repentance in health, ſeldom mind it in ſickneſs; ſome have made ſad complaints of the miſery of their friends, becauſe ſo ſuddenly taken away by one ſtroak without any time to repent. But they might remember that many have been ſhut up cloſe priſoners in their chambers, and chained down to their beds, for divers moneths, who never thought of repenting and turning to God. Death is never ſudden to them who live well; and they who live ill, ſeldom mend when they die, though they are long a dying. Thus Job hath oppoſed the experience of many to the opinion of his friends, about the preſent ſtate of wicked men, and Gods dealing with them both in life and death. In the following words he ſhews us how their proſperity wrought with them, how they took occaſion from theſe outward bleſſings in which they abounded, to arm and encourage themſelves in their rebellion againſt the Lord, who poured out thoſe benefits and earthly bleſſings upon them in abundance, and exerciſed long-ſufferance and patience towards them, till they had ſpent their dayes in pleaſing themſelves and provoking him.

VERS. 14, 15.

Therefore they ſay unto God, depart from us; for we deſire not the knowledge of thy wayes.

What is the Almighty, that we ſhould ſerve him? and what profit ſhould we have if we pray unto him?

IN theſe two verſes we have the picture of a wicked man drawn to the life (or rather to the death) of his ſtate and diſpoſition. For leſt it ſhould be thought that while Job ſpake of the proſperity of the wicked, he meant it of ſuch only as uſed a kind of moderation in ſinning, or had ſome mixture and appearances, at leaſt, of ſome eminent virtues among their enormous vices, he therefore by a Rhetorical imitation of their blaſphemous ſpeeches and opinions concerning the moſt holy God and his wayes, aſſured his friends that his experiences had taught him, that even they who have not in them the leaſt imaginable ſpark or ray of goodneſs, are yet filled with abundance, and yet enjoy an affluence of worldly goods: As if he had ſaid, My friend Zophar, according to the tenour of thy Doctrine, they muſt be reckoned for very holy and good men, as the Darlings, ſpecial Favourites and boſom-friends of God, who enjoy ſuch earthly proſperity as I have ſpoken of; but behold theſe men, and tell me what goodneſs thou findeſt in them, Who ſay unto God, depart from us, &c.

Theſe men are perſonated by Job, as offering a fourfold indignity unto God.

Firſt, They tell God (as we do thoſe whom we hate, or at leaſt, deeply diſreſpect) that they had rather have his room then his company; They ſay unto God, depart from us.

Secondly, They ſlight his doctrine and his inſtitutions; We deſire not the knowledge of his wayes.

Thirdly, They eſteem him unworthy of any attendance or worſhip; What is the Almighty, that we ſhould ſerve him?

Fourthly, They conclude his worſhip and ſervice as vain and fruitleſs; What profit ſhould we have if we pray unto him?

Verſe 14. Therefore they ſay unto God depart from us.

The Hebrew is, and they ſay: It is uſual in Scripture to give that conjunctive particle the efficacy of a cauſal. So we render it here; Therefore, or for this reaſon, namely, becauſe they flouriſh and are full, therefore they grow weary of, and are burdened with the thought of God; They ſay unto God, &c. How do they ſay it? They ſay thus three wayes.

Firſt, Some are ſo bold and impudent, as to ſay it with their mouths, they ſay it explicitly and in plain terms; they ſpeak it out to God, Depart from us.

Secondly, All wicked men ſay this in their hearts and minds; they ſpeak it internally, this is the daily language of their ſpirits to God, Depart from us, They who love not God with their hearts, would be rid of God with all their hearts. So the Apoſtle deſcribeth the Gentiles (Rom. 1. 28.) They did not like to retain God in their knowledge, or (as we put in the Margin) to acknowledge God. They caſt the notions of God out of their minds or underſtandings, as a worthleſs piece of knowledge.

Thirdly, Wicked men (the fairer ſort of hypocrites only excepted) ſay this with their works (Tit. 1. 11.) They profeſs that they know God, but in works they deny him; being abominable, diſobedient, and unto every good work reprobate. Prophane perſons are aſhamed to profeſs the knowledge of God; groſs hypocrites boaſt in a profeſſion of God, but their practice is a denial of God. The tranſgreſſion of the wicked (ſaith holy David, Pſal. 36. 1, 2.) ſaith within my heart, there is no fear of God before his eyes. The profeſſion of ſome wicked men ſaith they fear God; but their tranſgreſſion or trade of ſin ſaith, there's no ſuch matter. We may interpret this Text of the wicked man ſaying thus, all theſe three wayes. Some ſay it with their their mouths; all, even the moſt modeſt of them, ſay it in their hearts; very many ſay it in their lives, their doings being a daily defiance againſt God, and a kind of command upon him to depart.

Again, To ſay, hath in it more then a bare word, or ſay-ſo, it implyeth a decree or ſtatute, a full purpoſe or reſolution about the thing. When David (Pſal. 32. 5.) expreſſeth himſelf thus, I ſaid I will confeſs my ſin, &c. And Pſal. 39. 1. I ſaid, I will take heed to my wayes, he intends a fixed and immoveable reſolve upon godly repentance in the one, and of Godly watchfulneſs in the other. And though this Text is not ſo full for it in the letter, as the two alledged, yet without breach of charity, or wreſting Scripture, we may expound this as high. They ſay (as reſolved and ſet upon the thing) to God, depart.

Nomen El fortitudinē denotat.

The word El, by which God is here ſet forth, ſpeaks his ſtrength and power, The ſtrong God; which we may note to argue both the folly and the impudence of the creature in ſpeaking thus: The weakneſs of God is ſtronger then man, and yet weak man lifts up himſelf againſt the ſtrong God; and while he thus tells him, that he cares not for his preſence, doth indeed dare him in the utmoſt of his power.

There are four words by which God is expreſſed in Scripture, upon a diſtinct conſideration of four eminent excellencies in him.

Firſt, When the ſelf-being and unchangeable nature of God are chiefly intended, He is called by his Name Jehovah.

Secondly, When the efficiency and governing power of God in the adminiſtration of all things both in heaven and earth are ſignified, he is called by the Name Elohim.

Thirdly, When his goodneſs, bounty and munificence are exalted, he is called Shaddai.

Fourthly, When the irreſiſtible ſtrength and force of God to accompliſh his own decrees and counſels, both of mercy and juſtice, are deſcribed, he is called by the Name in the Text, El.

Nor will it be unuſeful here to add, that in Scripture, man is expreſſed by four different Names, to hold out a fourfold condition or ſtate of man.

Firſt, When the virtues and beſt perfections of man are ſpoken of, he is properly repreſented under this title of Job.

Secondly, When his ſtrength, honour and greatneſs are aimed at, he is called Geber.

Thirdly, To note his original of earth, and his natural weakneſs, he is termed Adam.

Fourthly, His accidental miſery, poverty, ſorrows and infirmities, denominate him Enos.

Now take man, not only as his name Adam imports, which is common to all; or as his name Enos ſpeaks him, which is the lot of moſt; but alſo as he is Iſh or Geber, which names are competible but to very few; yet for man at the higheſt pitch attainable of his ſtrength or perfections, to ſpeak proudly to God, to ſay unto El, the ſtrong, mighty, the almighty God, depart from me, how abominable! Yet thus the wicked ſay to God.

Depart from us.] The word ſignifies properly to divert or recede from a place, or to give and make room, that the way may be clear and un-obſtructed for the paſſage of another. As if wicked men ſhould ſay to God, Room for us; as if one houſe, one place, yea one world could not hold God and them. Indeed God filleth heaven and earth, yea the heaven of heavens cannot contain him, yet God ſtraightens no man by his preſence, though wicked men think they can never have room enough where God is preſent. Hence it is that wicked men are called, Men far from God, Pſal. 73. 27. Lo, they that be far from thee ſhall periſh. And who theſe are, David telleth us in the latter part of the verſe; Thou haſt deſtroyed all them that go a whoring from thee: As a man who cares not for his wife, would willingly put her away from him, and goeth himſelf to an adulterous bed; ſo the wicked man, having no love in his heart to God, bids him be gone, and goeth himſelf a whoring from him, that is, he embraceth the creatures, and giveth his heart up into the hands of the world; therefore he is called, A man far off. In oppoſition to which, the people of God are called, his Nigh Ones, or thoſe who draw nigh unto him (Lev. 10. 3.) And David in the next verſe of the Pſalm laſt cited, concludeth, But it is good for me to draw nigh unto God.

רחוקי אל Longinqui Dei.

קרובי אל Propinqui Dei.

Further, This phraſe, depart from us, may imply the rejection and diſtaſte of thoſe tenders and offers of good things, which God makes to wicked men, inviting them home to himſelf. As we uſe to ſay to thoſe, who over-officiouſly proffer us their wares or commodities as we paſs in the ſtreets of ſome City, why do you thus preſs upon us, and trouble us? be gone, we have no mind or no leiſure to buy. Thus they ſay to God, depart from us. Hence obſerve;

Firſt, Riches and worldly proſperity provoke or occaſion wicked men to have contemptuous thoughts of God.

The cauſal particle leads us to this Obſervation; Therefore they ſay, &c. David having confeſſed his own ſin (Pſal. 73. 3.) I was envious at the fooliſh, when I ſaw the proſperity of the wicked; ſheweth (verſ. 6.) what ſin proſperity bred up in them. Therefore pride compaſſeth them about as a chain, violence covereth them as a garment. (verſ. 8.) They are corrupt and ſpeak wickedly. (ver. 9.) They ſet their mouth againſt the heavens, that is, they ſpake blaſphemouſly againſt the God of heaven. They charged their mouths with inſolent words, and then (their tongues being ſet on fire by hell) they diſcharged them like a thundering Canon againſt heaven. Moſes warns the Iſraelites (Deut. 8. 10, 11, 12.) When thou haſt eaten and art full, then thou ſhalt bleſs the Lord thy God for the good Land which he hath given thee; then beware that thou forget not the Lord thy God, leſt when thy herds and thy flocks multiply, thine heart be lifted up, and thou forget the Lord thy God. How jealous was Moſes, or rather the Spirit of God by Moſes, over that ancient people, leſt they ſhould forget God when he had remembred them? leſt they ſhould then make void the Commandments of God, when he had made good his Covenant? leſt their hearts ſhould be lifted up againſt God, after his hand had been ſo often lifted up for them? And what Moſes here by way of propheſie (foreſeeing the naughtineſs of their hearts, cautions them not to do) the ſame Moſes, in the ſame Book (chap. 32. 15.) by way of hiſtory, reproves them that they had done. But Jeſurun waxed fat and kicked, thou art waxen fat, thou art grown thick, thou art covered with fatneſs, then he forſook God that made him, and lightly eſteemed the Rock of his ſalvation. Even Iſrael being grown fat as a beaſt in the green paſtures of a worldly proſperity, played the beaſt and kicked with the heel; but againſt whom did he kick? he kicked againſt God, and againſt him in a twofold relation: Firſt, As his Creator; He forſook the God that made him. Secondly, As a Preſerver or Saviour; He lightly eſteemed the rock of his ſalvation: No wonder if their rock ſold them (as it followeth, ver. 30.) when they valued their rock at ſo low a price. God made his people of great value (yea, he called them his peculiar treaſure) and then they grew to ſuch high thoughts of themſelves, and were ſo great in their own eyes, that preſently God was undervalued and little in their eyes. Thus the Lord complained of them long after by his Prophet (Hoſ. 13. 6.) According to their paſture, ſo were they filled; they were filled, and their heart was exalted (not in thankfulneſs and in praiſe, but in pride) therefore they have forgotten me. As to remember God (in Scripture-language) is to obey, ſerve and honour him; ſo to forget God, is to rebel and riſe up againſt him. This moved the Apoſtle Paul to give Timothy his leſſon for rich men (1 Tim. 6. 17.) Charge them that are rich in this world, that they be not high-minded, nor truſt in uncertain riches, but in the living God, who giveth us all things to enjoy. They who are rich in this world, are uſually moſt poor for the world to come; and while their eſtates are high, their minds are higher. Low things make the mind high, but with ſuch a highneſs, as is indeed not only the lowneſs, but the baſeneſs of the mind. While the mind is heightned by the uſe and poſſeſſion of low things (ſuch comparatively are the higheſt of earthly things) it is it ſelf made lower then the loweſt, and leſs (not in humility, but in vanity) then the leaſt of things. Then both mind and man are loweſt of all, when they neglect or lightly eſteem the high God. To this departure from God, the preſence and abundance of the world endangers every man, and wicked men are ever enſnared with the danger; Therefore they ſay to God, depart from us.

Secondly obſerve, Wicked men have no mind to God, they cannot abide his preſence.

There is in them an evil heart of unbelief in departing from the living God (Heb. 3. 12.) and in ſaying to God, depart from us. God ſaith to his people, Hoſ. 9. 12. Wo unto you when I depart; they think it beſt for them when God departeth. Saints know not how to live a comfortable day, much leſs to be happy without him; wicked men know not how to live a comfortable hour, much leſs to be ever happy with him. The Church ſaith to God, Leave us not (Jer. 14.)

The world ſaith, O that God would leave us. When ſhall we be eaſed and unburdened of his preſence? There is nothing ſo joyous to the righteous, nor ſo grievous to the wicked, as to have God near them.

But it may be ſaid, Is God near the wicked? or have they any need to deſire the Lord to depart from them? Is he not already departed and gone far from them?

I anſwer; Wicked men are far from the favour and love of God, but they are not far from his eye and knowledge. God is already departed from wicked men, or rather was never near them, in regard of his ſpecial preſence; but he is near even to them in regard of his general and common preſence. Yea, wicked men find and feel God often in their Conſciences, though they never found him in their Affections. God makes offers to wicked men, and though God be not actively in all their thoughts (as the Scripture ſpeaks, Pſal. 10. 4.) that is, they do not willingly meditate or think of God, they maintain no correſpondence or communion with him in their inner man; yet God doth (like an unbidden and unwelcome Gueſt) put himſelf into their thoughts, and moves in their minds; this proves their trouble, and becomes a pain unto them. As God is not far from every one of us (good and bad) becauſe (as the Apoſtle argueth with thoſe at Athens, Acts 17. 27, 28.) In him we live, and move, and have our being; ſo we may ſay, that he is not far from many wicked men, becauſe he moveth and ſtirs in them, he preſents to their minds ſome maniſeſtations of himſelf in his Juſtice and Holineſs; yea, of his Truth, Long-ſuffering and Goodneſs, in none of which they either deſire or accept acquaintance with him; and therefore ſay to God, depart from us, trouble us not; and when once they can baniſh theſe thoughts, and live thus without God in the world, then they think they live indeed; and till then, they reckon their lives a kind of death: And hence it is, that (as we have ſeen by ſad examples) ſome have thruſt themſelves out of the world with their own hands, becauſe they could not thruſt theſe thoughts of God out of their hearts and conſciences. Their ſouls have ſometimes proved a burden to their bodies, to whoſe ſouls the thought of God was a burden. And they, who upon theſe terms, part ſoul and body, have indeed ſaid to God, Depart from us. Hence note, Thirdly, To be weary of the preſence of God, is the ſtrongeſt argument that a man is wicked.

Purely to love and pray for the preſence of God, is the ſureſt ſign of a gracious heart; therefore purely to deſire and wiſh the abſence or departure of God, muſt needs conclude that heart ungracious. One thing (ſaith David, Pſal. 27. 4.) have I deſired of the Lord, that will I ſeek after, that is, I will earneſtly purſue, and unweariedly proſecute the grant of this deſire) that I may dwell in the houſe of the Lord all the dayes of my life, to behold the beauty of the Lord, and to enquire in his Temple. And again he breathes the ſame ſpirit of holy impatience, till he might enjoy that favour (Pſal. 42. 1, 2.) As the Hart panteth after the water-brooks, ſo panteth my ſoul after thee, O God; my ſoul thirſteth for God, for the living God, when ſhall I come and appear before God? In theſe ſtrains of divineſt Rhetorick was the ſoul of David carried out after God. He was the One thing, He was the Only thing he longed for; without God all was nothing with him; in Him he had all: His preſence was enough for him. All company, multitudes and throngs of men, yea, of Saints, or good men, was but ſolitarineſs and widowhood to him, without the preſence of God. This was the higheſt aſcent of his holineſs. Is it not then the loweſt deſcent of unholineſs, to be troubled at the preſence of God? Is it not a full conviction of a carnal man, and of a wicked man, to think it long till God be gone, or to deprecate his preſence, and urge his departure? This frame of heart is the very blackneſs of helliſh darkneſs, and the expreſs the Image of the Devils perſon. Such are (though not poſſeſſed with, yet) under the poſſeſſion of the evil Spirit: The Goſpel (Matth. 8. 28, 29.) makes report of two men poſſeſſed with Devils, coming out of the Tombes, exceeding fierce, ſo that no man could paſs by that way; and behold they cried out, ſaying, what have we to do with thee, thou Jeſus the ſon of the living God? art thou come hither to torment us before the time? It is the Devils torment to be near Chriſt, or to have any appearance of God; are not they then neareſt the Devil to whom God is a torment? Or who (like theſe in Job) do as thoſe Gadarens to Chriſt in the laſt verſe of that Chapter, come and beſeech him, that he will depart out of their Coaſts, that ſo if it were poſſible, they might never more hear of him, nor from him. Which is plainly imported in the next clauſe of the Verſe.

For we deſire not the knowledge of thy wayes.

Though God, in himſelf conſidered, be the firſt and chiefeſt object of a wicked mans enmity, yet this quarrel uſually breaks out at the diſcoveries of his will and wayes. Thus in the Text, they reject God becauſe of his wayes. The wayes of a wicked man (as the Pſalmiſt hath it) are alwayes grievous to God as well as man; and ſo are the wayes of God grievous to wicked men, and therefore they deſire no acquaintance with, no knowledge of them. As if Job had thus ſpoken in their perſon. If the caſe ſtand thus, O God, that we cannot have thee and the good things which thou haſt promiſed, unleſs we alſo learn and ſubmit to thy wayes, then be gone; for thy wayes are a loathing to our ſouls, thy wayes are rough, ſharp, ſad and unſuitable to our ſpirits and genius. If we ſhould faſhion our ſelves, and ſhape our courſe according to the rules which thou preſcribeſt, ſhould we not be expoſed to the laughter, if not to the danger of all the world? Should we not bury our ſelves alive, and be deprived of all the comforts of our lives? muſt we not ſpend our time in ſorrow or ſilence, and never ſee good day more? As for us, we know ſo much of thy wayes already, that we have no deſire to the knowledge of them; we are provided of better wayes, of wayes more eaſie, ſmooth, plain and pleaſant; and therefore what deſire can we have to thine?

For we deſire not,] The word ſignifieth to take pleaſure or delight in, as well as to deſire; becauſe thoſe things which we delight in, are moſt deſired by us; ſo we read it, Pſal. 1. 2. But his delight is in the Law of the Lord. And (Pſal. 4.) Thou art not a God that takeſt pleaſure in (or, a deſire unto) wickedneſs. So here, We deſire not (or we have no pleaſure in) the knowledge of thy wayes. And when they ſay, we deſire not, &c. more is intended then the bare Negative of their deſire; we may reſolve this Negative into an Affirmative, we diſlike, yea, we hate the knowledge of thy wayes. He that is not with me (ſaith Chriſt) is againſt me: We alſo may ſay, He that is not a well-wiſher to, and deſirous of the wayes of God, oppoſeth and rejects them. So that in this we have a deſcription of affected ignorance. He that doth not know the wayes of God, is ignorant; for it is every mans duty to know them: but he that hath no deſire to that knowledge, is in love with his own ignorance, and is pleaſed with it.

חפץ Non tam velle ſignificat quam delectari re aliqua.

But what are theſe wayes of God, which find ſo little acceptance with wicked men?

I anſwer firſt in general, that by the wayes of God, he doth not here intend thoſe wayes in which God walketh, but thoſe which God hath made for man to walk in. More diſtinctly, the wayes of God are threefold.

Firſt, The wayes of his counſel and decrees: To endeavour or deſire the knowledge of theſe wayes, is not our duty, but our curioſity; as theſe ought not to be ſearched, ſo they are paſt finding out, Rom. 11. 33.

Secondly, The wayes of his providence and outward adminiſtration, of which the Pſalmiſt ſpeaketh (Pſal. 145. 17.) The Lord is righteous in all his wayes, and holy in all his works. And though ſome of theſe wayes are not knowable, for (Pſal. 77. 19.) His way is in the Sea, and his paths in the great waters, and his footſteps are not known, that is, his footſteps many times in his wayes upon the Land, are no more ſeen then a way is to be ſeen in the Sea, or a path in the great waters. Frequent paſſage makes a track or beaten path upon the Land; but how frequently ſoever paſſages are made upon the face of the Sea, no print nor path remains. Thus it is with many of the wayes of God, we cannot ſee where he hath gone, yet it is our duty to ſee his goings, and to deſire the knowledge of theſe wayes.

Thirdly, The wayes of God are his Commandments, or thoſe Rules of life, in and by which we ought to walk, and regulate our whole courſe: and theſe are of two ſorts.

Firſt, The wayes of worſhip. Secondly, the wayes of practice, or of manners. Theſe are called the wayes of God, becauſe they lead unto God, and land us (through Chriſt) ſafe in heaven. Here in the Text, the wayes of God, the knowledge whereof wicked men do not deſire, are the ſecond and third; as for the firſt, it is a part of ſome mens wickedneſs over-boldly to preſs and pry into them. And while they neglect the revealed will of God, which they ought both to know and do, they are very buſie about his ſecret will, which they cannot know, but may be (though intentionally on their part it never be) done by them, and ſhall (judicially on Gods part) be done upon them. Hence obſerve, Firſt, Wicked men bear no love to, nor have any delight in the knowledge of the Commandments and Ordinances of God.

Thus Solomon reproves them (Prov. 1. 22, 25, 29, 30.) How long ye ſimple ones, will ye love ſimplicity? (He means it not of that ſimplicity which is oppoſed to craftineſs and double-mindedneſs, but of that which is oppoſed to wiſdom and ſpiritual-mindedneſs, as the next words expound it) and the ſcorners delight in their ſcorning? (ſc. at the wayes of God) and fools hate knowledge? He means not the ſimple fool (for though ſuch have no knowledge, yet they cannot be ſaid to hate it) but the filthy fool, or the wicked man in the Text, theſe hate knowledge; and to theſe he ſpeaks (verſe 25.) Ye have ſet at naught all my counſel, and would none of my reproof. And again of theſe (verſ. 29, 30.) They hated knowledge, and did not chuſe the fear of the Lord; they would none of my counſel; they deſpiſed all my reproof. We are not to underſtand Solomon in theſe paſſages, as giving the character of ſome ſpecial wicked men; for though ſome are more exceſſive then others in their love to the wayes of ſin, yet they all (even the moſt temperate) meet in this, that they deſire not the knowledge of the wayes of Holineſs.

Here it may be queſtioned, Why doth the knowledge of the wayes of God trouble them ſo much? Indeed the practice of and obedience to them, may be burdenſome to natural men, but what can their knowledge hurt or grieve them?

I anſwer, Firſt, It is not eaſie to fleſh and blood to ſtudy for, or make application to the means of any knowledge, much leſs of the wayes of God; Knowledge will coſt ſome pains; knowledge, eſpecially divine knowledge, is the gift of God; yet it calls for our induſtry, not only to do what we know, but alſo to know what to do (Prov. 2. 1, 2, 3, 4.) My ſon, if thou wilt receive my words, and hide my Commandments with thee, ſo that thou encline thine thine ear unto wiſdom, and apply thy heart to underſtanding. To the receiving of the Word and Commandment of God, which hold forth the knowledge of his wayes, there muſt be an inclining of the ear, that is, frequent hearing; and applying of the heart, that is, frequent meditation. The two next verſes import yet a ſtronger diligence, even a crying after knowledge, and a lifting up the voyce for underſtanding; a ſeeking her as ſilver, and a ſearching for her as for hid treaſure. Hence the concluſion of the Preacher (Eccl. 1. 18.) is in ſome ſence extendible to all ſorts of knowledge; He that increaſeth knowledge, increaſeth ſorrow: for though to know be a delight, yet the means of increaſing knowledge, hath ſomewhat of pains and trouble in it.

Secondly, The knowledge ſpoken of in this Scripture, is not a meer aery, notional, ſpeculative knowledge, but an experimental and a practical knowledge; if it were only a knowledge of the wayes of God, that we might be able to talk and diſcourſe of them, that would ſuffice, many wicked men might be deſirous of that knowledge; but becauſe this knowledge obligeth to obedience, and they are called upon to know the Commandments of God, to do them, and to know the wayes of God, to walk in them, therefore they deſire not that knowledge.

Thirdly, They deſire not to know the wayes of God, leſt they ſhould be troubled for not walking in them. Their ignorance of them, they conceive to be ſome excuſe or extenuation of their ſin in not doing them (though indeed their ignorance being affected, is one of the higheſt aggravations of their ſin) for it is far eaſier to ſin without light, then againſt it; and to err by not receiving the truth, then by holding it in unrighteouſneſs (as the Apoſtle ſpeaks, Rom. 1. 18.) Light and knowledge where they are, will be urging duty upon the Conſcience. It is no little trouble to put by theſe motions, and keep down this light, and it is far more troubleſome to go contrary to them.

Knowledge hath three things attending upon it.

Firſt, An obligation to duty: A man is not free from his own bands (though he be from others) to forbear the doing of what he knoweth.

Secondly, As knowledge is an obligation, ſo it is a provocation to duty; it will put a man on, and urge him, it will be as a ſpur in his ſide to make him go, yea, run the wayes of God.

Thirdly, Knowledge hath a ſting, a vexation in it when we neglect duty. The Conſcience of a wicked man doth often break in upon him, and ſmite him, when he knowingly breaks out of the wayes of God. Now leſt the knowledge of the wayes of God ſhould be troubleſome to wicked men in any of theſe three things, therefore to way-lay and prevent their own trouble, they have no deſire to the knowledge of thoſe wayes. Beſides, their deſires after the knowledge of thoſe wayes is ſtopt and quencht by a multitude of prejudices and hard thoughts which they have of thoſe wayes; as firſt, That they are unequal and rigorous; therefore the Lord taxeth his ancient people for that apprehenſion (Mal. 1. 13.) Ye ſaid alſo, behold what a wearineſs is it? And he calls them by the Prophet Micah, to give an account in what (Micah 6. 3.) O my people, what have I done unto thee, and wherein have I wearied thee, teſtifie againſt me. Secondly, As diſhonourable and contumelious; they think the wayes of God too low and ſimple for their ſpirits, and are aſhamed to be found in the practice of them. The word of God is in that ſence, a reproach to them. Thirdly, As fruitleſs and unprofitable; they ſee not what they can get by them; and then why ſhould they go in them? Which prejudice is expreſly held out in the latter clauſe of the following verſe.

Secondly obſerve, Not to deſire to know the wayes of God, is more ſinful and dangerous then the ignorance of them.

There are three ſorts of ignorance. Firſt, A groſs or invincible ignorance, which proceeds either from the total abſence of all means of knowledge, or from a total inability to manage and improve thoſe means. Secondly, There is an unwilling ignorance in the midſt of means and abilities to know; a man may be ignorant of ſome things which he is willing enough to know, and this ignorance may run him upon that evil which he had not (premeditately and purpoſely) a will to do. Thirdly, There is a willing ignorance; when a man hath no will to know, yea, reſiſts all the means of knowledge. When he not only doth not know the evil which he doth, but therefore refuſeth knowledge, that he may more freely do evil, and may have this to ſay for himſelf when he doth evil, that he knew not how to refuſe the evil, and chuſe the good. As that is a high wickedneſs ſpoken of by the Prophet (Iſa. 5. 20.) knowingly to call evil good, and good evil, to put light for darkneſs, and darkneſs for light; ſo it is not a wickedneſs of a lower ſtature, willingly to refuſe knowledge, that ſo we may not be able in our actings to diſtinguiſh light from darkneſs, good from evil, but may run blind-fold upon any thing which our own luſts and advantages prompt us to do. The Prophet (Iſa. 58. 2.) ſpeaketh of ſome, who delighted to know the wayes of God, as a Nation that did righteouſneſs, and forſook not the Ordinance of their God. Such are hypocrites. But there are a ſort who delight not to know the wayes of God, that ſo they may do unrighteouſneſs, and never be engaged to live up to the Ordinances of God; ſuch are prophane. Both fall into the ſame condemnation; the one for not doing what they pretend they have a delight to know, the other for not delighting in the knowledge of that which they ought to do. The prophaneneſs of this latter ſort is perſonated in this verſe, and is yet ſet in a more open light in the verſe which followeth.

Verſe 15. What is the Almighty that we ſhould ſerve him? and what profit ſhall we have if we pray unto him?

This verſe aſſignes the reaſon (ſuch as it is) which lieth in the bottom of the hearts of wicked men alwayes, and ſometimes appeareth at their lips, as the reaſon why they ſay to God, depart from us, &c. They who bid God be gone from them, have ſaid in their hearts, and are ready enough to ſay it with their mouths,

What is the Almighty ? &c.] Some read it in the Maſculine Gender, Who is the Almighty? We in the Neuter; the ſence of both is one, and that as bad a one as is imaginable or utterable: As if they had ſaid, What is there in God more then in another? we ſee nothing in him extraordinary, why he ſhould expect, or why we ſhould give him any extraordinary ſervice. Such queryings, whether concerning things or perſons, God or man, ſignifie the higheſt contempt and diſeſteem of either. When Moſes ſaid to God concerning himſelf (Exod. 3. 11.) Who am I that I ſhould go to Pharaoh? He laid himſelf quite below that important ſervice. When David ſaid to God concerning himſelf (2 Sam. 7. 18.) Who am I, O Lord God, and what is my houſe, that thou haſt brought me hitherto? He laid himſelf quite below that eminent mercy. When Nabal ſaid to David's Meſſengers requeſting a ſupply of victual for his Army (1 Sam. 25. 16.) Who is David? and who is the Son of Jeſſe? He laid him quite below that deſired courteſie. When David ſaith, Pſal. 8. 4. What is man that thou art mindful of him? He layeth him quite below the leaſt mindings or thought of God. So when Pharaoh ſaid to Moſes concerning God (with theſe in the Text) (Exod. 5. 2.) Who is the Lord, that I ſhould obey his voice to let Iſrael go? He laid the Lord (as they did here) quite below that required duty. Such Queſtions as theſe, do not ſo much imply a doubt, who or what God is, whom they are commanded to obey and ſerve, as a reſolvedneſs that he is unworthy their ſervice and obedience; or that they judge him ſuch a one as they have no cauſe either to fear or love. Which we may further evidence from the peculiarity of that Name with which God is cloathed in the Text; Almighty: What is the Almighty? The word Shaddai here and elſewhere rendred The Almighty, hath a double derivation: Firſt, From a root (Sadad) which ſignifieth to waſte or to deſtroy, implying the almighty power of God to ſubdue and ſubjugate the greateſt powers to himſelf. According to this meaning of the word, the queſtion of theſe wicked men intimates thus much, that they fear no hurt from God; though he be reported for Almighty, yet they look upon him as weak and impotent, and therefore as ſlighting his ſtrength; and daring him to do his worſt, they ſay, What is the Almighty that we ſhould ſerve him?

Secondly, The word may be deduced from a root (Dai, to which the Letter Sin is added as ſubſervient) which ſignifieth ſufficiency, plenty and abundance. According to this interpretation of the word, their Queſtion holds out thus much, That they being in ſo flouriſhing and full a condition themſelves, neither needed nor hoped for any thing from his fulneſs; they could ſubſiſt well enough without him, or any ſupply from him; why ſhould they ſerve or wait upon him in hope of more, when they had enough in their own hand and poſſeſſion already? Nor had they faith to believe it would be better with them, or that they ſhould receive any good from him, how much, how long, or how well ſoever they ſhould ſerve him. What is the Almighty, or what hath he in ſtore for us, that we ſhould ſerve him? If we knit and conjoin both theſe conſiderations of the word together, we may parallel or exemplifie the whole compaſs of their queſtion with that lewd and Atheiſtical ſpeech recorded from the mouths of ſome ſons of Belial in his time, by the Prophet Zephany (chap. 1. 12.) It ſhall come to paſs at that time, that I will ſearch Jeruſalem with candles, and I will puniſh the men that are ſetled on their lees, that ſay in their hearts, the Lord will not do good, neither will he do evil. Whereas the Lord by his holy Prophet Iſaiah (chap. 41. 23.) challengeth the falſe gods or Idols, to give teſtimony and proof of their divine power, or that they are gods, by ſhewing things to come, and by doing good or evil, theſe conclude that God cannot give proof of his divine power, by doing either good or evil; which is as much as to ſay, that he can do nothing at all; for ſeeing all things that are done, are either good or evil, he that can do neither, cannot do any thing. Thus they wickedly imagined the Lord to be what Idols indeed are, who have eyes, and ſee not; ears, and hear not; feet, but walk not; and hands, but cannot act or execute. And that's the ſum of this blaſphemy, which Job aſcribeth here to the wicked, What is the Almighty, that we ſhould ſerve him? We neither regard the benefit nor the dammage that he can do us; we are neither troubled at his omnipotency, as if he could deſtroy us in his wrath when he is diſpleaſed at us; nor are we hungry after his All-ſufficiency, as if he could ſuſtain us in his love, were he every way pleaſed by us. What is the Almighty?

That we ſhould ſerve him.] Why ſhould we take upon us his Livery, and become his ſervants? What wages ſhall we have, or what preferment can he give us? as it followeth by and by. To ſerve God, or to be a ſervant to God, is a comprehenſive term, taking in all the duties of man in holineſs. I and my houſe (ſaith Joſhua, chap. 24. 15.) will ſerve the Lord: And ſuch is the reſolution of every godly man; but againſt this the wicked are reſolved, while we hear them putting the Queſtion, What is the Almighty, that we ſhould ſerve him? As if they had ſaid, he is ſuch a Maſter (or let him be what he will) that we will not ſerve him. To ſerve God is to give him all the duties both of natural and of inſtituted worſhip: We ſerve God while we love him, while we fear him, while we believe in him, while we truſt upon him; yet all theſe have diſtinct and proper reſpects to God. We truſt God as he is faithful, we believe on him as he is true, we fear him as he is great, we love him as he is good, we ſerve him as he is Soveraign and Lord of all. Thou ſhalt fear the Lord thy God, and him only ſhalt thou ſerve (Deut. 6. 13.) There is a ſervice due from man to man; but comparatively to our ſervice of God, we muſt not be the ſervants of men (1 Cor. 7. 23.) We ought to ſerve men heartily; but we muſt ſerve none but God with all our hearts. And if God be not ſerved with all, he counts himſelf not at all ſerved. A wicked man may poſſibly ſerve God with his tongue and hands, with words and outward works, but he never ſerveth him with his heart; and moſt uſually they caſt off the ſervice of hand and tongue, uſing both to his diſſervice. In this largeſt ſence of obſerving, we may expound this Text, and apply it to the greateſt number of wicked men, and in that ſtricter ſence 'tis true of them all; They ſay, What is the Almighty, that we ſhould ſerve him?

Hence obſerve, Firſt, Wicked men have low and ſlight thoughts of God:

Their wiſdom (the beſt that is in them) is but the wiſdom of the fleſh; and that, at the beſt, is enmity againſt God (Rom. 8. 7.) And can they do otherwiſe then lightly eſteem him with whom they are at enmity? They who know not the worth and excellency of a perſon, cannot have high thoughts of him. Wicked men, one and other, know not God (that's the definition which Bildad giveth of them, chap. 18. 21.) How then can they duly prize him whom thy do not know? As we do not deſire, ſo we cannot honour that which is unknown. All the ſervices, ſuch as they are, which a wicked man tenders to God, may bear the ſame inſcription which the Altar obſerved by Paul among the Athenians did (Acts 17. 23.) To the unknown God. If thou hadſt known the gift of God (ſaith Chriſt to the woman, John 4. 10.) and who it is that ſaith unto thee, give me to drink, thou wouldeſt have asked of him, and he would have given thee living water. Did wicked men know the living God, they would ask after him, and reckon their lives, with all that they have, nothing worth without him. Believers having attained ſome good knowledge of God (though it be little to what they might attain in Grace, and leſs, yea, as nothing to what they ſhall receive in Glory) are lifted up with holy gloryings in and of God. Thus Moſes in his triumphant Song after the overthrow of Pharaoh and his Egyptian Hoſt in the Red Sea (Exod. 15. 11.) Who is like unto thee, O Lord, amongſt the gods? Who is like unto thee, glorious in holineſs, fearful in praiſes, doing wonders? Thus the Pſalmiſt crieth him up in his excellencies, This God is our God for ever and ever (Pſal. 48. 14.) So the Church is brought in by the Prophet admiring God (Iſa. 25. 9.) Lo this is our God, we have waited for him, and he will ſave us: This is the Lord, we have waited for him, &c. The words have a ſound of victory and triumph in them, intimating that ſome had in ſcorn (as they did David) asked, Where is now your God? Or as in the Text, What is the Almighty? Therefore his people, upon ſome gracious and ſtrange appearance of God for them, do, as it were, hold him up at once to the view and aſtoniſhment of all the World, eſpecially of their enemies; Lo this is our God, this is the Lord. Behold and conſider, who is a God like unto him? Your rock is not as our rock, even your ſelves being Judges. Who have I in Heaven but thee? (ſaith David, Pſal. 73. 25.) and there is none upon earth I deſire beſides thee. We ſee how the opinion and eſtimation which the Saints have of God, is as different from that of wicked men, as their ſtate is different. They make their boaſt of God all the day long; theſe are aſhamed of him, and ſay, What is the Almighty that we ſhould ſerve him? The Daughters of Jeruſalem enquire of the Church (Cant. 5. 9.) What is thy Beloved more then anothers beloved, O thou faireſt among women? What is thy Beloved more then anothers beloved, that thou doeſt thus charge us? They demand what, and what is thy Beloved, out of an earneſt deſire of further information. But wicked men ask, What is the Almighty? Not out of a deſire to know what he is, but in ſcorn and deriſion of what they vainly and ignorantly conceive him to be, even too mean to be ſerved by them.

Secondly, Obſerve, A wicked man thinks ſcorn to ſerve God.

No man can ſerve two Maſters (ſaith our Great Maſter, Math. 6. 24.) That is, two Maſters of contrary intereſts, and who iſſue out contrary commands. Every wicked man ſerveth more Maſters then two; but he ſerveth not that one who is infinitely better, and more deſerving our ſervice then all. He is a ſervant to luſt, yea, He ſerves divers luſts and pleaſures (Tit. 3. 3.) He ſerves at the pleaſure of every luſt, and therefore he can have no pleaſure in ſerving the Lord: And unleſs we make it our pleaſure as well as our work to ſerve the Lord, he hath no pleaſure neither in us nor in our ſervices. We cannot ſerve God unleſs we deny our ſelves, and reſolve our will into his. But every wicked man is a ſelf-ſeeker, therefore he cannot ſerve God. And as in that ſtate he cannot, ſo he hath no will, no mind to ſerve the Lord. He looks upon his ſervice as ſlavery, and calls the Commandments of God cords and bonds, and ſubmiſſion to them bondage; therefore he ſaith, I will break thoſe bonds aſunder, and caſt away thoſe cords from me (Pſal. 2. 3.) Till we are made free from ſin, we are never free to ſerve the Lord. The Apoſtle joyns thoſe two in conſequence, Rom. 6. 20, 21. When ye were the ſervants of ſin, ye were free from righteouſneſs (not free by any liberty given, but by a liberty taken, which is licentiouſneſs) but now being made free from ſin (Chriſt manumitteth all whom he redeemeth) and become ſervants to God: There is a bleſſed tranſition from that freedom which is indeed ſlavery, into a ſervice which is indeed freedom. He is incomparably more free that ſerveth the Lord, then he who, not ſerving him, ruleth the World. I ſerve (God being my Maſter) may be the Motto, and is the Honour of all the Saints. The Yoak of Chriſt, yea, the Croſs of Chriſt, are ſweet, eaſie, and honourable to the Saints. They who have taſted how gracious the Lord is in his Promiſes, will rejoyce in his Commandments. And it is as much their deſire to ſerve him, as it is their happineſs to be ſaved by him. The wicked are ſtrangers from the Covenant of his Promiſe, and therefore they are eſtranged from his Precepts, and in ſtead of receiving his Law into their hearts, caſt it behind their backs. What is the Almighty (ſay they) that we ſhould ſerve him?

And what profit ſhould we have if we pray unto him?

We uſe to look to the end of our actions before we begin; and we may juſtly think it is not good for us to do that which will do us no good when we have done it. Did a godly man ſee no benefit, no good coming in by prayer, he would not pray. And becauſe a wicked man ſeeth no benefit in prayer, therefore he doth not pray. His reaſon were good if it were true. We cannot profit God by prayer; but we may profit our ſelves. We may turn the Argument and ſay, What profit ſhall we have if we do not pray? Though God giveth ſometime before we ask, yet we have no ground to expect till we have asked. Wicked men receive many good things from God, for which they never prayed; but becauſe they do not own him as the Author and Fountain of their good, therefore they will not pray. They aſcribe their profits to themſelves; What profit then can they conceive in prayer? What profit ſhall we have

If we pray unto him?] The Hebrew is, If we meet him. 'Tis a Metaphor taken from thoſe, who riſe up when grave and great men come towards them, and in honour to their perſons go forth and meet them. This elegancy of the word heightens the impiety of wicked men, who are ſo far from following God with their prayers and ſupplications, when he departeth far from them, that they will not ſo much as ſtir a foot to go out and meet God when he cometh towards them, either in judgment, to divert and turn him back, or in mercy, to invite him forwards, and give him thanks; as if they did not at all, either fear his anger, or regard his love. Prayer is our meeting with God; and this word is ſpecially applyed to our meeting God in prayer, when he appeareth angry and diſpleaſed. Thus the word is uſed (Jer. 7. 16.) Therefore pray not thou for this people, do not thou (ſaith the Lord to his Prophet) meet me when I come out againſt them, do not thou ſtrike in between me and them (as Moſes ſometimes did) to intercede and mediate for them, for I am reſolved to deſtroy them. That Scripture (Iſa. 47. 3.) which we render, I will take vengeance, and I will not meet thee as a man (that is, weak in power, or with compaſſion, ſuch as men ſometimes ſhew; but in full power, and with unmoveable purpoſes, as God; that Scripture, I ſay) is thus rendred by others, Man ſhall not reſiſt me; that is, he ſhall not hinder me of my purpoſe by prayer; or as ſome of the Rabbins tranſlate, or rather paraphraſe that Text, I will not admit of any interceſſion for thee. Whereas in another place of the ſame Prophet (Chap. 59. 16.) The Lord wondred that there was no Interceſſor; none to meet him with a good word for that people. In which ſence we find the word, Jer. 27. 18. & 36. 25. Abigail went out to meet David, and by her mediation to ſtop him from ſhedding blood (2 Sam. 25. 23.) The Lord calls his people to meet him (Amos 4. 12.) Therefore thus will I do unto thee, O Iſrael; and becauſe I will do this, therefore prepare to meet thy God, O Iſrael. How to meet him? What with Armes or Armies, with the preparation of outward force? No: What can the ſtrongeſt Hoſts of men do againſt or with the Lord of Hoſts? This meeting then muſt be by repentance and humiliation, by weeping and invocation. God meeteth him (with bleſſings) in his way, that rejoyceth and worketh righteouſneſs: And he loves, yea, expects that we ſhould meet him in his way, mourning and praying, when he is about the works of his Judgment. Many godly men have met God with theſe weapons, and have prevailed, But the wicked man, either hath no hopes, or thinks he hath no need either to prevent evil or obtain good by ſuch a meeting. And therefore he ſaith, What profit ſhall I have if I pray unto (or meet) him?

פגע Significat occurrere, obviare, ſæpe autem deprecari vel inſtanter orare.

Hence Obſerve, Firſt, Wicked men are led by their worldly profit in all they do.

They are ready to do any evil which they ſuppoſe may profit them; and they will not do (which is all they can do) ſo much as the outſide of any good, by which they can get no viſible profit. The Apoſtle Paul ſpeaks of ſuch who ſuppoſed that gain was Godlineſs; but they were far from ſuppoſing that Godlineſs (as indeed it is, even bare Godlineſs) is great gain (1 Tim. 6. 5, 6.) While wicked men have a hope to gain by a profeſſion of Godlineſs (becauſe gain is ſavory to them, though it proceed from that which to them is moſt unſavory) they will be profeſſors, and condeſcend to that which they eſteem no more in it ſelf, then the dirt under their feet, the thing called Godlineſs. But when once they ſee they cannot gain by it, or think they have gained enough by it, then they meddle with it no more; off goes their viſor, and they ſhew you (having made a ſhew of what they were not) what they are. Many now receive the Goſpel upon the ſame Argument, by which the Sichemites were perſwaded to receive Circumciſion (Gen. 34. 23.) Shall not their cattel, and their ſubſtance, and every beaſt of theirs be ours? They are zealous for Chriſt, upon the ſame terms that Demetrius was zealous for the worſhip of Diana among the Epheſians (Acts 19. 24.) they make or gain Silver ſhrines, and by this they get their living. As Judas betrayed Chriſt, ſo they will pretend to adore him, if their queſtion be well anſwered, What will you give us? Or what ſhall we get by it? The Needle of the Compaſs never reſts nor is quiet, till it pointeth to the North, nor are they till they point at profit, and have carnal advantages in their eye. What profit ſhall we have if we hear him, or pray unto him?

Secondly, Obſerve, Wicked men have an opinion that prayer and attendance upon God in holy duties are unprofitable.

While they ask, What profit ſhall we have if we pray? Their meaning is, that prayer yields no profit, and that ſerving God is a very poor trade. Such the Prophet Malachy at once diſcovers and reproves (Chap. 3. 14.) Ye have ſaid, It is in vain to ſerve God; And what profit is it that we have kept his Ordinances, and that we have walked mournfully before the Lord of Hoſts. And now ye call the proud happy, yea, they that work wickedneſs are ſet up, yea, they that tempt God are even delivered. As if they had ſaid, We get nothing by the ſervice of God; and not only ſo, but they who rebel againſt him, the proud, they who make wickedneſs their work, their buſineſs, they who do not only neglect God, but tempt him, ſinning preſumptuouſly, daringly, theſe get all, theſe are happy, theſe are built up high in good things, honour and riches, and theſe are delivered and protected from evil, dangers, and diſtreſſes. A prophane Souldier at the ſiege of a Town paſſing a place of danger was heard ſwearing, and when one that ſtood by warned him, ſaying, Fellow-ſouldier, do not ſwear, the bullets fly; he anſwered, They that ſwear come off as well as they who pray; ſoon after a ſhot hit him, and down he fell. This is the judgment both of poor, ignorant, and knowingly wicked men, What profit is there if we pray? Whereas indeed they ſhould rather ſay, What profit is there in any thing without prayer? Or what profit is there not in prayer? Godlineſs is profitable for all things, having the promiſe of this life, as well as of that which is to come (1 Tim. 4. 8.)

Thirdly, Obſerve, Wicked men throw up or give over the duties of holineſs, when they find no preſent profit or outward advancement coming in by them.

They ſerve God no longer then he ſerveth their turns. They who follow Chriſt for the loaves, leave him when the loaves are done. Surely many old Formaliſts were wont to pray meerly for filthy lucre, which gave occaſion for that common Proverb, No penny, no pater-noſter; which we may tranſlate into the ſtile of the Text, No profit, no prayer. Saints find reward in their work; but Hypocrites muſt be rewarded and paid in hand for their work, elſe they will work no more. A godly man will pray and perſevere in prayer, becauſe God commandeth him to pray alwayes; not becauſe he alwayes finds the grant of the thing prayed for. He knows his prayers can never turn to loſs, though he pray long and feels no profit, not only not in temporals, but not in ſpirituals, and inward comforts. He conſiders, what God requires of him, not what he receiveth from God, is the ground of every duty. And whereas that wicked King ſaid (2 Kings 6. 33.) This evil is from the Lord, why then ſhould I wait upon the Lord any longer? He ſaith, I will yet, yea, for ever wait upon the Lord, though he defer to do me good.

VERS. 16, 17, 18.

Lo, their good is not in their hand, the counſel of the wicked is far from me.

How oft is the candle of the wicked put out? And how oft cometh their deſtruction upon them? God diſtributeth ſorrows in his anger.

They are as ſtubble before the wind, and as chaff that the ſtorm carrieth away.

IN the former words, Job having deſcribed both the proſperity and the blaſphemy of wicked men, whom he repreſents thruſting the Lord from them, and diſcharging him their company, Depart from us, we deſire not the knowledge of thy wayes, &c. (Having thus, I ſay, deſcribed their proſperity, and their blaſphemy; leſt he ſhould ſeem to attribute more happineſs to them, then indeed they have, or at all to have approved of their courſe and counſel, which at all he had not) he ſubjoyns by way of prevention, his opinion of both in this ſixteenth Verſe.

Lo, their good is not in their hand, the counſel of the wicked is far from me.

As if he had ſaid, I have not aſſerted the great ſucceſs of wicked men, as if God neglected the affairs of the world, or cared not into what hands they were diſtributed; as if he had left wicked men in their own power, to be the founders and contrivers of their own greatneſs; or as if I my ſelf were taken with, or envied at any of their felicity: for I am well aſſured that God diſpoſeth of all theſe things in much wiſdom, but in no love at all, or good will to them: Lo, their good is not in their hand, the counſel of the wicked is far from me.

In theſe words Job gives his opinion about the ſtate of wicked men, in the midſt of all their outward pomp and worldly ſplendor; Lo, their good is not in their hand. The Septuagint read this firſt part of the Verſe without a negative particle; whereas we (from the Hebrew) read, Their good is not in their hand, they ſay, Their goods were in their hands. Which ſome explain, As if Job in theſe words aſſigned the reaſon whence it comes to paſs, that wicked men ſpake with ſo much boldneſs and impudency in the Verſe before, What is the Almighty? And what profit is it that we pray to him? Why are they thus bold with God? Why do they ſlight the Almighty? O (ſaith Job) their good is in their hand; that is, they have enough already, they are full of the world, and they care not how empty they are of God; they have as much as they deſire, they are ſatisfied with the creature, therefore they have no deſire to the Almighty, the Creator; they have their portion, and ſuch will not pray for more who think they have all in poſſeſſion. What need they beg any good thing at the hand of God, when they have all good in their own hand? Their good is in their hand, therefore they ſay, What profit is it that we pray to the Almighty? This is a truth, but I will not proſecute this reading, becauſe it is not clear from the original Text.

Ἐν χερσὶ γὰρ ἦν αὐτῶν τὰ ἀγαθά. Sept.

We render according to the letter of the Hebrew, Their good is not in their hand. That is, ſay ſome, They have many worldly good things, yet they uſe none of them. They have good in their houſes, good in their cheſts, but they have none in their hand. The righteous man hath outward good things in his hand, he is ready to uſe and imploy them, he is maſter of them, he makes them ſerve him; but meer carnal men ſerve their goods, or are ſlaves to them; their goods have them in their hand; their good is not in their hand, they are ruled by what they have; they do not rule what they have. Lo, their good is not in their hand. They are not maſter of their own. There is a truth in this expoſition; and therefore Solomon in Eccleſiaſtes diſtinguiſheth the poſſeſſion of the things of the world from the uſe of them. It is one gift of God to put the things of the world into our hand, and another to give us a heart to uſe them (Eccleſ. 5. 19.) Every man to whom God hath given riches and wealth (there is one gift) and given him power to eat thereof, and to take his portion, and rejoyce in his labour, this is the gift of God, there is another gift. Many receive the firſt gift from the hand of God, who are denyed the latter. But neither will I give this as the ſcope of Job's Text.

Again, Their good is not in their hand. By good here, we are to underſtand all that which is before ſet down, as the portion of wicked men: We had an Inventory of their goods, a very large and fair one. Lo, Their good. Why the things of the world are called good, ſee before (ver. 13.) They ſpend their dayes in wealth, or, in good. And though they did, yet here he ſaith, Their good is not in their hand. But how can a man ſpend his dayes in that which is not in his hand? Many have that in their hand or poſſeſſion, in which they do not ſpend their dayes. But it ſounds hard to ſay, A man ſpends his dayes in that which is not in his hand.

Lo, their good is not in their hand.

I anſwer; The being of a thing in our hand imports,

Firſt, That it is attainable by our own induſtry, or that it is within our reach and power. So, when Job ſaith, Their good is not in their hand; his meaning is, their riches and worldly abundance was not attained by any ſelf-ſufficiency. Not only is it true in ſpirituals, but alſo in temporals (though in theſe we can do no more) that we can do nothing effectively of our ſelves, or by our own ſtrength and wiſdom, our ſufficiency is of God. Whatſoever we have in this world comes from another hand, not from our own. Maſter Broughton renders fully up to this ſence; Lo, their wealth cometh not by their own power.

Secondly, Their good is not in their hand; that is, they have not a power to hold the good which they have received; this I have ſeen (ſaith Job) in the ſtate of wicked men, that neither the good they have was purely in their power to attain it, nor in their power to retain and hold it. This latter ſence ſome conclude, as ſpecially intended by this phraſe all the Scripture over. As if to be in the hand, did rather imply an ability in keeping, then induſtry in acquiring the things of this life; yet I conceive the former ſence as fair and pertinent as the latter, and therefore from thence note,

Cum ſcripturæ dicit aliquid eſſe in manu; potius poteſtatem in conſervando quum diligentiam in acquirendo ſignificat. Bold.

First, Men get not their greatneſs, whether in wealth, or rule, by their own power.

What Job affirms of evil men, is true of good men too, it is a general truth, Their good is not in their hand to get it; every good gift comes from above. Even the things of the world (which are good gifts, though they be a lower ſort of good gifts) are ſent by a higher hand. Earth is dropt down to us out of Heaven. Outward comforts are not from the hand of man, either meritoriouſly, or efficiently. They are not from his hand meritoriouſly, he deſerves not a bit of bread; he is ſo far from deſerving Heaven, and Glory, and the Favour of God, that he deſerves not a piece of this earth to ſtand or lye down upon. No nor efficiently: Proud man hath ſuch an opinion of himſelf, he is full of theſe thoughts, that at leaſt the things of the world are within his compaſs, that he can reach and attain them by his own power, activity, and policy. Iſa. 10. 13. The Aſſyrian is brought in glorying thus; For he ſaith, by the ſtrength of my hand I have done it, and by my wiſdom, for I am prudent, and I have removed the bounds of the people, and have robbed their treaſures, and I have put down the inhabitants of the earth like a valiant man. Here is the language of a proud mans heart, he ſaith, by the ſtrength of my hand I have done it. And the Lord was very jealous of his own people, that they would be attributing their good to their own hand, and he could not bear it that they ſhould. (Deut. 8. 16, 17.) Therefore he admoniſheth them, that when they came to Canaan, and had got great eſtates, and had eaten, and were full, to take heed leaſt their hearts ſhould be lifted up (Verſ. 17.) And thou ſay in thy heart (ſuppoſe it do not break forth into words) my might and my power hath gotten this wealth (take heed thou do not ſpeak ſuch language in thy heart) but thou ſhalt remember the Lord thy God, for it is he that gives thee power to get wealth, that he may eſtabliſh his Covenant which he ſware to thy fathers. See here, the things of the world are not in our hand, God gives us power to get our bread. And conſider, if the Lord be ſo jealous in this point, that he will not indure men to aſcribe to their own ſtrength or hand, the getting of the treaſures of the world: How will he take it at their hands, that ſay Heaven it ſelf is in their hand, the good of eternal life is in their hand, or that they can fetch it in by their own earnings; that they are not beholden to Chriſt only, or alone for it, but they can merit for it? There is a touch of this in all our hearts, though we come not to the groſneſs of the Papiſts; we would have ſomewhat of our own gaining and fetching in, for life and glory. But if the things of the World be not in our hand, then much leſs are the things of Heaven: If not temporals, then ſurely not ſpirituals and eternals. (Pſal. 76. 6, 7.) Promotion is not from the Eaſt, or Weſt, or South, but it is of God, who pulleth down one, and ſetteth up another. It is a piece of our ſpiritualneſs to confeſs God the giver of our temporals. It is an act of grace to ſay, Lo, our good is not in our hand. That principle of policy, Every man is the contriver of his own condition, is falſe in Divinity. Man may be conſidered in a threefold capacity or ſtate, and God the Author of them all. In his natural ſtate, as a living man: In his ſpiritual ſtate, as a holy man: In his civil ſtate, as a rich or great man: All that he is in any of, or all theſe, is all from God.

Quiſq; fortunæ ſuæ faber.

Secondly, Obſerve, It is not in the power of man to hold or perpetuate his own proſperity.

As our good is not got by our hand, ſo not held, it will run or ſlip out between our fingers, if we only hold it; we put our earnings into a purſe with holes (Hag. 1. 6.) if God do but blow upon it. As the Lord gives, ſo he can take away, let us hold as faſt as we will; unleſs the Lord hold what we have for us, we cannot hold it. The creature is a flitting thing; unleſs God eſtabliſh it to us it may be gone every moment. Our ſpirituals are not in our own keeping; we cannot bring grace into our own hearts, and we cannot keep grace in our own hearts; our good of grace is in the hand of Jeſus Chriſt, it is he that preſerves his own graces beſtowed upon us. Were it not for the hand of Chriſt holding our hearts, we ſhould let out all the grace we have quickly; our faith and love, with all thoſe ſpiritual treaſures, would ſoon be ſcattered, were not we kept by the power of God; Lo, their good is not in their hand.

Thirdly, When Job ſaith, Their good is not in their hand, he ſeems to intend, that though theſe men had a great deal in their hands; yet their good, or that which indeed will do them good, was not in their hand. The men of the world have their portion in this life; and that is not a portion: They have goods in their hand; but that which is indeed their good is not in their hand.

Hence Note, That which is truly good, or will really do any man good, is not in the hand of a wicked man.

Let him have what he will in his hand, his good is not in his hand; yea, it had been better for him not to have had this good in his hand, unleſs he had ſomewhat that is better. (Pſal. 4. 6.) The men of the World cry out, Who will ſhew us any good? What is their good? David tells us, Corn, and wine, and oyl, gold and ſilver, the riches and greatneſs of the World; theſe are a very low ſort of good, and comparatively theſe are no good at all. Give me the light of thy countenance (ſaith he) this good they have not in their hand: They have not the grace or favour of God in their hands; they have not a portion of ſpirituals in their hands; their good is not in their hand, becauſe that is not there which indeed would make them happy. Job did not look on wicked men as truly happy, though he ſpake ſo much of this outward happineſs; Their good is not in their hand.

The counſel of the wicked is far from me.

In theſe words Job makes a modeſt compariſon between his own and the condition of the wicked; The counſel of the wicked is far from me. Counſel is not to be taken here ſtrictly for that which is the preparation to action, after inquiſition and debate; for the iſſue of both is counſel. But here counſel is to be underſtood in a larger ſence; The counſel of the wicked, is, their courſe, their opinion, their way, their purpoſe, whatſoever is decreed and reſolved by them, that is their counſel. Now, ſaith he, This counſel (or courſe) of the wicked, is far from me.

Conſilium ponitur pro tota agendi ratione.

But how was their counſel far from Job? Every good man cannot keep evil counſel far from him. Evil men may give good men bad counſel; yea, a good man cannot keep himſelf from the evil counſel of the Devil; Why then doth he ſay, The counſel of the wicked is far from me? Satan will be inſtilling helliſh counſel into the hearts of the beſt; How then is he thus confident, The counſel of the wicked is far from me?

The meaning is, I am far from the counſel of the wicked: For though we cannot keep the counſel of wicked men, or the counſel of Satan, his ſuggeſtions, and motions, far from us (for theſe will be buzzing about us) yet we may keep our ſelves far from them; that is, we may keep our hearts at a diſtance from them. Now that is the meaning of Job, The counſel of the wicked is far from me: That is, I am of another opinion, and mind, I do not fall in with them, I do not ſay as they, I do not affirm what they affirm, or deny what they deny. The counſel of the wicked is far from me. It ſhews that he had a quite different judgment of things from the wicked; nor did he like their way, notwithſtanding their proſperity and ſucceſs. As if he had ſaid, I am not in love with their good and greatneſs, much good do it them; it is far from me to wiſh it in their way, and upon their terms; for I never trod in their path, nor walked in their counſel.

Hence Obſerve, Firſt, The counſel or courſe of a wicked man is fooliſh and prepoſterous in the opinion of the godly.

As himſelf is, ſo is his counſel, both nought, therefore a good man abhors them. What is the counſel of a wicked man? What is his courſe? His counſel is to follow the world, to heap up riches, to engroſs earth, neglecting Heaven, to be very eager after the things that are ſeen, not regarding the things that are not ſeen. This is fooliſh counſel: For (ſaith Paul, 2 Cor. 4. ult.) we look not at things that are ſeen. How can a man look at things that he doth not ſee? How can he aim at a mark that he doth not reach with his eye? Indeed Believers look at nothing but what they ſee, though they do not look at the things which are ſeen. Here is the excellency of Believers, they aim at things that are not ſeen by the corporal eye, but they have a ſight of them by the eye of faith, they ſee them with a ſpiritual eye, or elſe they could not aim at them. Now, We look not (ſaith Paul) at things that are ſeen (which is the counſel of the wicked) but at things which are not ſeen; for the things that are ſeen are temporal, but the things which are not ſeen are eternal. The things which are moſt ſeen now, will not be ſeen long, no, nor be long. As it is ſaid of Tyre (Ezek. 27. 36.) The Merchants among the people ſhall hiſs at thee, thou ſhalt be a terror, and never ſhalt be any more, or ſhalt not be for ever.

Secondly, Obſerve, Godly men are not at all pleaſed with the way of the wicked, how much ſoever they thrive in it.

Job had ſaid much of the greatneſs, riches, and glory of the wicked; but, ſaith he, how ever, The counſel of the wicked is far from me. The wayes of the godly and the wicked differ, as much as their ends; and their counſels are as diſtant as their concluſions will be. Every good man ſaith of the counſels and wayes of the wicked, how proſperous ſoever, as Jacob ſaid of his ſons, Simeon and Levi (Gen. 49. 6.) O my ſoul, come not thou into their ſecret, unto their aſſembly mine honour be not thou united. Let me be far from their ſecret; that is, from their ſecret counſel, from their cabinet counſel, and cloſe committees: O my ſoul, come not thou into their ſecret. The further we keep from their counſel, the nearer we are to bleſſedneſs. (Pſal. 1. 1.) Bleſſed is the man that walketh not in the counſel of the ungodly. And as the godly are far from the counſel of the wicked, ſo the wicked are as far from the counſels of the godly; they alſo ſay, The counſel of ſuch is far from us, we cannot abide their counſel (Pſal. 14. 6.) Ye have ſhamed the counſel of the poor; that is, ye are aſhamed of his counſel. What poor doth he mean? He means it not of any poor; though it be a truth, that a poor mans counſel is ſeldom heard (great men are uſually aſhamed of poor mens counſel, as Solomon ſpeaketh in his Eccleſiaſtes, (Chap. 9. 16.) The poor mans wiſdom is deſpiſed, and his words are not heard.) But here by poor, he means the godly poor, men fearing God, as it is plain in the latter end of the Verſe: You are aſhamed of the counſel of the poor, Why? Becauſe the Lord is his refuge. His counſel doth depend on the Lord: Truſt in the Lord, walk in his wayes, ſhelter your ſelves under his protection, this counſel the poor man gives; and he muſt needs be a godly man that gives this counſel. This counſel you have ſhamed; that is, deſpiſed. What have we to do with this counſel, to make the Lord our refuge? No, we will take our own courſe, and work it out by our own wit. Thus wicked men are far from the counſel of the godly; and godly men are as far from the counſel of the wicked.

Job proceeds.

Verſe 17. How oft is the candle of the wicked put out?

Here begins the ſecond part of the Chapter. As in the former he proved by clear experiences, the proſperity of the wicked, ſo now he proves that the wicked are not alwayes proſperous, but meet with checks and contrary blaſts as well as others. How oft is the candle of the wicked put out? There are two opinions concerning the general tendency of this latter part of the Chapter. Some think (as hath been toucht) that Job having before declared the outward happineſs of wicked men, doth here, as it were, turn the Tables, and deſcribe their miſery by way of admiration. How oft is the candle of the wicked put out? Or if they eſcape, their children pay for it, as it follows ver. 21. This may ſeem to contradict what he ſpake before of the flouriſhing ſtate of wicked men, preſently to add, How oft is the candle of the wicked put out? But indeed it only contradicts what his Friends ſpake before, whoſe opinion was, That God ſorteth out the things of this life ſo diſtinctly, that to the wicked he gives nothing but miſery and ſorrow; and to the righteous nothing but mercy and comfort. Now Job takes this off; he affirms that wicked men are uſually filled with worldly abundance, which is againſt their opinion; yet he affirms alſo, that wicked men are often plunged into outward miſery, that they alſo are brought into ſtraits and darkneſs. Thus he renders the opinion of his Friends altogether inconſiſtent with his experiences; they ſaid, that evil men receive only evil; no, ſaith he, evil men receive abundance of good in this World; yet I do aſſert that evil men alſo receive evil too; ſo that there can be no diſtinguiſhing of mens ſpiritual eſtates by their temporal ſufferings or enjoyments, ſeeing wicked men ſometimes are not puniſhed here, and ſometimes are.

Concludit contra amicos ſuos bona & mala in hac vita æquè a Deo bonis ac malis dari. Refutatur amicorum ſententia impios ſemper hic puniri, quum utrumque æquè accidat & eos punire & non puniri. Merc.

Secondly, Others underſtand the whole context thus, as if Job were ſtill deſcribing the proſperous ſtate of the wicked, and continued the ſame diſcourſe to ver. 21. And then the queſtions here are to be expounded negatively; How oft is the candle of the wicked put out? Can you give many inſtances of it? Is this very oft? Are wicked men commonly found in darkneſs, or in trouble? So he meets with both the aſſertions of his Friends. Bildad ſaid (Chap. 18. 5, 6.) The light of the wicked is put out, and the ſpark of his fire ſhall not ſhine; the light ſhall be dark in his tabernacle, and his candle ſhall be put out with him. Well, ſaith Job, this is your opinion, I pray, tell me, How oft is the candle of the wicked put out? Have you ſeen this frequently, that you make ſuch a direct concluſion of it? Again, Zophar in the cloſe of the twentieth Chapter, when he had drawn out the judgments of God in many particulars, concludes (ver. 29.) This is the portion of a wicked man from God, and the heritage appointed him by God. Now Job anſwers, whereas you, O Zophar, conclude your ennumeration of evils, with, This is the portion of a wicked man from God. I pray, how oft doth God diſtribute ſuch evils to them in anger? Doth he it ſo often, as gives you a ſufficient ground to make ſo peremptory a concluſion? This is the portion of a wicked man from God.

Take the words either of theſe wayes, there is a fair correſpondency with the ſcope of the place, and with Job's purpoſe; nor do either of theſe interpretations give any ſtrain or offer violence to the original Text. For the firſt word that we render how oft, is expounded ſometimes by way of increaſe, ſometimes by way of diminution. In the former ſence, how oft, ſounds a thing done very frequently: In the latter, how oft, ſounds a thing ſeldom, or rarely done: How oft have you had ſuch experiments? That is, You have rarely had them. How oft is ſuch a thing done? That is, It is ſeldom done. Mr. Broughton tranſlates clearly to this expoſition, Not ſo often is the candle of the wicked put out, &c.

Quoties poteſt exponi in defectu, q.d. Etſi id fiat aliquãdo, raro tamen fit; ac ſæpius florent impii contra quã vos dixiſtis. Merc.

How oft is the Candle of the wicked put out?

By the candle of the wicked, ſome underſtand their lives, that is, How oft do wicked men come to a ſudden and unexpected death? Job ſaid before, They grow old: His Friends had ſaid, They are cut off. Here, according to the latter expoſition, he queries, Can you give many inſtances that the candle of the wicked hath been put out? That their lives have been extinguiſhed? The life of man may well be called his candle; and the life of man goes out after the manner of a candle. A candle goes out three wayes, and ſo doth the life of man: Firſt, For want of moiſture to feed it: Thus the life of man goes out when the moiſture of the body is ſpent, and conſumed; when it is drunk and dryed up by old age, or hot diſtempers, then out goes the life of man like a candle. Secondly, A candle goes out, through the redundancy of moiſture; the oyl ſometimes drowns the lamp, as well as feeds it. Thus alſo moiſture overflowing the body of man, puts out or quencheth life. Thirdly, A candle is extinguiſht by a vehement wind that blows it out: And the lives of many men are put out by violence, their candle doth not burn out, but is blown out. And thus eſpecially the lives of wicked men are put out: They are cut off by a hand of Juſtice before they have lived out half their dayes; or if they attain to fulneſs of dayes, their hoary head deſcends not to the grave in peace.

Secondly, Others underſtand by Candle, their Children: A mans children are as ſo many lights in his houſe; as they dye, his candles are put out; and if they all dye, his candle is quite put out.

Thirdly, and more generally, the word is uſed to ſignifie any, or all ſorts of worldly proſperity. The light of the wicked can be nothing but outward proſperity, in all the ſorts of it. So the word is frequently uſed (Prov. 13. 9.) The light of the righteous rejoyceth; but the lamp of the wicked ſhall be put out; that is, their proſperity ſhall ceaſe; read 2 Sam. 27. 11. 2 Kings 8. 19. Pſal. 132. 17. in all which places, light, lamp, and candle, expreſs outward ſplendor and proſperity. How oft is the candle of the wicked put out? Taking the words in the firſt ſence, How oft? That is, very oft.

Obſerve, The worldly glory and outward pomp of wicked men is many times put out in darkneſs.

Taking the words in the ſecond ſence, How oft? That is, not often: You cannot give frequent experiments of this.

Note, Moſt wicked men continue their candle, and the light of their proſperity a long time.

As we have ſeen the one, ſo the other; there are experiments on both ſides. Therefore we can make no diſtinction of men, either by the ſhining and burning, or by the putting out of their candle. The former point hath been given from other paſſages of the Book, and the latter being one general ſcope of the whole Book, it may ſuffice only to collect and ſpecifie them.

And how oft cometh deſtruction upon them?

The ſence is the ſame with the former, only the words are varied.

Their deſtruction.] The word which we render deſtruction, carrieth in it utter ruine, or an undoing calamity; properly it ſignifies a cloud; and becauſe ſtorms are wrapped up in clouds, and from them hail and ſnow, thunder and lightening, break forth, not only to the terror of hearers and beholders, but even to their deſtruction; therefore the ſame word ſignifies both a cloud, and alſo deſtruction. And hence the Vulgar reads, How oft is there an inundation upon the wicked? When clouds diſſolve, an inundation, a deluge follows, which ſweeps all away. In which ſence the Prophet (Iſa. 28. 15.) calls it an overflowing ſcourge, that is, a judgment which breaks all the banks and fences which the wit and power of man ſet up againſt it.

איד Extremam denotat ruinam vel calamitatem nubis & pluviæ more ſupervenientem.

Note, Wicked men ſhall not only be afflicted, but deſtroyed.

Deſtruction is their portion. The hand of God upon a wicked man is for ruine; but upon his own people for correction. The Apoſtle ſpeaks this ſence clearly (2 Cor. 4. 8, 9.) where he tells us that himſelf and other holy men were in a very ſad condition, but it came not to deſtruction; We are troubled on every ſide, yet not diſtreſſed; we are perplexed, but not in deſpair; perſecuted, but not forſaken; caſt down, but not deſtroyed. As for wicked men, How oft cometh deſtruction upon them? They are not only troubled, but diſtreſſed; not only perplexed, perſecuted, and caſt down, but in deſpair, forſaken and deſtroyed.

From the manner of their deſtruction; it comes like a tempeſt, or a ſhower.

Note, The deſtruction of wicked men is irreſiſtible.

Who can avoid the ſhower, or the ſtorm? Yes, you will ſay, we may run to covert; but there is no covert which the Lord cannot rain quite through; though ſinners hide themſelves under rocks and mountains, he can ſend a rain which ſhall ſoak unto them. There is no ſhelter againſt the wrath of God; he can pierce all the coverings of the creature; his wrath ſmites down to the very bottom of hell. When ſtorms and tempeſts are up in the World, Saints have a covering; But what is it? Not any worldly covering, or creature refuge; theſe cannot protect them from the ſtorm; but the Prophet tells us what or who will (Iſa. 32. 2.) A King ſhall reign in righteouſneſs, Princes ſhall rule in judgment. And a man (that is, Jeſus Chriſt) ſhall be a hiding place from the wind, and a covert from the tempeſt, as rivers of water in a dry place, as the ſhadow of a great rock in a weary land. Chriſt is a covert from the tempeſt, as a hiding place from the wind; but wicked men have no help by him, he is no covert, no hiding place to them; therefore their deſtruction comes unreſiſtably, and unavoidably. Such was the ſhower of fire and brimſtone upon Sodom; the Sodomites expected not an enemy that way, their deſtruction came as a ſhower from a cloud; The Lord rained fire and brimſtone upon them from the Lord out of Heaven. The cloud which hangs over and lowres black upon wicked men, is not a little cloud that ſoon paſſeth away, but a cloud that ſhall make the wicked paſs away; when that breaks, they ſhall be broken, and fall, and periſh.

Nubecula eſt cito tranſibit.

God diſtributeth ſorrows in his anger.

The word implyeth the dividing of a thing among many; to divide by lot; to apportion out an inheritance or ſhare; a mans ſhare is called his lot; this is my lot, and that is yours; every one hath his lot. Thus land in a common field is divided; and thus Joſhua divided Canaan among the twelve Tribes, he divided it to them by lot; ſuch a diſtribution the word ſignifies; God ſhall diſtribute ſorrows to them by lot.

חלק Diviſionem denotat inter plures. Trãſlatio ab iis qui funiculis agros dimetiebantur, quos deinde dividunt inter ſe miſſis ſortibus. Druſ.

He diſtributeth ſorrows.] That word ſignifieth a cord, or a line, that line with which an inheritance is divided, a meaſuring line, a line to meaſure land by. So (Pſal. 16. 6.) The line is fallen to me in a fair place; that is, my inheritance is divided, or ſhared out to me in a fair place, I have a fair lot. The elegancy is remarkable. God diſtributeth ſorrows by a line, as the portion and inheritance which wicked men ſhall receive (Luke 12. 46.) The Lord of that ſervant will come in a day when he looked not for him, &c. and will appoint him his portion with the unbelievers. God diſtributeth ſorrows. To ſay God diſtributeth a portion in anger were ſad enough; for every portion that God diſtributeth in anger can be nothing but ſorrow. But to diſtribute ſorrows in anger, imports the moſt ſorrowful diſtribution. And beſides, the word ſignifies not only ſorrows, but the greateſt ſorrows, thoſe ſorrows that ſtraiten as a cord, which binds the part ſo hard, that it cauſeth pain, or ſuch ſorrows as a woman hath in travel. The Greek Tranſlators expreſs it by a word

חבלים Dolores, funes, partiuntur, funiculis hæreditates dividibantur.

noting the pangs and throws of a travelling Woman. God diſtributes theſe ſorrows

In his anger.] That is, God being angry, or when he is angry he diſtributes theſe ſorrows. In what ſence anger or any other paſſions are ſaid to be in God, hath been ſhewed from other Texts of this Book. And when it is ſaid, that God doth a thing in anger, the meaning is not, that he doth ſome things in a quiet temper, and other things in a diſtemper, as men often do; but that he doth ſome things for the good and benefit, other things for the hurt and vexation of man; yet as the one in mercy, and the other in judgment, ſo both according to the higheſt rules of reaſon and righteouſneſs.

Thus the woful condition of a wicked man is deſcribed, under the diſpleaſure and angry diſpenſations of God.

Hence Note, Firſt, Sorrow is the portion, or inheritance of the wicked.

The lot of the wicked falls in the land of ſorrow and darkneſs, of mourning and lamentation, this is their proper lot: Though at preſent they live in the light of outward joy, yet their portion is darkneſs and ſorrow. What elſe can be their inheritance but ſorrow, who abide under the anger of God? Believers are Heirs of the Promiſe, and therefore peace and joy are their portion. The wicked are Heirs of the Curſe, they are as ſurely Heirs of the Curſe, as the Saints are of the Promiſe, and therefore ſorrow is their portion. The Anger and Curſe of God have nothing but evil in them, as his Favour and the Promiſe have nothing but good in them.

Secondly, Obſerve, The ſorrows of wicked men are divided to them by the hand of God.

His hand is in the work; God diſtributes to every man his portion. All our lots are ſet out by his hand. The word (God) is not expreſt in the Hebrew, but he is in it; Who is the diſtributer, but the Lord? He diſtributes evil as well as good. The Prophet challengeth all falſe Gods; Let them do good or evil, that we may know that they are Gods (Iſa. 41. 23.) The diſtribution of evil ſpeaks God as much as the diſtribution of good: It is the honour of God to be the diſtributer of both. And ſince it is in the hand of God to diſtribute, and apportion out to wicked men their due, they ſhall be ſure to have it; for he is a juſt God, and he ſeeth all the wickedneſs of their hearts, and he will not be taken off by intreaties, or blinded by gifts; they can plead nothing to take him off from this diſtribution; 'tis their due, and they ſhall have it. God diſtributeth ſorrows in his anger.

Thirdly, Obſerve, It is very dangerous to provoke God to anger.

To do ſo may quickly be to our ſorrow, for he diſtributes ſorrows in his anger. Therefore the Pſalmiſt exhorts (Pſal. 2. 12.) Kiſs the Son (that is, with a kiſs of homage and ſubmiſſion) leaſt he be angry. Why, what's the danger of that? The next words ſhew it, And ye periſh from the way (of your purpoſes, and never reach your ends) when his wrath is kindled but a little, bleſſed are all they that put their truſt in him. The Pſalmiſt leaves us to imagine how curſed and miſerable their eſtate will be who provoke God, while he thus elegantly goes off from it (the file of his ſpeech calling him rather to ſpeak that) and concludes, Bleſſed are all they that truſt in him.

Fourthly, Obſerve, The ſorrows of wicked men flow from the wrath and anger of God.

God diſtributeth ſorrows to many of his own people, he gives them ſometimes a very uncomfortable portion; but he doth not diſtribute ſorrows to them (purely) in anger. All the ſorrows he diſtributes to his own people, have a mixture of love and mercy. To be under the anger of God is more grievous, then to be under ſorrows from God. The anger of God is worſe then ſorrow. Therefore David deprecates it (Pſal. 6. 1.) Lord, rebuke me not in thine anger, neither chaſten me in thy hot diſpleaſure. He doth not deprecate rebuking, or chaſtening, he doth not pray againſt theſe; but he prayes againſt rebuking in anger, and chaſtening in hot diſpleaſure. Gods anger is more terrible then his rebuking; and his diſpleaſure then his chaſtening. Therefore (ſaith he) Lord, whatſoever thou doeſt to me, do nothing in anger; yet ſo the Lord rebukes wicked men, he gives them ſorrow and anger together (Pſal. 11. 5.) The Lord trieth the righteous; but the wicked, and him that loves violence his ſoul hateth; (From this hatred what follows?) Upon the wicked God ſhall rain fire, and brimſtone, and an horrible tempeſt; this ſhall be the portion of their cup. Their cup hath not only fire, and brimſtone, and tempeſt in it, but hatred in it; this makes their cup ſo bitter; this is the very dregs of it. The enemies of the Kingdom of Chriſt are thus threatened (Pſal. 2. 5.) He ſhall ſpeak to them in his wrath, and vex them in his ſore diſpleaſure: He ſaith not with it, but in it. When he is in his higheſt diſpleaſure, and wrath, then he ſhall ſpeak. God ſpeaks terrible words when he ſpeaks in wrath; and he vexeth man to purpoſe when he vexeth him in his ſore diſpleaſure. Thus he ſpeaks to the Kings of the earth, and the Princes, and to all the inraged multitude, who combine to break his bands, and to caſt his cords from them, who would hinder the great deſign of the Father in advancing the Scepter of his Son over the World. And when God deals thus with any ſort of ſinners, he takes a kind of comfort in it (Ezek. 5. 13. Thus my anger ſhall be accompliſhed, and I will cauſe my fury to reſt upon them. If the fury of the Lord do but touch a man, wo unto him: But when a man is made as the reſting place of the fury of the Lord, how can he abide it? How reſtleſs muſt he be? Yet thus ſaith the Lord, I will cauſe my fury to reſt upon them) and I will be comforted, and they ſhall know that I the Lord have ſpoken in my zeal, when I have accompliſhed my fury in them. As (in reference to his own people) when the Lord accompliſheth his love in them, and cauſeth his favour to reſt upon them, then he is as it were comforted, it pleaſeth him very much. So, when he pours out judgments and evils upon wicked men in fury and wrath, in the height and heat of wrath, this comforteth him, and pleaſeth him. God ſometimes diſtributeth ſorrow with ſorrow, and he ſpeaks of himſelf as grieved when he puts men to grief; but when God doth not only diſtribute ſorrow in anger, but in comfort; that is, when he doth not only expreſs himſelf as angry, but as comforted, while he dealeth out ſorrows to the ſons of men; as their courſe before was out of meaſure ſinful, ſo their preſent caſe is out of meaſure ſorrowful. Which Job ſhews more fully in the next Verſe.

Verſe 18. They are as ſtubble before the wind, and as chaff that the ſtorm carries away.

Thus is it with wicked men, according to our reading; and according to the ſecond interpretation of, How oft is their candle put out? We may add, How oft are they as ſtubble. 'Tis uſual in Scripture to compare wicked men to ſtubble and chaff; we have them both here, ſtubble is the ſtalk, ſtubble is that which is left after the Corn is reaped, and the chaff is that in which the Corn is wrapped in the ear, till it be threſhed and winnowed. The ſtubble is nothing to the ear, and the chaff in the floor is nothing to the Corn in the floor; the wicked are but theſe, ſtubble and chaff.

They are as ſtubble before the wind.

That is, They are as eaſily diſſipated, and quickly carried away. Stubble makes little oppoſition againſt the wind; the war is not great between the wind and the ſtraw, between the chaff and the ſtorm: Stubble and chaff are as much a match for winds and ſtorms, as the wicked are for the wrath of God. Holy David (Pſal. 1.) having ſpoken of the ſtability of the godly, ſubjoyns, The ungodly are not ſo, but as the chaff which the wind driveth away. And when David ſaw his enemies deſerted of God, notwithſtanding their ſeeming devotions and earneſtneſs in calling to him for help; he preſently adds (Pſal. 18. 42.) Then did I beat them ſmall as the duſt or chaffe before the wind. It is an eaſie matter to deſtroy thoſe whom God refuſeth to help, and to make them as chaff, whoſe rock the Lord refuſeth to be. The holy Prophets are frequent in this ſimilitudinary language, Iſa. 17. 13. Hoſ. 13. 3, &c. Every man is but as duſt and chaff (eaſily carried away) in regard of his natural conſtitution: Wicked men are ſo, much more, before the indignation of God, in regard both of their natural and actual corruption. Some by the wind in the Text, underſtand evil ſpirits, who are called alſo the fury of the Lord, and by whoſe miniſtry God ſometimes executes his vengeance upon the wicked (Pſal. 35. 5.) Let them be as chaff before the wind, and the Angel of the Lord ſcattering them. Angels are mighty in power: And not only good, but evil Angels receiving permiſſion or commiſſion from God, can ſcatter the wicked as ſtubble before the wind.

Or as the chaff that the ſtorm carrieth away.

Here he ſets the ſtorm againſt the chaff, as before the wind againſt the ſtubble. The word ſignifies an extraordinary ſtorm, a violent ſtorm, a kind of hurricane, which is able to throw down trees and houſes, yea, even to ſhake rocks and mountains; what work then will it make with chaff? Thus the Prophet ſpeaks (Iſa. 17. 13.) The Nations ſhall ruſh, like the ruſhing of many waters; but God ſhall rebuke them, and they ſhall flee far off, and ſhall be chaſed as the chaff of the mountains before the wind, and like a rolling thing before the whirlwind. We put in the margin, As the thiſtle-down, or, the down of the thiſtle; when the thiſtle ſheds its down, we ſee how it rolls before the wind. Now, ſaith he, as the chaff before the wind, or as a rolling thing before the whirlwind, ſo ſhall the Nations be. The day of vengeance that comes upon hardened and impenitent ſinners ſhall make them like chaffe (Zeph. 2. 1, 2.) Gather your ſelves together, yea, gather together O Nation not deſired, before the decree bring forth, before the day paſs as the chaff. Gather your ſelves together. Some read, Fan your ſelves, in alluſion to the chaff, fan or winnow your ſelves, get out all the chaff from your ſelves, by a work of ſerious repentance, then we winnow or fan our ſelves. Why doth the Prophet ſtir them up to this duty? Elſe (ſaith he) the decree will bring forth; that is, God having decreed judgment, the decree will bring forth judgment. The decree is big, it hath judgment in it, and it will bring forth ſhortly: There will come a ſtorm, a tempeſt, a whirlwind, when the decree brings forth. I would have you get the chaff out of you, before the day paſs as the chaff; that is, before that day come that ſhall make the chaff paſs away. When he ſaith, Before the day paſs, he doth not mean, as if the time ſhould paſs as the chaff; but the meaning is, before the time come that wicked men ſhall paſs as the chaff before the wind. Therefore I adviſe you to fan, and winnow your ſelves, get out the chaff; for if you be chaff, the day will come, and make you paſs as the chaff, and carry you away.

Further, As chaff which the wind carries away. The word ſignifies, to ſteal away as a thief, ſuddenly and ſecretly. The coming of Chriſt to Judgment is compared to the coming of a thief (1 Theſ. 5. 2.) Wind and ſtorms ſcatter the chaff no man knows where; nor doth any man know how to gather it up. Wicked men are compared to ſtubble, and chaff, in three things.

Firſt, They are (if duly conſidered) but chaff in their underſtandings, they have no ſolidity there: for they follow things that are but vain, and cannot profit. Now that man, how high ſoever, is but chaff in his underſtanding, who purſues vain in ſtead of ſolid things. Though ſuch a man be reputed deep in policy, and well ballanced in judgment, yet indeed he is but light in the ballance, and is juſtly counted a chaffie man.

Secondly, They are as chaff; that is, little worth. The wicked man is of little value or worth in the eyes of God and good men. Every Believer is precious in the eyes of God. (Iſa. 43. 4.) Since thou waſt precious in my ſight, thou haſt been honourable. The godly are as wheat; the wicked are as chaff. (Jer. 32. 28.) What is the chaff to the wheat? If we ſet a buſhel of chaff by a buſhel of wheat, what is the chaff to the wheat? Of no value or price in compariſon. Wicked men are of no more value in compariſon of them that have true Grace, then the chaff is to the wheat, or the ſtraw to the corn. Solomon ſaith (Prov. 10. 20.) The tongue of the juſt is as choice ſilver; but the heart of the wicked is little worth. Solomon makes not the compariſon upon even terms, between the tongue of the juſt and the tongue of the wicked; but he preferrs the tongue of the juſt (an inferiour member) before the heart of the wicked; which (though in a moral conſideration it be his worſt part, yet) in a natural conſideration is his beſt and nobleſt part. Now if the tongue of the juſt (that is, his ability and manner of ſpeaking) be as choice ſilver, then ſurely his heart (that is, his ability and manner of thinking and reaſoning) muſt needs be as the fineſt gold. And if the heart of the wicked be little worth, his tongue cannot be worth any thing at all. Who would give any thing for thoughts of droſs, and words of chaff? Yet theſe are all that the heart and tongue of a wicked man can produce.

Thirdly, They are ſtubble and chaff, becauſe though alone they are worthleſs, yet they have a kind of uſefulneſs even to godly men in outward ſociety. The ſtraw or ſtubble hath uſefulneſs to the ear, it bears up the ear; and the chaff hath uſefulneſs to the wheat, it covers the wheat, it keeps and preſerves the wheat. The Lord in this ſence often makes wicked men ſtubble and chaff to his people; that is, they are uſeful to them. I need not ſtrain the ſimilitude, but take it up only in general. The providence of God hath ſo ordered it to view, that many wicked men are a protection to the peace, and very ſubſervient to the comfort and preſent welfare of his people in this World; though they be chaff, yet they cover the wheat; though they be ſtraw or ſtubble, yet they ſhall bear up the ear, and miniſter ſome way or other to their help. Though wicked men are in themſelves as that chaff threſhed out of the ear, which the ſtorm carrieth away, yet they often are to the people of God, as the chaff in the ear, which binds and holds in the corn, ſo that the ſtorm cannot carry it away.

From the proper ſcope of the ſimilitude as here applyed,

First, Obſerve, It is an eaſie thing with God at any time to deſtroy wicked men.

Secondly, That, All the preparations and powers of wicked men to reſiſt the wrath of God, or to ſave themſelves from it, is to no purpoſe.

All their power is no more then the chaff to the ſtorm, and the ſtubble to the wind. Though the wicked flatter themſelves in their power and greatneſs, as if they were out of danger, yet they are but ſtubble and chaff, God can quickly blow them away. How many experiences have we ſeen of wicked men, who thought their mountain ſo ſtrong that it ſhould never be removed, which yet hath appeared but as chaff before the wind, and the ſtorm hath carried them away. And if God joyn with the weakeſt, they are too ſtrong for the mightieſt (Iſa. 41. 15.) Behold, I will make thee a new ſharp threſhing inſtrument having teeth. Who was this? The former Verſe anſwers, it was the worm Jacob: God did not make an inſtrument for the worm Jacob; but he made the worm Jacob his inſtrument; Behold I will make thee (not for thee) a new ſharp threſhing inſtrument. All men are worms compared with God; and no man is ſo fit an inſtrument, for God to do great things by, as he who looks upon himſelf (ſo Jeſus Chriſt did, by whom God did the greateſt work that ever was done) as a worm and no man. But what ſhall this worm Jacob do? The words following anſwer, He ſhall threſh the mountains, and break them ſmall, and ſhall make the hills as chaff. The mountains and hills to be threſhed and fann'd, are the mighty ones of the earth, even all earthly might riſing up againſt the wayes and deſigns of the God of Heaven, theſe the worm Jacob ſhall threſh, and fan, and make as chaff, and the wind ſhall carry them away, and the whirlwind ſhall ſcatter them. Therefore let not the mighty man glory in his might. The Lords anger is as a ſtorm, or a wind; and the meaneſt worm that he uſeth, as a new ſharp threſhing inſtrument, to break them into chaff. And this he doth, in his anger, not only to ſingle perſons in power, but to the moſt powerful States and Nations of the World, as is repreſented in that moſt illuſtrious Prophetical viſion of the four Monarchies ruin'd by a fifth (Dan. 2. 35.) Then was the iron, the clay, the braſs, the ſilver, and the gold, broken to pieces together, and became like the chaff of the Summer threſhing-floor, and the wind carried them away, that no place was found for them, and the ſtone that ſmote the Image became a great mountain, and filled the whole earth. We ſee how it is not only with wicked perſons, but wicked powers (this great Image, the iron, and clay, and braſs, and ſilver, and gold, typed all the Powers of the World oppoſing the Kingdom of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, openly, or ſecretly, directly, or indirectly) they are as ſtubble before the wind, and as chaff that the ſtorm carrieth away.

VERS. 19, 20, 21.

God layeth up his iniquity for his children: he rewardeth him, and he ſhall know it.

His eyes ſhall ſee his deſtruction, and he ſhall drink of the wrath of the Almighty.

For what pleaſure hath he in his houſe after him, when the number of his months is cut off in the midſt?

IN the former words Job ſpake in the plural number, They are as ſtubble, and as chaff before the wind. Here in the ſingular, God layeth up his iniquity for his Children. And yet he ſtill ſpeaks to the ſame point, and of the ſame perſons. Such varyings of the number are not unuſual in Scripture. Read Hoſea 2. 17, 18, &c.

The words are a continuation of the former Argument, as was opened before.

Verſe 19. God layeth up his iniquity for his Children.

The wicked mans iniquity is laid up by God as a treaſure; for ſo the propriety of the word beareth. God layeth up his iniquity ſafe; for ſo we deſire our treaſure ſhould be. When men lay up their treaſures, they will have them (as we ſay) forth coming. The wicked ſcatter their iniquities, but God gathereth them together, and will have them forth coming in due time.

He layeth up his iniquity, or pain, or ſorrow.

און Nunc dolorē nunc iniquitatem ſignificat; quia ſi quis aliquid iniqui commiſit dolor & perturbatio ſequitur.

One word ſignifies iniquity, pain, and ſorrow, becauſe they who do iniquity, ſuffer pain and ſorrow for it; iniquity is indeed ſuch droſs, that it is not worth the treaſuring, Yet the Lord layeth it up: Or, He layeth up his iniquity; that is, the puniſhment of his iniquity. We lay up ſin, and God layeth up judgment; he layeth up the rewards and recompences of iniquity.

Deus reſervabit filii ejus robur ſuum. Mon. q. d. adhuc majorem iræ ſuæ procelloſæ vim ei reſervabit in futurum, nempe cum filios ſuos penitus abolebit. Bold.

Some render, He layeth up ſtrength. And then it is expounded, not for the ſtrength of the wicked man, but for the ſtrength of God: As if he had ſaid, Though God hath ſcattered the wicked man himſelf as with the wind, and as the chaff before the whirlwind; yet he layeth up his ſtrength for his Children; that is, God hath yet greater judgments, ſoarer evils to bring upon his family, and poſterity, then ever yet fell upon himſelf: He hath laid up ſtrength for his Children. As if God did afflict him but with his weakneſs, with his little finger, and reſerved his arm to ſtrike his Children with; as if he would make his little finger heavier upon his Children, then his loins had been upon their Fathers; or as if having chaſtized the Fathers with Whips, he meant to chaſtize the Children with Scorpions. Either of theſe interpretations the ſingle terms will bear; yet the difficulty remains in making out the ſcope and tendency of the whole Text. There is a fourfold explication given of it.

First thus, Some expound the whole by repeating the foregoing Interrogation negatively, as I ſhewed upon the former Verſes; How oft (ſaith he) is the candle of the wicked put out? That is, Their candle is not often put out, or it is ſeldom put out. Thus here, How oft doth God lay up his iniquity for his Children? Not often: For as himſelf proſpered in perſon, ſo many times his Family and Children proſper. 'Tis but rare that God layeth up iniquity for his Children. And ſo, according to this expoſition he carrieth on the flouriſhing ſtate of the wicked man, who as he lived himſelf in all proſperity, ſo do his Children after him. 'Tis an experienced truth, that God hath ſuffered both wicked men and their children to flouriſh, and grow great in the world; he doth not preſently reckon with the children, as he did not with their fathers.

q. d. raro hoc fieri video & frequentius tū ipſos impios, tum eorum liberos impunè abire & ſecurè vivere calamitatum expertes. Merc.

Secondly, ſome of the Rabbins expound Job in theſe words, taking off the affliction from the children, and faſtening it upon the father. As if he had ſaid, What! Shall this wicked man live, and proſper all his dayes? Shall he who hath done ſo much evil feel none? Shall he carry it without any the leaſt touch from the hand of God, and ſhall the load and burthen of the judgment light only upon his children? What? will God lay up all the puniſhment of his iniquity for his poſterity? Is this juſtice? Doth this look like the doings of God, that the father thrive, and his children only be undone? Which ſence they conceive continued in the latter part of the verſe, which commendeth the juſtice of God, and exalteth his righteouſneſs in this determination; God will repay him into his own boſom as he hath deſerved. God will reward him, and he ſhall know it, his eyes ſhall ſee his deſtruction, and he ſhall drink of the wrath of the Almighty. God will not lay up iniquity for his Children, and let him eſcape. No, himſelf ſhall be puniſhed, and ſmart for his folly; he ſhall taſte how evil and how bitter a thing ſin is. This alſo hath been verified by frequent examples. The judgment of many wicked men doth not ſleep, nor their deſtruction ſlumber; God preſently cuts off ſuch parents in the light and heat of their iniquities.

An iſte impius tota vita impunè feret & punitio in filios uſque differetur? hoccine patietur dominus. Rab. Sel.

Thirdly, (near this ſence) The words are read, as an anſwer to an Objection. This having been affirmed by Job, that the Lord doth not often put out the lamp of the wicked, that he doth not make them as chaff and ſtubble, but that they proſper, and grow great in the world. Zophar (whoſe opinion is here oppoſed) is ſuppoſed to reply, What though God do not afflict the wicked man himſelf, and put out his lamp, yet he layeth up his iniquities for his children. Thus Mr. Beza ſeems to interpret this Text; But you will ſay to me, though the wicked man himſelf be not puniſhed, yet God layeth up his iniquity for his children; the fathers ſin, ſhall be the childrens portion. To which Objection Job is conceived making anſwer in the next words: No (if what you affirm were the law and conſtant rule of his proceeding) God would rather repay the wicked man himſelf, and make him know what it is to ſin againſt him, his eyes ſhould rather behold his deſtruction, and he himſelf deſerves much more to drink of the wrath of the Almighty then his children. Beſides, what cares he for his houſe, or what becomes of his family, when the number of his months is accompliſhed, and cut off in the midſt? He being dead feels neither the ſmart nor the comfort of his children; whatever the Providence of God diſpenceth or allotteth them, concerns him little, and will not then touch or trouble him at all. As if Job had ſaid to Zophar, Though I deny not the thing, that God doth lay up the iniquity of the parents for the children, yet, according to your principle and poſition, it ſeems more conſonant that the wicked man ſhould be puniſhed in his own perſon, then in his poſterity.

Deus (inquietis) reponet filiis ejus violentiam ipſius. Redderet illi & (hoc) ſciret, & viderent oculi ejus exitium ſuū, &c. Bez.

Fourthly, Moſt, both of the Latine and Greek Interpreters, agree in this expoſition, that Job here deſcribes the miſery of a wicked man, and the judgment of God upon him, as in reference to his own perſonal ſorrows, ſo in reference to thoſe which afterwards befal his children and family; How oft is the candle of the wicked man put out? How oft doth God drive him as chaff before the wind? Yea, and not only ſo, but God layes up his iniquity for his children; that is (as elſewhere frequently in Scripture) the puniſhment of his iniquity. They ſhall ſmart as well as he himſelf did, and be wrapt up in thoſe calamities which were bred in their fathers ſins, and perfected in their own.

Cum deſcribit extremū impii ſupplicium, affirmat etiā redundaturem ad filios.

Hence Obſerve, The ſins of parents are juſtly puniſhable in their poſterity.

As many parents, by wickedneſs, ſtore up riches for their children; ſo, becauſe of their wickedneſs, God ſtores up wrath for their children. Nor may it ſeem unreaſonable, or unjuſt, that he doth ſo; for the ſon ſucceeds into all the rights of his deceaſed father, and this is one of them: He hath but his right in whatſoever he is puniſhed. As God may juſtly puniſh the ſin of a man in his cattel and eſtate, ſo alſo in his children; becauſe they not only belong to him, but are a part of him. But it may be objected, How then doth the Prophet Ezekiel affirm from the Lords mouth, that The ſon ſhall not bear the iniquity of the father; and the ſoul that ſinneth ſhall dye (Ezek. 18. 20.) And how ſhall we reconcile this of the Prophet with that which God himſelf ſpake in the Law, threatning the children of the wicked, and their childrens children, for their iniquity (Exod. 5. 20.) I the Lord thy God am a jealous God, viſiting the iniquities of the fathers upon the children, to the third and fourth fourth generation of them that hate me. One Scripture ſaith, The ſon ſhall not bear the iniquity of the father; and another ſaith, That the ſon ſhall bear the iniquity of the father; or, That God will viſit the iniquity of the fathers upon the children to the third and fourth generation.

Naturalis conſecutio eſt, ut hæres ſuccedat in omne jus defuncti. Nihil incommodi eſt, ſi illorū cum ſint habeant quæ illorum ſunt. Coc.

I anſwer, for the clearing of thoſe Scriptures, that when the Prophet ſaith, The ſon ſhall not bear the iniquity of the father, it may be underſtood either of theſe two wayes. Firſt thus, He ſhall not bear it, in reference to eternal puniſhment, God will not damn a ſon for the ſin of his father; but he may bring many chaſtiſements and ſorrows upon a ſon, for the ſins of the father. Secondly, We may underſtand the Prophet thus, The ſon ſhall not bear the iniquity of the father; that is, if the ſon depart from the iniquity of the father, if the ſon do not imitate the fathers iniquity, then the iniquity of the father ſhall not redound to the ſon; but if the ſon tread in his ſteps, and write by his copy, then the ſon ſhall not only bear his own iniquity, but the iniquity of his father ſhall redound to him, for he makes his fathers ſin his own by imitation, as much as his own is his by commiſſion. (Math. 23.32.) Chriſt ſaith to the Jews, Fill ye up the meaſure of your fathers. Their fathers had ſlain the Prophets, and though themſelves adorned their Sepulchres, profeſſing (ver. 30.) If we had lived in the dayes of our fathers, we would not have been partakers with them in the blood of the Prophets; yet Chriſt tells them plainly (Luke 11.48.) Ye bear witneſs that ye allow the deeds of your fathers, becauſe he ſaw in them not only a ſpirit, but the practice of perſecution againſt the living Saints, while they ſeemed thus compaſſionate toward the dead Saints ('tis common for the worſt of men to pretend love and honour to good men when they are dead (the dead bite not) who cannot abide goodneſs, nor any good man while he liveth, but perſecute him to the death; now, I ſay, Chriſt ſeeing this in the Phariſees) gave them up to the fulfilling of their luſts. And becauſe they were reſolved to do that which the righteouſneſs of God had forbidden, he in wrath bids them do it. Fill up the meaſure of your fathers. As if he had ſaid, Your fathers ſtored up much wrath by killing the Prophets, but the meaſure is not yet full; do ye fill it, for I perceive ye will, by killing him who is greater then the Prophets. They ſlew the ſervants, ye will ſlay the Heir. Children fill the meaſure of their fathers in ſin; and then God fills the meaſure of the children in puniſhment. So Chriſt infers in that place of Luke (Ch. 11.50.) That the blood of all the Prophets which was ſhed from the foundation of the world, may be required of this generation, from the blood of Abel unto the blood of Zacharias, which periſhed between the Altar and the Temple. Verily, I ſay unto you, it ſhall be required of this generation. The blood of former generations had not been required of that, if they had not been as bloody as the former generations: But where old ſins are continued and approved by being newly acted, there the old ſins as well as the new are juſtly puniſhed.

Thus we may anſwer that Scripture, The ſon ſhall not bear the iniquity of the father, unleſs he do it. 'Tis childrens imitation of their fathers iniquity, which brings the iniquity of their fathers upon them. We may ſay of ſome children, that they are of their fathers, not only naturally, but morally; they carry the moral likeneſs of their fathers more then the natural, and appear not only in their bodily image, but in their ſoul-image too, together with the image of their actions or courſe of life. Childrens imitation of their parents in life, is the image of their parents actions, as the corruption of their nature is the image of their natural condition. So that while they imitate their parents ſin, they are their children formally as well as lineally. And thus one of the Ancients ſpeaks excellently of that fatherhood, or paternity, which the Devil hath in relation to wicked men (John 8.44.) Ye are of your father the Devil: The Devil bears the relation of a father to all wicked men, and this fatherhood doth not proceed from the act of the father, but of the children; for the Devil doth not make wicked men his children by begetting them; but wicked men make the Devil their father by imitating him; here is the way of that paternity. Now as all wicked men have the Devil for their father, not as being begotten of him, but as imitating him; ſo ſome children may call men their father, not only becauſe they have begotten them, but alſo becauſe they imitate him; and when they do ſo, they muſt look to ſuffer for the ſins of their fathers as well as they take delight and pleaſure in their ſins. For as we may grant that ſome children ſuffer in outward things for their parents ſins, who do not imitate them, ſo we muſt conclude, that they who do imitate their ſins, ſhall ſurely ſuffer.

Hæc eſt quædam paternitatis ratio, quam non tam pater ipſe conſtituit quam filii; Nos enim illum imitando patrem facimus, non ille nos creando filios. Auguſt. in Pſal. 64.

And therefore parents are hence admoniſhed to take heed of ſinning againſt God, leſt they be found unmerciful, unnatural, and hard-hearted to their children. Wicked parents do what they can to make their children miſerable, even while they are projecting to make them great and happy. They intend to raiſe them, yet the way they take to do it, proves their ruine and undoing. Tertullian (a learned Writer (treating of this point, ſuppoſeth that God aimed at this in giving the Law, when he threatened to puniſh the iniquity of the fathers upon the children to the third and fourth generation: This (ſaith he) God ſpake in reference to the hardneſs of their hearts, that if no other argument would move them to keep cloſe to the rule of the Law, to take heed of idolatry, and falſe worſhip, yet meer compaſſion to their own children might do it. All parents have a natural love to their children. So that they who have not a ſpiritual principle moving them to forbear thoſe ſins, becauſe they love God, and delight in his Law, may yet be moved by a principle of natural love, to avoid thoſe ſins for which (by name) God tells them, he will ſurely afflict and puniſh their children. He layoth up his iniquity for his children.

Etſi patrum delicta ex filiis exigebat, durilia populi, talia remedia cõpulerat, ut vel poſteritatibus ſuis proſpicientes legi divinæ obedirent. Tertul. adverſus Mar. c. 14.

Laſtly, Job is here deſcribing the puniſhment of a wicked man; in confirmation whereof he ſubjoyns, that God layeth up his iniquity for his children.

Hence Note, That, The evils which fall upon children, are the puniſhments of their parents.

Yea, in this their parents puniſhment is compleated; for as the ſin which began in the parents, is perfected by their children; ſo the puniſhment which began in the parents, is perfected in their children. There is not only a nearneſs and ſtrictneſs of relation, between parents and children, but a kind of ſameneſs: The child is not like an artificial piece of work made by the parent, but he is made out of his parent, and ſo is a part of him, or himſelf multiplyed into another individual: And this muſt needs make a community between them in their good and evil, in their joyes and ſorrows, in their ſufferings and enjoyments. This hath been further ſpoken to, Chap. 20. ver. 10. and therefore I deſiſt.

Quod genitum eſt, non item ut opus artis, ſtatim atque effectum eſt à gignente diſcedit. Nam ex illo, non ab illo factum eſt. Quare habet & retinet aliquam illius in ſeſe partem quâ convenienter & honore & pæna afficitur. Plutarch.

He rewardeth him, and he ſhall know it.

The word ſignifies the paying of a debt, and properly to be at peace: The reaſon is, becauſe when debts are paid, a man is at quiet, no more can be demanded. And there is a twofold paying; either in kind, or in that which is equivalent; that is, of the ſame worth, though of another matter; which difference is more plainly expreſſed by two different words in the Hebrew. The word here uſed doth not ſtrictly imply a paying back in (ſpecie, or) in the ſame thing; as put caſe a man borrow money, to pay money; but any return to the ſame worth and value. He rewardeth or payeth him. Now in what coyn or matter doth the Lord repay him? Or with what is he rewarded? The Text is ſilent about that; but we may eaſily conceive what it is. There are two ſorts of rewards: Firſt, Rewards of puniſhment: Secondly, Rewards of favour. The rewards of puniſhment are deſerved; the rewards of favour are promiſed. When 'tis ſaid, He ſhall reward him, we are not to underſtand it of the reward of favour, but of puniſhment; ſuch a reward as a wicked man deſerves, he ſhall have. And whereas the particular matter of the reward is not expreſt, this imports the greatneſs of it; when the Lord doth not tell us what the puniſhment is, he intimates it ſuch a puniſhment as can ſcarcely be told what it is. He rewardeth him. This concealment ſpeaks much in the aggravation of it. Conceive the worſt you can, that ſhall be the wicked mans reward.

שלם eſt reddere pretium aut æquivalens rei debitæ ad differentiam verbi השיב quod rem in natura (quod aiũt) reddere ſignificat.

Hence Obſerve, All the evils that fall upon a wicked man are deſerved.

They are rewards; the rewards of puniſhments are deſerved. The rewards of puniſhment may be conſidered, either in reference to this life, or the life to come. The rewards of puniſhment in this life are all deſerved; yet they are leſs then ſin deſerves. Take the greateſt puniſhment that befals any wicked man on this ſide Hell, it is leſs then his ſin deſerves. Ezra concludes thus of all the calamities with which the Jewiſh Nation was rewarded (Chap. 9.13.) After all that is come upon us for our evil deeds, and for our great treſpaſſes, ſeeing that thou our God haſt puniſhed us leſs then our iniquities deſerve, &c. And yet theirs was no little puniſhment: For the Prophet Jeremy (Lam. 1.12.) perſonating Jeruſalem, calleth all to behold and ſee, If there were any ſorrow like unto her ſorrow, which was done unto her, wherewith the Lord afflicted her in the day of his fierce anger. As if he had ſaid, You cannot make a parallel of the ſorrows and ſufferings of this people, with the ſufferings of any people that ever were in the world: So then, theirs was no ſmall puniſhment; and yet he ſaith, Thou haſt puniſhed us leſs then our iniquities deſerve. Let puniſhment go as high as it can in this life, it is leſs and lower then iniquity.

But in the life to come God hath a reward for iniquity ſutable to it: Sinners ſhall then receive as much as they deſerve; and becauſe they cannot bear ſo much as they deſerve at once, therefore they ſhall be for ever bearing it. Their reward ſhall be no more, nor at all leſs then ſin deſerves. God will not put ſo much as the leaſt dram of ſorrow into their ballance more then iniquity hath put into it, and of that he will abate them nothing. He rewardeth him.

And he ſhall know it.] There is a twofold knowledge: Firſt, By teaching and inſtruction: Secondly, By ſence or experience. The latter is here meant, he ſhall have an experimental knowledge. But what ſhall he know? He ſhall know or be convinced of theſe two things, which he would not learn before. Firſt, That there is a wiſe and a powerful providence of God, over-ruling, ordering, and diſpoſing all the affairs and motions of this life. Secondly, That God hath decreed and appointed wrath, for the portion of all impenitent ſinners; He ſhall know theſe things to his coſt.

Experientia Magiſtra diſcet malos divinitus puniri. Druſ.

Hence Note, Firſt, Wicked men will not know the evil of ſin, till they feel it.

The wicked might know this by inſtruction, they have been told as much again and again, but they would not believe it. Paul ſaith (2 Cor. 5. 11.) Knowing therefore the terror of the Lord, we perſwade men. How did he know it? Paul knew that terror of the Lord, not by experience (for he ſpake of the terror of the great day, which day was not then come) but he had received inſtruction about it, and he believed it would be a black day to many. A godly man knows the terror of the Lord by the teachings of the Spirit in the Word. But a carnal man will not know the terror of the Lords Judgment, till he be ſummoned to Judgment. When the Prophets in the Name of the Lord threatened the Jews with a day of evil, 'tis uſually added, then They ſhall know that I am the Lord. As if the Lord had ſaid, They have been told this often and often; they have had line upon line, and threat upon threat, yet they would not know it, but they ſhall know it, I will teach it them another way: Seeing they will not believe the judgment which is both ſpoken and written in my Book, I will write my judgments upon their own backs, and with their own blood; I will write them in red letters, that he who runs may read: And then they ſhall know that I am the Lord. So (Pſal. 83. 18.) David calls down the wrath of God upon publick enemies; Let them be confounded, and troubled for ever, yea, put to ſhame, and periſh (Why?) That men may know that thou whoſe name alone is Jehovah, art moſt high over all the earth. Carnal men will not know the Soveraignty of God, or they are aſhamed to acknowledge it, till they ſee ſuch as themſelves utterly confounded and put to ſhame: They never exalt God, till they ſee men caſt down. There is a tranſlation of that Text (Iſa. 28. 19.) which adds much clearneſs to the Obſervation in hand; From the time that it goeth forth it ſhall take you: for morning by morning ſhall it paſs over; by day, and by night, it ſhall be a vexation only to underſtand the report. Some evils are ſo great, that the hearing of them is vexation enough, it is a vexation only to underſtand the report. The blow, the wound, which they give the ear, goes to the heart, and is a pain to the ſpirit. Others render the Prophet thus, It ſhall go forth, it ſhall take you morning by morning, it ſhall paſs over by day, and by night: That is, continually, it ſhall make haſte; judgment being ſent on this journey ſhall never bait or reſt by the way, it ſhall travel night and day. But why is all this? The next words anſwer; And only vexation will cauſe you to underſtand, or, give you an underſtanding of theſe things, or doctrines (ſo we put in the margin, When he ſhall make you underſtand doctrine.) What ſhall make them underſtand doctrine? Only vexation; God will command an over-flowing ſcourge to come, it ſhall come by night, and by day; for he ſees that vexation will make you underſtand doctrine, and that you will know the Lord in his Judgments, who would not know him in his Commandments. This is a good ſence of the Place, and comes clearly to the truth in hand. Vexation gives underſtanding of doctrine. Many muſt be taught as Gideon taught the men of Succoth, With bryars and thorns, (Judg. 8. 16.) A word and a blow, teaching and ſtriking muſt go together; and they who will not learn by words, ſhall be taught by blows. Let ſinners conſider which is the eaſieſt way of attaining knowledge; or in which of theſe two wayes they may attain knowledge with greateſt eaſe. The Lord would teach us by his Word, let us take heed we put him not to blows; he would do it by inſtruction, let us take heed we put him not to do it by correction, yea, by deſtruction. God will be known by all the World, the Heathens ſhall know at laſt that he is the moſt High over all the earth. He rewardeth them, and they ſhall know it.

Tantũmodo ſola vexatio dabit intellectum auditui. Vulg.

Verſe 20. His eyes ſhall ſee his deſtruction, and he ſhall drink of the wrath of the Almighty.

His eyes ſhall ſee his deſtruction.] Were it not enough to ſay he ſhall ſee his deſtruction, but His eyes ſhall ſee it? Or how can he ſee without his eyes? To ſay a man ſees, impleyth that he ſees with his eyes. This Hebraiſm is uſual in Scripture language to make the ſence more full; as to ſay, He hears with his ears, ſo, He ſees with his eyes, is, he fully and plainly hears and ſees. What ſhall he ſee? He ſhall ſee his deſtruction; His death, ſay ſome; His ruine, ſay others; we may ſay, His damage, his breaking. Deſtruction is, and hath all theſe evils in it. His eyes ſhall ſee his deſtruction.

Note this from it, That, The ſight of evil is a grief to us, as well as the feeling of it is a pain.

Job had ſpoken much before of the miſery of the wicked man; now he adds, His eyes ſhall ſee his deſtruction. The ſight of deſtruction doubles the torment of it. Sorrow comes in at every ſenſe as well as joy; joy comes in at the ear, ſo doth ſorrow; joy comes in at the eye, ſo doth ſorrow. As the good which is unſeen affects little, ſo the evil which is unſeen afflicts little in compariſon of that we ſee. And hence uſually in great ſufferings, eſpecially the ſuffering of death, men cover their eyes, as being better able to endure death, then to behold the preparations to, or manner of it. The Apoſtle uſeth an expreſſion, which (in the letter of it) carries this point clearly (Heb. 11. 5.) By faith Henoch was tranſlated that he ſhould not ſee death: As if the greatneſs of the favour lay not ſo much in his not dying, as in his not ſeeing of death, or as if that which troubles more then death is the ſight of death. For though I conceive the ſeeing of death (in that place) is not ſtrictly tyed up to that ſence, but one ſence is put for another, and ſo we may expound Enoch's not ſeeing of death, by not feeling it, or by not coming to any nearneſs, or at all under the power and into the poſſeſſion of it; yet 'tis a truth, the terror of death is extreamly aggravated, when to our feeling of it, our ſight of it is ſuperadded: Whether it be our own deſtruction, or the deſtruction of thoſe we love, our ſorrow is much abated when our eye ſeeth it not. That's compleat deſtruction, which is not only felt but ſeen. Salvation and Glory believed, take much upon the heart; But what will the ſight of theſe things be? Old Simeon deſired no more, when he had attained but the ſight of Chriſt, whom he had long believed and embraced by faith (Luke 2. 29, 30.) Lord, now letteſt thou thy ſervant depart in peace, for mine eyes have ſeen thy Duplex tormentum eſt videre pœnas quas ſuſtineas.

thy Salvation. And while the Apoſtle Peter affirms that the Saints then living did love and rejoyce in Chriſt unſeen (1 Pet. 1.8. Whom having not ſeen ye love, in whom, though now ye ſee him not, ye rejoyce) he therein intimates that Saints ſhall love and rejoyce in him much more when once they ſee him. To ſee good hath ſo much of joy in it, that the joyes of Heaven are called, ſight or viſion. Now as the ſight of good is to joy, ſo the ſight of evil is to ſorrow, the advance and heightning of it. His eye ſhall ſee his deſtruction,

And he ſhall drink of the wrath of the Almighty.

חמת Excandeſcentia à יחם incaluit, quando, ſcilicet, ſanguis incaleſcit circa cor.

To drink, notes the taking in of a quantity, He ſhall drink, is, he ſhall be filled with the wrath of the Almighty. The word ſignifieth heat of wrath, or ſuch wrath as hath much heat in it. We commonly ſay when we ſee any one very angry, The man is in a heat. Wrath heats the heart; as the holy Ghoſt ſpeaks of the Avenger (Deut. 19. 6.) Leſt he purſue the ſlayer while his heart is hot; that is, in the height of his anger. God will purſue the wicked man while his heart is hot. He ſhall drink not only the wrath, but the heated ſcalding hot wrath,

Of the Almighty.] Shaddai, who is able to make good his word in the ſaddeſt effects of it. In the former Verſe the ſenſe of ſeeing was afflicted, His eyes ſhall ſee his deſtruction: Here the ſenſe of taſting; drink affects the taſte. And he that drinks wrath, hath not only ſtore of it, but all that he hath, he hath it in him. Wrath is to ſome as the clothes upon their back, 'tis to others as meat or drink in their bowels. Again, this drinking wrath may be conſidered two wayes. Firſt, That pure wrath, or wrath alone, ſhall be put into the cup of a wicked man: Or ſecondly, That whatſoever he drinks, or how pleaſant ſoever his cup is, yet wrath ſhall be mingled with it. He ſhall drink of the wrath of the Almighty.

Hence Obſerve, Firſt, God hath abundance of wrath ready for wicked men.

He will make them drink it; he hath not only drops, but whole cups, flagons full, and whole veſſels full of wrath, yea, he hath not only flaggons and veſſels, but rivers full, even a ſea full of wrath. As there is a ſea of mercy, ſo there is a ſea of wrath in God. The one as well as the other hath neither bank nor bottom. The wrath of God as well as the love of God is infinite. Wicked men ſhall drink, and have enough of it. What can be ſaid more ſadly of the ſtate of a wicked man then this, that he ſhall drink wrath. As drinking the love and favour of God in Scripture, ſhews the happineſs of the Saints in their fulleſt and freeſt enjoyments of him; ſo the drinking of wrath, ſhews the miſery of the wicked under the higheſt and fulleſt tokens of his diſpleaſure. He brought me (ſaith the Church) into the wine cellar, or, houſe of wine: ſtay me with flagons (Cant. 2. 4, 5.) with what flagons? What, with empty flagons? No, empty flagons will not ſtay the Church, though they be flagons of gold: They muſt be full flagons; but of what? Of the love, mercy, and kindneſs of Jeſus Chriſt. Theſe are the wine of his cellar. Stay me with flagons of love, ſaith the Church; you cannot ſtay and bear me up, unleſs you give me theſe flagons. Now as the Lord hath theſe cellars and flagons of wine, that is, of joy and favour for his people, ſo he hath flagons and cellars of wrath for ſinners. This drinking of wrath is expreſſed in Scripture not only in reference to paſt and preſent, but future evils (Iſa. 51. 17.) The paſt afflictions of Jeruſalem are elegantly ſhadowed under this notion, Awake, awake, and ſtand up, O Jeruſalem, which hath drunk at the hand of the Lord the cup of his fury; thou haſt drunken the dregs of the cup of fury, and wrung them out. There is none to guide her among all the ſons whom ſhe hath brought forth, neither is there any that taketh her by the hand. He ſpeaks to Jeruſalem as made drunk with the cup of trembling: A little draught, or the drinking of a little, doth not cauſe drunkenneſs; Jeruſalem drunk wrath to drunkenneſs, ſhe drank deep. Now when a man is drunk (though it be a ſhame to own ſuch, yet) ſome friend or other will lead and guide him home, when he cannot guide himſelf. But Jeruſalem was drunk with the cup of the Lords wrath, and there was not a man to guide her among all the ſons whom ſhe had brought forth, neither was there any to take her by the hand. Jeruſalem could not ſtand alone, ſhe was ſo drunk with the wrath of God, and there was none to take her by the hand to lead her; that is, ſhe had neither King, Prieſt, nor Prophet, to comfort and ſupport her in her affliction, or to counſel and direct her what courſe to take that ſhe might be delivered out of it. And thus the Prophet Jeremy ſets forth the future calamities of the Nations round about. (Jer. 25. 15.) Take the wine cup of this fury at my hand, and cauſe all the Nations to whom I ſend thee to drink it; and they ſhall drink and be moved, and be mad, becauſe of the ſword that I will ſend among them. What was the wine cup, or the wine in the cup? It was a cup of blood; I will ſend a ſword, and they ſhall drink. The wine which the ſword makes is not the blood of grapes, but the blood of our veins. And though the ſword draw not a drop of blood from us, yet it fills many cups of ſorrow for us to drink. All who partake with Babylon in her ſin, and receive her mark, Shall drink of the wine of the wrath of God, that is poured out without mixture in the cup of his indignation (Rev. 14. 10.) And as the puniſhing of thoſe who ſecretly or openly yield obedience to Babylon, is expreſſed by drinking the wine of Gods indignation, ſo their communion with Babylon is expreſſed by drinking the wine of her fornication. For as old literal Babylon (Jer. 5. 7.) was a golden cup in the Lords hand, which made all the earth drunken. The Nations have drunkem of her wine (ſaith the Prophet) therefore the Nations are mad. How did Babylon make the Nations drunken? Becauſe the Babyloniſh Empire was an Inſtrument which God uſed to execute his judgments upon others, and to cauſe them to drink deep of the wine of his wrath. So myſtical Babylon hath a golden cup in her hand, and ſhe makes the Nations drunk with the wine of her ſpiritual fornication; that is, of her Idolatry, error, and ſuperſtition. Now the Nations having made themſelves drunk with this ſinful wine of Babylon, ſhall be made drunk with the wrathful wine of God. The ſufferings of Jeſus Chriſt, who taſted and took down all thoſe evils which the ſin of man deſerved, are expreſt by a cup (Matth. 26. 49.) Father, if it be poſſible, let this cup paſs. He ſaw what was in the cup, and prayed thrice to be excuſed the drinking of it, or that it might paſs away, yet with ſubmiſſion to his Fathers will: Not my will, but thy will be done. Chriſt took up and drunk the ſuffering cup, that we might take up and drink the cup of Salvation. Our ſins and ſorrows were the portion of Chriſts cup, that the favour and love of God might be the portion of our cup. The Lord (that is, the favour of the Lord, ſaith holy David, Pſal. 16. 5.) is the portion of mine inheritance, and of my cup. My drink is the Lords love, his favour is mingled with my drink: Divine goodneſs ſweeteneth and ſpiceth my cup; The Lord is the portion of my cup. And hence the ſame David crieth out (Pſal. 36. 7, 8.) How excellent is thy loving kindneſs, O God, therefore the children of men put their truſt under the ſhadow of thy wings. They ſhall be abundantly ſatisfied with the fatneſs of thy houſe; thou ſhalt make them to drink of the rivers of thy pleaſure. Saints drink at rivers, and not only at pleaſant rivers, but at rivers of pleaſure; they ſhall have that which is ſweet, and enough of it. Thus as the Lord gives his own people cups and rivers, abundance of pleaſures; ſo his enemies ſhall drink cups and rivers (that is abundance) of wrath.

Secondly, Obſerve, There is no avoiding of the wrath of God.

He ſhall drink of the wrath of the Almighty. How few, indeed none, would drink of this cup if they might be ſpared. Who thirſts for a cup of wrath? Who would ſo much as taſte or touch it with his lips? But the wicked ſhall; though they have no mind to it, they muſt; though it be nauſeous, and their ſtomack turn at the ſight of it, yet they muſt drink it: They cannot be excuſed or diſpenced with; this cup muſt go round them all. As drunkards ſay to their companions, you ſhall drink, you muſt pledge us, we will pour it down your throat elſe: So the Lord ſaith to his enemies, you ſhall drink, I will pour it down your throat elſe. If Jeſus Chriſt, when he ſtood in the place of ſinners, could not be ſpared, ſhall any, who ſtand in their own place as ſinners, preſume to be ſpared? What can they plead before God to excuſe themſelves, when Chriſt himſelf was not excuſed when he prayed ſo earneſtly that he might. Every ſoul that hath not part in Chriſt, who drank the cup of his Fathers wrath, ſhall himſelf and for himſelf drink a cup of wrath.

Note again, All the evils that befal wicked men, proceed from, or are iſſues of the wrath of God.

This was noted before upon thoſe words of the ſeventeenth Verſe, He diſtributeth ſorrows in his anger; therefore I only name it here.

Verſe 21. For what pleaſure hath he in his houſe after him, when the number of his months are cut off in the midſt?

There is ſome difficulty in fitting theſe words to the former. There are three interpretations given.

Firſt, The words are interpreted as a reaſon why God ſends out judgment both againſt a wicked man and his family, why he and his ſhall drink the wrath of the Almighty; Why is all this? 'Tis becauſe God hath no pleaſure in his houſe after him: He, that is, God, cares not what becomes of this man, or of his children: What pleaſure, what delight hath God in him or his? They are (as it were) out of the care of God, being out of his Covenant, and therefore let what will come of them, let him and his ſink or ſwim, let all go at ſix and ſevens, God regards it not. This carries a truth in it: As all they who are in a ſtate of mercy and ſalvation take pleaſure in God; ſo they and theirs ſhall ſurely periſh, in whom God taketh no pleaſure: Yet I conceive this expoſition improper to this place; which rather deſcribes the ſtate and ſpirit of a wicked man when he dyeth towards his houſe, then the heart of God towards him and his houſe while they live.

Secondly, The words are expounded as holding out an Argument, that a wicked man (ſo living and dying) ſhall be puniſhed everlaſtingly. What do you tell him that God will lay up iniquity for his children? If himſelf may eſcape the ſtorm, and live all his dayes in pleaſure, what cares he: For what pleaſure or pain hath he in his houſe after him? (There is the ſame reaſon of both) If his houſe proſper, what pleaſure hath he in it? Or if his houſe periſh, what is that to him when he is not? Therefore unleſs there remain an eſtate of miſery for himſelf in perſon after this life, the miſeries threatened his poſterity when he dyes, will work little on him.

Thirdly, And rather theſe words give an account why God not only layeth up iniquity for the children of the wicked man, but doth alſo perſonally afflict him in this life, cauſing his own eyes to ſee his deſtruction, and himſelf to drink the wrath of him the Almighty. And this account, or the reaſon of this may be twofold. Firſt, Becauſe (as was laſt ſaid) his childrens afflictions cannot reach him when he is gone: For what pleaſure hath he in his houſe after him? That is, no pleaſure. And as his joy, ſo his ſorrow; as his comforts, ſo his troubles end in reference to all worldly things, whether they concern his family or himſelf, at the grave. A dead man is not in a capacity to be affected or afflicted with what is done or ſuffered in the world, as was ſhewed, Chap. 14. 21. Secondly, Becauſe wicked men do not uſually trouble themſelves about the next Age; if they can but rub out their own time, let them that come after ſhift for themſelves. They do not ſtudy how to procure the good of poſterity, nor do they lay to heart the evils which threaten them; as no evil threatened their own perſons, ſo much leſs that which is threatened upon their children doth preſs their ſpirits, Many profeſſed wicked men, yea, ſome who go under the name of Chriſtians, and make ſome outward profeſſion of the Goſpel, are yet of the ſame temper with that Heathen Emperor, who having made havock of all, and ſtirred ſuch trouble in his dayes, that it might be thought the World would end with him, yet pleaſed himſelf with this apprehenſion, that he then ſhould be out of the danger, If I dye, let Heaven and Earth mingle: If the World hold my time, let it break when I am gone. Such baſeneſs and narrowneſs is in the hearts of ſome men, that they care not what the next Age inherits. If God do not trouble them while they live, they will not trouble themſelves with what ſhall befal their families when they are dead.

ἐμοῦ θανόντος γαῖα μιχθήτω πυρί. Suet. de Tiber.

Thus a learned Tranſlator renders, What is his ſtudy or care about his houſe after him.

Quodnam eſt ſtudium illius de familia ſua poſt ſe. i. e. ut Deus ipſum viventem non excitat malis, ſic non excitat ipſum animus ejus ut ſit ſolicitus de rebus familiæ ſuæ eventuris poſt mortem. Jun.

When the number of his months ſhall be cut off in the midſt.

That is, when he ſhall dye: The words are a periphaſis of death; which we may ſignificantly enough call, The cutting off the number of our months. And as in general 'tis a deſcription of death, ſo we may take it more ſpecially as a deſcription of early death. An immature death is moſt properly, The cutting off the number of our months in the midſt. Thus the Pſalmiſt prayed, Take me not away in the midſt of my dayes (Pſal. 102. 24.) And another Pſalm ſaith, The wicked ſhall not live out half their dayes; that is, the number of their months ſhall be cut off in the midſt. Yet here I rather conceive it intended as a deſcription of death in general, What pleaſure hath he in his houſe, when the number of his months are cut off in the midſt? That is, when he dyes.

Mortis periphraſis, dimidiari vitam annos dies, idem eſt quod reſcindi, ſecari, dividi.

Hence Note, When a wicked man dyes he thinks all dyes with him, he hath no care beyond himſelf.

Nor is it any wonder that ſuch take little care of others for hereafter, ſeeing indeed they take no care what ſhall be for themſelves hereafter; if they may but have things preſent to ſerve their luſts, and ſatiſfie their deſires in this World, they will (as the ſaying of ſome of them is, though they do nothing leſs) truſt God for the next. In reſpect of temporals Chriſt gives this counſel (Math. 6. 34.) Take no thought for the morrow, for the morrow ſhall take thought for the things of it ſelf: That is, to morrow, or the time to come will bring thoughts enough upon you when it comes; ye need not foreſtal it, or take up the thoughts and cares of it beforehand. Or, to morrow will bring meat in its mouth; as it calls to new expence, ſo it will offer new proviſion, do not trouble your ſelves what ſhall be next; ſufficient unto the day is the evil thereof; and ſufficient unto the day will be the good thereof, you ſhall have daily bread. This counſel of Chriſt is far from the wicked; they take overmuch and over many thoughts for to morrow in reſpect of temporals; but they take no thought for to morrow in reſpect of eternals; or if they do 'tis about eternals of their own imagination, not of Gods inſtitution. Some wicked men are much upon that thought, or, Their inward thoughts are that their houſes ſhall continue for ever, and they call their lands after their own name (Pſal. 49. 11.) they hope for a ſucceſſion in their name for ever, this is their project, and the higheſt pitch of their expectation. They would ſeem to have much pleaſure in their houſe after them, and to deſire nothing more then the advancement of their children; yet their courſes proclaim to all good men, that as when they are dead they can take no pleaſure, nor feel any pain in reference to their houſe, or thoſe that are left behind them (which I take to be the moſt proper ſcope of this Text) ſo, that, while they live, they have no due regard to their children, nor any pleaſure in their houſe to provide for the real proſperity of it, when the number of their own months ſhall be cut off in the midſt. Wicked men are either altogether careleſs of the good of their houſe after them, or all the care they take is an evil to their houſe.

Further, From this circumlocution of death,

Obſerve, Firſt, Man hath his months appointed or numbred out to him.

Though the moſt that any man can have are ſcarce a number, yet whatſoever any man hath, or ſhall have, are exactly numbred. Our times are in Gods hand, as in regard of the iſſues and events of them; ſo alſo in regard of the length or continuance of them; God teacheth man the ſpiritual number of his dayes, or the art of numbring his dayes ſpiritually; but he himſelf hath numbred them (and that number he reſerves to himſelf) Arithmetically.

Secondly, Obſerve, Death is the cutting off of our months.

The months actually paſt, are cut off from the months which poſſibly were to come. Take the meaning of it yet more fully in the next point.

Thirdly obſerve, God oftens ſhortens the lives of wicked men, and cuts the number of their moneths off in the midſt.

Though every man, even the vileſt and moſt wicked man that ever lived in the world lives out the full number of thoſe moneths which the counſel of God hath appointed him perſonally; yet many wicked (and ſome good) men are cut off in the midſt of thoſe moneths which God hath appointed to mankind generally. The dayes of the years generally appointed to mankind, are threeſcore years and ten (Pſal. 90. 10.) yet half mankind doth not live out half the number of theſe years; ſome have the number of theſe years or moneths cut off in mercy, very many have them cut off in wrath and judgment; God takes ſome away from the evil which is to come, and God takes others away becauſe of the evil which they have already done, or leſt they ſhould do more evil. Theſe obſervations have occurred in other parts of this book, eſpecially in Chap. 14. and therefore I only mention them here, referring back the Reader to a larger diſcuſſion of them in thoſe places.

VERS. 22.

Shall any teach God knowledge, ſeeing he judgeth thoſe that are high.

JOB having given his experiences of the dealing of God with wicked men; now gives his approbation of it. He chalengeth all the wiſdom of the world to direct a more convenient courſe, or method, then the divine wiſdom proceeds in for the diſpoſal both of things and perſons here below. Shall any teach God knowledge? The queſtion is a negation; yea the queſtion is full of indignation, when he ſaith, Shall any teach God knowledge? He means that none can; and when he ſaith, Shall any teach God knowledge? His meaning is, that 'tis higheſt preſumption for any to think he can.

Shall any teach God knowledge?

The words are either the concluſion of what was before diſputed, or they are as a Preface to that which follows; ſome take them reſpecting as well the diſcourſe that comes next, as that which went before.

Hæc ſententia in medio poſita ſuam vim ad utramq; partem exerit tam adea quæ dicta ſunt, quàm ad ea quæ ſequuntur de divina providentia. Bold

לאל

Pro Deo. Quis veſtrũ hujus rei rationem pro Deo reddere poteſt. Rab. Sel.

Jewiſh Writers read the words thus, Shall any teach knowledge for God? As if Job's meaning were this; Doth God need any to apologize for him, or to take his part? Needs he an advocate to plead his cauſe, and to aſſiſt him in the juſtification of his own way, in giving out either good or evil? Shall any teach knowledge for God? And ſet out more plainly and clearly then he hath done; why ſome good men mourn all their dayes, and in the end of their dayes dye mourning? Why ſome wicked men flouriſh all their dayes, and in the end of their dayes dye flouriſhing? Can any unriddle theſe diſpenſations, and render a more ſatisfying anſwer about them?

But I rather conceive the words according to our reading, not as a forbidding of that office, that any ſhould undertake to plead for, or vindicate the juſtice and righteouſneſs of God in what he hath done; but as a reproof of mans preſumption in directing God what to do. Shall any teach God knowledge? As if Job had ſaid, doth God need any tutor, or maſter, to teach him his leſſon? Needeth he any to point him how to order the affairs of the world, what to do to the wicked, and what to the godly? Surely he needs none to teach, nor to inſtruct him. So the words are a reproof, a vehement reproof upon Job's friends, whom he perſtringeth as over-daring about, and intruding into, thoſe things which were above them.

Theſe words, Shall any teach God knowledge? imply five things, which I ſhall draw forth into ſo many Obſervations, and proſecute them in order as they riſe.

Firſt, Take the queſtion, Shall any man teach God knowledge? As a down-right negation, and then it gives us this inſtruction.

God cannot be taught.

Some men are ſo fooliſh that they cannot be taught, they are not capable; ſuch a one (we ſay) is not capable to be a Scholler, he is of ſuch weak parts, of ſo ſhallow an underſtanding, that he cannot be taught. But God is ſo wiſe that he cannot be taught, he is infinitely beyond the School (Iſa. 40. 13, 14.) Who hath directed the Spirit of the Lord, or being his Counſellor hath taught him? The wiſeſt Kings and States of the earth have their Counſel Tables, and 'tis but needful they ſhould. In the multitude of Counſellors there is ſafety (ſaid the wiſeſt of Kings) many eyes ſee more then one. But God who is only wiſe and all eyes, ſeeth more then many or then all the ſons of men. Who hath been his Counſellor? (bring forth the man, bring forth the Angel with whom God took counſel) who inſtructed him, and taught him in the paths of Judgment, and taught him knowledge, and ſhewed him the way of underſtanding? This Prophet ſpeaks fully to the ſence of Job; and his Text may be a Comment upon this before us, and tell us what Job means when he ſaith, Shall any teach God knowledge? He needs none to make him underſtand, none to direct him the courſe of Judgment; how to mannage his affairs with diſcretion, or duly to put his purpoſes and reſolves in execution. The Apoſtle Paul takes up the ſame language (Rom. 11. 34.) Who hath known the mind of the Lord, or who hath been his Counſellor? O the depth of the riches both of his wiſdom and knowledge! How unſearchable are his judgments, and his wayes paſt finding out! For who hath known the mind of the Lord? Hath no man known the mind of the Lord? Yes, there is a mind of the Lord which is known to man; there is a revealed mind of the Lord, a mind of the Lord which he hath made known: but beſides that revealed mind of the Lord, the Lord hath a ſecret mind (as we may call it) or a ſecret will; he hath a cabinet, and cloſe counſel lockt up in his own breaſt, which was never opened to the creature: Of that the Apoſtle ſaith, Who hath known the mind of the Lord? We know his mind, what he would have us do; what to believe, what the way to life and ſalvation is we know. He hath told us how we ſhould honour him, and work out our own ſalvation with fear and trembling. The Prophet reports ſome making that queſtion, Wherewithall ſhall I come before the Lord, and bow my ſelf before the moſt high God? (Mich. 6. 6.) They enquired, as if God had left them in the dark about the way of his worſhip, and ſervice. No, ſaith the Prophet (verſ. 8.) He hath ſhewed thee, O man, what is good, and what the Lord requireth of thee. Thus far we know the mind of the Lord, what he would have us do; but we do not know the mind of the Lord, what he himſelf will do, that's a ſecret; Who hath known this mind of the Lord, or who hath been his Councellor? Thus again (1 Cor. 2. 16.) Who hath known the mind of the Lord, that he may inſtruct him? But we have the mind of Chriſt. We know the mind of the Lord for our own inſtruction; but we know not the mind of the Lord for his inſtruction, or that we might inſtruct him. When man inſtructs man, he doth but make his own mind known to him; but when God inſtructs man, he not only makes his own mind known to him, but knoweth his; and ſo alſo muſt that man who takes upon him to inſtruct God.

Secondly, When it is ſaid, Shall any teach God knowledge? it plainly teacheth us. That God knoweth all things, or, that he is infinitely and perfectly wiſe and knowing. He for whom no teacher can be found, or he to whoſe treaſure of knowledge no knowledge, not the leaſt mite of knowledge can be added, muſt needs be infinitely wiſe and knowing: for that is infinite to which nothing can be added, and from which nothing can be taken away. Now thus wiſe is God, thus knowing is God, he cannot admit more wiſdom, therefore he is infinitely wiſe. God is the firſt rule, the ſupream rule of knowledge, and wiſdom; yea his knowledge and wiſdom is himſelf. The wiſdom of God is the wiſe God, and the knowledge of God is the knowing God: ſo that, as nothing can be added to God himſelf, ſo, nothing can be added to the wiſdom of God: for the wiſdom of God is God, therefore he is perfect in wiſdom and in knowledge. Job's argument that God needeth no teaching, is a clear demonſtration of it. For among men, they that are paſt teaching how wiſe are they? How wiſe are they in their own thoughts (though indeed it be ignorance and fooliſhneſs enough that they think ſo) who think they are paſt teaching, or too wiſe to be taught. There are ſome men that think they need no teaching, and there are none who need more then they; uſually they are under a dearth and ſcarcity of knowledge, who ſuppoſe they have ſuch abundance, that they are beyond the ſchool, beyond the Church, beyond teaching, and counſel, beyond helps and ordinances; ſuch as have theſe apprehenſions of themſelves, do leaſt apprehend themſelves. For as they who think they need not be better, draw a juſt ſuſpition that they were never good: ſo they who think they know enough, may be concluded to know nothing yet as they ought to know. When any ſay they are ſo rich in knowledge that they need know no more, I may ſay they need at leaſt this piece of knowledge, To know how poor they are in knowledge. But if any one had ſo much knowledge indeed that no man could teach him further, he were abundantly knowing. Now thus it is with God, ſhall any man teach God knowledge? they cannot; therefore his knowledge is infinite, and perfect. And ſo it is, Firſt, About things; he knows all things, what they are, and for what they ſerve, what their nature is, and what their uſefulneſs is. Secondly, About perſons, He knoweth all men, and needeth not that any ſhould teſtifie of man, for he knoweth what is in man (Joh. 2. 24, 25.) He knows every man fully, he knows him within and without. He knows all our outward actions, yea the very internal motions of the heart; he knoweth not only what men do, but all their aims and ſecret intendments in doing it.

Thirdly, This queſtion, Shall any teach God knowledge? intimates, That,

> Some men, do even attempt, and take upon them the boldneſs to teach God.

What need this chiding queſtion elſe? Why ſhould Job ſpeak thus to his friends, unleſs he had diſcovered, or at leaſt ſuſpected, ſuch a ſpirit in them; that they had ſpoken or done ſuch things as did amount to, or might be interpreted a teaching of God.

You will ſay, ſurely, no man ever attempted to teach God, we indeed are taught of God; and that we ſhall be ſo is the promiſe of the covenant of grace, Heb. 8. But did ever any man go about to teach God? He hath his chair in Heaven (as the ancient ſpeaks) that teacheth the heart of man; but where have they their chair, and where is their School, who undertake to teach the God of Heaven?

I anſwer, the teaching of God, may be conſidered two wayes.

Firſt, Directly, and formally.

Secondly, Implicitly, or by way of interpretation.

'Tis I grant exceeding rare that any riſe to ſuch a height of boldneſs, as avowedly, directly, explicitly, and formally, to ſay we can, or we will teach God: but there are many who ſay as much implicitly, and by way of interpretation, that is, they ſpeak, hold or do that which plainly implies a teaching of the Almighty, or a taking upon them to direct his counſels. For the juſtifying of this charge, we may caſt ſuch into two ſorts.

Firſt, In reference to his Word, ſome would teach the Lord how to ſpeak.

Secondly, In reference to his Works, others would teach the Lord what to do.

For the former, there are thoſe who would teach God how to ſpeak, by adding to, and diminiſhing from the Word which he hath ſpoken. That there is ſuch a proud principle in the heart of man, is plainly proved by thoſe cautions given both in the Law and in the Goſpel (Deut. 4. 2.) Ye ſhall not add to the Word which I command you, neither ſhall you diminiſh ought from it, that you may keep the commandments of the Lord your God which I command you: and (Prov. 30. 6.) Add thou not unto his Word, leſt he reprove thee, and thou be found a liar. Though we may add a Comment to explain the Word of God where it is hard, yet we muſt not add a ſupplement to the Word of God, as if it were defective. One of the firſt things to be believed unto ſalvation is, that the Word of God is ſufficient, or contains all things needful to ſalvation. The whole book of God concludes thus (Rev. 22. 18.) If any man ſhall add unto theſe things, God ſhall add to him the plagues that are written in this book. And if any man ſhall take away from the Words of the book of this Propheſie, God ſhall take away his part out of the book of life, and out of the holy City, and from the things which are written in this book. What fearful additions and ſubſtractions will God make concerning thoſe who add to or ſubſtract from his Word. The Lord foreſaw a ſpirit in man to be medling with his Word, elſe he had never made this Law againſt medlers with it. Now as he that reads any mans Work and takes upon him to add a line, or to daſh a line out of it, he undertakes to teach the Author knowledge; much more do they who add or diminiſh a line or word of the Word of God. Yet many ſuch there are who practiſe upon the Word of God both by way of addition and ſubſtraction. Some have done this openly, and others cloſely. Every carnal man doth this cloſely; for he that would ſet up his luſts for a Law, would ſurely blot out the Law of God; he would make the commandments of God void, and reſcind the ſtatutes of Heaven, who hath no mind to obey and ſubmit unto them.

The Papiſts eſpecially (beſides ſome others) do this openly. For they ſay, firſt, The Scriptures are obſcure; therefore they would teach God to ſpeak more clearly. Secondly, They ſay, the Scriptures are inſufficient without their patchments of Tradition; therefore they would teach God to ſpeak more fully. Others have complained that the language of the Scripture is homely and bare, theſe would teach God to ſpeak more eloquently. Nay, ſome have ſaid, there are contradictions in Scripture, theſe would teach God to ſpeak more truly; others complain, there are dangerous expreſſions in Scripture; and theſe would teach God to ſpeak more warily. All theſe take upon them to teach God knowledge, about his Word.

Secondly, There is alſo a generation who would teach God knowledge about his Works. They forbear not that firſt eternal work of God, Election. We have their arguings ſet down (Rom. 9. 11, 12, 14, 15.) For the children being not yet born, neither having done any good or evil, that the purpoſe of God according to election might ſtand, not of works, but of him that calleth; It was ſaid unto her, The elder ſhall ſerve the younger; as it is written, Jacob have I loved, but Eſau have I hated. The heart of man riſeth here; is this work of God right? If God proceed thus in his election of men, Is there not unrighteouſneſs with God? The wiſdom and reaſon of man ſaith, Surely God ſhould rather elect upon foreſeen works, or faith, or perſeverance in both. But God ſaith otherwiſe, What then? Is there unrighteouſneſs with God? God forbid: for he ſaith to Moſes, I will have mercy on whom I will have mercy, and I will have compaſſion on whom I will have compaſſion. What do you tell me (ſaith God) of your will, my will ſhall be the rule of election; Yea, it is not of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth, but of God that ſheweth mercy. Thus the Apoſtle aſſerts the abſolute election of God. But ſtill the heart of man is unſatisfied, as the Apoſtle ſheweth in the next words; Thou wilt ſay then unto me, why doth he yet find fault? for who hath reſiſted his will? If it be thus, may we not lay all the ſin of man at Gods door, and caſt dirt at Heaven: why doth God complain, if all be from his own will? Thus man would teach God knowledge; Nay but O man, who art thou that replieſt againſt God? ſhall the thing formed ſay to him that formed it, why haſt thou made me thus? Shall the clay teach the potter how to make it, or in what form to caſt it?

Secondly, Others have found fault with God, and would teach him knowledge about the work of Creation. The Naturaliſt complained, that man was ſent forth naked and helpleſs into the world, that other creatures had the advantage of man, having natural armor and defences which man wants. Such would teach God how to create.

Thirdly, How often do men take the chair, and like great Doctors offer God knowledge about his works of Providence. How many are there who think themſelves wiſer then God, or that they could direct him a better way for the Government of the world, then he is in. If they had the power, things ſhould be in a fairer ſtate then they are. They inſinuate againſt the Government of God much like Abſalom againſt his father David's Government, O that I were judge in the Land, you ſhould ſee what I would do, what a world would I make? I would ſet all right. Such vain thoughts lodge in the ſpirits of vain men about the providences of God.

And not only they who in this open manner conteſt with God about his providence; but ſuch alſo may be charged as taking upon them to teach God knowledge, who do but murmur through diſcontent, and are unſatisfied with his doings. When a man is diſpleaſed with what another doth, he thinks he could do it better. All they who are diſpleaſed with or murmur at what God doth, ſay plainly in their hearts they could do things better then God, they could teach him knowledge.

Fourthly, From Job's queſtion, as it carrieth not only a Negation of the thing, but indignation at it.

Obſerve, It is moſt ſinful to go about to teach God.

The height of pride, preſumption is in it (preſumption is the pinacle of pride) therefore the height of ſin is in it. As it is a great condeſcention in God to teach man knowledge, and to turn tutor to the poor creature; ſo it is higheſt preſumption in man to teach God knowledge, and to turn tutor to his Creator. And as an attempt to teach God in or about any thing is ſinful and preſumptuous, ſo eſpecially (which the ſubject here handled by Job leads us to) to teach him about his diſtributions of rewards and puniſhments: and that in any of theſe five particulars.

Firſt, To teach God whom he ſhall reward or puniſh.

Secondly, To teach God when he ſhall reward or puniſh.

Thirdly, To teach God how or in what manner he ſhall reward or puniſh.

Fourthly, To teach God the meaſure, or how much he ſhall reward or puniſh.

Fifthly, To teach God the time, how long he ſhall reward or puniſh.

There is an intruding upon the prerogative of God in all theſe. And the ſinfulneſs of this intruſion may appear upon a fourfold conſideration.

Firſt, Becauſe it is an abaſing of God, and a heightning of man. This ſets ignorance above knowledge, and folly above wiſdom: This ſets the Dial above the Sun, yea darkneſs above the light. Man is not only in the dark, in the darkneſs of ignorance, but he is darkneſs. God hath not only light in him, but he is light, and in him is no darkneſs at all. Now what an affront, what an indignity is it for darkneſs to go about to teach light? For ignorance to teach knowledge? For a fool to teach the oracle of wiſdom? The greateſt oracle, the wiſeſt among men is a fool to God, whoſe very fooliſhneſs (as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh) is wiſer then men. And are not men now, the wiſeſt of men, trim teachers of God?

Secondly, What knowledge or light ſoever any man hath, he receives it from God, and ſhall man teach God with his own knowledge? Man hath no knowledge of his own to teach God? What haſt thou that thou haſt not received? What gift, or grace, what skill, what endowment haſt thou that thou haſt not received; and thou haſt received it from God; and ſhall he who receives all his knowledge from God, teach God knowledge? He is the father of lights, from whom is every good and perfect gift; and ſhall we be giving light to him from whom we receive it? David ſaith, In thy light we ſee light (Pſal. 36. 9.) And ſhall we think that God needs our light to ſee by? The common light of the world is the Sun; will any man offer light, or hold up a candle to the Sun? Water comes from the fountain, and from that great feeder of all fountains, the Sea; will any man carry water to the fountain, or make a Conduit to ſupply the Sea?

Thirdly, When man hath conceived as much light of knowledge from God as he is capable of, ſo that his veſſel is brim full; when like Paul (who by his abundance, or great meaſures of revelation was in danger to be exalted above meaſure) he hath as much as he can bear; what is all that abundance but ſcarcity, what is all that fullneſs but emptineſs, compared with that aboundance and fullneſs which is in God? There is no ſhadow of a compariſon between that light of knowledge which ſhines out from God unto the moſt comprehenſive man or Angel, to that which is in God, or rather to that which God is, and ſhall any teach him knowledge? The Apoſtle ſaid of all our knowledge on this ſide glory (1 Cor. 13.) We know but in part; and ſhall we who know but in part, teach him that knows all? What we know of God and his wayes, is far leſs then that which we know not. The moſt of God and of his wayes is (Terra incognita) not yet diſcovered to us, and ſhall they teach God knowledge, who know ſo little of God? Again, that part which we ſee, or know, we know and ſee darkly, and through a glaſs; that is, we ſee it only reflexively, or by ſome other medium; and ſhall we teach him that ſees all things immediately, directly and intuitively in their own nature? When Job had ſpoken much of God, he concludes (Chap. 26. 12.) Lo theſe are part of his wayes, but how little a portion is heard of him? But the thunder of his power who can underſtand? So that, when we have received the utmoſt knowledge of God, it is but in part, and but a little part; How little a portion is heard of him? So little that it is ſcarce diſcernable; ſo little that the Apoſtle ſaith, Knowledge (that is this kind and degree of knowledge) ſhall vaniſh away (1 Cor. 13.) The knowledge we have here ſhall be ſwallowed up in the knowledge that we ſhall have in Heaven, like a drop of water in the Ocean; yet that knowledge which glorified Saints ſhall have in Heaven, will be but as a drop to the vaſt Ocean of the knowledge of God. The knowledge we have here is little to that we ſhall have above; what a nothing then is it to the knowledge of God who is above?

Fourthly, 'Tis ſinful to teach God knowledge about his wayes, becauſe his wayes cannot be known. Shall they direct God which way to go, who cannot find out the wayes which he hath gone (Rom. 11. 33.) How unſearchable are his judgments, and his wayes paſt finding out? If the wayes of the Lord be paſt finding out, then we muſt not find fault with his wayes. If we cannot find out their perfection, we muſt not ſay there is imperfection in them. O the depth and riches of the wiſdom and knowledge of God? The well is deep, and we have nothing to draw; we have not line enough to let down our bucket into the deeps of divine wiſdom and knowledge. The Judgments of God are a great deep (Pſal. 36. 6.) and the Judgment of man is but a ſhallow. We may quickly looſe our ſelves while we labour to find theſe wayes and Judgments of God. 'Tis ſafeſt in every point of wiſdom (but chiefly in ſuch as theſe) To be wiſe, as the Scripture ſaith, unto ſobriety (Rom. 12. 3.) and wiſdom to ſobriety is this (1 Cor. 4. 6.) to be wiſe according to that which is written. If wiſdom to ſobriety, be wiſdom according to what is written, how ſinful is it to teach God knowledge, which is not only beſides, but againſt that which is written. That wiſdom comes not from above which provokes us to teach rather then to obey him that is above. Beware of this dry drunkenneſs. 'Tis an excellent vertue to eat and drink to ſobriety, yet that excels it, To be wiſe unto ſobriety. Feſtus ſaid to Paul, Thou art beſides thy ſelf, much learning hath made thee mad. They who are wiſe ſo much beyond ſobriety, as any way to offer at the teaching of God, are indeed beſides themſelves, and much ignorance of their duty hath made them thus mad.

The fifth and laſt propoſition which riſeth from this queſtion (Shall any teach God knowledge?) is this,

> It is impoſſible that any better way ſhould be directed then that which the Lord uſeth in governing the affairs of mankind, or in the diſpoſing of all things here below.

For, Firſt, All the works of God are done in truth (Pſal. 111. 8.) As the Word of God is a word of truth, ſo all his works are works of truth: for his works are nothing elſe but the making good of his Word, or his works are the image of his Word. The truth of works is their anſwerableneſs to words. The works of God are anſwerable to a threefold word.

Firſt, To his Word of Propheſie. Whatſoever changes God makes in the world, they hit ſome Word of Propheſie; all is done that what he hath ſpoken or written may be fulfilled.

Secondly, The works of God are anſwerable to his word of threatning. God threatens before he ſmites, and he never ſmote any man with rod or ſword, with judgments or corrections, but according to his threatning.

Thirdly, The works of God are anſwerable to his Word of promiſe. All mercies are promiſed, and every work of mercy is the fulfilling of ſome promiſe. Now ſeeing all the works of God are reduceable either to propheſies, threatnings, or promiſes, they are done in truth, and what can be better done then that which is done in truth?

Secondly, All the works of God are done in Juſtice as well as in truth (Pſal. 145. 17.) The Lord is righteous in all his wayes, and holy in all his works. The rebellious Jews charged God with injuſtice, as if becauſe the fathers had eaten ſowre grapes, therefore the childrens teeth were ſet on edge. And hence they inferred that blaſphemous concluſion (Ezek. 18.25.) The way of the Lord is not equal. But ſaith the Lord, Hear O houſe of Iſrael, Is not my way equal? Are not your wayes unequal? Though they complained, yet upon a due ſearch they muſt needs acquit the Lord and condemn themſelves. And though now many quarrel with the wayes of God as unequal, unjuſt, and unrighteous, yet the conſcience of every man ſhall give teſtimony to God in the day of the revelation of his righteous Judgment, that all his wayes are righteous; and what can be better done then that which is done in righteouſneſs?

But it may be ſaid, Is it juſt and righteous that unrighteous and unjuſt men ſhould proſper and be exalted in the world, and that the righteous and godly ſhould ſuffer and be afflicted?

Were it not better that the wicked ſhould be alwayes ſuppreſſed, and the godly alwayes flouriſh?

I anſwer, The proſperity of the wicked, and the afflictions of the righteous, are no arguments of unrighteouſneſs in God, but only of his ſoveraignty and wiſdom. For,

Firſt, If God ſhould arreſt and puniſh all wicked men preſently with viſible judgments, mankind would be confounded, and the ligaments of humane ſociety diſſolved; for the greateſt part of the world are wicked; therefore the wiſdom of God doth ſo attemper and moderate his Juſtice, that he puniſheth the parts in ſuch a method as may conſiſt with the preſervation of the whole.

Secondly, If preſent vengeance were taken upon all wicked men, we ſhould walk by ſight rather then by faith, and be terrified rather then perſwaded to obedience.

Thirdly, If the Lord ſhould be quick in his judgments upon all wicked men, it would not appear how wicked ſome men are. Theſe conſiderations with many more which have been already offered and enlarged upon, Chap. 20. verſ. 29. of this book, beſides what hath occurred in other places about the ſame argument, may ſatisfie any man who is but rational, that the Lord doth only act up to his ſoveraignty, and according to the dictates of his infinite wiſdom, not at all contrary to the rules of Juſtice, while he lets wicked men thrive, grow great and high in the world.

Again, As to the manifold troubles and afflictions of many righteous, neither do theſe charge unrighteouſneſs upon God. For,

Firſt, Themſelves acknowledge that it is good for them that they are afflicted; why then ſhould ſtanders by ſay it is evil. They find the mercy of God in their afflictions, why then ſhould any think God is unjuſt in afflicting them?

Secondly, Their afflictions diſingage them from the world, and cauſe them to live nearer to God, there is no hurt in this; trouble on earth occaſions them to have their converſation more in heaven. What dammage is there in that?

Thirdly, The troubles which they meet with in this life, cauſe them to groan earneſtly for the next life; preſent wants ſtir them up to look at future enjoyment; a ſight of which by faith, and the expectation of which by faith, is better then the poſſeſſion of any outward preſent enjoyment. This can be no wrong to them.

Fourthly, Though they be ſtraitned with outward afflictions, yet God makes it up to them in ſpiritual conſolations, there is no loſs in that. So then, none have reaſon to murmur or complain either about the proſperity of wicked men, or the preſſures of the godly. All is done in wiſdom to the one, in mercy to the other, and according to the unqueſtionable prerogative of God in both.

Take this Corollary from the whole,

Shall any teach God knowledge?

Then ſubmit quietly to the will of God, let us impriſon our own reaſon, that the will and power of God may have their liberty: while we give reaſon too much liberty, we (upon the matter) impriſon the will and power of God. Meer humane reaſon is no competent Surveyor of the wayes of God. Not that any of the wayes of God are againſt reaſon, but many of them are above our reaſon. The wayes of God are ordered by the quinteſſence of reaſon, and that is not to be found under every mans (I may ſay not naturally under any mans) cap: and when we meaſure the wayes of God by the ſtandard and ſcantlings of our common reaſon, what a diſguiſe do we put upon them? Yea, how do we diſguiſe God himſelf? God is our maker, yet ſuch make and form a juſtice for him like their own, a holineſs like their own, a mercy like their own; and then what a God will he be? My thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are my wayes your wayes ſaid the Lord (Iſa. 55. 8.) And ſhall any reduce and ſhrink up the thoughts and wayes of God to their narrow and ſtraitned model? The Lord ſaid of Adam in ſcorn when he attempted a likeneſs to God; Behold the man is become as one of us (Gen. 3.22.) How doth God ſcorn them who would make his wayes and thoughts as their own. Therefore let man diſpute the wayes of God no more, but ſubmit quietly to his will.

Firſt, In what he hath ſaid, or to the rule of his Word.

Secondly, In what he hath done, or to the righteouſneſs of his Works. Aaron held his peace, he ſubmitted when God had ſlain his two ſons (*Lev.*10.3.) And when that ſad meſſage was brought to old Eli, that God would do ſuch things to his houſe as ſhould make the ears of them that heard the report to tingle, he only ſaid, Good is the Word of the Lord (1 Sam. 3. 18.) So, when the Prophet told Hezekiah from the Lord, Behold the dayes come, that all that is in thine houſe, and that which thy fathers have laid up in ſtore until this day ſhall be carried to Babylon, nothing ſhall be left, and of thy ſons that ſhall iſſue from thee, which thou ſhalt beget, they ſhall take away, &c. When (I ſay) he heard all this, what ſaid he? Even this, Good is the Word of the Lord (Iſa. 39. 8.) He doth not repine, nor diſpute the caſe with God; What! give up Jeruſalem the holy City into the hand of Babylon? Shall my ſons deſcended from David, and of the ſeed of Abraham, fall into the hands of the uncircumciſed? We hear of no word from him, but that which breaths humble ſubmiſſion, Good is the Word of the Lord. David was dumb with ſilence, when God ſpake rebukes to him (Pſal. 39.9.) There is no conteſting with God; 'tis fit our wills ſhould be ſwallowed into the will of God, and 'tis our duty to ſay (as Chriſt did) Not our will be done, but thine. The Pſalmiſt invites all to a very ſad ſpectacle (Pſal. 46. 8, 10.) Come, behold, What is the ſight? What's to be ſeen? Come, behold the works of the Lord, what deſolations he hath made in the earth. How are we to behold theſe deſolations? We may and ought with ſorrowful hearts, but we muſt not with diſcontented hearts (verſ. 10.) Be ſtill, and know that I am God? As if he had ſaid, I know you will be ready to query, why are the Nations ſhaken, and people made deſolate? Why are theſe changes in the earth? The Lord in ſtead of anſwering their queſtions, commands their ſilence; Be ſtill, and know that I am God? That's enough to quiet the thoughts of man. Some paraſites have ſacrilegiouſly flattred the Pope into this divine priviledge; No man muſt queſtion him, do what he will, if he carry thouſands to hell, who ſhall ſay, why do you ſo? 'Tis as dangerous to aſcribe this to man, as it is to deny it unto God. If he ſhake the frame of heaven and earth, we muſt be ſtill. For he doth in heaven and in earth whatſoever pleaſeth him, and no man muſt ſay (diſpleaſedly) What doſt thou? Or why doſt thou ſo? He that upon thoſe terms would know what God doth, or why he doth ſo, goes about to teach God knowledge. But Shall any teach God knowledge,

Seeing he judgeth thoſe that are high?

Some read thus, Shall any man teach God knowledge, wherewith to judge thoſe that are high? As if he had ſaid, Shall they teach God how to diſpoſe of, or deal with thoſe that are high? So Mr. Broughton, Can a man teach the Omnipotent knowledge, how he ſhall judge thoſe that are high? As if this were the ſpecial caſe in which no man muſt meddle to direct God

Quâ ipſe excelſos Judices. Jun.

God, how to handle, and take a courſe with the great ones of the world. Indeed, God knows well enough how to deal with the great ones, the high ones of the world, he knows how to pull down the mighty from their ſeats and to break their power, he knows how to ſcatter their forces and infatuate their counſels without receiving counſel from us. Shall any teach God knowledge, how to judge thoſe that are high? He hath wayes and means at command (when he purpoſeth it) to effect that purpoſe. That is a good interpretation.

Yet we render it (and I conceive more clearly to the mind of the Text) as a reaſon of the former queſtion, why no man ſhould preſume, or why it is high preſumption in any to teach God knowledge? The reaſon is grounded upon his prerogative and ſupremacy. He is the moſt high, and therefore muſt not be taught: he is the judge of thoſe that are high, and therefore he is moſt high, and therefore he muſt not be taught by any that are here below. He that knows how to judge them that are high, is himſelf too high to be taught knowledge. Again theſe words, He that judgeth thoſe that are high, are a periphraſis, or a deſcriptive circumlocution of God. To judge thoſe that are high, is to be God.

He judgeth.] What is here meant by Judging?

Firſt, To judge, is to diſcern, to look to, yea to look through the ſtate and condition of a perſon or a thing. Thus the Lord judgeth thoſe that are high, he diſcerns, he knows them and their wayes perfectly.

Secondly, To judge, is to give ſentence or judgment upon trial or due proceſs of Law: when matters are alledged and proved, the Judge gives ſentence.

Thirdly, To judge, is to puniſh. So the word is uſed, (1 Cor. 31.) If we would judge our ſelves. There judgment may be taken for the judgment of diſcerning, trying, and examining (as well as of ſentencing) as the Apoſtle ſaid before, Let a man examine himſelf. If we would judge, that is, try and examin our ſelves, we ſhould not be judged, that is, not afflicted, not puniſhed, as it is ſaid there; For this cauſe ſome are ſick and weak among you, and ſome are fallen aſleep. Which ſence the Apoſtle explains further, (verſ. 32.) But when we are judged, we are chaſtened of the Lord. To judge, is to chaſten, or to puniſh. So here, ſeeing he judgeth, that is, puniſheth, and layes his revenging hand upon thoſe that are high.

But who are the high ones, that come under the judgment of God?

Firſt, Some by the high ones underſtand the Angels, who are the higheſt or firſt claſſis of creatures. God did judge the Angels, he diſcerned, and paſſed ſentence upon them, and, They are held in chains of darkneſs to the judgment of the great day (Jude 5.) Hence ſome conceive that Job gathers his argument, Shall any teach God knowledge, how to judge poor creatures on earth, how to throw down, or exalt man, ſince he judgeth the Angels? The Apoſtle uſeth an argument near this in reference unto the people of God, to ſhew that the Saints are fit to judge things of their own concernment and intereſt: Do you not know that the Saints ſhall judge the world? And if the world be judged by you, are ye unworthy to judge the ſmalleſt matters? (1 Cor. 2. 3.) And he carrieth the argument yet cloſer to the point in the next verſe; Know ye not that we ſhall judge Angels, how much more things that pertain to this life? Job might ſay alſo, Know ye not that God hath judged Angels, thoſe that are high, the higheſt part of the whole creation? And ſhall any teach him knowledge, how to judge the inhabitants of this inferior, this lower world?

Secondly, Others underſtand it of thoſe who are high in wiſdom; the higheſt Graduates in Schools, and Univerſities; the moſt learned Rabbies, and Doctors, the Sophies, the Philoſophers of the world; ſo the ſence runs thus, Shall any man teach God knowledge, by whom the wiſeſt, the moſt knowing are taught, who eſpieth faults in the wiſdom of the wiſeſt? God is able to inſtruct all the maſters of knowledge, therefore he is not a learner. Shall any teach God knowledge, ſeeing he judgeth or correcteth thoſe who are high, the higheſt in knowledge?

Thirdly, Rather by the high are meant ſuch as are in high place and power, the Judges and Princes of the earth, who are ſo high, that God gives them his own ſtile, I have ſaid ye are gods. Though they be thus high, the Lord judgeth them: therefore ſeeing it is the right of his ſoveraignty to judge the higheſt, even the Kings and Rulers of the world, Shall any teach him knowledge?

Per excelſos intellige potentiſſimos atq; opulen-tiſſimos homines, de quorum judicio atq; ſupplicio, fere univerſum hoc caput eſt. Pined.

Hence note, Firſt, God judgeth the high ones.

The higheſt on earth are below God. Let all high ones remember, that, There is one higher then the higheſt (Eccl. 5. 8.) One higher then the Kings of the earth (Pſal. 89. 16.) King of Kings, and Lord of Lords.

Secondly, God diſcerns and throughly looks into the eſtates and actions of the higheſt in the world.

The high ones of the world, may put a ſkreen of ſecrecy between them and inferiors, they may draw a curtain between themſelves and mean men, but they cannot put a ſkreen or draw a curtain between themſelves and God; he judgeth thoſe that are high, therefore he knoweth them. No man can give a righteous judgment either of things or perſons till he knows them. And though he that judgeth before he knoweth, may poſſibly ſometimes give a righteous judgment, yet he is alwayes an unrighteous Judge. Shall not the Judge of all the earth do right, and be righteous?

Thirdly, No man is ſo high but God can puniſh and chaſtiſe him, yea ruine and pull him down.

He can make his ſword reach the higheſt, and his judgments take hold of thoſe that are ſtrongeſt (Iſa. 2. 11, 12, 13.) The Cedars and Oaks, the high walls or mountains, are men on high; yet the day of the Lord, that is, the day of his vengeance is againſt them all, and, The loftineſs of man ſhall be brought down, and they ſhall run into the holes and clifts of the rock, to hide them from the preſence of the Lord when he ariſeth to ſhake terribly the earth. The Lord tells Job out of the Whirlwind, That the high arm (that is, the ſtrongeſt arm, or the arm lifted up to ſtrike) ſhall be broken. The Lord inſults over Lucifer in his heights, How art thou fallen from heaven, O Lucifer, thou ſon of the morning, &c. (Iſa. 14.) Thy terribleneſs hath deceived thee, and the pride of thine heart, O thou that dwelleſt in the clefts of the rock, that holdeſt the height of the hill; though thou ſhouldeſt make thy neſt as high as the Eagle, I will bring thee down from thence ſaith the Lord (Jer. 49. 16.) The highneſs of man is ſo far from ſecuring wicked men, that it rather makes them the fairer mark for the wrath of God.

Yet let not the low ones think they ſhall eſcape, God judgeth the high ones (ſay ſome) ſurely then he will not trouble himſelf with thoſe that are low, with poor and mean men; he will have nothing to do with them, they ſhall not be taken notice of in the croud. As if it were either unſutable or below the Majeſty of God to puniſh mean ones, or as if their meanneſs might plead their impunity. It is indeed an humbling of God to behold the higheſt; He humbleth himſelf (ſaith the Scripture, Pſal. 113. 6.) to behold the things that are in heaven; yet he is pleaſed to humble himſelf (ſaith the ſame Scripture) to behold the things in earth, even the loweſt things which are done, and the loweſt perſons which are here below. And as it is the prerogative of God to judge thoſe who are high, ſo it is both his purpoſe and his praiſe not to let the loweſt paſs unjudged. The pooreſt believing Saint ſhall be accepted and rewarded, as well and as much as any believing Prince, who is not more believing nor more a Saint then he; and ſo there is not the meaneſt unbelieving ſon or daughter of Adam, not the pooreſt man or woman continuing in ſin, but ſhall be judged as well as the higheſt. We find bondmen as well as freemen, Kings and Captains trembling before and running from the Lamb ſitting upon his throne (Rev. 6. 15, 16.) As it is the glory of God that he can make the mightieſt Kings ſtoop, ſo it is the glory of God, that the eye and hand of his juſtice ſtoopeth to the pooreſt captive. God will not favour the wicked, becauſe they are great, nor ſpare them becauſe they are little either in this world, or in that to come. He that dwells in a corner or in a cottage, ſhall no more eſcape, then the greateſt Prince that dwelleth in a Pallace-Royal, and ſitteth upon a Throne.

VERS. 23, 24, 25, 26.

One dieth in his full ſtrength, being wholly at eaſe and quiet.
His breaſts are full of milk, and his bones are moiſtned with marrow.
And another dieth in the bitterneſs of his ſoul, and never eateth with pleaſure.
They ſhall lye down alike in the duſt, and the worms ſhall cover them.

IN the former verſe Job exalted the Lord above mans teaching and controling, Shall any teach God knowledge, ſeeing he judgeth thoſe that are high? God is ſo wiſe that no man can teach him, ſo free and abſolute in his power, that none may dare to controle him. And as this appeareth from what Job hath formerly aſſerted, ſo alſo by that which followeth; he ſpares whom he will, and ſmites whom he will, for what continuance of time he will, and in what meaſure he will; he ſummons one to the grave, even then, when he is moſt likely to live, and when he hath leaſt fear of death, when there is not the leaſt ſymptom or appearance of the approach of that King of terrors, not any decay in nature to proclaim the return of the fleſh to duſt, the man is in his ſpring and prime, yet then he is cut off and dies. Mean while another (no man knows why) pines and lingers out all his dayes in pain of body and trouble of mind, he lives and dyes under woful preſſures of ſoul and body, of eſtate and relations, never injoying any good, nor ſeeing good day to the end of his dayes. Thus Job exemplifieth his general aſſertion concerning the ſoveraignty of God, and his various diſpenſations toward men.

There are three opinions as to the common ſcope of theſe words; I ſhall touch at them, and then come to a more particular explication.

Moſt of the Greek Writers underſtand theſe words as diſtinguiſhing the ſtate of the wicked and the godly in this life. One dieth in his full ſtrength, that is, wicked men have no trouble in their lives, no ſickneſſes when they dye, they go gently out of the world, or as it is ſaid in verſ. 13. of this Chapter, In a moment they go down to the grave. Whereas godly men uſually live in trouble, and are tired out of the world with tedious and painful diſeaſes when they dye. Thus the words deſcribe the difference of the godly and wicked in regard of their natural death: Whereupon they infer, that they muſt neceſſarily have a different eſtate after death. Wicked men (ſay theſe Interpreters) have more happineſs in their death then the godly, therefore the godly ſhall have a happineſs which the wicked ſhall not have after death.

Græci accipiunt de improborum fælicitate & juſtorum ærumnis, quorum diſſimiles vitæ ſortes neceſſe ſit, diſſimiles quoq; poſt mortem judicii & æternitatis conditiones ſequi.

Mors juvenes & ſanos æquè facilè rapit, ac ſenes debiles, decrepitos, & eos qui ſemper infirma valetudine laborant.

Secondly, Others take this to be Job's intendment, who having ſhewed before that poverty and riches are alike given to good and bad while they live: here aſſerts that death doth alike overtake weak and ſtrong, ſound and ſick, young and old, ſuch as are in a proſperous and ſuch as are in a ſad and in an afflicted eſtate; death catcheth away the one as well as the other: death carrieth an impartial hand, and hath a powerful hand, the ſtrong can no more ſtand in the hands of death then the weak, nor can the young or rich make any better reſiſtance when death aſſaults them, then the old and poor. One dieth in his full ſtrength, &c. Another dieth in the bitterneſs of his ſoul. Death pitties not the one, nor doth it flatter the other; there is a truth and an uſefulneſs in this interpretation.

Thirdly, Rather underſtand the words, as teaching us, that God according to the freedom of his own will and pleaſure, and the uſual tenor of his providence in outward things, handles neither the godly nor the wicked alwayes in the ſame manner. One man, let him be good or bad, believer or unbeliever, dies in his full ſtrength, and in the height of his proſperity; another, whether wicked or godly, dieth in the bitterneſs of his ſoul; ſome wicked men live and die in trouble, it is ſo alſo with ſome who are godly. This ſcope of the place makes good the aſſertion of the Preacher (Eccleſ. 9. 2.) All things come alike to all, that is, all worldly things. There is ſuch a mixture of events, that no man can determine what any perſon is, either by what he injoyes, or by what he ſuffers. As the perſons of good and evil men are mingled in the world, ſo alſo are their conditions. Good men ſuffer evil, and evil men injoy good: and again, good men receive good, and evil men endure evil. Thus Job holds forth the liberty which God uſeth as to the diſtribution of temporal good and evil, both to the evil and the good: So that he will not let us know love or hatred by any thing that is before us.

Hujus vitæ ſive bona ſive mala communia eſſe omnibus ſive bonis ſive malis.

One dieth in his full ſtrength.

He dieth not only ſtrong, but in the ſtrength of his perfection, ſo we read in the margin. The perfection of every thing is the ſtrength of it; and he is ſtrong indeed who is in the ſtrength of his perfection. The glory of young men is their ſtrength. One dieth at the height and top of this glory. The Septuagint render the Original word which ſignifieth perfection, by ſimplicity; that which is ſimple is perfect, God who is moſt ſimple is moſt perfect, the ſimplicity of God is the glory of his perfection. One dieth in the ſtrength of his ſimplicity; that is, when the health of his body or his conſtitution is (as it were) unmixed, or not mixed with any diſeaſe, as alſo when his outward ſtate is not mixed with any trouble; he dieth in the ſtrength of this double ſimplicity, when as it were nothing unlike ſtrength, nothing unlike proſperity hath ſo much as ſet its foot within his borders; when his light ſhines ſo clear, that there is no appearance of darkneſs in it; and when his comforts are ſo pure, that he hath no acquaintance with that thing called ſorrow; when he hath not a cloud in his day, nor any taſte of bitterneſs in his cup, then, even then in that ſtrength of his ſimplicity he dieth. Some of the Greeks (I confeſs) take the word ſimplicity in the worſt ſence, rendring thus, He ſhall die in the ſtrength of his folly; but I leave that under the cenſure of at leaſt an unwary tranſlation; and waving that alſo which I mentioned laſt before, ſhall inſiſt only upon our own. One dieth in his full ſtrength; which we may expound in the latitude of a threefold ſtrength.

בעצם תמו
In robore perfectionis aut integritatis ſuæ. Moritur robuſtus. Vulg. ἐν κράτει ἁπλοσύνης αὐτοῦ. Sept.

ἐν κράτει ἀφροσύνης.

Firſt, In the ſtrength of his body, when he hath perfect health, and not only health, but much ſtrength with it; ſome have health, who yet have but little ſtrength.

Secondly, In the ſtrength of his outward eſtate, of riches and relations; theſe are a mans ſtrength, therefore the ſame word in the Hebrew ſignifies both riches and ſtrength. Rich men are apt to idolize riches as their ſtrength or ſtrong tower, and ſo turn away from God, who is indeed our ſtrength and our tower.

Thirdly, To compleat the fulneſs of his ſtrength, we may add, In the ſtrength of his ſpirit, when his mind is not troubled, when he hath no diſquietments there: a man may have much ſtrength of body, and a ſtrength of eſtate, and yet be in perplexity of ſpirit; and then he is ſo far from being in his full ſtrength, that he is in much weakneſs. The ſpirit of a man (ſaith Solomon, Prov. 18. 14.) (that is his mind and conſcience being ſound and whole) will ſuſtain his infirmity; that is, it will cauſe him to bear up againſt all the ſickneſſes of his body, and afflictions in his ſtate; but all the fulneſs of a mans eſtate and the exacteſt health of his body cannot bear up the infirmities of his ſpirit, or his wounded ſpirit. When Job ſaith, One dieth in the fulneſs of his ſtrength, we may underſtand the concurrence or complication of all theſe ſtrengths. That man who hath a ſtrong body, a ſtrong purſe, with peace and tranquility of mind, is in full ſtrength indeed; yet ſaith Job, twiſt all theſe ſtrengths, this threefold ſtrength together, and though (as Solomon ſpeaks in his book of the Preacher) a threefold coard is not eaſily broken; yet death will as eaſily break this threefold coard of life, as a threed of tow is broken, when it toucheth (or ſmelleth) the fire.

One dieth in his full ſtrength. This expoſition is more fully given in the next words of the Text.

Being wholly at eaſe and quiet.

That is, at eaſe in body and quiet in mind; or at eaſe and quiet both in mind and body, yea in whatſoever elſe a man may be ſaid to be at eaſe and quiet. He dieth rich and happy, ſaith the Vulgar Tranſlation; Wholly well ſetled, ſay the Septuagint; Rejoycing and abounding, ſaith a third; the Totus ipſe quietus & pacificus.

Hebrew is, whole, he being at eaſe and quiet, or as we render, being wholly at eaſe and quiet. All theſe readings center into one common ſence, that he dieth when he is in as good a caſe to live as any outward advantage or intereſt can make him. Which is particularly exemplified in the words which follow.

Verſ. 24. His breaſts are full of milk, &c.

עטינים Vbera mãmæ. Targ. Rab. Mard. Mulchratia. Rab. Dav.

The word which we render Breaſt, is uſed but this once in all the book of God. I find ſome variety among the Learned in expreſſing it.

Firſt, Divers of the Rabbins, as alſo other Writers tranſlate it, Milk pails, His milk pails are full, or, His pailes are full of milk. So the words are a deſcription of his outward plenty. The Land of Canaan is called, A Land flowing with milk and honey; that is, a very fruitful Land. To ſay a mans milk pails are full, is to ſay that he hath abundance.

Apud Talmudicos denotat vaſa in quibus congregabatur pinguedo olivis expreſſa. Ego vaſa magna putarim, quibus ut nunc in Gallia Narbonenſi oleum aſſervabatur. Merc. Viſcera ejus plena ſunt adipe. Vulg. Sept. Hæc verba jocoſam & adagioſam continent loquendi formam, quæ de robuſtiſſimo fæcundiſſimoq; viro diceretur. Medulla humidis annumeranda eſt, propterea conceptaculis quibuſdā tanquam vaſculis continetur. Ariſt. l. 4. de Hiſt. Animal. c. 20. μυελὸς τροφὴ ὀστέων. Hip. lib. de Alim. Plato in Timæo.

Others conceive the word ſignifieth thoſe veſſels, wherein either wine, oyl, or any uſeful liquor was preſerved. This rendring meets the former in ſetting forth an over-flowing proſperity in worldly things. That man who dieth with his veſſels full of milk, wine, and oyl, hath enough of the creature about him to keep him alive.

A third ſort tranſlate thus, His bowels or entrails are full of fatneſs. He is encloſed with his own fat (Pſal. 17. 10.) and he hath much fat encloſed, his bowels are well lined, and his back is well larded. His ſtomach hath ſerved him to eat his meat, and the meat which he hath eaten hath ſerved his ſtomach. The man dieth when he is in this good caſe to live. As the two former rendrings appertain to the plenty of a mans eſtate, ſo this laſt, His bowels are full of fat, and ours, His breaſts are full of milk, appertain to the ſtrength, health, and conſtitution of the body. Which ſoever of theſe we take, it complies well enough with Job's ſcope, yet our tranſlation complieth beſt with it, as alſo with the words which follow.

And his bones are moiſtened with marrow.

Which is only an amplification of what he ſaid before, ſhewing a good habit and ſtate of body. Marrow is moiſt and fluid; blood flows in the veins, and marrow is kept in the bones. Naturaliſts tell us, that, what blood is to the fleſh, that marrow is to the bones; blood moiſtens the fleſh, and marrow moiſtens the bones. The learned Phyſitian, calls marrow the meat or food of the bones: The bones live upon it. So that when Job ſaith, His bones are full of marrow, He ſpeaks the exacteſt ſtate of nature. 'Tis the opinion of a Prince in Philoſophy, That the marrow is not only the ſourſe and ſeminary of generation, but the very ſeat of life. So that, the body is then in its full ſtrength when it hath ſtore of marrow to moiſten, ſupple, and feed the bones. And thus the Scripture elſewhere expreſſeth a ſtrong and healthy conſtitution of body (Prov. 3. 8.) Be not wiſe in thine own eyes, fear the Lord and depart from evil, it ſhall be marrow to thy bones; that is, it ſhall be that to thee which marrow is to thy bones. In oppoſition to which Solomon ſpeaks of drying the bones (Prov. 17. 22.) A merry heart doth good like a medicine, but a broken ſpirit dryeth the bones. The mind hath a powerful influence upon the body. A chearful ſpirit is as good as meat or medicine. The body thrives and recovers by it, the body gathers ſtrength and health by it: but a broken ſpirit (he means, not a ſpirit broken with godly ſorrow, but broken with worldly ſorrow and diſtracting care, a ſpirit thus broken) breaks the heart, and dries the bones. In a holy faſt, the heart ought to be broken with godly ſorrow; yet to thoſe who keep ſuch a faſt, the Prophet makes this promiſe from the Lord; He ſhall guide thee continually, and ſatisfie thy ſoul in drought, and make fat thy bones (Iſa. 53. 11.) There is a breaking of the ſpirit which drieth the bones, and there is a breaking of the ſpirit that fattens and moiſtens the bones. We read of a ſweet viſion which the people of God ſhall have (Iſa. 66. 14.) When ye ſee this, your hearts ſhall rejoyce. As the viſion which Saints have in heaven makes their hearts rejoyce, ſo God will give ſuch viſions as ſhall make their hearts rejoyce on earth; and what follows, and your bones ſhall flouriſh like an hearb; that is, you ſhall have comforts both inward and outward, both for ſoul and body; not only ſhall your hearts rejoyce, but your bones ſhall flouriſh like an hearb. Hearbs flouriſh when they have ſutable moyſtnings, and ſo do bones. And as ſhowers moyſten the hearbs, ſo marrow moyſtneth the bones. Thus Job tells whom he means, by the man who dieth in his full ſtrength, even the man who is wholly at eaſe and quiet, with his breaſts full of milk, and his bones moyſtned with marrow.

Hence obſerve, Firſt, That bodily health and ſtrength are no defence at all againſt death.

Do you think you muſt needs live long, becauſe you are healthy and ſtrong; let not death be a ſtranger to you, becauſe you are not acquainted with ſickneſs; for, One dieth in his full ſtrength. The abundance of riches is no defence againſt poverty, as Zophar ſpake (Chap. 24. 22.) In the fulneſs of his ſufficiency he ſhall be in ſtreights. Now as a man who is very rich, hath no ground to ſay in his heart I ſhall never be poor, becauſe in the fulneſs of ſufficiency a man may be in ſtreights; ſo a man who is very ſtrong, hath no reaſon to flatter himſelf in the hopes of long life, or to ſay in his heart, I ſhall not dye till I am old and weak; for in the fulneſs of your ſtrength you may be in death. One dieth in his full ſtrength, and ſo may you; nothing is any ſtop to, or can lay a bar in the way of death, but only grace and holineſs. For though they who are holy and gracious, dye as well as others, yea though many who have much grace dye before they have attained to many years, even in the fullneſs of their ſtrength; yet the Lord hath made a promiſe of long life unto thoſe who are gracious and holy, but he never made a promiſe of long life to the healthy or ſtrong. The Lord hath not ſaid any where in Scripture, that, The ſtrong man ſhall live long; but he hath promiſed long life to thoſe who are of a gracious ſpirit and holy life (Exod. 20. 12.) And the Apoſtle urging that duty upon children from the Commandment, calls it the Firſt Commandment with promiſe (Epheſ. 6. 2.) that is, with an explicite promiſe, for every Commandment hath both a threatning and a promiſe implied in it, and annexed to it; but this is the firſt Commandment with a promiſe expreſſed, and that is a promiſe of long life. Honour thy father and mother, that it may be well with thee, and that thou mayeſt live long on the earth. So that if any thing be a bar in the way of death, 'tis holineſs; and if man had continued in perfect holineſs, that had been an everlaſting preſervative againſt death. Death had never broken in upon us, if we had not broken the Commandment of God. And now by how much any man doth more wickedly break the Commandments, by ſo much he is the more liable to the breaking in of death. As for the ſtrength of any man, though a Sampſon, this great Leviathan Death, counts it but as ſtraw; and the ſoundeſt pureſt health, but as rotten wood. There are no ſons of Zerviah too hard for death; nor doth death ſtay to take men at an advantage, when they are weakned with age and ſickneſs, or (as Simeon and Levi did the Shechemites, Gen. 34. 25.) when they are ſore. Death can do its work eaſily and as ſpeedily in health, as it can in ſickneſs; in ſtrength, as well as in weakneſs; when we handle the ſword, as well as when we lean upon a ſtaff; in the prime and ſummer, as well as in the fall and winter of our lives. Nor can any man plead with God to forbid the approach and arreſt of death, becauſe he is healthy, young or ſtrong; theſe pleas bear no weight with God, becauſe God hath made no promiſe to them. We can plead nothing but our integrity, uprightneſs, and holy walking with God: So Hezekiah did, when he received a meſſage with the ſentence of death from the Lord (Iſa. 38. 2, 3.) He turned his face toward the wall, and prayed unto the Lord, and ſaid, Remember now, O Lord, I beſeech thee, how I have walked before thee in truth, & with a perfect heart, and have done that which is good in thy ſight. Upon this plea his dayes were lengthned, and a prohibition was iſſued out from the high Court of Heaven to ſtay the proceedings of death. Thus the promiſe of wiſdom runs (Prov. 3. 2.) My ſon, forget not my Law, but let thy heart keep my Commandments; for length of dayes, and long life, and peace, ſhall they add to thee: The Hebrew is, years of life, which may be underſtood either as an addition, to note the certainty of the promiſe, or as an explication of the promiſe; Thou ſhalt have length of dayes, that is, many dayes, and years of life, that is, comfortable years; for ſome have long dayes, and yet but ſhort lives; a man liveth no more years indeed, then he liveth comfortably. So that when wiſdom ſaith, Long life, or years of life ſhall they add to thee; the meaning is, thou ſhalt have a life not only long but pleaſant, or a life as full of peace as of dayes and years. What the Moraliſt ſaid of an idle life, That it is the burial of a man alive, an idle man is a living man buried: that I may ſay of a troubleſom miſerable life, It is the burial of a man alive. A miſerable man is a living man buried. And how many are there who prefer death before a miſerable life. Therefore ſaith wiſdom, My ſon, forget not my law, but let thy heart keep my Commandments, and they ſhall add to thee (that is, thou ſo doing, God will add to thee) long life and peace. Only grace and holineſs have the promiſe of long life, they are a defence againſt death; but as for ſtrength and health, breaſts full of milk, and bones full of marrow, they have no promiſe of life, nor are they any ſtop to the power of death; but rather render a man the fairer mark, and the ſweeter morſel for that King of terrors to hit and feed upon. And from this general truth, we may draw down theſe two deductions.

Firſt, Then prepare for death, though you have no appearance of death upon you.

When you ſurveigh your bodies from head to foot, and cannot ſee the leaſt ſhadow of death, nothing looking like death upon them; yet, I ſay, prepare for death; for, one dieth in his full ſtrength, when there is no ſymptom of death to be ſeen upon him. When we look upon ſome men we may ſee (as he ſaid of a ſad time) many images or repreſentations of death; we may ſee death in their dim eyes, in their palſied hands, in their trembling knees, and withered faces; we may ſee death looking in at their windows, and out at their windows. Look upon others, they have no ſign of death, nothing that looks like death; yet let ſuch prepare, for one dieth in his full ſtrength. The Preacher (Eccleſ. 12. 1.) exhorts young men to remember their creator in the dayes of their youth. And he giveth a forcible reaſon for it there; but I ſhall give another from this Text. The reaſon which he gives, why young men ſhould remember their Creator is, Becauſe their evil day is coming (he meaneth not dayes of ſinful evil, but of painful evil, as the next words expound him) the years draw nigh in which you ſhall ſay, we have no pleaſure in them; bethink your ſelves of a ſpiritually better eſtate now in your youth, for a naturally evil eſtate is coming; old age with its train and retinue of weakneſſes and infirmities is coming, yea it is haſtning upon you; therefore make haſte, up, and be doing in all holy duties. This is a good argument why we ſhould remember our Creator in the dayes of our youth, becauſe evil dayes are coming. Yet take here another, if not a more preſſing argument, Remember your Creator in the dayes of your youth, becauſe thoſe evil dayes may never come; you may be taken off in your good, yea in your beſt dayes: you may be taken off when neither the Sun, nor the Moon, nor the Stars are darkened; as he ſpeaks there, when the clouds do not return after rain, when the keepers of the houſe ſtand faſt, &c. So then as they that are young and ſtrong have reaſon to prepare for death, becauſe evil dayes are coming; ſo they are to prepare for death, becauſe it is very queſtionable whether ever thoſe evil dayes ſhall come, or whether they ſhall ever come to thoſe evil dayes; they may die in their good dayes, in their beſt dayes, in thoſe dayes wherein they ſay, we have pleaſure, all manner of pleaſures in them. For as Job here affirmeth, One dieth in his full ſtrength, being wholly at eaſe and quiet.

Plurima mortis imago.

A ſecond deduction is this,

Death doth not obſerve the laws of nature, but the appointments of God.

The law of nature ſaith not that a man is likely to die in his full ſtrength; the law of nature ſets death at the greateſt diſtance from thoſe men whoſe breaſts are full of milk, and their bones moiſtned with marrow; the law of nature ſaith to death, go to the wrinkled face, to the dry bones, to the dry breaſts, meddle not with this young man, touch not this beautiful woman, he or ſhe is now in the flower, in the prime and pride of nature; go to yonder old man, go to that withered woman, let theſe alone. Oh, but death will not receive theſe commands, death will not obſerve the laws of nature, but the appointments of God, who is the Lord of nature. It is appointed for all men once to dye; and as God hath appointed all to dye, ſo he appoints the ſeaſons of death; and the ſeaſons which he appoints, are as various as the kinds, occaſions, and wayes of death are. And therefore, death knocks as often at the young mans door, as at the door of the old man; death attacheth and carrieth away the ſtrong, the healthy man, priſoner to the grave as often as the weak and ſickly. One dieth in his full ſtrength.

Secondly, As theſe two verſes are a deſcription of the outward proſperity of man, Obſerve, That, As bodily health and ſtrength are no defence againſt death, ſo riches are not.

Your pails full of milk, your veſſels full of wine and oyl, your ſhops full of wares and goods, your purſes full of gold and ſilver, your lands ſtockt with corn and cattel, and your ſelves wholly at eaſe and quiet in the poſſeſſion of them, cannot ſtave off death one minute, one moment. The rich mans barns were full, yet the Word came, Thou fool, this night thy ſoul ſhall be required of thee (Luke 12. 20.) and then whoſe ſhall all theſe things be, that thou haſt provided? they can be no longer thine, nor thou theirs. Whoſe ſhall they be? Though thou haſt not made thy Will, nor haſt any will to make it; yet they can be no longer thine; thou canſt not bribe death to depart; riches avail not in a day of wrath. One dieth in his full wealth, when his pails are full of milk, and his veſſels running over with wine and oyl.

Verſ. 25. And another dieth in the bitterneſs of his ſoul, and never eateth in pleaſure.

This verſe ſtands in oppoſition to the former; the Text in ſtrictneſs of Grammar may be read thus, Another dieth in a bitter mind, or in a mind of bitterneſs. And this may be underſtood both of good and evil men; ſome godly men dye thus, many wicked men dye thus, both or either may dye in the bitterneſs of his ſoul. What's that? Or when is the ſoul in bitterneſs? The bitterneſs of the ſoul, is the carefulneſs, ſadneſs, and uncomfortableneſs of it. Soul-bitterneſs is ſoul-miſery and ſorrow. Afflictions are compared to wormwood and gall (Lam. 3. 15.) He hath filled me with bitterneſs, he hath made me drunken with wormwood. What he means by both is clear (verſ. 19.) Remembring mine affliction and my miſery, the wormwood and the gall. Godly ſorrow is alſo expreſſed by bitterneſs, (Zach. 12. 10.) In that day the Lord will cauſe them to mourn, and they ſhall be in bitterneſs as one that mourneth for his firſt born. To be in bitterneſs is to be in ſorrow; not only in worldly ſorrow, but in godly ſorrow, in that ſorrow which worketh repentance not to be repented of. Sorrow is a bitter cup; worldly ſorrow is a bitter and a deadly cup; godly ſorrow is a bitter, though a wholſom and a medicinable cup. Spiritual, natural, and worldly ſorrows are as bitterneſs to the ſoul. Death hath its peculiar ſorrows (The ſorrows of death hath compaſſed me about, ſaith the Pſalmiſt, Pſal. 116. 3.) and ſo hath life. Many dye not only in the ſorrows of death, but in the ſorrows of life; that's the intendment of Job in this place, while he ſaith, Another dieth in the bitterneſs of his ſoul,

בנפש מרה In animo amaro.

Morbi & dolores vitam efficiunt acerbam.

And never eateth in pleaſure.] Or nearer the letter, He eateth not in good. In eating there are two things conſiderable; firſt, the meat; and ſecondly, the ſauce. Some have meat to eat, but they have no ſauce with it. Good or pleaſure is the ſauce of our meat. A dinner of ſowre herbs is ſweet with this ſauce; and a ſtalled ox without it, is not. And this ſauce is in the eaters heart, not in his diſh. He that hath not ſauce there, though he have both meat and ſauce in his diſh, yea though he have a ſong and muſick at his Table, yet never eateth in pleaſure. There is a threefold pleaſure; firſt, ſenſual; ſecondly, ſpiritual; thirdly, ſenſitive. All ſenſual is ſinful pleaſure. Job ſpeaks not here of ſuch a man as dieth in the bitterneſs of his ſoul, and never eats as a glutton or an Epicure (whoſe buſineſs, yea whoſe religion it is to ſerve his belly and pleaſe his pallate, whoſe only care it is to keep his ſkin fair and body fat, I ſay he ſpeaks not of ſuch a one who never eats) in ſinful ſenſual pleaſure. Again, all ſpiritual pleaſure is holy pleaſure: As the former is too low, ſo this is too high for Job's ſcope in this aſſertion. He ſpeaks not here of a man who dieth and never eats in the pleaſure of divine love and heavenly enjoyments. To eat in this pleaſure, is the peculiar portion of Saints: So then, the pleaſure here meant is the third, meer ſenſitive pleaſure. Some die, and never eat in this pleaſure; that is, they eat but taſte no ſweetneſs in what they eat: Their palates are ſo diſtempered with ſickneſs, or their ſpirits are ſo diſtempered with ſorrow while they are in health, that they find no ſavour, no reliſh in what they eat. The beſt prepared meats are to them but as a dry ſtick, or the white of an egg; I cannot (ſaith one) taſte my meat, I eat this, and I eat that, but I taſte neither; or if I taſte what I eat, and find it ſweet to my palate, yet I have ſuch ſowre ſauce with it, ſo many afflictions preſs my ſpirit, that pleaſant bread is as gall and wormwood to me; I never eat in pleaſure. We are (I conceive) to underſtand the Text of this natural ſenſitive pleaſure which man takes by the ordinary bleſſing of God in the uſe of creatures. This is denied to many, they eat not in good, and it may therefore be ſaid, as the Septuagint render here, They eat no good. How good ſoever the meat is, it is not good to them that have no content in eating it. Yet further, as they never eat in pleaſure, though they ſit every day at full and well furniſhed Tables, whoſe bodies are ill affected by ſickneſs, or their minds with ſorrow; ſo there are many of whom it may be ſaid, that they never eat in pleaſure, becauſe they have but little of any thing, and nothing of that which is pleaſant to eat. A rich mans bread may ſometimes be called the bread of adverſity, and his water the water of affliction, but an extream poor mans bread and water are alwayes ſo. What pleaſure have they in their lives, who can hardly be ſaid to live; or what pleaſure have they in eating, who are only preſerved from ſtarving. Such pitiful poor ones are literally in Job's Text, They die in the bitterneſs of their ſoul, and never eat in pleaſure.

בטובה In bone, i.e. in jucunditate eſt lætitia.

Hence obſerve, The difference which God makes among men, even in outward things, is very great.

One lives and dies in his full ſtrength, wholly at eaſe and quiet; another never eats in quiet, nor knoweth what it is to be at eaſe; one hath pleaſant bread prepared for him every day, and he daily eats in pleaſure; another doth not only eat the bread of ſorrow (Pſal. 127.2.) that is, bread gotten with the ſweat of his face, with hard labour and care, but he eateth his bread with ſorrow. As the ſleep of a labouring man (Eccleſ. 5. 12.) ſo the bread of a labouring man is uſually ſweet to him, whether he eat little or much, yet even to ſome labouring men their bread is not ſweet.

We may draw up theſe four Concluſions, about the ſtate of man in this life.

Firſt, There is no man who hath all pleaſure, or nothing but pleaſure in his life.

For though it be ſaid in the former verſe of one man, he is wholly at eaſe and quiet, yet we muſt not underſtand that ſtrictly and preciſely, as if any man ever lived who met not with ſome trouble or pain, at one time or other before he died. No man ever arrived at ſuch a degree of worldly happineſs, as never to feel any croſs in this world. The life of man here, is not perfect in any capacity. As the lives of good men are not perfect in ſpirituals, ſo neither is the life of any man, whether good or bad, abſolutely perfect in temporals. In the next life, there will be no mixture in any mans condition; they who are miſerable ſhall know nothing but ſorrow, and they who are happy ſhall know nothing but pleaſure; but in this each ſtate hath a taſte of both, though (as the elements in the mixture of bodies) ſome one be predominant.

Secondly, Moſt men have leſs pleaſure then pain, more ill dayes then good dayes in this world.

The life of man here is at beſt but like checquer work, which hath a black and a white, or like a bitter-ſweet, or like twilight when 'tis neither dark nor light; but uſually our lives have more of the black then of the white in them, more of the bitter then of the ſweet, of the dark then of the light. The part predominant is moſt commonly the worſt. Hence the third concluſion.

Thirdly, Moſt have little pleaſure, but trouble and ſorrow very much.

Their evil dayes out-number their good, and their ſorrows out-weigh their comforts. They have doubled ſorrows, or ſorrow upon ſorrow; they have but ſingle comforts, here a little, and there a little; now a little, and then a little.

Fourthly, We may conclude with the Text,

That ſome have no pleaſure at all.

Yet this concluſion, as the Text whence it riſeth, is not to be underſtood ſtrictly. No man (I believe) was ever ſo miſerable, whether in regard of his body or eſtate, as never to enjoy the leaſt pleaſure; for as there is no perfect happineſs in this life, ſo there is no perfect miſery in this life; the perfection of both is reſerved for the next. Such a ſtate of miſery as hath not the leaſt mixture of good in it, is the portion of wicked men in Hell: And ſuch a ſtate of pleaſure as hath not the leaſt mixture of evil in it, is the portion of the Saints in Heaven. Yet ſome there are who have ſo little pleaſure and joy in their lives, that we may according to common underſtanding conclude of them, That they never eat in pleaſure. That which is very rarely done or enjoyed, is ſaid (in Scripture language) never to be done or enjoyed. Hence take this twofold Admonition.

Firſt, Let ſuch ſee the mercy, and the gracious dealing of God with them, who eat every day or very often in pleaſure. How often do we ſit down at our Tables, and our morſels are ſweet to us? God fills our hearts not only with food but gladneſs. Whereas not a few of our brethren, of the ſame mould with our ſelves, and poſſibly of better deſert then we, eat aſhes for bread, and mingle their drink with weeping, or as Job ſpeaketh, Never eat in pleaſure.

Secondly, If this be the lot of ſome, that they never eat in pleaſure; let them be admoniſht who complain, if they eat not alwayes in pleaſure; who if they have but now and then a hard day of it, a ſhort meal of it; if their pallate be but ſometimes out of taſte, and their ſtomachs ſick; if they are only now and then in pain, preſently murmur and are diſcontent. Shall any repine at pains which come but ſeldom, when we hear of others that never eat in pleaſure?

God doth us no wrong if he giveth us nothing but ſorrow; he doth us no wrong, if he lets us linger, and pine, and die in the bitterneſs of our ſouls. Wicked men do nothing but ſin, and then, what is their due but ſorrow? And as the wicked do nothing but ſin, ſo the godly ſin in all they do, therefore God is not unjuſt if he mingle ſorrow with all they have. While there is ſo much ſin in the beſt, 'tis mercy that it is no worſe with them; and while ſo much evil is done, what reaſon have we to complain that ſo much evil is felt. If there were no other account to be given of Gods ſevereſt diſpenſations, this is enough to acquit God and quiet our own ſpirits. 'Tis an evil and a bitter thing, in the nature of it, to ſin againſt God; no wonder then if it be ſo in the effects of it. The bitterneſs of ſin will cauſe bitterneſs of ſoul, and while we do ſo much of that wherein God taketh no pleaſure, we have cauſe to expect but little, and to juſtifie him though we ſhould never eat in pleaſure.

Verſ. 26. They ſhall lie down alike in the duſt, and the worms ſhall cover them.

There is difference among men while they live, and in in the manner of their death; One dieth in his full ſtrength; another dieth in the bitterneſs of his ſoul; but they ſhall lie down alike in the duſt. When we are removed by death, theſe differences will be removed. To lie down in the duſt, is to dye; and we read of the duſt of death, Pſal. 22.15.

They ſhall lie down alike.] The Verb ſignifieth to unite or joyn together. The Adverb which is here uſed, hath four ſignifications in Scripture.

יחד Verbum univit, unum fecit, in adverbio, ſimul pariter

Firſt, 'Tis rendred alone, or without company (Job 34. 29.) When he giveth quietneſs, who then can make trouble? and when he hides his face, who then can behold him? whether it be done againſt a Nation, or a man only; a man alone, that is, a ſingle perſon.

Secondly, Uſually it is tranſlated together, or with company: So (Ezra 4. 3.) The Jews refuſing the help of Tobias and Sanballat ſaid, We will build together. Their meaning is not, we and you will build together; but we Jews will build together by our ſelves, we will not mingle and incorporate with you in this work.

Thirdly, The word is expreſſed, by wholly, or every whit (Job 10.8.) We tranſlate, Thy hand hath made me, and faſhioned me together round about; that is, thou haſt made me wholly, or every whit, one part as well as another; my hand as well as my head, my little finger as well as my foot is of thy making.

Fourthly, It ſignifies alike, or one as well as another, (*Pſal.*33.15.) The Lord from Heaven beholdeth all the children of men, he faſhions their hearts alike; not that all mens hearts are alike, or of one form and faſhion, for if they were, their way, their courſe, and their end would be alike; but the Lord faſhioneth their hearts alike; that is, as he faſhions the heart of one man, ſo the heart of another; 'tis as eaſie with God to faſhion the heart of the greateſt Prince, as of the meaneſt Plebeian. The Lord is the faſhioner of all mens hearts, and he alone can faſhion the heart.

We render the word here in the fourth or laſt ſence, They ſhall lye down alike in the duſt; that is, they ſhall all lye down in the duſt, and in the duſt they ſhall be as one. Yet ſome render it in the third ſence, They ſhall lye down every whit, or wholly in the duſt; that is, all their pride, and pomp, their beauty and ſtrength ſhall lye down every whit and wholly in the duſt, they ſhall not ſave nor deliver the leaſt piece of themſelves from the duſt of death. Again, others read it in the ſecond ſence, They ſhall lye down together in the duſt; that is, good and bad, high and low, rich and poor, weak and ſtrong, beautiful and deformed, ſhall be tumbled and mixed together in the grave. Death and the duſt make no diſtinctions of men; and they unmake (as to corporals and externals) thoſe that were. Though every man ſhould have (as many have) a diſtinct grave when they dye, as they had diſtinct houſes and dwelling places while they lived, yet the grave quickly blots out all diſtinctions. So that they who were far enough aſunder in ſtate and manners and affections while they lived, may yet be ſaid when they dye, to lye down alike or together in the duſt.

And the worms ſhall cover them.] We have here only a further deſcription of the dead. Thus the Prophet ſpeaks of the proud Babylonian (Iſa.14.11.) Thy pomp is brought down to the grave, the worm is ſpread under thee, and the worms cover thee. Thoſe words are a holy ſcorn caſt upon the funeral pomps, in which Kings, Emperors, and mighty men were wont to be buried. Their carkaſſes had curious Carpets and fine linnen ſpread under them, and laid upon them; they were embalmed, ſpiced and perfumed; yet ſaith the Prophet of a chief one, Thy pomp is brought down to the grave, the worms are a Carpet under thee, and the worms are a covering over thee. Thus here, The worms ſhall cover them: Duſt ſhall be their down-bed, and worms ſhall be their bed-cloaths. The body alive is but living duſt, and when a man dieth his body firſt returns to, and then turns, or is reſolved into duſt. Living man is but a worm, and when he dieth worms come about him, and come of him; The worms ſhall cover them.

From the whole verſe obſerve,

Death makes no difference among men.

While men walk upon this duſt their diſtances are many, but when they lye down in the duſt they are all alike, or they lye down alike. Death is the great Leveller. And they who, indeed, are ſo, ſeem like death, to act more for the diſſolution of the world, then the reformation of it. Men will not be fit to live in an equality, till they have been firſt made equal by death (Eccleſ. 2. 16.) How dieth the wiſe man, as the fool? Moral wiſe men dye as fools, yea ſpiritual wiſe men dye as fools, as to their ſtate in death, though there be the greateſt unlikeneſs between them as to their ſtate beyond death. As godly wiſe men and fools, are not, as to ſpirituals, alike in their lives, ſo after death they are everlaſtingly divided as to eternals; yet the fool and the wiſe, good and bad are alike, as to their preſent entertainment in and under the Dominion of natural death. To clear this a little further, Man may be conſidered in a threefold ſtate.

Firſt, In the ſtate of this life; here they are both alike, and unlike. We ſee ſome good men proſper, and ſo do many wicked; we ſee unjuſt men ſometimes troubled, and ſo are the righteous often. Thus they are alike, and run parallel in their outward condition. Again, here we ſee a godly man afflicted, and the ungodly proſper. Your next proſpect may be an ungodly man mourning, and the godly rejoycing. Thus they are unlike, and run croſs in their outward condition, as to this life.

Secondly, Conſider them in reference to the death of the body, of which this Text ſpeaks; as to that, good and bad, one and other, are all as one; you cannot diſtinguiſh between the duſt of holy, and unholy men; you cannot read the difference of ſin and grace upon their graves. In this they are alike.

Thirdly, Men may be conſidered in reference to the ſtate of the next life, there they are unlike, and there they ſhall be utterly unlike for ever; there they part, and ſhall never meet in any nearneſs or likeneſs of ſtate any more. In what condition death finds men, Judgment ſhall deal with them. There is no work nor device in the grave for the bettering or altering of any mans condition. As men fall, ſo they ſhall riſe, and then all men ſhall be dealt with by the open rule of Juſtice, even according to what they have done in the body, whether it be good or whether it be evil. The Lord hath ſometimes made the difference between his people and the wicked very diſcernable in temporals; he hath diſtinguiſhing mercies for his even in this life (Mal. 3.18.) Then ſhall ye return, and diſcern between the righteous and the wicked. The Prophet (I conceive) doth not refer only (if at all) to the ſtate of the wicked and righteous in the world to come; but to ſome eminent turn or change which the Lord would make in this world, by viſible judgments upon the wicked, and ſalvations wrought for the righteous. Thus the Lord made a difference to the eye between his people and the Egyptians by the death of their firſt-born, and by drowning their huge Army in the Sea. As in that, ſo in all diſpenſations wrought with an high and open hand, 'tis eaſie to return, and diſcern between the righteous and the wicked. The difference between the righteous and wicked in their ſoul-ſtate is alwayes great, but it is not alwayes plain, the natural eye cannot ſee it: the character is too ſpiritual for ſuch a ſight. Yet a time will come, when a carnal eye ſhall ſee the difference and eaſily diſcern that there is a reward for the righteous, and that the wicked were but reſerved to a day of wrath. And that, though all lye down in the duſt alike, yet when men are raiſed up out of the duſt, a vaſt unlikeneſs will appear among them. They will appear as unlike, as goats and ſheep, chaff and wheat, as gold and droſs, as light and darkneſs; nor ſhall any be like another in the face of his enjoyments, who is not like him in his heart and ſpirit.

VERS. 27, 28, 29.

Behold, I know your thoughts, and the devices which ye wrongfully imagine againſt me.
For ye ſay, where is the houſe of the Prince? and where are the dwelling places of the wicked?
Have ye not asked of them that go by the way? and do ye not know their tokens?

JOB now prepares and buckles himſelf to draw up his Concluſion, not only to what Zophar had lately ſpoken, but generally to all that had been ſpoken by any of his friends from the beginning of the diſputation.

Behold, I know your thoughts.

Job ſeems to deal with their thoughts as well as with their words, with their intentions as well as with their arguments. Behold! He might well put a Behold before this; for 'tis a wonder. Come ſee a man (ſaid that woman with admiration, Joh. 4. 29.) which told me all things that ever I did. And we may ſay with no leſs admiration, Come, Behold a man, that can tell us what we think; A man who not only heareth what men are ſpeaking, but ſeeth what they are thinking.

Behold (ſaith Job) I know your thoughts.] The Hebrew word which we render Thoughts, is not meant of any ordinary מחשבות ordinary tranſient thoughts, which ſlip in and out unregarded; but of ſetled thoughts, well wrought thoughts, thoughts made up and curiouſly formed into concluſions or reſolutions. It notes a kind of Art in thinking; though to think be a natural work, yet there is nothing wherein man acteth the Artiſt more then he doth in thinking; in this much of the helliſh and black Art, and in this much of the heavenly and holy Art is exerciſed, though in neither of them it be ſhewed. Thoughts are cloſe, ſecret work; and yet there is much art in hiding this art of thinking, or at leaſt in hiding what we have thought, till the ſeaſons of diſcovery. Job ſpeaks as if he had prevented his friends diſcovery, and without their telling, could tell what they had been thinking.

Scio vos. Sept.

Behold, I know your thoughts.] The Seventy tranſlate, Behold, I know you; as we uſe to ſay to a man whoſe intentions and deſigns we ſuppoſe are known to us, We know you well enough. And that's as much as to ſay, I know your thoughts.

But is it not the ſole Priviledge of God to know the thoughts? Is not the heart his peculiar, a Cabinet which none can unlock or look into but the moſt High? Is not this his ſtile? I ſearch the heart. And what is the heart which God ſearcheth? or what doth God ſearch for in the heart? The heart is nothing elſe but the treaſury of our thoughts; and God ſearches for nothing elſe there but our thoughts; either ſimple, as they are in our meditations, or compounded as they are in our affections. David aſcribes this glory to the Lord (Pſal. 139. 1, 2, 3.) O Lord, thou haſt ſearcht me, and known me; Thou knoweſt my down ſitting and mine up riſing; that is, all my outward motions; but is that all? No (ſaith he) Thou underſtandeſt my thoughts afar off. Our thoughts are evident to God, even before they are; our thoughts are ſaid to be afar off, when they are not thought; yet then they are as nigh to God as they are to us when we are thinking them, even actually preſent; our thoughts are as audible to God as our words are to men; he hears the language of our ſpirits, what our hearts ſay, when our tongues are ſilent. When our tongues ſpeak plain Engliſh to men, yet, as to our thoughts, we may be Barbarians to them. As the Apoſtle ſaith of him that ſpeaketh in an unknown language, he is a Barbarian to the moſt learned man in the world, in regard of his thoughts. Man knows not the meaning of mans thoughts while he is ſpeaking, unleſs he ſpeak (which ſome do not) his thoughts. But let the tongues of men be never ſo croſs to their hearts, and what they ſpeak, not a light to diſcover, but a ſhadow to darken their thoughts; yet God knoweth them, and by this we know that he is God. 'Tis ſaid of Chriſt in the Goſpel, That he knew their thoughts (Matth. 9. 4. & 12. 25. Luke 5. 22.) And this was an unanſwerable argument of his divinity, or that he was God. Only God, or (as Chriſt was) God-man, can reach the thoughts of man. That's an eminent Text (Joh. 2. 24, 25.) Jeſus came to Jeruſalem, and many believed in his Name, when they ſaw the miracles which he did, but Jeſus did not commit himſelf to them; that is, he did not truſt himſelf with them, or (according to the letter) he could not believe himſelf into the hands of thoſe believers. But why did not Chriſt commit himſelf to believers? Sure if Chriſt might be ſafe in the hands of any men, he might be ſo in the hand of believers. The Text gives the reaſon, Becauſe he knew all men, and needed not that any ſhould teſtifie of man, for he knew what was in man. Chriſt would not believe theſe believers, for though they had a fair outward appearance, and made profeſſion, yet he knew what was within as well as what was without; and he knew that all was not right within: he knew that many of their hearts were nought and rotten, and therefore could not truſt himſelf with them. And he needed none to witneſs this concerning them, for he knew what was in man; he ſaw the falſneſs of their hearts through the covers and viſards of their faireſt profeſſions. And to do ſo is the priviledge of God alone.

Doth not Job then uſurp and intrude upon it, while he ſaith, Behold, I know your thoughts!

I anſwer, Job doth not here take upon him, or aſſume to himſelf a power to unlock their hearts, and ſee immediately what thoughts lay there; he was more holy, and more humble, then to boaſt thus beyond his line. His meaning is only this, I know your thoughts; that is, I do eaſily collect what is in your hearts, what is in your breaſt: though you do not ſpeak the thing directly, yet I perceive your meaning well enough; I know what you would have me underſtand and take to my ſelf by your ſo often repeating and inſiſting upon the deſtruction of wicked men, and the overthrow of the ungodly; I know that in all this you mean me; you think that I have been overthrown as a wicked man, and that I have been deſtroyed as an ungodly one; your diſcourſe hath ſo often fallen and inſiſted upon that point, that now 'tis eaſie to conjecture what you think of me and my condition; though you hover in generals, and ſpeak in a third Perſon, though you do not bring it home to me and ſay, Thou art the man, yet I perceive clearly what and whom you drive at. And thus wiſe men can ſomewhat more then gueſs at random what the ſpecial thoughts of other men are, by thoſe things which are ſpoken generally and afar off. So then while Job makes this peremptory concluſion, I know your thoughts; 'tis as if he had ſaid, I clearly apprehend without any further explication or comment, whither all this tends which you have been ſpeaking; what you aim at, what you drive at, what lyes at the bottom of all this, is plain to me; I have not been ſleeping while you have been arguing; I have not onely conſider'd the letter of your diſcourſe, but the tendencies of it; and I underſtand the inſide as well as the outſide of all.

Cogitationes eorum ſe noſſe dicit non quaſi divinaret, aut ſivi eorũ animos ſcrutandi vim tribuerit, ſed quia ipſi ſacile fuit videre quid illi ſibi vellent illa toties repelita commemoratione exitiĩ improborum: Merl.

Hence obſerve, That, 'tis poſſible for man to know the thoughts of man.

We are taught this by Solomon (Prov. 20. 5.) Councel in the heart of man is like deep waters. The heart of man is deep, as deep and wide as the Ocean, wherein (to allude to the Pſalmiſt, Pſal. 104. 25.) There are things creeping innumerable, both ſmall and great beaſts. There are light and eaſie imaginations, which float on the top, and there are weighty and ſad meditations which keep at the bottom. Such are the counſels of mans heart; Counſels are thoughts contrived and wrought in the heart; Counſels are thoughts ſhaped and formed up between Imagination and Judgment; theſe Counſels in the heart are like deep waters; 'tis hard to draw or pump them up. Few can reach ſo deep as the Counſels which are in the heart of man; yet ſome men can: And Solomon tells us who can, A man of underſtanding will do it. But is not every man (except meer fools and mad-men) a man of underſtanding? Not ſo; for though every man hath an underſtanding, yet there are not many men of underſtanding; A man of underſtanding, is a man of great or much underſtanding. As by a like Hebraiſm, A man of deſires, is a man much or greatly deſired; and a man of bloods, is a very bloody and cruel man; ſo a man of underſtanding, is a very underſtanding man; or a man who ſeems nothing elſe but underſtanding. Such a man will draw the counſel of other men out of their hearts. A man of the greateſt underſtanding, and moſt reaching head, cannot go down into theſe deep waters of the heart; all that he can do by all his wit and skill, by the ſtrongeſt engines of his brain, is only this, to draw it out. This gives light to the Text of Job, and to the point in hand, ſhewing us how man may be ſaid to know the thoughts of man; and that the difference is great between the manner of Gods knowing the thoughts of man, and mans knowing of them. Which I ſhall yet more diſtinctly open. We may conceive it thus; Man knows the thoughts of man by ſome argumentation or inference; ſo that his knowledge of the thoughts of man is but conjectural at the beſt. Man cannot determine unerringly what the thoughts of another are. And therefore it is not lawful to make the thoughts of any man the matter of his accuſation; becauſe we cannot infallibly know the thoughts of any man, unleſs himſelf will make them known to us. So that, to ſay ſuch a man thought ſo, is not a legal teſtimony againſt any man. Conjectures amount not to proofs. And becauſe God knows the thoughts of man intuitively, directly, and infallibly (he is as certain what our thoughts are, as what our actions are) therefore God may judge men for their thoughts as much as for their words, or works, and ſo he will.

Further, Man may attain this conjectural knowledge of thoughts divers wayes.

Firſt, By words, I mean not words which are the expreſs image of a mans thoughts, and were ſpoken purpoſely to diſcover them; as ſometimes we ſay to a friend, I will tell you my thoughts, or what I think; for any fool may know the thoughts of a man if he will tell them; but a wiſe man will collect what lodges in the thoughts unuttered, by that which is uttered in words darkly and indirectly; he will ſail in thoſe deep waters of the heart (as Solomon calls them) by a ſide-wind, by a half-wind, yea ſometimes by a contrary wind. He will collect meanings by remote intimations; as Benhadad's ſervants did when Ahab did but ſay, he is my Brother (1 Kings 20. 33, 34.) hence they inferred, that Ahab had thoughts of peace in his heart to Benhadad.

Secondly, A man may attain the thoughts of another by his ſilence. As he that ſaith nothing thinks the more; ſo much of a mans thoughts may be known, concerning a buſineſs by his ſaying nothing. Not to anſwer hath much of an anſwer in it, and to be ſpeechleſs is to ſpeak.

Thirdly, The thoughts of the heart are oftentimes known by the Countenance, and the heart is Printed upon the face (Iſa. 3. 9.) The ſhew of their Countenance doth witneſs againſt them. 'Tis likely enough that the people of whom the Prophet ſpake, ſhewed their ſin more wayes, then by the ſhew of their Countenance. They were ſo impudent that they declared ther ſin as Sodom, and did not hide it: yet the countenance will ſhew ſin, though it be otherwiſe hid. The face doth often betray the heart, and ſpeaks that which the tongue conceals. They who are critical and curious in ſtudying men whom they converſed with, obſerve the caſt of their eyes, and the changes of their countenance, as much as their diſcourſe; and in theſe they read a diſcovery of the thoughts and intents of the heart. The Italians have a Proverb, That a man with his words cloſe, and his countenance looſe, may travel undiſcovered, what he is, or goeth about, all the world over.

Fourthly, The thoughts of the heart may be known by the geſtures of the body. Some have no other way to make known their thoughts but by ſigns. They literally ſpeak with their feet, and teach with their fingers, as Solomon ſaith, many do in a figure (Prov. 6. 13.) Thus the dumb ſpeak; and thus the reſerv'd thoughts of thoſe who can ſpeak freely enough are ſometimes known. A nod with the head, a ſhrug with the ſhoulders, the folding or ſtretching out of the hands, the pointing of a finger, all or any of theſe tell the thoughts of the heart.

Fifthly, Thoughts are often known by events. A ſuddain accident opens the cloſet of the heart. So we may underſtand that ſpeech of old Simeon to the Bleſſed Virgin (Luke 2. 35.) Yea a ſword ſhall paſs through thine own ſoul alſo, that the thoughts of many hearts may be revealed. That ſword was the heart-ſorrow which Mary conceived when her Son and Saviour ſuffered. This ſad event occaſion'd the revealing of many a mans heart, and the bringing forth of thoſe thoughts in the various tempers of men about it, which elſe, poſſibly, had never ſeen the Sun. The providences of God whether proſperous or afflictive, turn the inſide of many men outward, and make them appear as they are. And this two wayes, Firſt, The thoughts of a man are ſo revealed to himſelf; many would not believe that their own hearts had ſuch lodgers in them, ſuch proud, ſuch envious, ſuch timerous, ſuch revengeful, ſuch covetous, ſuch diſcontented thoughts, did not ſome providence draw them out. Secondly, Thus alſo the thoughts of other mens hears are revealed to us. 'Tis ſaid (Deut. 8. 2.) that the Lord led the children of Iſrael fourty years in the Wilderneſs, to prove them, and to know what was in their hearts; not that God needed to go ſo far about, or to fetch ſuch a compaſs to know what was in their hearts; but he ſpeaks there either after the manner of men, who by various turning and ſuddain events come to know the minds of others; or when 'tis ſaid, he did this to know what was in their hearts; the meaning is, he did it to make their hearts known (which elſe had been a ſecret) both to others and themſelves.

Sixthly, We may know the thoughts of another, by comparing his actions and the occaſions of them together; that which leads a man into any work, ſhews the bent of his heart. Pilate appear'd very unwilling to condemn and crucifie Chriſt, he ſtood long upon it, and contended with the Jews about it; but at the laſt, when the Jews cryed out (John 19. 12.) If thou let this man go, thou art not Cæſar's friend. When Pilate heard that ſaying, he brough Jeſus forth. His delivering up Chriſt, upon the occaſion of this ſpeech, plainly diſcovered the ſtrain of his thoughts, that they were covetous, ambitious, and cowardly thoughts; he was afraid to do juſtice, leſt he ſhould diſpleaſe Cæſar; he was afraid to deliver an innocent man, leaſt he himſelf ſhould be dealt with as a guilty man; he ſaw no rule why he ſhould condemn Chriſt, but when once they told him that he was not a friend to Cæſar if he did not, that word over-rul'd him. Thus his heart came out, and he appear'd thus thoughted, that rather then he would part with his Authority, he would part with a good Conſcience.

Yet be cautious in tampering about the thoughts of others; it is Gods Royalty to know thoughts, and therefore we ſhould not be over-buſie with them. It may quickly be our own ſin, and our brothers wrong, to be gueſſing at thoughts. And this hath cauſed many a breach, not only of the rules of love and charity, but of juſtice and righteouſneſs. 'Tis too bold an adventure to conclude peremptorily the meaning and thoughts of others, without clear conſequential proof, either in words or actions. If Job had not had more then bare preſumptions, his preſumption had been very blameable; while he ſaid, Behold, I know your thoughts,

And the devices which you wrongfully imagine againſt me.

This part of the verſe is of near affinity to the former. Mr. Broughton renders it, And your injurious imaginations againſt me. And another thus, I know your endeavours to affright me. The word which we tranſlate devices, is, as the learned in that Language tells us, of an ambiguous ſignification; ſometimes it is taken in a good, and often in an evil ſence. Which variety is uſually diſtinguiſhed and determined by ſome adjunct, antecedent or conſequent. The ſcope of this Text carrieth the worſer ſence, and the following adjunct (wrongfully) explains it ſo, The devices which you wrongfully imagine againſt me. This word is uſed (Gen. 11. 6.) when God complains of the builders of Babell, This people are one, and they have all one language, and this they begin to do, and now nothing will be reſtrained from them which they have imagined (or deviced) to do. Let the device be never ſo fooliſh and vain, never ſo proud and mad, while they are thus one, they will on, nothing ſhall reſtrain them. 'Twas an evil device which Job meant, when he ſaid, I know the devices which you

מזמה Vocabulum medium eſt, in bonam partem ſumitur & in malam.

Wrongfully imagine againſt me.] The word which we render, wrongfully imagine, ſignifies to ſnatch a thing by force, or to offer violence. The Vulture, that bird of prey, is expreſſed in the Hebrew by this word, according to which propriety of the word, the Text may more ſtrictly be rendered thus, I know your thoughts, and the devices which you violently catch up againſt me; you act as if ye came rather to catch me, then to comfort me; ye hook in matters againſt me, and even ſtrain your ſelves to make me guilty. Job looks upon his friends, as if they had not conſidered his caſe in the ſimplicity of their ſpirits, or with ſincere intentions; but came as engaged men, to ſtudy arguments how they might oppoſe him, rather then reſolve and ſettle him: or as if they had ſet their wits awork, like them who contend for victory, rather then for truth, and deſire rather to pleaſe a party, then to maintain that which is right; I know the devices which you wrongfully imagine againſt me.

חמס Eſt rapere & injuſtè facere.

Note hence, Firſt, Wrong doing begins at wrong deviſing.

Thus wicked men combined againſt the Prophet (Jerem. 18. 18.) Come, let us deviſe devices againſt him. They did not find him guilty, but they reſolved to make him ſo; and becauſe they knew of no evil he had done, he muſt be as evil as they could deviſe or think him. Thoughts are the moulds of our actions, whether good or bad. And they who intend no good to a man, can eaſily think evil enough of him.

Note Secondly, Some rather than they will not wrong others, force a way to do it.

So much the word Imports, you force devices againſt me; you put your ſelves hard to it, that you may deal hardly with me. As Saul ſaid to Samuel (1 *Sam.*13.2.) When I ſaw thou cameſt not within the dayes appointed, I forced my ſelf therefore, and offered a Burnt-offering. As if he had done a kind of violence to himſelf, before he could bring his heart to do that ſervice. Thus many a man forces himſelf to vex another, not becauſe he wants a mind to do it, but becauſe he wants matter to do it; becauſe nothing appears naturally, he forceth every thing. And if no fault can be forced and faſtned upon him, his very innocency ſhall be his fault, and his not-guiltineſs his accuſation. The Apoſtle ſpeaks of ſome (2 Pet. 3. 16.) who offer violence to the word of God; Unlearned and unſtable men wreſt the Scriptures; they put the Scriptures upon the rack and torture them, to make them confeſs that ſence or meaning which they have not at all in them, they ſtudiedly draw forth interpretations which the Spirit of God never put into them. And thus ſome who are uncharitable and cenſorious, wreſt the ſpeeches and actions of men, or the dealings of God with them, and draw unnatural concluſions from them. Job apprehended himſelf under ſuch an unfriendly force, as gave him juſt occaſion to ſay, I know the devices which ye wrongfully imagine againſt me.

The next verſe holds out the intendment of this yet more clearly.

Verſ. 28. For ye ſay, Where is the houſe of the Prince? and where are the dwelling places of the wicked?

As in the former words Job aſſerts that he knew the thoughts of his friends, ſo in theſe he ſeems to tell us their thoughts. 'Tis a ſpeech of like form with that (*Luk.*4.22, 23.) Where Chriſt prevents the thoughts of the Nazarens; Ye will ſurely ſay unto me this Proverb, Phyſitian heal thy ſelf; I know what you will be ſaying, or objecting; Phyſitian heal thy ſelf; Whatever we have heard done in Capernaum, do alſo here in thy Countrey. Heal thy ſelf, do miracles for thy ſelf, that is, for thy own fleſh and blood, for thy kindred and Country-men as well as for or among ſtrangers. Thus here, I know your thoughts; for ye ſay, or this ye are about to ſay, Where is the houſe of the Prince? The Septuagint read, Ye will ſay this; as noting their perſeverance, or perſiſtance rather in that opinion, as if they had reſolved to abide by it; I know, what ye have ſaid, you will ſay; what ye have thought of me, ye will think of me ſtill; ye will ſay, Where is the houſe of the Prince? and where are the dwelling places of the wicked? Theſe words are uppermoſt in your thoughts now, and theſe thoughts ye are ready and reſolved to form into theſe or the like words; Where is the houſe of the Prince? &c. Theſe things had been ſaid in effect before, while his friends ſo often minded him of the falls of Great Ones, and their dwellings. Eliphaz ſaid it (*Chap.*15.34.) The Congregation of hypocrites ſhall be deſolate, and fire ſhall conſume the Tabernacles of bribery. Bildad ſaid it (*Chap.*18.21.) Surely ſuch are the dwellings of the wicked, and this is the place of him that knoweth not God. Zophar alſo ſaid it (Chap. 20. 28, 29.) The encreaſe of his houſe ſhall depart, and his goods ſhall flow away in the day of wrath. This is the Portion of a wicked man from God; and the heritage appointed to him by God. Theſe things ye have ſaid, and I know your thoughts, ye will continue to ſay theſe things ſtill,

Where is the houſe of the Prince? &c.

As if he had ſaid, Ye have indeed laid down this only in a general Theſis, but I am the Hypotheſis; I am underſtood, and the man aimed at in all your diſcourſes concerning the overthrow of wicked men: ye might as well have ſpoken it out, Where is the houſe of the Prince? that is, of Job? And where are the dwelling places of the wicked? That is, of my children, for 'tis I and mine whom ye mean. Thus by a general diſcourſe of the devaſtation of the dwellings of wicked men, they put Job into the ſame number; and concluded, becauſe the ſame things, or the like, happened to him as to them, that therefore both they and he were alike.

Where is the houſe of the Prince?] Firſt, Some interpret theſe words, as relating only to wicked men in general. As if Job had ſaid, ye ſuppoſe that ye have ſufficiently diſproved my opinion, and proved me an hypocrite, by pointing me to the ruined houſes of wicked Princes, and bidding me behold their deſolations. As the Lord ſaid to the hypocritical Jewes, (*Jer.*7.12.) Go ye now to my place which was in Shiloe, where I ſet my name at the firſt, and ſee what I did to it for the wickedneſs of my people Iſrael. So (according to this expoſition) Job repreſents his friends, ſaying to him, Go to the houſe of the Prince, of this and that and t'other Prince, and ſee what work God hath made among them, and therein ſee what God hath already done to you, and what he will further do unto you, unleſs you humble your ſelf and repent. As their houſes are no where, ſo where is yours? But Secondly, We may alſo expound it particularly of Job's houſe, and of the houſes of his children. Where is the houſe of the Prince? That is, where is the houſe in which thou as a Prince didſt formerly live and flouriſh? doth it not lie waſt? where formerly there was a great concourſe of men, there now Owls and Bats inhabit, there nettles and brambles grow. The Prince of the Land of Uz lived in much ſplendor and magnificence, but where's his houſe now? As much as to ſay, his houſe is no where, 'tis gone. When the wicked ſaid to David (*Pſal.*42.) Where is now thy God? Their meaning was, Thy God is no where for thee; he is not to be found for thy help; So here, Where is the houſe of the Prince? That is, 'tis down, 'tis in the duſt. Thus he conceives them reproaching him with his former Glory.

Again, (ſay others) this upbraiding queſtion may have reſpect to the houſe wherein he then remained as a leperous and diſeaſed perſon. This man lived in a Palace, where is his houſe now? He dwells among the Leapers, his houſe is but a Peſt-houſe, or an Hoſpital, he dwells among the diſeaſed. See what a goodly Palace the Prince hath, Where is the houſe of the Prince? But I ſhall not inſiſt upon this; as conceiving the word houſe not to be reſtrained here to the place or Palace where he either formerly or then lived, but to be extended to his whole outward ſtate and condition. As David ſaith (2 *Sam.*23.5.) Although my houſe (that is, ſtate and family) be not ſo with God, &c. And the ſame David reporting the vain dreams of worldly men, ſaith (*Pſal.*49. 11.) Their inward thoughts is that their houſes (that is, their great port and ſplendour) ſhall continue for ever. So here, Where is the houſe (that is, the riches, the relations, the train and retinue) of the Prince?

The word rendred Prince, ſignifies one that is liberal or free, a perſon open-handed and open-hearted, a man of a royal and bountiful ſpirit; So all Princes are expreſſed, becauſe they ought to be ſo, and 'tis their honour to be ſo. Cloſe-handedneſs or cloſe-heartedneſs is moſt uncomely for a Prince; the Spirit of God hath the addition of this word (Pſal. 51. 12.) Uphold me with thy free (or Princely) ſpirit. The Spirit of God is infinitely free and liberal, ready to do good to all. As if David had ſaid, O Lord, let me not have ſuch a low ſpirit as formerly or lately I had when I yielded to the temptation of that baſe luſt, to defile the wife, and murther the husband; O how narrow, how unprincely a ſpirit was this? Now Lord, uphold me with thy free Spirit, that I may never do any ſuch unworthy act again. Let me alwayes have a ſpirit touched with thy Spirit, the ſpirit of a Saint, that's a Princely ſpirit indeed. The name of Princes tells us that they are, and themſelves, that they ſhould be of a free and large, of a noble and liberal Spirit.

נרך Liberalem, magnificum denotat; ubi eſt domus illius, qui in omnes munificus eſſe ſolebat? ironicè dictum.

The word uſed in the Greek for Great Ones, comes up to this ſence (Luke 22. 25.) The Kings of the Gentiles exerciſe Lordſhip over them; and they that exerciſe Authority upon them are called gracious Lords; or as we render Benefactors. As if all that Kings, as Kings, are to do, or their whole buſineſs, were to do good, or acts of Grace, they are called Benefactors, or, Gracious Lords. Where is the houſe of the Prince?

And where are the dwelling places of the wicked?

Here's a ſecond Query, but 'tis of the ſame ſcope with the firſt. Mr. Broughton renders it, Where is the Tent and Pavilion of the wicked? Another, Where is the Tent of the dwellings of the wicked? A third, Where is the Tabernacle of the Tabernacles of the wicked? That is, their chiefeſt Tabernacle, or their moſt glorious dwelling place. As if they had ſaid; We do not ask where are the Cottages of poor wicked men, but where are the ſtatelieſt Pallaces of the wicked, their Tabernacle of Tabernacles. Thus it anſwers that Hebraiſm which we have often in Scripture, to note any Superlative excellency; as, A Song of Songs, that is, the chiefeſt Song; and, The holy of holies, that is, the moſt holy place. So here, Where are the Tabernacle of Tabernacles? That is, the choice, the chief, the moſt beautiful Buildings that ever the wicked had? What's become of them? And here, as was ſaid before of the houſe of the Prince, we muſt not underſtand the bare dwellings of the wicked, but all the port and greatneſs belonging to them.

אהל משכנות Ubi tentoriorum habitationũ impiorum. Jun. i.e. Magnificum ex multis habitationibus cõſtans. Jun. Tabernaculũ tabernaculorum, i e. præcipuum habitaculũ. Lavat. Quaſi illarũ ruinæ veſtrã adverſum me ſententiam confirment. Bez.

Further, Some diſtinguiſh this part of the Verſe from the former, by conceiving the Tabernacle here ſpoken of to be a place for worſhip, not an ordinary dwelling place; As if he had ſaid, Where are the ſtately Temples which hypocrites frequented? Job was accounted hypocritically wicked by his friends, not prophanely wicked. Now (ſay they) his houſe is down, and his Chappel is down; his ſtate is gone, and his Religion is gone, all is gone.

And whereas the former part of the verſe ſpeaks of a Prince, and the latter of the wicked; Some underſtand them of a diſtinct, and others of the ſame perſon, implying that Princes are commonly wicked; and that they who carry Greatneſs in their titles, ſeldom carry goodneſs in their hearts. Princes have the ſame corruptions in them, and more temptations round about them then other men; and therefore 'tis harder for a Prince then for a poor man not to be wicked. But I paſs theſe things, though truths in themſelves, becauſe I cannot offer them with any confidence as the intendment of the Holy Ghoſt in this Text.

And having ſpoken before, oftener then once, of theſe devaſtations and ruines which God brings upon wicked men and their houſes, I ſhall not inſiſt upon any ſuch obſervation here,

Only Note, Firſt, That, the eſtates and houſes of Princes, though ſtrong and ſumptuous, yet come to ruine and vaniſh as well as the meaneſt Cottages or the eſtates of meaneſt men.

Where is the houſe of the Prince?] He doth not ſay, where is the houſe of the poor man? we can ſcarce ſee their houſes above ground at the beſt. As bodily death breaks open the door of the Prince, as ſoon as of the poor man; ſo civil death or deſtruction takes hold upon the eſtate and houſe of the Prince, as ſoon and ſooner, then upon the houſe or eſtate of a poor plebeian. Theſe diſpenſations have a voice, and their voice like that in the Prophet ſaith, cry; All fleſh is graſs, and all the goodlineſs thereof is as the flower of the field. The graſs withereth, and the flower fadeth, but the word of God endureth for ever. It will never be ſaid, Where is the word of the Lord? What is become of the Promiſes? Some in the prophaneneſs of their hearts ſay, Where is the promiſe of his coming? Where is the word of the Lord? Yea ſome in the pride and blaſphemy of their hearts ſay ſo of God himſelf, Where is he? But it can never be truly ſaid, Where is the word of God? Where is his Promiſe? Theſe ſhall abide, theſe have no ſeed of death or decay in them; Heaven and earth ſhall paſs away, but one Iota, one title of the word of God ſhall in no wiſe paſs away till all be fulfilled. But of all the things of the world, the goodlineſs of man, the Pallaces of Princes, the dwelling places of the wicked, it will ſhortly be ſaid, and of many of them it hath been ſaid already, Where are they? what's become of them? they are even like withering flowers; as the graſs withers, and the flower fades, ſo have thoſe dwellings and eſtates which ſeemed to challenge all changes, and bid time do its worſt. Secondly, Note, Wickedneſs is the ruine of the houſes and eſtates of Princes.

'Tis ſin that rots the timber; yea ſin will rot the very ſtones, and cauſe the marble pillars to moulder away like dirt; ſin hath brought a rot upon all worldly things, and blaſted the beauty of the creature. The houſes of Princes, with all their goodly array and furniture, will ſoon corrupt through the wickedneſs of Princes; Where are the dwelling places of the wicked? If any deſire the reſolution of this and the former query, or are yet doubtful and unſatiſfied about them, The next verſe puts them another queſtion, which ſhews how and by whom they may be ſatiſfied and receive a reſolution of their doubts. Or taking the queries of the former verſe, as put to Job by his friends, here Job puts queries to them. As if he had ſaid, I know ye will enquire of me, Where is the houſe of the Prince? &c. But ye might ſpare my pains, for any one will anſwer your queſtion if you will but ask him.

Verſ. 29. Have ye not asked of them that go by the way? and do ye not know their tokens?

Ye ask, Where is the houſe of the Prince? Ask of them that go by the way? Mr. Broughton renders, Can't you ask them that go by the way? You ſay where's the houſe of the Prince? what need you ask me? Can't you ask them that go by the way? The Vulgar reads it thus, Ask any man that goes by the way, and you ſhall know that he underſtands theſe things; ask the next man you meet, and he will inform you, that the houſes of many Princes proſper, and that the dwelling places of many wicked men flouriſh unto this day. Have ye not asked of them that go by the way?

Interrogate quemlibet de viatoribus, & hæc eadem illum intelligere cognoſcetis. Vulg.

Two things are here to be enquir'd into, for the clearing of theſe words.

Firſt, About what they ſhould enquire, or what's the thing to be asked.

Secondly, Who are theſe travellers or goers by the way, to whom the queſtion is to be put, or who are to be asked?

Firſt, What's the matter to be asked? Some conceive that Job bids them enquire about his dealings, with men, whether juſt or unjuſt, whether he had been an oppreſſour, or covetous, or proud? ask of them that go by the way and ſee if they can joyn in the report that you give of me? Surely you have made no enquiry of me, otherwiſe you would not make this judgment of me. Thus Job ſeems to ſpeak, in his integrity, as Samuel did (1 Sam. 12. 3.) Behold, here I am, witneſs againſt me before the Lord, whoſe ox have I taken? or whoſe aſs have I taken? or whom have I defrauded? whom have I oppreſſed, or of whoſe hand have I received any bribe to blind mine eyes therewith, and I will reſtore it to you. Can they who go by the way teſtifie any ſuch thing of me; if they can, let them; if they cannot, why do you my friends judge thus of me?

Non interrogaſtis de me viatores & ſigna eorum quæ dixerũt vobis de juſtitia mea non poteſtis negare. Vatabl.

Secondly, Ask about the doctrine which I have held forth concerning the dealings of God with wicked men. You think I am departed from the truth becauſe I maintain, that God uſeth much liberty in diſpoſing the things of this life. But ask them that go by the way? hear their Judgment, they'le tell you, that wicked men ſometimes proſper, and that Godly men are often afflicted in this world. Have ye asked this or that other queſtion, or any queſtion which tends to the clearing up of my innocency, or the reſolving of this controverſie between us? Have ye asked ſuch queſtions of them that go by the way? But who are they? that's the ſecond queſtion.

Firſt, Some underſtand the Text of thoſe who are at the end of their way; who are no longer as paſſengers in this world, but are paſſed out of it. So the words are conditional, or ſpoken upon ſuppoſition; as if Job had ſaid, O that you could but ask ſome of thoſe that have travelled through this world, and have ended the journey of this life, concerning the ſtate of wicked men: if you had their teſtimony the whole controverſie were at an end. We ſhould not need to ſtand troubling our ſelves about their proſperity in this life, ſeeing they are ſhut out of all the comforts of the next life. If we could lay our ears to the gates of hell, and hear what Cain ſaith, and what Judas ſaith, and what other damned wretches ſay, who have lived and died in ſin and unbelief; they would ſatisfie us, that we need not fear wicked men ſhall not be puniſhed enough, becauſe they are not alwayes puniſhed here.

Utinam liceret quemliber de viatoribus, qui confecto hujus vitæ itinere ex hac vita demigrarũt, convenire atq; teſtem proferre. Pined.

Secondly, Others underſtand the words Anologically; Aſk thoſe that go by the way; that is, aſk the faithful? aſk believers who are in the preſent ſtate of travellers, pilgrims, and ſtrangers in this world. As if Job had ſaid, If ye would be reſolved about this thing, do not enquire of men that are worldly and carnal, who have their portion in this life; who have no Country but this below, who make this their end and their all. But I would have you aſk thoſe who make this world but their way, and do not take up their felicity here. Theſe are the only men that are likely to anſwer the ſcruple, and decide the queſtion between us. But I wave this alſo, though it be a truth, that men who make this world their paſſage only, not their home, are beſt able to give an account about the diſpenſations of God in the world.

Qui nō conſtituunt finē in bonis tēporalibus, ſed per viam hujus vitæ tranſeunt ad terminū fœlicitatis futuræ, hi non habent mentē obſcuratā pravis affectibus, & ideo rectè poſſunt judicare. Greg. Aquin.

Thirdly, By thoſe that go by the way, ſay others, are meant the Jews; whoſe life was in a ſpecial manner a life of travel, from their going out of Egypt to their entrance into Canaan; As if he had ſaid; Enquire of that people who have the Oracles of God, to whom God hath communicated himſelf more then to any people in the world; go, aſk them, enquire of them; they will tell you, they will give you tokens, and reſolve this doubt. We dwellers in the land of Uz, have the mind of God ſomewhat obſcurely revealed to us, but aſk the wiſe men among the Jews, to whom the Oracles of God are committed, and among whom his Name is eſpecially known by ſigns and wonders and tokens wrought among them; They will reſolve you about this truth. But I paſs this alſo.

Viatores intelligit Iſraelitas qui exeuntes ab Egypto verā legē atq; revelationem myſteriorum ſuſceperunt ſignis & prodigiis confirmatas, quos facilè adire & cōſulere potuiſſent amici Job. Burg.

Fourthly, Some of the Rabbins interpret yet higher of the old Patriarchs, Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, aſk their judgment in this thing; aſk what Abraham, what Iſaac, what Jacob, thought of theſe things; aſk thoſe ancient Hebrews. The word Hebrew, ſignifies A paſſenger, or a goer by the way; and they (as ſome tell us) were ſo called from their uncertain motions. They going out of their own Land, and being for many ages but ſtrangers and pilgrims in every Land. Yet others rather conceive that the Hebrews had their name from Heber, *Gen.*10.11. I leave this alſo, and conclude.

Hebræus à עבר tranſire, quaſi tranſiens, quod nomen impoſitum fuiſſe Abrahamo à Chananeis, contendit Rab. Sal. Ex quo dictus fuit Tranſitor, vel Trāseuphratæus ſicut tranſelpinos vocamus. Pined.

Fifthly, That when he ſaith, Have ye not asked them that go by the way? The meaning is either this, Have ye conſulted with men of experience, who by long travel in divers Countries have made obſervation of the various providences of God? Or the words are proverbial, Denoting men of ordinary capacity, men unlearned, or the vulgar; As if he had ſaid, I need not refer this to ſome ſpecial men, to hear their award, I need not chuſe the moſt wiſe, ſolid, grave, learned and judicious men to anſwer and reſolve this doubt; but I dare refer my ſelf, and my cauſe, to the next man I meet, to a meer ſtranger, be he what he will, learned or unlearned, if he be but a man that underſtands common ſence, or is not a ſtranger to the reaſon of a man. Thus the Latines, when they would expreſs a thing that is commonly known, ſay, Every blind man, every handy-crafts man knows this. Thus here, to ſay, Every man that goes by the high way knows this, is as much as to ſay, 'tis a thing eaſily and univerſally known. So that Job by referring the umpirage and determination of this buſineſs to men that go by the way, aſſerts it a plain caſe, and ſuch as might be determined (if his friends had been peaceable) with little ſtudy or trouble. Job ſpake this more roundly (*Chap.*12.7.) where he upbraids his friends with the ſame thing, and doth (as it were) refer the buſineſs to the Beaſts. Aſk the Beaſts and they ſhall teach thee, and the fowls of the air, and they ſhall tell thee, &c. This is ſo plain a caſe that the beaſts of the Earth, and the fowls of the air may give a reſolution in it, therefore, ſurely, they who go by the way may. Aſk them that go by the way. I need not draw out a ſelect Committee, the next traveller will ſerve the turn; Have ye not asked them that go by the way?

Quaſi proverbiali loqutione, viatores dicuntur imperiti, ignari vel obvii quique. Quod Latinis Lippis & tonſoribus notum, id Idumæis forſan, viatoribus notum.

And do you not know their tokens?

The words may be read, Certainly you will be able to know their tokens. Some give the ſence thus, If the men you meet with, prove unable to expreſs their minds, they will make ſigns ſignificant enough to ſpeak this; if they cannot debate and argue the caſe, yet they will hold up their hands and give a token of their conſent with me in this point of difference between you and me.

Secondly, Theſe tokens or ſigns are rather Examples, of which travellers have ſtore in their books or memories. As if he had ſaid, There is no traveller of note, but hath examples in his note book, yea ſcarce a common goer by the high-way-ſide, but can produce ſome preſident out of Hiſtory or Experience to confirm what I have all along affirmed; Have ye never heard travellers tell ſtories of the greatneſs, power, and magnificence of wicked men? And whereas we tranſlate, Do you not know their tokens? the Hebrew may be thus rendred; And their tokens you ſhall not be eſtranged (or alienated) from. Though travellers and they that go by the way be ſtrangers to you, yet they will give you plain tokens, ſuch as you cannot be ſtrangers to. Mr. Broughton's Tranſlation conſents to this. So ye would not make their ſigns ſtrange. There will be ſo much clearneſs in what they ſay, that you will not be able to gainſay it.

Per ſigna intelliguntur exempla quæ quum eis eveniunt aliis ſunt documento, hæc autem explicantur verſibus ſequentibus. Jun.

לא תנכרו Signa eorum non alienabitis; vel, non aliena ducetis.

Laſtly, When he ſaith, Do you not know their tokens? we may underſtand Job perſiſting in the metaphor of travellers, who to help their memory, have certain tokens to obſerve their way by, or what is remarkable in the way: If you enquire of them which is the way to ſuch a place, they will give certain tokens: Such a tree, or ſuch a houſe, ſuch a Caſtle, or ſuch a pillar. They will give you a token for every turning of the way, and do ye think they have made no obſervations about this thing? cannot they (think you) give ſuch ſigns and tokens as may warrant your aſſent to what I have aſſerted. As if Job had thus more plainly formed his ſpeech; You ſeem much offended with my tenets about the afflictions of good men, and the proſperity of the wicked. But why are you ignorant of that, which they that go by the way can inform you in, and give you many pregnant examples and tokens of, which the unlearned know, or which you may learn of every Paſſenger you meet, that God deals variouſly with men; that ſometimes the wicked proſper, and that only ſometimes they are deſtroyed; that judgment comes ſuddenly upon ſome of them, and that others are reſerved to the day of Judgment; This is ſuch a known truth, that every Paſſenger is able to reſolve you in it, and therefore 'tis very diſhonourable for you to be ignorant of it. Thus Job rebukes their negligence about, or their neſcience of the point in queſtion. Have ye not asked them that go by the way? and do ye not know their tokens?

Nunquamne illos (ſc. viatores) magnificorū illorū potentiæ indicia commemorantes audiviſtis? Bez.

Signa dicit perſiſtens in metaphora, quod viatores ſigna viarum obſervare ſoleant memoriæ cauſa.

Reprehendit Job tam ſupinam in amicis ignorantiam qui quæ vel à viatoribus ipſis diſcere poterant ultrā ignorarunt. Merl.

Hence Obſerve, Firſt, Some doctrines and dealings of God are ſo plain, that any man may know them.

There are wayes of God paſt finding out; you cannot know them, not only of the next man you meet by the way, but not of the wiſeſt in the world, no nor in the meetings of all the wiſe men in the world. Theſe met together, cannot ſhew you the hidden wayes of God. And as ſome Providences and works of God are dark, ſo alſo are ſome doctrines of faith: ſome truths are ſo myſterious, that they amaze the underſtanding of the wiſeſt, and the more they are lookt into, the leſs they are ſeen. But there are both words and works of God very plain, ſo plain, that he who goes by the way may know them, the meaneſt capacity may reach them; they are milk for babes. As there are ſeveral degrees and meaſures of ſpiritual underſtanding, ſo ſpiritual things of ſeveral degrees and meaſures are preſented to the underſtanding. And though there are ſome ſpiritual things which the higheſt underſtanding cannot fully reach, yet there are ſpiritual things enow both for the attaining of ſalvation hereafter, and the due ordering of our converſation here, which the loweſt ſpiritual underſtanding may ſavingly reach unto, and they that go by the way reſolve you in.

Secondly, Note, What we know not our ſelves, we ſhould be willing to learn of any, though (in many things) inferiour to us.

It is a ſin not to know what is our duty, but it is more ſinful not to enquire after it, though it be of them that go by the way. We ſhould be aſhamed of our ignorance; but let no man be aſham'd to have his ignorance cur'd by the meaneſt helps. The holy Ghoſt ſends the ſluggard to learn his duty of the Piſmire, To conſider her wayes, and be wiſe. The Lord by his Prophet (*Iſa.*1.) ſends the Jews to the Ox, and to the Aſs; The Ox knows his owner, and the Aſs his Maſters Crib; but Iſrael hath not known;

my people doth not conſider. Unreaſonable creatures may in ſome things act nearer reaſon, then ſome men, and may therefore teach ſuch men reaſon; how much more may the meaneſt of men, ordinary way-goers, or carriers do it, who being endued with reaſon, are alſo furniſhed and adorned with Grace.

Thirdly, Note, The Examples of former ages, are for our Inſtruction.

As what was written aforetime was written for our Inſtruction; So what was done aforetime was done for our Inſtruction. All the former Examples of Gods dealing with good and bad, with the godly and with the wicked, are ſignifications of his mind to us. What God hath done, ſhews us not only what he hath alwayes power to do, and may juſtly do, but what ('tis probable) he will do.

Laſtly, Whereas Job ſends his friends who were learned and wiſe men to common paſſengers for reſolution, or aſſures them that even ſuch might reſolve them.

Obſerve, The wiſe and prudent are ſometimes ignorant of thoſe truths which mean men have attained to.

Wiſe men are not alwayes wiſe, much leſs are they alwayes wiſe in all things. They who know moſt, know but in part; and many know much, who know little or nothing of the better part. The eyes of ſome are darkned, and ſhut up by God. (Mat. 11.25.) Thou haſt hid theſe things from the wiſe and prudent, and haſt revealed them unto Babes; that is, to mean men, to the poor and weak, to thoſe that are but infants and children in knowledge. Not a few ſhut their own eyes, and their hearts are prepoſſeſſed with prejudices. They are hindred from receiving truth in the love of it, by the love of themſelves and of the world. The Scribes and Phariſees were knowing and learned men; yet the men that went by the way, underſtood more of the Goſpel then they: yea Publicans and harlots (who were the worſt ſort of people that went by the way) entred into the kingdom of God (that is, received the Goſpel) before them (*Mat.*21.31.) The opinion which ſome have of their wiſdom, keeps them on this ſide many points of wiſdom. The Apoſtle ſaith, (1 *Cor.*1.21.) that, The world by wiſdom knew not God; that is, not by their own wiſdom. God is only known by wiſdom (as it is our only wiſdom to God) but he can be known by no wiſdom but his own; that is, by no wiſdom but that which himſelf gives. But it ſhould ſeem by the Apoſtle, that a man cannot know God by that wiſdom neither, for he ſaith in the ſame place, that the world by wiſdom knew not God (no not) in the wiſdom of God. And if God be not to be known in that wiſdom, in what or by what can he be known? I anſwer, The wiſdom of God there intended, is not the wiſdom which God works in us by his Spirit; but the wiſdom which man may ſee in the things which God hath wrought. So that when the Apoſtle ſaith, In the wiſdom of God the world by wiſdom knew not God, His meaning is, that the wiſeſt of men did not arrive at a ſaving knowledge of God (though they did arrive at a knowledge of God which left them without excuſe, Rom. 1.) by beholding the frame of the creature, upon which very much of the wiſdom of God is engraven. Yea not only do they fall ſhort of the ſaving knowledge of God in that wiſdom of God which may be read in the book of the creature, but in that wiſdom of God alſo which is revealed in the book of Scripture. One of the Ancients compares the School-men, who were men of the largeſt parts and ſubtleſt wits, to ſuch as having good bread before them, did yet alwayes grate their teeth upon ſtones; or to ſuch as having excellent wine before them, yet continually ſuck'd in the wind. For though they had the beſt Goſpel doctrines and truths of God before them, yet they ſpent their time and talents about unprofitable queſtions and aiery notions, which puff up, but do neither edifie nor nouriſh. So that whilſt many ſimple honeſt ſouls (having truth of grace) found bread and wine in the word of God for the ſtrengthening and refreſhing of their hearts: Theſe learned Rabbins did but whet their teeth upon ſtones, and fill their ſtomachs with the wind. And this cauſed one, more Ancient by much then the whole race of School-men, to cry out, The unlearned and ignorant (the men that go by the way) riſe up and take heaven, when many that grow old in the Schools and Chairs of the Learned, moulder away in Vanities and Niceties. 'Tis not natural wiſdom, nor acquired knowledge, that can give us a pure diſcerning of the things of God; 'tis poſſible for men that go by the way, for common ordinary men to underſtand the matters of faith and worſhip, as alſo the works of God, more ſolidly and ſoundly then they who bear the name of learned and knowing men. I am far from numbring Job's friends among formaliſts in knowledge; yet (which may give ground enough for this obſervation) Job ſeems to reckon their knowledge (as to the point in Queſtion) below what might be both expected and found among men in degree and profeſſion far below them.

Surgunt indocti & cœlum rapiunt.

VERS. 30, 31.

That the wicked is reſerved to the day of deſtruction; they ſhall be brought forth to the day of wrath.

Who ſhall declare his way to his face? and who ſhall repay him what he hath done?

THeſe two Verſes make up the report, which they who go by the way, were ſuppoſed ready to make, had they been asked the Queſtion; Where is the houſe of the Prince? or, Where are the dwelling places of the wicked? Their anſwer would have been to this effect.

Hoc eſt illud quod viatores vos docebunt, ſæpe cum calamitates orbi à domino immituntur impios illas evadere. Merc.

Verſ. 30. That the wicked is reſerved to the day of deſtruction; they ſhall be brought forth to the day of wrath.

That the wicked is reſerved.] The word which we render reſerved, ſignifies to ſtop, hinder, reſtrain, or keep back. David ſpeaketh thus upon the news of Nabals death, (1 *Sam.*25.39.) Bleſſed be the Lord that hath pleaded the cauſe of my reproach, from the hand of Nabal, and hath kept his ſervant from avenging himſelf. As God kept or ſtopt David from acting revenge for himſelf unduly, ſo the wicked man is kept or ſtopped by God from falling under the vengeance which is every way due unto him. Yet this ſtop hath a revenge in it; for, he is reſerved, not ſo much from (though it be from) as to a day of deſtruction; as appears more fully in the words which follow.

They ſhall be brought forth to the day of wrath.] The former clauſe is in the ſingular number, this in the plural, 'tis uſual in the ſacred language, (as hath been toucht formerly) to change numbers, while the ſame perſons and things are intended: yet the change of the number in this place, may have this ſpecial intimation; that though, now, here and there, a wicked man, this or that ſingle perſon may eſcape preſent judgement, yet they ſhall all be, as it were, chained together at laſt, and brought forth to a day of wrath.

In die calamitatis ſubtrahitur malus. Jun.

The Hebrew is, To the day of wraths; that is, to the day of extream fierce wrath, when many wraths ſhall be wrapt up in one. The root ſignifies to paſs away, and in Hithpael to be angry and enraged; becauſe ſuch anger paſſeth the bounds of reaſon ſometimes, and alwayes paſſeth the bounds of ordinary moderation. And though the wrath of the Lord doth never paſs the bounds of his own juſtice and righteouſneſs, yet many times it paſſeth the bounds of mercy, or is wrath without mercy. To a day of ſuch wraths, the wicked is reſerved.

Dies furorũ i. e. vehementiſſimi furoris.

עברות a
עבר

In conjugatione Hithpael ſignificat vehemẽtèr & cum exceſſu quodam iraſci.

So then (according to this interpretation) the day of deſtruction ſpoken of in the firſt part of the verſe, is to be underſtood of leſſer judgments; and the day of wrath in the latter part of the verſe, of the moſt terrible and dreadful judgments; implying, that howſoever the wicked man may eſcape many black dayes, yea though he ſhould eſcape all black dayes in this world, and die (as we ſay) in a whole skin, yet there is a day of wraths to which he ſhall be brought forth, and deſtroyed for ever.

Further, Some render, or rather paraphraſe the whole verſe, thus; In the day of deſtruction the wicked ſhall be kept leaſt evil touch him, and in a day of wrath to which others are brought forth he is ſpared and paſſed by. As if the whole verſe were of one tenour, and did expreſs in both parts of it the frequent impunity of wicked men; but I rather adhere to and reſt in the ſence of our own tranſlation. In purſuance whereof the whole verſe is by others read read thus; That in the day of calamity the wicked are kept back, and are carried out in the day of wrath. For that tranſlation in which both parts of the verſe ſpeak the ſparing of wicked men from puniſhment, is yet expounded only of a temporal ſparing. And the difference between our rendring and that, is only in the time, not in the thing. Or that ſpeaks only of their being ſpared, yet ſuppoſeth they ſhall be puniſhed at laſt; ours expreſſeth both their ſparing and their puniſhment. That is, they are ſpared or exempted from lighter afflictions or troubles; but a day of wrath is coming in which they ſhall be produced by the righteous judgment of God, and dearly pay for all. But whether we take the words according to this and our reading, or that other before remembred and inſtanced in, the ſcope and general tendency is one and the ſame, as will appear in theſe three following obſervations, grounded upon and riſing from them,

In die contritionis prohibebitur malus ne attingat eum, contritio in die irarum ad quem ducuntur alii ipſe prohibetur. Pagn.

Impius prohibetur ne parva afflictione attingatur, ideo in die irarū ſubiturus erit ingentes pœnas. Caje.

Pravis parcitur ad diē perniciei & ad diem irarū adducuntur. Tygur.

Firſt, Some wicked men are reſerved from preſent judgments, are hid in the ſtorms of common calamity.

That's the point upon which Job inſiſts in anſwer to his friends, who not only took it for granted, that if ever any ſtorm aroſe it would certainly ſweep away the wicked, but that all ſtorms were prepared and ſent out on purpoſe for them alone. Job oppoſeth them in this, all the Chapter over, ſhewing that many wicked men flouriſh, they and their children, and that, though they are reſerved to a day of wrath, yet they are preſerved in many dayes of wrath; and that though they are under a ſentence of condemnation, yet they are reprieved from execution. The Lord to comfort his people in Babylon, tells them by the Prophet, (*Ezek.*11.16.) I will be a little Sanctuary to them in the Countries where they ſhall come; that is, I will protect them; God is ſomewhat like this to wicked men for a ſeaſon; though he be not a ſanctuary, yet he is a ſhelter to them, he hideth them for a time. But where doth he hide them? and what's their ſhelter? He hideth them in his patience, and long-ſufferance. When God hideth his own people from evil, they are hid not only in his patience, but in his love; God hides them in his heart, he layes them in his boſom, the love, the good will of God is their Sanctuary. But God never hides or ſhelters the wicked in his boſom, or in his love; they are not hidden in his heart. The ſouls of ſuch lodge not (as the margine of *Pſal.*25.13. tells us the ſouls of them who fear him do) in goodneſs. Their ſanctuary is only in the patience, and long-ſufferance of God. The patience and long-ſufferance of God, is the ſheath in which he hideth his ſword that it deſtroy not the wicked, as the Prophet ſpeaks (*Ezek.*21.3,4,5.) Say to the land of Iſrael, thus ſaith the Lord, Behold, I am againſt you, and will draw forth my ſword out of his ſheath; Therefore ſhall my ſword go forth out of his ſheath againſt all fleſh, from the South, to the North, that all fleſh may know that I the Lord have drawn forth my ſword out of his ſheath, and it ſhall not return any more. As if he had ſaid, I will call in my ſword no more, it ſhall never find its way back again into my ſheath. One of the Ancients puts the Queſtion, What is this ſheath to which the Lord ſaith his ſword ſhould not return? He anſwers, The ſheath is the patience of God. Now as the patience of God is a ſheath which hideth the ſword till it be drawn and receiveth Commiſſion to deſtroy the wicked of the earth, ſo the patience of God is a ſhelter to ſome wicked men, and hides them from deſtruction when the ſword is drawn. Thus they are reſerved in a day of deſtruction. And though they continue long in their ſins, yet the long-ſufferance of God may be a ſhelter to them. While the Preacher ſaith (*Eccl.*8.11.) Becauſe ſentence is not ſpeedily executed againſt an evil work, &c. He doth more then intimate that ſentence againſt an evil work is not alwayes ſpeedily executed: he doth not ſay, that ſentence againſt an evil work is not ſpeedily given or pronounced, for indeed the Lord never forbears an hour to give ſentence againſt an evil work, yet ſentence againſt an evil work is not alwayes preſently executed. The execution may be ſtay'd, though the ſentence be given. For as there is not any prayer that comes up with acceptation before the Lord, but an anſwer is given to it preſently, yet the anſwer is not performed preſently; a believer may wait long for the fulfilling of his requeſt, though his requeſt be preſently granted; ſo againſt every evil work of a wicked man, the ſentence is given preſently, but every ſentence is not preſently executed. The ſame Solomon in the next verſe of the ſame Chapter makes another ſuppoſition, which alſo implies this poſition; Though a ſinner doth evil an hundred times, and his dayes be prolonged. Which ſuppoſition (though many ſuppoſitions in Scripture cannot) may be reſolved into this poſition, That a ſinner doing evil an hundred times, that is, very many times, (that great certain number is put for a great if not a greater uncertain number) may yet, through the patience of God, paſs unpuniſhed, his dayes may be prolonged, and be reſerved from the touch of any affliction.

Rogas ergo quæ ſit vagina in qua reconditur gladius? Reſp. eſſe longanimitatem dei. Theodor.

Secondly, Obſerve, A day of wrath is coming in which wicked men ſhall be brought forth to puniſhment.

Though they eſcape many dayes of judgment, yet they ſhall not eſcape all dayes of judgment. The Prophet Iſaiah ſaith, (Chap. 57.1.) The righteous periſh, and no man layeth it to heart, merciful men are taken away, none conſidering that the righteous is taken away from the evil to come. Now as the righteous periſh, that is, die, and merciful men are taken away by death, few or none conſidering the deſign of God in it; that they are only taken out of harms way, or from the evil to come. So unrighteous men are preſerved from preſent periſhing, and are not taken away by a ſudden deſtruction, few or none conſidering the deſign of God in it, that they are only reſerved to the evil which is to come, and that their puniſhment is deferred to a day of greater puniſhment. We have a very remarkable paſſage to that purpoſe (*Jer.*12.3.) Thou O Lord knoweſt me, thou haſt ſeen me, and tried my heart towards thee, (he ſaid before of the wicked, that God planted them, and they took root, they were vigorous and flouriſhing, in fruitfulneſs, yet preſently he adds) pull them out like ſheep for the ſlaughter, (when are ſheep pulled out for the ſlaughter, is it not after they have been fatted in the green fields and pleaſant paſtures? then prayeth he, pull them out for the ſlaughter) and prepare them for the day of ſlaughter. Which ſome render (according to the ſtrictneſs of the letter) Sanctifie them for the day of ſlaughter. The Original word ſignifies to ſanctifie. But what meaneth the Prophet when he prayeth to ſanctifie them for the ſlaughter? if they had been ſanctified, that might have kept them from the day of ſlaughter; how then doth he ſay, Sanctifie them for the ſlaughter? I anſwer, To ſanctifie them, doth not imply the making of them holy, or the infuſion of grace, but only the ſetting of them apart, as perſons deſtinated to deſtruction. 'Tis a borrowed ſpeech taken from thoſe ceremonial rites which were uſed either about the preparing of beaſts for ſacrifice, or of perſons to partake of a ſacrifice, the Law commanding both to be ſpecially prepared and ſet apart for that purpoſe, (Exod. 12.3,4. 1 Sam. 16.5.) So that, it is as if the Prophet had ſaid, Set them out, appoint them unto the day of deſtruction, let them be untouched of other evils, let no judgment meddle or have to do with them, as with ſacred things, till the great day of ſlaughter come upon them. The Vulgar gives that reading (Amos 6.3.) which I approve not as conſonant to the Original; we read it better actively deſcribing the evil frame of voluptuous and ſenſual men, whoſe belly is their God, and who are ſwallowed up in pleaſure, They ſing to the ſound of the Viol, they lie upon beds of Ivory, and put far from them the evil day. Their work all the day long is to do evil, and yet they put the evil day afar off from them. This is the ſence of our tranſlation. But the tranſlation lately mentioned renders the Text paſſively; not as if they had ſeparated or put far from them the evil day, but as being by the juſtice of God put upon, or ſeparated and ſet apart to the evil day. Ye are ſeparated unto, or for the evil day. As if it had been ſaid, Ye have all this while lived at the higheſt rate of voluptuouſneſs and ſenſuality; and ſeem removed at furtheſt diſtance from an evil day, yet ye are only marked out, and ſeparated for the evil day. All the evil dayes which ye have hitherto eſcaped do but lead you to an evil day, from which there will be no eſcaping. Solomon aſſerts as much (*Prov.*16.4.) The Lord hath made all things for himſelf, ('tis the priviledge and happineſs of God to be his own end in all that he doth; whereas nothing doth more aggravate the unholineſs of man in what he doth, then to make himſelf the end of doing it, but, The Lord hath made all things for himſelf) yea even the wicked for the day of evil; That is, he hath deſtinated them for that ſpecial day, in which he will call them to an account, and manifeſt the glory of his juſtice upon them. A Learned Hebrician gives his opinion, that this Text in the Proverbs, may be thus tranſlated more ſutably to the Original; God hath made every thing for that which ſhall be anſwerable to it, even the wicked for the day of evil. Now what is more anſwerable to a wicked or an evil man, then an evil day; ſin and ſorrow will meet at laſt, and do alwayes beſt match together. The wicked may often eſcape trouble, but they are never delivered from it: all their preſervations from evil, are but reſervations to further evil. The Lord (ſaith the Apoſtle Peter, 2 Epiſt.2.9.) Knoweth how to deliver the godly out of temptations, and to reſerve the unjuſt to the day of judgment to be puniſhed. The knowledge of the Lord extends to both, he knoweth wayes enow, he hath many wayes in ſtore to deliver the Godly; but (conſidering the tenour of his revealed will) he knoweth no way to deliver the wicked, they having refuſed all wayes of his appointment for their own deliverance. Therefore as to them he knoweth only (and for that he knoweth many wayes) how to reſerve them to the day of judgment to be puniſhed.

Sanctificâ eos in die occiſionis ſc. ſerva intactos uſq; ad diem occiſionis cui deſtinati ſunt.

Separati eſtis in diem malum, i.e. longe ſemoti à præſentibus malis. Separati eſtis in diem malū. Vulg.

Tremelius.

Thirdly, By way of deduction or corollary from the whole verſe, take this Obſervation,

Wicked men are not ſpared in mercy, but in wrath.

Their ſparing is to ſmiting, and the ſalvations which they have (if they may be called ſalvations) are to deſtruction. When ever they are reſerved from judgment, 'tis only that they may (in fitteſt ſeaſon) be brought to a greater judgment; there is no mercy in ſuch ſparing. The long-ſuffring of God hath a tender of and a tendency to mercy in it; but wicked men who go on in their ſins get nothing but more blows, while the patience of God doth (as it were) hold his hand from ſmiting them. As the Apoſtle is expreſs (*Rom.*2.4, 5.) But thou after thy hardneſs and impenitent heart, treaſureſt up to thy ſelf wrath againſt the day of wrath, and revelation of the righteous judgment of God, not knowing that the goodneſs of God leadeth thee to repentance. A wicked man makes a very ill market of the long day of patience. The treaſure that he gets is all black money, his earnings are wrath, and that againſt the day of wrath, and the revelation of the righteous judgment of God. And ſo, that patience, which, in it ſelf, is an act of grace, proves, in the event, an aggravation of his ſin. 'Tis better not to be ſpared, then not to be bettered by it. The ſtroak is the heavier, and wounds the deeper when it comes, by how much it is the longer before it cometh. Which ſome note from the Hebrew word here tranſlated wrath, which in the Verb ſignifies both to be angry, and to defer, protract, or put off. From the Analogy of which two ſignifications, we may infer, That when God doth only forbear to ſhew his anger he is indeed moſt angry, and that the ſlowneſs of puniſhment ſhall be recompenced in the weight of it. In the time that wicked men are ſpared they ſow more ſeed of ſin, and ſo they muſt reap the greater harveſt of wrath. For, as a river which is ſtopped up by ſome Lock, when that is removed, poureth it ſelf forth with greater violence; or as an arrow the further it is drawn back from the mark by a ſtrong arm, flies the more ſwiftly to the mark when it is diſcharged, and makes the deeper impreſſion in it; ſo all the ſtops, defers, and draw-backs of divine wrath, do but procure and draw out the fierceneſs and violence of it againſt all abuſers of divine patience.

Job having thus declared the report of the travellers concerning wicked men (That they are reſerved to or in a day of deſtruction, and brought forth to a day of wrath) gives us alſo a report of the frame of their ſpirits; and as he had intimated, that God ſpares them long, ſo he tells us plainly why men do.

Verſ. 31. Who ſhall declare his way to his face? who ſhall repay him what he hath done?

Ego de deo hæc verba dici mihi facile perſuadeo. q. d.

Some interpret this verſe in application to God; Who ſhall declare the way of God to his face? And ſo 'tis the anſwer of a ſecret objection, which he poſſibly might make to whom that report ſhould be made. The wicked is reſerved to the day of deſtruction, &c. Why ſhould not a wicked man have preſent puniſhment? Why ſhould he live in pleaſure, who is unworthy to live? Why ſhould God exerciſe ſo much patience, and not cut him off from cumbring the ground? To theſe bold interrogatories, the Text anſwers (according to this interpretation) by two more.

Quis ſtare audebit ante faciem dei, ad annunciandum ei quomodo in hoc procedere debeat. Bold.

Who ſhall declare his way to his face? Who ſhall repay him? &c.

That is, Who ſhall take upon him to argue this with God? or find fault with the way of his dealings with the moſt faulty men? Who ſhall do this? Let me ſee the man that dares. So it ſuits well with that (*Chap.*9.12.) Behold, he taketh away, who can hinder him? Who ſhall ſay to him, what doſt thou? And 'tis of the ſame ſence with that of Job again (*Chap.*23.13.) But he is in one mind, who can turn him? what his ſoul deſireth, that he doth. We may parallel it alſo with the two and twentieth verſe of this Chapter, Shall any teach God knowledge? ſeeing he judgeth thoſe that are high. What if God reſerve the wicked man to the day of deſtruction, who ſhall ſay, why doth he ſo? Who ſhall challenge him for ſo doing? The latter branch is likewiſe rendred in compliance with this interpretation; He hath done it (or diſpoſed of it) who ſhall reply upon him for what he hath done? The word (as this Author tell us) ſignifies not only to repay or return by action, but by word. To reply or retort a thing upon another, is a kind of repayment of it. This is a fair ſenſe, and a great truth. The Lords actions are unqueſtionable, both in ſmiting the Godly, and in ſparing the wicked; as hath been ſhewed upon divers overtures given in this Book. Yet

Et hoc diſpoſuit, quis replicabit ei? Bold.

Secondly, I rather conceive the wicked man to be the ſubject, and perſon intended in this verſe.

Who ſhall declare his way to his face? As if he had ſaid; This wicked man is ſo ſturdy and ſullen, ſo big and boiſterous, that no man dares ſpeak to him, or declare that to his face which he is ready enough to do in the face of every man. As if he had ſaid; This man is not only not ſmitten with the ſword of God, but not with the word of man; he goes on without check or controul; as God doth not, ſo man dares not meddle with him, either by way of puniſhment or reproof. Who ſhall declare his way to his face? The word (I grant) here uſed to declare, ſignifieth only a bare declaration, as to tell a ſtory, or make a narrative, and ſo, to declare, put alone, is no more then to ſpeak. But to declare to the face, implies both boldneſs and ſmartneſs in ſpeaking. So the Vulgar renders it, Who ſhall rebuke his way to his face, or before him? who ſhall reprove the ſinful way, the wicked courſe he liveth in. The conſtant and uſual practice of a man, whether good or evil, is commonly called his way in Scripture.

Quamvis verbum originale ſimplex ſit & lene, tamen ex eo quod ſequitur (in facie ejus) videtur vim accipere & ad ſceleratæ vitæ reprehenſionem pertinere. Pined.

Quis arguet coram eo? &c. Vulg.

Who ſhall declare his way to his face?] Poſſibly ſome will ſpeak afar off, or behind his back, but who will tell him his own plainly, and to his face? In which ſenſe the word is uſed (*Gal.*2.11.) When Peter was come to Antioch, I (ſaith Paul) withſtood him to his face; That is, I did not go to the Diſciples and brethren, and tell them that Peter had done amiſs, but I came to Peter himſelf, and dealt roundly with him. Many will ſpeak truth enough of the wicked at a diſtance, and tell ſtories of their wayes in corners, but 'tis not every mans work to declare their way to their face, or to ſhew it as a glaſs ſhews a man the ſpots of his face; which is the emphaſis of the word here uſed.

Hence Obſerve, Firſt, Many wicked men are not convinced of their wickedneſs, nor is it an eaſie matter to convince them.

And as there is alwayes difficulty in it, ſo ſometimes there is danger in it; to do ſo is like taking a Bear by the tooth, or a Lyon by the beard. They act blindly, and therefore boldly; and he had need be bold who declares againſt their actings. Some ſin againſt light, many ſin for want of light. Some do evil againſt their knowledge, many are not perſwaded that they have done evil. Of ſuch the Prophet ſpeaks, (*Jer.*2.34, 35.) Alſo in thy skirts is found the blood of the ſouls of the poor innocent; yet thou ſayeſt becauſe I am innocent, ſurely his anger ſhall turn from me;

(they were polluted with blood, and yet clean in their own opinion) Behold, I will plead with thee, becauſe thou ſayeſt I have not ſinned. As if the Lord had ſaid, I will declare thy ſin to thy face, becauſe thou ſayeſt thou haſt not ſinned; Thou ſayeſt who can charge me, who can ſay black is my eye; Behold, I will plead with thee, and ſhew thee how black thou art. 'Tis hard to declare ſin to their faces, who ſay in their hearts they have not ſinned. The Prophet is commanded (*Iſa.*58.1.) Lift up thy voice like a Trumpet, cry aloud, ſpare not, ſhew my people their tranſgreſſions, and the houſe of Jacob their ſins. They ſee not their ſins, therefore ſhew them their ſin, they call their evil wayes good, and their tranſgreſſion obedience; ſuch muſt have a voice lifted up like a Trumpet to make them hear. All who are dead corporally, ſhall at laſt hear the voice of the Angels Trumpet; but they who are dead ſpiritually, will not hear that voice which ſounds like a Trumpet, unleſs the Spirit of God be in the voice of man.

Secondly, Note, It is a duty to declare the wayes of wicked men to their faces.

Though every man be not called to be a reprover, and though no man be called to be every mans reprover; yet every ſin calls for reproof, and ſome or other are called to reprove it; ſome ſhould ſpeak plain Engliſh, and home to ſinners, and rebuke them not only in a parable, or in the clouds, by remote intimations, but directly and to their faces. Them that ſin (ſaith the Apoſtle, 1 *Tim.*5.20. that is, who ſin openly and ſcandalouſly) rebuke before all, rebuke them to the faces of others. And how ſecretly or privately ſoever any man ſins, he ſhould be rebuked to his own face, freely, and clearly. Some commit their abominations as the Prophet Ezekiel ſhewed in viſion (Chap. 8. verſ. 8,9.) behind a wall. And he ſaid unto me, Son of man dig now in the wall: and when I had digged in the wall, behold a door, and he ſaid unto me, go in, and behold the wicked abominations that they do here. Though men ſin out of ſight, and uſe a kind of modeſty in committing their abominations, yet the wall muſt be digged, and the door muſt be opened, and they who poſſibly were aſhamed to do evil, unleſs behind the backs of others, muſt be told of it to their faces.

Thirdly, Obſerve, That there are not many to be found who dare declare the wayes of wicked men to their faces.

When the Lord ſaid (*Iſa.*6.8.) Whom ſhall I ſend; or who will go for us ? That inquiry intimated that there were not many to be had fit for ſuch a ſervice as was there charged upon the Prophet (*verſ.*9,10.) So when Job ſaith here, Who ſhall declare their way to their face? It argues that there are not many fit, much leſs forward to do it. To reprove any for ſin is a hard ſervice, eſpecially ſuch as are rich and Great. The flattering Prophet Amaziah would not endure, that down right Amos ſhould propheſie at Bethel, (Amos 7.12,13.) And Amaziah ſaid unto Amos, O thou Seer, go flee to the land of Judah, and there eat bread, and propheſie there, but propheſie not again any more at Bethel, for it is the Kings Chappel, and it is the Kings Court. As if he had ſaid, go into the Villages and reprove the Countrey people as much as thou wilt, but take heed of medling with Princes. It is no wonder, that Amaziah could not bear Amos preaching reproofs at Court, but it is a great wonder that Amos had the holy boldneſs to do ſo. 'Tis rare to have the wayes of wicked Princes pleaded to their faces; Kings have clouds in their brows, as well as Crowns upon their heads, and are terrible to their reprovers; They command ſilence with a look, and would be adored as Gods, not reproved as men. The Prophet Jeremiah being ſent to reprove high and low to their faces, complaineth (Chap. 15. 10.) Wo is me, my mother, that thou haſt born me a man of ſtriſe, and a man of contention to the whole earth. Why was Jeremy a man of ſtrife and contention? What! becauſe of his proneneſs to contention, or becauſe he was of a quarrelſome ſpirit, and loved to fiſh in troubled waters? No, his contentiouſneſs was not from his diſpoſition, but from his Commiſſion; not from the temper of his ſpirit, but from his calling. He was a quiet and peaceable Prophet, but he was commiſſion'd to propheſie terrours and troubles; he was ſent forth to declare the way of that people to their faces, and he was faithful in doing it, he ſpared none; and therefore though he medled not in buying, or ſelling, in giving upon uſury, or taking upon uſury, though he had no worldly negotiations among them, nor mingled himſelf with thoſe affairs which uſually cauſe ſtrife and contention among men, yet he was a man of contention. The Egyptian Lawes made it a capital crime for any to call the Idol Serapis a man, or to number him among mortals, and therefore ('tis ſaid) they placed the Emblem of ſilence in all thoſe Temples where his image ſtood, and he was worſhipped; implying that all muſt be huſht, and not a word ſpoken in derogation of him. Thus wicked men would impoſe ſilence upon all (but ſuch as flatter them) leaſt their wayes ſhould be diſcovered. Their wayes and their tongues are their own, who is Lord over them; yet they would Lord it over all mens tongues, that none may dare to declare their wayes. And as few dare, ſo there are not many fit to declare their ways to their faces. To do ſo, requires; Firſt, a man of knowledg and underſtanding, and, which is more, Secondly, a man of prudence and diſcretion; and which is yet more, it requires, Thirdly, a man of uprightneſs and integrity; yea which is more rare, Fourthly, a man of ſelf-denial and contempt of the world. A conjunction of all theſe qualifications in one man is not to be found under every hedge, no nor in many well built houſes. Where ſhall we find a man of all theſe ingredients? A man of knowledg, prudence, integrity, ſelf-denial, and contempt of the world, is a kind of wonder in the world, and therefore who ſhall declare the wicked mans way to his face? When the Lord ſent forth his Prophets to declare the wayes of wicked men to their faces, how doth he prepare and arm them for the work, leſt they ſhould be diſcouraged and withdraw from it. The Prophet Jeremy is not only cheared up, but threatned to it (Chap. 1. 17.) Thou therefore gird up thy loins, and ariſe, ſpeak to them all that I command thee, be not diſmayed at their faces, leſt I confound thee before them. Leaſt danger ſhould deter him from ſpeaking to their faces, God ſets a greater danger before his face if he did not ſpeak. So again (Ezek. 2. 3, 4.) And he ſaid unto me, Son of man, I ſend thee to the children of Iſrael, to a rebellious Nation, &c. For they are impudent children (or hard of face) and ſtiff-hearted: I do ſend thee unto them, and thou ſhalt ſay unto them, thus ſaith the Lord God: and they, whether they will hear, or whether they will forbear, for they are a rebellious houſe, yet ſhall know that there hath been a Prophet among them. Ezekiel being to do this Meſſage, the Lord cautions him, (verſ. 6.) And thou ſon of Man, be not afraid of them, neither be afraid of their words, though briars and thorns be with thee, and thou doeſt dwell among Scorpions, be not afraid of their words, nor be diſmayed at their looks. When they, their words, their looks were all dreadful, when in dealing with them the Prophet was to deal with briars, thorns, Scorpions, had he not need to be well backt and ſupported? When the Prophet Michah was to declare the wayes of wicked men to faces, ſee how he was empowered; Truly (ſaith he, Chap. 3. 8.) I am full of power by the Spirit of the Lord, and of judgment, and of might, to declare unto Jacob his tranſgreſſion, and to Iſrael his ſin. Who but an Eliah could have declared the ſin of Ahab to his face? and who but the Baptiſt, (who came in the power and ſpirit of Elias) could have declared the ſin of Herod to his face, not only to the peril, but loſs of his own head?

Conſtitutum eſt ut quiſquis illum hominẽ fuiſſe dixiſſet capitalẽ pẽderet pœnam & quoniam in omnibus templis ubi colebatur Iſis & Serapis erat etiam ſimulachrum, quod digito labiis impreſſo admonere videretur ut ſilentium fieret, hoc ſignificare Varro exiſtimabat ut homines eos fuiſſe faceretur. Auguſt. l. 18 de Civitat. dei. c. 5.

Fourthly, By way of Corollary, Obſerve, That ſome wicked men are uſually flattered.

They are flattered to their faces, and reproached behind their backs; and they who will not be reproved to their faces, ſhall be ſure to have ſtore of reproaches behind their backs.

Laſtly, Obſerve alſo by way of Corollary, It is a part of the miſery of wicked men not to be reproved.

As it is their ſin that they will not be reproved, ſo their miſery that they are not; they indeed look upon it as their priviledge that they are above reproof, that they can ſin and no man ſay, why do ye ſo? That though (as the Pſalmiſt ſpeaks, *Pſal.*49.13.) their way be their folly, yet not only (as it follows there) their poſterity, but their contemporaries, or they who are preſent with them, approve both their ſayings and their doings, ſaying yea, to their yea, and nay to their nay, chiming in with all their opinions and actions. Thus they pleaſe themſelves in being alwayes pleaſed by others, which yet is at once their miſery and their curſe; for by this means they hear any thing rather then the truth of their own wayes and practices, and are deprived of the greateſt benefit of friendſhip and humane ſociety, faithful admonition. What ſhould a man deſire more of a friend then to be made better by him, or to be admoniſhed in what he doth amiſs. The Lord (Hoſ. 4.4.) threatens it as one of the ſoareſt judgments, Let no man ſtrive; He doth not mean it of corporal ſtrife, or of ſtriving with blowes and weapons, but of a ſtrife by convictions or arguments: ſo 'tis expounded in the next words; Let no man ſtrive or reprove another. To reprove another is to ſtrive with him for his good; And 'tis one of the ſaddeſt reproofs and greateſt evils that can fall upon man, when God ſaith, Let no man reprove another. When once God ſaith of a ſinner, he ſhall not be reproved, 'tis more then probable that he hath ſaid of his ſin, it ſhall not be pardoned. The Lord parallels their ſins, of whom he ſaid, Let no man reprove another, with the greateſt ſin; For thy people are as they who ſtrive with the Prieſt. They who then ſtrove with the Prieſt, ſtrove with God himſelf, in whoſe name the Prieſts adminiſtred holy things. When any ſo ſtrive with men that they ſtrive with God alſo, no marvel if God forbid men to ſtrive with them any longer. To be reproved hath ſo much good in it, that to be reproved is better then to be loved. Solomon aſſures us (Prov. 27. 5,6.) That open rebuke is better then ſecret love; faithful are the wounds of a friend, but the kiſſes of an enemy are deceitful. By the wounds of a friend, he means not ſword-wounds, but word-wounds, or thoſe blows which a friend gives by rebuking; Faithful are theſe wounds of a friend; That is, by theſe a friend gives teſtimony of his faithfulneſs. But the kiſſes of an enemy; That is, his flatteries and ſoothings are deceitful; that is, they teſtifie his deceitfulneſs. Many betray their friends with theſe metaphorical kiſſes, as Judas did Chriſt with a literal kiſs. Theſe are killing kiſſes, bloody kiſſes. David prayeth for ſmitings, in oppoſition to theſe kiſſings, (Pſal. 141. 5. Let the righteous ſmite me, how? with his hand or ſword? No, yet ſuch ſmiting is far more eligible then that kind of kiſſing, but let the righteous ſmite me with his word, with his tongue, as the next words explain his meaning) Let him reprove me, and it ſhall be as an excellent oyl that ſhall not break my head. This Law was given the Jewes, that they ſhould exerciſe their love in rebukes, (Lev. 19. 17.) Thou ſhalt not hate thy brother in thy heart, thou ſhalt in any wiſe rebuke thy neighbour, and not ſuffer ſin upon him. To hate a brother and not to rebuke him are equivalent expreſſions in that Law; and we may thence alſo infer, that as it is a ſin to hate our neighbour, and an affliction to be hated by our neighbour, ſo it is a ſin not to rebuke our neighbour, and an affliction (when there is cauſe) not to be rebuked by him. And he who wiſely declares a mans ſin to him, declares his love to him; and beſtowes as many kindneſſes upon him, as he doth deſerved reproofs. Who ſhall declare his ſin to his face?

Yet further, when Job ſaith, Who ſhall declare, &c. We may expound it not only of declaring by reproof, as one friend declares the ſin of another to him, or as the ſins of men are declared by the Miniſters of the Goſpel. But we may take it for a judiciary declaring, and that two wayes; Firſt, by way of evidence; Secondly, by way of ſentence. A witneſs declares the way of a wicked man to his face (for the witneſs and he that is witneſſed againſt, ought to come face to face) by giving evidence. A Judge declares the way of a wicked man to his face by giving ſentence. Thus 'tis as if Job had ſaid; Who dares either be a witneſs to accuſe, or a Judge to condemn this wicked man. Which ſence doth ariſe more fully from the laſt words of the Text,

And who ſhall repay him what he hath done?

That is, who ſhall puniſh him according, or up to the deſert of his deeds. This fo'lows clearly from what was ſaid before; if no man can be found to declare his way to him, or to tell him what he hath done, then ſurely none will be found to repay him what he hath done. And therefore no marvel if the wicked man paſs untoucht through the world; God oftentimes ſpares him in wrath, and men ſpare him oftener for fear. Men dare not puniſh, and God will not puniſh him here, therefore this man muſt needs eſcape unpuniſhed.

Hence Note, Firſt, Puniſhment is payment, juſtice is the giving of every man his due.

The Original word here tranſlated repay, notes the ordinary paying of a debt, and in its firſt ſignification to make peace. And the reaſon is, becauſe both when any man payeth his private debt, he procures his own peace by it; as alſo when Magiſtrates pay wicked men their due judicially, the publick hath peace by it; and that not only from the promiſe of God, but alſo from the very nature of the thing. When juſtice payeth every man his due, both reward and puniſhment, who can complain? or be adhered to, if he do? When Juſtice runs down (as it ought) like a ſtream, (that is, freely and indifferently to all) Then peace ſhall be (as 'tis promiſed) like a river; that is, comfortable, and continued unto all. When the juſtice of man is like the juſtice of God (which now awards to every man according to his deeds, and will at laſt render to every man according to what he hath done, whether it be good or whether it be evil) when (I ſay) the juſtice of man is thus (in proportion) like the juſtice of God) then the peace of man ſhall be (in his proportion) like the peace of God, a great and a laſting peace. It breeds as much trouble to States and Nations, when offenders are not paid according to what they have committed; as it doth to private perſons when their creditors are not paid according to what they have borrowed. Again, when Job ſaith, Who ſhall repay him what he hath done?

He implies this ſecond Obſervation,

That, Some wicked men do even out-grow the reach of mans juſtice.

They are ſo fortified with power, with riches and relations, that there's no coming at them; Where ſhall we have a witneſs to declare the truth againſt them according to his knowledge of the fact? Where ſhall we have a Judge that will declare the truth againſt them according to his knowledge of the Law? or having given ſentence, will ſee it executed? no man ever out-grew the juſtice of God, but many have out-grown the juſtice of man; not that the greateſt of men are at any time priviledged from the juſtice of man, but becauſe many times juſtice is over-born by great men. For as ſome men are ſo low, weak, and miſerable, that only God hath power enough to raiſe and heal them, they are ſo far gone (as we ſay) that the creature cannot cure or recover them, and therefore we uſe to ſay of ſuch, that we leave them to the mercy and power of God, we can do no more, the Lord muſt help you, for we cannot; Now as ſome men are ſo weak and low, that we muſt leave them to the help of God, ſo there are others ſo high and great, ſo ſtrong and powerful, that we muſt leave them to the juſtice of God. And (to be ſure) as the day of divine juſtice hath been, ſo it will be upon thoſe that are lifted up, as well as upon thoſe that are low, upon the ſtrong Oaks and tall Cedars, as well as upon the muſhrooms and the ſhrubs. God will repay every man what he hath done, though man neither doth nor can.

VERS. 32, 33, 34.

Yet ſhall he be brought to the grave, and ſhall remain in the tomb.

The clods of the valley ſhall be ſweet unto him, and every man ſhall draw after him, as there are innumerable before him.

How then comfort ye me in vain, ſeeing in your anſwers there remaineth falſhood?

IN the former verſe the wicked man was repreſented ſo ſtout and daring, that no man durſt check him, or ſhew him the ugly viſage of his wayes in the glaſs of truth. But (as our tranſlation ſeems to carry it) this verſe checks him to purpoſe; and whereas none durſt declare his way to his face, this declares his end to his face. Though (as Nabals ſervant ſaid of him, 1 Sam. 25. 17.) he were ſuch a ſon of Belial, that a man could not ſpeak to him, yet death ſpeaks with him.

Verſ. 32. He ſhall be brought to the grave, and remain in the tomb.

Let men be as ſtout as they will againſt God or man, yet to the grave they muſt. This may be a cooler to wicked men when they are in their greateſt heats, and a block in their way, when they are moſt forward to purſue the way of their own hearts, that is, their luſts. Do or ſay what they can, they muſt return to the duſt, their ſtiff-necks muſt ſtoop, and look into the grave, into the dark and ſilent grave. Solomon hath an excellent expreſſion of this (Eccl. 8.8.) There is no man hath power over the ſpirit to retain the ſpirit; that is, as the word Spirit is often uſed (Gen. 6. 19. Job 7. 7. Iſa. 42. 5.) no man hath power over his breath or life to retain it. The ſtrength, authority, wiſdom, and induſtry of man, cannot hold his life when once death, by commiſſion from God, calls for it: And (as it follows in the ſame verſe) there is no diſcharge in that war. The Original word tranſlated diſcharge, ſignifies, miſſion or ſending forth. When death aſſaults and makes war upon us, 'tis in vain either to ſend out forces to make reſiſtance againſt it; or to ſend out Ambaſſadours to make peace with it. Some have made a covenant with death (Iſa. 28. 15.) but none could ever make peace with it; as no force, ſo no treaty nor entreaty can ſtay it, when 'tis reſolved to come. And as there is no miſſion, ſo (according to our reading) there is no diſcharge or diſmiſſion in that war. No man can have leave to depart the field and go home, when he is ſummon'd to depart the world, and go to his long home. And therefore the ſame Solomon while he ſeems to give the young man liberty, bidding him take his full ſwing, (Eccl. 11. 4.) Rejoyce O young man in thy youth, let thy heart chear thee in the dayes of thy youth, and walk in the wayes of thy heart, and in the ſight of thy eyes, yet gives him a check at parting, But know thou that for all theſe things God will bring thee unto judgment. In this Text death is the ſtop, and in that judgment. Though a man wallow in pleaſure, and live in ſin all his dayes, yet God will bring him firſt to death, and after that to judgment; Yet he ſhall be brought to the grave, &c.

Occupatio objectionis. Jun.

Secondly, Theſe words are conceived as the prevention of an objection againſt the whole matter before ſpoken. For Job having aſſerted the outward proſperity of wicked men, in oppoſition to his friends; ſome might ſay, what do you ſpeak ſo much of, and cry up their proſperity, they die, they are brought to the grave, they rot and conſume there as well as other men. To this Job is ſuppoſed anſwering three things.

Firſt, That he had done enough, as to the eſtabliſhment of his own tenet, when he proved that many wicked men live a peaceable and flouriſhing life; he never undertook to prove that they were exempted from death, or priviledged from the grave.

Secondly, Let it be, that they die, that's no argument againſt their proſperity; for their very death is a kind of proſperity; verſe the thirty third, The clods of the valley ſhall be ſweet to him.

Thirdly, That there is no reaſon why this ſhould be objected to ſtain the preſent proſperity of the wicked man; for as much as this is the lot of every man; in the latter part of the thirty third verſe; Every man ſhall draw after him, as there are innumerable before him.

Perſtat adhuc Job in ſuo illo propoſito confirmando ſc. ſæpe impios vivere fælices nec non ſupremum etiã funeris honorem conferri illis ampliſſimè. Pined.

Thirdly, For the underſtanding of theſe words, Yet he ſhall be brought to the grave, I conceive that Job here continues his own diſcourſe, and confirms that opinion which he had before laid down, concerning the proſperity of wicked men, rather then anſwers objections againſt it. As if he had ſaid, Such live happily, yea and they die happily too, or they have a kind of happineſs in their death, as much happineſs as the natural man is capable of in death. So that, whereas ye my friends have affirmed, that if God do at any time ſpare a wicked man while he lives, or ſuffers him to live comfortably, yet God will ſurely brand him with ſome remarkable judgment at his death. I affirm, That many wicked men live in plenty, die in peace, and are brought to their graves with honour.

Yet, or as ſome render, yea, he ſhall be brought to the grave; As if he had ſaid, beſides all that I have ſpoken of the outward felicity of the wicked man, I add this further, He ſhall be brought to the grave. But what is there of ſingularity or priviledge in this? a man that lives in miſery and dies a beggar is yet uſually brought to a grave when he is dead: And he that hath been a meer attendant or a ſlave all his dayes, ſhall yet have ſome to attend his body to the burial. I anſwer, The Hebrew word ſignifies not only the common action of bringing to the grave; in which ſenſe 'tis uſed (Job 10. 9.) Remember I beſeech thee, that thou haſt made me as the clay, and wilt thou bring me into duſt again? That is, ſhall I die preſently and return to the duſt out of which man was moulded at the firſt. But beſides this ordinary ſenſe of the word, there is a higher, which denotes a ſtudied preparation, or a kind of pompous celebrity in bringing man to his grave. And the ſtate and pomp of men while they live, is uſually ſuited with a funeral pomp when they die. In ſtrictneſs the word implies a bringing to the grave with ſound of Trumpets, which inſtruments render a doleful tone as well as a pleaſant, and can make ſorrowful as well as joyful muſick. Trumpets were ſo much uſed in the year of Jubilie, that the Jubilie is ſo called from a Trumpet. Death is to ſome in every reſpect a day of Jubilie, they attain freedom from all evils; and it is a day of Jubilie to all in ſome reſpects, every man receives freedom by death from many evils.

יבל Denotat pompã quãdam & apparatum deducendi cũ cantu & muſicis inſtrumentis, hinc Jobel Buccina cujus in Jobeleo uſus erat.

Hinc tuba candelæ tãdemq; beatulus alto cõpoſitus lecto craſſiſq; lutatus amomis. In portã rigidos calces extendit. Perſ.

Thus the wicked man is brought to the grave; that is, he hath an honourable and a ſolemn burial; His dead carkaſs is not thrown into a ditch, he hath not (as Jehoiakim was threatned, Jer. 22. 19.) the burial of an Aſs, to be drawn and caſt forth beyond the gates of the City, (as the burial of an Aſs is there deſcribed by the Prophet) but he hath even a whole City to accompany and carry forth his corps to the place of burial. He hath mourners at his funeral, and he hath his funeral muſick, to heighten the affection of ſorrow. Such uſages are reported by Heathen Poets at the more pompous interments of their dead. And we find the footſteps of that cuſtom in the Goſpel, (Matth. 9. 23.) Chriſt being ſent for to cure the daughter of the Ruler of the Synagogue, when he came into the houſe, He ſaw the Minſtrils and the people making a noiſe. They knowing that ſhe was dead, and ſuppoſing her paſt recovery, were addreſſing themſelves for her burial; or as Job's Text ſpeaks, to bring her to the grave.

Further, The firſt particle of the verſe is that common conjunction copulative and, we render it (as elſewhere often) yet, which carrieth in it a ſound of admiration. Thus Amos 4. 6. I alſo have given you cleanneſs of teeth in all your Cities, and want of bread in all your places, yet have ye not returned unto me, ſaith the Lord; As if he had ſaid, What a wonderful thing is it that ye being thus afflicted ſhould not return. Thus here, Though it may ſeem ſtrange to you, Yet he ſhall be brought to the grave; though the man were ſo wicked that no man would adventure to tell him of his wickedneſs, yet he ſhall be brought to the grave; and when he ſaith, He ſhall be brought to the grave, it may have a twofold oppoſition.

Firſt, To another kind of death, even a violent death. As if he had ſaid, This man living ſo lewdly, deſerved indeed to be brought either to the block, and have his head cut off, or to the Gibbet, and be hanged up before all the people; yet though he was ſo vile as to deſerve a violent death from the ſtroke of juſtice, he ſhall die a natural death, and be brought to the grave with honour. It was anciently ſaid, That few Tyrants died a dry death, they were uſually drencht in their own blood when they died, either by ſome ſudden aſſaſſination, or by ſome judiciary ſentence. Yet ſome Tyrants who have thruſt others violently and unjuſtly out of the world, go out themſelves naturally, and are brought to the grave pompouſly. For Secondly, To be brought to the grave, according to the true ſence of the word, and the interpretation given, ſtands in oppoſition to an obſcure and vulgar way of burial. He lived in ſtate, and he ſhall be brought in ſtate to the grave.

> Hence Obſerve, Men inglorious by their wicked lives, may have glorious funerals when they die.

And it hath been no ſmall part of ſome ſuch mens care to leave order for a funeral. They who never had a truly ſerious thought how to diſpoſe of their ſouls when they were to die, yet have taken care very ſeriouſly how to have their bodies diſpoſed of, and have ſet down in what place, in what tomb, and at what rate they would be buried. Some order a Sermon at their burials, who never regarded Sermons in their lives, though (like enough) they heard many. Their friends ſhall eat the ſweet, and drink wine in bowls at the bringing of their bodies to the grave, while their ſeparated ſouls, ſeparated for ever from God, as well as from their bodies for a ſeaſon, are feeding upon gall and wormwood, and drinking the wine of Gods fierce indignation, poured out without mixture. Such pomp (if that be poſſible) makes mirth in hell, and ſets the Devil a laughing. Such funerals have a number of viſible mourners, and they have innumerable inviſible rejoycers: The God of this world, and the powers of darkneſs, deride thoſe ſolemnities, which give ſo much honour to a body, whoſe ſoul is not only departed, but condemned to eternal anguiſh and infamy. A Heathen could ſay, The loſs of a funeral, or of a Sepulcher, is an eaſie loſs; but Chriſtians know, that the loſs of a ſoul, the loſs of heaven, the loſs of glory, are not only ſad but unvaluable; and not only unvaluable, but irreparable loſſes. A Believer careth not much, where his body finds a grave, ſo his ſoul find Chriſt. What Glory ſoever the bodies of wicked men have when they are buried, only the bodies of the Saints ſhall have glory, when they are raiſed again. He ſhall be brought to the grave,

Facilis jactura ſepulchri.

And ſhall remain in the tomb.] Theſe words are a continuation of what was ſaid laſt. There is ſome variety in the reading of them. The Hebrew is, He ſhall watch in the Heap; ſo we put in the margin of our Bibles; He ſhall be brought to the grave, and watch in the heap. The Original word ſignifies both to watch, and to remain; becauſe a watchman keepeth his place, and ſtayeth by it; he is not as we ſay, up and down, here and there, but fixed where he is appointed. And the word ſignifies not only a bare watching, (as when a man keeps his eyes open, and doth not ſleep) a watching meerly oppoſed to ſleeping; but it notes watching with an intentive ſpirit as well as with an open eye. The word is uſed fully to that ſence, (*Prov.*8.34.) Bleſſed is the man that heareth me (ſaith wiſdom) watching daily at my gates. What do we, when we watch at wiſdoms gates, if we do as we ought? is it only the placing of our bodies there, and the keeping of our eyes open there? 'Tis much more then both theſe. Watching at wiſdom's gate is the work of our ſpirits, 'tis the ſetting of the heart to receive what wiſdom utters; This is watching indeed. But you will ſay, This ſence ſeems very incongruous to and remote from a dead mans caſe; how can he watch at all whoſe eyes are cloſed in darkneſs? I conceive, The dead mans watching in the heap or tomb (which tranſlation divers learned Interpreters adhere to) may have a double reference; either, firſt, to the cuſtome of preſerving the bodies of great men from putrefaction. To which end their bodies were ſo ſpiced and imbalmed, that they were kept, as it were, alive, and being ſet in vaults, they looked as if they were keeping continual watch.

Super acervo vigilabit. Mont. i.e. acſi vigil vivuſq; exiſteret.

שקד Significat non ſolum vigilare ſed intentũ eſſe & aſſiduum in opere aliquo. Merc.

Forte alludit ad conditūram medicatam cadaveris, cujus beneficio ſervatur à putrefactione per multa ſæcula atq; vigilare, duraſſe & vivere videtur. Pined.

Secondly, I may refer, if not to the embalmed bodies of the dead, yet to their repreſentations or ſtatues, which (as we ſee) in our dayes are placed upon their tombs or ſet upright in preſſes. Theſe Statues were made as neer as art could reach to the life, and ſo might be ſaid to watch there as if they lived; yea, upon the ſame account they might be ſaid not only to watch, but to pray there; for ſuch Statues are uſually (among us) ſet up in praying poſtures, kneeling, and lifting up both hands and eyes (ſuch as they are) to heaven; you ſhall ſee the figure of a man, who hath (poſſibly) been a neglecter of prayer all his dayes, yet fixed to his tomb not only in a watching, but in a praying poſture; Many being dead ſeem to pray alwayes, who only ſeemed to pray when they were alive; They made dead prayers, or they prayed without watching while they lived, and being dead, they would be looked upon both watching and praying. To either of theſe cuſtoms the Text may allude fairly; and ſo carry on Job's diſcourſe concerning the wicked mans proſperity in death.

Again, Some read (not, he ſhall watch, but) he ſhall be watched, or others ſhall watch him in the heap. They ſhall watch there, either as conſtant mourners for his death, or they ſhall watch there as protector of his duſt; leſt any offer violence to his grave, or diſturb his bones. Both theſe may ſuite with the ſcope of the Text as ſignifications of honour and reſpect to the deceaſed. He ſhall be watched in the Tomb or heap.] That Original word is uſed but four times in the whole Scripture, and in this place only it is tranſlated a tomb; properly it ſignifies a heap of corn. (Job 5.26.) He ſhall be brought like a ſhock of corn in full age. A ſhock of corn, is a heap of corn, that is, many ſheaves laid or built up together by the art of the huſbandman. And hence ſome interpret this Text as if the wicked man ſhould be buried abroad in the fields among the heaps of corn; but there is no neceſſity to carry it ſo ſtrictly. A tomb or grave, any where made, is an heap or aggregation of earth, as a ſhock of corn is an heap or aggregation of ſheaves. And the tomb is ſo called in a double conſideration.

גדיש Significat propriè acervum frugum qui in area in modum pyramidis in ſublime attollitur. Merc.

Firſt, Becauſe the dead bodies of men are brought and heaped together in the tomb. That periphraſis of death ſo often uſed in the Scriptures of the Old Teſtament, He or they were gathered to their fathers, is by ſome expounded in compliance with the point in hand, as noting the gathering of the bodies of the dead into one common heap. And though I rather conceive it intending the gathering of their ſpirits unto the ſpirits of juſt men made perfect; yet the Text ſpeaks in the caſe of Joſiah (2 Chron. 34.28.) concerning his being gathered to the grave, as well as to his Fathers; which neceſſarily infers the gathering of his body to theirs, and of his duſt to theirs, all making but one heap of duſt. The grave or tomb are as a floor wherein corn is heaped up until the great threſhing and winnowing day cometh, when the bodies of men ſhall be raiſed and purged from the chaff of their natural condition; for then, this corruptible muſt put on incorruption, and this mortal muſt put on immortality (1 Cor. 15. 54.)

Secondly, As the tomb is called a heap, becauſe the bodies of men are heaped there together; ſo becauſe a tomb or a grave, though but one body be laid there, ſwells up like a heap. The body being put into the earth, riſeth by ſo much as the ſpace is which the body filleth. And hence Criticks tell us, that the Latine word for any tomb or grave, notes the ſwelling of the earth. But eſpecially the ſtately tombs of Princes and Great men, ſwell high, and are raiſed upon Arches and Pillars. Nor have men left in any thing plainer marks of the ſwelling of their minds with pride and vain-glory, then in appointing ſuch towring and ſwelling Monuments of their frailty. Yea ſome ſeem to have had an ambition to immortalize the memory of themſelves and of their greatneſs by theſe memorials of their mortality. They for whom ſuch vaſt and ſtupendious heaps have been raiſed, may well be ſaid in anſwer to this tranſlation of Job's Text, To watch in the heap.

Significantèr latinè tumulũ vertas à tumendo.

Laſtly, We (as others alſo) render plainly, He ſhall remain in the tomb; His dead body being brought to the grave, remains in the tomb, and moves no more, till God calleth it forth, and by his Almighty power reſtoreth it to life again. The Grave is a priſon, and death is a ſure keeper. Death will hold its own, till the Lord of life gives command to let go. Living men are of ſo little permanency, that they can ſcarce be ſaid to remain any where. Only the dead know nothing of removing.

In tumulo manebit fugitèr. Pagn.

Again, When Job ſaith, He ſhall remain in the tomb, he ſpeaks this (in purſuance of what he had ſaid before) as a priviledge which a wicked man may have; he ſhall not only be brought to the grave with honour, but ſhall remain there in ſafety.

Hence Note, It is a favour (yet ſuch a favour as wicked men are often partakers of) when our bones reſt and remain quietly in the grave.

Many have been brought to their graves with much ſolemnity, who have not remained there. The Aſſyrian is threatned (*Iſa.*14.18,19.) that he ſhall not have the honour of burial in the Graves of his Predeceſſors, or in the Grave which he had appointed for himſelf, All the Kings of the Nations, even all of them lie in Glory, every one in his own houſe; that is, in his own grave, (the grave is called the houſe of all living) or in the grave which each one prepared for himſelf near his own houſe. Thus all the Kings of the Nations lie in their ſtately tombs, but thou art caſt out of thy grave like an abominable branch, and as the raiment of thoſe that are ſlain thruſt thorough with the ſword, that go down to the ſtones of the pit, as a carkaſs trodden under feet, thou ſhalt not be joyned with them in burial; that is, thou ſhalt not have the honour of ſuch a burial as they. Thou art caſt out, (that is, kept out) of thy grave. Now if it be a ſore judgment, upon a wicked man eſpecially, all whoſe portion conſiſts in outward reſpects and priviledges, not to be admitted to a grave, but as the Pſalmiſt bewails the ſad affliction of the Saints and ſervants of God, (Pſal. 79. 2.) to have their dead bodies given to be meat to the fowls of the heaven, and their fleſh to the beaſts of the earth; Then how great an evil is it to have the dead body torn and pulled out of the grave, and thoſe bones diſquieted which were at reſt. Yet the Lord threatens Jeruſalem with an enemy, who provoked either with covetouſneſs, or with malice, ſhall rifle their very graves. The wrath of God doth not only purſue ſinners while they live, but in death, it purſueth them to the grave, and in the grave. (Jer. 8. 1.) At that time, ſaith the Lord, they (that is, the cruel enemy) ſhall bring out the bones of the Kings of Judah, and the bones of the Princes (in whoſe Sepulchers, they might hope to find rich ornaments, Jewels, and treaſure.) And the bones of the Prieſts, and the bones of the Prophets (that is, of the corrupt Prieſts and Prophets eſpecially, who had flattered the Princes, and perverted the people, this doom is paſſed upon them alſo who had been either perverted by the falſe Prophets, or had oppoſed the faithful Prophets) and the bones of the inhabitants of Jeruſalem out of their graves, and they ſhall ſpread them before the Sun, the Moon, and all the hoaſt of heaven, whom they have loved, and whom they have ſerved, and after whom they have walked, and whom they have ſought, and whom they have worſhipped. How exact is the Juſtice of God, and how terrible? Their bones muſt be ſpread before thoſe creatures of Gods making, whom they (by ſpreading their hands before them, and worſhipping them) had made their Gods: and as they were threatned to have their bones unburied, ſo that they ſhould not be reburied; for thus it follows, They ſhall not be gathered, nor buried, they ſhall be as dung upon the face of the earth; that is, they ſhould lie above-ground, as Monuments of their wickedneſs and of divine vengeance, till they be utterly conſumed, and mouldred into duſt. That God will raiſe our bodies out of the grave is a matter of faith, and of great conſolation to the Godly; but to have the body pulled out of the grave by men, is matter of fear and terrour to the wicked. Yet many of the wicked eſcape this Judgment, they are fairly brought to their graves, and abide unmoleſted there. Job is here expounded, as deſcribing this piece of proſperity incident to a wicked man, while he ſaith, He ſhall remain in the Tomb, which interpretation ſeems to have the free conſent of the next verſe, as continuing a deſcription of the ſame thing.

Verſ. 33. The clods of the Valley ſhall be ſweet unto him.

רגבים Glubæ lapides, glarea.

The word which we render clods, undergoes variety of tranſlations; ſome ſay, the ſtones of the brook or valley; ſome, the gravel; others, the duſt or ſand of the vallies. But as here, ſo again in the thirty eighth Chapter of this book, and the thirty eighth verſe, we tranſlate it clods. When the duſt groweth into hardneſs, and the clods cleave faſt together.

The clods of the valley are ſweet unto him.] As this word, ſo likewiſe the whole clauſe is diverſly rendred. The Vulgar alluding to an old Poetical fable, gives it thus; He ſhall be ſweet to the ſand of Cocytus, which was phancied by Heathens for one of the rivers of hell, or an infernal lake, ſo called from the lamentations there made; as if Job here intended a deſcription of the wicked mans puniſhment in hell. A late learned Expoſitor upon this Book juſtly perſtringeth that tranſlation as affecting the accommodation of the holy Scripture to ſuch a fiction, in deſcribing the region of death, or the ſtate of wicked men when they are dead. Yet 'tis (in it ſelf) a truth, that the wicked are a ſweet morſel to helliſh tormenters; And they who in their life time have ſwallowed down ſo many ſins, not only gnats but camels, being dead, are in a moment ſwallowed up in hell. We may ſay of ſuch men (as the Prophet doth of the Aſſyrian Prince, (Iſa. 14. 9.) Hell from beneath is moved for them to meet them at their coming. The more wicked a man is, the more is hell delighted to receive him; as the more holy a man is, the more is heaven delighted to embrace him. When he who was a hell upon earth, drops to hell, he is pleaſant fewel to thoſe devouring flames.

Dulcis fuit glaruus Cocyti. Vul. Tanti ſc. erat lectionē poetarum oſtentare ut eorum mendacio, in verſione Authentica regio mortis deſcriberetur. Coc.

Secondly, This verſe is better expounded as a continued diſcourſe of the happineſs of the wicked man in regard of his natural ſtate in death. He ſhall not only continue in the tomb, but have (as it were) a contentful being there. Earth is (as to matter) the common parent of us all; from the earth we came, and thither we return; and when the wicked man returns, the earth will not hurt him. The grave will not entertain him with a frown, but he ſhall be as wellcome and as kindly uſed there by the clods of the valley as any other man. The bodily being of the righteous and of the wicked in the bowels of the earth knows no difference. And as no man knoweth love or hatred by all that is before him (as to his body) on earth, ſo not as to the ſtate of the body while it remaineth under the earth. The ſuperſtitious Heathen (which may ſomewhat anſwer the phraſe of this Scripture, though far from the ſcope of it) were wont to pray for a dying friend in this form; Let the earth be favourable and eaſie to thee, let it not preſs thee hard. They had a conceit that if the earth laid too great a load upon the dead, they could not get up to the higher regions, therefore they prayed, that the clods of the valley, or the earth where their friends were buried, might be ſweet and favourable to them. Tertullian mentions this Heatheniſh cuſtome, and Pliny a Philoſopher of their own laughs at them for it; Becauſe they prayed for the favour and good will of that to them, which could not be angry with them, nor do them any hurt. Such were the vain imaginations and fears of the dark-minded Heathens, dreading the unkindneſs or cruelty of the earth to dead bodies, but little dreading the miſery of their blinded ſouls. How vain is it to fear, that either a ſenſleſs body ſhould be pained, or that things without ſenſe ſhould be offended and put it to pain. The clods of the valley are alike ſweet to all.

Mollitèr ſuavitèr tractatur à terra, quam fœlicitatem priſci precabuntur ſuis defunctis his verbis, Sit tibi terra levis. Terrã gravẽ imprecaris, &c. Tertul. de Teſtim. Anima. c. 4. Tanquam neſciamus hanc eſſe ſolam, quæ nunquam iraſcatur homini. Plin. Nat. Hiſt. lib. 11. cap. 63. de terra.

Thirdly, Some give the ſenſe of theſe words, as deſcribing the ſad concluſion of the wicked man, who though he ſpend moſt of his dayes in pleaſure, yet a little before his death, he ſhall meet with ſuch ſorrows, that the clods of the valley will be ſweet unto him; that is, he will even deſire death, as the only means (which he knows of) to give him a releaſe from them. 'Tis truth, that though death be bitter to a carnal man who is at eaſe in his poſſeſſion, yet death is eaſie and ſweet to any man that is in bitterneſs; and 'tis poſſible for a man to taſt ſo much bitterneſs while he treads upon the clods of the earth, that the clods under the earth may be reckoned ſweet to him.

Oſſa quieta precor, tuta requiſcete in urna. Et ſit humus cineri non oneroſa tuo. Ovid. 3. Amor. Eleg. 8.

Laſtly, This is plain, that Job ſpeaks here in figures, and wrappeth up a proſopopeia and an hyperbole together, while he aſcribes ſenſe and the affections of a living man to a dead body. The ſumme of all may be this, The clods ſhall be ſweet to him; that is, he ſhall have the utmoſt conveniency and happineſs, that any man (as to his bodily capacity) can have in death. He ſhall feel no more trouble nor pain there, he ſhall be free from care and fear, when once he is gotten thither. The clods of the valley ſhall be ſweet to him.

Hyperbolæ per proſopopeiam ſenſum & humanas actiones mortuis tribuentes. Jun. Sepulchro ſuavitèr habet nec quæ hic aguntur curat. Merc.

Hence Note, The bodies of wicked men are as free from pain or evil in the grave, as the bodies of the Saints.

Death is the concluſion of and gives ſtop to all the worldly ſufferings of all men. (Revel. 14. 14.) Bleſſed are the dead that die in the Lord, for from henceforth they reſt from their labours. And whether men die in the Lord, or out of the Lord, they reſt from their outward labours. This bodily reſt, or reſt from bodily labour and trouble is a favour to Saints, and 'tis much more then any wicked man hath right to, that his body ſhould reſt from trouble and labour all that time which runs out between death and judgment. We may call that reſt, the negative happineſs of wicked men. And as it is, in ſome ſence, a favour that they live ſo many years on earth, their ſouls being kept all that while out of hell; ſo that they lie and continue for ſo long a time after death in the earth, or (as Job ſpeakes) among the clods of the vallies, their bodies being kept all that while out of hell; For as the perfection of the glory and bleſſedneſs of Saints will be after the re-union and marriage of ſoul and body; ſo the perfection of the miſery and torment of the wicked will be at the like re-union. Therefore it may well be ſaid of a wicked man, not only in reference to the pains of this life, which he is quite freed from, but alſo in reference to the pains of the next life, from which for a while the grave detains him, that, The clods of the valley are ſweet to him.

And every man ſhall draw after him.

Mr. Broughton reads, He draweth all earthly after him; as if the dead man were active in pulling the living after him into the grave; we render it as if living men were active in haſtning after the dead unto their graves; Every man ſhall draw after him. Some taking the former tranſlation, underſtand it of a moral drawing; his wickedneſs attracts many to the imitation of him. Multitudes follow his ill example. But though it be true that ill examples (as ſome diſeaſes) are very catching, or, like a Load-ſtone, very drawing and leading, yet I conceive that is not the intendment here. The Latine Tranſlator expreſſeth it ſo, but expounds it, in purſuance of the pomp of his burial, He ſhall draw all men after him; That is, when he dieth his funeral will draw the whole City and Country together to attend, or gaze upon it: ſome will come out of reſpect to honour him, and many in curioſity to pleaſe themſelves in beholding the magnificence and ſtatelineſs of his interment. But I paſs this alſo, as much below the Text.

Poſt ſe omnē hominē trahit. Vulg.

And conclude, that theſe words, All men ſhall draw after him; do only remove an objection, which ſome man might make againſt Job's poſition, about the proſperity of wicked men. What tell ye me (might ſuch a man ſay) of a pompous funeral, which the wicked man ſhall have when he dieth, and that the clods of the valley ſhall be ſweet to him; When the man is dead, what's all this to him? Job anſwers, What though the wicked man die? there is nothing of weight in that objection againſt the proſperity of the wicked; For death is common to all, both good and bad. Death is not peculiar to wicked men, for righteous men die too; All men ſhall draw after him, ſo that there is no difference in this between the godly and the ungodly, the holy, and prophane; for all die, or as the Scripture of the New Teſtament affirms, It is appointed unto all men once to die.

Si dicas illi eſſe pœnam quod moriatur; reſpondeo omnibus hoc accidere, Vatab.

That all men ſhall die, is a common theme; I ſhall only touch a little upon this way of phraſing or expreſſing it. All men ſhall draw after him. Every man is daily drawing to the grave; dying is (as it were) a continued act. What Paul ſpake in a ſenſe proper to his own caſe, we may take in a common ſence, I die daily; and 'tis appliable to all men, they die daily; while one man dieth, all men draw after him. When a man is very ſick and dying, or ſick to death, when he ſtands (as it were) upon the borders of death, or (though I know that Scripture-ſpeech hath another meaning then here I uſe it for) between the living and the dead, as if it were hard to determine to which of them he doth belong, when his breath ſits upon his lips ready to take its flight and be gone, then we ſay, the man is drawing on; but we may ſay it alſo of thoſe who are not only alive, but lively; not only ſtrong, but in their full ſtrength (as Job ſpake before) their breaſts full of milk, and their bones moiſtned with marrow, we may ſay it of thoſe that are walking, riding, running, travelling in the hotteſt purſuit of their buſineſſes, or pleaſures, they are drawing on. Every living man is drawing on to death, and all men alive ſhall draw after him that is already dead. Nor ſhould it ſeem ſtrange, that all men who are, ſhould be drawing after in that way, which all men that ever were (the excepted perſons are not conſiderable for number) have gone before, which Job gives us more fully in the next words.

As there are innumerable before him.

The Text word for word is thus rendred; Before his face no number; that is, as all men are following, or drawing after him that dieth, ſo thoſe are innumerable that are already dead. This manner of ſpeaking (no number) in the Hebrew, is ſometimes the denial of any number, ſometimes of all number or numerability. To ſay of ſuch a thing, There is no number of it, is either to ſay there is no ſuch thing, or but one of it, which indeed makes no number, or at moſt but very few, which in common account are no number. Some applying theſe words to the burial of the poor, give the meaning thus; rich men draw many after them, or have great numbers attending them to their graves, but the poor man hath no number, or but a very ſmall number of followers to his grave. But I conceive, the plain ſcope of Job puts this expoſition of no number quite out of the number of thoſe expoſitions which are ſuitable to this place. And that therefore no number doth not ſignifie thoſe who are ſo few, that they ſcarce make a number; but thoſe who are ſo many that they can hardly be numbred. His buſineſs being to ſhew the innumerableneſs of thoſe, whether rich or poor, who are already dead, not the fewneſs of thoſe who follow the poor to the grave when they are dead. S. John (Rev. 3.9.) having ſpoken Arithmetically of the ſealed ones of the twelve Tribes, aſcribing to each of them twelve thouſand, (which though it ſheweth that the number of the elect Jewes is certain, yet it doth not infer, that the number there ſpecified is the certain number, but S. John having heard this number) ſhuts up with, After this I beheld, and lo a great multitude which no man could number, &c. So here (when Job ſaith) Before him no number; his meaning is, A great multitude are gone before him, which no man can number. Or as we render it clearly; There are innumerable gone before him.

Et ante ipſum nec numerus. Heb.

Ut, non numerus negaret numerū, nō numerabilitatem, intelligens hanc partem verſus, de ſepultura pauperum. Bold.

Hence take two Deductions, Firſt, That the dead are more then the living.

This hath been a truth ever ſince the firſt Ages of the world. When the world was young, or in its non-age, the living were more then the dead; but the dead of many ages muſt needs be more then the living in any one. Hence the dead are called, The more, and to go to the more, or to thoſe who are moſt in number, ſounds (among the learned) as much as to die. As among thoſe who yet enjoy a natural life, there are more ſpiritually dead, then ſpiritually living; ſo they who are naturally dead, are more then they who live the life of nature. Every one that dieth encreaſeth the number of the dead, yet there are innumerable before him.

Ut Arena numero caret, ſic defuncti, Quocirca plures vocantur: unde ad plures migrare, nam plures ſunt quam viventes, Druſ.

Secondly, 'Tis no new thing to die.

Moſt are as unwilling to die, and as unwonted to death, as if none had gone before them, as if they were to break the Ice for all mankind. Where we ſee one going before, we uſually take courage to follow after. There have innumerable gone before to the grave, yet few take courage in following after. And I confeſs, it is but a poor encouragement to die, becauſe other men like us have died before us. That which makes a man die with true courage, and ſtep with holy boldneſs into the grave, is believingly to remember that Jeſus Chriſt died and lay in the grave not only before us, but for us; that he hath conquered and worſted that King of terrours upon his own ground, the grave; 'Tis enough not only to make us chearful, but alive in death, to know ſavingly that This One is gone before us. 'Tis at moſt but a moral argument to perſwade men to be chearful in dying, becauſe men innumerable are gone before them; but Chriſt's going thither before us is a ſpiritual and prevailing argument. They who lived before Chriſt died in the fleſh, might comfort themſelves againſt the fear of death, by believing the holy Prophecy that he ſhould die for them, much more may we by believing the holy Hiſtory of his death. That he hath gone before us in dying and died for us who is alive and liveth for us, is ten thouſand times more conſolation to us when we are going out of this world, then that innumerable (ſuch as our ſelves) are gone before us, or though any one of us ſhould have the priviledge to abide in the fleſh, till all were gone before him.

Job having thus far ſifted, weighed, and replied to the anſwers of his friends, gives his judgement upon them as unfit to adminiſter any ſolid comfort to him; and therefore concludes roundly with them in the laſt verſe of this Chapter.

Verſe 34. How then comfort ye me in vain, ſeeing in your anſwers there remaineth falſhood?

Mr. Broughton renders, And what do ye comfort me with vanity? We ſay, In vain, or with vain words. A thing is done in vain three wayes.

Firſt, It is ſomewhat in vain when the end for which it is done is but imperfectly attained.

Secondly, It is much in vain when the end is not at all attained.

Thirdly, It is then done moſt in vain when the iſſue is quite contrary to the end for which it was done.

Job's Friends comforted him in vain all theſe wayes; for they did not only not attain their end perfectly, but not at all; yea, in ſtead of comforting they troubled him; ſo that as Balac ſaid to Balaam (Numb. 23. 11.) What haſt thou done unto me? I took thee to curſe mine enemies, and behold, thou haſt bleſſed them altogether. Thus Job ſeemeth to ſay to his Friends, What have ye done unto me? Ye came to comfort me, and ye have grieved me altogether, as hath been ſhewed from other paſſages of this Book, eſpecially from thoſe, where he titles his Friends not only Phyſicians of no value, but Miſerable Comforters. And he gives a further and a full account, whence it came to paſs that he got no comfort by all the diſcourſe which they had with him, in the laſt clauſe of this Verſe and cloſe of his ſpeech.

Seeing in your anſwers there remaineth falſhood.

Maſter Broughton renders thus; Great offence remaineth in your diſputation. The word rendred Anſwers, ſignifieth a debate between two or more, when Arguments being given are returned, which we commonly call anſwering.

In your anſwers there remaineth falſhood.

מעל Eſt prævaricatio, tranſgreſſio cum contemptu, repugnando illi cui quis debet ſe ſubmittere, tanquam inferior.

מעל Notat violationem officii diſſimulatam, ſub jactatione officii à מעיל tunica. Coc.

The word carries not only falſhood upon miſtake, ignorance, or miſunderſtanding, but falſhood by art or prevarication, when like a Sophiſter a man would foyl his Adverſary by fallacies. It imports alſo ſomewhat of contempt, when he that is inferiour doth not (as he ought) ſubmit to the judgment and reaſon of his ſuperiour. Thus ſome expound Job complaining, that he was not only unkindly, but fallaciouſly and unreverently dealt with by thoſe who ought not only to be faithful to him, but to give him reſpect and honour. And (which is yet worſe) that they did him (as the meaning of the word is further carried) a real unkindneſs under the cloak or colour of fair and friendly pretences. A Prevaricator dealeth falſly with his Client, while he profeſſeth to plead his cauſe, or undertakes to ſupport his perſon. The unfaithfulneſs and falſhood of man to man, walks alwayes under the cloak of profeſſed courteſie. But I would not ſuppoſe Job ſo much as ſuſpecting his Friends of any ſuch ſtudied unkindneſs towards him; eſpecially conſidering, that this word which ſome ſtrain ſo hard, is alſo uſed by the holy Ghoſt in a more gentle ſignification (Levit. 5. 15.) where it is applyed to a ſin of ignorance: And that notion of ſinning under a cloak may hold in ſins of ignorance, as well as in thoſe which are committed againſt knowledge; only with this difference, malice and hypocriſie uſe a cloak to hide the evil from others; Ignorance is a cloak which hides the evil from our ſelves. Thus in the preſent caſe, the falſhood which Job chargeth the anſwers of his Friends with, proceeded not, ſurely, from any cunning purpoſe in them to vex and trouble him, but from their unskilfulneſs in comforting him. How then comfort ye me in vain, ſeeing in your anſwers there remaineth falſhood? He doth not ſay, that all their anſwers were falſe, or that they had knowingly falſifyed with him in their anſwers. All he chargeth them with, is, that there was falſhood in their anſwers: That is, that their anſwers contained falſe or unſound aſſertions. Such as theſe, Firſt, That godly men are rarely afflicted in this life.

Secondly, That the godly ſhall in this life be ſpeedily delivered when ever they are afflicted.

Thirdly, That wicked men ſeldom or never proſper in this life.

Fourthly, That if they do, yet their proſperity ſhall ſoon be blaſted.

Thus while his Friends went about by theſe affirmations to vindicate the Juſtice and Holineſs of God from any the leaſt complyance with wicked men, they unawares ſet limits to his Soveraignty, and his Power. As if God were not at liberty to diſpoſe of theſe outward things, when and to whom himſelf pleaſed. Theſe Poſitions (ſaith Job) I have proved falſe; and ye have not yet taken off my Arguments by any of your anſwers; therefore in your Anſwers there ſtill remaineth falſhood, and your labour in comforting me, hath been but labour in vain.

Hence Obſerve, Firſt, Falſe and unſound principles, can never produce ſound and true comforts.

Solid comfort cannot riſe from any ground, nor reſt upon any bottom but truth. As truth only works true grace in the heart, and ſanctifieth (John 17. 17.) Sanctifie them through thy truth (was the prayer of Chriſt) thy word is truth; ſo truth only worketh true joy in the heart and comforteth: If you would comfort a poor dejected ſoul, you muſt comfort him with the truth, the word is truth. Error can neither kill our ſins, nor remove our ſorrows. And there is the ſame reaſon of both. For it is the office of the holy Spirit both to ſanctifie and to comfort; now, the holy Spirit is the Spirit of truth, and therefore he will not work by a falſhood, or cloath an error with his Divine power, either for ſanctification or conſolation. The Prophet Hoſea (Chap. 7. 3.) reproves thoſe who made the King glad with their wickedneſs, and the Princes with their lyes. 'Tis poſſible, that a doctrinal lye (or a falſe doctrine) as well as an hiſtorical lye, may make a man glad for a while; but it is impoſſible that it ſhould adminiſter laſting comfort, or comfort at laſt to any man. If they who are in darkneſs will as the Prophet ſpeaketh (Iſa. 50. 11.) Kindle ſuch falſe fires, and compaſs themſelves about with ſuch ſparks; let them (as the Prophet in holy ſcorn bids them) walk in the light of their fire, and in the ſparks that they have kindled, yet, This they ſhall have of mine hand (ſaith he) they ſhall lye down in ſorrow. When ſuch lye down upon their beds to reſt, they ſhall find little; and when they lye down in the grave (except a while for their bodies) they ſhall find leſs.

Secondly, Good men may be miſtaken, and err in judgment.

As the wills and affections of the Saints on earth, have ſome corruption remaining in them, ſo alſo have their underſtandings. And therefore as their practice, ſo their opinion, may be ſoyled and faulty. 'Tis no wonder, if falſhood be found in their anſwers, who are themſelves ſo full of failings.

Thirdly, Note, Good men may continue long under ſome miſtakes and errors of judgment.

Job found his Friends in theſe errors at their firſt diſpute, and he found them ſo in the ſecond; they did not mend their anſwers, though they multiplied them; In your anſwers there remaineth falſhood. As 'tis hard to part with an evil in practice, ſo with an error in opinion. That man is come to a great pitch of humility that confeſſeth he is out. Moſt will anſwer, and anſwer, come thick and threefold, with replications and triplications, and yet ſtill in their anſwers there remaineth falſhood. When any man maintains an error, the more he anſwers, the more he errs.

Thus by the good hand of God with me, I have finiſhed the Expoſition of this Chapter, and of the whole ſecond diſpute, between Job and his three Friends. There yet remains a third diſpute, but that's between Job and two. The third gives out, and quits the next field. What was done there by thoſe who ſtill held out, may, if God, in whoſe hand our breath is and all our wayes, continue help and life, be reported at another time.

CHAP. XXII. Verſ. 1, 2, 3, 4.

Then Eliphaz the Temanite anſwered and ſaid,

Can a man be profitable unto God, as he that is wiſe is profitable unto himſelf?

Is it any pleaſure to the Almighty that thou art righteous? Or is it gain to him that thou makeſt thy wayes perfect?

Will he reprove thee for fear of thee? Or will he enter with thee into judgment?

Eliphaz now enters his third and laſt conteſt with Job; in which ſome tell us, that he behaveth himſelf like a man who ſeeks Victory rather then Truth; who though he hath been ſufficiently anſwered, yet will not ſeem to be overcome; yea, that he takes up the ſame weapons to maintain this third, with which he maintain'd his two former Encounters: The firſt in the fourth and fifth Chapters, and the ſecond in the fifteenth, as if he were reſolved to contradict though he could not confute the reaſons wherewith Job had made his defence.

But as ſuch a carriage as this in Diſputation is altogether vain in it ſelf, ſo it is moſt uncomely in a wiſe and godly man; who ought not to refuſe truth and reaſon, though ſpoken by an Adverſary, but rather modeſtly to ſit down and confeſs his own error and miſtaking: And therefore though Eliphaz in this anſwer or triplication doth but roll the ſame ſtone, and move upon the ſame hinge in general; ſtill adjudging Job to ſuffer for his ſin, and to be puniſht as an evil doer; yet he puts all into a new method, and varies the ſcene or the manner of his argumentation, which may be reduced to this form: As if Eliphaz had ſaid, O Job! if thou ſuffereſt all theſe evils for ſome cauſe (as certainly thou doſt, for theſe things could not come by chance, but by the wiſe diſpoſure and providence of God) then that cauſe or reaſon for which thou ſuffereſt, muſt either be found in God or in thy ſelf: If thou ſayeſt the reaſon is in God, and that he doth it by his prerogative, thou doſt raſhly intrude thy ſelf into his ſecrets, and art over-bold or curious in ſearching into his hidden counſels; and when thou haſt made out thy conjectures, we may as eaſily deny as thou doſt affirm; but if thou haſt recourſe to, and reflecteſt upon thy own ſelf for the cauſe of thy ſorrows and ſufferings, ſurely thou canſt find out or pitch upon nothing elſe but thy ſinfulneſs and abounding tranſgreſſions, which while thou refuſeſt to acknowledge, thou doſt but harden thy heart againſt God, and groweſt impatient under the rebukes of his afflicting hand. Therefore I admoniſh thee to repent, &c. This ſeems to be the ſum of that whole diſcourſe which Eliphaz gives in this Chapter, as will further appear in the explication of the parts.

Again, we may contract his ſcope and give it in this brief; Job having conſtantly affirmed againſt his Friends, that God equally afflicts the righteous and the wicked; and having ſaid (which might have gained reſpect to what he was about to ſay) that he pleaded for God (Chap. 21.4. As for me, is my complaint to man, or for man? No, it is to God, or in Gods behalf.) Hereupon Eliphaz taxes him with this preſumption, as if he would needs undertake to be a Patron for God, and ſo to bring him in ſome advantage, or to ſtand him in ſtead, for the maintaining of his cauſe; therefore he begins his ſpeech with this chiding expoſtulation, Can man be profitable unto God? Or (ſuppoſe thou wert (which I ſhall preſently diſprove) as thou haſt often boaſted, righteous, yet) is it any pleaſure to the Almighty that thou art righteous?

This ſeems to be the intent of the whole Chapter, in which we may further take notice of two diſtinct parts. The firſt is reprehenſory, Eliphaz reproves and rebukes Job ſorely, to the end of the twentieth Verſe.

The ſecond is hortatory, Eliphaz moveth Job earneſtly to repentance, in which he coucheth many promiſes, and gives aſſurance that it ſhall not be in vain, from the twentieth verſe to the end of the Chapter; Acquaint now thy ſelf with him, and be at peace, thereby good ſhall come unto thee, &c.

The firſt part, his reprehenſion, begins at the ſecond Verſe.

Verſe 2. Can a man be profitable unto God?

There are three readings of theſe words.

Firſt thus, Can a man be compared to God? Some labour much in the defence of this reading, but I ſhall not ſtay upon it. For though it be a truth that man cannot be compared to God, how wiſe or how good ſoever he is. What's the wiſdom or goodneſs of man to God? Yet the Original Text doth not freely yield it ſelf up to that tranſlation which bears this truth.

Numquid Deo comparari poteſt homo etiam cum perfectæ fuerit ſcientiæ. Vulg.

Secondly, Maſter Broughton renders thus, Can the humane wight teach the Omnipotent? That word which we render to be profitable, he, to Teach: The Chaldee Paraphraſe favours this tranſlation, and ſome render it ſo in both parts of the verſe; Can a man teach God, as he that is wiſe may teach himſelf? If a man ſhould be ſo bold to take upon him to teach God, would God regard his teachings? But I ſhall paſs by this alſo, eſpecially conſidering that Eliphaz had no reaſon to tax Job with ſuch a preſumption, as if he had taken upon him to direct God how to order his affairs; when as Job himſelf (Chap. 21. ver. 22.) had ſtrongly repreſſed and condemned ſuch a boldneſs. Shall any teach God knowledge? Job having ſo lately exalted God above mans teaching (as was ſhewed in opening that verſe) it is not probable that Eliphaz ſhould reprove him, as conceiting himſelf wiſe enough to teach God: Or that he thought Job either had done, or was about to do that which with his laſt breath almoſt, he confeſſed no man could do.

Quidam verbum יסבוג pro docere exponunt in utroque hamiſtichio. Merc.

The third is our reading, Can a man be profitable unto God? Can a man? He doth not mean an ordinary, weak, ſickly, frail man; but a man, yea, any man at his beſt: The word here uſed notes a man in his health, ſtrength, and glory; a man in the flower and perfection not only of his natural abilities, but in the richeſt furniture and array of his acquired, yea, inſpired abilities. Take this man, a man of theſe attainments, a man thus accompliſht, and Can he be profitable to God: For as when the Pſalmiſt ſaith (Pſal. 33.17.) A Horſe is a vain thing to ſave a man. By the Horſe there, we are not to underſtand a lean, poor, weak, ſlow-pac'd Horſe, or a ſtrong, ſwift Horſe unman'd; ſuch a Horſe is indeed a very vain thing to ſave a man by; ſuch a Horſe may do a man more hurt then help, when he comes into danger; but the Pſalmiſt means a Horſe of the greateſt ſtrength, courage, and ſwiftneſs: A Horſe exactly man'd, and taught all his poſtures, even ſuch a Horſe is a vain thing to ſave a man. Again, when the Scripture ſaith, Chriſt came to ſave ſinners, we muſt not underſtand it of leſſer, lower, or of the ordinary ſort of ſinners only, but even of the higheſt and the greateſt, for ſuch Jeſus Chriſt came to ſave as well as the leaſt of ſinners. So here when 'tis ſaid, Can a man be profitable to God? We muſt expound it of the higheſt of the learnedſt, of the holieſt, of the beſt of men; Can a man be profitable unto God? The word is El, The ſtrong God: Can the ſtrongeſt man be profitable unto the ſtrong, the Mighty, Omnipotent, the Almighty God? Can he be profitable? Can he bring any advantage, gain, or profit to God? Should he reaſon with unprofitable talk? (ſaith Eliphaz, Chap. 15.3.) Or with words that bring in no profit? A word of the ſame root, ſignifies a Treaſurer, who is a keeper of publick profits (Iſa. 22. 15.) Go, get thee unto this Treaſurer, even unto Shebna. Can a man be profitable? Thus Eliphaz reproves Job for inſiſting ſo often upon his own innocency, as if that were an advantage to God. As if he had ſaid, How holy or righteous ſoever any man is, the Lord receives no advantage by him. So that Eliphaz (it ſeems) apprehended Job truſting or boaſting of ſomewhat in himſelf, as if he had thought God his debtor, or that he had done ſomewhat for which God was beholding to him. And upon this ground, that God is debtor, or beholding to no man, Eliphaz undertakes Job: And though his ſuppoſition was falſe, yet his poſition was true, and gives us this profitable Obſervation,

That the beſt of men cannot oblige God, or merit any thing at his hand.

That which is our duty to do, cannot merit when we have done it. We cannot oblige either God or man by performing our own obligation. Thus Chriſt argues, Luke 17. 7. Which of you having a ſervant ploughing or feeding Cattel, will ſay unto him by and by when he is come from the field, go and ſit down to meat? And will not ſay unto him, make ready wherewith I may ſup, and gird thy ſelf, and ſerve me, till I have eaten and drunken, and afterward thou ſhalt eat and drink? Doth he thank that ſervant becauſe he did the things that were commanded him? I trow not. So likewiſe ye, when ye have done all theſe things which are commanded you, ſay, we are unprofitable ſervants, we have done that which was our duty to do. Where Chriſt proves, that becauſe the ſervant had done no more then was his duty to do, therefore he did not merit in doing it. When you have done all that is commanded you, ſay, ye are unprofitable ſervants. He that doth all thoſe things that are commanded him, is a man indeed, a man of worth, a man of men, yet (let that be granted that he reacheth to the utmoſt line of the Command) he is an unprofitable ſervant, he hath but done his duty.

There is another parable in this Goſpel of Luke that ſeems to be ſomewhat oppoſite to this (Chap. 12. v. 36, 37.) And ye your ſelves be like unto men that wait for their Lord when he will return from the wedding, that when he cometh and knocketh, they may open to him immediately. Bleſſed are thoſe ſervants, whom, when the Lord cometh, he ſhall find ſo watching; that is, at their work. Watching is not meant here of a bare waking, or not being aſleep, for a man may watch, in that ſence, and yet be as bad as a ſleeper: To be found awake, and yet idle, to be found awake yet doing nothing, is as blameable as to be found aſleep: So that to be found watching is to be found intent upon, and labouring in the work of the Lord. Bleſſed are thoſe ſervants whom their Lord when he cometh ſhall find ſo watching: What will he do? Verily I ſay unto you, that he ſhall gird himſelf, and make them to ſit down to meat, and will come forth to ſerve them. In the ſeventeenth Chapter Chriſt ſaith, if a ſervant have been hard at work in the ſervice of his Lord, even as a man that is come from Plough, or from feeding his Cattel, yet his Maſter doth not ſay to him, ſit down to meat, but firſt bids him gird himſelf and ſerve him, and afterward go to meat. But here 'tis ſaid, the Lord preſently girds himſelf, and makes his ſervants ſit down to meat, and will come and ſerve them: So that here he ſpeaks, as if the Lord were much beholden to theſe ſervants, whereas before he ſpeaks of them as unprofitable ſervants, to whom he was not at all beholding.

For the clearing of theſe two Parables, we are to diſtinguiſh them by their ſcopes. The ſcope of the Parable in the twelfth Chapter is to ſhew, that the diligent ſervant ſhall receive much from the hands of the Lord, or that the labour of the diligent ſervant ſhall not be in vain, or unprofitable to him.

But the ſcope of the Parable in the ſeventeenth Chapter, is to ſhew, that the moſt diligent ſervant cannot do any thing that is profitable unto his Lord: He may do that which may be profitable to himſelf, but he can do nothing that can be profitable to his Lord; that's the ſcope of the ſeventeenth Chapter, which falls in fully with the Text, and Obſervations that I am now upon. There is a wide difference between theſe two Parables. To ſhew what a diligent ſervant may expect is one thing, and what the moſt diligent ſervant can challenge or require is another. For indeed thoſe ſervants in the twelfth Chapter, to whom the Lord adminiſters the Supper, or to whom he miniſters at Supper, muſt ſay, that they are unprofitable ſervants to the Lord; though they are to acknowledge (to the praiſe of their Lord) that his ſervice hath not been unprofitable unto them, and they muſt ſay ſo upon theſe conſiderations.

Firſt, He is their Lord, they his ſervants, not their own (1 Cor. 6. 20.) Ye are bought with a price, ye are not your own, therefore glorifie God in your bodies, and in your ſpirits, which are Gods. God is the owner of our bodies and ſpirits, our ſelves are the Lords. Now if we our ſelves, our bodies, and our ſpirits are the Lords, then much more are our ſervices his. If the perſon be anothers, all the work done by him muſt be his too.

Secondly, The houſe wherein theſe ſervants are feaſted is the Lords. The whole fabrick of Heaven and Earth is his Houſe; He hath ſet it up to entertain and feaſt his people in.

Thirdly, All the chear and good things with which the Lord feaſteth his ſervants (all the comforts which Grace holds out in this life, or glory in the next life) are of his own proviſion; the whole furniture of the Table is of his coſt and charge, therefore they are obliged to their Lord, not their Lord to them; he is indeed profitable unto them, but they are not profitable unto him: They by their ſloath and idleneſs might deſerve to be ſent ſupperleſs and hungry to bed, but by all their pains and diligence they could not deſerve their Supper; Can a man be profitable unto God?

Secondly, Obſerve, That God is abſolutely Independent and perfect in himſelf.

If there be any impoſſibility that man ſhould be profitable unto God, then he is Self-ſufficient, and altogether Independent, in reference to man: He that cannot receive any addition is perfect in himſelf, and he that is ſelf-ſufficient needs not: to receive any addition from another, is an argument of imperfection. And ſeeing God neither receives, nor can receive any thing from another, he muſt needs be perfect in himſelf. David (Pſal. 16. 2.) ſpeaking of himſelf (as the type of Chriſt) ſaith, O my ſoul, thou haſt ſaid unto the Lord, thou art my Lord (that is, thou art my Portion and my All) but my goodneſs extendeth not to thee, I am not able to do any good which reacheth to thy benefit, or increaſeth thy happineſs, for thou art mine. In the fiftieth Pſalm the Lord aſſerts this his own independency, If I were hungry, I would not tell thee, for the world is mine, and the fulneſs thereof. If I had any hunger (that is, any defect upon me) I need not go to the creature to ask a ſupply, I could ſupply my ſelf if there were any need; but there's none: The Lord he is infinitely above all hunger, above all wants and defects whatſoever. He indeed threatens Idolaters, that he will famiſh all their gods (Zeph. 2. 11.) Idols ſhall be hungry, they ſhall be famiſht, and have none to adminiſter any thing to them. This the Lord doth, when he withdraws their reſpect and worſhip, that name and reputation which once they had in the world from them; worſhip is the food of Idols, that keeps liveleſs Idols (as it were) alive, and therefore falſe gods are famiſhed, when their falſe worſhip is caſt down: But who can famiſh the Lord? If I were hungry, &c. I would not tell you: Can man be profitable unto God?

But it may be objected, Cannot a man be profitable to God? Is man no advantage, no help to him? Why then (Judg. 5. 23.) ſings Deborah, Curſe ye Meroz, ſaid the Angel of the Lord, curſe ye bitterly the inhabitants thereof, becauſe they came not to the help of the Lord, to the help of the Lord againſt the mighty? It ſhould ſeem then that the Lord had need of the help of theſe Inhabitants of Meroz, and if they had come forth, it had been an advantage to him, why elſe were they curſed for not coming forth to the help of the Lord?

I anſwer, Man is ſaid to help the Lord, when he helps in the Lords cauſe. Perſonally the Lord needeth not any help; but the Lord may be helped relatively, in his cauſe, and in his people. Thus we help the Lord, when we help man, when we help the Church, and people of God: It is our honour as well as our duty, to help his people, and give aſſiſtance in his Cauſe: This the Lord takes ſo well at our hands, that he reckons it as help given to himſelf.

Again, if we conſider the help as given to the Lords people, we are not to conceive that the Lord needed the help of theſe men of Meroz, as if he could not help them himſelf without the aſſiſtance or aid of man. For when he ſeeth that there is no man, then his own arm brings ſalvation, Iſa. 59. 16. 'Tis the duty of man to come forth and draw his Sword in the Lords quarrel againſt the mighty, but the Lord needeth not the ſword of man to ſubdue the mightieſt.

Secondly, It may be objected, Cannot man be profitable unto God? He ſpeaks of the Church of the Jews, in ſuch language as implyes them a profit to him. Exod. 19. 5. Now if ye will obey my voice indeed, and keep my Covenant, then ſhall you be a peculiar treaſure unto me above all people. And is there no profit in a treaſure? Again, Deut. 32. 9. The Lords portion is his people, Jacob is the lot of his inheritance. Hath a man no profit by his portion? No advantage by his Inheritance? Now if the Lords people be his Portion, his Inheritance, his Treaſure, his peculiar ſpecial Treaſure, how then can it be ſaid, they are no profit, no advantage to him?

I anſwer, The Lords people are his treaſure, not becauſe they inrich him, but becauſe he hath a high eſteem of them. The Lords People are his treaſure, not becauſe they profit him, but becauſe he protects them: If I ſay to a man, you ſhall be a treaſure to me; I may do it, not becauſe I expect any profit from him, but becauſe I have a high eſteem of him, and reſolve to protect and defend him, as I do my own portion and treaſure: In this ſence doth the Lord ſay of his people, Ye are my treaſure. We eſteem treaſure, and treaſures are under protection, leſt any take them from us. Thus the Lord ſpeaks of his people, not that he hath any profit or gain by them, as men who ordinarily have Portions and Inheritances in Fields or Houſes which are their ſtock and livelihood. Indeed there is a Revenue which the Lord hath by his people as they are his portion; that is, a Revenue of glory and honour, not a Revenue of profit. But if you ſay glory and honour is profit, and an advantage to man, is it not then an advantage to God to be glorified by man?

I anſwer, It is no advantage to God when he is glorified by man. Our glorifying of God doth not add any glory to him that he had not, but it is only the ſetting forth of that glory which he had: There is no encreaſe of his fulneſs by all the honour and glory that the creature gives him. We are commanded to glorifie God (Matth. 5.16.) Let your light ſo ſhine before men, that they may ſee your good works, and glorifie your Father which is in Heaven. But God doth not receive any additional glory by us, how much or how clearly ſoever our light ſhineth before men. A candle adds more light to the Sun, then all the creatures in the world can add to the glory of God, when they have ſtudied his glory, and laboured to glorifie him to the utmoſt all their dayes.

Thirdly, That of David may be yet objected, Pſal. 4. 3. The Lord hath ſet apart for himſelf the man that is godly. And if ſo, then it ſeems he intends to make ſome profit of him. It is an alluſion unto thoſe that vend wares: A Merchant looks upon this and that commodity, and then ſaith, this is for my turn, this I like, ſet it apart for me. Seeing then the Lord ſets the godly apart for himſelf, it ſounds as if he meant to make ſome gain or advantage by him.

I anſwer, The meaning of that Scripture is not, that God ſets a godly man apart as one that he gets profit by, but as one that he intends to beſtow mercy upon; or he ſets him apart for ſervice, not for gain: The Lord ſerves his own ends by the ſervice of man every day, and ſets apart the godly man for his ſpecial ſervice.

Yet a little further, I ſhall demonſtrate that a man cannot be profitable to God.

Firſt, God had all perfection before man was, therefore man cannot profit God. Pſal. 90. 2. From Everlaſting, and to everlaſting thou art God, that is, thou art infinite in glory and excellency from everlaſting. God was God as much before there was a creature, as he hath been ever ſince the creatures were; therefore creatures add nothing at all to him.

Secondly, All the goodneſs and profitableneſs of man comes from God, therefore no profit goes unto God from man; that's the Apoſtles Argument, Acts 17. 25. where he ſhews that man cannot advantage God, no not by worſhip. He is not worſhipped with mens hands as though he needed any thing. What, do you think God calleth for your worſhip, becauſe he needs your worſhip? or as if he could not tell how to be without your worſhip? Nothing leſs; Seeing he giveth to all life and breath and all things. He that gives all things to all men, needs nothing of any man; here's the Apoſtles Argument, the Lord giveth out all things, life, breath, and all comforts whatſoever to all men, therefore he needs nothing of any man, no not the worſhip of any man. 1 Cor. 4. 7. The Apoſtle aſſigns that reaſon againſt boaſting, What haſt thou that thou haſt not received, wherefore then doſt thou boaſt? When do men boaſt? Even when they think they have done God a good turn. What haſt thou that thou haſt not received? Therefore why doſt thou boaſt as if thou hadſt not received it? What can he receive of us from whom we receive our all? And though we muſt return all to him in a way of thankfulneſs and duty, yet God needs not that we ſhould return any thing to him in a way of largeneſs or ſupply.

Thirdly, Take this demonſtration of it; they who live much in God, even they (upon the matter) need little or nothing of the creature; they (upon the matter) are Independent as to the creature who depend fully upon the Creator. The good or evil of this world is not much to them, who are much with God. They have but little to do with the creature, and can do well enough without the creature. (Hab. 3. 17.) Although the Fig-tree ſhall not bloſſom, neither ſhall fruit be in the Vines; the labour of the Olive ſhall fail, and the fields ſhall yield no meat; the Flock ſhall be cut off from the fold, and there ſhall be no Herd in the ſtalls; yet I will rejoyce in the Lord, I will joy in the God of my ſalvation. As if he had ſaid, What if all creature-comforts are taken away from me, I can live upon God alone. The life of a Believer is much above the creature; How much more is the life of the Creator? The Apoſtle (2 Cor. 6. 10.) ſpeaking of himſelf, ſaith, As having nothing, and yet poſſeſſing all things. If Paul by the high actings of his faith and dependencies upon God could ſay he poſſeſſed all things, while he was as having nothing in the creature. Surely God hath all, when he hath nothing of or from the creature: He may ſay in the ſtricteſt ſence, Having nothing (of theſe things) and yet poſſeſſing all things. Lay theſe two Obſervations together.

Firſt, That the Creature cannot oblige God.

Secondly, That God is Independent, abſolute, perfect without the creature.

The reſult of both will riſe up in theſe eight Concluſions.

Firſt, This will follow, That we ſhould not murmur, nor be diſcontented with our Eſtate, whatſoever it is: Why? We are not profitable unto God, we have deſerved nothing at his hand. Diſcontent ariſeth from Pride, from an opinion that we are not anſwered according to our worth; we ſhould never be diſcontented, were we convinced that we are altogether worthleſs. Do but ſit down in this thought, that man cannot be profitable unto God in any ſtate, and then be diſcontented with your ſtate if you can.

Secondly, If the Creature cannot be profitable unto God. Then, All that God doth for man, yea, for Angels, proceedeth from his free grace. We give him nothing aforehand, nor any thing afterward, therefore it is grace before, and grace after grace in all. We receive grace when we have no grace, and we receive more grace when we have it; yet by the grace we have we do not deſerve to receive more: As we received the firſt grace meerly of grace, ſo we do the ſecond. No man is aforehand with God; if any think they are, let them ſhew their Bills, what they have brought in, and it ſhall be acknowledged. Rom. 11. 35, 36. Who hath firſt given, and it ſhall be recompenced to him again? For of him, and through him, and to him are all things, to whom be glory for ever, Amen.

Thirdly, If man cannot be profitable unto God, then as none ſhould dare to come to God in their own worthineſs; ſo none ſhould fear to come to God becauſe of their unworthineſs. We ſhould not be diſcouraged, though as yet dead and fruitleſs, though vain and unbelieving: The worſt of men ſhould not keep off from God. becauſe they are unprofitable, ſeeing the beſt cannot profit him. If we have done much, it is nothing to the Lord; and if we have done nothing, it is no bar to the Lords doing much for us. God will not turn us back becauſe we bring him nothing, nay, he invites us to come without any thing (Iſa. 55. 1.) Ho every one that thirſteth, come to the Waters, buy, &c. Here is buying, but for what? for profit? No, but come buy Wine and Milk without money and without price. God doth not expect any profit; there is a kind of buying, but its not for money, nor for money-worth. As the Lord ſometimes ſells his people, ſo he alwayes ſells his graces and comforts, for nought (Pſal. 44. 12.) Thou ſelleſt thy people for nought, and doeſt not increaſe thy wealth by their price: That is, Thou leaveſt thy people under miſeries and afflictions, by which it doth not appear that thou getteſt any honour. Now as the Lord doth ſometimes ſell his people, ſo he alſo ſells his mercy and grace to his people (as to any deſert of theirs) for nought; he ſells without money and without price, therefore be not diſcourag'd if you have nothing of your own of any worth to preſent unto him. Say not, Wherewith ſhall we come before the Lord? The poorer you come in your own thoughts, the richer you ſhall return; For He filleth the hungry with good things, but the rich he ſendeth empty away.

Fourthly, If man cannot be profitable unto God, then our gifts and parts, yea, our holineſs and graces do not make us neceſſary unto God. God may ſay unto the great Ones of the Earth, I have no need of you; and to the rich, I have no need of you; and to the wiſe, I have no need of you; yea, he may ſay unto the godly, and to the holy, I have no need of you neither. There is no creature neceſſary to God, ſeeing he cannot only (as we ſay) live, but live in the heights of happineſs without the creature.

Fifthly, If no man can be profitable unto God, then whatſoever God requires of us, he aims at our profit, and not at his own; all is for us, or for our good, which will appear more fully in the opening the next clauſe; He that is wiſe may be profitable to himſelf. The Lord hath deſigned all our wiſdom and obedience to our own benefit: ſo Moſes ſpake to the people of Iſrael (Deut. 6. 24.) The Lord commanded us to do all theſe Statutes, to fear the Lord our God for our good alwayes, that he might preſerve us alive, as it is at this day. It is not for the Lords good, but it is for our good that he commands, and we obey. And as the Lord commanded all things in the Law for our good, not for his own; ſo he commands us to believe the Goſpel not for his good, but for our own; he is not to be ſaved by it, it is we that are to be ſaved by it. He doth not call us to work as men do their ſervants, that he might play the good husband, and get ſome profit by keeping us hard at labour. Indeed the Lord keepeth his Servants hard at labour night and day, they muſt be continually upon duty: But he doth it not (as I may ſay) to play the good husband, to increaſe his ſtock by it, but it is for our profit. That which Chriſt ſpeaks (Mark 2. 27.) about the Sabbath, is true of all other the Commands of God; we are apt to think, that God requires a ſeventh day, becauſe it is for his profit and advantage; No, ſaith Chriſt, the Lord hath not an eye to himſelf, but to man; The Sabbath was made for man; that is, for mans advantage, that he might look Heaven-ward, that he might work in the things which concern his own bleſſedneſs, therefore hath the Lord appointed him a reſting day. The Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath.

Sixthly, Then our diſobedience cannot hurt God, our ſins cannot diſadvantage him, impair his bleſſedneſs, or diminiſh his glory. As mans obedience is no profit; ſo his diſobedience is no diſprofit to God. Sinners ſhall be puniſhed, as they who have wronged and diſhonoured God, they ſhall be dealt with as ſuch: But really, all the ſins of the world do not bring any dammage or diſadvantage to God: Elihu is expreſs to this point, in the thirty-fifth Chapter of this Book, verſ. 6, 7. If thou ſinneſt, what doſt thou againſt him? (Every ſin is againſt the mind of God; but no ſin is againſt the happineſs of God.) Or if thy tranſgreſſions be multiplied, what doſt thou unto him? Is God impair'd by it? Surely no, God doth not loſe a pin from his ſleeve (as I may ſay) by all the ſins committed in the world: He hath no dependance at all upon our obedience for his bleſſedneſs; our ſins cannot hurt him, as our obedience cannot help him, which Elihu ſhews in the next verſe; If thou be righteous, what giveſt thou him? Or what receiveth he of thine hand?

Seventhly, Hence ſee the honour of God, that hath made ſo many creatures, and man eſpecially, of whom himſelf hath no need, that hath ſo many to ſerve him, and yet needs none of their ſervices. Give God this glory: We think thoſe men are very glorious and honourable who have but as much of the Creature as will ſerve their turn, all creatures are the Lords, yet he is not neceſſitated to ſerve his turn by any of them.

Eighthly, Then ſee what an obligation lyeth upon us continually to bleſs God, to be thankful to him, to walk humbly with him, who gives us ſo many profits, when as we do not profit him at all. God prizeth that highly by which himſelf hath no benefit; he prizes the actings of faith and holineſs highly, but he hath no advantage by them: God gives us profit by theſe, though himſelf be not profited; though he is not the better by any thing we do, yet we are the better: The Lord binds himſelf by promiſe, that the leaſt good we do in ſincerity ſhall have a good reward; He that gives but a cup of cold water to a Diſciple in the name of a Diſciple, ſhall not loſe his reward. But if we give thouſands of Gold and Silver to poor Diſciples, what profit hath God by it? And yet though none of the profit comes to his hand, yet he reckons it as if all were put into his hand. All the charity and compaſſion ſhewed to his people, Chriſt taketh to himſelf (Matth. 25.) In that ye have done it unto theſe, ye have done it unto me. Chriſt had no need of alms, of viſiting, or cloathing, yet he counts it as done to himſelf, when we do it to any of his.

Can a man be profitable to God, as he that is wiſe may be profitable to himſelf?

Some give the meaning of the words thus: Doth it follow, that a man can be profitable unto God, becauſe a wiſe man may be profitable to himſelf? Our reading reaches the ſame ſence; Can a man be profitable unto God, as he that is wiſe may be profitable to himſelf? It doth not follow, becauſe A man may profit another man, or profit himſelf, that therefore he may profit God. That's the ſum of the Argument.

As he that is wiſe.] The word in the root of it ſignifies to underſtand, to be prudent; and by a Metonymie to be happy, or to proſper; becauſe uſually affairs ſucceed well and proſper in the hands of wiſe men, and happineſs uſually follows wiſdom; therefore to be wiſe, and to be profitable, are ſignified by one and the ſame word in the Hebrew. So in this Text, He that is wiſe is profitable to himſelf; that is, his affairs ſhall proſper. We find this Title prefixt to divers Pſalms, Maſchil, which is as much as A teaching Pſalm, a Pſalm making wiſe, a Pſalm for Inſtruction. This Title is given thoſe Pſalms, which as they have ſome extraordinary matter, ſo uſually they are Pſalms of complaint under affliction; and the reaſon of that is, becauſe there is much inſtruction in correction; much light of holy knowledge is to be had in the School of the Croſs; therefore uſually thoſe Pſalms that deſcribe the afflictions of the Church are called Maſchil, Pſalms of Inſtruction.

שׂכל Intellexit. prudens fuit, per Metonymiam fœlix, proſper fuit, quod prudẽtibus omnia fœliciter cedant; prudentiam fœlicitas ſere ſequitur. Maſchil, intelligens prudẽs, carmen erudiẽs ode didaſcalita. In titulis Pſalmorum ter & decies legitur. Schola crucis, Schola lucis. Luth.

He that is wiſe, and inſtructs; or he that is wiſe as having received inſtruction may be profitable to himſelf. All wiſdom is not profitable to man; for there is a wiſdom of which the Scripture ſaith, that God will deſtroy it; a man cannot profit himſelf by that; and there is a wiſdom which is earthly, ſenſual and deviliſh (James 3. 15.) A man (be he never ſo wiſe according to this wiſdom) ſhall not profit himſelf by it. There are a ſort of wiſe men whom the Lord will take in their craftineſs (1 Cor. 3. 19.) And how can ſuch profit themſelves by their wiſdom? There are wiſe men whoſe thoughts the Lord knoweth to be but vain; that is, unprofitable; therefore theſe cannot profit themſelves: Then what is that wiſdom which Eliphaz means when he ſaith, He that is wiſe may be profitable to himſelf?

I anſwer, The wiſe man here intended is not the man that is politickly wiſe, worldly wiſe, carnally or craftily wiſe; but the man ſpiritually wiſe, his wiſdom will bring him in profit. He that is guided by holy and godly wiſdom, ſhall reap the benefit and eat the fruit of it. We have ſuch wiſdom deſcribed (Pſal. 111. 10.) The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wiſdom; a good underſtanding have all they that keep his Commandments: He doth not ſay, a good underſtanding have all they that know his Commandments, for many may know the Commandments, and yet not have a good underſtanding; but they have a good underſtanding indeed that do his Commandments. And when the Pſalmiſt ſaith, The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wiſdom, the word Beginning ſignifies not only the firſt ſtep or entrance into a thing, but the head or height of it; ſo that Beginning is as much as chief, or principal; the beſt wiſdom, the chief, the top wiſdom, the head-wiſdom, or the head of wiſdom, is the fear of the Lord. Job gives the ſame deſcription of wiſdom, in the laſt words of the twenty-eighth Chapter, Behold, the fear of the Lord that is wiſdom, and to depart from evil, that is underſtanding. Would you know what is true wiſdom? 'Tis the fear of the Lord. Would you know who is wiſe? The godly man is the truly wiſe man, yea, he is the only wiſe man.

But then it may be queſtioned, May a wiſe man be profitable to himſelf? Doth not the Apoſtle ſay (Rom. 14. 7.) None of us liveth to himſelf, &c. Then how can a man be wiſe to himſelf? And doth not the Apoſtle give the rule (2 Cor. 5. 15.) Chriſt dyed for all, that they which live ſhould not henceforth live unto themſelves? If we may not live to our ſelves, how then doth he ſay here, that the wiſe man is profitable to himſelf? He that is profitable to himſelf, lives to himſelf, doth he not?

I anſwer, Firſt, The wiſe man muſt not make his own profit the end or the deſign of his wiſdom, but he may look upon his own profit as that which will be the iſſue, fruit and conſequent of his wiſdom. A carnal man looks to and loves his work for the rewards ſake: A godly man may look to and love his reward for the work ſake. (Prov. 9. 12.) If thou be wiſe, thou ſhalt be wiſe for thy ſelf; that is, the fruit or the good of thy wiſdom will drop into thy own boſom. A wiſe man may look for his advantage in the end of his work, though he is not to make his own advantage the end of his work. We are not to make either temporal or eternal advantages the end of our wiſdom; but we may look upon them as fruits and effects that God leads us to by the exerciſe of wiſdom.

Secondly, I anſwer, A wiſe man cannot be profitable to himſelf, as the founder of his own happineſs, or as having a ſufficiency in himſelf to make himſelf happy; but a wiſe man may be a means or an inſtrument of his own happineſs; and walking in the way of wiſdom, he walks in the way to his own happineſs. Thus he that is godly wiſe, or that feareth God, may be profitable to himſelf.

Hence Obſerve, He that is truly wiſe, godly and holy, ſhall find fruit and benefit by it.

The Apoſtle (1 Tim. 4. 8.) aſſureth us that Godlineſs is profitable for all things. The greateſt gain in the world is Godlineſs; It hath the promiſes of this life and of that which is to come. Whatſoever drops out of any promiſe of the Goſpel, falls into the lap of a godly man; the promiſes are his, and therefore the good of the promiſe is his. When the promiſes open at any time, and give forth their vertue, they muſt needs give it forth to him that is wiſe, to him that is godly, for godlineſs hath the promiſes. When the Apoſtle had rebuk'd a ſort of men that made godlineſs only a ſtalking-horſe to get gain, he preſently adds, But godlineſs is great gain, if a man be content with what he hath. Godlineſs it ſelf is great gain, if we have no more; but Godlineſs brings in gain, abundance of gain, beſides it ſelf. (Matth. 6, 35.) Seek firſt the Kingdom of God, and the righteouſneſs thereof, and all theſe things ſhall be added (or caſt in as an advantage) to you. The Apoſtle (Rom. 6. 21.) puts a kind of holy ſcorn upon ſinners, come, tell me, What fruit had you of thoſe things whereof you are now aſhamed? What fruit have you by your folly, pride, worldlineſs, envy, what fruit have you found in theſe things? Bring me in an account of your gain by trading in any ſin. The end of theſe things is death; there is no great profit in that. But now being made free from ſin, and become ſervants to God, ye have your fruit unto holineſs, and the end everlaſting life. Here are fruits good ſtore, and all good fruits both for here and hereafter. We can never want fruit our ſelves, while we are bringing forth fruit unto God: All obedience is attended with a bleſſing, and though, as was toucht before, we cannot be the founders of our own bleſſedneſs, nor muſt we meerly deſign our own happineſs, or aim at our own profit (for that is mercinary ſervice) yet we may look at our own happineſs and profit, yea, and Lay up for our ſelves a good foundation, as Paul adviſeth rich men (1 Tim. 6. 19.) We then make the beſt of our riches, when we lay up for our ſelves a good foundation. But can a man lay a foundation of his happineſs in his riches? What a rotten foundation will that be? What Hay and Stubble (in this ſence) will Gold and Silver be? What's the meaning of it then when the Apoſtle ſaith, Laying up for your ſelves a good foundation?

I anſwer, We do it by the right improvement of riches (for he ſpeaks there to rich men) not that we can lay any foundation to build upon beſide Jeſus Chriſt; for other foundation can no man lay then that which is laid, even Jeſus Chriſt; but when our hearts are not glued to the creature, but we uſe them in a holy manner, here's our laying up a good foundation. A godly wiſe man may look upon his right improvement of worldly riches, as an effect of the grace and love of Chriſt dwelling in his heart; and thus he may be ſaid to lay up for himſelf a good foundation. And further, a Believer may look upon his worldly profits as a fruit of the ſame grace, the Lord having promiſed, that he will bleſs and provide for him; ſo that every way a wiſe man may be profitable to himſelf. Thus Eliphaz hath at once aſſerted a poſſibility for a man to be profitable to himſelf, and denyed any poſſibility that a man can be profitable unto God; which he further explains in the next words.

Verſe 3. Is it any pleaſure to the Almighty that thou art righteous? Or is it any gain to him that thou makeſt thy way perfect?

In the former Verſe Eliphaz denyed in general, that God receiveth any benefit from man: In this third Verſe he ſpeaks the ſame thing, but ſomewhat more diſtinctly, denying, firſt, that he receives any pleaſure which might add to his bleſſedneſs; or ſecondly, any gain which might add to his abundance. Is it any pleaſure to the Almighty that thou art righteous? Is it any gain to him that thou makeſt thy way perfect? As if he had ſaid, Is the bleſſedneſs of God increaſed by thy righteouſneſs? Or doth the perfection of thy wayes augment his Treaſure? Is he either the happier or the richer by any thing thou art or canſt do? That's the ſcope and ſence of the words in general.

Is it any pleaſure?] The word which we tranſlate Pleaſure, ſignifies the will, and becauſe it is ſo great a pleaſure unto man to have his will, therefore the ſame word ſignifieth both pleaſure and the will. So the word is uſed (Pſal. 1. 2.) Bleſſed is the man whoſe delight is in the Law of God; that is, whoſe will is there, or who takes pleaſure in the Law of God, his will being reſolved into the will of God. Then we take pleaſure and delight in a thing when we conforme to it, or cloſe with it. The Judgment of God is ſo expreſſed upon Coniah (Jer. 22. 28.) Is this man Coniah a deſpiſed broken Idol? Is he a veſſel wherein there is no pleaſure? A veſſel for the loweſt uſe, as 'tis interpreted, ver. 21. A veſſel in which there is no complacency, it is only for neceſſity. So the word is taken alſo (Prov. 3. 15.) He is more precious then Rubies, all the things thou canſt deſire (or have pleaſure in) are not to be compared to him. And again (Iſa. 58. 13.) If thou forbear to do thy pleaſure upon mine holy day. What is the pleaſure of a carnal man upon the Sabbath, upon the holy day of God? It is to do his own will, and not the will of God. If thou forbear to do thine own pleaſure; that is, thine own will upon my holy day. Thus here, Is it any pleaſure to the Almighty that thou art righteous? The Septuagint tranſlate ſomewhat differently, What cares the Almighty if thou art unblamable in thy wayes? Thus a man uſually ſpeaks of that wherein he hath no pleaſure, What care I for it? Is it any pleaſure? &c.

חפץ
Notat voluntatem cum complacentia, vel acquieſcentia.

Vas in quõ non eſt voluntas.

Τὶ γὰρ μέλει τῷ κυρίῳ, &c. Sept.

That thou art righteous?] Righteouſneſs is two-fold: Firſt, Of Juſtification (ſo ſome underſtand it here) Is it any pleaſure to the Almighty that thou art juſtified? Or ſecondly, There is a righteouſneſs in Converſation, ſo moſt underſtand it here, Is it any pleaſure to the Almighty that thou art holy? Which is the ſame with the latter clauſe of the Text, That thou makeſt thy way perfect?

Further, the word ſignifies to plead our own juſtice, as well as to have a juſtice or righteouſneſs of our own: And thus it may be expounded in this place, Is it any pleaſure to the Almighty that thou art righteous? that is, that Thou doſt juſtifie thy ſelf? Or (as Mr. Broughton) Pleadeſt juſtice? Doſt thou juſtifie thy ſelf, or ſtand upon thine own integrity, and then think to pleaſe God, or to carry the day againſt man, upon thoſe terms? Is it any pleaſure to the Almighty? That word fully hits the deſign of Eliphaz, it ſignifies both Almighty and All-ſufficient; one that hath all in his own compaſs, that needs not go out of himſelf to fetch in any ſupplies or aid from abroad. He is Self-ſufficient, and he hath a ſufficiency for all others. Is it any pleaſure to this Almighty One, that thou doſt juſtifie thy ſelf?

An oblectationi eſt omnipotenti quod juſtificas te? Jun.
Se juſtificare non tam eſt juſtum eſſe quam contendere & conari adverſus calumnias & ſcelera ſibi objecta & ex ratione coram judice reſpondere.

Or is it any gain to him that thou makeſt thy way perfect?

As it is no pleaſure, ſo no gain. The ſecond Verſe before opened, clears the mind of this clauſe. What there he calleth profit, is here called gain, in different words: And the word here uſed is rendred indifferently both gain and profit. (Gen. 37. 26.) When Joſeph was caſt into the pit, Judah ſaid, What profit is it to ſlay our Brother? Let us ſell him; let us make gain of him that way; ſlaying him will be no profit to us. And as it ſignifies gain, ſo covetouſneſs; and the reaſon is, becauſe covetouſneſs hath gain for its object; covetouſneſs provokes men to ſeek gain. Jethro (Exod. 18. 21.) gives counſel that Magiſtrates ſhould be Men fearing God, and hating Covetouſneſs, or hating gain; that is, not only all covetous practices, but inordinate deſires of gain, for theſe lead into unlawful wayes of gain, even to the perverting of Juſtice.

Is it any gain to him that thou makeſt [thy way] perfect? That is, Thy life, thy converſation, thy courſe. What though thou ſtriveſt after the higheſt attainments of grace, the pureſt purity of life, is this any gain to the Lord? The Septuagint render, That thou makeſt thy way ſimple? The ſimple ſincere, plain way is the perfect way. The perfection of our way is the ſimplicity, ſincerity, and uprightneſs of it.

Another reads, Is it any pleaſure to the Almighty that thy way is undefiled, or clean? that thou doſt ſweep and waſh thy way, ſo that there is no ſpot to be ſeen upon it? (Pſal. 119. 1.) Bleſſed are the undefiled or perfect in the way. The ſeveral parts of this Pſalm begin with a new Letter, according to the order of the Hebrew Alphabet, intimating that it ought to be learned even of Children, as one of the Ancients infers from it. The undefiled in the way are ſuch (properly) as have been holy or pure from their youth, ſuch as did never corrupt their wayes. Timothy is ſaid from a Child to learn the Scriptures. Suppoſe thy way thus perfect, that none could tax thee with any groſs ſin even from thy Childhood, could this be any gain to the Almighty?

Alphabetarius eſt hic Pſalmus, oſtendens parvulos ab ipſis ſtatim elementis & pueritia informandos eſſe ad pietatem. Hilar,

There is yet another Tranſlation, which implyeth not only the ſtudy of holineſs, but a boaſting in holineſs, Is it any pleaſure to the Almighty that thou doſt juſtifie thy ſelf? Or is it any gain to him that thou doſt affirm thy wayes are perfect? So it falls in with the third rendring of the former clauſe.

Aut an lucro quod integras aſſeris vias tuas. Jun.

For the underſtanding and further clearing of theſe words, I ſhall draw them forth into diſtinct propoſitions, which will be as ſo many Obſervations from the Text. It may ſeem a very Paradox to aſſert, that it is no pleaſure to the Almighty that a man makes his way perfect, therefore take the ſence firſt in three affirmative Propoſitions, and then in three that are Negative.

First, The Lord hath pleaſure in us as we are righteous in Chriſt.

Yea, he loves to hear us boaſt of this righteouſneſs, and glory in it; and the more we do ſo, the more pleaſure he taketh in it (Iſa. 45. 25.) Surely ſhall one ſay, in the Lord have I righteouſneſs, even to him ſhall men come, &c. In the Lord ſhall all the ſeed of Iſrael be juſtified, and ſhall glory. The ſeed of Iſrael are righteous in the Lord, and glory in that righteouſneſs; yea, the Lord is pleaſed to hear them glorying in that righteouſneſs, for that's the righteouſneſs of his Son, In whom he is well pleaſed (Matth. 3. 17.) And becauſe the Church is cloathed with this righteouſneſs, therefore ſhe is called, The Lord's delight (Iſa. 62. 4.) Thou ſhalt no more be called forſaken, neither ſhall thy Land any more be termed deſolate, but thou ſhalt be called Hephzibah, and thy Land Beulah, for the Lord delighteth in thee. Thou ſhalt be called my delight, or my pleaſure is in her. The word of the Text, the Lords pleaſure is in the Church, and therefore the Lords pleaſure is in the Church, becauſe the Church is adorned and beautified with the righteouſneſs of Jeſus Chriſt; this is it which cauſeth the Lord to call his Church Hephzibah, My pleaſure is in her. When Eliphaz enquireth, Is it any pleaſure to the Almighty that thou art righteous? We may anſwer, The Lord hath pleaſure in this righteouſneſs, and as he tells the Church, ſo every particular Believer, his delight and pleaſure is in him.

Secondly, God takes pleaſure alſo in us as we are righteous in Converſation.

David (Pſal. 147. 10, 11.) gives a clear proof of it both in the Negative and in the Affirmative. The Lord delighteth not in the ſtrength of a horſe, he taketh not pleaſure in the legs of a man. The Lords delight is neither in horſes, nor in men; neither in their ſtrength, nor in their beauty: Wherein is the Lords pleaſure then? The next words ſhew us where, He takes pleaſure in them that fear him and hope in his mercy. This Scripture ſeems to ſpeak directly contrary to Eliphaz in Job, he ſaith, Is it any pleaſure to the Almighty that thou art righteous? But David ſaith, The Lord takes pleaſure in thoſe that fear him: Therefore we muſt not underſtand Eliphaz in this ſence, as if the Lord had no delight or contentment at all in the holineſs of his people, as if it were all one to him whether they are holy or unholy: There is a Generation who ſay, That all actions are alike, and that it is all one before God, whether men be righteous or unrighteous, whether they do good or evil: Woe to them that underſtand this Scripture in ſuch a corrupt ſence, for the Lord doth not only hate iniquity, but he is of purer eyes then to behold any iniquity. He hath no pleaſure either in unrighteouſneſs, or in the unrighteous; but both righteouſneſs and the righteous are his pleaſure. There are three things which I ſhall touch for the confirmation of it.

Firſt, The Lord cannot but take pleaſure in his own Image: Now that righteouſneſs which is implanted in us, and put forth by us, the righteouſneſs of our natures and of our actions, as we are regenerate, is nothing elſe but the Image of God renewed upon us. Seeing then God cannot but take pleaſure in his own Image, therefore it is a wickedneſs to think that God takes no pleaſure in a righteous man, or in his righteouſneſs.

Secondly, As this righteouſneſs is the Image of God in us; ſo it is the very workmanſhip of God upon us (Epheſ. 2. 10.) For we are his workmanſhip: We are ſo not only firſt in our natural capacity, as we are men; and ſecondly, in our civil capacity as ſuch or ſuch men, high or low, rich or poor; but alſo (which is the thing intended by the Apoſtle) in our ſpiritual capacity as Saints. Thus we are the workmanſhip of God, created in Chriſt Jeſus unto good works, which God hath before ordained that we ſhould walk in them. The ſame Apoſtle ſaith again, He that hath wrought us for this ſelf ſame thing is God (2 Cor. 5. 5.) Is it poſſible that God ſhould have no pleaſure in his own works? We read in the firſt of Geneſis, that when he had made the world, the Lord ſaw all that he had made, and behold it was very good. God hath an All-ſeeing eye, he alwayes beholdeth all things; but when 'tis ſaid, he ſaw all that he had made, this imports a ſpecial act of God, after the manner of men, who ſtrictly view and behold what they have done, delighting in it: Thus the Lord ſaw all that he had made; he (as it were) came to view his own work, he ſaw and behold it was very good, he took pleaſure in it. Now if God took pleaſure in that ſtructure and fabrick of the world, the firſt creation, how much more pleaſure doth he take in that holineſs which he hath wrought in the hearts of his people, which is a ſecond creation? And that's a more curious and noble ſtructure then this viſible world is. The new Creation is more excellent then the Old. Therefore the Lord cannot but delight in a righteous perſon, for he is his workmanſhip. What Job (Chap. 14. 15.) aſſures himſelf of, is moſt true in this reſpect, Thou wilt have a deſire to the work of thine hands. Job ſpeaks there of his outward man: My body (he means) was made by thee, 'tis the work of thy hands, and thou wilt fetch it back again, thou wilt redeem it from the duſt. Whatſoever hath the workmanſhip of God upon it, he hath pleaſure in it as it is his work, and a ſpecial pleaſure in that, which (as any work of Grace is) is his ſpecial work.

Thirdly, This Conſideration ſhews that the Lord muſt take pleaſure in a righteous perſon, becauſe he bears the form of his will revealed in his word. Holineſs is our conformity to the will of God: Now the Lord cannot but take pleaſure in thoſe who conform to his will. Samuel tells Saul (1 Sam. 15. 22. and there he uſeth this word in the Text) Hath the Lord as great delight in Burnt-offerings and Sacrifices, as in obeying the voice of the Lord? God gave thee a Word, a Command, to which he expected thy conformity, but thou haſt thought to pleaſe the Lord with Sacrifices, which he commanded thee not; this was thy miſtake and thy folly. We honour God when we do his will; ſurely then we muſt needs take pleaſure in thoſe that do it. Man takes pleaſure when he can have his will (though it be a corrupt and ſinful will) fulfilled: It cannot but be a pleaſure to God when his holy will is fulfilled, or done on earth as it is in Heaven. Thus we ſee the ſecond Propoſition cleared, for the underſtanding of theſe words, That as the Lord takes pleaſure in thoſe who are righteous by the imputed righteouſneſs of his Son, ſo even in thoſe alſo who are righteous by the implanted righteouſneſs or holineſs of his Spirit.

Thirdly, God takes pleaſure to ſee a ſincere and upright perſon juſtifie himſelf, or plead his own juſtice againſt all the falſe accuſations and ſuſpicions of men.

The Lord likes it well to hear a man who is falſly accuſed, to ſtand up and maintain his own innocency; yea, it is our duty, and we are bound in conſcience to maintain our own innocency. So David in the ſeventh Pſalm, and in the eighteenth Pſalm, juſtified himſelf againſt Saul. And thus Job all along in this Book juſtified himſelf againſt the opinion of his Friends; in this ſence God takes pleaſure, when we are ſo righteous in all our dealings, and perfect in all our wayes, that we dare encounter whoſoever ſpeaks the contrary, and can waſh off all the aſperſions which either miſguided and miſtaken friends, or profeſſed enemies caſt upon us. You have now had thoſe three affirmative Propoſitions for the underſtanding of the Text. Take three more in the Negative.

Firſt, God hath no pleaſure to ſee us juſtifie our ſelves before him, or to plead our own righteouſneſs with him, yea, he is extreamly diſpleaſed at it.

This ſome conceive the chief thing which Eliphaz aimed at. Is it any pleaſure to the Almighty that thou doſt juſtifie thy ſelf? No, thou doſt highly provoke him in doing ſo; to plead with or to juſtifie our ſelves before God that we are righteous, is worſe then all our unrighteouſneſs, for this overthrows the whole deſign of the Goſpel, which is (1 Cor. 1. 29.) That no fleſh ſhould glory in his preſence, but he that glorieth, let him glory in the Lord. And (Rom. 3. 19, 20.) The Law convinceth all, That all the world may become guilty before God, therefore by the deeds of the Law there ſhall be no fleſh juſtified in his ſight. God will have every mouth ſtopped, or cry guilty; and therefore for any one to open his mouth and juſtifie himſelf before God, is to overthrow the Goſpel. They are ignorant of the righteouſneſs of God, who go about to eſtabliſh their own righteouſneſs (Rom. 10. 3.) And as God hath no pleaſure in them who boaſt of their righteouſneſs to juſtifie themſelves before him, ſo,

Secondly, God hath no pleaſure in them who boaſt of their own righteouſneſs, and contemn others.

Though a man may aſſert the righteouſneſs of his Converſation againſt all them who queſtion it; yet God reſents it highly when any proclaim their own righteouſneſs to the deſpiſing of others. Chriſt ſpeaks a Parable againſt thoſe (in Luke 18. v. 9, 10, 11.) who truſted in themſelves that they were righteous, and deſpiſed others. Two men went up into the Temple to pray, the one a Phariſee, the other a Publican: The Phariſee ſtood and prayed thus with himſelf, God, I thank thee that I am not as other men are, Extortioners, Adulterers, Unjuſt, or even as this Publican. Here was one that advanced his own active righteouſneſs, and he did it with the contempt of another. I am not as this Publican. The Lord takes no pleaſure in this; yea, the Lord is highly diſpleaſed with this. And (Iſa. 65. 5.) the Prophet repreſents the Lords indignation againſt this Phariſaical ſpirit in dreadful eloquence, Stand by thy ſelf, come not near to me, for I am holier then thou. Thus they pleaded their righteouſneſs in contempt of others. Theſe (ſaith the Lord) are a ſmoak in my noſe (that is, grievous, and diſpleaſing) a fire that burneth all the day.

Thirdly, God hath no pleaſure at all in any of our righteouſneſs, either in the righteouſneſs of our juſtification, or the righteouſneſs of our ſanctification, as the leaſt addition to his own happineſs.

The reaſon of it is, becauſe (as was ſhewed from the former Verſe) God is Self-ſufficient, and hath no dependance at all upon the Creature: So that what pleaſure ſoever the Lord hath in the righteouſneſs of our Juſtification, or of our Sanctification, we cannot put it to this account that we add any thing to his happineſs.

All the pleaſure which God taketh is in himſelf, or in the fulfilling of his own good pleaſure in Chriſt.

And therefore the work which Jeſus was to do on Earth, is called, The pleaſure of God (Iſa. 53. 10.) It pleaſed the Lord to bruiſe him, he hath put him to grief; when thou ſhalt make his ſoul an offering for ſin, he ſhall ſee his ſeed, he ſhall prolong his dayes, and the pleaſure of the Lord ſhall proſper in his hand. That pleaſure of the Lord was the work which the Lord put into his hand, or which he gave him to do, even the bringing about his eternal purpoſe, for the recovery of loſt man; that's a work in which the Lord takes pleaſure, ſo much pleaſure, that the Prophet calleth it His pleaſure. And thus the Apoſtle ſpeaks (Eph. 1. 5, 6.) Having predeſtinated us to the adoption of Children, by Jeſus Chriſt, according to the good pleaſure of his own will, &c. The good pleaſure of God is only in his own will, that's his pleaſure. The Lord delights to ſee his will accompliſht in the ſaving of ſinners, as well as in the obedience of Saints; that's a part of the good will of God: Why doth he take pleaſure in the obedience of Saints, even becauſe his own will is done? It's not any thing in us that doth it. So when he ſaves us, the pleaſure which he takes, is in the fulfilling of his own will, rather then in our ſalvation. Is it any pleaſure to the Almighty that thou art righteous?

Deus nullis rebus quæ extra ipſum ſunt, tangitur aut mutatur.

Verſe 4. Will he reprove thee for fear of thee? Or will he enter with thee into judgment?

The Queſtion is to be reſolved into this Negative, He will not reprove thee for fear of thee, &c.

Will he reprove thee?] The word ſignifies firſt, to argue or diſpute, and ſo to convince by the authority of reaſon.

יכח Arguit, redarguit, corripuit, judicavit,

Secondly, To plead, ſo as to convince by evidence of the Law and fact (Mich. 6. 2.) Hear ye, O Mountains, the Lords controverſie, and ye ſtrong foundations of the Earth, for the Lord hath a controverſie with his People, and he will plead with Iſrael. The Mountains and the ſtrong foundations of the Earth, are the Great men of the Earth, or Magiſtratical powers, with theſe the Lord threatens a Controverſie, and that he will plead or argue his cauſe with them.

Thirdly, It ſignifies to argue or plead not with words only, but with blows, to reprove with correction, Job 5. 17. Happy is the man whom thou correcteſt. The word which here we render reprove, is there rendred to correct, which is reproving by blows.

Fourthly, Some tranſlate it to evidence, to evince, and determine: Thus it is ſaid (Gen. 25. 16.) That Abimelech reproved Sarah; that is, gave evidence that ſhe had a Husband: And Abraham's Servant ſaid (Gen. 24. 44.) She that ſaith to me, Both drink thou, and I will alſo draw for thy Camels, let her be the Woman whom the Lord hath appointed for my Maſters Son: That is, Let this token be an evidence to me, that it is ſhe whom thou haſt appointed for his Wife. Some here take it ſo, Will God evidence, or determine, concerning thee, by thy fear, or the worſhip which thou giveſt him, That thou art righteous? We expreſs it fully enough, Will he reprove thee for fear of thee?

Or will he enter with thee into judgment?

Both theſe expreſſions are of the ſame ſence; and theſe words [For fear of thee] may be read in the cloſe of the Verſe, Will he reprove thee, or will he enter with thee into judgment for fear of thee?

Fear may be taken here two wayes: Either firſt Actively; or ſecondly, Paſſively.

Take it Actively, and ſo it notes the fear of Job, Will he reprove thee becauſe of thy fear? And then by his fear we are to underſtand his Religiouſneſs or Holineſs: So Maſter Broughton, Would he reprove thee for thy Religion?

Putaſne te plecti ob religionē tuā?

Take this Fear Paſſively, and then it implyeth a Fear which God himſelf might be thought to have of him: As if Eliphaz had ſaid, God is not afraid of thee. The Prophet ſaith (Iſa. 51. 12.) Who art thou that thou ſhouldſt be afraid of a man? &c. Much more may we ſay, who or what is man that God ſhould be afraid of him? One of the Ancients following this Interpretation, profeſſeth, that no fit or comely ſence can be given of theſe words, but concludes, that Eliphaz ſpake very fooliſhly and groſly, or as a man forſaken and left of God: For (ſaith he) can any one imagine ſuch a thing as this, that Job ſhould have a thought that God was afraid of him? But we may very well accommodate the ſence in either of theſe conſiderations of Fear, whether Actively, or Paſſively, and judicious Interpreters carry it both wayes. Let us weigh it a little in both.

An de religione tua argueret te? Jun.

Quis vel hoc deſipiens ſentiat, quod Dominus ex timore nos arguat & ex metu judicium juñ contra nos proponat. Greg.

Firſt Actively, As fear is taken for the fear which Job feared; that is, for his religion and worſhip, or the exerciſe of it, then the meaning is this, Doſt thou think that God doth puniſh thee for thy goodneſs, or becauſe thou art righteous? No, it is becauſe thou art irreligious: Is not thine iniquity great, and thy ſin infinite? As he ſpeaks out in the next words, Doſt thou think that God puniſhes thee for thy holineſs? No, he can find ſins enough to do it for. And Eliphaz might ſpeak to ſuch a ſence (I conceive) becauſe Job pleaded his integrity ſo much, as if he ſhould ſay, Never think that God afflicts thee for thy holineſs, or righteouſneſs, but rather acknowledge thy ſins and thy wickedneſs to be the cauſe of thy afflictions: Are not thine iniquities maniſeſt?

Putaſne quod ille te affligat quia religioſus ſis & Dei timens ac integer ut de te ipſe predicas? minime vero, quin potius quod ſis irreligioſus. Merc.

There is a truth in this, God doth correct many who fear him; but he doth not correct any one for fearing of him: Many holy perſons are afflicted; but no man was ever afflicted for his holineſs. God hath made many promiſes to the godly man, that he will reward him, and do him good; Say to the righteous, it ſhall be well with him. Godlineſs is profitable for all things, having the promiſes of this life, and of that which is to come. Therefore no man needs fear that God will hurt him for his holineſs: Though a holy man may receive many rods and ſcourges from God, yet holineſs never received the leaſt ſcourge from God.

Again, as Fear is taken Actively for Religion, or for Holineſs, the ſence may be given thus, in purſuance of the fourth ſignification of the word Reprove, before explained. When God comes to judge thee, or when he declares what thou art, he will not look to thy fear only, to thy profeſſion of Religion and Holineſs, and over-look or wink at thy ſins; and therefore he preſently ſubjoyns, Is not thy wickedneſs great? Hereby arguing, that no mans piety is ſo perfect, that thereby he can be accounted juſt or righteous in the ſight of God, or that a mans profeſſion, yea, and practice of Religion is of no value, either to eſcape the puniſhment of his ſin, or to deſerve a reward at the hands of God. Some expound that (Pſal. 50. 8.) in a parallel ſence to this, the word being the ſame. I will not reprove thee for thy Sacrifices (which is the ſame with Fear in the Text, according to this Interpretation, being put for all outward worſhip or religiouſneſs) or for thy burnt-offerings continually before me. For thoſe words, To have been, which our Tranſlators ſupply, may be left out, and the ſence remain perfect: Or if thoſe words be continued, then the negative Particle not, is (as in many Scriptures it is) to be reaſſumed out of the firſt part of the verſe, and the whole read thus, I will not reprove thee for thy Sacrifices, or for thy Burnt-offerings not to have been continually before me: That is, I will not charge thee with a neglect of outward duty or worſhip, the inward and ſpiritual (of which he ſpeaks, ver. 14.) being that which is moſt pleaſing unto me. Now as to the paralleling of this place in the Pſalms, with the ſence of Job's Text now under hand, we muſt read them thus, I will not judge thee for thy Sacrifices; that is, when I determine concerning thy righteouſneſs, I will not do it by having an eye to, or reſpecting thy Sacrifices, thy religious courſe and exerciſe of holineſs, though thou haſt been much, yea, even continually converſant in them; I ſhall only argue and declare thee righteous as thou truſteſt in me, and by faith takeſt hold of my Covenant. Thus as the Lord is conceived ſaying in the Pſalm, I will not judge or declare thee righteous for thy Sacrifices, ſo here Eliphaz, Will he (that is, certainly he will not) judge or declare thee righteous for thy fear? And ſo the latter part of the verſe may receive the ſame Expoſition, Will he enter with thee into judgment, namely, for thy fear? Will God deal with thee upon the account of thy piety? And when he comes to juſtifie thee, will he impute that to thee? Or when God enters into judgment with thee, will he ſuffer thee to preſent thy fear, thy piety, or goodneſs to him, and ſo thereby anſwer his plea, or take away the action which he brings againſt thee? When God enters with us into judgment, we may boldly plead our intereſt or Faith in the Mediator, but we muſt not plead our fear, the Grace or Holineſs either of our perſons, or of our ſervices.

Numquid ex timore tuo judicabit te? Deus quando te judicabit, non reſpiciet ad timorē tuum tantum & connivebit ad mala quæ feceris. Hoc fine ſubjicit, nonne malum tuum amplum eſt? Oſtendit autem nullam pietatem hominis eſſe perfectam, ut inde juſtus judicari deo poſſit. Coc.

Eliphaz propoſitum eſt oſtendere quod religio hominis non proſit ad demerendum deum, vel peccati pœnam evadēdam. Coc.

Thus we ſee the Doctrine of the Text according to this Expoſition, and the active ſignification of the word Fear, carrieth in it the very life and ſpirit of the Goſpel. All the worth and merit of our works, as to Righteouſneſs, is null'd and laid proſtrate, and we taught to glory in nothing but the free gift and grace of God by our Lord Jeſus Chriſt.

Secondly, As Fear is taken Paſſively, Will he reprove thee for fear of thee? That is, Is God afraid of thee? Doth he pick quarrels with thee for fear of thee? Or ſeek occaſions againſt thee when there is none, only leſt thou ſhouldſt ſtand in his way, or be a detriment to him? This appears plainly to be the ſence of our Tranſlators.

Whence Obſerve, God is above the fear of the Creature.

As in the former verſe God is above any advantages or hopes that the Creature can give him; ſo he is above the fear of any hurt that the Creature can do him. As the goodneſs or righteouſneſs of man cannot benefit the Lord; ſo the wickedneſs and ſinfulneſs of man cannot at all impair the eternal glory and happineſs of the Lord. Though the wickedneſs of man be a darkening to the manifeſtations of his glory (and for that wicked men ſhall be judged) yet as to his eſſential glory all the wickedneſs in the world cannot darken that, nor be the leaſt abatement to it. Will he reprove thee for fear of thee? No, man cannot hurt the Lord by all his wickedneſs, and therefore

The puniſhment which God layeth upon wicked men is not after the manner of men. God doth not puniſh as man puniſheth.

Eliphaz here ſpeaks of that which is often indeed a true ground among men why they reprove or puniſh other men. Some reprove others upon a vain fear of them, and ſome upon a juſt fear of them. Why did the Jews accuſe and reprove Chriſt? Was it not for fear of him? At leaſt they pretended a fear, why elſe were they ſo haſty to have Jeſus Chriſt brought to judgment? (John 12. 47, 48.) Then gathered the Chief Prieſts and Phariſees a Council, and ſaid, What do we? For this man doth many Miracles: if we let him thus alone, all men will believe on him, and the Romans ſhall come and take away both our place and Nation. They crucified Chriſt for fear (though it was but a vain fear) that he would be the ruine of their ſtate; the Romans muſt needs come and deſtroy them, if they let him alone. Fear makes men cruel; and they are moſt ready to hurt others, who continually ſuſpect hurt from others. It hath been an ancient Obſervation, That Cowards are murderous and re- vengeful: While a man fears that ſuch a man will be his ruine, he ruines him if he can, and removes that out of his way which he ſuppoſeth ſtanding in the way of his own ſafety. Why did Pharaoh give command to ſlay the Male-children of the Jews, and oppreſs that people? It was upon a vain or cowardly fear, Come let us deal wiſely with them, leaſt they multiply, and it come to paſs that when there falleth out any war, they joyn alſo with our enemies, and fight againſt us, and ſo get them up out of the Land (Exod. 1. 10.) It is ſaid at the ſeventeenth verſe of that Chapter, that The Children of Iſrael were fruitful and (God fulfilling herein his Promiſe made to Abraham) increaſed abundantly, and multiplied, and waxed exceeding mighty, and the Land was filled with them. When God thus caſt a gracious eye upon them, Pharaoh and his Councellors caſt a jealous eye upon them; began to ſuſpect their multiplying might at laſt diminiſh him, that their riſing might prove his ruine. Therefore upon reaſon of State he muſt find out a way to ſuppreſs and keep them under as ſlaves and bondmen, whom his Anceſtors received as welcome gueſts, and had to that day enjoyed as faithful friends. Pharaoh being captivated with this fear, ſaw no way to free himſelf, but by taking away the freedom of that whole people. As ſome, through the prevalency of their own fears dare not do juſtice; ſo others through the prevalency of fear do that which is unjuſt. Take one Inſtance more, Why did Herod (Matth. 2.) ſend out to ſlay all the Children? It was for fear of the King of the Jews; he was afraid of Chriſt, and therefore that he might murder him, he gave that horrible ſentence to ſlay all the Infants. Again, ſome reprove and judge upon a due fear; for as Tyrants and wicked men are full of fear becauſe full of cruelty, and have ſuſpitious thoughts that others will wrong them, becauſe they have a mind to wrong every man; ſo juſt and righteous Magiſtrates when they ſee evil working, they muſt reprove and puniſh it, leſt it ſpread to the endangering of the publick Peace. This is a juſt fear, and ſuch as becomes a man, even a man of courage and integrity; ſuch may fear, that if ſeditious ſpirits be let alone, they will undermine a whole Nation, and deſtroy thouſands. A Magiſtrate reproves and judges Thieves and Murderers out of fear that if they increaſe no man ſhall live quietly. Such as either openly or ſecretly contrive evil againſt a Nation, the Magiſtrate from a juſt ground of fear deals with them and reproves, leſt they ſhould diſturb or infect the whole.

Veriſſimum eſt illud, quod inter argumentandum aſſumit Eliphaz, ex timore frequenter naſci aut vehementius accendi ſolere ſeveritatem in irrogando ſupplicio. Pined.

But the Lord doth not reprove any man for fear of him, he is of ſuch infinite ſtrength and ſtability, ſo far out of the reach of all the plots and contrivances of the wicked, that he needs not call them to account, leſt they ſhould hurt his State, pull him out of his Throne, ſpoil his Kingdom, or get his Dominion from him; the Lord is not afraid of any of theſe things; but the true reaſon why the Lord reproves wicked men, is, becauſe he hates their iniquities, and is a God of truth and judgment. Though Magiſtrates may puniſh not only out of the love of Righteouſneſs and Judgmen, but becauſe they fear a State may be ruin'd if they do it not; yet the Lord hath none of this fear, in regard of his State, but he doth it meerly out of love to Juſtice, and as a hater of wickedneſs.

He reproves man becauſe he hath ſinned againſt him, not becauſe he is afraid of him, as Eliphaz ſhews in the words which follow.

VERS. 5, 6, 7, 8, 9.

Is not thy wickedneſs great, and thine iniquity infinite?

For thou haſt taken a pledge of thy Brother for nought, and ſtripped the naked of their cloathing.

Thou haſt not given water to the weary to drink, and thou haſt with-holden bread from the hungry.

But as for the mighty man he had the earth, and the honourable man dwelt in it.

Thou haſt ſent widdows away empty, and the arms of the fatherleſs have been broken.

IN this Context Eliphaz intends to ſhew the true reaſon why God reproved Job, and entred into judgment with him, it was not (as was ſaid at the fourth Verſe) either becauſe God was afraid of him, or becauſe he feared God, but it was for his wickedneſs, as Eliphaz (though miſtaken) concluded againſt him: As if he had ſaid, God doth not puniſh thee becauſe he is afraid of thee, but becauſe he loveth juſtice, and hateth iniquity: Is not thy wickedneſs great, and thine iniquity infinite? That's the ſcope of theſe words, which we may fitly call Job's Indictment, and this Indictment is laid down firſt in general words. Verſ. 5. Is not thy wickedneſs great, and thine iniquity infinite? And here Job is not charged with wickedneſs and iniquity barely, but under a two-fold aggravation.

1. Great.
2. Infinite.

Secondly, We have his Indictment drawn out into particular Charges, or a ſpecification of ſome notorious ſins given againſt him the Verſes following.

This particular Charge conſiſts of two heads.

Firſt, Sins againſt man: Secondly, Sins againſt God: His ſuppoſed ſins againſt man, contained in the words now read, are of two ſorts: Firſt, Sins of commiſſion, or of the evil which he had done: Secondly, Sins of omiſſion, or of the good that he had not done. The evil which he chargeth him to have done, is two-fold: Firſt, An act of injuſtice, Taking a pledge, in the ſixth verſe. Secondly, An act of uncharitableneſs, Stripping the naked, in the ſame verſe.

Both which evils, or miſcarriages towards the honeſt poor are aggravated (ver. 8.) by his undue connivence at the wicked rich; as he was too ſevere againſt the poor, ſo he was over-favourable towards the great and mighty; But as for the mighty man he had the earth, and the honourable man dwelt in it: As if he had ſaid, Thou didſt never ſet thy ſelf to do juſtice upon the great ones, be they and do they what they will, they have the earth; thou didſt never put forth or exerciſe thy power to ſuppreſs and oppoſe their inſolencies; thy edge was turned only againſt inferiour ones: Thou tookeſt a pledge from the poor, and haſt ſtripped the naked of their cloathing.

His ſins of omiſſion are expreſſed in the ſeventh verſe; Thou haſt not given water to the weary; thou haſt withholden bread from the hungry: And in the ninth verſe, Thou haſt ſent widows away empty, and the armes of the fatherleſs have been broken: Which may be either taken thus, Thou haſt broken their armes, or thou haſt not given thy help and aſſiſtance to reſtore and relieve them when broken. Thus we have a light into the meaning of theſe five Verſes, as they are a Charge of ſin upon Job.

Verſe 5. Is not thy wickedneſs great?

The Queſtion may be taken two wayes; either conjecturally and doubtingly, or aſſertively and affirmingly. Uſually in Scripture ſuch Queſtions are reſolved into Aſſertions, and ſo divers interpreters reſolve this here; Is not thy wickedneſs great? That is, I conclude againſt thee, That thy wickedneſs is great, and that thy iniquities are infinite: So Maſter Broughton renders, Doubleſs thy evil is great. Others conceive it more clear to the mind of the Text, that this Queſtion ſhould be interpreted conjecturally, Is not thy wickedneſs great? That is, May we not ſuppoſe, that thy wickedneſs is great? May we not from (at leaſt) probable grounds think thus of thee? And that, firſt, from the general ſtate of man by nature; mans heart being ſinful, he may ſin, and ſin (as it were) without bounds, greatly. There is no man (ſaith Solomon, 1 Kings 8. 46.) that liveth and ſinneth not: Solomon puts it as a parentheſis in his prayer, but it is ſuch a parentheſis, as hooks in all mankind, it takes all in, Who is there that ſinneth not? So (Prov. 20. 9.) Who can ſay I am clean from my ſin? Now upon this general ground Eliphaz might ſuppoſe, Is not thy wickedneſs great? All men have this in their nature, and haſt not thou made improvement of it in thy life? All men being ſinful by nature, art not thou extreamly ſinful in practice?

Non tam hac ei ex profeſſo objice, quam cogitandum ei relinquit, num hac fecerit. Merc.

Again, He might make the ſuppoſition upon this ground, his preſent condition, or his affliction: Thou art greatly afflicted, thy afflictions are not of an ordinary ſize, or meaſure, therefore is not thy wickedneſs great, and thine iniquity beyond the ordinary meaſure? Upon this common rule he might ſuppoſe his ſin very great; for uſually God doth proportion and meaſure out puniſhments by our ſins. Thy ſufferings are very great, therefore are not thy ſins great too? Thus he might ſpeak conjecturally upon both theſe conſiderations: And yet if we conſider how poſitively he ſpeaks of particulars at the ſixth and ſeventh verſes, &c. Thou haſt taken a pledge of thy brother for nought, and ſtripped the naked of their cloathing, &c: He gives us but too much ground to think, that he did more then barely conjecture, while he ſaid,

Is not thy wickedneſs great?

רעתך Malum tuũ vox Hebræa pertinet ad improbitatẽ quandã & impudentiã, contra jus & æquum omnia conculcantem.

The word which we render wickedneſs, is by ſome ſpecially expounded of that wickedneſs which hath a kind of impudence in it, and which doth not only break, tranſgreſs, or ſtep over the Law, but ſpurns againſt it; every man that ſinneth ſteppeth over the Law, over the line, but there are ſome that kick at it, ſome who trample upon it, yea, they would deſtroy it; ſo ſome heighten the emphaſis of the word.

Malitia in ſacris interdum eſt afflictio, ærũna vexatio, pro malo pœnæ non culpæ accipit. Rab. Lev.

Again, the word is rendred by others as ſignifying the evil of puniſhment in this part of the verſe, and not the evil of ſin; Is not thy affliction great? Therefore thy iniquity is infinite. The Greek word (Matth. 6. 34.) anſwers this, Sufficient to the day is the evil thereof; that is, the trouble and the ſorrow of it: (Amos 3. 6.) Is there any evil in the City which the Lord hath not done? So here, Is not thy evil great? Thy evil of puniſhment? Therefore thy iniquity is infinite. But I rather fix it upon the former; though the word ſometimes ſignifies the evil of affliction, yet here I ſhall take it for the evil of ſin, or as we tranſlate, wickedneſs, which denotes not ordinary but great ſin; for though every wicked man be a ſinner, yet every ſinner is not properly a wicked man.

Malitiam dicit plurimam, ſed iniquitates infinitas, quia in pluribus peccat homo omittendo quam committendo. Aquin.

Further, wickedneſs in the former, and iniquity in the latter part of the verſe, may be thus diſtinguiſhed; wickedneſs ſpecially reſpects thoſe acts by which we hurt and wrong others; iniquity thoſe in which we paſs by or neglect the duty which we owe to others; and therefore Eliphaz calls his wickedneſs great, but his iniquities infinite; becauſe ſins of omiſſion are more in number then ſins of commiſſion: Man fails oftner by not doing the good required, then by doing the evil forbidden. Nature can eaſier forbear that which it likes, or pleaſeth it, then be converſant in that which it likes not, or with which it is diſpleaſed.

Is not thy wickedneſs great?

The word ſignifies both magnitude and multitude, and it may be taken both wayes here, for great in bulk, and great in number.

But it may be ſaid, Whoſe wickedneſs is not great? Or is any ſin little? Why then doth Eliphaz faſten this upon Job, Is not thy wickedneſs great?

I anſwer, Firſt, That it is unbecoming any man, to ſay his ſins are little; we ſhould not little, or leſſen our ſins, or have low thoughts of them: As we ought not to have low thoughts of any of the mercies of God, but to think them all great to us, yea, too great for us; ſo we ſhould not have light thoughts of any of our ſins, but judge the leaſt of them great, and the lighteſt of them heavy, yea, even too great and to heavy for us to bear. Nor doth any thing more greaten a mans ſin, then his opinion that it is little.

Secondly, I anſwer, That indeed no ſin is little: In the leaſt ſin that ever was committed, there is a greatneſs, as committed againſt the great God, as it is a breach of the Law, and an abuſe of the love of the Great God. Nevertheleſs, though every ſin, thus conſidered, is great, yet comparatively ſome ſins are but little; and ſins being weighed one with the other, we may give this diſtinction of them into little and great, light and heavy. And as ſome godly men are faithful, and fear God above many; ſo ſome wicked men are ſinful and diſhonour God above many. Is not thy wickedneſs great?

Hence Note, 'Tis our duty not only to take notice of our ſins, but of the greatneſs and degree of our ſins.

Eliphaz doth well to put Job upon that inquiry, Is not thy wickedneſs great? Though he did ill ſo groundleſly to ſuſpect, much more to conclude that it was ſo. When Moſes (Exod. 32. 31.) interceded for the people, after they had made the golden Calf, he makes report of their ſin to God in the fulleſt aggravation of it; Oh, this people have ſinned a great ſin, and have made them Gods of Gold: He doth not only confeſs in their behalf, that they had ſinned; but they had ſinned greatly, They have (ſaith he) ſinned a ſin; that's more then to do a thing that is ſinful, and which is yet more, They have ſinned a great ſin; and which is moſt of all, They (though they have been taught, and have profeſſed that God made them) have made them Gods of Gold. David makes this the ground why he did beg pardon of his ſin (Pſal. 25. 11.) Pardon mine iniquity, for it is great. As we are to look upon the greatneſs of ſin, to humble our ſouls with godly ſorrow; ſo we are to look upon the greatneſs of ſin when we ſue to the Lord for pardon; pardon my ſin for it is great: our very ſenſibleneſs that our ſin is great, is a prevailing Argument with God to pardon it; and our inſenſibleneſs that our ſins are great, gives the greateſt ſtop to the pardon of them. And as every ſin hath the more need of pardon, by how much the greater it is; ſo God will have the more glory in pardoning it, by how much the greater it is. The great wounds and ſickneſſes of the Patient have the more need of curing; and if a Phyſitian cure a great wound or ſickneſs, he hath the more honour by the cure. Now that we may take the trueſt meaſure of our ſins, we muſt look upon them, firſt in their nature and kind, of what ſort they are, and to what they relate in their commiſſion; ſecondly, in their circumſtances, when, how, and in what manner they have been committed. That ſin which is but little in the nature of it, may be a very great one in the circumſtances of it. As there are ſome mercies which we receive from God, little in their kind, yet great in their circumſtances, and very obliging; ſo are our ſins. Some ſins are very horrid in their own nature, they lay the Conſcience waſte, and eat out the very principles of Godlineſs, ſuch are Atheiſm, Blaſphemy, and Idolatry. The ſin of the people of Iſrael in making Gods of Gold, how deteſtable was it? A golden God, what an ugly ſight is that? And indeed there are many ſins which by how much they have the more external beauty and glory upon them, the more ugly and filthy they are. Other ſins are ſmall in their kind, yet by additional conſiderations they ſwell into an immenſe vaſtneſs, and become out of meaſure ſinful.

For inſtance, Firſt, To ſin againſt light, that is, not only to commit a known ſin, but to commit it knowingly ('Tis poſſible, that while we know ſuch a thing to be a ſin, yet to do it unknowingly, or not to know that we have done it: He that knoweth it is a ſin to tell any untruth, may yet tell one, and not know it: But) when we do that which is a known ſin, and likewiſe know that we do it, then we have no cloak for our ſin.

Secondly, To ſin againſt many received mercies, greatens it exceedingly: Thus the Lord aggravates the ſin of David, I have done thus and thus for thee, and if this had been too little, I would moreover have given thee ſuch and ſuch things; Wherefore haſt thou deſpiſed the commandment of the Lord to do evil in his ſight, 2 Sam. 12. 8, 9.

Thirdly, It greatens ſin when continued in after warnings, and renewed admonitions; He that being often reproved hardeneth his neck, ſhall ſuddenly be deſtroyed, and that without remedy (Prov. 29. 1.) The greatneſs of his puniſhment (he ſhall be (not afflicted, but) deſtroyed) the quickneſs of it (he ſhall ſuddenly be deſtroyed) the irrecoverableneſs of it (and that without remedy) all theſe with one conſent vote the greatneſs of that ſin, whatſoever it be in its kind, which is perſiſted in after perſwaſion to deſiſt and depart from it. The Church is commanded to paſs her extreameſt cenſure upon that offending brother, who having been told his fault; firſt, by that brother alone whom he hath offended; ſecondly, by him and two more aſſociated as witneſſes; thirdly, then, by the Church gathered in the Name of Chriſt (Matth. 18. 16, 17.) But if he will not hear thee, then take one or two more, that in the mouth of two or three witneſſes, every word may be eſtabliſhed; and if he ſhall neglect to hear them, tell it the Church; but if he neglect to hear the Church, let him be unto thee as an heathen man and a Publican. It is dangerous enough to ſin againſt a rule; but 'tis more dangerous to ſin againſt a reproof, eſpecially againſt the reproof of a whole Church.

Fourthly, When we ſin in the ſight of judgments upon our ſelves, or others, whether for the ſame, or other ſins: This is as if a thief ſhould ſteal before the Judge, or under the gibbet, while he ſeeth others arraigned or executed for ſtealing. It is very evil to ſin againſt Judgments threatened; but it is far worſe to ſin againſt Judgments executed. That wrath which is revealed from Heaven againſt all unrighteouſneſs to the ear in the Word of God, ſhould ſtop us from ſin; much more that which is revealed to the eye in the works of God.

Fifthly, When we ſin againſt our own promiſes not to ſin, when our own words condemn us, as well as the Word of God, this ſtains every ſin with a double guilt.

Sixthly, The greatning of a ſin is from the repeating of it after it hath been repented of. To fall into any ſin out of which we have riſen, makes our fall the more grievous; when a ſinner licks up his own vomit, when he builds again the things which he had deſtroyed, he makes himſelf a tranſgreſſor indeed. They who repent not cannot expect mercy; what remains then for them but a certain fearful expectation of Judgment, who repent of their repentings?

Seventhly, Sin is greatly increaſed when acted with deliberation; to be hurried into a ſin though great, is not ſo great as to do a leſs evil conſultively, or to adviſe upon it and do it; ſome ſin for want of advice, many ſin againſt advice, and not a few ſin with advice, that is adviſedly. 'Tis hard to find out a way to give them comfort, who ſin with counſel. They who are wiſe to do evil, or who do evil as a piece of their wiſdom (ſuch every deliberate action is eſteemed to be) will be found the greateſt fools. All ſin is folly, but thoſe ſins have moſt of the fool in them, which we think we do wiſely. In all theſe caſes we may well ſay to any man, as Eliphaz here to Job, Is not thy wickedneſs great?

And thine iniquity infinite?

ערד Perverſitas & non finis iniquitatibus tuis. Heb. ἀναρίθμητοι. 70. Rebellio æterna. Vatabl.

The word which we tranſlate iniquity, implyeth perverſeneſs, or frowardneſs in ſinning; Is not thine iniquity infinite? The Hebrew is, There is no end to thy iniquity; or thou doſt commit iniquity without end. The Septuagint render it thus, Are not thy iniquities ſo many that they cannot be numbred? Are they not innumerable? Another thus, Is not thy rebellion eternal? And ſo the ſence reacheth either the multiplication of acts, or the continuation of time. Our reading is comprehenſive of both; Is not thine iniquity infinite?

But how could Eliphaz make ſuch a ſuppoſition as this? Seeing there is nothing infinite but God, and it is altogether impoſſible that there ſhould be two infinites. The Heavens cannot hold two Suns, much leſs can the world hold two Infinites. God is the only Infinite; therefore ſin is not infinite as God is infinite: Firſt, That is infinite which is without end: Secondly, That is infinite which is without bound; in both God is infinite: As he had no beginning, ſo he ſhall have no end or period of his being; He is infinite in reference to duration or time; and he is infinite in reference to place or extent: He fills Heaven and Earth, and the Heaven of Heavens cannot contain him. The Hebrew phraſe in the Text, without end, anſwers our tranſlation, infinite; for infinite is that which hath no bounds or end. So then in a ſtrict and proper ſence, there is nothing infinite but God. And infinity runneth through all the titles of God; he is infinite in power, infinite in wiſdom, juſtice, righteouſneſs, and mercy: It remains then to be further conſidered, how we may underſtand this queſtion, Is not thine iniquity infinite?

I anſwer, Sin is not infinite properly, yet in a vulgar ſence ſin may be called infinite; for according to common acception, we call that infinite which is very great, or which exceeds all ordinary bounds, though not all bounds; only that is properly infinite which exceeds all bounds; but we uſually ſay, that is infinite which exceeds ordinary bounds. Thus ſome mens ſins only are infinite. For though every ſin be a breaking of the bounds which God hath ſet us, either in exceſs or in defect; yet they who ſin after a common rate or proportion of ſinning, may be ſaid to keep their bounds in ſinning. For what the Apoſtle ſpeaks of ſome tryals and temptations (1 Cor. 10. 13.) the ſame may be ſaid of ſome ſins and tranſgreſſions, that they are common to man. But they who ſin (as the Prophet ſpeaks) with a high hand, or with both hands greedily, they who draw iniquity with cords of vanity, and ſin as it were with cart-roaps, theſe do not only break the everlaſting bounds of the Law, but the ordinary bounds of ſin. Their ſins are not common (in the act, though the principle be) to man. They ſin as few men ever ſinned, they ſin like Devils rather then like men, and therefore (under this notion) their ſin is deſervedly called infinite.

Secondly, We may ſay, that ſin hath an infiniteneſs in it in reference to the object, God; and ſo not only a great ſin, and many ſins, but ſmall ſins, or any one ſin may be ſaid to have an infiniteneſs in it, becauſe it is committed againſt an infinite God. And hence it is that nothing can expiate ſin but what hath an infiniteneſs in it; the leaſt ſin calls for the blood of Chriſt to take it away, which blood hath a kind of infinity in it; for though the ſufferings and blood of Chriſt were not properly infinite, becauſe they were the ſufferings of the humane nature; yet the Divine nature ſhed forth an infinite worth and value upon his ſufferings; and therefore we are ſaid to be redeemed (or purchaſed) by the blood of God (Acts 20. 28.) That is, by the blood of that perſon who is God, though the humane nature only was capable of having blood ſhed. Thus we may ſay, that the leaſt ſin, with reſpect to the object, is infinite, God himſelf being offended and wronged by every ſin.

Thirdly, As this infiniteneſs may be conſidered in reference to the extent of any one ſin (that reaching as high as God) ſo to the number, or rather to the innumerableneſs of our ſins. There is an Arithmetical as well as a Geometrical infinity in ſin. Thus the Septuagint (as was ſaid before) render the Text, Are not thine iniquities innumerable? That hath a kind of infinity which cannot be numbred: But cannot our ſins be numbred? Are they infinite in number?

I anſwer, Sins may be conſidered two wayes: Firſt, In their ſpecies and kinds: Secondly, In their acts: If we conſider ſins in their ſpecies and kinds, ſo they are not innumerable, for it is poſſible to number up all the ſeveral heads, diviſions, and kinds of ſin; but if we conſider ſin in reference to acts, ſo every mans ſins are innumerable; yet this innumerableneſs of ſins, in reference to acts, may be conſidered either abſolutely, or as to us. The acts of ſin are not abſolutely, or in themſelves innumerable, but as to us they are innumerable; they are more then any man can number. John ſaith (Revel. 7. 9.) After this I beheld, and lo a great multitude, which no man could number (beſides thoſe that were ſealed of every Tribe) of all Nations, and Kindreds, &c. This great multitude was not in it ſelf without number, but as to mans Arithmetick it was, no man could number it. The hairs of our head, and the ſands of the Sea, are numerable to God, but to us innumerable. David (Pſal. 40. 12.) ſpeaks firſt of innumerable evils, and then of innumerable ſins; Innumerable evils compaſs me about, mine iniquities have taken hold upon me, ſo that I am not able to look up; they are more then the hairs of my head, therefore my heart faileth me: When he ſaith, They are more then the hairs of my head, his meaning is, they are innumerable; I can no more tell the ſum of my ſins, then the ſum of my hairs. Chriſt to aſſure his Diſciples in time of their afflictions and ſufferings, that he will take care of them, tells them, The very hairs of your head are all numbred (Math. 10. 30.) As if he had ſaid, Seeing God taketh care of thoſe inconſiderable (not parts, but) excrements of the body, ſurely then he will take care of thoſe more noble parts of your body, and moſt of all of that moſt noble part of you (which is your all) your ſouls. The hairs of our heads are innumerable to us, but God numbers them. The ſins of our hearts and lives are all numbred by God. Thou telleſt my wandrings (ſaith holy David, Pſal. 56. 8.) He means it of his wandrings by perſecution, and 'tis as true of his wandrings by tranſgreſſion. But what man knows the errors or wandrings either of his heart or life? (Pſal. 19. 12.) He that hath feweſt ſins, hath more then he can number; and therefore every mans ſins are to him in number infinite.

Fourthly, Iniquities may be called infinite in reference to the will, or the ſpirit of him that committeth thoſe iniquities: Thoſe ſins are without bounds, to which man would never ſet a bound. The natural man would never end ſinning, therefore his ſins are without end, or infinite. The Prophet (Jer. 13: 27.) ſpeaks reprovingly to that people in the name of the Lord; I have ſeen thy adulteries, and thy neighings, the lewdneſs of thy whoredom, and thine abominations on the hills in the fields; wo unto thee, O Jeruſalem, wilt thou not be made clean? when ſhall it once be? As if he had ſaid, O Jeruſalem, thou haſt no will to be made clean; or, thou wouldſt never be clean, if thou mighteſt have thy will; When ſhall it once be? The time is yet to come when thou wouldeſt have it to be ſo; thou haſt a mind to pollute thy ſelf ſtill, but no mind to waſh thy ſelf from thy pollution. The ſins of a perſon or people are then infinite, or without end, when they diſcover that they have no mind to leave ſinning. A godly mans deſires to do good, are infinite, and ſo are the deſires of a wicked man to do evil. This Prophet had ſpoken to Jeruſalem in the ſame Language (chap. 4. 14.) How long ſhall vain thoughts in thee? When wilt thou be weary of theſe Lodgers? when wilt thou bid theſe Gueſts be gone, which thou haſt thus long bid welcome? The Church of God doth ſometimes ſuffer evil to lodge very long in her, even in the midſt of her, as it were, at her very heart; but the world lodgeth or lieth (continually in evil (1 John 5. 19.) and there (as it is the world) it will lie for ever, ſoak'd and ſteep'd in evil. Some give this as one reaſon to juſtifie the infiniteneſs or everlaſtingneſs of the puniſhment that is laid upon impenitent ſinners in hell. The damned are under endleſs ſufferings, becauſe they would have ſinned without end: A wicked man would live long, yea, he would have no end of his life here, he would live ever, that he might ſin for ever; therefore the Lord giveth him a life, not ſuch a one as he would have, but ſuch a one as he deſerves to have; which is a death for ever. They die eternally for ſin, who would have lived eternally in ſin. Take a Scripture or two more to illuſtrate this way of the infinity of mans ſin (Jer. 8. 5.) Why is this people of Jeruſalem ſlidden back by a perpetual backſliding? they hold faſt deceit, they refuſe to return: Here are three phraſes noting this one thing. Firſt, They hold faſt deceit. Secondly, They refuſed to return. Thirdly, Theirs was a perpetual backſliding; or, as ſome read it, an eternal rebellion, an obſtinate rebellion, a ſtrong and mighty rebellion; the Seventy call it an impudent, ſhameleſs rebellion: All theſe are proper Epithetes of that obſtinacy and ſetledneſs of reſolution which is in the heart of man by nature to continue in ſin; yet there is a further rendring of the words, which as the Original will bear, ſo it hath an elegancy in it: Why is this people of Jeruſalem ſlidden back by a conquering, or a prevailing backſliding? A perpetual Backſliding hath conqueſt or triumph attributed to it upon a twofold conſideration; firſt, In reference to others ſins. Final obſtinacy or impenitency lifts up its head above all other ſins, and ſits as King among them; impenitency under any ſin committed, is greater then the ſin committed; not to repent of the evil we have done, is worſe then the evil which we do. Impenitency ſeals the ſoul under condemnation. Repentance conquers ſin, but impenitency is the conquering ſin. Secondly, 'Tis called triumphing or conquering ſin, becauſe it ſeems (as it were) to carry the day againſt the mercy and goodneſs of God; that's a ſad conqueſt indeed: not that any ſin, no, nor impenitency for ſin, exceeds the mercy and goodneſs of God; for his thoughts of mercy are as high above our acts of ſin, as they are above our thoughts of his mercy, and that is as high as the heaven is in compariſon of the earth (Iſa. 55. 9.) But the mercy of the Lord is ſaid to be overcome by perpetual backſlidings, becauſe the Lord will not be merciful to ſuch; thus final impenitency may be called a triumphing or conquering ſin, ſeeing the mercy of God ſeems to yield unto it. They will not humble themſelves to ſeek mercy, yea, they ſlight and deſpiſe mercy, therefore they ſhall not find mercy. The Prophet Jeremy repreſents the Lord thus expoſtulating again with the Jewiſh Nation (ch. 5. 22, 23.) Fear ye not me, ſaith the Lord, will ye not tremble at my preſence, which have placed the Sand for the bound of the Sea, by a perpetual decree, that it cannot paſs it, and though the waves thereof toſs themſelves, yet can they not prevail; and though they roar, yet can they not paſs over it; but this people hath a revolting and rebellious heart, they are revolted and gone. The words, as I conceive, have theſe two things in them; Firſt, That the Lord is to be feared, who doth ſuch things, who ſet bounds to the Sea, &c. Secondly, That the wickedneſs of mans heart is admirable, or rather, that we are to be aſtoniſhed at the wickedneſs of mans heart, which is more boiſterous and diſobedient then the raging waves of the Sea. The Lord ſets bounds to the waves of the Sea; which waves in their own nature are altogether boundleſs; liquid waves have no bounds of their own, yet the Lord having put bounds to them, they are kept in bounds. The Sand bounds the Sea, ſo that though the waves thereof toſs, they cannot prevail; though they roar, they cannot paſs over; but this people have revolted and are gone; as if he had ſaid, I the Lord have put a bound to the Sea, I have alſo ſet a bound to the wickedneſs of mans heart; what is that? My Word, my Law. The Law of God is a moral bound to ſtop and keep in compaſs the raging waves of mans corruption. God doth not alwayes put an external bound by ſword and judgment to ſtop men whether they will or no from ſin, but he alwayes ſets a moral bound to ſtop them; this is ſuppoſed in the Text, I put a bound to the Sea, to the Sea alſo of mans heart, to the wickedneſs that is there; but this people are revolted and gone, they have broken all my bounds, even that perpetual decree of my righteous Law. Now as when the Sea breaks its bounds, the waters flow infinitely, there is no ſtopping them; ſo when the heart of man breaks bounds, revolts and is gone, he ſins infinitely, he makes no end of ſinning. By theſe Scriptures we may underſtand in what ſence the iniquities of wicked men may be ſaid to be infinite; though nothing is infinite in a ſtrict and proper ſence, but God himſelf.

Vellet ſine fine vivere, ut poſſet ſine fine peccare. Greg.

Is not thy wickedneſs great, and thine iniquity infinite?

But hath Job given Eliphaz any juſt occaſion of this ſurmiſe, that his ſin was in this ſence infinite? Did he ever obſerve either wickedneſs in general, or thoſe particular wickedneſſes which he preſently enumerates; taking a pledge, denying relief of the poor, ſtripping the naked, &c? Had he ſeen any of theſe evils acted by Job? Certainly he had not. Job was a man of another frame of life then theſe things import; theſe black lines and colours would never make the picture of Job's heart or life; this is as ill a draught of a man as could be made; yet Eliphaz puts all this upon Job, at leaſt, by ſuppoſition; Is it not thus? But what reaſon had he for this ſuppoſition? None but this, the greatneſs of his affliction, the infinite troubles that were upon him. God ſet no bounds to Job's ſorrows; therefore he thought Job had ſinned beyond all bounds. Hence obſerve,

> We are ready to judge their ſins great, who are the greateſt ſufferers.

Though we know nothing by them, though we can charge nothing upon them, yet this thought riſeth naturally in us, when we ſee any under great and extraordinary ſufferings, ſurely they are great and extraordinary ſinners. The worſt of ſinners never ſuffered more in this world, then the beſt of Saints: Witneſs thoſe Jewiſh Worthies, whoſe torments are reported by the Author to the Hebrews (chap. 11. 37.) And as theſe were adjudged to ſuffer, becauſe they were thought the worſt of ſinners, ſo, doubtleſs, many who ſaw them ſuffer, thought them ſuch, though they knew nothing done by them to make them ſuch. Read alſo this Spirit (Luke 13. 2. Acts 28. 4.) This hath been formerly obſerved from other paſſages in this Book, and therefore I only touch it, and paſs away.

Again Eliphaz ſeems to take Job off from the wrong ground of his ſufferings, and tells him, though he looked to other reaſons, yet the true reaſon was the greatneſs of his wickedneſs, and the numberleſneſs of his iniquities. Hence obſerve,

> That, Few think of, or hit upon any other cauſe of ſuffering, but ſin.

Sin is ſo much and ſo often the cauſe of ſuffering, that we do it no wrong to ſuſpect it as the cauſe of all ſufferings; and it is indeed one kind of cauſe (cauſa ſine qua non) of all our ſufferings, ſo that we can hardly wrong ſin by this ſuſpition, but we may eaſily wrong both God and man by it. When the blind man came before Chriſt, his Diſciples asked him, ſaying, Maſter, who did ſin, this man or his Parents, that he was born blind? They could hit upon nothing but ſin, why the man was born blind (John 9. 2.) But at the third verſe, Chriſt anſwered, Neither hath this man ſinned nor his Parents; he vindicates both from this ſuſpition. What man was this? and who were his parents, that they ſinned not? Were they clean from ſin? Not ſo neither; but the meaning of Chriſt is this, neither hath this man ſinned, nor his parents, ſo, as that either his ſin or theirs ſhould be reckoned the ſpecial cauſe why he was born blind. There was ſomewhat elſe in it, which the Diſciples took no notice of, nor did they underſtand. Chriſt doth not deny but that a mans own ſin, and the ſin of his parents may be a cauſe of blindneſs; but neither the one nor the other was the cauſe in that mans caſe: as if Chriſt had ſaid, Can you think of nothing elſe why a man is afflicted, but only his ſin? There are many other cauſes of ſuffering beſides that. The cauſe why ſome ſome ſuffer, is the trial of their Graces. The cauſe why many ſuffer, is to bear witneſs to the Truth, and to encourage others both in the profeſſion of it, and in perſecutions for it. And Chriſt particularly aſſignes another cauſe of the ſufferings of the blind man, That the work of God might be made manifeſt in him: That the work of God in his power and mercy might be ſeen in reſtoring this man to his ſight, therefore was he born without the power of ſeeing. The blindneſs of that man was an occaſion to make a very glorious diſcovery of God. Much of God had not been ſo eminently ſeen at that time, if that man had alwayes ſeen. Many are caſt down upon beds of ſickneſs, or into a ſtate of poverty, that the work of God in raiſing them up to health and plenty, may be made manifeſt. The deſign of God looks beyond the ſin of man in the afflictions of moſt men, yet man ſeldom looks beyond it. Note from the whole verſe,

Thirdly, That, We are more ready to judge the ſins of others great, then our own.

Is not thy wickedneſs great, and thine iniquities infinite?] Eliphaz might have ſaid as much of himſelf and his own ſin; and it had been but a duty to have done ſo; we ſhou'd not aggravate the ſins of others, nor extenuate or leſſen our own; we ſhould not ſet the ſins of others in open light, nor provide coverings for our own, yet moſt commonly we run the contrary courſe; we have a favourable opinion, and excuſes ready for what we have done, while we have hard thoughts of, and give harſh cenſures upon what others do; our own ſins we can call moats, and the ſin of others beams. The better any man is, the better he judges others, and the worſe of himſelf. Paul ſpake no complement, while he ſaid, that he was leſs then the leaſt of all Saints, and the chief of ſinners; uſually they who are the ſevereſt obſervers and cenſurers of others, either flatter, or have not well obſerved themſelves.

Fourthly, Foraſmuch as Eliphaz ſeeing Job under great ſufferings, ſaith to him, Is not thy wickedneſs great? The counſel in it ſelf was ſeaſonable. Hence obſerve,

That, In time of ſuffering, it is good both to put our ſelves and others upon enquiry about our ſins.

So the Prophet (Lam. 3. 39, 40.) Why doth a living man complain, a man for the puniſhment of his ſins? Let us ſearch and try our wayes, and turn again to the Lord: Times of afflictions ſhould be times of inquiſition; when the Lord is ſmiting, we ſhould be ſearching; when we have received many wounds, it is time for us to be ſuſpecting our ſelves of many ſins; and the counſel of others is not to be rejected, when ſeeing us in ſorrow, they adviſe us to conſider what our ſins are, how great and how many. For though we ſhould be tender in preſſing thoſe who are under the load and burden of affliction, with the burden of their ſins, yet they who are ſo, ſhall do well and wiſely, to preſs it upon themſelves.

Fiſthly, Whereas Eliphaz ſaith, Is not thy wickedneſs great, and thine iniquity infinite? And in the next verſe, concludes upon it; Thou haſt taken a pledge from thy brother for nought, &c. All which were but conjectures and ſuſpitions; obſerve,

That, Suppoſitions and conjectures are no fit grounds, upon which to build a judgment concerning the faultineſs of others.

We muſt not cenſure upon I hear ſo, I ſuppoſe ſo, I think ſo; but upon I know it is ſo: Many have run into great ſin by judging the ſins of others great. Judge not (ſaith our Saviour, Matth. 7. 1.) that ye be not judged. He ſpeaks not againſt all judgment; but either, Firſt, Againſt ſevere and harſh judging; or, Secondly, Againſt falſe judging; or, Thirdly, Againſt inconſiderate or raſh judging. When we judge without due ground, not knowing the why or wherefore of our judgment, take heed of ſuch judging, that ye be not judged, that is, leſt having judged others unduly, ye receive your due in judgment. Eliphaz had nothing upon knowledge to charge Job for, yet while he queſtions, Is not thy wickedneſs great? He doth more then ſeemingly conclude that his ſin was very great, and his iniquities infinite. And in the next verſe, in ſtead of querying, he comes to peremptory concluding.

Verſe 6. For thou haſt taken a pledge from thy brother for nought, and ſtripped the naked of their cloathing.

Now begins the ſpecial Charge or Indictment; now he enumerates ſeveral ſins: As if he had ſaid, What doſt thou ſtand looking for matter or reaſons why thou art thus afflicted? Here are the reaſons, I will name them to thee; Thou haſt taken a pledge from thy brother for nought. Thus Eliphaz poureth upon him, and diſchargeth whole vollies of ſhot, but all at random, and beſides the mark. Before, he ſpake in the third perſon; he ſpeaks now in the ſecond: Thou, thou art the man, thou haſt taken a pledge. Again, Eliphaz had formerly dealt with Job as an hypocrite: he then granted that he had ſome ſhews of holineſs, and ſome appearance or counterfeit of goodneſs at leaſt; now he denieth that: now he pulls off his vizor or mask, and objects againſt him bare-faced. Before he charged him with falſeneſs of heart, while he profeſſed and practiſed Religion; but now he objects ſuch practices againſt him, as no man doth, who hath but a profeſſion of Religion. He objects thoſe crimes againſt him which are proper to prophane open ſinners, to common oppreſſors, who raiſe themſelves upon the ruines, and enrich themſelves by the ſpoiles of their weaker brethren: Theſe are ſinners not only againſt the Law of God, but light of Nature; theſe are acts not only of impiety, but of cruelty, inhumanity and tyranny.

Thou haſt taken a pledge from thy brother for nought.

Job was a Magiſtrate, and this would have aggravated his ſin exceedingly, if it had been true; for any man to oppreſs another, is very wickedneſs; but for a Magiſtrate, who is ſet up to be a protector, a reliever of others, a helper of the friendleſs, and a Judge of the widow, for him to carry himſelf thus, for him to oppreſs and grind the faces of the poor, is moſt tyrannical. Thus Ariſtotle defines a Tyrant; He is one that rules ſo as to turn all to his own private benefit or profit: He that governs ſo, governs for himſelf; whereas true government ſeeks and reſpects the good of others. Juſt Governors are a general bleſſing, and their aim is the common, not their private wealth. Thus Eliphaz renders Job a very Tyrant, who, when he ſhould be a nurſing-father to his Countrey, proves a devourer of it; and when he ſhould provide bread for thoſe about him, he takes their bread, yea, their blood from them, and gives them a ſtone. Thou haſt taken a pledge from thy brother for nought.

Tyrannus eſt, qui ita dominatur, ut ad proprium commodum & utilitatem omnia conferat. Ar. l. 4. Polit. & 1. Eth.

There are three aggravations of his ſin ſuppoſed in theſe words.

First, That he took a pledge.
Secondly, That he took it of a brother.
Thirdly, That he took it for nought.

Thou haſt taken a pledge.] The Hebrew is no more then this, Thou haſt pledged. The word ſignifies alſo to bind or faſten a thing as with a cord; and the reaſon is, becauſe a pledge given is an obligation, a tie or bond to perform the promiſe made, or pay the debt contracted. A promiſe is an audible bond, but a pledge is a viſible bond. It is no ſin, in it ſelf, to take a pledge, no more then it is a ſin to buy, ſell, or to engage a man any other way, to perform a bargain, or repay a debt. The Law of God publiſhed by Moſes, allowed the taking of a pledge; what is it then which Eliphaz chargeth upon Job as ſinful in taking a pledge? I conceive there are two things which ſhew ſinfulneſs in taking a pledge, and that both are implied here.

In Hebræo ſimplex eſt verbum חבל quod eſt pignorare, aut pignus accipere, idem eſt obligare.

Firſt, He intimates that Job did not wait to receive a pledge at the hand of his brother, but he did, as it were, ruſh in upon him, and took the pledge; for ſo tender was the Lord in reference to the poor of his people, or to thoſe that ſhould be in need to borrow of their brethren, and ſo give a pledge for ſecurity, that he giveth this ſpecial order (Deut. 24. 10.) When thou doſt lend thy brother any thing, thou ſhalt not go into his houſe to fetch his pledge (It was not unlawful to receive a pledge from his brother, but to go into his houſe, was againſt the Law) but thou ſhalt ſtand abroad, and the man ſhall bring it out to thee. Some conceive that this was the ſin charged upon Job; Thou haſt taken a pledge from thy brother, thou haſt not according to this expreſs Law of God, tarried for it; and ſuppoſing that Eliphaz and Job lived before the giving of that Law, yet the Light of Nature teacheth, that we ſhould not preſs a man, or pull his pledge from him, but that the borrower ſhould go into his houſe, and bringing his pledge, deliver it up freely with his own hand into the hand of the lender. It is an affliction to have need to borrow, and therefore the borrower ſhould be ſo tenderly dealt with by the lender, as not to add affliction to him. It is a courteſie to lend to him that is in need, but as ſome in giving, ſo moſt in lending, ſpoil all the courteſie of it; while they lend their money, they ſnatch or gripe at their ſecurity; whereas the old Law ſaid (the equity whereof, though not the formality, remaines to this day) Thou ſhalt not go into thy brothers houſe to fetch his pledge, but thou ſhalt ſtand abroad, and the man ſhall bring it out to thee. Some Criticks tell us, that this is ſignified in the Etymology of the Latine word, which ſignifies a pledge: Namely, that the Lender ſhould not take, but receive it from the hand of the Borrower. It is the duty of borrowers to pay: The wicked borroweth and payeth not again (Pſal. 37. 21.) The Apoſtles rule to the godly is, Ow no man any thing but to love one another (Rom. 13. 8.) Now, as it is the duty of the borrower to pay, ſo of the lender to be moderate, and not to exact or impoſe heavily upon him, for the aſſuring of his payments. As he that buyeth, ſhould be as if he bought not, ſo he that lends, ſhould be (in this reſpect) as if he lent not; he ſhould lend with ſo much mildneſs and meekneſs of ſpirit, as if he gave rather then lent; or as if (the contrary whereof Solomon found in his experience, Prov. 22. 7.) himſelf the lender, were ſervant to the borrower. Job is charged firſt with failing in this; as if he had over-eagerly preſſed upon his brother for a pledge; Thou haſt taken a pledge from thy brother.

Ipſa pignoris Etymologia, docere hominem videtur pignus non tam propria manu auferendum ab invito & miſero debitore, quam accipiendum nonniſi ipſius debitoris manu oblatum: pignus enim appellatum eſt à pugno, quia res quæ pignori dantur, manu traduntur. Caj.

Secondly, The taking of a pledge from a brother, may be expounded of with-holding a pledge when it is called for, or of the not reſtoring it, when the Covenants are performed. This is not only to take it, but to take it away; ſuppoſe the pledge hath been given into a mans hand, yet if he will not reſtore it, or give it back out of his hand when called for, but make excuſes or delayes, This is to take away the pledge. And thus ſome make out the ſin of the Text, Thou haſt taken a pledge, that is, thou haſt ſwept it quite away, thou haſt refuſed to reſtore the pledge, when that which was borrowed upon it, hath been in due time tendered to be payed or reſtored. The Prophet Ezekiel (chap. 18. 14, 15, 16.) numbers the contrary practices among thoſe Negatives for which the Lord declares himſelf much pleaſed with the ſon of a wicked father; A ſon that ſeeth all his fathers ſins that he hath done, and doth not ſuch like, that hath not eaten upon the mountains, neither hath lift up his eyes to the Idols of the houſe of Iſrael, that hath not defiled his neighbours wife, neither hath oppreſſed any; that hath not withholden the pledge, neither hath ſpoiled by violence, &c. He ſhall not die for the iniquity of his father, he ſhall ſurely live. Here ſinning in the matter of a pledge, is pitcht upon with-holding it, not upon taking it: For though a man have a pledge fairly delivered up to him, though he doth not ruſh into the borrowers houſe, and there be his own carver, taking what himſelf liſteth, to ſecure that which he hath lent, yet if he with-hold the pledge when it is required and deſired to be returned upon promiſed ſatisfaction made, this very ſinful and oppreſſive. Some, when they get a good thing in their hands, they are loth to part with it, and will have a device to prove it forfeited by the Borrower, when indeed 'tis only coveted by the Lender. Hence note,

> That, Violently to take, or unjuſtly to detain the pledge committed to us, is to act the part of the oppreſſor.

That Law which ſaith, Thou ſhalt not ſteal, doth as much forbid the detaining in our hands, as the laying of our hands upon that which is our neighbours. And he that with-holds the pledge when the debtor is ready, and offers to redeem it, is like him that with-holds the debt when the lender deſires him, and he is able to repay it. Thou haſt taken or with-holden a pledge; that's thy ſin.

Secondly, There is a further aggravation of ſin in the words reſpecting the perſon from which the pledge was taken; a Brother: Thou haſt taken a pledge from thy Brother. This addeth to the ſin; we ſhould be kind to all, but eſpecially to a brother. A brother may be taken either ſtrictly, for one next or near by birth or blood, a brother by conſanguinity; ſuch are in the moſt proper ſence, our brethren and our own fleſh. Or the word Brother may be taken in a large ſence, for any that are near to us, as being either of the ſame profeſſion of Religion with us, or living in the ſame City, Society, or under the ſame Government with us. Theſe are our brethren and our own fleſh too. And ſo the Prophet calleth them, even when pinched with hunger and nakedneſs, the more to move the bowels of our compaſſion towards them (Iſa. 58. 7.) When thou ſeeſt the naked, that thou cover him, and that thou hide not thy ſelf from thy own fleſh: As richly cloathed as thou art, and as naked as they are, thine own fleſh they are. When Eliphaz ſaith, Thou haſt taken a pledge from thy brother, he takes in brethren under all diſtinctions. This he adds to heighten Job's ſin; Thou tookeſt a pledge from thy brother. Hence note,

> That, As it is uujuſt and uncharitable to wrong any man, ſo moſt of all, thoſe that are near to us.

To wrong a brother of any latitude or degree is ſinful, and ſtill the nearer the brother is, the more ſinful it is to wrong him; the ſin which a man commits againſt himſelf, is therefore greateſt of all, becauſe a man is neareſt to himſelf; ſo in proportion the nearer any one is to us in any relation, the more we ſin in wronging him. The Apoſtle puts it under that notion; If a brother or a ſiſter be naked and deſtitute of dayly food, &c. Jam. 2. 15. And again, 1 John 3. 17. Whoſoever hath this worlds good, and ſeeth his brother have need, and ſhutteth up his bowels of compaſſion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him? That is, the love of God doth not at all dwell in him, or at beſt it dwelleth very poorly and undiſcernably in him. To ſee ſtrangers, yea enemies, deſtitute, and not relieve them, is uncharitable; but to ſee a brother or a ſiſter, and chiefly a brother or a ſiſter in ſpiritual relation (for of ſuch I conceive the Apoſtle ſpeaks particularly in thoſe places) I ſay, to ſee ſuch deſtitute, and not to relieve them, this is higheſt uncharitableneſs.

Again, Some render thus (not, Thou haſt taken a pledge from thy brother, but) Thou haſt taken thy brother for a pledge. This ſpeaks yet louder, and is a ſin of a blacker colour then the former; thou haſt not only taken thy brothers pledge, but himſelf, his very perſon for ſecurity or for paiment. But what is it to take a mans brother for a pledge? or how was that done? Theſe two things may be in it; Either firſt, More generally; Thou haſt impriſoned him: As (Matth. 18. 28.) 'Tis ſaid of the cruel Creditor, that he took his brother, and caſt him into priſon till he ſhould pay the utmoſt farthing: Now though all kind of impriſonment be not ſinful, not only as to the Law of Nations, but as to the Law of God; yet cruel impriſonment is very ſinful; Thou haſt taken thy brother for a pledge: Thou haſt not ſpared his perſon when he had not a purſe to pay thee; Thou haſt (as it hath been ſaid among us) made Dice of his bones. Some would never pay, were it not for fear of a priſon, but to put and detain a poor man in priſon when he hath nothing to pay, is not only unchriſtian, but barbarous and inhumane. Or ſecondly (which was uſed in ancient times) Thou haſt taken thy brother for a pledge, that is, thou haſt made him thy ſlave: To be caſt into priſon, is a ſlavery, and a man may be made a ſlave, yet not impriſoned. And though it may be a duty (when we have nothing elſe to ſatisfie it with) to work out a debt; yet it is a very high ſeverity for to force a debtor to pay with his work. We read how the poor Widow came to Eliſha the Prophet, and bemoaned her caſe to him (2 King.4. 1.) Thy ſervant my husband is dead, and thou knoweſt that thy ſervant did fear the Lord, and the Creditor is come to take unto him my two ſons to be bondmen. This is to take a brother for a pledge: The Prophet ſeems to aim at this, while he deſcribes thoſe hypocritical Faſts among the Jews (Iſa.58. 6.) Is not this the Faſt that I have choſen, to looſe the bands of wickedneſs, to undo the heavy burdens, and to let the oppreſſed go free, and that ye break every yoke? To faſt, and not to reform, is to mock God rather then to humble our ſelves. Here are the true fruits of faſting; and they all run into the point in hand, the avoiding and turning from all injurious and vexatious dealings with our brethren. Firſt, The bands of wickedneſs, that is, of oppreſſing Laws or pinching Contracts. Secondly, Heavy burdens, either of ſervices or taxes: From theſe the oppreſſed ſhould be freed, and every yoke impoſed by theſe or any other way of grievance, broken off from the necks of our brethren.

In pignus accepiſti fratres tuos Sept.

There is yet one word more very conſiderable in the Text, for the heightning of this ſin.

Thou haſt taken a pledge of thy brother for nought, or without cauſe. This word was opened (chap. 1. 9.) Where Satan ſuggeſts againſt Job's ſincerity; Doth Job ſerve God for nought? And again (chap. 2. 3.) Where the Lord aſſerts and vindicates the ſincerity of Job againſt Satans calumniations; Thou movedſt me againſt him to deſtroy him without cauſe; that is, thou hadſt no cauſe to move me ſo againſt him; he is no ſuch mercenary ſervant as thou haſt maliciouſly pretended: Thus here; Thou haſt taken a pledge of thy brother for nought, or, without cauſe, that is, without any neceſſary cauſe; there was no reaſon thou ſhouldeſt take a pledge from thy brother when thou tookeſt it; thou mighteſt have truſted him, but thou wouldeſt not any further then thou hadſt full ſecurity put into thy hand, or rather, then thou didſt take it into thy hand whether he would or no. As if he had ſaid, Thou wouldeſt not relieve thy brothers poverty, upon the promiſes which God makes to thoſe who charitably relieve the poor; thou wouldeſt neither take Gods word, nor truſt thy brother in any caſe, further then thou didſt ſee him; unleſs he would put into thy hand, thou wouldeſt not put into his. True charity muſt and will make ſome ventures; Caſt thy bread upon the waters (ſaith Solomon, Eccl. 11. 1.) A good man is a Merchant, and will truſt his bread where he hath no more aſſurance of a ſafe return, then the Merchant hath of his Ship and Lading from the winds and waters.

Thou haſt taken a pledge from thy brother.] Again, Without cauſe, or for nought, may have this meaning, thou didſt oblige thy brother to reſtore that which really and indeed he never received from thee; thou didſt put a debt to thy brothers account which he never made by borrowing. David complains of ſuch kind of unkind uſage (Pſal. 69. 4.) They that hate me without cauſe, are moe then the hairs of my head: They that would deſtroy me, being mine enemies wrongfully, are mighty: then I reſtored that which I took not away, that is, which I took not away, either as borrowed of them, or as ſtoln from them. I was neither debtor nor a thief, I had nothing of theirs in my hands, yet I was forced to reſtore. This is the worſt ſort of taking a pledge for nought.

Solent divites fingere ſe creditores & alios debitores.

Thirdly, For nought, that is, when there was no reaſon to take ſo great a pledge of thy brother; the thing which thou didſt lend him, was but ſome trifle, yet thou wouldſt have a pledge of thy brother for it; thou wouldeſt have great ſecurity for an inconſiderable debt; that's the courſe of many oppreſſors, by lending a little, they will have much to ſecure it. And this is to take a pledge of a brother for nought; there ſhould be ſome equality between the debt and the ſecurity; he that lends a trifle, a ſmall matter, and requires great aſſurance, takes a pledge of his brother for nought: So that all unreaſonable and unequal demands for ſecurity, either taking it (wherein charity bids us truſt) from the poor, or taking (where in juſtice we ſhould not take any thing) when nothing was lent, or when there is no reaſon we ſhould take ſo much; any of theſe harſh and injurious practices, is the taking a pledge of our brother for nought. Hence obſerve,

That, The leſs cauſe we have to do any evil, the greater is the evil which we do.

But hath any man a cauſe to do any evil? he hath not; by cauſe, I mean a provocation; there is no cauſe for which we ſhould do any evil, but there may be many provocations or temptations to do evil. Peninah provoked Hannah ſore to make her fret (1 Sam. 1. 6.) It was not for nought or without cauſe that Moſes his paſſion was ſtirr'd, and that he ſpake unadviſedly with his lips; the murmurings and complainings of that unſteady people provoked his Spirit (Pſ.106.33.) Now the leſs provocation, the greater alwayes is the ſin; as to ſin againſt admonition, or againſt any of thoſe means that might keep us from ſin, makes the ſin the greater, ſo, when there is no occaſion leading us unto ſin. This was one reaſon of greatning the ſin of our firſt Parents, in eating the forbidden fruit: Why did they eat? were they ready to ſtarve? were they in any ſtreights? had they not the whole Garden before them? did they not eat the forbidden fruit without cauſe, or for nought? Solomon ſaith (Prov. 6. 30.) Men do not deſpiſe a thief if he ſteal to ſatisfie his ſoul when he is hungry; for though to ſteal for meer hunger, doth not take away the ſinfulneſs of the fact, yet it doth much abate it; becauſe the man is provoked to do it for the ſupply of his preſent and preſſing need; but for a rich man (who hath no need) to ſteal, for a man to ſteal who is not hungry, how ſinful is it! Our greateſt neceſſities cannot wholly excuſe our ſin; but to ſin where there is no neceſſity, doth greatly increaſe our ſin. Saul thought he ſhould come off without blame when he had ſo much to ſay for his raſh Sacrifice (1 Sam. 13. 12.) I ſaid the Philiſtims will come down upon me to Gilgal, and I have not made ſupplication unto the Lord; I forced my ſelf therefore, and offered a burnt offering. But doth Samuel approve this Plea? We have his reſolution in the next verſe; Thou haſt done fooliſhly, thou haſt not kept the Commandment of the Lord thy God. Though Saul found himſelf under a moral force to do what he did, yet that did not free him either from guilt or puniſhment when he ventured to do it. David ſmarted for numbring Iſrael, though Satan ſtood up againſt Iſrael, and provoked David to number them (1 Chron. 21. 1.) What ſhall we ſay then of thoſe who do more then David, altogether unprovoked by Satan? who rather tempt themſelves, then are tempted unto evil? As the good we do is ſo much the better, ſo the evil we do is by ſo much the worſe, by how much we do it the more freely and unconſtrained. Thus Eliphaz aggravates the firſt inſtance of Job's ſuppoſed wickedneſs. To take a pledge from a man in the manner expounded, is not only illiberal, but ſinful; To take a pledge from a brother in diſtreſs, is more ſinful; but to take a pledge from a brother for nought, is a degree of ſin which hath many degrees of ſinfulneſs beyond both the former. Eliphaz had yet but begun Job's indictment, this is the firſt Crime objected: A ſecond, and a third, and more are following. Thou haſt taken a pledge of thy brother for nought,

And ſtript the naked of their cloathing.

It may be queſtioned, If they were naked, how could they be ſtript of their cloathing? He that is naked, hath no cloaths to be ſtript of. 'Tis gone in a Proverb, A naked man cannot be ſtript by a hundred men; he that hath nothing, can loſe nothing; how then is it ſaid here, Thou haſt ſtript the naked of their cloathing?

Nudus nec à centum viris ſpoliatur.

I anſwer, The naked are not here to be taken ſtrictly for ſuch as have no cloaths at all; but for thoſe who have but few cloaths, or for ſuch as are but meanly and thinly cloathed; any that are poor and low, any who are in want, may be numbred among the naked. 'Tis frequent, as in Scripture, ſo in common ſpeech, to expreſs thoſe as being quite without that of which they have but little. We ſay of a man that hath but a little knowledge, he is an ignorant man; and of a man who hath but a little learning, that he is an illiterate or an unlearned man. Thus we may ſay of a man that hath but little ſtore of cloaths, little ſtore of the world about him, that he is naked, that he hath nothing. The Apoſtle uſeth this Language (1 Cor. 4. 11.) Even to this preſent hour, we both hunger, and thirſt, and are naked, &c. Not that the Apoſtles went about without cloaths, but they were but mean in their apparel, poor in their appearances, and that he calls nakedneſs. So the Apoſtle James, in the ſecond Chapter of that Epiſtle, ver. 15. If a Brother or a Siſter be naked, &c. He doth not mean it only of ſuch as have never a rag to cover their nakedneſs, but of ſuch as are ill furniſhed with cloaths. . The Lord threatens his own people (Deut. 28. from verſ. 4 to 48.) in caſe of diſobedience, with this affliction; Becauſe thou ſervedſt not the Lord with gladneſs of heart in the abundance of all things, therefore thou ſhalt ſerve thine enemies in hunger, and in thirſt, and in nakedneſs, &c. That is, thou ſhalt not have thy Wardrobes ſtored and filled with change of rayment, but thou ſhalt feel and be pincht with want and poverty. So here; Thou haſt ſtript the naked of their cloathing; that is, thoſe that were evil cloathed, thou haſt uncloathed, and inſtead of relieving their wants, thou haſt encreaſed them.

Quædam etiamſi vera non ſint propter ſimilitudinē eodem vocabulo comprehenſa ſunt; ſic que malè veſtitum & pannoſum videt, nudum ſe vidiſſe dicit. Sen. l. 5. Ben. c. 13.

And thus the words may allude to the taking of a pledge, about which Eliphaz ſpake before; Thou haſt ſtript the naked of their cloathing, that is, thou haſt taken a pledge from thy neighbour, and ſtript him quite of it. Therefore the Law provided againſt this oppreſſion (Exod. 22. 26.) If thou at all take thy neighbours rayment to pledge, thou ſhalt deliver it to him before the Sun go down, for it is his covering. The breach of which Law is diſcovered and reproved (Amos 2. 8.) And they lay themſelves down upon cloaths laid to pledge, that is, they detained them all night, whereas they ſhould have delivered them before the going down of the Sun. And thus their ſin is aggravated, in that it is ſaid in the next words, that they did this by every Altar. It was their ſin to make many Altars; and this encreaſed their ſin, that they durſt do acts of wrong to men, where they pretended to worſhip God. The like Law is given about the pledge, Deut. 24. 6. No man ſhall take the upper or the nether milſtone to pledge, for he taketh a mans life to pledge; that is, he takes the thing away without which he cannot live; if his milſtone be taken away from the Mill, how ſhall he grind his Corn to make Bread, which is the Staff of life? And again, at verſ 13. of the ſame Chapter, the Law is renewed in reference to rayment; In any caſe thou ſhalt deliver the pledge again before the Sun goeth down, that he may ſleep in his own rayment and bleſs thee; and it ſhall be righteouſneſs unto thee before the Lord thy God. Thus we may conceive Eliphaz ſpeaking here, though not eying that expreſs Law, yet from the common light of Nature, which teacheth that the poor and naked ſhould not be ſtript of that little proviſion and ſmall pittance which ſerves only to protect them from cold and ſtarving.

Chaldeus legit lectulos oppigneratos. Vel certe pro illo ipſo veſtimento quo & ſe operit interdiu atque noctu etiam jacens ſe contegit.

Further, By theſe words, Thou haſt ſtript the naked of their cloathing, we may underſtand not cloathing only, but all the neceſſaries of this life, any thing which is of ſuch concernment to our lives as our cloaths are; for as bread in Scripture is put for all the neceſſaries of this life, ſo is cloathing, Iſa. 3. 6. When a man ſhall take hold of his Brother, ſaying, Thou haſt cloathing, be thou ruler over us, &c. Thou haſt cloathing, that is, thou haſt Goods, thou haſt an Eſtate, thou canſt make proviſion for us; there Cloathing is put for all outward conveniences, as in other Scriptures, Bread is. So that according to the extent of this interpreta- Thou haſt ſtript the naked of their cloathing, takes in all ſorts of bodily grievances put upon the poor.

Hence obſerve, That, To oppreſs the poor, is the higheſt and greateſt oppreſſion.

It is our duty to cloath the naked, how great then is their ſin who ſtrip the naked of their cloathing? It is ſinful and unjuſt violently to take cloaths from him that hath greateſt variety of cloathing; we may not rob the rich, what is it then to take from them who have not? or (as we ſay) to rob the Hoſpital? Solomon (Prov. 28. 3.) tell[illegible]s of an oppreſſion which is very grievous, and that is the oppreſſion of a poor man; which is true both actively and paſſively, when the poor man is the oppreſſor, 'tis ſo; 'tis ſo alſo when the poor man is the oppreſſed. Solomon intends both; for he makes the poor to be the oppreſſed, and a poor man the oppreſſor. The poor man that oppreſſeth the poor, is as a ſweeping rain, which leaveth no food. 'Tis worſe with the poor when the poor oppreſs them, then when the rich oppreſs them; the rich may oppreſs them much, but they come not ſo near, as when a poor man oppreſſeth; for as the imbecility of the oppreſſed poor man can give him no help, ſo the neceſſity of the oppreſſing poor man will ſhew him no mercy. Nothing doth more harden the heart of a man, then his own want; and he hath little feeling of anothers miſery, who is under the feeling of his own; he that hath nothing takes what he can get, and his own hunger devoureth all. The rich man oppreſſing the poor, is a daſhing rain; the great man oppreſſing the poor, is a thundering rain; but the poor man oppreſſing the poor, is a ſweeping rain. As they who never knew poverty, ſo they who know it moſt, have the leaſt ſtock of pity for the poor. Such are a ſweeping rain indeed. There is a refreſhing, a fatning, a filling rain, which the Lord ſends upon the thirſty earth, this produceth ſtore of food. It rains corn and wine, milk and butter: There is alſo a ſweeping rain that takes away food, and deſtroyes the fruits of the earth. Such a rain is a poor man oppreſſing the poor. Want is the greateſt ſpoiler.

Secondly, We may expound the Text thus; And ſtript the naked of their cloathing, that is, Thou haſt ſtript them till they are naked; for in Scripture we find the denomination to be taken from the end of the action, or that which the action tends to: As to illuſtrate it a little (Iſa. 47. 2.) Take the milſtones, and grind meal. Now we do not grind meal, but whole corn, to make meal. So Iſa. 44. 15 He baketh bread: Now we do not bake bread, but dough, that it may come to be bread; when it is bread once, it needs no more baking. So (Dan. 2. 21.) He giveth wiſdom to the wiſe, that is, he giveth wiſdom to thoſe who before were rude, and ſo makes them wiſe. Thus here, the denomination of the act is given from that to which the act hath a tendency, Thou haſt ſtript the naked; not that they who are naked indeed, can be ſtript; but thou haſt ſtript them, and ſo made them naked. This very phraſe is uſed (Hoſ. 2. 3.) Leſt I ſtrip thee naked, ſaith the Lord to the Church, that is, leſt in ſtripping thee, I leave thee naked; leſt I take away all the good things with which thou art encompaſſed. So here, Thou haſt ſtript the naked of their cloathing, that is, thou haſt ſtript them till thou haſt made them naked.

From this learn, That, There is ſuch a Principle of unnaturalneſs in the nature of man, as to take away all, and leave nothing.

We find more then cloaths taken away by ſome, they go cloſer then to the cloathing (as the Lord complains, Mic. 3. 3.) Who eat the fleſh of a people, and flay their skin from off their backs: There's oppreſſion and cruelty in their blackeſt colours; they will not leave them ſo much as their skin upon their backs. Skin is natural cloathing, as Garments are artificial cloathing. Theſe took away not only the cloathing which art, but that which nature had provided and put upon them, they flayed their skins from off their backs; yet we are not to conceive that they were ſo cruel to pull off their skin, but becauſe they would have all to their very skin, therefore they are ſaid to take skin and all. They who are ſo unmerciful, that they will not leave a rag to cover their skin, are juſtly charged with that unmercifulneſs, which will not leave ſo much as their skin to cover their fleſh; yea (as it follows in the ſame place) that they would gnaw their bones; they will have all, cloaths, skin and bones from another, rather then not have enough for themſelves. Cruelty joyned with Covetouſneſs, knows no bounds.

Eliphaz having ſhewed ſome of thoſe particular evils, which he ſuppoſed Job had done, proceeds to ſhew what good he had not done. Sins of omiſſion render men as foul and vile as ſins of commiſſion do. He that doth not the good which he ought and can, doth evil.

Verſe 7. Thou haſt not given water to the weary to drink, thou haſt with-held bread from the hungry.

Thou haſt not given water to the weary.

Water is a very common thing, and the word which is here uſed, takes in all natural waters, the whole Element of water. Seeing then water is not under lock and key, but lies open to all comers, how comes it to be any mans gift? I anſwer, Firſt, If we underſtand the words literally and ſtrictly, yet ſometimes, and eſpecially in ſome places, to give a cup of water to drink, or a bucket of water to waſh in, is no ſmall charity to a wearied traveller. But ſecondly (I conceive) Job is taxed with not giving water, to ſhew his refuſing to do the ſmalleſt charity. So we find it expreſſed

Non inania in eos etiam levia quæ ſub frigidæ aquæ nomine deſignat officia eſſe decerint. Hilar.

(Matth. 10. 42.) When Jeſus Chriſt would aſſure us that the leaſt office of love or reſpect which we do to a diſtreſſed Saint or a Believer, upon that account as he is a Believer, ſhall be rewarded; he gives it in this language, Whoſoever ſhall give to drink to one of theſe little ones a cup of cold water, only in the name of a Diſciple, verily I ſay unto you, he ſhall not loſe his reward. As by one of theſe little ones, he means any, the leaſt of Believers or righteous perſons; ſo by the gift that he ſpeaks of, water, or cold water, a cup of cold water, he means the leaſt of favours. Cold water is a cheap commodity, and a little cold water, only a cup of it, cannot (as ſome things cannot, becauſe they are worth ſo much) be prized, becauſe it is worth ſo little; yet he that gives but this little thing, this (almoſt) nothing in the name of a Diſciple, he ſhall not loſe his reward. So here, to ſet forth the hardneſs of Job's heart (as Eliphaz conceived) he puts it in theſe terms, Thou haſt not given water (no not cold water) to thoſe that are weary; as if he had ſaid, thou haſt not only denied a feaſt or a banquet of wine, which might put thee to ſome coſt and charges, but thou haſt denied them water, cold water, which is not chargeable at all, which doth not ſo much as put thee to the coſt of a little fire to heat it, or of any ingredient to mix with it; thou haſt denied them this cheapeſt charity. An old Poet (ſpeaking of a place where water was ſold) ſaith, That which is loweſt prized, a thing of no price, Water, is ſold here. Thus far haſt thou, O Job (ſaith Eliphaz) fallen below the Law of Love, Thou haſt not given water: And to whom did he not give it? The next word anſwers that Query.

——venit viliſſima rerum hic, Aqua. Hor. Sat. 1.

To the weary.] That is, thou haſt not given water to whom it doth moſt properly belong, or who had perfect need of it, the weary, the thirſty. There are ſome to whom we may very well refuſe to give water, or any other refreſhment of nature; they have enough, if not too much already, not only in poſſeſſion, as the rich; but in uſe or abuſe rather, as the intemperate and the drunken: To give water to ſuch, is to powre water into the Sea; but thou haſt not given it to the weary, nor to thoſe who are like the dry and parched ground.

In that the matter of charity is placed in water, obſerve,

That, Charity is accepted, and uncharitableneſs condemned in the ſmalleſt matter.

It is not the quantity of the gift, but the affection of the giver; it is not the quantity of that which is denied to be given, but the heart of him that denies it, which the Lord takes notice of; be it much, or be it little that is given, if it be given with an honeſt and willing mind, the Lord accepts it; and be it much or be it little that is denied, if it be denied with a churliſh and uncharitable ſpirit, the Lord is diſpleaſed with it; and the leſs that is which is denied, the more ſinful is the denial, and the more is the Lord diſpleaſed with it. When cruſts or crums of bread, which fall from our Table, are denied, when a cup of cold water is denied, how cold is charity? And is it not crumbled into a leſſer nothing then thoſe crums? We ſhould honour the Lord with our ſubſtance, and our charity ſhould not only have coſt in it, but liberality in it; how do they honour the Lord with their ſubſtance, who will hardly give to him (that is, to his poor) the ſhadow of their ſubſtance? If the Lord ſhould command us to give ſome great thing to teſtifie our charity, ſhould we not do it? how much more when he ſaith, give but water to the weary for my ſake, and I account you charitable?

Secondly note, That, Churliſh and hard-hearted perſons ſtick at ſmall matters as well as at great.

It is ſuppoſed (Acts 5. 15.) that the very ſhadow of Peter was healing to the ſick. There are ſome ſo hard-hearted, that they would hardly beſtow their ſhadow upon the poor to do them good. It troubles them to part with the leaſt imaginable benefit, or do the leaſt imaginable courteſie, not only great things, but ſmall things, even the ſmalleſt things, the chipping of their Loaf, the parings of their Apple, yea, the very huskes which their ſwine eat (as the Letter of the Parable concerning the prodigal intimates, Luke 15. 16.) are ſtuck at as too much for them who have nothing. And thus the heart of a wicked man is ſtated to the whole buſineſs of obedience; his heart is much againſt obedience in a ſmall matter, as in a great; he is ſo far from ſwallowing the Camel of holy duty, that he ſtrains at the very gnats of it; and if a mans ſpirit be againſt obedience it ſelf in its own nature, if his ſpirit be unſuitable to it, let it be a duty of the leaſt or loweſt degree, he cannot but ſtick at it. The ſervants of Naaman the Aſſyrian, ſaid to him, Had the Prophet bid thee do ſome great matter, wouldeſt thou not have done it? how much more when he ſaith unto thee, Waſh in Jordan and be clean? There is a reaſon why we ſhould rather do ſmall things then great, as to the outward act; but, I ſay, if the Spirit of a man be croſs-grain'd, and lie againſt the duty, he is as unfit and as backward to do a little, as to do a great deal; he will not ſo much as give water to God or man; or if he do give it, he doth not give it with a heart let out in love to God, or in compaſſion to the moſt needy man. It is a hard matter with him to give or do at all; but it is an impoſſible matter for him to give or do with a ready or chearful mind. Thus the covetous man, the hard-hearted worldling cannot give ſo much as water; a worldly man never thinks that himſelf hath enough of the world, and he never thinks that others have too little; when he is full, he thinks all others are full enough too. Such narrow-hearted creatures the Prophet Iſaiah deſcribes (*c.*32.6,7.) Who, as they practice hypocriſie, and utter error againſt the Lord, ſo they practiſe oppreſſion and utter cruelty againſt man; to make empty the ſoul of the hungry, and to cauſe the drink of the thirſty to fail. The inſtruments of the Churl are evil. What inſtruments doth he mean? Some ſay, the inſtruments of his commerce, his weights and meaſures, he pincheth the poor there; that's true, thoſe inſtruments of the churliſh Merchant or Tradeſman are evil: Yet we may rather expound it more largely for all the means, whether perſons or things, whether Agents and under-officers, or courſes and devices, which the churliſh man uſeth as inſtruments to compaſs and bring about his purpoſes; all theſe ſavour of himſelf, they are evil, that is, falſe, treacherous, and lying in wait to deceive. For (as it follows) He deviſeth wicked devices to deſtroy the poor with lying words, even when the needy ſpeaketh right; or (as we put in the margin) when he ſpeaketh againſt the poor in Judgment.

Thirdly note, That, A little is much reckoned upon by thoſe that are in need, or have nothing.

Water is a welcome mercy to the thirſty, to the weary, to thoſe who are ready to die with heat and travel. The rich man in hell, would have been glad of a drop of water to cool his tongue. Siſera the General of Jabin's Army, begs of Jael, to give him a little water; for (ſaith he) I am thirſty (Judg. 4. 19.) The full ſoul loaths the honey-comb, that which is ſweet and delicious, the full ſtomach loaths it; but they that are weary, hungry and thirſty, a piece of bread, a cup of water, how pleaſant! how ſweet! Such are glad of any thing, who are in want of all things. Much is little to them who have much, a little is much to them who have but little. The weary will thank you more for water, then the wanton will for wine. The weary asked but water to drink, and could not get it, thou wouldeſt not give it.

Fourthly, Eliphaz deſcribing a wicked man, fixes moſt upon this ſin, his unmercifulneſs to the poor. And there is a general truth in it.

That, To be without compaſſion to the poor, is the mark of a wicked man.

Th[illegible] who have found the compaſſion of God to their own ſouls (as every godly man hath) cannot ſhut up the bowels of their compaſſion towards the pined body of man. The Apoſtle John puts the queſtion (1 John 3. 17.) How dwelleth the love of God in him, that do ſo? The love of God, either as taken for the love of God to us, or for our love to God, dwelleth not in him in whom there is no love to man. Now if the love of God dwell not in a man, God dwelleth not in him; and if God dwelleth not in him, Satan doth: And what can he be called but wicked, in whom the wicked or the evil one dwelleth? Thus the wicked Edomites dealt with the people of God when they were wearied in their March through the Wilderneſs. We read the children of Iſrael thus beſpeaking the Edomites (Num. 20. 17, 18, 19.) Let us paſs I pray thee, through thy Countrey, we will not paſs through the fields, or through the vineyards, neither will we drink of the water of the wells, &c. We will put you to no trouble, no charge, we will be content with the common waters which we find abroad; this is all which we deſire when we ſhall be weary and thirſty in our travels. And Edom ſaid unto him, Thou ſhalt not paſs by me, leſt I cut thee off with the ſword: And the Children of Iſrael ſaid unto him, we will go by the high way, and if I and my Cattel drink of thy water, I will pay thee for it; I will only (without doing any thing elſe) go through on my feet. See what a ſpirit Edom was of; when Iſrael put it to the loweſt, we will drink none of the water of your wells, or if we do, we will pay for it: No, Edom was ſo hard-hearted, that he would neither give, nor ſell them water; they ſhall not have it either of free-coſt or for money; thus uncompaſſionate was he towards a people that were travelling, that were weary and thirſty. The Inhabitants of Teman are commended for their tenderneſs to men in diſtreſs (Iſa. 21.14.) They brought water to him that was thirſty, they prevented with their bread him that fled: They gave water and bread unasked; the wants of the diſtreſſed moved them, though they made no motion for the ſupply of their wants. They act moſt like God, who prevent us with their favours. Even the light of Nature leads to it. How unnatural then are they who deny water to them, who being weary and thirſty, beg for it? The mercy of God by Jeſus Chriſt is highly commended to us upon this conſideration, that he gives it not only in bounty, but in compaſſion; there is not only liberality, but there is a pity in it; therefore he ſaith (Matth. 11.28.) Come unto me all ye that are weary and heavy laden, and I will give you reſt. To give eaſe and refreſhment to thoſe that are weary and heavy laden, hath not only bounty and liberality, but pity and compaſſion in it (Pſal. 136.23.) Thanks to God who hath remembred us in our low eſtate. It is an act of Grace for God to remember us in our higheſt eſtate, in our moſt flouriſhing eſtate; but to remember us in our low eſtate, then to give us in refreſhings and comforts, this is a clearer act of Grace. As it is ſaid (Pſal. 68.9.) Thou, O God, didſt ſend a plentiful rain, whereby thou didſt confirm thine inheritance when it was weary. As the goodneſs of God is moſt ſeen in giving water to the weary, ſo is the wickedneſs of man in denying it. Eliphaz urgeth Job further with this uncharitableneſs.

And thou haſt with-holden bread from the hungry.

Verbum מנע ſignificat abſcondere, negare, fraudare. Subtrahebas ei ſi habebat & prohibebas ſi non habebat, i.e, nolebas ei panem dare. Deus. Eſurientium ſubtraxiſti fruſtum panis. Ambr.

He gave no water, and he with-held bread. The word is ſometimes rendred, to hide, to deny; and ſometimes, to deceive a man of that which is due to him. Our Tranſlation (Thou haſt with-holden) carries that ſence in it: Properly we are ſaid to with-hold only that from a man which he hath a right to; Thou haſt with-holden bread from the hungry. As hunger and thirſt are put for all manner of extremity, ſo bread and water are put for all manner of ſupplies generally. The Greeks and ſome Latines interpret this ſtrictly of a morſel of bread; Thou haſt with-holden a morſel of bread; as the rich man in the Goſpel did: Lazarus deſired but the crumbs that fell from his Table, but could not get them. So here, thou haſt with-holden not only a full Table, but a morſel of Bread; This latter clauſe and the former, are of the ſame ſence; yet from that word with-holden, which implieth a wrong done to the poor, note,

First, That, The poor have a right in what rich men have.

And if they with-hold all from them, they ſhall be condemned not only as uncharitable and illiberal, but as oppreſſors and unjuſt; not only as not having given them relief, but as not having done them right (Prov. 3.27.) With-hold not good from them to whom it is due, when it is in the power of thy hand to do it. A thing is due upon a double account; firſt, By the Law of Juſtice; ſecondly, By the Law of Love: I conceive here that the Proverb is to be underſtood of a dueneſs, not by the Laws of common Juſtice (as if a man have his brothers eſtate in his hand, he cannot with-hold it from him without tranſgreſſing the Law of Juſtice) but of a dueneſs by the Law of Love, or more ſtrictly, by the Law of Charity; thus it is a duty to do good to thoſe that are in want; 'tis not only a favour that we ſhew to them when we relieve them; but there is a duty in it, which we owe to God, who hath commanded that their poverty ſhould be ſupplied by the plenty and abundance which he hath given to others. If therefore it be demanded, who are they to whom this doing of good is due? I anſwer, not only they to whom thou art indebted in Juſtice, witneſs thy Hand and Seal; but even they to whom thou art indebted in Charity, witneſs their Want and Need. The poor have a right to what we are able to give, and can conveniently ſpare; yea, ſometimes their right may lie ſomewhat beyond the line of our conveniency. So then there is a point of Juſtice in it, as well as of charity, in relieving the poor; and if (as the next words in Solomon imply) it be ſinful to delay them till to morrow, it muſt needs be a wickedneſs to deny them for ever. Therefore the ſame Solomon (Prov. 22.2.) Speaking of the poor and the rich, puts them together; The rich and the poor meet together, the Lord is the maker of them all. Now the Lord is the maker of the poor and of the rich, not only in their natural conſtitution, as they are men conſiſting of body and ſoul (ſo indeed he hath made the poor as well as the rich, and they are both alike the work of his hands) but the Lord is the maker of them in that capacity or ſtate wherein they are; he makes the rich man and the poor man, that is, he makes the one rich, and the other poor; he is the maker of them both: And Solomon (I conceive) puts that in, to ſhew firſt, that poor men ſhould not envy the rich man; why? For the Lord hath made him rich: Why ſhould thy eye be evil becauſe the Lords eye is good?

And again, that the rich man ſhould not deſpiſe the poor, or withdraw the bowels of his compaſſion from them: the Lord could have made thee poor too if he had pleaſed; therefore be compaſſionate towards them, for the Lord is the maker of you both. And this anſwers that Objection commonly given by ſome, Why, are not my goods my own? may I not do with them as I pleaſe? I have not ſtoln them, I have wronged no man in the obtaining them; It is well when men can ſay thus, that they have done no wrong in getting riches: but this is no argument (how juſtly ſoever any man hath got his Eſtate) that he ſhould keep it all to himſelf, and not give a portion to thoſe that are in want. The rich man with-holds what is due to the poor, when he with-holds relief from them. It is true, your eſtate is your own, it is yours, no man can challenge or claim it from you; I but God can claim it from you; you are poſſeſſors and maſters of your eſtate in reference unto men; but you are but ſtewards and ſervants of your eſtate, in reference unto God. Now a Stewards buſineſs (you know) is not only to receive and lay up the eſtate of his Maſter, but it is his buſineſs alſo to pay or lay out according as he receives command or order from his Lord; thus it is in this caſe: Rich men are but Stewards to the Lord in reference to all that they have; therefore as they receive from him, and receive of the fulneſs of the earth, which is his (for the earth is the Lords and the fulneſs thereof) ſo they muſt iſſue it according to his order and command: Now he hath left a ſtanding order for all times, that the rich ſhould diſtribute to the neceſſities of the poor and hungry. Rich men muſt not think themſelves Stewards only to receive in, but alſo to pay out what their Lord calls for; and therefore as they would give a good account of their Stewardſhip at the great Audit-day, let them take heed how they with-hold bread from the hungry. I might ſhew further, that the rich are not only obliged to give, or that it is their duty to give, but that they ought to give chearfully and readily, not upon conſtraint (2 Cor. 9.7.) That they ought to give liberally and bountifully, not with reſtraint; and that they ought to give ſincerely, not thinking thereby either to merit at the hand of God, or to get the praiſe of men.

Secondly, From the matter of this Charge, Thou haſt with-holden bread from the hungry, we may obſerve,

That, Not to do good, or the omiſſion of doing good to the poor, renders us culpable, as well as the doing or commiſſion of that which is evil or injurious to them.

Not to relieve the poor, is a ſin, as well as to injure or oppreſs the poor; yea, not to relieve, hath injury and oppreſſion in it. The reaſon of it is clear from the former point, becauſe the poor have a right to ſo much of a rich mans eſtate, as is a relief of their preſſing neceſſities, to preſerve them from periſhing. And every man muſt acknowledge that to deny any man his right (by what title ſoever the right ariſeth) is to

is to oppreſs him? Nor is it enough to give them good words (which is yet more then ſome will give) unleſs we do them good (Jam. 2. 15, 16.) If a brother or a ſiſter be naked, and deſtitute of dayly food, and one of you ſay unto them, depart in peace, be warmed and filled; yet notwithſtanding ye give them not thoſe things which are needful to the body, what doth it profit? Though you give them good words, yet if you give them no ſupply, what doth it profit? We may underſtand it two wayes.

Firſt, What doth it profit the poor? Can they feed upon your good words? or will your good words cloath them? What doth it profit them, if ye ſay, be fed, and be cloathed, if you give them neither food nor rayment?

Secondly, What profit is it to you who ſay ſo? Will God take it well at your hands, that you have ſpoken kindly to the poor, when you did them no kindneſs? Therefore with-hold not thy hand, &c. And if it be ſo great a ſin to with-hold our bread from the hungry, what is it to take their bread from them? Eliphaz having thus taxed Job with neglect of the poor, he proceeds in the next verſe to tax him with an undue and partial reſpect to the rich. As he was rigid to them who had nothing, ſo he was indulgent to thoſe who had enough, if not more then enough before.

Verſe 8. But as for the mighty man, he had the earth, and the honourable man dwelt in it.

There is a twofold interpretation of theſe words; Some underſtand them ſo, as if this mighty man here meant, had been Job himſelf; and then the ſence is thus rendred, All theſe evils were done by thee, and theſe good things not done, when thou waſt a man in power, and ſo hadſt no need to do any ſuch evil, and hadſt power enough in thy hand to do good. The Vulgar Tranſlation reads it (according to this expoſition) perſonally of Job; In thy might thou didſt poſſeſs the earth, and being moſt powerful, thou didſt dwell in it: That is, thou waſt a man in power, thou hadſt all in thy hand, thou hadſt water and bread enough when the poor wanted it; thou canſt not ſay that thou waſt neceſſitated to keep the pledge, or ſtrip the naked; but thou in thy greatneſs and might didſt oppreſs them: this interpretation (though I aſſent not to it) aggravates his ſin exceedingly; for the more power any one hath in his hand, the greater is his ſin, as in the evil which he doth, ſo in the good which he doth not, or leaves undone; yea, it may be ſaid that we do evil more then they who do it, when we have power in our hand to hinder them from doing it, and do not.

In fortitudine brachii tui poſſidebas terram, & potentiſſimus obtinebas eam. Vulg.

But Secondly, Take the words as they import the partiality of Job; The mighty man had the earth; thou haſt been over-kind and favourable to him, how hard or churliſh ſoever thou haſt been to others.

The mighty man.] The Hebrew is, The man of arm; and it is uſual in Scripture to call a ſtrong man a mighty man, or a man in authority, a man of arm (Ezek. 22. 6.) Behold the Princes of Iſrael, every one of them were in thee to their power to ſhed blood. The Hebrew is, They were to their arm, that is, as far as they could reach forth their arm, or to the utmoſt of their power to ſhed blood, that is, to do miſchief and wrong, to afflict and vex others even unto death, or the ſhedding of their blood. They who are evil, know not how to bound themſelves in doing evil; if they want not power, they ſeldom want will to do it more and more, Thus the Prophet reproves that perverſe generation; Behold thou haſt ſpoken and done evil as thou couldeſt (Jer 3. 5.) That is, to the utmoſt extention of thy ability and opportunity. As thoſe Princes ſhed bloud to their arm, or as far as they could reach out their power; ſo did this people. And as the power of man, ſo the power of God is expreſt by this arm (Job 40. 9.) Haſt thou an arm like God? Canſt thou thunder like him? That is, Haſt thou power like God? (Iſa. 30. 30.) The Lord ſhall cauſe his glorious voyce to be heard, and ſhall ſhew the lighting down of his arm, with the indignation of his anger, and with the flame of a devouring fire. The revenging power of God, like a Bird of prey, hovers over the heads of wicked men, but at laſt it lights down, and (as the word rather ſignifies) reſts upon them.

Vir brachii eſt vir dignitate, opibus, authoritate potens. Bold.

Again, Some underſtand here by the arm of the wicked man, thoſe who are his inſtruments, thoſe who ſerve him, or whom he uſes to ſupplant or ſuppreſs others, and reach his own ends by; ſuch may well be called the arms of mighty men, the arms of the men of the earth. Evil men have their Seconds or Inſtruments to do evil. Upon this conſideration it was ſaid anciently, Do you not know that Princes have long arms? The meaning is, they have Agents and Servants in the ſeveral parts of their Dominions, who are their hands or arms, both for protection of thoſe who are peaceable, and to take revenge upon the rebellious. We commonly ſay of a Servant that is diſcreeet and faithful, he is his Maſters right hand. The mighty have many helpers, many arms and hands to carry on their deſignes, and to do their wills.

An neſcis longas regibus eſſe manus?

As for the mighty man, or the man of arm, he had the earth.

This ſtands in oppoſition to what was ſpoken before, the poor man could not get a drop of water, nor a cruſt of bread, but the mighty man he had the earth: As if he had ſaid, O Job, thou being in power, didſt paſs away great poſſeſſions to the mighty, thou gaveſt both thy ſentence and aſſiſtance, that they ſhould have the earth, but thou wouldeſt not help the poor ſo much as to a piece of bread or a cup of water; The mighty man had the earth: He ſpeaks indefinitely, as if all the earth were his. Wicked men are called men of the earth (Pſal. 10. 18.) To judge the fatherleſs and the oppreſſed; that the men of the earth may no more oppreſs.

But it may be objected, Is not every man a man of the earth? As Adam the firſt man was of the earth, earthy; ſo all men are of the earth, earthy: why is it then ſaid of a wicked man, that he is a man of the earth, as if any man were of another pedigree or extraction?

I anſwer, A man of the earth is put in oppoſition to a man of heaven, to a man that hath his eſtate, or hope, or portion in heaven; the Saints have their converſation in heaven, and though they live upon the earth, yet they are not men of the earth: Carnal men are earthly-minded, they mind the earth, and that's both their hope and buſineſs; they are not only earth in their conſtitution, but earth in their affections; therefore they are called men of the earth; theſe men had much of the earth in their poſſeſſion, as well as they had all of it in their affections and deſires. The mighty man he had the earth. Hence obſerve,

> That, Evil Magiſtrates in power, are more ready to favour great men, then to relieve poor men.

Eliphaz knew that Job was a Magiſtrate, a man in power, and he ſuppoſeth that under his government, the poor got no bread, but the mighty men had the earth; they had favour to have and do what they liſt. It is very common with the men of the world to be very free to thoſe that are of the world; they are like thoſe clouds which we may obſerve ſometimes blown over the dry land, and emptying themſelves into the Sea. The mighty that had ſtore before, have more, and the poor, who had nothing, have nothing at all: Men love to beſtow kindneſſes upon them only to whom they are like, or whom they love. A good man helps thoſe that are good, and wicked men care for none but ſuch as themſelves. Wicked men are called Oaks (Zech. 11. 2.) Howl ye fir-trees, for the Cedar is fallen (that is, the great man is fallen) becauſe all the mighty are ſpoiled; howl O ye Oaks of Baſhan, for the foreſt of the vintage is come down. The Chaldee Paraphraſe ſaith, Howl ye Governers of Provinces: And he calls theſe Governors Oaks; firſt, Becauſe of their ſtrength; and ſecondly, Becauſe of their fruit. What fruit do Oaks bear? Only Acorns; and who are fed with Acorns? only ſwine; Acorns are but hogs-meat: he gives the alluſion thus, wicked men in power, bear fruit, but it is only for ſwine, that is, for wicked men; they beſtow the tokens of their bounty, the overplus of their plenty upon hogs and ſwine, that is, upon carnal and ſenſual men; they have nothing for the people of God, for thoſe that are the true objects of charity; they make their horſes fat, their dogs fat, none are lean but Gods poor. Thus one of the Ancients reprehends thoſe great ones of his time, Ye cloath the walls of your houſes with Gold, with Arras hangings, and ye let the poor go naked; the poor ask bread, and give it them not; it may be your horſe chews a golden Bit, and the poor man hath not a bit of bread. The ſpirits of carnal men are carried out from that which is their duty, they care not how profuſe and laviſh they are to thoſe who Parietes veſtitis auro, homines veſte nudatis? panem poſtulat homo, & equus tuus aurum ſub dentibus mandit. Ambroſ.

ſuit

ſuits with their own hearts; the poor having nothing, while the mighty man hath the earth. Thus Eliphaz reproved Job, though indeed it was otherwiſe with him; as appears in the defence which he afterwards made for himſelf againſt theſe groſs inſinuations. And as to this particular, he anſwers (chap. 29. 17.) I brake the jaws of the wicked, and pluckt the ſpoyl from between his teeth; he indeed pull'd the earth from the mighty, or the mighty from the earth; though Eliphaz here ſaid, The mighty had the earth, and,

Acceptus vel elevatus facie habitabat in ea. Heb.

The honourable man dwelt in it.] The Hebrew is, The man whoſe face is lifted up; which phraſe is interpreted two wayes.

First, Paſſively. Secondly, Actively. Paſſively thus; the man who is lifted up by others, that is, who is reſpected, who is reverenced according to his place or worth: All which agree with our rendring, the honourable man. And in the Hebrew, Princes and great ones are expreſt by that word which ſignifies to lift up the face; becauſe ſuch are lifted up above others, and are much reſpected by others. So the word is uſed (Gen. 19. 21.) See (ſaith the Angel to Lot) I have accepted thee: The Hebrew is, I have lifted up thy face, that is, I have reſpected and honoured thee by granting thy requeſt.

Hebræi principes vocāt Naſi, quaſi elevatum facie & ab aliis acceptum.

Secondly, It may be taken actively, The man that lifts up the face dwells in the earth. What is it to lift up the face? It is to accept perſons in Judgment, to accept him that hath the worſt Cauſe, and to reject him that hath the beſt Cauſe, for private ends. As if Eliphaz had ſaid, He that reſpects perſons, that is, who perverts juſtice, he hath the Earth; and ſo here ſeems to be a deſcription of all ſorts of wicked men flouriſhing in Job's time, and under his wing. Some oppreſs openly, the mighty man, the man of Arms, comes by main force, and obtains the earth, or the riches and fatneſs of the earth. Others oppreſs ſecretly and cunningly, they accept perſons, and are byaſſed in Judgment by their own Intereſt and Advantages: The man of this ſtrain dwelt in it.

Acceptor perſonarum habitabat in ea. Pagn.

προσωποληψία eſt habere reſpectum perſonarum, ſc. quod pauper ſit aut dives, aut nobilis, aut honoratus,

The word notes two things. Firſt, To continue; he dwelt there, thou let'ſt him abide; whereas if he had come into the Land, thou ſhouldeſt quickly have rooted him out. Secondly, The word ſignifies not only to dwell, but to ſit; and to ſit, in Scripture-Language, notes authority or dominion; he dwelt or ſate in it, that is, he was the man in authority; he had the power, and the great places of government were entruſted in his hand. From both theſe, obſerve, ישב Habitare, ſedere.

> Firſt, That, Evil Magiſtrates are apt to pervert Juſtice, in favour of thoſe who are great in power.

Favour ſhould be ſhewed according to the juſtneſs of mens Cauſes, and not according to the greatneſs of their perſons. But uſually the mighty men have the earth, all goes on their ſide; and the honourable man dwells there, he ſits ſafe and quiet, well and warm. This is ſo commonly ſeen, that 'tis become a Proverb, The mighty man hath the whole Earth for his houſe to dwell in; the poor man lies every where, but ſeldom dwells any where. The wicked are ſaid to have their portion in this life, they would have the Earth to themſelves, and they ſhall have nothing but Earth. So the Prophet deſcribes them (Iſa. 5. 8.) Wo unto them that joyn houſe to houſe, that lay field to field, that there may be no place, that they may be placed alone in the midſt of the Earth. Man is naturally a ſociable Creature, and it may ſeem ſtrange that he ſhould deſire to be alone in the midſt of the Earth; therefore by his deſire to be alone, we muſt not underſtand a ſtrict loneneſs or ſolitarineſs; as if rich men had a mind to live alone, ſo as to have none about them or with them; but the meaning is, they would have none in power but themſelves, none in poſſeſſion but themſelves; they are unwilling that any ſhould have an Eſtate but themſelves; they would have all others to be their Underlings and Tenants, their Servants and Villains, to till their ground, and gather in their revenues; they only would be Freeholders, all others muſt hold by their Copy, and do them homage. If the greateſt man in the world were turned alone into the world, he would have but an ill being of it; therefore the meaning of the Prophet is, that they would be placed alone in the midſt of the Earth to command and rule; all others muſt ſerve them. And they whoſe pride, ambition, or covetouſneſs provokes them to dwell thus alone in the earth, ſhall find nothing beyond this earth, but to dwell in fire.

Potentis eſt terra; pauper ubique jacet.

> Secondly obſerve, That, For a Magiſtrate to favour men becauſe of their greatneſs and power, is an utter departure from his duty.

The poor man ſhould have the Earth, that belongs to him as well as the rich. The mean mans right to his little, is as good, as the mighty mans to his great deal. Juſtice gives every man his own, without reſpect to the Owner.

Thirdly, Conſider the words as a Charge brought againſt Job, he being a man in authority, and in place. Hence note,

> He that lets wicked men oppreſs or wrong others, when he is inveſted and intruſted with power to hinder them, betrayeth his truſt, and loſeth the ends of his inveſtiture.

The Lord chargeth Eli (1 Sam. 3. 13.) becauſe of the great iniquity which his Sons committed; but it might be ſaid, What was their ſin to him? Yes, it lay in his power to hinder them; for Eli was the chief Magiſtrate in Iſrael, and therefore the Lord concluded, I will Judge his houſe for ever, for the iniquity which he knoweth, becauſe his Sons made themſelves vile, and he reſtrained them not: But did not Eli reſtrain them? There is a reſtraining, Firſt, By way of counſel and advice; and in this ſence Eli did reſtrain them (chap. 9. 23, 24.) He ſaid unto them, why do ye ſuch things? for I hear of your evil dealings with all the people; nay, my Sons; for it is no good report that I hear, ye make the Lords people to tranſgreſs. Thus he puts a moral ſtop in their way, ſhewing the hainouſneſs of their ſin, and dehorting them from it; but Eli being a man in power and authority, might have gone another way to work with them, he might have puniſhed them for their ſin: And becauſe he did not, here was Eli's ſin; and this is ſuggeſted as Job's ſin. He was a man in power, yet he winked at thoſe violent ones, and let them carry all the Earth, whenas he might have mended the matter, by checking their inſolencies, and doing the poor right. This is charged on Thiatira, in reference to the neglect of uſing their Church-power (Rev. 2. 20.) Notwithſtanding I have a few things againſt thee, becauſe thou ſuffereſt that woman Jezebel, that calls her ſelf a Propheteſs, to teach, and to ſeduce my Servants to commit fornication, &c. That Angel ſuffered her; how did he ſuffer her? He did not uſe that power that Chriſt had committed to the Church, to admoniſh, to reprove, to caſt out, he did not ſtop that ſeducing Propheteſs by a due exerciſe of ſpiritual power, but ſuffered her to ſeduce uncontrouled. The more power we have to prevent or remove either ſpiritual or civil evils, the greater is our ſin when it is not done; if Eliphaz had not ſuppoſed Job a Magiſtrate, he could not have laid this burden upon him, or have repreſented him in fault, becauſe the mighty man had the Earth, and the honourable man dwelt in it, oppreſſing the weak, and vexing thoſe of low degree.

Eliphaz goes yet one ſtep further in the proſecution of this Charge, and arraignes him for another Crime, and that a very great one; The mighty man had the Earth, the honourable man dwells in it: But,

Verſe 9. The widow thou haſt ſent empty away, and the arms of the fatherleſs have been broken.

As if he had ſaid, Thou didſt fill the full with good things, but the hungry thou haſt ſent empty away; the honourable have been provided for, but they who were deſtitute of all friends, found no friendſhip at thy hands, unleſs the breaking of their arms.

Thou haſt ſent widows away empty.

שלח Verbum dimittendi violentiam quandam affert, ut ſit idem quod ejicere, extrudere, expellere.

There is ſomewhat conſiderable in the nature of the word which we render ſent; for it implies a putting away with a kind of violence; thou haſt caſt them out, or bid them be packing; thou haſt put them off with rigor and diſtaſte. As if he had ſaid, Thou haſt not only let them go from thy houſe unrelieved, but thou haſt reviled them and thruſt them away, becauſe they asked relief. So we may expound it by that (Gen. 3. 23, 24.) And the Lord God ſent him (that is, Adam) forth from the garden of Eden, to till the ground from whence he was taken. What this ſending forth was, is expreſſed in the next verſe; So he drove out the man. Such a ſending away is here intended, thou haſt ſent widows away (as we ſpeak) with a witneſs; thou haſt chid or rated them out of thy preſence. As it is ſaid of Gallio (Acts 18. 16, 17.) That he cared for none of thoſe things, and he drave them from the Judgment-ſeat. Thus thou haſt ſent widows away.

Compluten-ſes.

Further, In the Chaldee Language, the word ſignifies to ſtrip, or to pluck off the very ſkin. This is yet more tyrannical, Thou haſt ſent them away ſpoiled and ſtript, or, as it followeth in the Text, empty. Thou haſt ſent widows away, &c. It was not the mighty man, nor the great ones of the earth that he is charged to deal thus unkindly, or rather cruelly with, but the widow; that heightens the ſinfulneſs of his tyranny. This very word by which a widow is expreſſed in the Hebrew, as well as her condition, calls for help and pity: It comes from a root that ſignifies, either to bind, or to be ſilent; taking it in the firſt ſignification, to bind, the widow may be ſo called for two reaſons: Firſt, Becauſe the widow is (as it were) bound about with afflictions and ſorrows; ſhe hath many troubles about her, as ſo many bonds from which ſhe cannot free her ſelf without running into many other troubles. Secondly, The widow is ſo called, by the rule of contrary ſpeaking; bound, that is, not at all bound, but free or looſed from her husband. Thus the Apoſtle ſpeaks (Rom. 7. 1, 2, 3. 1 Cor. 7. 39.) Her marriage-knot is untied by death; If her husband be dead, ſhe is looſed from the Law of her husband. ſhe is left to her ſelf, and her own diſpoſe alone. Take the word in the ſecond ſignification, to be ſilent: A widow is ſo called, becauſe ſhe ſeldom hath that natural, and never hath that civil liberty or freedom of ſpeech her husband had, and therefore ſhe needs others to ſpeak for her, or muſt ſpeak her mind by others, her ſelf being either unable, or diſabled to ſpeak in her own caſe, or to ſpeak for her ſelf. This being the widows ſtate, he hath the greater ſin who deals unkindly with her. What? Thruſt away the widow, whoſe heart is bound about, yea, and thruſt through with many ſorrows! What? thruſt away the widow, who is unable to manage her own cauſe, and defend her ſelf in her right! yet this thou haſt done; Thou haſt ſent widows away אלמנה à verbo אלם Quod eſt colligare, ergo ligata dicitur per contrarium intellectum, quia jam ſoluta viro. Significat etiam habere linguâ colligatam, i.e. obmuteſcere aut mutum eſſe, quòd mortuo viro non valeat loqui & litigare, quamvis contra æquum & jus rapinam bonorum ſuorum patiatur. Rab. Mor.

Empty.] That is, without any help or comfort. The word is uſed to ſignifie the emptineſs of a veſſel (2 Kings 4. 4.) It is uſed alſo concerning the Dreamer, who thinks that he hath eaten, but when he awakes, his ſoul (that is, his ſtomach) is empty (Iſa. 29. 8.) So we may expound the word Racha (Mat. 5. 22.) He that ſaith to his Brother Racha; which ſome underſtand, not of a man that wants wit or honeſty only, but wealth or plenty. And then to call a man Racha, is to upbraid him both with poverty and ſimplicity: As if it ſhould (in diſgrace) be ſaid to him, Thou poor ſnake, thou ſilly fellow, what doſt thou talk? thou who haſt ſo little wit, thou who art not worth a groat? In the Story of Jephthah (Judg. 11. 3.) Such a ſort of men are ſpoken of as his aiders and aſſiſtants; Then Jephthah fled from his brethren, and there were gathered together vain men to Jephthah, and went out with him. Some tranſlate, poor men were gathered together, and went out with him. Vain men are uſually idle fellows and vagabonds, and we may conceive his company or followers to have conſiſted of poor men rather then of vain men: And in that ſence the word is uſed (Neh. 5. 13.) Even thus be he ſhaken out and emptied; that is, impoveriſhed and reduced to nothing. And thus alſo the low eſtate of Jeſus Chriſt is expreſſed (Phil. 2.) He emptied himſelf, namely, of his divine glory and ſplendor; that is, he ſhewed not his Majeſty whileſt he was in the fleſh, but covered and vailed it, and was in appearance as a poor empty man, having voluntarily made himſelf of no reputation, though he were Lord over all. Such was the emptineſs in which theſe widows were ſent away by Job, as Eliphaz accuſeth him. And this act may have a threefold interpretation. Firſt, They were ſent away empty, that is, not filled or relieved by thy charity; thou didſt not open either thy heart or thy hand to ſupply their neceſſities, or to make them up in what they wanted and humbly deſired.

A radice ריק quod eſt effundere vel evacuare.

Erat ergo contumelioſum verbum dicere fratri Raka, i.e. vocare pauperculum & bonis omnibus exhauſtū

Heb. Vacui, non ut putat Vatablus, Otioſi, ſed ut alii inopes & bonis exhauſti.

Secondly, Thou haſt ſent widows empty away, that is, thou haſt given them no relief by thy Juſtice; ſome widows beg meerly for alms; others bring their caſe and cauſe to the Magiſtrate or man in Authority, for help againſt their oppreſſing Adverſaries. In Luke 18. The importunate Widow ſaith to the Judge, Relieve me againſt my adverſary; I beg not your Charity, but your Juſtice; The widow is ſent away empty, when her Suit is not heard. We may underſtand Eliphaz either way, that when the widow ſued for her right, ſhe found no Juſtice, and when ſhe came for an Alms, ſhe found no Charity.

Thirdly, We may interpret it yet higher; Thou haſt ſent widows away empty, that is, widows came to thee full, or in a good condition, but thou haſt emptied them by oppreſſion, and taken away what they had. Covetous Magiſtrates care not how or of whom they get it, ſo they can get it; they empty the widows purſe, yea, widows houſes to fill their own. Chriſt reproved the Phariſees for this (Matth. 23. 14.) Wo unto you Scribes and Phariſees, for ye devour widows houſes; ye eat them out of houſe and home, either by living upon, or by taking away their livings. We may underſtand Eliphaz in this ſence alſo; Thou haſt ſent widows away empty, that is, widows came to thee for protection, and thou didſt promiſe it; but then to make thy own market upon them, and ſerve thy ſelf, thou haſt oppreſſed them; they came to thee to do them right, and thou haſt undone them by unrighteouſneſs. It is ill enough to deny widows Charity, it is worſe to deny them Juſtice; but it is worſt of all to undo them by unjuſtice: yet thoſe two Horſe-leeches, Pride and Covetouſneſs will not forbear to draw from the widow. Some rich men undertake the widows cauſe, only to enrich themſelves by the ſpoils of the widow; and for this reaſon they promiſe help to thoſe who are in miſery, that they may make them more miſerable, inſtead of helping them; Thou haſt ſent widows away empty. Thus Job was ſuppoſed to have dealt with widows.

Tradant ſe ad tuendum majoribus, dedititias ſe divitum faciunt. Illud grave eſt, quod hac lege tueri pauperes videntur ut ſpoliant; hac lege defendunt miſeros ut miſeriores faciant defendendo. Salv. lib. 5. De Provid.

See next how Eliphaz chargeth him for his dealings with the fatherleſs.

And the arms of the fatherleſs have been broken.

Theſe two deſolate names are alwayes found alone, but often as one in Scripture; the widow who is disjoyned from her husband, and the fatherleſs, who are bereaved of their parents, are commonly joyned together. And theſe two Names are taken in Scripture, either ſtrictly, or more largely; ſtrictly, to ſignifie only ſuch perſons as have either loſt their husbands or parents; largely, and ſo the widow and fatherleſs ſignifie any that are in diſtreſs, or need our charity; becauſe the widow and the fatherleſs ſtand often in need of charity, therefore theſe names in Scripture, ſignifie any that need our charity. While the Prophet ſaith (Hoſ. 14. 3.) With thee the fatherleſs findeth mercy; we are not to ſtraighten his ſence only to Orphans, but to any that are in diſtreſs; he that is a father may be called fatherleſs, and the child that hath a father, may be called fatherleſs, when extreamly needing the help either of God or man. And ſo the word widow muſt be underſtood (Rev. 18. 7.) Where Babylon boaſteth, I ſit as a Queen, and am no widow, that is, I am neither friendleſs nor helpleſs; or as the next words ſeem to expound it, I ſhall ſee no ſorrow; which is uſually the widows portion. Thus in the Text, by the widow and the fatherleſs, we muſt underſtand not only thoſe who are formally ſo, but all in affliction, who are equivalently ſo.

Duo iſta nomina in quantum deſpectui humano, in tantum miſericordiæ divinæ expoſita, Tert. l. 1. ad uxor. c. 8. Per viduam & pupillum omne genus miſeriorum hominum ſignificatur. Pined.

The arms of the fatherleſs have been broken.] In the former part of the verſe, he ſaith, Thou haſt ſent the widow away empty; charging the ſin perſonally upon Job: here he only ſaith, The arms of the fatherleſs have been broken; as if he did not place the fault directly upon him: yet ſome tranſlate it ſo; Thou haſt broken the arms of the fatherleſs; making it Job's act: However our rendring layes fault enough upon him, and leaves him in particular without excuſe, while it ſpeaks only in general, The arms of the fatherleſs have been broken: For it is as if he had ſaid, thou haſt permitted their arms to be broken. And if he ſhould object, What if the arms of the fatherleſs have been broken? what is that to me? Yes, you being in place and power, and having ſtrength in your own hands to preſerve the fatherleſs, if the arms of the fatherleſs have been broken, the ſin muſt lie at your door. Every man is guilty of all the evil which he hath power and a call to hinder, and doth not hinder.

The arms of the fatherleſs.] Arms may be taken either properly or figuratively. The arm properly is a noble and moſt uſeful Limb of the body; we are not to underſtand it ſo here, as if he had broken the natural arms of their bodies: A mans arm is broken, when his power is broken, though his skin be not ſo much as toucht. So then,

Per brachia robur, divitiæ, facultates quæ orphano pro brachiis & manibus eſſe poſſunt, intelliguntur.

By the arms of the fatherleſs, we are to underſtand whatſoever is the ſtrength, or makes for the defence of the fatherleſs. The arm (as we toucht in the former verſe) is put for ſtrength, becauſe the arm hath much ſtrength and activity in it for the defence and uſe of the whole body. The eſtate, the friends, the kindred, all the means, helps and aids which are ſubſervient to the good and protection of the fatherleſs, are by a Figure called the Arms of the fatherleſs. Theſe arms, ſaith Eliphaz,

דכא Confringere, contundere. 1. Non ſubveniendo. 2. Detinendo ſubſtantiam ipſis à parentibus relictam.

Have been broken.] The word notes an utter breaking, a breaking to pieces; to break as a thing is broken in a Mortar with a Peſtle. This breaking may be alſo conſidered two wayes; either as done by a poſitive act, or by a negative act, that is, by with-holding that help which might preſerve them from breaking. The arms of the fatherleſs are broken by denying them protection, as well as by exerciſing oppreſſion by them. Thus we ſee what a Bill of Indictment is here drawn up againſt Job, how he is charged with crimes which are not only againſt the light of Scripture, but even againſt the very light of Nature; even with thoſe crimes which his hand was far from, and his heart further from, with thoſe crimes which he did not only forbear to practiſe, but which his ſoul did abhor. Hence obſerve,

That, The moſt innocent perſons are often charged with the fouleſt and ſinfulleſt crimes.

Job was ſo clear in his own Conſcience from this accuſation, that he not only profeſſeth openly that he never did, but imprecates a like vengeance upon himſelf if ever he had done it (chap. 31.21.) If I have lift up my hands againſt the fatherleſs, when I ſaw my help in the Gate (that is, when by reaſon of my great power and authority in the place of judgment, I could eaſily enough have done it, no man daring to oppoſe or hinder me, but all rather being ready to countenance or aſſiſt me in it; if (I ſay) when [illegible] had theſe advantages over the fatherleſs, I did ever break their arms) then let mine arm fall from my ſhoulder-blade, and mine arm be broken from the bone: As if he had ſaid, If I have done this thing, let a divine and viſible retaliation point me out for the man; let all the world ſee and read my ſin in my puniſhment, and my injuſtice againſt man in the moſt diſcernable judgments of God upon my ſelf. Thus free and innocent was Job, and yet thus accuſed. And indeed, if to accuſe were enough, there is no man in the world could be innocent or free. Who is there of ſo unſpotted a converſation, that may not be ſpotted with accuſation? who, while his Conſcience is pure, may not have much dirt caſt in his face?

Secondly, Eliphaz accuſes Job of all this, not becauſe he knew it to be ſo, but becauſe he thought it was ſo. Whence note (which hath formerly been toucht at)

That, To charge any man upon ſurmiſe, with things that we cannot prove, is a high breach not only of Charity, but of Juſtice.

The Lord reproves Job's three Friends in the laſt Chapter of this Book, becauſe they had not ſpoken of him the thing that was right; and as they had not ſpoken the thing that was right of God, ſo not of Job. They pitcht upon no reaſon why they condemned him ſo much, but only becauſe he endured ſo much. They concluded him a man of ſin, becauſe he was a man of ſorrow. The Apoſtle gives us the true Genius of Charity (1 Cor. 13.3,4.) Charity believeth all things; not that Charity is ſo credulous as to take up every thing for truth which is ſcattered by any common and ungrounded report; thats no commendation in any man, much leſs is it the commendation of a godly man; therefore when the Apoſtle ſaith, Charity believeth all things, the meaning is, Charity interprets every thing in the beſt ſence which it will bear, and makes the faireſt conſtruction which every mans caſe and condition will admit. And again, at v. 5. Charity thinks no evil; that is, it thinks no evil of others; as a godly man will not maintain evil thoughts, or ſuffer them to lodge within him, in reference to any ſin, which himſelf is tempted to commit, ſo, a charitable man will not maintain or lodge evil thoughts of others, in reference to any ſin which he can only ſuppoſe that they have committed. Again, as Charity thinks no evil, that is, it doth not plot evil againſt others; ſo thinks no evil by a raſh ſurmiſing it of others. Thus, Charity believes all's well, and thinks no evil. How uncharitable then are they, yea, how unjuſt who believe all's ill, where they know of none; and think the worſt of them in whom they never ſaw any thing but what was good? It is not enough for a man to ſay he doth not judge his brother maliciouſly; he ought not to judge him ignorantly. Though to ſpeak or judge ill of another, becauſe we wiſh him ill, be the greater ſin, yet barely to ſpeak or judge ill of another, by whom we know no ill, is very ſinful: And then 'tis moſt ſinful, when we do it not only as not knowing any evil they have done, but becauſe we know, hear or ſee the evils which they ſuffer. 'Tis dangerous as well as improper to make the hardeſt and harſheſt dealings of God with any man, the ground of our hard and harſh thoughts of him.

Thirdly conſider who they were whom Job is ſuppoſed to have oppreſſed; they were not the great ones, not the mighty men of the earth, but the fatherleſs and the widow. Hence note,

That, The poor are uſually the ſubject of oppreſſion.

The greater fiſh in the ſea of this world devour and live upon the leſſer; the ſtrong ſhould ſupport the weak, and they who are uppermoſt, ſhould uphold thoſe who are under them. But becauſe the weak and the underlings may moſt eaſily be oppreſt, therefore they are moſt uſually oppreſt. As covetouſneſs is cruel, ſo 'tis cowardly, and dares not meddle with its match. God in reference to ſpirituals, filleth the hungry with good things, and the rich he ſendeth empty away (Luke 1. 23.) Ungodly men in reference to temporals, would ſend the rich empty away if they could; but they are ſo far from filling the hungry with good things, that they take away all the good things they can from the hungry; they care not if they ſtarve the hungry, if they make the poor poorer, and take all from them who have but little,

Fourthly, Job having been a Magiſtrate, and ſo (by his place) a Miniſter of Juſtice, is ſtrongly preſſed with the doing of injuſtice. Hence note,

Firſt, That, They who have power, may eaſily, though not alwayes juſtly, be ſuſpected for the abuſe of it.

To have a power in our hands whereby we may do good, is a temptation to do evil. 'Tis hard to keep power within its bounds, and to rule that by which others are ruled, The Prophet (Iſa. 1. 10.) calls the rulers of Sion, rulers of Sodom, becauſe they ruled like them, or rather worſe then they, eating up the people under their charge, rather then feeding them, and vexing thoſe whom they undertook to govern, and to be a Shield unto againſt the vexations of others.

Secondly note, That, As oppreſſion is a ſin in any man, ſo it is moſt ſinful in thoſe who have power in their hands to relieve the oppreſſed.

Such act not only contrary to a common rule, but contrary to their ſpecial duty; by how much we have the more obligation not to do a thing, by ſo much we ſin the more if we do it.

Thirdly note, That, As it is very ſinful in Magiſtrates to wrong any man, ſo it is moſt ſinful to wrong them, or deny them right, who have moſt need of it, the widow and the fatherleſs.

Magiſtrates are called Gods; and God who hath honoured them by putting his name upon them, expects that they ſhould honour him, by imitating or acting like unto him. What a Magiſtrate doth, he ſhould do like God; he ſhould do it ſo, that every one may be convinced that God is in in him and with him of a truth. As God takes care of the widow and of the fatherleſs, ſo ſhould he. God is known by this Title, A father of the fatherleſs, and a Judge of the widow, is God in his holy habitation (Pſal.68.5.) That is, in in Heaven; for that's the habitation of his holineſs, and of his glory; there he dwells, judging for the widow and the fatherleſs. And as that is the ſpecial buſineſs (as it were) of God in heaven, ſo they who are Gods on earth, ought to make it their ſpecial buſineſs to judge for the widow and the fatherleſs. Hence we find the widow and the fatherleſs commended by name to the care of the Magiſtrate. The fatherleſs have no natural parents living, or none near of kin remaining to maintain and defend them; therefore the Magiſtrate, who is (pater patriæ) the common father of his Countrey, ſhould be their Foſter-father. They who want power are the charge, and ſhould be the ſpecial care of thoſe in power. Thus they are commanded (Pſal. 82. 3, 4.) Defend the poor and fatherleſs, do juſtice to the afflicted and needy; rid them out of the hand of the wicked. Here's their work; and the neglect of this work (how buſie ſoever Magiſtrates are about other work) is often complained of aloud in Scripture, as a crying ſin, as a ſin that ruines Nations, and draws down publick Judgments upon a people. (Iſa. 1. 17.) Ceaſe to do evil, learn to do well; ſeek judgment, relieve the oppreſſed; judge the fatherleſs, plead for the widow. And at verſe 23. They judge not the fatherleſs, neither doth the cauſe of the widow come unto them. Again (Jer. 5. 28.) They judge not the cauſe of the fatherleſs. It is a ſin not to judge any mans Cauſe, not to judge the Cauſe of the richeſt, of the greateſt; yet it is more ſinful not to judge the Cauſe of the widow and the fatherleſs. And when he ſaith, They judge not the Cauſe, &c. The meaning is, they judge not the Cauſe of the fatherleſs impartially and righteouſly. And indeed, he that doth not judge righteouſly, doth not judge at all: And when the Prophet ſaith, They judge not the Cauſe of the fatherleſs, it is as if he had ſaid, Among all the Cauſes that lie unjudged, this is the Cauſe that God takes moſt notice of, and is moſt diſpleaſed with the neglect of it, even when the Cauſe of the fatherleſs is not pleaded, or judged. All are forward enough to plead the Cauſe of the rich; but when the Client is poor, and appears (in forma pauperis) his Cauſe ſeldom finds any but a poor and formal pleading. We read (Acts 6. 1.) That there was a great murmuring of the Grecians againſt the Hebrews, becauſe their widows were neglected in the dayly adminiſtration. Church-Officers (in their capacity) as well as State-Officers (in theirs) ought to have a careful eye upon widows that are in want. And the Apoſtle James (chap. 1. 27.) ſums up (as it were) all Religion into this one duty; Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, to viſit the fatherleſs and the widow. Not as if this were indeed all Religion, or the all of Religion; but as when the Spirit, in Scripture, hath to do with prophane perſons, or meer moral honeſt men, who place all religion in civil righteouſneſs and works of charity, then he calls them to firſt-Table duties, or to the ſincere worſhip of God; ſo, when the Spirit is ſpeaking to thoſe who place all their religion in worſhip, or in firſt-Table duties, neglecting the duties of charity and righteouſneſs, then we find all religion placed in ſecond-Table work, in giving every man his due, in compaſſion to the poor, in helping the helpleſs, in feeding the hungry, in cloathing the naked, in comforting the ſorrowful, and, by name, the fatherleſs and widow. This is pure religion, to viſit the fatherleſs and widow; that is, this is the practical part, or the true practice of Religion, without which all Religion is vain. Therefore when the Apoſtle had ſaid (v. 21.) Receive with meekneſs the engraffed word: Leſt any one ſhould ſtay there, and think he had done enough, when he had been a hearer, he adds, Be doers of the word, that is, look to the practical part of Religion; be diligent in the duties of love to men, as well as in thoſe of the worſhip of God.

Take theſe two Inferences from the whole Verſe.

Firſt, Seeing God taketh ſo much care of the widow and the fatherleſs, Let the widow, let the fatherleſs truſt in God. They who receive peculiar promiſes from God, ſhould put forth ſuitable acts of faith towards God. Faith cannot work without a word, and where it hath a word, it ought to work. We have both put together in the preſent caſe (Jer. 49. 11.) Leave the fatherleſs children, I will preſerve them alive; and let the widows truſt in me: As if God had ſaid, if none will take care of them, I will; I will take care of them, I will be a father of the fatherleſs, a husband to the widow, leave that care to me. Therefore let the widow and fatherleſs truſt in God: A word from God, is a better and a bigger portion then all the wealth of this world.

Secondly, Seeing the Lord is ſo jealous over them, and ſo ready to take their part againſt all their adverſaries, this ſhould provoke them to be full of zeal for God. God ſtands up for their protection, therefore they ſhould ſtand up for God their Protector and Patron. How careful ſhould they be to pleaſe him who is ſo watchful to preſerve them? Special promiſes call for ſpecial obedience, as well as for ſpecial faith: The more God engageth himſelf to do for us, the more ſhould we engage our ſelves (in his ſtrength) to do for him. None have more reaſon to be rich in faith and love to God, then the poor and fatherleſs.

Thus far we have examined the Indictment or Charge which Eliphaz brought againſt Job; now ſee what he infers upon it, here's thy ſin, and there's thy puniſhment.

VERS. 10, 11.

Therefore ſnares are round about thee, and ſudden fear troubleth thee;
Or darkneſs that thou canſt not ſee, and abundance of waters cover thee.

THeſe two verſes have variety of expreſſions, but the intendment of all is one and the ſame; Snares and fears, and darkneſs, and abundance of waters, ſignifie all manner of evils: All theſe are upon thee, becauſe thou haſt ſent widows away empty, and haſt ſuffered the Arms of the fatherleſs to be broken; becauſe thou haſt done theſe things, therefore Snares are about thee.

Some render the Original Text to another ſence, not as bearing an effect of the former words, not as if he had been puniſhed with theſe evils for thoſe ſins; but as if theſe evils had cauſed him to ſin; and ſo the words are expounded as a kind of ſcorn; as if Eliphaz had ſaid, When thou didſt thoſe things, no doubt ſnares, or fears, or darkneſs, or waters came upon thee, thou waſt forc'd by ſuffering theſe evils, to do all this evil, waſt thou not? was it not becauſe thou waſt preſt with ſnares, and fears, and darkneſs, and waters, that thou didſt oppreſs the widow and the fatherleſs? All which Queſtions are reducible to theſe plain Negations: Thou waſt not preſſed with any of theſe perplexities upon thy ſelf, to oppreſs the poor; there was no ſnare, no nor any fear near thee, darkneſs did not hinder thy ſight, nor did the waters of affliction cover thee: Thou haſt not been thruſt upon ſin by theſe temptations, nor conſtrained by the moral violence of any incumbent neceſſity, but thou haſt done it freely; to ſin even in this manner, and at this height, hath not been thy refuge, but thy choice: Thou haſt not acted theſe iniquities by any inſtigation, either from Perſons or Providences, but upon thine own election. This is a fair ſence, and a mighty reproof; ſeeing (as was lately noted) every evil we do is by ſo much the worſe, by how much we have had the leſs provocation or ſolicitation to do it.

על בן Non ſignificat illationem aut convenientiam conſequentis ad antecedens, ſed convenientiam aptitudinemq; antecedentis ad conſequens. Coc.

But I rather take the words as we render them, to expreſs the ſad effect and fruits of his ſin; as if Eliphaz had ſaid, Becauſe thou haſt taken a pledge of thy brother for nought, &c. becauſe thou haſt ſent widows away empty, and the arms of the fatherleſs have been broken, therefore ſnares are round about thee, &c. The words may have a threefold alluſion.

First, To the beſieging of a City; ſnares are round about thee, thou art now hemm'd in on every ſide with troubles; as Chriſt threatens Jeruſalem, thine enemies ſhall caſt a trench abaut thee, &c. A trench is but a great ſnare to catch men, as men catch birds or vermine in ſnares. Or,

Hoſtile aliquid & obſidionale ſignificat.

Secondly, The alluſion may be to impriſonment; thou art compaſſed with ſtrong walls, and ſhut in with gates, thou art ſhackled with iron ſnares.

Thirdly, The words may allude to hunting and fowling; in ſuch diſports Nets and Snares are ſet to take the intended Game. Snares are often ſpoken of in Scripture, to intimate or ſet forth the afflictions and ſorrows that intrap and hold the ſons of men. So that to ſay, Snares are round about thee, is no more but thus, troubles are round about thee; and theſe ſnares are ſometimes ſet by the hand of man, ſometimes by the immediate hand of God. Good things are often made a ſnare to the undoing of evil men, and evil things are often made a ſnare to the troubling, though not to the undoing of good men. But I ſhall not proſecute this Alluſion, having ſpoken of it Chap. 18. verſ. 6, 7. 8.

where Job complains that God had taken him in his ſnare; as alſo in Chap. 19. 5.

And ſudden fear troubleth thee.

We may underſtand this fear; Firſt, For the paſſion of fear, or for fear within: Secondly, For the occaſion of fear, which is fear without. Sudden fear troubleth thee, that is, the appearance or apprehenſion of ſome terrible thing cauſeth thee to fear. Fear is often put in Scripture for the thing feared, for the object of fear, or for that which cauſeth fear. Thus alſo hope is put for the thing hoped for, and viſion for the thing ſeen, or the object of the viſion.

Paſſio pro objecto & materia ſunt in omni idiomate familiare. Sanct.

Thirdly, Some expound fear in the Text, for that ſpecial fear which riſeth from guilt, or for terror of conſcience. Sudden fear troubleth thee; that is, thy conſcience flyes in thy face and affrights thee; thy fear flows not from any outward troubles that threaten thee, or from wants that afflict thee, but from thoſe wickedneſſes which have been committed by thee; thy conſcience vexeth and tormenteth thee, not only with fear, but with ſuddain fear; fear ruſheth upon thee unexpectedly, violently, like an armed man. Sudden fear troubleth thee. Taking fear in all or any one of theſe interpretations.

Note, Sudden fear ſurprizeth ſecureſt ſinners.

When they ſhall ſay peace and quietneſs, then ſorrow and anguiſh come upon them as pain upon a woman in travel, and they ſhall not eſcape. The Prophet in a viſion (Zech. 5. 1.) Saw a flying roll; that flying roll was the Curſe: And it was called a flying roll, to note the ſpeedy and ſudden coming of thoſe judgments that were written in it; they came not only upon the ſpur, but upon the wing; they came flying; flying is a ſwift motion, and that motion is applied to judgement, when once God giveth it a Commiſſion to come. Hence alſo (Deut. 32. 41.) the ſword is called a lightning ſword, or a ſword that hath lightning in it; If I (ſaith the Lord) whet my glittering (or lightning) ſword. The ſword of the Lord is as lightning; it hath burning and ſwifneſs in it; divine vengeance cometh as lightning. It is called alſo the overflowing ſcourge (Iſa. 28. 15.) 'Tis a ſcourge becauſe the laſhes of it cauſe much ſmart and pain, and 'tis an overflowing ſcourge, to note the ſuddenneſs of it; the ſcourge comes in like a mighty flood.

Again, This ſuddenneſs of fear, or of things feared, may have reference unto the ſecurity of wicked men, who though they have often heard of dangers, and judgments have been threatned upon them, yet they alwayes come ſuddenly upon them, becauſe they never prepare for them. To ſuch as are unprepared, evils are alwayes ſudden, how often ſoever they have been warned of them. As to him that is prepared, death is never ſudden, though he dye (as we Vulgarly phraſe it) a ſudden death. So he that is unprepared for death, dieth ſuddenly, though he die that which we commonly call a lingring death. Thus death and judgment ſhall come ſuddenly upon all ungodly men. It ſhall be (ſaith Chriſt, Matth. 24. 37.) as in the dayes of Noah, they were eating and drinking, they were marrying, and giving in marriage, till the day that Noah entred into the Ark, and knew not till the floud came, and took them all away. But did they not know of the floud, till the floud came; aſſuredly they did, for Noah foretold them of and preached the coming of the floud, a hundred and twenty years before it came (Gen. 6. 3.) My ſpirit ſhall not alwayes ſtrive (I will not alwayes be contending) yet his dayes ſhall be an hundred and twenty years; that is, he ſhall have an hundred and twenty years warning; all that time the old world had warning of the floud, and Noah preached upon that Text all that time; yet the floud came upon them (ſaith the Text) and they knew it not; that is, they regarded not what Noah ſaid, they took no thought neither to prevent the floud, nor to prepare for it. The Author to the Hebrews tells us, that Noah by faith being warned of God of things not ſeen as yet, moved with fear, prepared an Ark to the ſaving of his houſe, by which he condemned the world (that is, the then world of unbelief and hardneſs of heart) and became heir of the righteouſneſs which is by faith (Heb. 11. 7.) He had a holy fear in him, and a faith alſo; a faith that the thing ſhould be done, and a fear of God who threatned to do that thing. Thus by faith being moved with fear, he prepared an Ark for the ſafety of himſelf and of his houſhold. Why did not the reſt alſo make preparation? They did not believe, nor did they fear. Chriſt rebuked his Diſciples in the ſtorm at Sea (Matth. 8.) with, why are ye fearful, O ye of little faith; the old world might have been rebuked, with, why are ye fearleſs, even becauſe ye are of little, or rather of no faith at all. Unleſs dangers threatned be believed, they are never feared; and unleſs they be both believed and feared, they are never avoided. Whenſoever the Lord of ſuch ſervants ſhall come, he cometh in a day, when they look not for him, and in an hour that they are not aware of (Matth. 24. 50.) that is, he cometh ſuddenly. What can come more ſuddenly upon any man, then that which he looked not for, nor was at all aware of. Thus he ſhall come to cut them aſunder, and to appoint them their portion with hypocrites; there ſhall be weeping and gnaſhing of teeth. Sudden fear troubleth thee;

Verſ. 11. Or darkneſs, that thou canſt not ſee, and abundance of waters cover thee.

Aut an tu ſolus tenebras non videres & tanta ſcelera impunè ferres?

Some render this verſe by way of interrogation; Shalt thou not ſee darkneſs? And ſhall not the abundance of waters cover thee? Shalt thou only not ſee darkneſs, and paſs unpuniſhed for ſuch monſtrous wickedneſſes? As if he had ſaid, thou ſeemeſt to wonder, that darkneſs is upon thee, thou makeſt ſtrange of it, that flouds or abundance of waters cover thee. But haſt thou not deſerved and called forth theſe Judgments, by many ſinful provocations?

Others render this Text, not as a Queſtion, but as a direct Aſſertion; Thou thoughteſt, that thou ſhouldeſt, or thou hadſt a conceit, that thou ſhouldeſt never ſee darkneſs, nor any trouble coming upon thee, thy heart was lift up in hope of impunity; thou didſt perſwade thy ſelf, that God had as high an opinion of thee, as thou hadſt of thy ſelf, or thou haſt flattered thy ſelf in thy ſinful way, and thou thoughteſt that God would have flattered thee alſo.

But I ſhall rather (as we) connect it with the former verſe, carrying on the ſame intention;

Or darkneſs, that thou canſt not ſee.] Darkneſs may be taken either properly, or improperly; darkneſs properly taken is that of the Air by the withdrawing of the Sun: This is not here intended. Darkneſs improperly taken is that of our ſtate, and it is twofold. Firſt, Internal, which is indeed ignorance, or the darkneſs of the mind; as if he had ſaid, darkneſs veils the eye of thy underſtanding, that thou canſt not ſee, either the hand of God upon thee for thy ſins, or thoſe thy ſins which have cauſed God to lay his heavy hand upon thee. Thy underſtanding is darkned, that thou canſt not ſee; this intellectual or internal darkneſs is twofold.

Firſt, Natural or inbred, every man hath naturally ſo much darkneſs in him, that as he cannot ſee the truths that are in the Word of God, ſo he cannot ſee the intendment of the Works of God.

Stupidus es planè niſi tua ſcelera harum tuarum calamitatum aquæ more inundantium & obruentium cauſam eſſe vides. Merc.

Secondly, Judiciary, or inflicted (Iſa. 6. 9.) Go and tell this people, hear ye indeed, but underſtand not: and ſee ye indeed, but perceive not. Make the heart of this people fat, and make their ears heavy, and ſhut their eyes. What were theſe eyes and ears that were to be made heavy and ſhut? Surely, they are to be underſtood; not of Organical, but of Intellectual ears and eyes. But who was to ſhut theſe eyes? A holy Prophet. And how was he to ſhut them? By propheſying or ſpeaking to them in the Name of the Lord. The proper work of the Word is to open the eyes, and enlighten the mind. But when a people have long ſhut their own eyes againſt, or only dallyed with (that tranſcendent mercy) the light, then God (which is the ſevereſt judgment) ſhuts their eyes, and darkens them with light. Of this Judiciary darkneſs, ſome interpret the preſent Text, as if Eliphaz had ſaid, there is a worſe plague upon thee, then all thoſe ſpoken of, even blindneſs and confuſion of mind, ſo that thou canſt neither ſee what brought thee into them, nor how to find thy way out, but art as a man under water, or in the dark, amuzed in theſe thy afflictions, not knowing what to do, or which way to turn thy ſelf.

Secondly, Darkneſs taken improperly is External, ſo a ſtate of ſorrow and affliction, is a ſtate of darkneſs. As before ſnares, ſo here darkneſs, notes any troubleſom condition, or the trouble of any mans condition. And when to darkneſs, this is added, Darkneſs, that thou canſt not ſee, it may import the greateſt degree of darkneſs, even darkneſs in perfection, or as the Scripture ſpeaks, thick darkneſs, yea, outer darkneſs. There is a darkneſs in which we may ſee, a darkneſs which hath ſome kind of light in it; but when darkneſs is ſo thick that we cannot ſee, that is, that we cannot ſee any thing in it (as we commonly ſay of extream darkneſs, 'tis ſo dark that we cannot ſee his hand) then 'tis perfect darkneſs. Light is not (properly) ſeen, but 'tis the medium or means by which we ſee; much leſs is darkneſs ſeen, it being properly that which intercepts and hinders ſight; yet 'tis rare to meet with darkneſs which hath not ſome mixture or tinctures of light, or with ſuch darkneſs as in which nothing at all can be ſeen: yet ſuch was this metaphorical darkneſs, with which he ſuppoſed Job was muffled up. I have more then once in other paſſages of this Book, met with and explained this term, ſhewing how and why afflictions and troubles are expreſſed by it, and therefore I ſhall not now ſtay upon it. Only here take notice, that the old Heathens had ſuch conceptions of darkneſs, and therefore being in a proſperous ſtate they had recourſe to the Sun, to Jupiter, Minerva, Mercury, their Idol-Deities, as the diſpenſers of light and comfort; but being under ſufferings and ſorrows, they made their aplications to the Earth, to Neptune, and others, whom they vainly believed, were Rulers of the night and Lords of darkneſs, as if theſe could command and chaſe away all evils from them. Scripture Language is full of ſuch deſcriptions about men in ſorrow. Darkneſs, that thou canſt not ſee;

Gentiles idẽ ſentire gestiebant diũ, non eoſdum in proſperis, quos in adverſis adibant Deos. In proſperis quidem ſolẽ, Jovem opulentum Minervam, Mercuriũ, Apollinẽ, hos omnes quaſi lucis & ſecundarum rerum largitores: at in adverſis tellurem, Neptunum & alios malorum depulſores, nocte multũ potentes, quaſi tenebrarum ipſi domini eſſent. Bold.

And abundance of waters cover thee.

* The word rendred Abundance, ſignifies a company or troop of waters, which meet and march together, even as horſes prepared for battel, and ready to give the charge. So the word is tranſlated (2 King. 9. 17.) a watchman from the Tower ſaid, I ſee a company. And that was Jehu with his troops, who came marching furiouſly with the revenge of God in his hand upon the houſe of Ahab. And ſo Ezek. 26. 10. By reaſon of the abundance of their horſes, their duſt ſhall cover thee; thy walls ſhall ſhake at the noyſe of the horſemen, and of the wheels, and of the chariots. Read the ſame uſe of the word (Iſa. 60. 6.) The multitude (ſome read the inundation) of Camels ſhall cover thee; They ſhall come in ſuch abundance, that they ſhall come like a floud, and ſhall be as the gathering of many waters. Troops of Horſes and Camels ruſh together as many waters; and waters ruſh and throng together, even as many Horſes. Thus, here abundance, or an Army of waters come in upon thee and cover thee. Waters in Scripture frequently ſignifie afflictions (Iſa. 43. 2.) When thou paſſeſt thorough the waters (that is, through great afflictions) I will be with thee (Pſal. 18. 16.) He drew me out of many waters; that is, out of many afflictions (Pſal. 66. 12.) We went through fire and water, but thou broughteſt us forth into a wealthy place. Fire and water, note all ſorts of afflictions, hot and cold, moiſt and dry. And ſome conceive that water in a metaphorical ſence is ſo often uſed in Scripture to ſignifie affliction; becauſe water in a proper ſence did once afflict the whole world. As the general Judgment upon the world at the laſt day ſhall be by fire, ſo the firſt general Judgment upon the world, was by water; it was a floud of waters, by which the Lord deſtroyed the whole world. Likewiſe Pharoah and his Hoſt of Egyptians (which was the ſecond moſt Eminent judgment, that ever was in the world) were overwhelmed by the waters of the red Sea. Thus Moſes ſang, (Exod. 15. 4, 5.) Pharoah's Chariot and his hoſt hath he caſt into the Sea, his choſen Captains alſo are drowned in the red Sea; The depths have covered them, they ſank into the bottom as a ſtone. And again (verſ. 10.) The Sea covered them, they ſank as Lead in the mighty waters. Water being the Element and the Inſtrument, which God hath ſo often uſed in his angry diſpenſations towards ſinful men, it may emphatically expreſs any diſpenſation of his anger. Yet if we conſider the very nature of the thing it ſelf, it carrieth ſignificancy enough to be the Emblem of ſaddeſt and ſoareſt affliction.

* שמע Quamvis multitudinem aut inundationem ſignificat cum celeritate quadã & ſtrepitu.

Firſt, There is in water a ſwallowing power; as water is eaſily ſwallowed, ſo it ſwallows all up. Man cannot ſubſiſt in it when it is moſt peaceable, and he can hardly eſcape out of it when 'tis enraged. Sorrow and affliction are ſwallowers alſo, unleſs mercy appear and moderate them, they drown and overthrow all. The Apoſtle uſeth that expreſſion when he adviſeth the Corinthians (2 Epiſt. 2. 7.) To forgive and comfort the inceſtuous perſon, whom, according to his advice, they had formerly Excommunicated or caſt out from fellowſhip in the Church; Leſt (ſaith he) ſuch a one ſhould be ſwallowed up with over-much ſorrow. Sorrow of any ſort, even ſorrow for ſin may poſſibly have an exceſs, or an over-muchneſs in it; and when ever it hath ſo (beyond the end for which it ſerves, for ſorrow is not of any worth in it ſelf, but as it ſerves to a ſpiritual end; when (I ſay) ſorrow hath ſuch an exceſs, then) not only the comforts, but the gifts and uſefulneſs of the perſon ſorrowing, are in danger to be ſwallowed up by it.

Secondly, Water doth not only ſwallow up, but enter in; while it covereth the body, it fills the bowels. Thus affliction like water, fills within as well as covers without. David complains that his afflictions did ſo (Pſal. 69. 1.) Save me O God, for the waters are come in unto my ſoul. Not only have theſe waters ſweld over me, but they are ſoakt into me. Inward or ſoul-afflictions, as well as outward, and bodily afflictions, are ſet forth by waters (Pſal. 109. 18.) As he cloathed himſelf with curſing, like as with his garment, ſo let it come into his bowels (or within him) like water, and like oyl into his bones. Liquids penetrate, ſo do afflictions.

Thirdly, As the water is not mans proper Element, he lives and breaths in the Air, not in the Water; ſo affliction is not our proper Element, though it be due to our ſin, yet it is not proper to our nature. Man was not made to live in affliction, as the fiſh was made to live in the water; and therefore as it is ſaid, The Lord doth not willingly afflict nor grieve the children of men (Lam. 3. 33.) 'Tis (as it were) beſides the nature of God, when he afflicts the children of men. So it is ſaid (Heb. 12. 11.) No chaſtning for the preſent ſeemeth to be joyous, but grievous. Man is out of his Element when he is under chaſtnings. He was made at firſt to live in the light of Gods countenance, in the ſmiles and embraces of divine love. As man is out of his way when he ſins, ſo he is off from his end when he ſuffers; he was not deſigned for the overwhelming choaking waters of ſorrow and judgment, but for the ſweet refreſhing air of joy and mercy. It often proves a mercy in the event to be covered with theſe waters; to be covered with them, that we may be waſhed by them is a mercy; but only to be covered with them, eſpecially (as Eliphaz here ſaith of Job was) to be deeply covered with them is a deep and ſoar affliction. Abundance of waters cover thee.

Hence note, That as God hath treaſures of mercy, and abounds in goodneſs, ſo he hath treaſures of affliction, and abundance of wrath.

As God hath abundance of waters ſealed up in the clouds, as in a treaſury, and he can unlock his treaſury and let them out whenſoever he pleaſeth, either to refreſh or overflow the Earth; ſo he hath abundance of afflictions, and he can let them forth, as out of a treaſury, when he pleaſeth. And as we read (Ezek. 47.) that the waters of the Sanctuary, thoſe holy waters were of ſeveral degrees; firſt, to the ankles; ſecondly, to the knees, then to the loins; and then a river that could not be paſſed over, abundance of waters. Thus alſo the bitter waters, the waters of affliction are of ſeveral degrees: ſome waters of afflictions are but ancle deep, they only make us a little wet ſhod, there are other waters up to the knees; and others to the loins, and others we may rightly call abundance of waters, a Sea of waters; I am come into deep waters (ſaith David, Pſal. 69. 2.) or into the depth of waters, where the flouds overflow me. And having ſaid (Pſal. 42. 6.) O my God, my ſoul is caſt down within me. He adds in the next words (verſ. 7.) Deep calleth unto deep at the noiſe of thy water-ſpouts: All thy waves and thy billowes are gone over me. Where, by deep to deep, by water-ſpouts, by waves and billows, he elegantly ſets forth his diſtreſs, in alluſion to a Ship at Sea in a vehement ſtorm and ſtreſs of weather; when the ſame wave upon whoſe back the veſſel rides out of one deep, plungeth it down into another; thus the afflicted are toſſed and overwhelmed in a Sea of trouble, till they are at their wits end, if not at their faiths end.

Take two or three Deductions from all theſe words laid together. We ſee, by how many metaphors, the ſorrows of this life are ſet forth, even by ſnares, and fears, and darkneſs, and waters.

Hence note, Firſt, That as God hath abundance of afflictions in his power, ſo he hath variety of wayes and means to afflict the ſons of men; either for the puniſhment of their ſin, or for the trial of their graces.

If one will not do it, another ſhall; if the ſnare will not, fear ſhall; if fear will not, darkneſs ſhall; and if darkneſs will not, the waters ſhall; and if waters of one hight will not do it, he will have waters deep enough to do it, abundance of waters ſhall do it; he hath variety of wayes to deal both with ſinners and with Saints.

Secondly, Conſider the inference which Eliphaz makes, Therefore ſnares, &c. are upon thee; that is, becauſe thou haſt done wickedly in not relieving and in oppreſſing the poor, therefore ſnares have entangled thee. This (though falſe in Job's particular caſe, yet) is a truth in general; and it teacheth us, That, there is an unavoidable ſequel between ſin and ſorrow. Look upon ſin in its own nature, and ſo the ſequel is unavoidable, ſin is big with ſorrow; as affliction burdens the ſinner, ſo ſin is burdened with affliction. Sin hath all ſorts of affliction in its bowels; and we may ſay of all the evils that afflict us, they are our ſins. Sin is formally the tranſgreſſion of the Law, and ſin is virtually the puniſhment of tranſgreſſors. Many (I grant) are afflicted for trial of their graces (as hath been ſhewed before) but grace had never been thus tryed if man had not ſinned. Sin is the remote cauſe of all afflictions, and it is the next or immediate procuring cauſe of moſt afflictions. Would any man avoid the ſnare, let him fear to ſin; would he avoid fear, let him fear to do evil; would he keep out of darkneſs, and not be covered with abundance of waters, let him take heed he drink not iniquity like water, let him have no fellowſhip with the unfruitful works of darkneſs. God tells the ſinner plainly what portion he is to expect, Say, wo to the wicked, it ſhall be ill with him; for the reward of his hands ſhall be given him (Iſa. 33. 11.) We may as well hope to avoid burning when we run into the fire, or dirtying when we run into the mire, as to eſcape ſmarting when we run into ſin.

Yet more diſtinctly, we may conſider all thoſe evils comprehended under thoſe words in the Text, Snares, darkneſs, &c. either in reference to wicked men, or to the Saints. Snares and darkneſs upon the wicked, are the iſſues of divine wrath. While theſe ſad diſpenſations are ſent out and meet with Saints, they are the iſſues of divine love. For though a godly man may provoke God to anger, and find by many evidences that God (as to his actings) is angry with him, yet as to his perſon he alwayes loves him. And therefore (as a wicked mans Table is made his ſnare, ſo) he is aſſured that his ſnare ſhall be made to him a Table, that his darkneſs ſhall work light, his evils good to him. He is alſo aſſured that the Lord will deliver him out of theſe ſnares, and cut the cords of the wicked (Pſal. 129. 4.) That he will deliver him from fear, from darkneſs, and bring him up out of the abundance of waters which cover him, as David ſpeaks (Pſal. 36. 2.) For this (that is, becauſe thou art ſo gracious) ſhall every one that is godly pray unto thee, in a time when thou mayſt be found (the Hebrew is, in a finding time) which according to our tranſlation, notes the ſeaſon when God may be found, as the Prophet ſpeaks (Iſa. 55. 6) Yet it may be well expounded for the time when trouble finds, that is, takes hold of the godly man: And ſo the word is uſed (Pſal. 116. 3.) The pains of Hell gat hold of me (we put in the Margin) found me. In which ſence the word is uſed alſo (Pſal. 21. 8.) Thine hand ſhall find out (that is, take hold of, and apprehend) all thine enemies, thy right hand ſhall find out thoſe that hate thee. Now in this finding time, either when God may be found, or when trouble finds a godly man, he (ſetting himſelf to pray) hath this promiſe, ſurely in the floods of great waters, they (that is, the floods of great waters, by which are meant, great dangers) ſhall not come nigh him (that is, the godly man) to hurt or drown him. Sometimes prayer keeps the flood off, and alwayes prayer delivers the godly man out of the flood. Wicked men have no mind to come nigh God with their hearts (and ſo ſome interpret the latter part of this verſe in the Pſalm) nor will God admit them nigh unto himſelf, in the floods of great waters. And the floods of great waters ſhall not (which is the ſcope of our reading) come nigh the godly man for his hurt, when he draws nigh to God in prayer with his heart.

Thus we have ſeen the ſins of Job drawn out into a charge, and the Judgment of Eliphaz upon it, what the event, the ſequel, or iſſue of thoſe ſins was, ſnares, and fears, and waters, and darkneſs.

There is yet one thing further, that I ſhall here take notice of from the conſtant courſe of Job's friends in dealing with him. We ſee that ſtill they charge him with ſin, and ſtill inſiſt upon it, that all his afflictions and miſeries were the fruits of his ſin. Job (as hath appeared in opening ſeveral paſſages of this Book) hath as often diſproved their inference, and denied that his ſufferings were cauſed by his ſin, at leaſt not by any ſuch way of ſinning, as they charged him with. Labouring alſo much to enform them, that God hath many other reaſons why he afflicts his people; and that God might take liberty to afflict him, though he were no ſuch kind of creature as they rendred him; yet notwithſtanding all he could ſay, either to purge himſelf or better conform them, they perſevered in the ſame opinion, both concerning his perſon, and the cauſe of his afflictions.

Whence note, It is hard to convince thoſe who are under a miſtake, whether about perſons or doctrines.

Error is as binding upon the conſcience, and as ſtrongly embraced by the affections, as truth is; for it binds and is embraced, not in the name of an error, but in the name of truth. And men are therefore wedded to, and in love with their own conceptions, becauſe (how monſtrous and hard favoured ſoever in themſelves, yet) nothing is more beautiful in their eye then they, No man (ſaith the Apoſtle) ever hated his own fleſh, but loved and cheriſhed it. The fleſh of our minds (ſuch are all falſe principles and poſitions) is more loved and cheriſhed by us, then the fleſh of our bodies. Beſides, when men have once taken up an opinion, they think it a diſhonour to lay it down again. 'Tis rare to find a man that will yield up his Judgment, though it be a miſguided one, or acknowledge that he is in an error, though he begins to take ſome knowledge, or at leaſt ſome ſuſpition of it. A light intimation or only the appearance of a probability will amount to a proof againſt either perſons or doctrines which we like not; but the cleareſt demonſtrations will hardly raiſe a jealouſie againſt what we like. Let Job ſay what he will in his own caſe, he cannot be believed by his friends; and his friends will ſay again what once they had ſaid, though it had been more then once before fully anſwered. The preſent age hath given us ſad experiences of the thing. For, as many have been unſtable, and toſſed to and fro with every wind of (falſe) doctrine, ſo others have been ſtubborn and unmoved from their errors, though the ſtrongeſt winds of truth have breathed, yea blown hard upon them. And thoſe prejudices which have (with ſo much ſeverity) been taken up by brethren againſt brethren; how do they remain, in many minds, as mountains unmoved to this very day?

I know not which is worſe, unſetledneſs in the truth, and an eaſineſs to let it go, or tenaciouſneſs in an error, and a hardneſs to let it go. Nor do I well know which is worſe, a readineſs to take up hard thoughts of our brethren, or an unreadineſs to lay them down. Were the laws of love to man, and zeal for God obſerved, theſe extreams would alwayes be avoided. Pure zeal for God would fix us in the truth, and make us more eaſie to be brought off from our moſt applauded errors. True love to man, would cauſe us to examin every ground of ſuſpicion againſt a brother twice, before we do indeed ſuſpect him once; and it would cauſe us to rejoyce in any appearance of his innocence, whereby we might diſcharge our own ſpirits of all ſuſpicions concerning him. Our love (as the Apoſtle prayes prayes, Phil. 1. 9.) ought to abound in knowledge and in all Judgment; that is, we ought to love judiciouſly as well as affectionately or ſincerely. So that, true love will not over-look the faults of another, nor will it approve againſt light. Yet true love is ready to entertain any light offered, that grounds of ſuſpition may be removed, and we reſtored to a right underſtanding of our brethren.

VERS. 12, 13, 14.

Is not God in the height of Heaven? and beholds the height of the Stars how high they are.

And thou ſayeſt, How doth God know? can he judge through the dark cloud?

Thick clouds are a covering to him, that he ſeeth not, and he walketh in the circuit of Heaven.

IN the former part of this Chapter, we have found Eliphaz charging Job with thoſe hainous crimes, injuſtice and uncharitableneſs towards man; in theſe three verſes he proceeds to charge him with a higher crime, even irreligiouſneſs and impiety againſt God; as if (at leaſt) Job doubted, if not denied the providence of God about what is done here below, or affirmed that he neither rewarded the righteous according to their good, nor puniſheth the wicked according to the evil which they have done. That's the ſcope of this context, in which we may obſerve,

First, A twofold truth held forth.

Secondly, A wrong ſuggeſtion of two errors, as ariſing from thoſe truths.

Thirdly, An indeavour to prove and make good what he had wrongfully ſuggeſted.

Theſe two truths are contained in verſ. 22. firſt, God is in the height of Heaven; ſecondly, The Stars are very high; theſe are clear truths; from theſe Eliphaz makes a wrong ſuggeſtion, as if Job upon thoſe grounds of Gods being in the height of Heaven, &c. had pleaſed himſelf with this conceit, that God could not (at ſuch a diſtance) take notice of what paſſeth among, or is acted by men in this inferior world.

(Verſ. 13.) And thou ſayeſt, how doth God know? can he judge through the dark cloud? As if he had ſaid, God being in the height of Heaven, cannot know, much leſs judge concerning the ſtate of things here below; why what ſhould hinder? He tells us what in verſ. 14. where (which was the third thing) he endeavours to prove his ſuggeſtion; Thick clouds are a covering to him that he ſeeth not, that's the firſt proof: and then we have a ſecond, in the latter end of that verſe, God hath other things to do then to mind what is done here; he hath higher buſineſs and imployments then to look upon us, who are creeping upon mole-hills, and engaged about a heap of earth; for, he walketh in the circuit of Heaven; that is, there lieth his great work, he hath enough in a nobler Sphear to imploy himſelf in; and therefore ſurely, thou thinkeſt, that God takes no care at all, or not ſuch ſpecial care about the affairs and wayes of men. This is the ſum and ſcope of theſe three Verſes. They are a new charge of impiety upon Job, as ſhutting up or reſtraining the providence of God to the things of Heaven alone; and we ſeek how Eliphaz frames arguments and proofs of the point for Job, which (as will appear afterwards) never came into his heart.

Now though Eliphaz miſapplied all this to Job, yet herein he fully characters, and clearly paints out the ſpirit of carnal men; for ſuch ſecure themſelves in their evil wayes upon this preſumption, that God takes no notice of them, or that he hath ſomething elſe to do then to trouble himſelf with what they are doing.

Verſ. 12. Is not God in the height of Heaven?

Nonne Deus ſublimior eſt cœlo? Pagni.
Nonne Deus cœlum altũ tenet? Tygur.
Nonne Deus in ſublimate cœlorum? Mont.

There are divers readings of theſe words; firſt thus, Is not God higher then the Heavens? A ſecond thus, Doth not God poſſeſs the high Heaven? The Original may ſtrictly be rendred, God the height of Heaven; that is, God is above all heavens: we render well, God is in the height or ſublimity of Heaven.

This Queſtion, Is not God in the height of Heaven? is taken three wayes.

Firſt, Some read it as an Exhortation given by Eliphaz to Job, to draw off the motion of his thoughts, and moſt of all the ſetled bent of his heart from thoſe inferior things, his loſſes and troubles, his ſorrows, pains, and ſickneſſes; he would divert his mind from theſe worldly ſorrows, and raiſe it up to heavenly enjoyments, Is not God in Heaven? As if he had ſaid, Why ſtandeſt thou poring upon things below? Why dwelleſt thou ſo much upon thy dunghill, and thy preſent poverty; God is in the height of Heaven, conſider him there. This is both a ſafe and a very ſpiritual way to eaſe our minds of all the troubles and ſorrows which we meet with in this world; could we but aſcend in Spirit to the height where God is, could we by an eye of faith look to him, live upon him, and in him, all burdens would be light, and preſſures eaſie to us.

Deus ſublimitas cœlorum. Hebr.

Secondly, This queſtion may be taken as a plain aſſertion or affirmation, and it is of the ſame value and ſignification with this; God is in the height of Heaven, there he is, and from thence he beholds all the children of men, their wayes and works.

Thirdly, Is not God in the height of Heaven? May be underſtood not as the queſtion of Eliphaz, and ſo his affirmation; but as the queſtion of Job, and ſo his ſuppoſition. As if Eliphaz apprehended Job thus ſpeaking in his heart, Is not God (ſayeſt thou) in the height of Heaven? Or, doeſt not thou, O Job, ſay thus, God is in the height of Heaven? I grant that he is there; but I deny that he is there, in thy ſence, or according to thy opinion. He is not concluded, or ſhut up there, he is not ſo in the height of Heaven, but that he mindeth what is done upon the Earth, yea in the very depths of Hell. As if he had ſaid, Thy thoughts and conceptions of God are too ſtrait and narrow; thou ſpeakeſt much below God, while thou ſayeſt he is in the height of Heaven. While thou confineſt God to Heaven, thou makeſt him like thy ſelf on Earth.

Annon Deus eſt (inquis) in altitudine cœli? Jun.

From theſe words in the two former Expoſitions,

Obſerve, That the height of Heaven, or Heaven above, is the place of Gods ſpecial reſidence.

Heaven is my throne (ſaith the Lord, Iſa. 66. 1.) The throne is the ſeat of a Prince, there he declares his power, and his ſtate; his glory ſhines from his throne. A Prince looks like a common man when he is abroad in the world, but when upon his throne, then the rayes of Majeſty break forth, and he appears as he is. Thus the holy Prophet begs a gracious look of the Lord from Heaven (Iſa. 63. 15.) Look down from Heaven, the habitation of thy holineſs, and of thy glory. Heaven is called the habitation of Gods holineſs, and of his glory; becauſe his holineſs and glory ſhine forth more in Heaven, then upon the Earth; little of the holineſs of God is diſcovered to us here, though ſo much of it breaks forth here as cauſeth the heart of carnal men to quarrel with it continually. Nor are any able with theſe eyes, or rather with theſe hearts to bear the glory of God, or endure his holineſs. When but ſome extraordinary glimpſes of theſe appeared to Iſaiah, he cryed out, Wo is me, I am undone (or cut off) becauſe I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midſt of a people of unclean lips, for mine eyes have ſeen the King, the Lord of Hoſts (Iſa. 6. 5.) As God is of purer eyes then to behold iniquity, ſo man is of impurer eyes then to behold the glory and holineſs of God in clear manifeſtations of it, and therefore Heaven is the ſeat, the habitation of his holineſs, and of his glory. Hence we may take two further inferences.

Firſt, That our hearts and our eyes ſhould be lifted upwards. The whole current of Scripture ſpeaks of God as above in Heaven: And that's the reaſon why the Apoſtle (Col. 3. 1.) exhorts, Set your affections on things above, and not on things here below; and as on things above, ſo moſt of all upon God who is above. The old word was, Lift up your hearts; and David ſaith in prayer (Pſal. 25. 1.) I lift up my ſoul to thee. And again (Pſal. 123. 1.) Unto thee lift I up mine eyes, O thou that dwelleſt in the Heavens. Yea our Lord Jeſus Chriſt himſelf when he prayed (Joh. 17. 1.) Lift up his eyes to Heaven, and ſaid, Father the hour is come, glorifie thy Son, &c. The eye lift up to Heaven is a ſign of the heart lift up to Heaven; and that corporeal viſible action, ſerves to fix our moſt ſpiritual affections upon the inviſible God. 'Tis indeed an eaſie thing to lift the eyes up to Heaven, but it is very hard yea impoſſible, without a divine aſſiſtance, to lift up the heart to Heaven; the heart of a prophane worldling muds ſo much in the Earth, that he ſeldom lifts up ſo much as his eyes to Heaven; and how much or how often ſoever a hypocrite lifts up his eyes to Heaven, yet ſtill his heart muds in the earth. The eye looks upward naturally, but if ever the heart look upward, 'tis a work of Grace.

Surſum corda.

Secondly, Then ſerve the Lord with reverence and holy fear, in all your addreſſes to him and appearings before him. We reverence thoſe who are high on earth, and ſhall we not reverence him who is higher then the higheſt, him who is in the height of Heaven? While Chriſt bids us ſay, Our Father which art in Heaven, he teaches us, as to pray with confidence, becauſe God is our Father; ſo to pray with reverence, becauſe he is a Father in Heaven (Math. 6. 9.) The Preacher (Eccleſ. 5. 2.) makes this an argument why we ſhould be taken up in high thoughts of God, why we ſhould ſpeak in a reverential manner both of him, and to him? Be not raſh with thy mouth, and let not thy heart be haſty to utter any thing before God. He puts (as it were) a double bridle upon man in his drawing near to God; firſt, upon his mouth, Let not thy mouth be raſh; and ſecondly, upon his heart (for the heart will talk at random as well as the mouth, yea the heart will talk more at random then the mouth can; and there is praying with the heart alone, as well as with the heart and mouth together; therefore ſaith he) Let not thy heart be haſty to utter any thing before God; Why? for God is in Heaven, and thou art upon the earth, therefore let thy words be few. Here are indeed two arguments to enforce this compoſure of ſpirit; firſt, the highneſs and greatneſs of God; ſecondly, the lowneſs and vileneſs of man. Conſider God is above, and thou art below, not only in regard of place, but of ſtate and dignity, of power and majeſty. The being of God in Heaven, notes not only a power of ſoveraignty to command us, but a power or ability both to puniſh and to provide for us; to puniſh our raſhneſs, and to ſupply all our wants wherewith we acquaint him, and humbly mention before him; therefore Be not raſh with thy mouth, and let not thy heart be haſty, &c. The ſame Solomon in the ſame book, allegorically deſcribing the declined decrepid condition of man, ſaith of the old man, that he is afraid of that which is high (Eccleſ. 12. 5.) Young men will be clambering and aſcending, but old men are afraid of that which is high; they dare not go up a high ſteep place, leaſt their ſtrength or breath ſhould fail, or leaſt their brain ſhould turn, and they through giddineſs tumble down. Old men love to keep upon level or even ground, and are afraid of that which is high. Surely both young and old, have reaſon to be afraid of him that is high, to have reverential thoughts of God, who is in the height of Heaven, higher then the Heavens. The diſtance of man from God, as God is in Heaven and man on earth, is great; and the diſſimilitude of man to God, as God is holy and man corrupt, is far greater; either of theſe Conſiderations ſingle is enough, but both theſe laid together, is abundantly enough to keep the heart in an humble ſelf-abaſing frame before the Lord.

Secondly, Taking theſe words, Is not God in the height of Heaven? As the ſuppoſed ſpeech of Job: thou ſayeſt God is in the height of Heaven, that is, confined to Heaven, ſo, that he looks no further; but thou art deceived, God is not lockt up in Heaven, he looks to all things here on Earth. As the Earth is the Lords, and the fulneſs of it, as to right and propriety; ſo the Earth is the Lords, with all the fulneſs of it, as to care and providence. Though there be a diſtinctneſs in the manner or manifeſtation of his being in Heaven and on Earth; yet he is as truly and as much on Earth as he is in Heaven.

Hence note, God is omnipreſent, or every where.

Though we are to adore and worſhip God as in Heaven, yet we muſt not ſhut up God in Heaven; as he is in Heaven, ſo he is upon the Earth alſo; he is with us, yea he is in us; he is in all places, not circumſcribed by any, nor limited to any place. God is preſent in all places, and fills all places with his preſence, only he doth not declare his preſence alike in all places. The Lord appears where and as he pleaſeth, but he cannot be otherwiſe or otherwhere then he is, and that is every where. While the Pſalmiſt queried, Whether ſhall I go from thy preſence? He was ſo far from imagining that any ſuch place could be found, that in the very next words he concludeth God to be every where, by an enumeration of all places (Pſal. 139. 7, 8.) If I aſcend up to Heaven, thou art there; if I make my bed in Hell, behold thou art there (Hell ſtandeth in utmoſt oppoſition to Heaven; as Heaven in Scripture-language is the higheſt, ſo Hell is the loweſt place; now ſaith David, If I make my bed in Hell, thou art there) If I take the wings of the morning, and dwell in the utmoſt parts of the Sea, even there ſhall thy hand lead me, and thy right hand ſhall hold me; that is, there I ſhall find thee efficaciouſly preſent with me. The Lord having ſaid (Iſa. 66. 1.) Heaven is my throne, preſently adds, and the earth is my footſtool; ſo the earth is called, becauſe its ſcituation in nature is below the Heavens; his throne is there, his footſtool is here, (Jer. 23. 23, 24.) Am I a God at hand, ſaith the Lord, and not afar off? Can any hide himſelf in ſecret places, that I ſhall not ſee him, ſaith the Lord? Do not I fill Heaven and Earth, ſaith the Lord? All theſe expoſtulating queſtions, are reſolved into this one poſition. God is every where; and though ſome read the firſt, not as a Queſtion, but as an Aſſertion, thus, I am a God at hand, and not a God afar off, yet the ſence is the ſame; God therein affirming, that he is ever near us, and never afar off from us, whereſoever we are. Though God be in thoſe places which are furtheſt off from us, as well as in thoſe that are near at hand; yet God himſelf is never afar off from us, but alwayes at hand. When Solomon had ſet up the Temple (1 King. 8. 27.) he was ſure of the preſence of God in it; and therefore did not ſpeak doubtingly, but admiringly, when he asked, But, will God indeed dwell on Earth? (that is, will God manifeſt himſelf gloriouſly on the Earth?) Behold the Heaven, and Heaven of Heavens cannot contain thee; how much leſs this houſe that I have builded? Solomon knew that Heaven could not contain, that is, limit God, much leſs could the houſe which he had builded. Yet the Lord made the Temple another Heaven to himſelf, it was as his ſecond Heaven; there the Lord had a kind of glorious reſidence, beyond what he had in any other part of the world. Now the Aſſemblies and Congregations of the Saints are in a ſpecial manner the dwelling place of God, and his ſecond Heaven; he dwells ſo much in the Churches that he ſeems not to dwell at all in any part of the world beſide (2 Cor. 6. 16, 17.) I will dwell in them, and walk in them. Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye ſeperate ſaith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing, and I will receive you. God who is in all the world, dwells only in and with his people. They who ſeparate from whatſoever is unholy, have him neareſt them who is altogether Holy. To conclude this point, we may make uſe of that diſtinction of the Schools to clear the difference, how a corporal ſubſtance, and a ſpiritual, as alſo how a ſpiritual created and uncreated ſubſtance, may be ſaid to be in a place. All bodies are in place circumſcriptively, ſpiritual ſubſtances created, Angels and ſouls of men are in place definitively: We cannot draw a line about an Angel, as about the body of a man; yet the Angel is ſo in this place, as not in another: but God who is a ſpirit and uncreated, is in place repletively, that is, he filleth all places where he is, but is not limited by any place where he is: He is (as ſome have not unfitly ſpoken) a Sphear whoſe center is every where, and whoſe circumference is no where. This is a myſtery which indeed we are not able to comprehend by reaſon, but we muſt take it down by faith. The Lord is in the height of Heaven, yet ſo there, as he is not ſhut up there.

But if any ſhall yet query, How is the Lord every where? How is he in Heaven, and in Earth? Is it ſo as the Sun may be ſaid to be every where? The Sun is ſeated in Heaven, yet is by way of communication on Earth; the Sun by light, heat, or influence, is all the world over, in ſome degree or other, yet the Sun moves only in his Orb. Or is God ſo every where, as a Soveraign Prince, who though in perſon he reſide here or there, yet in power and authority he is every where within his own Dominion? I anſwer, No, theſe alluſions are far below this truth. God is every where, not only as the Sun by light, heat, and influence; not only as a Prince, by his power and authority, but (as we ſpeak) in perſon, and in his Eſſence. Further, the Lords preſence in all places is not as that of the Air, which is more every where then the Sun; the Air is every where filling all places; and ſo encompaſſing all bodies, as if it made them all but one great body; yet that part of the Air that is in one place is not in another, for the Air is diviſible. But we muſt not take up any ſuch apprehenſions of God, for as he is every where, ſo he is wholly every where; God cannot be divided or parted as the Air is and may. The divine Eſſence (as one of the Ancients hath expreſſed this aſtoniſhing myſtery) is whole within all things, and whole without all things; no where included, no where excluded; containing all things, contained of nothing; yet not at all mingled with the nature of theſe things, nor defiled with their pollutions. That which the Philoſopher ſpeaks of the ſoul of man (That it is all in the whole body, and whole in every part of the body) comes neareſt this myſtery. Some quarrel at that expreſſion about the ſoul, yet there is a truth in it. The ſoul is indiviſible, much more God; whereſoever he is, he is all and altogether; he is every where, and every where all. So he is in the height of heaven, and ſo he is on earth below.

Divina eſſentia eſt tota intra omnia & tota, extra omnia nuſquam incluſa aut excluſa, omnia continens, à nullo contenta, nec propterea immiſtu rebus aut rerum ſordibus inquinata. Auguſt. Epiſt. 55. ad Dard.

But if God be every where, why doth Chriſt teach us to pray, Our Father which art in Heaven (Matth. 6. 13.) And when the Heathen made that ſcoffing demand, Where is now their God? Why did David anſwer, Our God is in Heaven (Pſal. 115. 2, 3.) To theſe and all other Texts of like import, we may anſwer, Heaven is not there ſpoken of as bounding the preſence of God, but as guiding the faith and hope of man. In the morning (ſaith David, Pſal. 5. 3.) will I direct my prayer unto thee, and will look up. When the eye hath no ſight of any help on earth, then faith may have the cleareſt viſions of it in Heaven. And while God appears ſo little in any gracious diſpenſation for his people on earth, that the enemy begins to ſcoff, Where is now your God? Then his people have recourſe by faith to Heaven, where the Lord not only, is, but is glorious in his appearings. From whence as he ſeeth how it is with us, ſo he ſeems to have a kind of advantage to relieve us.

But as ſome Scriptures ſeem to confine God to Heaven, ſo other Scriptures ſeem to deny that he is every where on earth. Thus Moſes ſaid to the people of Iſrael (Numb. 14. 42.) Go not up for the Lord is not among you. And again (Deut. 7. 21.) Thou ſhalt not be affrighted at them, for the Lord thy God is among you; with ſome the Lord is, with others the Lord is not; and he is with the ſame perſons at one time, not at another; how then can it be ſaid, that the Lord is every where preſent? I anſwer, when Moſes ſaith (and many other Texts which ſpeak in the ſame form) that God was ſometimes with his people, and ſometimes not; we are not to underſtand it at all of a local preſence, or abſence, but of a favourable preſence or abſence. Thus God is with ſome perſons, and not with others; thus he is ſometime preſent with, ſometime abſent from the ſame perſon. It was this favourable preſence for which Moſes did ſo earneſtly entreat the Lord, (Exod. 33. 15.) If thy preſence go not with us, carry us no further; that is, unleſs thou pleaſe to be with us, to proſper our way, and protect us in it, let us ſtay where we are. This preſence of God is a high favour indeed, and God is thus preſent but in few places (comparatively) of the whole earth.

Once more, thoſe Scriptures may ſeem to imply that God is ſo in Heaven, that he is not alſo upon the Earth; which ſpeak of his coming down from Heaven to Earth, (Gen. 11. 5.) And the Lord came down to ſee the City and the Tower which the Children of men builded. Whence ſome may infer, if he came down to ſee the City, then he was not there before, and if ſo, then he is not univerſally preſent in all places. Again (Gen. 18. 20, 21.) And the Lord ſaid, becauſe the cry of Sodom and Gomorrah is great; and becauſe their ſin is very grievous, I will go down now, and ſee whether they have done altogether according to the cry of it which is come unto me, and if not, I will know. This paſſage yields the ſame difficulty and objection; to both which we may add that of David (Pſal. 14. 2.) The Lord looked down from Heaven upon the children of men, to ſee if there were any that did underſtand; he doth not ſay, God was among the children of men here below, but being in Heaven (as a man ſtanding upon a high place or Tower) he looked down.

I anſwer, Theſe Texts ſpeak of God after the manner of men, or they ſpeak thus, not to teach us, how God knows what is done on earth; but to confirm, and aſſure us that the Lord doth clearly and certainly know whatſoever is done by, or among men on Earth; even as clearly and certainly as a man knoweth any thing by his view upon the place. God knoweth all things preſently, without ſearching, though never ſo ſecret; and all things certainly without enquiring, though never ſo doubtful. God neither aſcends, nor deſcends; he doth not come down by any motion, but he comes down to our apprehenſion; he ſhews us after our way, that he knoweth, becauſe we cannot conceive his way of knowledge. If I would aſſure another man that I certainly know ſuch a thing, I tell him, I came from the place, I ſaw it, or I beheld it with my own eyes; now that's all that is intended, when 'tis ſaid, the Lord came down from Heaven to behold, and ſee the Tower of Babell, and the condition of Sodom; or it is, to admoniſh all Magiſtrates and Judges, that they paſs no ſentence of puniſhment, either upon places or perſons, upon bare here-ſay and reports; but that they firſt enform themſelves fully of the matter of fact, as Job profeſſed his courſe was in all legal proceedings (Chap. 29. 16.) The cauſe which I knew not I ſearched out. Thus we ſee notwithſtanding all theſe appearances from Texts of Scripture to the contrary, that this Scripture truth ſtandeth firm. The Lord is ſo in the height of Heaven, that he is every where alſo here upon the Earth.

From which take theſe two Deductions,

First, Seeing the Lord is every where preſent, we ſhould be every where holy.

For whereſoever he is, he is the holy Lord. That was the charge which God gave to Abraham, Walk before me, and be upright; as if he had ſaid, Whereſoever thou walkeſt, walk as having me preſent with thee, and be upright in my preſence. I (ſaith David, a type of Chriſt, Pſal. 16. 8.) have ſet the Lord alwayes before me; he is at my right hand, I ſhall not be moved. He that by faith eyes God continually as his protector in trouble, ſhall not be moved with any evil that he ſuffers; and he that eyes God by faith as his pattern in holineſs, ſhall not be moved from doing that which is good. This thought, The Lord is at our right hand, keeps us from turning either to the right hand or to the left. It is ſaid of Enoch, that he walked with God (Gen. 5. 22.) and though the Hiſtory of his life be very ſhort, yet 'tis ſaid of him a ſecond time (verſ. 24.) that he walked with God. He walked ſo much with God, that he walked as God, he did not walk (which kind of walking the Apoſtle reproves, 1 Cor. 3. 3.) as men. He walked ſo little like the world, that his ſtay was little in the world. He was not (ſaith the Text) for God took him; he took him from the world to himſelf, or (as the Author to the Hebrews reports it) he was tranſlated that he ſhould not ſee death; for he received this teſtimony that he pleaſed God.

Secondly, It followeth, if God be every where preſent,

That the godly are never out of the reach of God to help them, and that the wicked are never out of the reach of God to puniſh them.

(Iſa. 43. 2.) When thou paſſeſt through the waters, I will be with thee, and when thou walkeſt through the fire, thou ſhalt not be burnt. The preſence of God is the protection of Saints in the evil which they ſuffer; and they who do evil cannot be hid from his puniſhing preſence. There is no running from God. It is ſaid of Jonah (Chap. 1. 3.) That he fled from the preſence of God. Whether fled he? The Text ſaith he fled to Sea, but did not God find him there? He fled from the commanding preſence of God, but he fell into the angry preſence of God. We have a large deſcription in Amos 9. how carnal men hope to ſhift out of the hand of God. I (ſaith the Lord) will ſlay the laſt of them with the ſword, though they dig to Hell, thence ſhall my hand take them. We read what wiſe counſel the ſervants of the King of Benhadad gave him after he had been defeated by the King of Iſrael (1 King. 20. 23, 24, 25.) Their Gods are Gods of the hills, therefore they were ſtronger then we, but let us fight againſt them in the plains, and ſurely we ſhall be ſtronger then they. Make thee an Army like the Army that thou haſt loſt, horſe for horſe, and chariot for chariot, and we will fight againſt them in the plain, and ſurely we ſhall be ſtronger then they, and he hearkened to their voice and did ſo. Why did they deſire to fight them upon the plain? They thought God was a God of the hills and not of the valleys; but (*ver.*28.) A man of God ſaid to the King of Iſrael, thus ſaith the Lord, becauſe the Aſſyrians have ſaid, the Lord is God of the hills, and not of the valleys, therefore will I deliver this great multitude into thy hand. As if he had ſaid, however you deſerve not in the leaſt that I ſhould own you, or aſſiſt your cauſe; yet that I may confute the blaſphemous and derogatory principles of theſe Syrians, I will give you a ſecond victory againſt them, even in the valleys, where they ſuppoſe they have you at an advantage, and ſhall deal with you beyond the extent of my power and Territory. Though God had no cauſe to reſpect the honour of the Iſraelites, yet he could not forget the honour of his own Name, which was obſcured by thoſe ſuperſtitious Syrians. The moſt received Doctrine and Divinity of the Heathens confined their gods to certain places, ſome to this City, and ſome to that; ſome to the hills, and ſome to the plains; ſome to the Sea, others to the Land. 'Tis ſaid that the ſame night in which Alexander the Great (of whoſe Conqueſts Daniel Propheſied) was born, that the Temple of Diana at Epheſus was burnt to the ground. And the Heathens gave this as the reaſon of it, becauſe Diana was abſent from her Temple, being gone to aſſiſt at the birth of Alexander; implying that their Goddeſs was ſo in one place, as ſhe could not attend what was done elſewhere. Such were the groſs conceits which they had of their gods, and they imagined the God of Iſrael to be ſuch a one, as their own. The verieſt Idolater in the world preſumes his god as good as any is. But Jehova the living God hath taught us to ſay, Who is a God like unto thee? And our experiences have ſealed to it, that there is none like the God of Jeſurun, who rideth on the Heavens for thy help, and in his excellency on the Skyes (Deut. 33. 26.) And we have learned to comfort our ſelves in all places and ſtreights, in this aſſurance, that he is the God of the hills, as well as of the valleys; of the Sea, as well as the dry Land; and that he is as truly preſent in the loweſt depths, as in the higheſt Heavens. Is not God in the height of Heaven?

And behold the height of the Stars how high they are.

The Hebrew is, Behold the head of the Stars; The head of a man is the higheſt part of him, and the head of any thing is the top of it. Behold the head or height of the Stars how high they are; Stars are high, but God is higher; many creatures are high, but God is high above all creatures. The creature is ſtrong, but God is ſtronger; the creature is wiſe, but God is wiſer; the creature is glorious, but God is infinitely more glorious: The glory, wiſdom, ſtrength, and higheſt height of the creature, is but a glimpſe of what God is. The Stars are high. I ſhall not enter into an Aſtronomical diſcourſe about the Stars, or the height of Stars. I ſhall not meddle with a Jacob's ſtaff, to take the elevation of the Stars, no need of ſuch diſcourſe here; all that is intended by Eliphaz, is a proof that God is infinitely exalted in his highneſs and majeſty above the Stars.

Behold the height of the Stars how high they are.] This word Behold in Scripture is often applied to things of wonder; to ſay, behold, is not a calling for the bare act of the eye to ſee the height of the Stars; but it calls for a work of the mind, duly to conſider of, and to wonder at their height. Some creatures, eſpecially the heavenly, are not only uſeful, but wonderful; and 'tis as hard to underſtand them, as it is comfortable to enjoy them. The Hebrew word for Heaven cometh from a root which ſignifies to amaze and aſtoniſh; and indeed there are natural wonders and myſteries enough in the Heavens to aſtoniſh any conſidering man. And the true reaſon why we are no more aſtoniſht at them, or do no more admire them, is becauſe we do ſo little conſider them. We often ſee or look upon the Stars, but we ſeldom behold them: And therefore David ſaith (Pſal. 8. 3.) When I conſider the Heavens, the work of thy fingers, the Moon and the Stars which thou haſt ordained; what is man that thou art mindful of him? As the beholding and conſideration of our own works will make us aſhamed, becauſe they appear ſo bad; ſo the conſideration and beholding of the works of God will make us aſtoniſht, becauſe they appear both ſo good and great. Behold (ſaith the Apoſtle, 1 John 3. 1.) what manner of love the father hath beſtowed upon us, that we ſhould be called the Sons of God; even this tranſcendent Love of God in our Adoption is paſſed by as a ſmall matter, by thoſe who will not take the pains (or rather the pleaſure) and leiſure to behold and conſider the manner of it. No mervail if the power of God in making the higheſt Stars, be paſſed by as a low thing, by thoſe who do not behold, that is, diligently conſider them Behold the height of the Stars how high they are.

We are called to conſider this,

Hence note, That it is our duty to contemplate the excellency of the creature.

God hath not only given us the book of the Scripture, but of the Creature, and we muſt attend to the reading of this as well as of that, even to the reading of every leaf and line of it. There are four great leaves of this book. Firſt, The Heavens; Secondly, The Earth; Thirdly, The Sea; Fourthly, The Air. Theſe are the four great leaves of this book of the creature; in every one of which we ſhould labour to be expert Scholars, and ſpell out the name and mind of God in them. For though (as I ſaid before) beholding notes wondering, yet we muſt not behold them to wonder at them, like children; but we muſt behold them to learn ſomewhat from them, or to be inſtructed by them as men.

Behold the Stars.] Firſt, In their number; as God ſaid to Abraham (Gen. 15. 5.) Look now towards Heaven, and tell the Stars if thou be able to number them; and he ſaid unto him, ſo ſhall thy ſeed be. 'Tis matter of wonder that God ſhould make ſo many of thoſe eminent Lights, that he ſhould ſet up ſo many flaming torches in Heaven for man to ſee his way, and work by on Earth. That God who hath ſpread this Canopy over our heads, ſhould alſo embroyder it with ſuch a multitude of golden ſpangles, which render it as much our delight, as it is our duty, to behold them.

Secondly, Behold the Stars in their order, they move by rule, they keep their ranks, none of them go out of their place, or forſake their ſtation. They who are skilled in the motion of the Stars, know where to have them a hundred years hence. In Judges 5. it is ſaid, The Stars in their courſes fought againſt Siſſera.

Thirdly, We ſhould conſider the Stars in their magnitude, what vaſt bodies they are; ſome of them are bigger then the whole body of the Earth (as Philoſophy teacheth us) though, to apearance not bigger then the blaſe of a candle, nor broader then the palm of a hand.

Fourthly, Conſider alſo the difference of the Stars in their greatneſs, and magnitude; they are all great, but not all of a greatneſs, not all of one ſize. Aſtronomers divide the Stars into ſix magnitudes. We ſhould likewiſe obſerve, and wonder at their light, which is their glory: the light of the Stars is the glory of the Stars, and ſo the more light any Star hath, the more glory it hath. Thus one Star differreth from another Star in glory (1 Cor. 15. 41.) But I ſhall not ſtay upon theſe things, having inſiſted ſomewhat largely upon them at Chap. 9. verſ. 9. Whether I refer the Reader. Only note here, that as the Stars of Heaven are of ſeveral degrees; God hath not levell'd them, either in light or magnitude: ſo he hath diverſly diſtributed the light of parts, and gifts; of underſtanding and knowledge; of eſtate and power, to and among the children of men here on Earth. 'Tis good for all, that all are not alike; the univerſe could not be either ſo beautiful, or ſo orderly, if every particular had the ſame beauty, or were of the ſame order. And he that cannot be content to have leſs, and to be leſſer then another, is altogether unfit; not only to be as great, or to have as much as another, but to be or have any thing at all. Nor is any man more fit to be more then he is, then he that can rejoyce while another is more then he.

Secondly note, The creature leads us to God.

That's the tendency and ſcope of all that is here aſſerted. Eliphaz calls not Job to the meditation, or contemplation of the Stars to leave him there. Some ſtudy the Heavens much, but their lives are earthly; they ſtudy the Stars, yet there is nothing but dirt in their hearts; and the reaſon is, becauſe they ſtudy the Stars for the Stars ſake, and not for Gods ſake; and make the Stars their end, not their way, or as Stars, to lead them to God. This is the reaſon why many Aſtronomers and Philoſophers, who buſie their heads and minds much in ſpeculation about the nature of the Heavenly bodies, know not at all what it is to have their converſations in Heaven, or to mind the things that are above. We ſhould ſo behold the glory of the Stars, as from thence to infer, that God is much more glorious; yea, that theſe things which were made glorious, have no glory in compariſon of that Glory which made them. Plato taught his Schollers to ſay, The Earth is beautiful, the Heavens are more beautiful; but God who made the Earth, and the Heavens, is more beautiful then both. The viſible creature ſhews the inviſible God (Pſal. 19. 1, 2.) The Heavens declare the glory of God, and the Firmament ſheweth his handy work. But O how glorious is the inviſible God, who hath made ſuch viſible creatures? And what a work-Maſter is he who hath ſet up ſuch a work? (Rom. 1. 20.) The inviſible things of him from the creation of the world, are clearly ſeen, being underſtood by the things that are made, even his eternal power and god-head. The things that are made, carry us to the maker of them; and they tell us, that none but he who hath an eternal power and god-head, could poſſibly make them. The Heathen thought the Sun, Moon, and Stars to be gods, therefore certainly there is much of God to be ſeen in them. And Job ſaith (which doth plainly ſhew that in nature it is ſo, Chap. 31. 26.) If I beheld the Sun when it ſhined, or the Moon walking in brightneſs, and my heart hath been ſecretly inticed, or my mouth hath kiſſed my hand; this alſo were an iniquity to be puniſhed by the Judge, for I ſhould have denyed the God that is above; that is, if I have been inticed to worſhip the Sun, or Moon, as raviſht with their beauty (for 'tis ſo far from being a ſin, that 'tis a duty to behold the Sun when it ſhineth, and the Moon walking in brightneſs; but ſo to behold them, as to adore them, or do obeyſance to them (which was the cuſtom of the Heathen, expreſſed it ſeems among them by kiſſing their hand, as we do at this day in token of reſpect and reverence to men above us) this is an iniquity, even that groſs iniquity of Idolatry, or worſhipping the creature inſtead of, or more then the Creator, who is bleſſed for evermore. Now (I ſay) inaſmuch as theſe creatures have ſo much of God in them, that many Heathens have miſtaken them for God; how will it condemn us of dulneſs and ſtupidity, if we be not led to God in the knowledge and beholding of them? For as to make theſe creatures gods, ſo not to ſee God in theſe creatures, is to deny the God that is above.

Thirdly, While we behold the Stars of Heaven, it ſhould exceedingly both humble us and make us thankful, for whoſe uſe, comfort, and accommodation in this life, God ſet up thoſe Glorious Lights. God did not make them for his own uſe, he had no need of them, he was from everlaſting without any of theſe creatures. The Stars are nothing to him; the Sun is nothing to him; yea in that ſtate of glory we ſhall injoy God for ever, we ſhall have light without Sun; ſo that theſe lights were made for our uſe, and for ours only, while we are walking in the dark vale of this preſent world. Now, while we behold the height of the Stars how high they are, and conſider for whom as well as by whom they were made; even for us, for poor us, who are but duſt and aſhes: This ſhould at once lay us low in humbleneſs (looking upon them as an honour too great for us) and raiſe us up in thankfulneſs, becauſe the benefit and comfort of them is ſo great to us. Thus David ſpeaks in that excellent propheſie of Chriſt (Pſal. 8. 3.) When I conſider the Heavens, the work of thy fingers, the Moon and the Stars which thou haſt ordained; what is man that thou art mindful of him? and the ſon of man, that thou viſiteſt him? As if he had ſaid, thou haſt made all theſe creatures for man; ſee what a Heaven, what Stars God hath framed, and ſet up for man. Lord, what is man that thou art mindful of him? Thus behold the height of the Stars, how high they are; as to lead thee unto God, and to admire his highneſs, ſo to be humbled at thy own baſeneſs, and to be thankful for his benefits.

Eliphaz having laid down theſe two Propoſitions, God is on high, and the Stars are high; proceeds to make an inference from both, which he formeth up (by way of ſuppoſition) from Job's own mouth.

Verſ. 13. And thou ſayeſt, how doth God know?

As if Eliphaz had ſaid, thou art ſo far from making that right improvement which thou oughteſt of theſe truths; that the Lord is in the height of Heaven, and that he hath made thoſe high and glorious lights in Heaven, that indeed thou doeſt quite pervert his meaning in making them; Thou ſayeſt, how doth God know? Inſtead of honouring God who formed theſe lights, thou art darkning his honour, and eclipſing the light of his omniſcience. For whereas thou ſhouldeſt have ſaid, ſeeing God is on high, and hath made the Stars, which are ſo high, ſurely nothing can be hid from his knowledge. Thou ſayeſt, How doth God know? And there is a twofold ſaying of this; firſt, a ſaying with the tongue; ſecondly, with the heart: The vain heart of man hath many ſayings, and this among the reſt, How doth God know? (Pſal. 14. 1.) The fool hath ſaid in his heart, there is no God. And he that ſaith in his heart, How doth God know? ſpeaks as fooliſhly as that fool doth, who ſaith, There is no God. To deny that or doubt whether God knoweth all things, is not only to doubt, but to deny that God is at all; he is not God who knoweth not all things.

Dicis, 1 verbis prolatis, 2 mentis cogitatione & falſa perſuaſione.

And thou ſayeſt, how doth God know?] The conjunctive particle And, is here put as a cauſal, And thou ſayeſt; that is, therefore thou ſayeſt, how doth God know? So the ſence is more clear, Is not God in the height of heaven? &c. He is. And what then? The uſe thou makeſt of it is this, Thou ſayeſt, how doth God know? So the particle is uſed (Gen. 49. 15.) He ſaw that reſt was good, and he gave his ſhoulders to the burthen, &c. that is, therefore he gave his ſhoulders to the burthen.

Thou ſayeſt, how doth God know?] We may anſwer, firſt, Negatively, Not by ſenſe, as we; eyes and ears are aſcribed to God improperly in Scripture; nor doth God know by diſcourſe, drawing one thing from another; but in the Affirmative, he knows intuitively, he knows every thing nakedly in it ſelf.

Again, Some read, What doth God know? How far doth his eye extend? What are the objects of his knowledge? To this we may anſwer, God knoweth all things, even the hearts of all the children of men, there are no ſecrets to God. But whether we expound it of the manner or matter of divine knowledge, the ſence is the ſame; either an affirmation that God did not know all things, or at leaſt a doubt whether he did or no. Thou ſayeſt, how doth God know? But where, and when did Job ſay this? Job might challenge Eliphaz; bring your proofs and witneſſes againſt me; why do you impute ſuch thoughts to me, and frame ſuch imaginations in my breaſt? certainly Job never ſpake this, and as ſurely Job never thought this, yet Eliphaz puts it directly upon him. What was his ground? Only as the former crimes of uncharitableneſs and injuſtice, his breaking the arms of the fatherleſs, &c. were faſtned upon him, becauſe of the fears, ſnares, and darkneſs in which he was; as if he muſt needs have done thoſe evils, becauſe he endured ſo much evil. Job's ſufferings were great, and therefore according to the Logick of Eliphaz, his ſins muſt needs be very great. So here, he hath only this to prove his ſuppoſition, that Job ſaid, How doth God know? Becauſe Job had ſaid, that God doth ſometime proſper wicked men, and afflicts the righteous. As if he who ſaith, that God ſuffers wicked men to proſper in this life, muſt needs alſo ſay, that God regards not the things of this life; ſo that Eliphaz ſeems to ſpeak thus, We have heard thee ſaying, that the wicked proſper, and that the godly are afflicted; what need we any further witneſs, that thy opinion is, God neither takes notice nor care of the things here below. Out of thine own mouth we condemn thee as guilty of this blaſphemy, that, Thou ſayeſt, how doth God know?

Exiſtimabit hæc conſequi ex Jobi dictis, quaſi neceſſe ſit eum qui dicat improbos proſperè agere, exiſtimare etiam Deum res humanas non curare. Merl.

Hence obſerve, Firſt, That good men are ſometimes charged with ſaying and doing the worſt and vileſt things.

Thus (1 King. 21. 13.) Naboth was accuſed of blaſpheming God and the King. Chriſt himſelf was taxed with blaſphemy more then once (Matth. 9. 3.) And behold certain of the Scribes ſaid within themſelves, this man blaſphemes. There they did not only aver it, but they ſaid it within themſelves. At other times they ſpake it openly, (Joh. 10. 33.) The Jews anſwered and ſaid, for a good deed we ſtone thee not, but for blaſphemy; becauſe thou being a man makeſt thy ſelf God. And again (Matth. 26. 65.) He hath ſpoken blaſphemy, ye have heard his blaſphemy. To ſpeak or do well and hear ill was the portion of Chriſt, and may be the portion of the holieſt of thoſe who are Chriſts.

Secondly note, That when men are heated in diſpute, they are apt to make falſe inferences from the tenets and ſayings of their oppoſers.

Eliphaz ſaith, Job denied providence, whereas Job adored it; that he denied Gods knowledge of the good and evil done in the world, becauſe he maintained, that good men receive evil, and evil men good in the world. When we deny Tranſubſtantiation, or that the bread is changed into the very ſubſtance of the body of Chriſt; Papiſts infer, that we deny, that Chriſt ſpake truly, when at his Laſt Supper he ſaid, This is my body; and they will hence force it upon us, that we ſay, God is not omnipotent, becauſe we affirm that it is inconſiſtent with the nature of a true humane body (ſuch as Chriſt hath now in Heaven, though glorified and ſpiritual) to be in many places at once. For as ſome deny the omnipreſence of the Divine Nature, ſo Papiſts affirm the omnipreſence of the Humane Nature; and (ſay they) while we deny this, we deny the omnipotency of God. Others charge us that we make God the author of ſin, and that, according to our tenet, all the impiety and wickedneſs that is in the world lieth at his door; becauſe we affirm, that God hath paſſed an Eternal abſolute and unchangeable decree concerning all the ſons of men. When all other arguments fail, how uſual is it to make the divineſt truths guilty of the moſt uncomly and ugly conſequences that are imaginable.

Further, Thou ſayeſt, How doth God know? Take it either of the inward or of the outward ſaying, either of the tongue or of the heart, ſaying ſo; Eliphaz would prove from it, that certainly Job was a wicked man. And his inference had been true, if he could have proved it true, that Job had ſo.

Hence obſerve, That to have evil thoughts, or to ſpeak evil of God, is the character of a wicked man.

He that is good, muſt needs both think, and ſpeak good of God. David doth often aggravate the wickedneſs of his enemies, from the language of their hearts and tongues, (Pſal. 10. 11.) He hath ſaid in his heart, God hath forgotten, he hides his face, he will never ſee. And again (Pſal. 144. 7, 8, 11.) Send thy hand from above, rid me, and deliver me out of great waters, from the hands of ſtrange children, whoſe mouth ſpeaketh vanity, and their right hand is a right hand of falſhood. If the mouth ſpeaketh vanity, the hand is full of falſhood; we may even feel deceit in their hands, whoſe mouths ſpeak any kind of vanity; but eſpecially this, which is the vaineſt vanity of all, How doth God know? or ſurely God doth not know. Such the Pſalmiſt rebukes (Pſal. 94. 4, 5, 7.) How long ſhall they utter and ſpeak hard things? What things were thoſe? The next words ſhew us, They brake in pieces thy people, &c. yet they ſay, the Lord ſhall not ſee, &c. underſtand ye brutiſh, among the people, he that formed the eye, ſhall he not ſee? There is no greater argument of brutiſhneſs and ignorance, then to queſtion the knowledge of God, or to ſay, How doth God know?

And (which is the ſame in other words) can he judge through the darke cloud.

As if Job had further argued thus, I am ſafe enough from the knowledge of God, for as he is high above me, ſo there are dark clouds between him and me; Can he judge through the dark cloud? My opinion is he cannot. For knowledge goeth before judgment; he that knoweth not certainly, can never judge rightly. Juſtice is pictured blind, in reference to perſons, but not in reference to things or cauſes; Juſtice muſt take no notice of this or that man, whether he be great or little, high or low, a near friend or a ſtranger; Juſtice is blind as to all theſe conſiderations, and knoweth no man; but Juſtice muſt know every mans caſe and cauſe; unleſs man know that, how can he judge? And if God know not that, how can he judge? He muſt have light to ſee what is done, before he paſs ſentence upon what is done; therefore, Can he judge through the dark cloud? Surely he cannot. Thus the Atheiſt concludes indeed, and thus Eliphaz repreſents Job concluding in his own heart; there is not only a great diſtance between God and me, not only is he in the height of Heaven, and I below on Earth, but there are many gloomy clouds between him and me; as he is high above me, ſo there are ſuch impediments in the way that he cannot ſee me. The Vulgar reads, He judgeth as through darkneſs. Now the beſt of Saints ſee God through a glaſs darkly, or in a riddle (1 Cor. 13. 12.) And ſecure ſinners think that God ſeeth them only through a cloud darkly, or (as Eliphaz ſpeaketh) through a dark cloud, he knoweth not clearly but dimly. To judge through a cloud, is to judge of things confuſedly, not diſtinctly; by gueſs or conjecturally, not exactly or face to face. This is all the ſight which an evil heart alloweth God (if he allow him any) concerning his wayes and actions. They who do things which cannot abide the light, are willing to believe that all they do is in the dark. Theirs are works of moral darkneſs, and therefore they pleaſe themſelves with thinking that their works are hid either in natural or artificial darkneſs. It is ſaid of the Lord in Scripture (Pſal. 97. 2.) Clouds and darkneſs are round about him, while judgment and righteouſneſs are the habitation of his throne; but theſe imagine that God cannot proceed in judgment and righteouſneſs, becauſe clouds and darkneſs are round about him. It is ſaid (1 King. 8. 10, 11, 12.) The cloud filled the houſe of the Lord, ſo that the Prieſts could not ſtand to miniſter becauſe of the cloud, for the glory of the Lord filled the houſe of the Lord. Then ſpake Solomon, the Lord ſaid that he will dwell in the thick darkneſs. Read, Exod. 20. 21. Deut. 5. 22. Pſal. 18. 11. God is light (ſaith the Apoſtle, 1 John 1.) and he dwelleth in light which no man can approach unto (1 Tim. 6. 16.) How then can he be ſaid to dwell in thick darkneſs? I anſwer, thoſe Scriptures which ſay that God dwells in darkneſs, that clouds and darkneſs are round about him, teach us, that God and his wayes are much hid from us; we are not able to look up to him, or ſee clearly what he doth, much leſs can we ſee what his counſels are. The clouds and darkneſs which are about him, do not hinder his ſight of us, but our ſight of him. Our darkneſs is no darkneſs to him; but his darkneſs, yea his light is darkneſs to us. Again, God is ſaid to dwell in a cloud, to reprove our boldneſs and curioſity, who are too apt to pry into what is not to be known, and to neglect our duty in what we know, or to neglect the knowledge of our duty. God hath ſome reſerves in counſels; ſome of his providences are wrapt up in clouds. He will be truſted and honoured in what he is not ſeen or known. Not to know theſe things is indeed our neſcience, but not our ignorance; and not to ſeek after the knowledge of theſe things, is our duty, not our ſloath. Thus God who dwells in light, dwells alſo in a cloud; for he dwells in light that no man can (no nor ought to) approach unto. We may come near his light by faith, but we cannot come near his light by knowledge. There is ſuch an infinite, ſuch an overcoming light in God, that it is a darkneſs to us; the moſt Eagle-like eye of a humane underſtanding are not only dazzel'd, but quite blinded with his brightneſs. Now as no man can judge through this light of God, ſo ſome men are ready to ſay (and thus Eliphaz brings in Job ſaying) that God cannot judge through dark clouds, through clouds and darkneſs. Nor doth Eliphaz bring in Job ſaying thus only by way of doubt or queſtion, but by way of averment and reſolution in the next verſe.

Sit non novit ergo nec judicare poteſt, ad rectum enim judicium requiritur cognitio cauſæ.

Et quaſi per caliginum judicat. Vulg.

Verſ. 14. Thick clouds are a covering to him, that he ſeeth it not.

This verſe is but an explication of the thirteenth, Can he ſee through the dark cloud? There he puts the queſtion, here he gives a peremptory anſwer, he cannot certainly; for, Thick clouds are a covering to him, that he cannot ſee. The Hebrew for thick clouds is but one word, which in the root, ſignifies Thickneſs, or, to be thick. Some clouds have a kind of thinneſs in them, and are as it were tranſparent.

עבים Nubes dictæ ſunt à denſitate, à radice עבה denſum eſſe. q.d. ſicut nos latet Deus, ita Deum latent noſtra cœleſtia, illi tantum patent.

parent. Others are more groſs and opacous, quite hindering and intercepting our ſight of all that is beyond them; with theſe (ſaith Eliphaz) thou O Job, vainly conceiteſt, that the ſight of God alſo is intercepted, ſo that, as we cannot ſee God, ſo God cannot ſee us; a vail of thick clouds ſeclude his ſight. Nor is this the only reaſon why thou art overcom with this ignorant perſwaſion. Thou haſt a ſecond, which though poſſibly thou wouldeſt conceal, yet will not I; and this is it, Thou alſo ſayeſt,

Hoc verbo videtur connotari ſtudium inquirendi. Piſc.

He walketh in the circuit of Heaven.] As if thou hadſt ſaid, ſuppoſe God can ſee through the thick cloud, and ſo my former reaſon ſhould fail; yet I know well enough that the great God of Heaven hath other matters to meddle with, other affairs to buſie himſelf about, then to trouble himſelf with me. He walketh in the circuit of Heaven; we are not to take walking as a meer motion, but as walking notes imployment; He walks in the circuit of Heaven, that is, he is wholly taken up there. When the Lord asked of Satan, Whence comeſt thou? he anſwered, From going to and fro in the Earth, and from walking up and down in it. Now what doth Satan when he walks up and down the world, doth he walk like an idle vagrant that hath nothing to do? Doth he walk with his hands in his pockets, as having no buſineſs? Doth he walk meerly to take the Air, or to take his pleaſure, to ſee, and be ſeen? No, when Satan walks about the world, his walking is working, he goeth about to tempt, to try, to lay ſnares and baits, to catch and captivate the ſouls of men. So here when it is ſaid, God walketh in the circuit of Heaven, the meaning is, his buſineſs, yea even his whole buſineſs lies there; he hath enough to do in Heaven, and therefore hath no leiſure to attend what is done on Earth. That's the ſcope and tendency of theſe words which Eliphaz faſtens upon Job; He walketh in the circuit of Heaven. We are ſure enough of him. The words carry the ſame ſence, with that ſpeech of the whoriſh woman (Prov. 7. 18, 19, 20.) Come (ſaith ſhe) let us take our fill of love till the morning, let us ſolace our ſelves with loves. But the young man might poſſibly object, your husband will come home, and that will ſpoil all. No (ſaith ſhe) never fear it, he is far enough out of the way; The good man is not at home, he is gone a long journey; He hath taken a bag of money with him, and will come home at the day appointed; that is, he will not come home till the day appointed, he hath great buſineſs abroad, and he hath carried money enough with him to bear his charges till he [illegible] done his buſineſs. He is riding and running in a far Country, and minds not home, nor hath he the leaſt ſuſpition of what we do at home. Thus when the ſinner is about to depart far from his duty, he puts or conceives God far from him. He walketh in the circuit of Heaven. From the general ſcope of Eliphaz in the thirteenth and fourteenth Verſes,

First obſerve, Carnal men frame conceptions of God like themſelves.

Thus the hypocrite is deſcribed (Pſal. 50. 21.) Thou thoughteſt that I was altogether ſuch a one as thy ſelf. Not that he thought God was a man, but that God had ſuch thoughts of good and evil, as man hath. As if what is right in mans eyes, were ſo in the eyes of God alſo; or as if what did not diſpleaſe man, were pleaſing, or not much diſpleaſing unto God. When the Lord ſaith (Iſa. 55. 8.) My thoughts are not your thoughts, nor your wayes my wayes; he doth plainly intimate, that they did begin to frame thoughts of God like their own; but ſaith God, As the Heavens are higher then the Earth, ſo are my thoughts then your thoughts, and my wayes then your wayes; that is, as my thoughts have a vaſtneſs in them to all things beyond yours, ſo eſpecially in this thing, the performance of my promiſe for the pardon of ſin. O how unlike is God to man in this? God is not more unlike man in his abſolute freedom from the leaſt inclination to commit any, the leaſt ſin, then he is in the admirable freeneſs of his inclination to pardon any, even the greateſt ſin. Men are commonly not only unmerciful to thoſe who wrong them, but revengeful, and when once offended are hardly drawn to a reconcilement; and ſeldom ſo fully reconciled, but that ſomewhat of offence ſtayeth behind. But the thoughts of God are not ſo. He is ſlow to wrath, and ready to forgive. He quickly pardons the offence, and receives the offender into favour; no more retaining the memory of his offence (as to his hurt) then if he had never offended. Thus the Lord would aſſure ſinners, that his thoughts in pardoning ſin are not as theirs. And it is but need he ſhould do ſo; for when ſinners begin to be awakened, they frame ſuch thoughts of God, as to pardon of ſin, as they have in themſelves: when they look upon their ſins as too big to be pardoned by man, they conclude preſently the Lord cannot or will not pardon them. And as many under temptation, frame thoughts of God like their own about the pardon of ſin; ſo it is the conſtant courſe of wicked men (which is indeed the worſt of their ſins) to frame thoughts of God like unto themſelves, while they commit and continue in ſin. Man ſhould not dare to imagine any thing of God in reference either to his juſtice or mercy, either about the puniſhing or pardoning of ſin, but what he hath declared of himſelf; all that we imagine beſide that, is the making of another God. There are many falſe gods made with mens hands, but the hearts of men make many more. The heart of man makes thouſands of falſe or ſtrange gods. Every undue, every wrong imagination of God, is the forming up of a ſtrange, of a new god. When we aſcribe to God ſuch a kind of power, ſuch a kind of knowledge, ſuch a kind of holineſs, ſuch a kind of juſtice, ſuch a kind of mercy, as is common to the creature, in all this we frame up a new god to our ſelves. And thus thoſe Gentiles of whom the Apoſtle ſpeaks (Rom. 1. 21, & 25.) Became vain in their imaginations, and their fooliſh heart was darkned; in what was their fooliſh heart darkned? in falſe notions of God; therefore they are ſaid (Verſ. 29.) To change the glory of the incorruptible God, into an Image made like to corruptible man, and to birds, four footed beaſts, and creeping things. Now as there is the changing of the glory of the incorruptible God into the Image of a corruptible man, that is, into the external Image of a corruptible man (for ſome ſet up falſe gods in the likeneſs of men;) ſo there is a changing of the glory of the incorruptible God, into the internal Image of a corruptible man, that is, into ſuch thoughts and conceptions as are ordinarily in men. Let ſuch conſider, that, if to make a worſhip of our own for the true God, be indeed to ſet up a falſe god; (all they worſhip falſe gods who ſet up a ſtrange worſhip for the true God; now, I ſay, if they who do but ſet up a new worſhip for the true God make a ſtrange god) what then do they who in their hearts ſet up a new god, that is, who frame conceptions of God which himſelf never gave ground for in his Word? Such was the conceit which Eliphaz had of Job, when he preſumes him ſaying, How doth God know? Can he judge through the dark cloud?

Secondly, From the particular miſapprehenſion of God impoſed by Eliphaz upon Job; And thou ſayeſt, how doth God know? &c.

Obſerve, Sinful men fancy to themſelves that God either doth not or cannot take notice of them in their ſinful wayes.

Thus they reaſon, Can he ſee through the dark cloud? and conclude, Thick clouds are a covering to him that he ſeeth not, and he walketh in the circuit of Heaven? What Eliphaz layes to Job's charge falſly, is often charged by the Holy Ghoſt upon wicked men truly (Pſal. 10. 11.) He hath ſaid in his heart God hath forgotten, he hides his face, he will never ſee it. Who this He is, whoſe heart ſpeaks this language, appears clearly in the former part of the Pſalm, where he is more then once called The wicked (ver. 2, 3.) and where more then one of his wickedneſſes are deſcribed (ver. 7, 8, 9, 10.) His mouth is full of curſing and deceit, and fraud; under his tongue is miſchief and vanity: he ſitteth in the lurking places of the villages: in the ſecret places doth he murther the innocent, &c. After all this, he ſaith in his heart God hath forgotten; that is, he hath forgotten the poor whom I have under my power, therefore I may ſafely oppreſs them. He hideth his face, he will never ſee it; that is, God will never take any knowledge, either of my doings or of their ſufferings. We have a ſample of the ſame impiety (Pſal. 73. 11.) And they ſay, how doth God know? and is there knowledge in the moſt high? behold, theſe are the ungodly in the world, &c. And again (Pſal. 94. 6.) They ſlay the widdow, and ſtranger, and murther the fatherleſs (here are their works of darkneſs) yet they ſay, the Lord ſhall not ſee, neither ſhall the God of Jacob regard. Not only did they preſume that the Lord did not ſee, but that he ſhould not; The Lord ſhall not ſee! As if they could ſtop or blind the eyes of God as eaſily as they had blinded their own Conſciences. Take one inſtance further (Ezek. 8. 12.) Then ſaid he unto me, Son of man, Seeſt thou what they do? haſt thou ſeen what the ancients of the houſe of Iſrael do in the dark, every man in the chambers of his imagery? for they ſay, The Lord ſeeth us not, he hath forſaken the Earth. Much like the language here, He walketh in the circuit of Heaven; he hath other buſineſs to do then to mind us. As God is ſometimes ſaid to forſake the Earth in wrath, to puniſh the ſin of Man; ſo wicked men ſay, he alwayes forſakes the Earth in neglect both of their ſin and puniſhment. And as Idolaters who have a mind to other gods, are willing to believe that God hath forſaken the Earth, as to the protection of them; we (ſay they) are in danger, God takes no care of us, therefore blame us not if we betake our ſelves to other gods for protection; If he had not forſaken us, we had not forſaken him: So all ſorts of reſolved tranſgreſſors, who have a mind to any ſinful way, are willing to believe that God hath forſaken the Earth, as to any obſervation of them. We may do what we liſt, for God doth not mind or regard what we are doing. If we thought he did indeed ſee us, we durſt not thus ſin againſt him: But ſeeing he doth not trouble himſelf with any care about us, why ſhould we trouble our ſelves with any fear about him? Now, this Preſumption that God doth not ſee us in what we are doing, opens a door to the doing of all evil. Security from danger is the great encouragement unto ſin. Though wicked men would not be leſs ſinful, yet they would not ſin ſo much, or be ſo full of ſin, did they not vainly flatter themſelves out of the ſight of God. Every man would fain believe that God doth not ſee him when he is doing that which he would not have ſeen or be ſeen in doing it. And how do men pleaſe themſelves in this falſe hope that God doth not ſee them, when they do that which is diſpleaſing unto God!

From the intendment of Eliphaz to convince Job, that the clouds are no covering to God, and that the circuit of Heaven doth not confine him.

Thirdly obſerve, God is omniſcient, he knows all things.

Thou ſayeſt thus, How doth God know? I tell thee God doth know; and thou haſt an argument upon thy back, if thou haſt none in thy heart to prove it; thy ſence or feeling may teach thee, if thy reaſon or underſtanding do not, and by thy ſuffering thou mayſt ſee that God ſeeth what thou haſt been doing. This great truth, That God is omniſcient, or knows all, may eaſily be known, and ought to be believed by all. When the Lord had made the world in ſix dayes (Gen. 1. 31.) He ſaw all that he had made; all was in view at once, he had a proſpect of the whole creation in his eye. And as all his own creatures, ſo all our creatures are ſeen by God; he ſeeth all that himſelf hath made, and he ſeeth all that we have made, or are making day by day (Gen. 6. 5.) God ſaw that the wickedneſs of man was great in the Earth, and that every thought of the imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually, or every day. The Lord ſaw, that is, the Lord knew fully (infinitely more fully then we know thoſe things which we ſee) every imagination or figment of the thoughts of mans heart. The figment of our thoughts, is what the mind faſhioneth or maketh up within it ſelf by thinking: corrupt nature keeps a conſtant mint of evil imaginations in the head, as it hath a ſink of filthy affections in the heart. The mind of man hath a formative faculty in it: And the ſame word which the Holy Ghoſt uſeth to ſignifie the work of God in making man (Gen. 2. 7.) The Lord God formeth man out of the duſt of the Earth, or duſt out of the Earth (the ſame word, I ſay) is uſed in the Noun (Gen. 6. 5.) to ſignifie, the imagination of man, becauſe that is alwayes ſhaping moulding or forming one ſort of thoughts or other, and, naturally, none but ugly evil thoughts. Theſe are the creatures which man (as fallen) is the maker of; and he maketh (as I may ſay) infinite creatures, he is forming them continually in his imagination; that's the ſhop wherein there's a dayly Creation (ſuch as it is) of monſtrous wickedneſſes, till God by his new Creation changeth the frame and nature of it. Now (I ſay) as God ſeeth his own creatures, ſo he ſeeth all our creatures, though we make them in the ſhop of our darkeſt imaginations. And much more doth he ſee all the creatures which we make without, that is, all our bodily and external actions (Jer. 17. 10.) I the Lord ſearch the heart, I try the reins; if he ſearch our hearts, then ſurely he ſearcheth all our wayes; if he ſeeth our thinkings, then ſurely he ſeeth our walkings. Therefore 'tis ſaid (1 Sam. 2. 3.) The Lord is a God of knowledge; the Hebrew is, The Lord is a God of knowledges; that is, all things fall under his knowledge; he is perfect in all knowledges there is nothing knowable, but the Lord knows it, and by him actions are weighed: now the weighing of actions is more then the ſeeing of actions; many ſee that which they cannot weigh. He weigheth actions, that is, he takes not only the action it ſelf, but every circumſtance of it into conſideration; he takes his ballances, and tries fully, how much each ingredient weighs, and what it comes to. He weighs whole States, Kingdoms, and Nations. So it was ſaid to the Babylonian Monarch Belteſhazzar (Dan. 5. 26, 27.) Mene, God hath numbred thy Kingdom and finiſhed it; Tekel, Thou art weighed in the ballances, and art found wanting. Thy councels, thy policies, thy undertakings, the whole compaſs, all the contrivance of thy Government are weighed and found too light. And as God weigheth the actions of Princes, ſo of private perſons (Prov. 5. 21.) The wayes of a man (that is, of every man, even of the meaneſt man) are before the Lord, and he pondereth all his paths; he puts them into a Ballance, and doth not only ſee them, but ponder or weigh them. David ſaith of ſome wicked men that they weigh the violence of their hands in the Earth (Pſal. 58. 2.) though they do violence, yet they do it not violently, but with a kind of skill and deliberation. They do wrong and oppreſs with a ſhew of Juſtice, whereof weights are the common Emblem. Now as ſome men do evil, not haſtily, raſhly, or all at once, but give it out by weight, and with a ſeeming gravity and zeal for Juſtice. So the Lord doth never look over the wayes of men raſhly or haſtily, but weighs them out even to a grain, yea to the duſt of the ballance he pondereth all their paths; that is, he knows them throughout. Therefore David (Pſal. 139.) having ſpoken much to this point of the exactneſs of Gods knowledge, concludes at verſ. 6. Such knowledge is too wonderful for me, it is high I cannot attain unto it. Some expound this Text, not of the knowledge of God concerning us, but of our knowledge concerning God. Thy knowledge or the knowledge of thee is too wonderful for me, I cannot attain unto it. Others thus, This thy knowledge (namely that which he had before deſcribed) is more wonderful (or more exact) then that I ſhould be able to deceive it. We may impoſe upon and deceive the moſt knowing man, but we cannot impoſe upon or deceive God. I conceive our reading to be moſt ſutable both to the Text and Context. Such knowledge, that is, ſuch knowledge as thou haſt of me, of the leaſt and greateſt things, even of all things that I or any man doth, is too wonderful for me. For though we may know ſome actions of men, yet we cannot know them all, and we can hardly weigh any of them to the utmoſt. And in this acknowledgment we may take notice of the Pſalmiſt modeſty, who though he had the immediate aſſiſtance of a prophetical Spirit; yet confeſſed, that he was not only not able to know God, but not to know himſelf, his thoughts, words, and wayes, as God knew them. Such knowledge of my ſelf as thou O Lord haſt of me, is too wonderful for me, I cannot attain unto it.

Deus ſcientiarum, plurale, perfectā ſcientiam & rerum omniū cognoſcibiliū cognitionem indicat.

Some perhaps may query upon this, if the Lord knoweth all the wayes of men, and pondereth all their actions, is not this a trouble to God? Is not this a diſturbance of his peace, and a diſtraction to him?

I anſwer (as I ſaid before) this is to frame a God like our ſelves, for to him that is omniſcient, it is all one to know all, and to know but one thing: it is no more diſtraction, no more trouble to God to know all that we do ſpeak, or think, then to know any thing. If two or three ſpeak to a man together, he is not able to take in their ſence; the variety of their diſcourſe makes ſuch a hurry and trouble in his ſpirits, that he looſeth all that is ſpoken. But the application of Thouſands or of Millions at the ſame time in ſpeaking to the ear of God, is no more trouble, then if but one did ſpeak; an infinite ears hears all, and an infinite eye ſees all, without any the leaſt diſtraction; the infinite knowledge of God takes in all the actions of all men, as eaſily as the ſingle action of any one man.

Again, Others may ſay, ſurely the Lord will not take ſuch exact knowledge of all the actions of men, eſpecially of mean men, or ſurely not of the mean actions of meaneſt men; poſſibly of ſome perſons in great place, and of ſome great things done by thoſe perſons he may take notice; but to ſtoop to ſmall things, if it be not a trouble, yet it cannot but be a diſhonour to, and too great a condeſcention for the great God. The Heathens ſaid their Jupiter had no leaſure to deal in ſmall matters; and may not we Chriſtians ſay, Is it not honourable enough for our God, to have to do with ſmall matters.

Non vacat exiguis rebus, &c.

I anſwer, This alſo is to frame a God like our ſelves; as it doth not weary God to behold, to try and ponder all the wayes of all men (which was the fear concerning Moſes that he ſhould be tired out with the various caſes and affairs of that great people; and was therefore adviſed by Jethro to make more Judges, that ſo the weightier matters only might be brought before and judged by him) So it is no diſhonour at all to God, no, it is his honour that he takes cogniſance of the ſmalleſt matters as well as of the greateſt, of the loweſt as well as of the higheſt concernments of the children of men (Pſal. 113. 5, 6.) Who is like unto the Lord our God, who dwelleth on high? who humbleth himſelf to behold the things which are in Heaven, and in the Earth. Who is like to God in this? This is the honour of the high God that he will humble himſelf to behold the loweſt things, the things which are in the Earth, as well as things in Heaven; and the leſſer, the leaſt things in Earth, as well as the greater or the greateſt. Though the Lord be high yet he humbleth himſelf unto the lowly (Pſal. 138. 6.) and as to lowly perſons, ſo to the loweſt things. Indeed the Lord doth humble himſelf to behold the things which are in Heaven, it is a condeſcention in him to take notice of any Creature; yet he doth not only humble himſelf to behold things in Heaven, but things in the Earth, and in this who is like unto the Lord our God? This is his glory, and for this he is to be glorified, yea to be cryed up with this admiring Elogium, Who is like unto the Lord our God? None among the ſons of men are like him in this, yea there is no God like unto the Lord our God in this. We have cauſe to ſay (conſidering our vileneſs) What is man that thou ſhouldeſt take notice of him? 'Tis too great an honour for man, but it is no diſhonour to God to take notice of the meaneſt man. The greatneſs of God appears as in the making, ſo in the governing and diſpoſing of the ſmalleſt things. The power of God is ſeen in making a fly or a worm, as well as in making an Elephant or the vaſt Leviathan; ſo alſo is his wiſdom and providence ſeen in the obſerving and ordering of thoſe buſineſſes and motions of the creature, which compared to others are but as a fly to an Elephant, or but as a worm to Leviathan. There is nothing doth more detract from the greatneſs of God, then the denyal or diſ-belief of his cogniſance of and care about little things. And as it ſhews the exacteſt perfection of holineſs attainable by man in this life, when he taketh an account of and reproves himſelf for the leaſt ſins, whether they be omiſſions of that good which he is commanded to do, or comiſſions of that evil which he is forbidden to do. So it is an undeniable argument of the exactly and abſolutely perfect holineſs, juſtice, goodneſs and faithfulneſs of God, that he taketh an account of, and will certainly reward or puniſh every man for the leaſt good or evil which he hath done. This is the glory of him who walketh in the circuit of Heaven, that he ſees all to the center of the Earth. Eliphaz having thus detected and reproved (as he thought) thoſe thoughts and aſſertions of Job which detracted ſo much from God, as if he did not mark the wayes of men; proceeds to put the queſtion to him, whether himſelf had well marked the wayes of wicked men.

VERS. 15, 16.

Haſt thou marked the old way which wicked men have troden.

Which were cut down out of time, whoſe foundation was overflown with a flood?

שמר

THE word tranſlated to Mark, notes a diligent obſervation; ſo it is uſed (Chap. 10. 14.) If I ſin then thou markeſt me (that is, thou takeſt exact or ſtrict notice of me) and thou wilt not acquit me from mine iniquity (Pſal. 37. 37.) mark the perfect man, and behold the upright, that is, take ſpecial knowledge of him, for the end of that man is peace (Pſal. 107. 43.) Who ſo is wiſe will obſerve, or mark, theſe things, he ſhall underſtand the loving kindneſs of the Lord. ' So here, Haſt thou marked? Haſt thou with diligence and ſeriouſneſs of ſpirit obſerved, the old way which wicked men have troden. The Hebrew is, The way of age, the way of ages, or as ſome read, the Eternal way, the way of Eternity. David prayeth (Pſal. 139. 23, 24.) Lead me in the way everlaſting; that is, Lead me in the way of holineſs and righteouſneſs, which leads to eternity. Which yet one of the Rabbins expounds, as a periphraſis of death; for death is called, The way of all the earth (1 King. 2. 2.) The way of all fleſh (Joſh. 23. 14.) As if David had ſaid, Lord, if upon ſearch thou findeſt that I walk in any way of wickedneſs, that is, of wilful ſinning, then deſtroy me, lead me to my grave, yea caſt me with the wicked to Hell, or to everlaſting condemnation. Maſter Broughton thus, Haſt thou marked the way of the old world?

Obſervare Dei actiones imprimis ipſius judicia magna pars ſcientiæ eſt.

Semitam ſæculorum vel ſeculi; æternam aut æternitatis, nam ea omnia denotat vox עלם Rab. Kimchi.

But what was this way of the old world, about which Eliphaz queſtions Job, whether he had taken notice of it yea or no? The way of the world may be taken two wayes.

First, For the way of their ſins.

Secondly, For the way of their puniſhment.

Firſt, Haſt thou marked the old way of their ſin? And the old way of their ſin may be conſidered under a twofold notion.

Firſt, As it was the way of their opinion. Secondly, As it was the way of their practice: Some reſtrain it here to the way of their opinion, and interpret Eliphaz as chiefly intending that, Haſt thou obſerved the old way, that is, the old Erroneous opinions which were in the firſt ages of the world? In thoſe times there were not a few like thy ſelf, who either flatly denyed or belied the providence of God, who ſaid (as thou doeſt) How doth God know? Surely he hath forſaken the Earth, and intermedles not with what is done here below. Thus a Learned Interpreter expounds the Text, with reference to their ungodly opinion, They (ſaith he) who lived in the time of the flood denyed providence; haſt thou (O Job) marked their opinion and conſidered it? And that this wicked Error did prevail in thoſe times, may be Collected from what is reported by Beroſus of the Giants (of whom we read in Geneſis. 6. v. 4. There were Giants in the Earth in thoſe dayes) Among other of their abominations, this (ſaith he) was one, or this was a Chief one, the root, or ſource of them all; they blaſphemed God, and contemned Religion, they thought there was no ſupreme Power, none to whom man was accountable for any of his actions. Haſt thou marked this old way of Error?

Ad eos opinio hæc referenda eſt, qui vixerunt tempore diluvii cenſebantq; tollendam providentiam. Vatabl.

Gigantes religionis contemptores. Beroſ.

In purſuance of which Interpretation, the words which we render, Haſt thou marked, may be expounded thus, Haſt thou taken up the old way? Art thou a follower of that Sect, of that Tribe who have gone in that wicked way? Doeſt thou alſo maintain their blaſphemy, that God takes no notice of man? This notion holds fair with what he had ſaid before.

Cuſtodiendi verbum proſequi exponitur. Merc.

Secondly, As it may be referred to thoſe abominable, Atheiſtical opinions which reigned in thoſe times, ſo to the wicked Practices, to the old Cuſtoms and ſinful Courſes which were followed in thoſe times; for where a wicked opinion is lodged in the heart, what kind of wickedneſs is there that they may not break forth in the life? And ſo here the old way is the way of ſin, the corrupt courſe and practices of that debauched generation, eſpecially the way of pride and ambition, which appeared much in the titles given them, Mighty men, men of name, or as we render, Men of renoun. They were men of honour and name with men, but we read not of any honour they did to or received from God. It is the higheſt diſgrace, to be memorable for actings againſt grace, or for ungracious actings.

Again,

Num obſervas perpetuum ordinem, quem in puniendis talibus impiis tennit Deus, poſt natos homines, Merc. Putat hunc eſſe perpetuũ ordinem domini ut impios hic puniat, ſed fallitur. Merc.

Again, The old way may be taken for the way of puniſhment, or for that courſe of divine Juſtice which was executed upon wicked men in thoſe elder times. There is a way of Judgment which God takes, as there is a way of Sin which man takes. Sinful wayes lead into troubleſom wayes, and end in death. Haſt thou conſidered the way of juſtice which the Lord went in towards thoſe old ſinners, pouring out his wrath, and emptying the vials of his indignation upon them, till he had conſumed and ſwept them off as rubbiſh from the face of the earth? Haſt thou marked the old way, which either the luſts of wicked men have led them into, or which the juſtice of the Lord hath brought them into? Haſt thou obſerved the old way?

Which wicked men have trodden?

The Hebrew is, Men of Iniquity; Which phraſe plainly imports, that he doth not ſpeak of the ordinary race, or rank of ſinners; but of the extreameſt ſinners, men ſo full of Iniquity, that they deſerved this black Title, men of Iniquity. Antichriſt is called not only a man of ſin, or the man of ſin, but (which implyeth a ſinner of a higher form, then both the former) That man of ſin (2 Theſ. 2. 3.) He being indeed not only amongſt the chiefeſt ſinners, but the chief of ſinners. The phraſe in the Text is a degree lower then that, yet it notes a very great degree. And therefore when the Prophet would aſſure the greateſt ſinners repenting and returning to God, of the readineſs of God to pardon, he expreſſeth them in this ſtile (Iſa. 55. 7.) Let the wicked forſake his way, and the unrighteous man, or (as the Original Text hath it) the man of iniquity, his thoughts, and &c. As a man of Bloods, notes a very bloody man, a man given up to that particular ſin of cruelty: So a man of iniquity, is one given up to ſin in general. Haſt thou marked the old way which wicked men, men of iniquity, have Trodden.] This word, Trodden, referred both to a ſinful and a ſuffering way, notes the frequency of their going or being in thoſe wayes. And as it is referred to their ſinful way alone, it notes firſt, their boldneſs in ſinning; ſecondly, their reſolvedneſs to ſin: A trodden way, is ſuch a way as a man hath often gone, and in which he is not afraid to go. Haſt thou marked the old way.

Hence note, Firſt, The way of ſin and Error is an old way.

The Devil ſinned from the beginning, and men have ſinned from their beginning; not only have there been ſinnings, but great ſinnings from the beginning; the old way is the way of ſin, though the oldeſt way be not. There was holineſs before there was ſin, and truth before there was error; ſo that the way of ſin is the old way, but not the oldeſt way. God, all whoſe wayes are holy, was from everlaſting. The Angels who have been holy as long as they have been, were from the beginning. And the firſt beginning of man in his converſation, was, no doubt, like his conſtitution, holy. He quickly went out of the way, but ſurely his firſt ſtep was not out of the way, he went right before he went wrong, and ſtood before he fell. Again, if you take the way for the way of puniſhment,

Note, That God in all ages hath puniſhed ſinners in their ſinful wayes.

God hath every where, and every when, left the tract and print of his anger and diſpleaſure upon ſinners; though ſome particular ſinners have gone unpuniſhed in ſome age, yet there was never any age wherein ſin was not puniſhed in ſome. The Lord gives a moral ſtop to ſin perpetually, that is, by his Laws he declares againſt it; his Word is expreſs againſt all ungodlineſs, both the Word of his Command, and the Word of his threatning. Now as the Lord doth alwayes put this moral ſtop in the way of ſin, ſo, he often puts a Judiciary ſtop, or a ſtop by way of Judgment. And as in Geneſis 3. he ſets a flaming Sword in the way of the Tree of Life; ſo he continually ſets a flaming Word, that is, a threatning to keep the way of the Tree of Death, that is, of ſin. Thus he alwayes meets ſinful men in the way of their luſts (as the Angel met Balaam when he went to curſe the Iſrael of God) with a drawn Sword to ſtop them in their way; the Lord hath ſet many drawn Swords in the way of every ſin; and he hath left the prints of his wrath upon the backs of many ſinners, that we ſhould take heed of ſinning. The Lord hath left many ſad examples upon record againſt ſin, nor hath he at any time favoured it, or done any thing which might indeed encourage ſinners; for though ſometimes wicked men have proſper'd, yet, ſhould we look into all times, we cannot find that wicked men were ever bleſſed; Judgment hath overtaken them ſooner or later. And if it hath at any time come too late to overtake them in this world, yet it will come ſoon enough to overtake theirs in this, or themſelves in the world which is to come. No man is bleſſed, at any time, who comes at laſt to be miſerable.

Thirdly, In that he ſaith, Haſt thou marked the old way?

Note, It is our duty to obſerve and mark, as the way of ſinful men, ſo the way in which God puniſheth their ſin.

All the wayes of God are to be marked; as we are to obſerve what the Lord ſpeaks, ſo what he doth; his Works as well as his Word are remarkable. Whoſo is wiſe (ſaith the Pſalmiſt, Pſal. 107. 43.) and will obſerve theſe things, even they ſhall underſtand the loving kindneſs of the Lord. I may ſay alſo, that they ſhall underſtand the judgments of the Lord. And again, the Prophet confirms it (Hoſ. 14. 9.) Who is wiſe, and he ſhall underſtand theſe things; prudent, and he ſhall know them: for the wayes of the Lord are right, and the juſt ſhall walk in them, but the tranſgreſſors ſhall fall therein. The wicked fall in the way of his commandments, and therefore ſurely they ſhall fall in the way of his judgment. And as the Lord hath given us Examples of this, ſo he hath given this as the uſe of thoſe Examples, that we ſhould mark and obſerve them. The Apoſtle (1 Cor. 10.) ſhews that all the dealings of God with that his ancient people the Jews, are written and recorded as our Examples (Verſ. 5, 6, 7.) With many of them God was not well pleaſed, but they were overthrown in the wilderneſs. Now theſe things were our examples, to the intent that we ſhould not luſt after evil things as they luſted, neither be Idolaters, as ſome of them were, nor fornicators, nor tempt Chriſt, nor murmur, &c. He ſhuts up all with the ſame doctrine (verſ. 11.) Now all theſe things happened unto them for enſamples, and are written for our admonition, upon whom the ends of the earth are come; therefore let him that ſtandeth take heed leaſt he fall. The Apoſtle Peter alſo (2 Pet. 2.) brings in; firſt, The inſtance of the Angels that fell; ſecondly, Of the old world; thirdly, Of Sodom and Gomorrah, Whom God condemned with an overthrow, making them an enſample unto thoſe that after ſhould live ungodly. The Scripture ſpeaks of two ſorts of Enſamples. Firſt, for Imitation; ſecondly, for Caution; the lapſed Angels, the old world, theſe Cities Sodom and Gomorrah, are all left as Enſamples for caution, that all after ages marking the old way of their ſin and puniſhment, might fear to ſin and ſuffer as they have done.

Fourthly, From the manner of this expreſſion (which wicked men have trodden) taking the way conjectively, for the way both of ſin and puniſhment, this troddenneſs of it notes the frequent paſſage which many have made through it. They have not gone it once only, but often.

Hence obſerve, As wicked men offend often, ſo the Lord hath puniſhed often; as they have made paths in ſin, ſo God hath made paths in judgement.

It is eaſie to follow ſinners (as it were) by the print and tract of thoſe evils which have overtaken them. But I paſs it here, becauſe Eliphaz proceeds more directly to deſcribe the puniſhment of wicked men in the next words.

Verſ. 16. Which were cut down out of time, and whoſe foundation was overflown with a flood.

חצין הספר

At this verſe the Original hath a very conſpicuous note of diſtinction. The Jews are very exact in obſerving the letters and the verſes of every book in the Bible, and between theſe two verſes is the middle of the book: there being exactly the ſame number of verſes behind as we have had before in this whole book of Job (taking verſ. 16. Incluſively) So that now we are half the book over according to the number of verſes. The whole containing One thouſand and ſeventy. The former part hath had Five hundred and thirty five, and as many remain for the latter part. This I touch only by the way.

קמט Pleriq; reddunt ſucciſi ſunt; ſed verbum hoc nunquam occurrit in ea ſignificatione in ſacris literis, ſed tantum apud doctores Hebræorum idq; per metatheſin literarum à verbo קמם Cum enim tantum occurrat in libro Job, ibi vertitur rugare aut corrugare aut rugas contrahere.

לא עת Sine tempore, vel non tempus, i. e. antequam explerent vitæ annos, ſecundam communem naturæ legem.

Which were cut down.] The words carry an alluſion to the felling of trees; as if he had ſaid, theſe men were like great Oaks and tall Cedars, but the Lord cut them down. The word is conceived more properly ſignifying to wrinkle, or to make furrows in the face; for this word is uſed but once more in all the Bible, and it is in Chap. 16. of this Book, verſ. 8. and there we tranſlate, wrinkles; Thou haſt filled me with wrinkles, which is againſt me. So ſome render it here, Who were wrinkled out of time. Now what are wrinkles? They are the marks of old age, and they ſhew that weakneſs is coming upon us, or that we are in our declining condition; ſo that it is a very Elegant expreſſion to ſay, They were wrinkled out of time, that is, they were old afore they were old; before they were old according to the nature of man, they were made old by the Judgements of God; they lookt as if they were worn, ſpent, and eaten out by time, whereas indeed they were ſpent, eaten and worn out with the wrath and indignation of God which fell upon them. Thus they were wrinkled out of time, or before their time.

They were cut down, and no time, as ſome render: but it may be ſaid, as Solomon did (Eccleſ. 3.1.) There is a time for every thing; how then could they be cut down in no time? There may be a twofold interpretation given of this Hebraiſm.

First, This, to ſhew that they died a violent not a natural death, that either God by his immediate Judgments did cut them off, or that he gave them up to the Juſtice of man, who cut them off before their time. Man hath a ſet time, an ordinary time of dying (the dayes of man are threeſcore years and ten, this is the ordinary time of dying) they that dye before, are in Scripture ſence, Cut down out of time, or not in time, that is, not in that time at which men uſually dye according to the courſe and cuſtom of nature.

לא עת Sine tempore verti poteſt, ſine mora.

Secondly, When 'tis ſaid, They were cut down without time, the meaning is, they were cut down very ſuddenly, as if it were done without any time at all; God was ſo far from lingring or taking up long time to deſtroy theſe men, that he cut them down (as it were) without any time at all, even in a moment, in an inſtant, as ſpeedily as a man can think it, far more ſpeedily then any man can do it. He did it without delay: As uſually the grace of God, ſo often the wrath of God makes no demurs.

Obſerve from the manner of Expreſſion, Cut down,

That, God brings ruining judgments on the ſtouteſt of ſinners.

He doth not only pull off ſome of their fruit, and leaves, or lop off their branches; but he cuts them down, yea he ſtubs them up by the roots, till there is nothing left, they are cut down root and branch. Thus the Lord threatned the houſe of Jeroboam (1 King. 14. 10.) Behold I will bring evil upon the houſe of Jeroboam, and will cut off from Jeroboam, him that piſſeth againſt the wall (that is, every man of his houſe) and him that is ſhut up and left in Iſrael (that is, him that is moſt eſteemed, as things ſhut up are; and him that is leaſt eſteemed, as things left abroad are; or thoſe who are ſecured or have ſecured themſelves in ſtrongeſt holds, as men ſhut up are, as well as thoſe who are left naked and expoſed to the eaſieſt dangers, as men left at large are) and will take away the remnant of the houſe of Jeroboam (that is, all who have eſcaped or ſurvived the former troubles) as a man taketh away dung till it be all gone; that is, till his houſe be utterly exterminated: for dung being a filthy and noyſom thing, men never leave taking it away, from places where it is an annoyance, till they have taken it all away. That which is offenſive in the whole nature of it, is offenſive in the leaſt degree of it.

Again, When 'tis ſaid, He cuts them down without time, or before their time, We may Obſerve,

Wicked men are often ripe for Judgment, before they are ripe in years.

Cum potuiſſent diutive perſiſtere. Tygur. Capti ſunt immaturi. Sept.

It is ſaid in Geneſis 15. The iniquity of the Amorites is not yet full, their ſin is not come to a full ſtature; for as there is a fulneſs of ſtature in holineſs unto which Saints at laſt arrive in Chriſt, ſo there is a fulneſs of ſtature in wickedneſs to which the Lord ſuffers ſinners to arrive; and as when Saints have attained their full ſtature in holineſs, they are received into glory; ſo when wicked men have attained a full ſtature in wickedneſs, they are cut off and turned down to deſtruction. Though the Lord ſuffer long, yet he will not alwayes ſuffer. And as ſome are but young men, yet old Saints, and have had much experience of God, and of the wayes of grace, though but little of the world (that diſtinction which the Apoſtle gives of Saints into little children, young men, and fathers (1 Joh. 2. 13, 14.) is not to be underſtood in reference to natural years, but to ſtanding in grace, or to a growth and progreſs in holineſs) ſo ſome wicked men, are but of few years, or but young in reference to their natural age, who yet are old in ſin, aged in wickedneſs, they are fathers in abomination, while but children in time, and ſo are cut down before time. Wicked men are never cut down till they are ripe in ſin, but they are often cut down before they are ripe in nature.

Thirdly, Which were cut down out of time; namely, in little time, or without delay.

Hence note, That, God can quickly make an end of wicked men.

He needs not take any long time to do it. He took but very little time to make the world, it was made in ſix dayes, which in reference to the greatneſs of the work is no time: when a great thing is done in a little time, we may ſay it was done without any time at all. Now if the Lord could frame a world without time, ſurely he can cut down the world, or the inhabitants of it in a little time? Ruining work is eaſier then building work. He that built (in this ſence) without time, can pull down without time; we need not trouble our ſelves with ſuch thoughts as theſe, when we ſee wicked men, enemies of God and his people in their height and ſtrength; O what a length of time will it require? O how many years muſt be ſpent in cutting down theſe ſtrong Oaks, thoſe tall Cedars? The Lord can cut them down in a moment. Our late experiences have ſhewed us wicked men cut down without time; before they thought they could be ſhaken, yea toucht, they have been cut down; when they concluded they could not be reached, they have been ruined. The Jeſuites and other Machavillian politicians have a received Maxim of State among them; Take time, and ye may do any thing. If you are diſappointed in a project this year, wait a few years longer (ſay they) and you ſhall either find or make a way to accompliſh it. But the Lord can do any thing he hath a mind to at any time, or without taking time. The Apoſtle propheſying of the Antichriſt ſaith (2 Theſ. 2. 6, 7.) Now ye know what withholdeth, that he may be revealed in his time; for the myſtery of iniquity doth already work, only he who now letteth will let, till he be taken out of the way. The power and ſplendor of the Roman Empire ſtood in Antichriſts way, and he could not cut it down without time; he was hacking and hewing, heaving and thruſting many years, yea ſome ages before he could remove that block out of his way, and ſo make a way for his own greatneſs. The wiſeſt of men muſt have time to bring about their ends. Only God, the only wiſe God, can cut down and remove whatſoever ſtands in his way (though it ſtand like a great mountain) without time or without taking time, if once his time be come in which he would have it removed. The wicked of thoſe elder times were cut down ſuddenly, without time. Eliphaz confirms it further in the next words,

Whoſe foundation was overflown with a flood.

In this latter clauſe Eliphaz ſeems more clearly to hint at ſome particular wicked men, or to ſhew who thoſe wicked men were that he intends as the object of his obſervation, namely, thoſe whoſe foundation was overflown with a flood. It is uſual in Scripture, by ſome one word to allude to great actions and changes paſt. Take two or three inſtances for illuſtration of this (Pſal. 55. 15.) David imprecates vengeance upon his enemies in this language; Let them go down quick into Hell. Which expreſſion carrieth a plain alluſion unto that dreadful judgment (Numb. 16. 31, 32.) It came to paſs as he (that is, Moſes) had made an end of ſpeaking all theſe words, the ground clave aſunder that was under them; and the earth opened her mouth and ſwallowed them up and their houſes, and all the men which ap- pertained unto Corah, and all their goods. They and all that appertained to them went down alive into the pit, &c. This hiſtorical Narration the Pſalmiſt hints at in his imprecation, as is plain by that word quick or alive; Let them go down quick (or alive) into Hell; that is, let ſuch wrath ſieze upon them, as ſiezed upon Corah, Dathan, and Abiram, on whom the Earth cloſed, and they periſhed from among the Congregation. Again, when the Apoſtle makes promiſe to Saints in the behalf of Chriſt, what aſſiſtance they might expect from him in time of temptation, and what iſſue from it, he thus aſſures them; The God of peace ſhall tread Satan under your feet ſhortly (Rom. 16. 20.) Which plainly bears upon that firſt grand Promiſe, that (Chriſt) the ſeed of the Woman ſhould break the Serpents head (Gen. 3. 15.) for it is by virtue of that act of Jeſus Chriſt bruiſing the head of Satan, that Satan is trodden under our feet. As Chriſt bruiſed him under his own feet, ſo he will bruiſe, or tread him under our feet; the ſeed of the woman in perſon, as well as in their repreſentative, ſhall break the Serpents head. Laſtly, thoſe words (Rom. 9. 16) hold a clear correſpondence with that ſtory (Gen. 27.) concerning Jacob and Eſau; So then it is not of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth, but of God that ſheweth mercy. He had ſaid before that God loved Jacob and hated Eſau; and concludes upon it, So then, it is not of him that willeth, &c. We may take notice in that famous piece of divine Hiſtory, that much means was uſed that Jacob might obtain the bleſſing; Rebecca her heart was ſet upon it, ſhe did what ſhe could to procure the bleſſing for her younger Son, her will was wholly in it; and Jacob, he run for it too; for as ſoon as ever his mother had given him counſel, he ran preſently to the flock and brought in a Kid to make the ſavoury meat for Iſaac; now the Apoſtle Paul to advance the freeneſs of grace, doth not only inſtance in thoſe two perſons; but uſeth a phraſe of ſpeech which ſavours ſo much of that paſſage, that though he had not named the men, yet every man who knew the Scriptures muſt needs underſtand both of whom and of what he meant it; It is not of him that willeth, &c. that is, it was neither Rebecka's will to have it ſo, nor Jacob's haſt (which appear'd in his running to the flock) to have it ſo, that gave him the bleſſing, but it was of God that ſhewed mercy. And as it was then, ſo it is now, though a man be as willing as Rebeckah, or though he make as much ſpeed as Jacob for his bleſſing, yet all comes freely by the grace of God. Thus the frequent uſage of Scripture ſhews us how much the Spirit of God delights to lead our thoughts (by the light of ſome one word) a great way back into the conſideration of what had been done and written of old for our inſtruction. The words of the Text now under diſcuſſion (Whoſe foundation was overflown with a flood) are ſurely an alluſion to ſome particular perſons or action in the dayes of old, and they may be applied three wayes.

Firſt, To the drowning of the whole world in the time of Noah by a flood, when the Lord opened the windows of Heaven, and overwhelmed both man and beaſt in thoſe mighty waters, which univerſal judgment is (by way of eminence) called, The Deluge, or, The Flood, unto this very day.

Secondly, They may have reſpect to the overthrow of Sodom and Gomorrah, which Cities, though they were deſtroyed by fire, yet it was with a flood of fire. The Text ſaith expreſly (Gen. 19. 24.) Then the Lord rained upon Sodom and upon Gomorrah brimſtone and fire from the Lord out of Heaven, and he overthrew the Cities and all the plain, &c. They were overflown with a flood of fire.

Thirdly, The alluſion may be carried to the deſtruction of Pharaoh and the Egyptians in the red Sea; they alſo were overflown with a flood. The waters of the red Sea which ſtood up as a wall for Iſrael to paſs thorough, at the Command of God returning upon the Ægyptians, ſwallowed them up, them and their Chariots and their Horſes. The enemy ſaid (thus Moſes deſcribes that fatal overthrow, Exod. 15. 9, 10.) I will purſue, I will overtake, I will divide the ſpoil: my luſt ſhall be ſatisfied upon them; I will draw my ſword, my hand ſhall deſtroy them. Thus the enemy raged and foamed with revenge, like a tempeſtuous Sea, and had opened all the ſluces of his will to overflow them. And when the enemy had thus breathed out his wrath in a four times repeated, I will; then the Lord did blow with his wind, the Sea covered them; They ſank as lead in the mighty waters. So then the words may relate to any of thoſe three ſignal Judgments, to the drowning of the old world with a flood of water, to the deſtruction of Sodom and Gomorrah with a flood of fire, or to the overthrow of Pharaoh and his Egyptian hoſt in the red Sea.

Hunc locum à v. 15. ad v. 20. omnino reſpicere ad dimerſionem Pharaones & Egyptiorum non levibus ſuadeor conjecturis. Pined.

But more particularly, for the explication of theſe words, whoſe foundation was overflown with a flood.

Whoſe foundation.] This word Foundation taken in a proper ſence, refers to a material building. And the foundation of any building is the ſtability and ſtrength of it; by Foundation, in a metaphorical ſence, we are to underſtand all thoſe things by which the ſtate of perſons or things is upheld; and here whatſoever wicked men ſupport and bear up themſelves by, as a building is born up by the foundation, is to be underſtood as their foundation. So their Power, their Riches, their Councel, their Wiſdom, their Friends and Confederates; whatſoever, I ſay, is the ſupport of their worldly State, that's their foundation. And thus it is here ſaid, their foundation was overflown,

Ea omnia quæ illis velut fundamenti loco erant, in quibus ſpē & præſidium ponebant, &c. Mere.

With a flood.] In two of the former inſtances, to which the alluſion was made, their foundation was overflown by a flood properly taken. If we take it more generally for all wicked men, who at any time have been overthrown, we may ſay, that they have all been overflown by a flood metaphorically. For ſo

Firſt, The diſpleaſure of God, by what means or inſtrument ſoever put forth is called a flood; whether it be by Sword, or by Famine, or by Peſtilence, it is a flood (Iſa. 8. 7.) We read War compared to a flood, Now therefore behold the Lord bringeth up upon them the waters of the river, ſtrong and many (what were theſe waters? Even the King of Aſſyria, and all his glory; the King of Aſſyria with his Armies, in which he gloried, or which he counted his glory, were the waters of the river, ſtrong and many) and he ſhall come up over all his channels, and go up over all his bands (that is, the former limits of his Dominion) And he ſhall paſs thorough Judah, he ſhall overflow and go over. There the Sword is compared to a flood, or to a mighty river, which bears down all before it. The ſame Prophet ſpeaks again in the ſame language (Iſa. 59. 19.) When the enemy ſhall come in like a flood, the Spirit of the Lord ſhall lift up a Standard againſt him; as if it had been ſaid, The enemy ſhall come ruſhing in like a mighty torrent; but the Spirit of God, like a more mighty wind, ſhall blow and ruſh upon him, cauſing him to recoile and give back, or (as our Margent hath it) put him to flight. Again (Ezek. 13.) The Prophet foreſhews the approaching calamity upon thoſe who had ſeduced the Jews into a vain ſecurity; which is there called, the building of a wall with untempered morter. A wall he calls that propheſie, becauſe it promiſed ſafety, and defence; but he calls it alſo a wall built with untempered morter, becauſe that falſe propheſie was a weak propheſie, and ſhould ſhortly fall. The manner how, he gives us in the motion of the Text (verſ. 13.) Wherefore thus ſaith the Lord God, I will even rent it with a ſtormy wind in my fury, and there ſhall be an overflowing ſhower in mine anger, &c. that is, wrath ſhall be upon it (the Babylonian Army was the ſpecial judgment in which that wrath was expreſſed) and that ſhall be an overflowing ſhower. Great and continual ſhowers will try the ſtrongeſt buildings, and quickly overthrow the weak. A wall of untempered morter is no match for a ſtorm. As our Saviour alſo aſſures us in the cloſe of his Sermon on the Mount (Mat. 7. 27.) where all thoſe evils, troubles, afflictions, ſorrows, and perſecutions, whether ſent upon ſuch as are really godly, or only in name and outward profeſſion, are called rain, floods, winds. So ſaith the Text, The rain deſcended, and the floods came, and the winds blew and beat upon the houſe, and it fell, and great was the fall of it. While it ſtood, it ſtood to no purpoſe but for a ſhew; but when it fell, it fell to purpoſe, The fall thereof was great. Thus it is more then evident from Scripture phraſe, that rains and floods ſignifie all ſorts of afflicting evils; and therefore we need not reſtrain the word flood in the Text to a deluge of Elementary water, or of water in a proper ſence, but we may enlarge it to any kind of afflicting evil or trouble whatſoever that falls upon man. And the Scripture is (I conceive) ſo frequent in the uſe of this metaphor of a flood, and of waters, where great calamities are ſet forth, for theſe two reaſons.

Firſt. To note the ſwiftneſs and ſuddenneſs of the judgements of God. Floods come often very ſuddenly, and riſe not only beyond expectation, but before there is any the leaſt expectation of them. Noah's flood was long foretold before it came; but when the time came, wherein it ſhould come, it came at once. Though God give long warning of his judgments, yet moſt men are ſurprized with them, they come like a flood.

Secondly, To note the irreſiſtibleneſs of the Judgments of God. Who or what can ſtand before mighty waters? Great floods do not only waſh and over-flow all, but ruine and overthrow all, there's no reſiſting. Such are the Judgements of God, they are a flood both for their ſuddain riſing and breaking in upon ſinners, and likewiſe for their irreſiſtible violence in breaking and ruining them.

Further, It is not to be paſſed by, that Eliphaz doth not only ſay, They were overflown, but, Their foundation was overflown with a flood. He calls it the overflowing of their foundation, to note, that they were totally or utterly ruined and overthrown: for when the foundation is deſtroyed, all is deſtroyed; deſtruction to the foundation is the worſt of deſtructions. The cruel enemies of the Jews cryed, Raſe it, raſe it even to the foundation thereof (Pſal. 137.7.) but to raſe the foundation it ſelf is more cruel then raſing to the foundation. When the Lord threatned a full and final deſtruction of thoſe fooliſh Prophets who had ſeen vain viſions for his people, he ſaid (Ezek. 13. 14.) I will break down the wall that ye have daubed with untempered morter, and bring it down to the ground, ſo that the foundation thereof ſhall be diſcovered, &c. that is, I will deſtroy it as far as deſtruction it ſelf can go. There ſhall not only not a ſtone be left upon a ſtone of this building above ground, but even the under-ground ſtones ſhall not be left: The very foundation ſhall be opened and diſcovered. That which lyeth at the bottom, or the bottom it ſelf of thoſe flattering propheſies, all the wiles and ſecret wayes of them ſhall be revealed. David complains of thoſe irreparable breaches made upon the civil ſtate in this ſtile (Pſal. 11.3.) If the foundations be deſtroyed, what can the righteous do? The civil foundation of a Nation or People, is their Laws, and Conſtitutions, the order and power that is among them, that's the foundation of a People; and when once this foundation is deſtroyed, what can the righteous do? What can the beſt, the wiſeſt in the world do in ſuch a caſe? What can any man do, if there be not a foundation of Government left among men? There is no help nor anſwer in ſuch a caſe, but that which follows in verſ. 4. of the ſame Pſalm; The Lord is in his holy Temple, the Lords throne is in heaven, his eyes behold, his eye lids try the children of men. As if he had ſaid, in the midſt of theſe confuſions, when as it is ſaid (Pſal 8. 5.) All the foundations of the earth are out of courſe; yet God keeps his courſe ſtill, he is where he was and as he was, without variableneſs or ſhadow of turning. We read in the viſion of the four Monarchies (Dan. 2. 34.) That the ſtone cut out without hands ſmote the Image upon his feet that were of Iron and Clay, and break them to pieces. The ſtone did not ſtrike the Image upon the head, or upon the breaſt, the golden head, the ſilver breaſt, &c. but upon the feet that were of Iron and Clay. Now the feet are to a natural body, as the foundation is to an Artificial body; a mans feet are the foundation of his body; if the feet be ſmitten and broken to pieces, the body muſt needs fall. And therefore as ſoon as ever it was ſaid, That the ſtone break the feet to pieces, the ruine of the whole Image is deſcribed in the immediately following words of the viſion (verſ. 35.) Then was the Iron, the Clay, the Braſs, the Silver, and the Gold broken to pieces together, and became like the chaff of the Summer threſhing floor, and the wind carried them away, that no place was found for them. The breaking of the feet, was the breaking up of the foundation, and ſo the breaking down of all. Whoſe foundation was overflown with a flood. Hence note, > Firſt, Wicked men think themſelves very ſure, they have foundations, they lay foundations.

The people of God are ſometimes over-conceited about the ſtrength and ſtability of their worldly foundations. Holy David ſaid, In his proſperity, I ſhall never be moved: Lord, by thy favour thou haſt made my mountain to ſtand ſtrong (Pſal. 30. 6, 7.) And if a godly man may, by the ſtrength of temptation, thus over-reckon the ſtrength of an Earthly ſtate; what may they do whoſe ſtate, yea whoſe minds are altogether earthly? How often do they judge themſelves wiſe and politick enough to lay for themſelves an everlaſting foundation in things which cannot laſt? And that they are ſo ſurely bottom'd in the favour of men, that they ſhall never be removed? Babylon thinks her ſelf ſetled at this day upon ſuch everlaſting mountains, upon ſuch perpetual hills of power and policy, that certainly her foundation ſhall never be overflown. Thus ſhe ſpake her heart out, while ſhe ſaid in her heart (Rev. 18. 7.) I ſit a Queen, and am no widdow, and ſhall ſee no ſorrow. Babylon is bottom'd and foundation'd upon ſo many hills, that is, upon ſo many intereſts and advantages of ſtrength, as render her (to her ſelf) impregnable and unremoveable. And as this vain confidence bears up the Spirit of that Man of ſin, ſo of very many ſinful men, who preſume they are upon a ſure foundation, when indeed none but the godly mans foundation is ſure (Prov. 10. 25.) As the whirlwind paſſeth, ſo is the wicked no more: but the righteous is an everlaſting foundation. The wicked man ſuppoſeth himſelf founded as on a Rock of ages, an everlaſting ſtrength, ſuch as the righteous man hath in God, or ſuch as God is to a righteous man (Iſa. 26. 3.) Yet as the whirlwind he paſſeth away, but the righteous is an everlaſting foundation. We find not the Copulative word, is, expreſſed in the Hebrew, there 'tis only, but the righteous an everlaſting foundation; ſo that I ſhould rather read it thus, But the righteous have an everlaſting foundation: wicked men ſeem to have, but the righteous man indeed hath an everlaſting foundation. There is no earthly foundation everlaſting; for all earthly things paſs away, and are ſo far from laſting for ever, that they laſt but (as it were) for a little, for a moment. What then is this everlaſting foundation? It is a foundation laid in heavenly things; the foundation which is laid in things above ſhall abide; the things which are not ſeen, and they only, are eternal (2 Cor. 4.18.) but the ſtrongeſt foundation laid in things below, endures but for a ſeaſon; The things which are ſeen, are temporal, as the Apoſtle ſpeaks in the ſame place. Such foundations are ſoon overflown with a flood. As will appear yet further in the next Obſervation; which take thus,

> The flood and ſtorm of Gods anger will overflow all the foundations, the ſtrongeſt foundations of wicked men.

Their Riches, their Power, their Wiſdom, their Councels, whatſoever they have imagined, laid and made for a foundation to themſelves, either of honour or ſafety, ſhall be overflown and ſwept quite away; yea all their refuges laid together will prove but a refuge of lies (Iſa. 28. 17.) Judgment alſo will I (ſaith the Lord) lay to the line, and righteouſneſs to the plummet; and the hail ſhall ſweep away the refuge of lyes, and the waters ſhall overflow the hiding place; that is, thoſe places wherein they thought to hide and ſecure themſelves againſt the overflowing ſcourge. A wicked man is in greateſt danger when he thinks himſelf in greateſt ſafety, and then moſt ready to fall when he ſaith in his own heart, or boaſteth it out to others, that he is upon a ſure foundation; for whatſoever opinion he hath of it, yet the truth is, his foundation is but ſand; and (which makes his caſe more miſerable) though he be told ſo, and others have found it ſo, yet he will not believe it. While (as the Prophet ſpeaks, Iſa. 44. 20.) He feedeth of aſhes, a deceived heart hath turned him aſide, that he cannot deliver his ſoul, nor ſay, is there not a lye, or (as the former Scripture hath it) a refuge of lies in my right hand. Only the righteous is, or hath (as Solomon ſpeaks) an everlaſting foundation. A righteous man hath two foundations which ſhall never be ſhaken, much leſs overthrown; whoſo are ſetled on thoſe foundations may be as confident as confidence it ſelf.

The firſt of theſe two foundations is Gods eternal Decree, his Decree of Election, that's an unmoveable foundation, and that is the foundation upon which believers build their hopes. The Apoſtle (2 Tim. 2. 19, 20.) is proving that even in the houſe of God, that is, among the outward profeſſors of the name of God, there are of all ſorts, veſſels of Gold and Silver, veſſels alſo of Wood and of Earth; Some to honour, and ſome to diſhonour; and when he had ſaid of Himeneus and Philetus, that they had erred concerning the truth, ſaying that the reſurrection is paſt already, ready, and ſo had overthrown the faith of ſome, verſ. 18. He preſently adds, What though it be thus, what though ſome men have fallen from their foundation, Yet the foundation of God ſtandeth ſure, having this Seal, The Lord knoweth who are his, verſ. 19. Where we have, firſt, the foundation of God, namely, his decree of Election: Secondly, the Seal or aſſurance of it, as to him, even his own certain knowledge of the Elect, The Lord knoweth who are his. So that while hypocrites or meer verbal formal profeſſors back-ſlide and Apoſtatize from the faith, yet the Elect are ſafe and ſtand faſt in the purpoſe of God; and while many diſcover themſelves to be veſſels of diſhonour in the houſe of God, Wood and Earth, of baſe and brittle materials; yet Saints, indeed, who are veſſels of honour made of pureſt metal, of Gold and Silver, theſe ſhall abide for ever. He that is once a veſſel of honour, ſhall alwayes be ſo, For the foundation of God ſtandeth ſure, having this Seal, The Lord knoweth who are his.

Secondly, As there is this more hidden foundation, upon which Saints are ſure, and which no flood can overflow; ſo there is another ſure foundation, and that is Jeſus Chriſt, upon which Saints are built; and therefore the holy Prophet having diſcovered that refuge of lies which he threatens ſhould be ſwept away by the overflowing ſcourge, ſubjoyns by way of Oppoſition in the next verſe (Iſa. 28.16.) Therefore thus ſaith the Lord God, Behold, I lay in Sion for a foundation, a ſtone, a tryed ſtone, a precious corner ſtone, a ſure foundation, and he that believeth ſhall not make haſt. Whom the Prophet means by this ſure foundation, the Apoſtle tells us expreſly and by name (1 Cor. 3.11.) Other foundation can no man lay then that which is laid, which is Jeſus Chriſt; and they that are built on him the living Rock (as all Believers are) have eternal life, and ſhall never periſh. This Chriſt himſelf teacheth us (Matth. 7. 24, 25.) Whoſoever heareth theſe ſayings (of mine) and doth them, I will liken him to a wiſe man that built his houſe upon a Rock. And what's the Rock that theſe wiſe men build upon? This Rock is Jeſus Chriſt, he is the Rock of Ages; he fails not, nor can they fail who are in him; as it followeth, Then the rain deſcended, the floods came, the winds blew and beat upon the houſe, and it fell not, for it was founded on a Rock. Saints are lively ſtones, and they coming to Chriſt (by faith) who is a living ſtone, diſallowed indeed of men, but choſen of God and precious, are built up a ſpiritual houſe (1 Pet. 2. 4, 5.) If this houſe ſhould fall, Chriſt muſt fall too, for though Chriſt and his houſe are diſtinguiſhed, yet they are not divided; Chriſt and his houſe are one: So then, though the flood of angry men, and of enraged Devils beat upon it, yet they ſhall return foaming out their own ſhame; and when they have done their worſt, they ſhall but waſh this houſe, leaving it ſomewhat more clean, but no whit unſetled. This is the glory and priviledge of Believers, that while the ſtrongeſt foundations of the earth are overflown with a flood, they have a twofold foundation; that of Election in the Love of God, and that of Redemption in the Blood of Chriſt, which cannot be overflown by any the moſt violent and impetuous flood.

So then, ungodly men are miſerable, when they appear moſt happy, and at their beſt eſtate are altogether vanity; for either their eſtate hath no foundation, or but ſuch a foundation as cannot ſtand, and that is as bad or rather worſe then none at all; it is better to have no appearance of ſtrength, then to have nothing but an appearance of it.

Further, may we not from the oppoſite ſtate of godly men (at leaſt intimated in this, and toucht before) conclude, that they are happy when they appear moſt miſerable? And that at their worſt eſtate, they are altogether above uncertainty? For as they have a foundation, ſo ſuch a foundation as will ſtand all ſtorms and weathers; what can be added to their felicity, who are in an eſtate ſo good (in the nature of it) that they need not deſire a change; and ſo ſure in the foundation of it, that they need not fear a change, much leſs an overflowing flood?

Eliphaz proceeds to deſcribe the particular wickedneſs of thoſe men, or how they did expreſs their wickedneſs; Whoſe foundation was thus overflown; They ſay unto God depart from us, &c.

VERS. 17, 18.

Which ſaid unto God, Depart from us, and what can the Almighty do for them?

Yet he filled their houſes with good things: but the counſel of the wicked is far from me.

IN the former context Eliphaz had charged Job with impiety againſt God, and called him to conſider the diſpenſations of God in former times towards impious men; here he ſhews us what their impiety was, it was impiety hightned into blaſphemy; the ſeveral abominations which were in their hearts, brake out at their lips, and were vomited out of their mouths in black coller, in coller as black as Hell.

Verſ. 17. Which ſaid unto God, Depart from us, &c.

Theſe words are filled with the very ſpirit of malice againſt God himſelf; and we have the ſame breathed out in the ſame language in the former Chapter at the fourteenth verſe: there the Reader may find them explicated, and I ſhall add ſomewhat for a further explication here.

Which ſaid to God, Depart from us.

To this height of madneſs do ſome wicked men ariſe; their ſpirits being big with ſin, they bring ſorth or belch out this monſter of words; They ſay to God, Depart from us. They (as it were) ſend God a Writ of Ejectment, they do not pray or entreat God to depart from them; but with as much rudeneſs and incivility, as unholineſs and prophaneneſs, Say unto God, Depart from us. 'Tis a word of command, from man, but ſuch a one as breaks all the commandments of God. Moſes (Numb. 16. 26.) beſeeches the people, ſaying, Depart I pray you from the tents of theſe wicked men, and touch nothing of theirs; but here we have wicked men not praying God to depart, but bidding him, they ſay, Depart from us. David ſpeaks to the wicked (Pſal. 119. 115.) Depart from me ye evil doers, for I will keep the Commandments of my God; he bids them begone, he would not give them the leaſt welcom or entertainment. And ſo Jeſus Chriſt is deſcribed ſpeaking to the wicked in the day of Judgment (Matth. 7. 23.) Depart from me, away, get you out of my preſence, I will not have to do with you, I will do nothing for you; Depart. His is a word of command, indeed, which though they have no will to obey, yet they ſhall obey it whether they will or no. Thus in the preſent Text wicked men preſume to ſay to God himſelf, Depart from us, &c.

Hence note, Firſt, That wicked or meer carnal men, have ſome appearances and impreſſes of the preſence of God upon their ſpirits.

They could not ſay to God, Depart from us, had they not ſome impreſſions and notions of God, of the will and Law of God, of the truth and power of God upon them. They who are alienated from the life of God through the ignorance that is in them, do yet feel a preſence of God with them (Act. 17. 27.) That they ſhould ſeek the Lord, if haply they might feel after him and find him, though he be not far from every one of us. Take mankind in general, good and bad, believers and infidels, there is a nearneſs of God unto them, unto them all: and that not only a nearneſs of God in what the Apoſtle there ſpeaks of, common preſervation (verſ. 28.) In him we live, and move, and have our being; or of natural communications, of which the Apoſtle ſpeaks there alſo, From him we receive life, and breath, and all things (verſ. 25.) But further, God is with them, by a twofold light; firſt, by a light of Direction; ſecondly, by a light of Conviction. All have a light of Direction, firſt, by the Law written in their hearts; the Apoſtle is expreſs for this (Rom. 2. 14.) For when the Gentiles (he means it of Gentiles unconverted) which have not the Law, do by nature the things contained in the Law; theſe having not the Law (that is formally publiſhed and preached to them) are a Law unto themſelves. Which ſhew the work of the Law written in their hearts, their conſcience alſo bearing witneſs, &c. And as all have a light of direction from the Law written in their hearts, or in the book of Conſcience; ſo alſo, ſecondly, they have a light of direction from the Law of the creation, or from that which is written of God in the Book of the creature. The ſame Apoſtle makes this the ground of the righteouſneſs of God in that dreadful Revelation of his wrath againſt all ungodlineſs and unrighteouſneſs of men (be they who they will) who hold the truth in unrighteouſneſs, becauſe that which may be known of God is manifeſted in them (or to them) for God hath ſhewed it to them. But how or where hath God ſhewed them this? The Apoſtle anſwers in the next verſe (Rom. 1. 20.) For the inviſible things of him from the creation of the world are clearly ſeen, being underſtood by the things that are made, even his eternal power and Godhead, ſo that they are without excuſe. So that though all men have not a light of direction from God ſo powerful as to change them and make them holy, yet they have a light ſo clear and full as is enough to make them guilty. And when they refuſe to follow this light of direction in doing what is right, then follows that other light of conviction, their conſciences troubling them (or as the Apoſtles phraſe is, Rom. 2. 15.) their thoughts accuſing them, becauſe they have done that which is not right. This preſence of God is common to all men, to the worſt of men, and this is it which provokes them to ſay to God, Depart from us. And this is argument enough to ſtop the mouth of the Atheiſt, who ſaith in his heart, there is no God; when as yet he cannot ſtop the mouth of his own conſcience from ſaying there is a God, while he ſaith (and this he alwayes ſaith, either in plain terms, or in that which is equivalent) to God, Depart from me. And from hence we may obſerve,

Secondly, That the preſence, and manifeſtations of God to wicked men, are a trouble to them.

None are troubled with the nearneſs of God to them, but they who are far from him; all natural men are far from God in ſtate and in heart, and God is near all natural men, either in his word or in his works, either ſpeaking his mind to their ears, or ſending it in to their conſciences. This light of God is not only not pleaſing but vexing. They who love darkneſs cannot abide the light of direction, much leſs the light of conviction; ſo that if ever God be near in their mouth, near in their ear, or near in their conſcience, yet as the Prophet ſpeaks (Jer. 12. 2.) He is far from the reins; that is, though they ſpeak, hear or think of God, yet they delight not in him, they have no deſirings, no breathings after him; yea the more he offers himſelf to them, the more weary are they of him. What David ſpake in a temptation, they ſpeak from their diſpoſition (Pſal. 73. 3.) I remembered God and was troubled. It troubles them when they are put in mind of God, it troubles them when God comes into their mind. God is holy, and they are unholy. The holy God muſt needs be a burden to an unholy heart. The Prophet puts the Queſtion (Amos 3. 3.) Can two walk together except they be agreed? they cannot. That company is alwayes unpleaſant to us, which is unſuitable to us; they who are not at one, are beſt pleaſed when they are furtheſt aſunder. The wayes of God are grievous to wicked men, much more is God himſelf; they ſay what a weariſomneſs is it to ſerve the Lord, they ſay his yoak is heavy, and his burden inſupportable; the very outſide of heavenly and ſpiritual work is burdenſom to them; how then can they maintain communion with God (in truth of ſpirit) who is a Spirit, and will be worſhipped in Spirit and in truth?

Thirdly note, Natural men are blind and fooliſh, they know not wherein their own happineſs doth conſiſt, they forſake and throw away the mercies offered them, for lying vanities.

They who are not taught of God are full of miſtaken and falſe principles, among which this is a principal one; They ſuppoſe they can do well enough without God, whereas indeed there is nothing can do us good without him, who is the chief good. Now, that the natural man believes he can do well enough without God, is plain from this abominable and hateful motion which ſuch make to God in the Text, Depart from us. No man would deſire God to depart from him, if this perſwaſion did abide upon his heart, That he could not ſubſiſt without him, or that he depended upon God for his ſubſiſtence. Therefore this is their opinion (though poſſibly they are as far from acknowledging it, as they are from the true knowledge and love of God.) That they can do well enough alone, that they can ſtand upon their own bottom without God, yea that they are ſelf-ſufficient, as God is; for whoſoever doth not ſee an emptineſs and inſufficiency in himſelf, and ſo place his All in God, makes himſelf a God. This is the way of wicked men, and this their way is their folly (as the Pſalmiſt ſpeaks, Pſal. 49. 13.) Though their poſterity approve their ſayings. Who but they? They can maintain their being, yea their well-being without God; they can live and live happily whether he will or no. Surely if they thought they were beholding to him, either for being or well-being, either for life, or a happy life, they had never been heard ſaying to God, Depart from us. And if this be a truth that they have ſaid ſo, and ſay ſo ſtill every day; we need not ſtay to prove this a truth, that they ſhew their blindneſs and fooliſhneſs in ſaying ſo. Is not he fooliſh who would have the Sun depart from him, which enlightens him? Or who would have the Shield depart from him, which protects him? Or who bids the fountain be gone which gives him drink? God is all this to all men in ſome degree or other, and he promiſeth himſelf ſuch in the higheſt and beſt degree to all ſuch as walk uprightly, even to be their Sun, their Shield, their Fountain, their Spring. Then, can folly it ſelf utter more fooliſhneſs then this, To ſay to God, Depart from us? Further, how fooliſh are they to refuſe that, as if it were a hurt to them, which Saints who have the true wiſdom, have prayed for; and ſtill do pray for, as the greateſt bleſſing and priviledge, The preſence of God with them? How fooliſh are they who ask and deſire that as a bleſſing, which God the only wiſe God threatens as the ſoreſt curſe? (Jer. 6. 8.) Be inſtructed, O Jeruſalem, leſt my ſoul depart from thee, leſt I make thee a Land deſolate, not inhabited. Utter deſolation is the conſequent, yea the effect of the Lords departure from a Land; and when he ceaſeth in regard of his favourable preſence to inhabit a Land, either none ſhall inhabit it, or none ſhall have a comfortable habitation in it. The Lord threatens this departure as the laſt and ſoreſt, or as the ſum of all his judgements; and wicked men deſire this, as if to be without God, were the chief or ſum of their enjoyments. See another inſtance of this folly, among all the threatnings of God againſt ſinful men, this is one of the greateſt, that he will take away his Goſpel, and the light of his Word from them; yet this a wicked man deſireth, let the Goſpel go, let the light of the Word go; he wiſheth it gone, 'tis but a trouble to him, he is ſick of it, it is a death to him. The beſt of good things is refuſed, and the worſt of evils choſen by thoſe that are evil. As their underſtanding is ſo blinded and diſtempered, that they call evil good, and good evil; that they put darkneſs for light, and light for darkneſs; that they put bitter for ſweet, and ſweet for bitter (Iſa. 5. 20.) So their will and affections are ſo perverted, that they chooſe and embrace darkneſs for light, evil for good, and that which is moſt bitter, for that which is ſweeter then the honey and the honey comb.

Fourthly obſerve, Wicked men are not only fooliſh, but wild and furious.

See at what a rate they ſpeak, even as if they had God at their command; They ſay to God, Depart; as if God could not be where he pleaſed, as if God were at their limitting, and diſpoſing. Here's madneſs, like madneſs it ſelf. As there is madneſs in the heart of man in the enjoyment of the creature (I ſaid of laughter it is madneſs, ſaith Solomon) Some are ſo over-acted with joy and laughter, in their creature-enjoyments, that whereas laughter is the proper paſſion of a rational creature, there is nothing more irrational then their laughter; 'tis plain down-right madneſs. Now (I ſay) as ſome carnal men are mad in their manner of enjoying the creature, ſo they are more mad, in refuſing the enjoyments of God the Creator. Who can tell how mad they are who deſire God to depart from them? They are mad to purpoſe who would put God from them, yet they more, who think they can.

Fifthly note, That the godly and the wicked have quite contrary both deſires and fears.

What are the deſires and fears of a wicked man? he deſires to have God depart, he is afraid of the preſence of God: what are the deſires of a godly man? he deſires nothing more then the preſence of God; he ſayes as Moſes (Exod. 33. 15.) If thy preſence go not with me, carry me no further; I deſire to be no where, but where God manifeſts himſelf to be; let me ſee the day of my departure out of the world, rather then the day of Gods departure from me in the world; let riches go, let liberty go, let friends and relations go, ſo God ſtay with me. All company is ſolitarineſs to me, all fulneſs is emptineſs to me, and the moſt populous City worſe then a deſolate wilderneſs to me, where I find not the preſence of God with me. I fear nothing like this, the departure of God from me. I read indeed (Luke 5. 8.) that Peter once ſaid to Chriſt, Depart from me, for I am a ſinful man, O Lord. But the reaſon was not becauſe he was weary of the preſence of Chriſt, but becauſe he thought himſelf altogether unworthy of the preſence of Chriſt. And therefore at another time when many of Chriſts Diſciples went back and walked no more with him; and hereupon Chriſt ſaid to the twelve, Will ye alſo go away? Then Simon Peter anſwered him, Lord to whom ſhall we go? thou haſt the words of Eternal Life (Joh.6.68.) He who would not go from Chriſt, could not indeed deſire that Chriſt ſhould go or depart from him. They who have taſted how gracious the Lord is, can never totally depart from God, nor can they at all bear it, that God ſhould depart from them. Thus the Church complains (*Jer.*14.9.) Why ſhouldeſt thou be as a ſtranger in the Land, and as a wayfaring man that turneth aſide to tarry for a night? Why ſhouldeſt thou be as a man aſtoniſhed, as a mighty man that cannot ſave? yet thou, O Lord, art in the midſt of us, and we are called by thy name, leave us not: Whatſoever thou doeſt to us, do not leave us; let any evil come, but do not thou go; let ſword come, let famine come, let plague come, but do not thou depart; leave us not. Thus the Saints cling about a departing God, while wicked men are willing he ſhould depart. And conſidering the opinion which theſe wicked men had of God, 'tis no wonder though they preſs him to depart; for what ſhould God do with them, if he can do nothing for them, or do them no good: Such was their apprehenſion of God, as appears in the next clauſe.

And what can the Almighty do for them?

They ſhould rather have ſaid, What cannot the Almighty do for them? If the queſtion be put, what the Almighty can do? The anſwer is at hand, he that is Almighty, can do any thing; yet theſe wretches ſay, What can the Almighty do for them? Almightineſs it ſelf is queſtioned as weakneſs, and omnipotency as impotency by unbelievers.

Et quid operabitur omnipotens? Heb.

From the general ſence of this Infidels queſtion.

First obſerve, That worldly wicked men have low, and ſlight thoughts of God.

It is ſaid of a wicked man (*Pſal.*10.4.) God is not in all his thoughts; that is, he is in none of his thoughts, or God is not at all in all his thoughts. But is any man ſo void of God, that God is not in all his thoughts? Can any man utterly extinguiſh or blot the thoughts of God out of his heart? Is not the notion of a God written with indelible Characters upon the heart of man by nature? If not, how is the Law written there by nature? I anſwer, wicked men have thoughts, and cannot but have thoughts of God. But, firſt, They like not to retain God in their thoughts, or (which is the ſame) in their knowledge (Rom. 1. 28.) Secondly, The thoughts which they have of God, are unworthy of God; while they think of God, they think below God, and ſo indeed their thoughts are not at all the thoughts of God. While we think of God otherwiſe then he is, and hath revealed himſelf to be, we do not think of the God that made us, but we make an Idol-god in our own thoughts. Now wicked men think either that God hath no ſtrength, power, goodneſs and wiſdom, or can do little with what he hath; What can the Almighty do for them? They who are afar off from God by unbelief, are not able to diſcern his power, his goodneſs, his wiſdom, his faithfulneſs, his All-ſufficiency: They neither underſtand what God affirms of himſelf, nor give credit to what he hath promiſed unto us. We ſay of thoſe things, which appear more then they are, that they affect more afar off then near at hand; but thoſe things which are more then they appear, affect more when they are nigh, then when they are afar off. God is infinitely more, then he appears; and he being near to thoſe who believe, affects them wonderfully: But God is far from unbelievers, and they are far off or in a ſtate of fartheſt diſtance from God, therefore they are not affected with him; but ſay, who is God? What is Gods power? What is his Almightineſs? We have heard much of him, but we ſee little in him. They look upon God, as if he were like the Idols (deſcribed, Pſal. 115. 4, 5, 6, 7.) Who have eyes, and ſee not; ears, and hear not; hands, and handle not, &c. All the attributes of God, that he is Almighty, Unchangeable, &c. are but a ſound of words or empty titles in their ears. A believer can make a living out of any attribute of God; for when the Scripture ſaith, he lives by faith, the meaning is, he lives upon the goodneſs, mercy and power of God, revealed in the promiſe, and laid hold on by faith. Thus the juſt live by faith upon God, but the wicked and unbelievers cannot live upon thoſe terms; they ſee little or nothing in God to make a living of, and therefore they ſay, What can the Almighty do for them?

Secondly note, That carnal men count the ſervice of God unprofitable.

What can God do for them? If they ſerve him, what profit is it? His is a lean ſervice, they ſhall but ſtarve themſelves by attending upon him, and undo themſelves by doing his work. Thus they ſaid in the former Chapter, and ſo they ſay again in this. The carnal man accounts nothing good, but that which is outwardly good: Who will ſhew us any good? (Pſal. 4. 6.) they know that all good cometh through the hand of God, that it cometh in at the door of the promiſe; they can look no further then they ſee, and therefore becauſe they ſee no profit, they look for none; they do not ſee that God doth any thing for them, and therefore they conclude he cannot: What can the Almighty do for them?

Thirdly note, That, The ſpirits of worldly men are meerly mercenary.

If they do any thing for God, or at the command of God, they do it only upon hopes of reward, they never obey commandments for the holineſs that is in them, but for the benefit that comes by them. What can the Almighty do for them? As when Judas betrayed Jeſus Chriſt, he went out with a mercenary ſpirit to do that wickedneſs; What will you give me, and I will betray him? So when a carnal man ſerves Jeſus Chriſt, he ſaith, What will he give me? What can he do for me? He cannot ſerve God for nought, that is, freely, as Satan charged Job in the beginning of this book; Job ſerveth thee, ſaid Satan, becauſe thou haſt done ſo much for him, becauſe thou haſt ſerved his turn, and made a hedge about him; this was Satans ſlander upon that good man; but 'tis no ſlander to ſay ſo of carnal men, Do they ſerve God for nought? They do not, they cannot; if they may gain by godlineſs, they will do ſomewhat, which ſhall have a ſhew of godlineſs; profit will make any thing paſs with, and pleaſing to a carnal mind, though in it ſelf it be never ſo diſpleaſing. Such is the nobleneſs of the people of God, that though there be a reward in ſerving of him; yet they are ready to ſerve him without reward, they can ſerve him upon a bare command, abſtract from promiſes and profit; they can obey God as a Creator, though he ſhould not be a rewarder. Godlineſs is profitable for all things, and hath the promiſe both of this life, and of that which is to come; yet a gracious heart loves godlineſs more then profitableneſs, and eyes the work of God more then his reward.

Further, for the opening of theſe words; ſome read thus, What can the Almighty do againſt them? The Hebrew particle ſtands indifferently to both, and may be tranſlated for, or againſt; in which ſence we find it in the thirty fifth of this Book, verſ. 6, 7. If thou ſinneſt what doſt thou againſt him? that is, what hurt doſt thou to God? Thy ſin cannot reach, or wound him, what doſt thou againſt him? Thus here, They ſay to the Almighty, depart from us, and what can the Almighty do againſt them? Surely the Almighty mighty is not able to hurt us; from him we expect no good, and from him we fear no evil. Were not theſe mighty men think you, who thought the Almighty could not match them? Theſe were mighty men indeed, Giants, ſons of Anak no doubt they were, but Giants in wickedneſs. And ſo this reading gives us a further character or diſcovery of a wicked mans Spirit.

Si peccaveris quid ei nocebis? proprie, quid ei facies?

Hence obſerve, Some wicked men have this preſumption, that let God do his worſt, he cannot hurt them.

I find in Scripture a threefold falſe and preſumptuous apprehenſion, which evil men have of God while they are doing evil.

Firſt, Some preſume that God will protect them from evil while they do evil (Mich. 3. 11.) The heads thereof judge for reward, and the Prieſts thereof teach for hire, and the Prophets thereof divine for money; yet will they lean upon the Lord, and ſay, Is not the Lord among us? none evil can come upon us. Theſe were ſuch as made it their buſineſs to break the Law of God, yet they thought God would not ſuffer any trouble to break in upon them.

Secondly, Others preſume that, at leaſt, God will not be ſo ſevere as to inflict thoſe evils which he hath threatned. The old world was threatned with a Deluge, but they could not believe that God would make good his Word, they even mockt at the credulity and ſimplicity of Noah, to ſee him build that great Ship or Ark upon the dry Land, as if he meant to ſail his veſſel without water: As for them, they neither believed nor feared a flood. So they (Iſa. 5. 19.) will put the Lord to a trial, Let him haſten his work that we may ſee it; let us ſee what he will do. As if they had ſaid to the Prophet, you told us what he would do, how ſevere he would be, what meaneth all your talk, we would ſee ſomething done. What will the Almighty do againſt us? Surely nothing, he is not ſo ſtrict as you make him. The Prophet deſcribes the worſt of men, the men ſetled on their lees, ſpeaking thus (Zeph. 1. 12.) They ſay in their heart, the Lord will not do good, neither will he do evil; that is, he will neither reward nor puniſh, he will neither help nor hurt. To ſay either of theſe is alike diſhonourable unto God; to ſay either, much more both (though indeed to ſay either is to ſay both) is to ſay, not only that God is neither to be loved nor feared, but that he is not at all. It is the glory of God to do the one as well as to do the other, and unleſs he could do both, he could do neither (Iſa. 45. 7.) I form the light, and create darkneſs (the darkneſs of trouble is of God as much as the light of comfort) I make peace and create evil; the evil of puniſhment is as much the creature of God as peace is, and God doth as much appear a Creator in the one as in the other; the doing of this kind of evil doth as much ſhew the power, and providence of God, as the doing of good; yet thoſe in the Prophet ſaid the Lord will do neither; He will neither do good, neither will he do evil.

Thirdly, Thoſe in the Text were raiſed to a higher pitch of preſumption then both the former; for they ſaid, what can the Almighty do againſt us? As if they had ſaid, let him do his worſt, we fear him not; to think that God will ſhield us from the evil which others threaten, or that he will not bring that evil upon us which himſelf hath threatned when we do evil, are very high actings of preſumption: But to think that God can do nothing againſt us, to think that the Arm of God is ſhorter then that it can reach us, or weaker then that it can over power us; to think that we have out-grown Divine Juſtice, and are too big or too ſtrong to be dealt with by the Almighty, is preſumption to madneſs; wo to thoſe ſinners who ſecure themſelves in the goodneſs of God to them; more wo to thoſe who ſecure themſelves in Gods neglect of them; but above all, wo is their portion who ſecure themſelves as it were in the weakneſs of God, even while in words they acknowledge his power, ſaying, What can the Almighty do againſt us?

Thirdly, Others read the words thus; They ſay to the Almighty, Depart from us, and what hath the Almighty done againſt them? That is, what hurt hath God done them? They are troubled at the preſence of God; but what cauſe hath God given them to be troubled at his preſence? And then we may connect theſe words with the words of verſ. 18. What hath God done againſt them? yea he filled their houſes with good things; that's all the dammage he did them? This is a fair ſence, and conſiſtent with the Original Text: leaving the Reader to his choice, I ſhall only give the obſervation which riſeth clearly from this.

God never giveth wicked men any juſt cauſe to be weary of him.

He never doth them any wrong, and he often gives them many a bleſſing, and have they any reaſon to bid him depart? He is uſually very patient towards them, and doth never bring any evil upon them till they have doubly deſerved it; and have they any reaſon to be diſpleaſed at that? Yea whenſoever he puniſheth them in this world, he puniſheth them leſs then their ſins deſerve; indeed there is a puniſhment behind adæquate and commenſurate to their ſin, but they ſhall never be puniſhed beyond what or more then their ſin deſerves. Seeing then their puniſhment in the next life, though it will be great beyond imagining, yet ſhall not be great beyond deſerving; and all their puniſhments in this life are leſs then the demerit of their ſin (As was penitentially confeſſed by Ezra in the name of the Jews after they had been broken by the ſword, and brought into captivity for their ſin, Chap. 9. 13. Seeing (I ſay) 'tis but thus with them when 'tis worſt with them) What hath the Almighty done againſt them? Is not all their deſtruction (meritoriouſly) from themſelves?

Again, How much ſoever God puniſheth them in this life, they have no reaſon to complain, or ſay to God, Depart from us: for even thoſe puniſhments are meſſages from God to awaken them out of their ſins, and ſo to prevent worſer puniſhments; therefore when God perceived that ſtubborn people going on in their ſins, he telleth them he will ſmite them no more, as implying that it was his favour to ſmite them (Iſa. 1. 5.) Why ſhould ye be ſmitten any more, ye will revolt more and more. Surely then ſuch have no reaſon to ſay to God, Depart from us, when he ſmites them, as if he did them either hurt or wrong, ſeeing he ſmites them, that they might return unto him; thoſe judgments of God are a mercy, which are ſent to teach man his duty. Now if the judgments of God have ſometime mercy in them, and never have any injury in them, what hurt or injury can there be to man in the ſervice of God? Hath the Almighty done any thing againſt them, whom he lovingly invites to the doing of his will? And yet ſome complain of wrong when they are only called to do what is right, and cry out as if God hurt them, when he doth but govern them. The Lord calls his murmuring people to account about this thing (Mich. 6. 3.) O my people, what have I done to thee (that is, what hurt, what wrong have I done unto thee) and wherein have I wearied thee, teſtifie againſt me; as if he had ſaid, thou haſt nothing to bring againſt me in evidence, unleſs it be my kindneſs, as it follows (verſ. 4.) For I brought thee up out of the Land of Egypt, and redeemed thee out of the houſe of ſervants, and I ſent before thee, Moſes, Aaron, and Miriam. O my people, remember, &c. Conſider all my dealings with thee, all the deliverances I have wrought for thee, all the Statutes and Ordinances, all the Laws and Commandments which I have given thee, and then let thy Conſcience ſpeak; what have I done unto thee, which is an evil to thee? Or wherein have I wearied thee, in the things which I have required thee to do? I have done many good works for thee, and I have commanded thee to do many works, ſuch works as are not only good in themſelves, but good for them who do them; for which of theſe is it that thou art weary of me? There is not that wicked man in the world but God may ſay to him, what have I done to thee, or what have I called thee to do, that thou ſhouldeſt be weary of me? That thou ſhouldeſt deſire me to depart from thee? Thus if we read the words in this latter ſence; What hath the Almighty done againſt them? They carry a reproof of their ingratitude againſt God, who had not hurt them, yea who had done them good. If we read the words in the ſecond ſence, What can the Almighty do againſt them? They carry a high contempt and ſlight of his power, as if God could do them no hurt. If we read the words in the firſt ſence according to our tranſlation (which I rather pitch upon) they carry (upon contrary terms) a like contempt of the power of God, as if he could do them no good; What can the Almighty do for them?

Verſ. 18. Yet he filled their houſes with good things.

The Hebrew is, And he filled their houſes with good things; we tranſlate yet, which better clears the meaning and ſcope of the Text, according to our reading of the former verſe; They ſay to God, depart from us, and what can the Almighty do for them? Yet he filled their houſes with good things; as if he had ſaid, they thought God could do nothing for them, whereas indeed he did all for them; all the good they had, they had it from God, He filled their houſes; that is, he gave them abundance; he did not only put ſome good things into their houſes, but he filled their houſes with good things, they had a plentiful eſtate; God gave them a rich portion in the good things of this world, his Corn, his Wine, his Oyl, his Flax. his Gold, his Silver, were their portion. He filled them, and they rebelled againſt him; he beſtowed many benefits upon them, which they abuſed to ſerve their luſts, and vainly triumphed in what he freely gave them, as if they had been ſpoils forcibly taken from him.

Horum quidem domos ipſe impleverat bonis. Jun. q. d. Dei benificiis abuſi ſunt turpiter & tanquam de ſpoliis Dei ipſius triumphaverunt. Jun.

Hence obſerve, Firſt, That God doth them good that are evil.

Chriſt perſwaded his hearers (and us in them) upon this account to love their enemies, That they and we might be the children of our father which is in Heaven; For he maketh his Sun to riſe on the evil and on the good, and ſendeth rain on the juſt, and on the unjuſt (Matth. 5. 45.) As God hath ſome peculiar people, ſo he hath ſome peculiar bleſſings, and good things, which the world in common ſhares not in; but he hath a ſort of bleſſings, and good things, which are the common ſhare of the world; Rain and Sun, Fat and Sweet, Gold and Silver are ſuch good things as their hearts and houſes are often filled with, whoſe hearts and houſes are empty of goodneſs. Theſe good things God gives them, who know no more why he gives them, then they did, why he did not ſuddenly bring evil upon them; of whom the Apoſtle ſpeaks (Rom. 2. 4.) Deſpiſeſt thou the riches of his goodneſs, and forbearance, and long-ſuffering, not knowing that the goodneſs of God leadeth thee to repentance? when God doth good to thoſe that are evil, whether it be by beſtowing good upon them, or by withholding evil, he doth it uſually for one of, or both theſe reaſons.

Firſt, That they might repent and live; knoweſt thou not what Meſſage the goodneſs of God brings? Speaks it not thus, Repent, repent? yea doth not divine goodneſs (taking thee by the hand) lead thee to repentance?

Secondly, The Lord doth them good who continue in the evil of ſin, that they might be left inexcuſable when the evil of wrath and puniſhment falls upon them; every mouth ſhall be ſtopped, and all the world of wicked ones become guilty before God, when they remember that they ſinned, and went on to ſin againſt the God that fed them, againſt the God that cloathed them, againſt the God that filled their houſes with good things, and protected them in the uſe and injoyment of thoſe good things, with which he had filled their houſes.

Secondly, In that he doth not only give them good things, but filled their houſes with good,

Obſerve, God giveth great portions of good things to wicked men.

They have not only enough to live upon, but they have enough to live comfortably upon; they have not only enough to live upon themſelves, but they have enough to lay up for their children after them; the Lord is not only good, but he is liberal and bountiful (in its kind) to the worſt of men: they whoſe hearts are ſhut to him, his hand is open to them; he is inlarged towards them who are ſtreightned towards him: And this is added not only to render the goodneſs of God more glorious, but the ſin of man more ſinful and odious in our eyes. Whence obſerve,

Thirdly, Sin hath by ſo much the greater evil in it, by how much it is committed againſt the greater goodneſs.

It is a horrible wickedneſs to ſay to God depart from us, though he empty our houſes of all good things; but it is much more horrible wickedneſs, to ſay ſo when he filleth our houſes with good things. What? When God hath filled our houſes, ſhall we kick him out of doors? This was the ſin of Jeſurun, that when he waxed fat kicked, as Moſes ſaith (Deut. 32. 15.) Thou art waxen fat, thou art grown thick, thou art covered with fatneſs; Then he forſook God that made him, and lightly eſteemed the rock of his ſalvation. Their ſin is great who lightly eſteem God while he makes them lean; but how ſinful is their ſin, who ſlight God that hath made them fat? As good things received, bind us ſtronger unto duty; ſo good things abuſed, bind us ſtronger under guilt.

Fourthly, As we connect theſe words with the latter branch of the former verſe; What can the Almighty do for them? Yet he filled their houſes with good things. We may take this Obſervation,

Though carnal men receive many good things from God, yet they know him not as the fountain of them.

They who are evil cannot own God purely, either in good or evil. It is but ſeldom that they ſay, with that wicked King, This evil is of the Lord (2 Kings 6. 33.) And it is ſeldomer that they ſay, This good is of the Lord. They ſay, what good doth God for us? Even while he filleth their houſes with good things. Indeed the beſt of Saints receive many good things from God which they know not of; they receive many ſecret mercies, ſecret I mean not only to others, but to themſelves; and ſo they are not able to give God the glory of them diſtinctly, becauſe they have not a diſtinct knowledge of them. But all the good things which the wicked have are to them of an unknown original. Though they know what they have, yet they know not from whence or from whom they have what they have; they know not who feeds them, who cloaths them, who provides for them: yea though they make many formal acknowledgments of this, and will tell you of Gods goodneſs to them; yet really they know it not, nor do they cordially acknowledge it. The Lord complains of his people about this (Iſa. 1. 3.) The Ox knoweth his owner, and the Aſs his Maſters crib (he upbraids them not only as below other men, but as below the beaſts, as if the reaſonleſs creature had acted more rationally then they) but Iſrael doth not know, my people do not conſider: What was it they did not know, nor conſider? They knew not nor conſidered what the Ox and the Aſſe knew and conſidered; The Ox knoweth his owner, he knoweth that his Maſter feeds him, as well as works him. Thus alſo the Aſs knoweth his Maſters crib; as he knoweth that his Maſter imployeth him, ſo he knoweth that his Maſter provideth for him. The dull Aſs takes notice of the crib, and knows where and by whom he receiveth good; but ye my people know not me, ye do not conſider him that feeds you; For I have nouriſhed and brought up children, and they have rebelled againſt me, they never honoured me as the fountain and founder of their felicity. The Prophet Hoſea reproves the ſame ſottiſhneſs and blindneſs in that people (Chap. 2. 8, 9.) For ſhe did not know that I gave her Corn, and Wine, and Oyl, and multiplied her Silver and Gold, which they prepared for Baal. Therefore I will return and take away her corn in the time thereof. As if the Lord had ſaid, I will make them know that I can take theſe things away, ſeeing they would not know, or at leaſt not acknowledge that I am he who gave them. Carnal men attribute their good things, and the filling of their houſes with them to any thing rather then to God: they thank their friends or their good fortune; they thank themſelves, their policy, their induſtry, for what they have; they aſcend not up to God in thankfulneſs for what they have: they who ſay, What can the Almighty do for them? How ſhould they acknowledge, that the Almighty hath done any thing for them? The Prophet (Hab. 1. 16.) ſpeaks of men whoſe portion was fat, and their meat plenteous; but to whom did they refer all this? Whom did they acknowledge for their benefactor, or as the cauſe of thoſe great ſucceſſes? The Prophet tells us, They ſacrificed to their nets, and burnt incenſe to their drags. The words carry an alluſion to fiſhing, in which Work or Art, nets and drags are the inſtruments of the fiſher-man; ſo that to ſacrifice to the net or to the drag, is to give the honour and thanks of all our attainments to ſecond cauſes, and creature helps, to our own wit, power, and induſtry, &c. To theſe ſaith the Prophet they ſacrificed, that is, they honoured them in the place or ſtead of God: Sacrifice is proper and peculiar to God, and therefore he that offers ſacrifice to any thing, makes it his god, or puts it in the place of God; they who thank themſelves for the good they have, are a god to themſelves. And thus we find the Aſſyrian aſcribing all to his own power (Iſa. 10. 14.) By the ſtrength of my hand I have done it, and by my wiſdom, for I am prudent; and I have removed the bounds of the people, and have robbed their treaſures, and I have put down the Inhabitants like a valiant man; he did not think that the Lord did it by his hand, but (ſaith he) by the ſtrength of my hand I have done it: my right hand is my God, my wiſdom is my god. Theſe, theſe, have removed the bounds of the people, and have robbed their treaſures. See how the Lord checks this inſolency (verſ. 15.) Shall the ax boaſt it ſelf againſt him that heweth therewith? Or ſhall the ſaw magnifie it ſelf againſt him that ſhaketh it? Men (I grant) are living inſtruments, yet they can do no more then inſtruments without life (the ax and the ſaw) unleſs God act them, or act by them. An ax or a ſaw can do as much without man, as man can do without God; yet vain proud man is as full of boaſting as if he could do, or had done all alone.

Dextera mihi Deus. Virg. l. 10. Sanct.

Fifthly obſerve, That the portion of wicked men lyeth all on this ſide Heaven, and heavenly things.

God filleth their houſes with good things, but they are the good things of this life; they have nothing that reacheth to eternal life. They have nothing that concerns pardon of ſin, or grace, much leſs have they glory for their portion (Act. 14. 16, 17.) God did not leave himſelf without witneſs (among the Heathen Nations) in that he did good, and gave rain from Heaven, and fruitful ſeaſons, filling their hearts with food and gladneſs; ſo much they received from God, as filled them with food for their bodies, and made their lives comfortable; but no more, that was all they had. As Abraham in the parable tells the rich man in Hell (Luke 16.25.) Son, remember that thou in thy life time haſt had thy good things. And what were the good things which he formerly had? We have an anſwer at verſ. 19. He was cloathed in purple and fine linnen, and fared deliciouſly every day. As the Pſalmiſt is expreſs (Pſal. 17. 14.) that the men of this world have their portion in this life, ſo, his purpoſe is to ſhew, that they have their portion in the things of this life; for he adds, Whoſe bellies thou filleſt with thy hid treaſures, that is, with thoſe treaſures of corn, wine, and oyl, which are virtually hidden in the Earth, and brought forth by the Earth. God fills the bellies of the wicked, but he fills the Spirits of the godly; he fills the former with the hidden treaſures of the Earth, he fills none but the latter with the hidden treaſures of Heaven.

Laſtly note, That the gifts of God even in temporal things are free and undeſerved.

Not only are ſpiritual gifts and graces, together with eternal life undeſerved, but even temporals, and the things of this life. The Lord gives them unto his enemies, to thoſe that ſay to him, depart from us; and what do theſe deſerve at his hands, but ſtripes and death? He gave Chriſt to us while we were moſt unworthy of him; when we were yet enemies Chriſt died for us; ſinners do no more deſerve bread then they deſerve Chriſt; we no more deſerve the comforts of this life then eternal life; the one is of free grace to the elect, and the other is of bounty and goodneſs to the wicked. The old Egyptians (as ſome writers report them) were careful to confeſs the undeſervedneſs of thoſe outward favours, the plenty and abundance of corn and cattel, with which Egypt was ſtored; in teſtification whereof they every year brought into the Temple of their Idol Serapis, a meaſure ſhewing how high the river Nilus roſe and overflowed its banks (for Egypt being a flat Country, is watred by the overflowings of Nilus) and by the riſing of thoſe waters they could (very probably) prognoſticate the plenty or ſcarcity of the year enſuing. And they therefore took an exact account how many cubits high the river ſwell'd, leaving it in the Temple of Serapis, thereby acknowledging (as ſome conceive) that their Idol god was the beſtower of all that plenty, or (as Eliphaz here ſpeaks) that he had filled their houſes with good things.

Quoniam moris erat in Egypto, ut menſura aſcendentis Nili fluminis ad templum Serapidis deferretur, velut ad incrementi aquarum & inundationis auctorē ſubverſo ejus ſimulachro, ulna ipſa id eſt aquæ menſura, ad aquarum dominū cœpta eſt in Eccleſias deferri. Caſſiod. l. 2. ad Euſeb. Hiſt.

But the Counſel of the wicked is far from me.

We had theſe words before (Chap. 21. 16.) Job made uſe of them there, and here Eliphaz, therefore I ſhall add but little for explication in this place. In general know, they are a proverbial ſpeech, by which the abhorrence of our ſpirits concerning either things or perſons is ſet forth to the utmoſt; as when we ſay to any man, be gone, depart from me, or as Chriſt to Satan, Get thee behind me, we ſhew our vehement deteſtation of his perſon. So when a man ſaith, ſuch or ſuch a thing is far from me, his meaning is, he utterly deteſts it, or that the thing is the very abomination of his ſoul. Therefore while Eliphaz ſaith, The counſel of the wicked is far from me, it is, as if he had ſaid, I cannot indure to have any thing to do either with the wicked, or with their counſel; O my ſoul come not thou into their ſecret, unto their aſſembly; O mine honour be not thou united (as dying Jacob beſpake his ſons Simeon and Levi, Gen. 49. 6.)

Puto Vulgarem eſſe dicendi modum, quo homines aliquid execrantur & à ſe arceri longiſſime jubent; Qualia ſunt, apage, avertat Deus. Pined.

But what is the counſel of the wicked? Their counſel may be taken, firſt, for that diſhonourable opinion which they held of God, that he could do nothing either for them or againſt them. I (ſaith Eliphaz) am of another mind, of another faith and perſwaſion. Their counſel is far from me who either deny the providence of God, or think they can hide themſelves from the eye of his providence; I believe that his eye beholdeth all, and that his hand worketh whatſoever pleaſeth him.

Secondly, Others by Counſel underſtand the ſcope of wicked men; ſo Calvin reads, the intent of the wicked is far from me; I have other purpoſes and deſigns then they have; The plowing of the wicked (ſaith Solomon, Prov. 21. 4.) is ſin; that is, the ſtirring and plotting of his mind to get his deſires ſatisfied is ſinful; I deſire not (ſaith Eliphaz) to put my hand to their plow. The counſel of the wicked is far from me.

Thirdly, As the deſign and plot, ſo the courſe and way of the wicked is far from me. The counſel of a man is put for the means by which he acteth his deſigns, as well as for the method in which he layeth them. We ſhall not wrong the drift of the Text in which ſoever of theſe three ſences we underſtand this proteſtation, The counſel of the wicked is far from me.

Again, There is a threefold difference about the reading and relation of theſe words, which put together will give us yet a further light and underſtanding about them.

Firſt, The Septuagint read thus, The counſel of the wicked is far from him; and the antecedent, to him (according to their ſence) is God himſelf. As if Eliphaz had ſaid, the counſels and reſolutions which the wicked take up, God cannot abide, they are far from him. His are holy, theirs are unholy counſels.

Quæ conſilia illi ineunt longe ſunt à Deo.

Secondly, Others apprehend, that Eliphaz ſpake thus in the perſon of Job, and only reaſſumed what he had ſaid (Chap. 21. 16.) O this is the man that ſaid even now the counſel of the wicked is far from me: Pray conſider, this is the man that profeſſed he would not ſo much as come near a wicked man, he would have nothing to do with their counſels, not he; he would be taken for a man of another ſpirit, of another frame then they; but ſee what he is, ſee how he joyns with them, how he walks in their wayes, how he follows their counſels; though he denies them with his lips, and makes ſtrange as if he knew them not, yet indeed he is of the ſame piece and ſpirit with them: and while he ſaith, the counſel of the wicked is far from me (behold his hypocriſie) the counſel of the wicked lieth in his boſom, and is embraced by him.

Quaſi Job ore tenus non reipſa impiorum conſilium improbaret. q.d. Num poteris dicere, te non ſentire cum improbis, cū tu, ut ipſi providentiā Dei tollas.

Thirdly, Which is more plain and clear, we may expound theſe words not only as ſpoken by Eliphaz, but as therein ſpeaking of himſelf; The counſel of the wicked is far from me; that is, I am a man of another ſtrain, of another grain then they, I am a man of another mould and make then they. Therefore O Job, what you ſpake before I ſpeak again, and I ſpeak it upon better grounds, with a better heart then you; you ſpake with your lips, or from the teeth outward, that the counſel of the wicked is far from you; but I have proved that you approach too near them both in courſe and counſel; I ſay, what you ſaid, but I ſay it (which you did not) in ſincerity; I profeſs, and what I profeſs is true, that the counſel of the wicked is far from me. The ſame truth may be profeſſed by different perſons, upon different grounds, and to different ends: the ſame premiſes

Hæc ſunt ipſius Eliphaſi verba, quibus ſeipſum commendat; ut qui potiori jure quam Job, & multo verius poſſit aſſerere ſe toto cœlo ab impiorum ſententia diſcedere. Jun. Piſc.

do

Eliphaz vult ex uno cum Jobo principio iiſdemq; præmiſſis contrariam elicere concluſionem. Bold.

do not alwayes yield the ſame concluſions in the minds of men, though in themſelves they do. Eliphaz thought his counſel as far from Job's, as Job had profeſſed himſelf to be from the counſel of the wicked. When Job ſaid, The counſel of the wicked is far from me; his purpoſe was to ſhew, that though he was afflicted while many wicked men were proſpered, that yet he was not at all ſpirited or principl'd like wicked men: And that therefore his friends aſſertion muſt needs be falſe, who numbred him with the wicked becauſe he was afflicted. Eliphaz ſeems to retort this upon Job, and to ſay, if this be ſo, as thou affirmeſt, ſurely then God hath laid aſide the care of this world, and let all things run at ſix and ſevens; for ſurely if he took notice of men, either what they were, or what they were doing; he would never ſuffer the wicked to proſper, no nor to eſcape unpuniſhed. And ſeeing thou continueſt ſo ſtiff in thy opinion, that thou doſt not ſuffer theſe grievous calamities for thy ſin, thou ſeemeſt to me plainly to comply with their blaſphemy, who query, How doth God know? Can he judge through the dark cloud? This counſel of the wicked is far from me. And ſeeing as Job before, ſo Eliphaz here aſcribes counſel (which is the moſt deliberate act) to the wicked,

We may Obſerve, Firſt, That wicked men ſin adviſedly; or, that many of their ſinful wayes, are ſtudied wayes.

And as the more ſtudied they are, the more ſinful they are; ſo they ſtudy moſt for thoſe which are moſt ſinful. They are not hurried into ſin by paſſions, or thruſt on upon ſin meerly by the violence of temptation: They ſit down and go to counſel how they may compaſs their ungodly purpoſes. A godly man doth not conſent unto ſin, much leſs doth he conſult about it; The evil which I do I allow not: I (ſaith the Apoſtle) conſent to the law of God that it is good (Rom. 7.) A godly man ſins dayly, but ſin hath not his conſent or allowance when he hath done it, much leſs doth he conſult or adviſe how to do it. Sin doth not pleaſe him conſequently, much leſs doth he project it antecedently. 'Tis the character of a wicked man, that his ſin is his counſel, and that his art is in it as much as his nature: The counſel of the wicked is far from me.

Secondly, Eliphaz doth not ſay how far the counſel of the wicked was from him, but that it was far from him, and by far, he means furtheſt; as if he had ſaid, it is as far from me as far may be, I have no compliance with their counſels.

Hence obſerve, That the ſpirit and way of the godly and the wicked are as different as their end and concluſion ſhall be.

They are at furtheſt diſtance; they are like two parallel lines, which how far ſoever they run together, they never meet together, nor touch in a point. The concluſion of a wicked man or his end is far from that of the upright: the end of the one is light, the end of the other is darkneſs; the one ends in ſorrow, the other in joy; the end of the one is peace, of the other trouble. And ſo the way of the one is ſin, the way of the other is holineſs; the way of the one is oppreſſion and covetouſneſs, the way of the other is juſtice and righteouſneſs; the way of the one is faith, the way of the other is unbelief. Now as darkneſs and light, joy and ſorrow, peace and trouble, can never comply or be united; ſo neither can ſin and holineſs, oppreſſion and juſtice, faith and unbelief. There's no communion between theſe contraries, between theſe wayes and ends, counſels and concluſions. And unleſs we keep far from the counſels of the wicked, we cannot go far from their concluſion; nor can we avoid their end, but by avoiding their way. The ſame way brings the ſame end, whether we reſpect good or evil. And hence it is that the Spirit of God by Solomon gives ſuch a vehement admonition, to beware of the way of wicked men (Prov. 4. 14, 15.) Enter not into the path of the wicked, and go not in the way of evil men; avoid it, paſs not by it, turn from it, and paſs away. As in the former context, he as a careful Father, had preſſed his Son to the cloſeſt purſuit of wiſdoms way; ſo here, he as earneſtly preſſeth him to depart from the path of wickedneſs; he would have his Son not only not go into it; but not ſo much as paſs by it, that is, not go near it; as the next words intimate, turn from it, as if he had ſaid, keep at a diſtance, keep aloof off, do not ſtay ſo long within ſight of it as to look upon it; that's his laſt counſel, paſs away, not to return or come near it any more. And while we conſider whither that way leads, we ſhall eaſily grant that when all is ſaid, little enough is ſaid to lead us away from it. Where the way is ſin, the wages is death. Therefore let him who deſires to avoid the concluſion of the wicked, ſay, The counſel of the wicked is far from me.

VERS. 19, 20.

The righteous ſee it, and are glad, and the innocent laugh them to ſcorn.

Whereas our ſubſtance is not cut down; but the remnant of them the fire conſumeth.

Eliphaz ſtill purſues the ruine and extirpation of wicked men; he ſhewed us before the ſinfulneſs of their practices towards man, and the folly of their opinion, in ſaying to God depart from us; who had never hurt them, nor given them any cauſe to be weary of his preſence, unleſs this diſpleaſed them, that he filled their houſes with good things. And becauſe they declared themſelves thus vain, therefore Eliphaz rejected both them and their way, The counſel of the wicked is far from me. Now, in this verſe he acquaints us with the event or iſſue of their counſels, and how the righteous carry themſelves, when God calls the wicked to an account, and reckons with them for their prophaneneſs and irreligion.

Verſ. 19. The righteous ſee it, and are glad.

Who the righteous man is, and what denominates a man righteous, hath been ſhewed before. The righteous ſee it, what do they ſee? That which they believed and looked for; the fall of wicked men. The act of ſeeing may be referr'd either to the perſon ſeeing, or to the object ſeen: as 'tis referr'd to the perſon of the righteous, ſo ſeeing notes both their priviledge and their pleaſure. They are admitted to ſee this ſpectacle of divine Juſtice, and it is their happineſs to ſee it. This David intimates (Pſal. 37. 34.) Wait on the Lord, and keep his way, and he ſhall exalt thee to inherit the Land: when the wicked are cut off thou ſhalt ſee it. The righteous ſhall be honoured with this ſight, yea and pleaſed with it, the cutting off of wicked men by the hand of God. The righteous man hath a promiſe to ſee this (and promiſes are the conveyances of mercies (Pſal. 91. 8.) A thouſand ſhall fall at thy ſide, and ten thouſand at thy right hand, but it ſhall not come nigh thee, only with thine eyes ſhalt thou behold and ſee the reward of the wicked. Thou ſhalt be a ſpectator, not a partaker in that calamity. Wicked men ſometimes glut their eyes with beholding the troubles of the Saints, and they account it a happy day, when they can have ſuch a ſight. They ſign that day with a white ſtone, when the black ſtone of the moſt unjuſt and cruel condemnation proves the preſent lot of the righteous. David diſcovered ſuch a ſpirit in his enemies (Pſal. 35. 21.) They opened their mouth wide againſt me, and ſaid, aha, aha, our eyes have ſeen it. What had they ſeen? The former verſe tells us, They ſpeak not peace, but they deviſe deceitful matters againſt them that are quiet in the Land. When theſe deviſes took, and had ſucceſs, then they were pleaſed, then they had what they would, and ſaw what they deſired. And thus the enemies of the Church are deſcribed (Mich. 4. 11.) Now alſo many Nations are gathered againſt thee, and ſay, let her be defiled, (there is a twofold defiling, a defiling with ſin, and a defiling with blood and miſery, the latter is meant by the Prophet, let her be defiled) and let our eyes look upon Sion. They counted it a bleſſed ſight to ſee Sion bleed; the wicked would have ſuch ſights often, though uſually their eyes fail with waiting, and their hope is as the giving up of the ghoſt; but righteous men ſhall ſee (the righteous God hath ſaid it) vengeance poured upon the wicked.

Voluptatem importat hujuſmodi aſpectus.

Again, we may expound this act of ſeeing with reference to the object ſeen: and ſo it imports two things, firſt, the certainty of their fall: wicked men ſhall undoubtedly be deſtroyed, and there ſhall be eye witneſſes, honeſt and faithful witneſſes, teſtifying their deſtruction; The righteous ſhall ſee it, and report it to after generations.

Secondly, As ſeeing notes the certainty of their fall, or the evidence and clearneſs of it, ſo the publickneſs of it; that which is done to the eye, is done openly. What the juſtice of God doth againſt the wicked ſhall not be done in a corner, but as upon the houſe top. The reading of the Septuagint is full to this ſence; They ſhall be made publick examples. It is the care of juſt and wiſe Magiſtrates, not only to puniſh malefactors, but to puniſh them openly, that ſo all may ſee and fear and do no more preſumptuouſly. There are three ſpecial reaſons why offences are puniſhed; and the Greeks expreſs each puniſhment by ſuch a word as carrieth a diſtinct ſignification of thoſe reaſons. First, Some are puniſhed, that themſelves may amend and better their manners; this they called νουθέτησις. Secondly, Others are puniſhed, to repair the honour or maintain the dignity of thoſe againſt whom they have offended, leſt if ſuch ſhould eſcape without condigne puniſhment, authority ſhould be contemned, grow cheap, or be lightly valued; this they called τιμωρία. A third ſort were puniſhed for example, that others might be deterred from doing the ſame things, leſt they alſo incur the ſame ſufferings; this was called παράδειγμα. As much as to ſay, the holding of a man forth in his ſufferings to the open view, that he may be ſeen of all men, and that all may be warned to avoid his error. And thus the Lord who is the righteous Judge of all the world puniſheth wicked men. The ſame word is uſed by the Evangeliſt Matthew (Chap. 1. 19.) Joſeph being troubled that Mary was with child (for he knew not the myſtery of her over-ſhadowing by the Holy Ghoſt, was minded to put her away ſecretly, and would not make her a publick example; he was unwilling to bring her to juſtice, or that others ſhould ſee either her (ſuppoſed) ſin or puniſhment. But as God doth work many glorious ſalvations for his people, that the wicked may ſee it, and be aſhamed; ſo he brings many viſible deſtructions upon the wicked, not only that the righteous may ſee it and rejoyce, or be glad (which act follows next to be opened) but that the wicked may ſee it, and tremble to do wickedly.

παραδειγμάτισον. Denotat rem omnibus conſpicuam & in publicum exemplum propoſitam. Sept.

1 νουθέτησις 2 τιμωρία. 3 παράδειγμα. Acerbitas ulciſcendi maleficii, bene atq; caute vivendi diſciplina eſt. Cæcilius apud Gel. l. 2. c. 1.

Hence obſerve, First, That the Lord ſets up wicked men many times as examples of his wrathful juſtice.

Not only do they feel wrath upon themſelves, but others ſee it; the Lord ſometimes chaſtens his own people in the view of the world, and ſets them up as examples of his fatherly diſpleaſure. Thus Nathan ſpeaks in the name of the Lord to David (2 Sam. 12. 12.) Thou didſt it ſecretly, but I will do this thing (what thing? I will afflict and chaſten thee for this great offence) before all Iſrael, and before the Sun; that is, in plain and clear light: Though thou haſt done this evil in the darkneſs of many cloſe contrivances, yet I will draw the curtain, and make the penal effects of thy ſin as conſpicuous as the actings of thy ſin have been cloſe and covert. Again (Numb. 25. 4.) when the people began to commit whoredom with the daughters of Moab, and Iſrael had joyned himſelf unto Baal-peor, ſo that the anger of the Lord was kindled againſt Iſrael; Then the Lord ſaid to Moſes, take all the heads of the people (that is, the capital offenders, or chief rulers, who gave way, or at beſt gave no ſtop to ſuch wickedneſs) and hang them up before the Lord againſt the Sun, that the fierce anger of the Lord may be turned away from Iſrael. To hang them up before the Sun, is a phraſe of ſpeech importing the publickneſs of their puniſhment (as it is ſaid of the ſeven Sons of Saul, that they were hanged on the hill before the Lord, 2 Sam. 21. 9.) for caution unto all; whatſoever is done in the ſight of all, or ſo that all may ſee, is ſaid (in the Language of the Jews) to be done before the Sun. To which ſence alſo we may interpret that viſion of the Prophet Zechariah (Chap. 5. 6, 9, 10, 11.) at verſ. 6. we read of an Ephah, and this lift up (verſ. 9.) between Earth and Heaven; the Ephah was a meaſure of dry things among the Jews: and in that viſion it ſignified that the ſin and puniſhment of the Jews were meaſured and proportioned; this Ephah being lifted up and carried, I (ſaith the Prophet) ſaid, whither do theſe bear the Ephah? (verſ. 10.) And he ſaid unto me, to build it an houſe in the land of Shinar, and it ſhall be eſtabliſhed and ſet there upon her own baſe. The building it an houſe in the land of Shinar (that is, in Babylon) ſignified the laſtingneſs or continuance of their ſin in the ſad conſequents of it, their puniſhment and baniſhment in ſtrange lands, not for the ſpace of ſeventy years only, as by the Babylonians, but (as ſome of the Learned expound the viſion) for many ſeventies by the Romans: and as this Ephah had a houſe built for it, noting the ſetledneſs and duration of the Judgment which ſhould come upon them for their ſin; ſo alſo it was ſet upon its own baſe, to ſignifie the notoriouſneſs or conſpicuouſneſs of the Judgment, it being as a houſe ſet upon pillars for all to behold and take notice of; as we ſee fulfilled to this day, ſince the firſt overthrow of their eſtate by Titus Veſpatianus, and their final diſperſion by Ælius Adrianus. There are I grant other conceptions about that viſion, but as this ſuits well with the point in hand, ſo with the calamitous ſtate of that people to this day.

And thus the Lord threatned the King of Tyrus (Ezek. 28. 17.) Whoſe heart was lifted up becauſe of his beauty, and who had corrupted his wiſdom by reaſon of his brightneſs. Now what will the Lord do? What courſe will he take with him? The next words enform us; I will caſt thee to the ground, and I will lay thee before Kings, that they may behold thee; he doth not ſay, I will caſt thee into the ground, but to the ground, and lay thee before Kings; that is, thou ſhalt be a ſpectacle for all the Kings of the Earth, that they may behold as what thy pride and ſelf-confidence have brought thee to, ſo what their own (if they tread thy path) either will or juſtly may bring them unto. Thus alſo in verſ. 7. of Judes Epiſtle, the Apoſtle ſaith, That Sodom and Gomorrah, and the Cities about them in like manner, giving themſelves over to fornication, and going after ſtrange fleſh, are ſet forth for an example, ſuffering the vengeance of Eternal fire. The Judgments of God are not only puniſhments to them who went before, but premonitions to them who come after.

The righteous ſee it, and are glad.] Here is the effect which that ſight wrought upon the righteous: The eye affects the heart, and the heart is affected ſutably to the object, either with joy or with ſorrow. The deſtruction of men is a ſorrowful object, and therefore we might rather expect that the righteous beholding it ſhould be affected with ſorrow; but the Text affirms a direct contrary effect of this ſight; The righteous ſee it, and are glad.

Hence obſerve, The judgments of God upon the wicked are matters of joy to the righteous.

It is the duty of Saints to mourn with them that mourn, and to rejoyce with them that rejoyce (Rom. 12. 15.) But then we muſt underſtand theſe mourners and rejoycers to be ſuch as themſelves are. Saints muſt mourn with mourning Saints, and rejoyce with rejoycing Saints. The godly are not bound either to joy the joys, or ſorrow the ſorrows of the wicked. The judgments of God upon the wicked have a twofold effect eminently noted in Scripture. First, They cauſe fear: And ſecondly, They cauſe joy. When exemplary juſtice was to be done (according to the Law of Moſes) upon preſumptuous tranſgreſſors, it is ſaid (Deut. 13. 11.) All Iſrael ſhall hear, and fear, and ſhall do no more any ſuch wickedneſs. David (Pſal. 64.) having complained to God in prayer of the cruelty of his enemies, and begged protection from their malicious practices, grows up to much aſſurance, that down they muſt (verſ. 7, 8.) But God ſhall ſhoot at them with an arrow, ſuddenly ſhall they be wounded; and then (verſ. 9.) All men ſhall fear, and ſhall declare the work of God, for they ſhall wiſely conſider of his doings. Thus fear is the iſſue of divine judgement; and yet joy is the iſſue of them at the tenth verſe of the ſame Pſalm; The righteous ſhall be glad in the Lord, and truſt in him, and all the upright in heart ſhall glory. Fear is a common effect; All men ſhall fear: Gladneſs, faith and glorying (which is faith triumphant) are peculiar to the upright, when the arrow of God wounds the wicked. We have this double effect again expreſt upon the ſame occaſion (Pſal. 107. 42.) He poureth contempt upon Princes, and cauſeth them to wander in the wilderneſs where there is no way, but he ſets the poor on high: The righteous ſhall ſee it and rejoyce. What ſhall they ſee? Not only the godly poor ſet on high, but ungodly Princes filled with contempt, that's part of the ſpectacle which the righteous ſhall behold, and beholding rejoyce: yet this is not all, for it follows; And all iniquity ſhall ſtop her mouth; The abſtract is put for the concrete, iniquity for men of iniquity: And ſo the meaning is men of iniquity, or wicked men ſhall ſtop their mouths: their mouths ſhall be ſtopt with ſhame and fear, they ſhall have nothing to ſay when the Lord doth this; They ſhall not mutter a word againſt the works of God: but as Hannah ſpeaks in her Song (1 *Sam.*2.9.) ſhall be ſilent in darkneſs. A like report raiſeth the hearts of the people of God into a holy merriment (*Pſal.*97.8.) Sion heard, and was glad, the daughters of Judah rejoyced. What was the matter? what good news came to Judah? what to Sion? the Text reſolves us; Becauſe of thy judgments O Lord: The anſwer is not, becauſe of thy mercies, or becauſe of thy goodneſs O Lord, but becauſe of thy judgments, and thoſe were dreadful ones (v.3.) A fire goeth before him and burneth up his enemies round about. Confounded be all they that ſerve graven Images, &c. v.7. Sion heard of it, and was glad. Once more (*Pſa.*58.10.) The righteous ſhall rejoyce when he ſeeth the vengeance, he ſhall waſh his feet in the blood of the ungodly. Not that the righteous delight in blood, or proudly inſult over the worſt of enemies; the Pſalmiſt doth only in hyperbolical ſtrains of Eloquence, borrowed from the language of triumphant conquerers, expreſs a compleat and glorious victory. The ſtile is of the ſame ſignification with that (*Pſal.*68.23.) That thy foot may be dipped in the blood of thine enemies, and the tongue of the dogs in the ſame. When ſo much bloud is ſhed that the foot may be dipt and waſhed in it, that dogs may lay it up like water, this argues a great deſtruction; and when the wicked are thus deſtroyed, the righteous ſhall rejoyce.

But here it may be queried, What matter of joy is this? why ſhould the righteous rejoyce in the ſorrows of the wicked? is it not alike ſinful to be troubled at the joys, and to rejoyce at the troubles of our brethren? The light of nature condemns rejoycing over thoſe who are in miſery; and we have an expreſs Scripture againſt it (Prov. 24.17.) Rejoyce not when thine enemy falleth, let not thy heart be glad when he ſtumbleth. And David puts it among the ſins of his enemies (Pſal. 35. 15.) In my adverſity they rejoyced. And he profeſſed (*verſ.*13.) that when they were ſick his cloathing was ſackcloath, and that he humbled his ſoul with faſting. David was ſo far from rejoycing when his enemies were ruined, or dead, that he mourned when they were but ſick, and would not eat, when they could not. And as Davids holy practice denied it, ſo doth Solomons divine precept; Rejoyce not when thine enemy falleth. How then ſhall we reconcile theſe Texts?

I anſwer, there may be a rejoycing at the afflictions and troubles of others, which is not only unbecoming and unſeemly for the righteous, but very ſinful. As Firſt, To rejoyce, and be glad, meerly becauſe an enemy is fallen into miſery, is both unſeemly and ſinful. And ſo we are to underſtand Solomons Proverb; Rejoyce not when thine enemy falleth. Some underſtand this of falling into ſin. He makes himſelf a ſinner indeed, who rejoyceth becauſe another hath ſinned. He that rejoyceth becauſe another hath ſinned, rejoyceth upon the matter becauſe God is diſhonoured. Such joy is a kind of thankſgiving for Satans victory. But as to rejoyce becauſe another falls into ſin, is the worſt fall into ſin; ſo to rejoyce meerly becauſe an enemy falls into miſery, is worſe then our own falling in miſery. He ſhews that he hath not the heart of a man in him, who is glad at the miſery of any man. And he who rejoyceth thus when his enemy falleth, doth himſelf fall much worſe. The ruine and down-fall of an enemy (ſuppoſe him the vileſt enemy) conſidered in it ſelf, is meat and drink to none but revengeful and envious ſpirits. David was much troubled and chargeth it as an extream piece of folly upon himſelf, Becauſe he was envious at the fooliſh when he ſaw the proſperity of the wicked (*Pſal.*73.3.) Now it is an iſſue flowing from the ſame principle, purely to envy the proſperity, and purely to rejoyce in the adverſity of the wicked. Nero was juſtly reckoned a monſter among men, who could ſing when himſelf had ſet Rome a fire: And they have ſome-what of a Neronian ſpirit in them, who can ſing when they ſee their enemies conſuming in the fire. God delights not in the miſery of man (as it is miſery upon man) nor do they, who are taught of God.

Secondly, As to rejoyce or be glad at the deſtruction of enemies, meerly becauſe they are deſtroyed; ſo to rejoyce upon private ends or reſpects, becauſe they being taken out of the way and removed out of the world we hope to have more ſcope and room in the world for our ſelves; or becauſe we hope to ſtep into their places, to ſit down in their ſeats, to poſſeſs our ſelves of their lands and riches, to fill our ſelves with their ſpoils; upon this account to rejoyce when wicked men fall, when the Lord pours out contempt upon Princes (becauſe (I ſay) we hope to be gainers by it) is altogether uncomely for the righteous. Let the righteous take heed to themſelves, that they be not found thus rejoyceing in the calamities of the wicked. They who do ſo are either but pretenders to godlineſs, men who are only of the faction of the righteous (for though they who are righteous indeed are far from a faction, yet there are a ſort of men, who profeſs righteouſneſs as if it were nothing but a faction, now (I ſay) they who thus rejoyce are but either of the faction of the righteous) while they are really of the number of the wicked; or if they are really righteous who do ſo (and I confeſs that a righteous man may do ſo, David (which was acting the counter-part) envied their proſperity, and by the ſame reaſon any godly man may be acted out in joy at their adverſity; but now, (I ſay) if they who are really righteous do ſo) we muſt conclude them under a ſore temptation, and they will at laſt conclude of themſelves as David did in the counter-caſe, (*Pſal.*73.22.) So fooliſh have we been and ignorant, even as a beaſt before thee.

You will ſay then, how may or do the righteous rejoyce when the ungodly fall, and not fall into ſin themſelves?

I anſwer, Firſt, The righteous rejoyce at the fall of the wicked, as bleſſing God who hath kept their feet from thoſe wayes in which the wicked have fallen. As 'tis a great mercy to be kept out of thoſe ill-wayes, to be kept from ſiding with thoſe corrupt intereſts, in the purſuit of which we ſee many broken; ſo 'tis a duty to rejoyce that we have not walked in their way whoſe end we ſee to be nothing elſe but deſtruction.

Secondly, The righteous have cauſe to rejoyce and bleſs God when they ſee the wicked fall, becauſe themſelves are ſaved, and keep their ſtanding; becauſe themſelves have eſcaped the danger, and the Lord hath been a banner of protection over them in the day when the wicked fell. Moſes after the deſtruction of Amaleck built an Altar, and called the name of it Jehova-Niſſi (*Exod.*17.15.) that is to ſay, The Lord is my banner. And in like caſes the joy of the Saints is not properly in the deſtruction of the wicked, but in their own deliverance, through the mighty power and good hand of God with them. It is the preſence of God with them, the appearance of God for them, which is the gladneſs of their hearts.

Thirdly, The righteous then rejoyce, becauſe the Church and people of God are in a fair way to peace; when the Lions are deſtroyed, the ſheep are in ſafety; when the Wolves and the Bears are cut off, the flock reſts quietly: ſo in this caſe when men of devouring cruel ſpirits, wicked and ungodly ones, are removed, the flock of God the ſheep of his paſture feed quietly, none making them afraid. The fall of the enemies of Sion, is the eſtabliſhment of Sion, yea in a great meaſure of mankind. As the Prophet moſt elegantly ſets it forth (Iſa. 14.6,7,8.) He who ſmote the people in wrath with a continual ſtroke, he that ruled the Nations in anger, is perſecuted and none hindereth. The whole earth is at reſt, and is quiet: they break forth into ſinging, yea the fir-trees rejoyce at thee, and the Cedars of Lebanon, ſaying, ſince thou art laid down no feller is come up againſt us. How often have wicked men in power felled not only the Fir-trees and Cedars of the world, but the goodly trees of righteouſneſs in the Lords plantations; have they not therefore reaſon to ſing when ſuch fall, ſeeing the Fellers themſelves are then felled and fallen?

Fouthly, Joy ariſeth to the righteous, becauſe God is honoured in the fall of wicked men; And that's their chiefeſt joy: That God is honoured is more joy to the righteous, then that themſelves are ſaved, how much more then, that the wicked are deſtroyed? There is a threefold honour ariſing to God when the wicked fall.

First, God is honoured in his juſtice; ſuch a day is the day of the declaration of the righteous judgment of God; as the Apoſtle ſpeaks of the great day of Judgment (Rom. 2.5.) Thou after thy hardneſs and impenitent heart, treaſureſt up to thy ſelf wrath againſt the day of wrath, and revelation of the righteous judgment of God. Some do even queſtion the juſtice of God when wicked men proſper, but he is vindicated in his juſtice when wicked men fall. It cannot but pleaſe righteous men, to ſee the righteous God exalted, or God exalted in his righteouſneſs. They know and believe that God is righteous, when the wicked proſper (Jer. 12.1.) But when the wicked are puniſhed, they proclaim his righteouſneſs. Then they ſing the ſong of Moſes the ſervant of God, and the ſong of the Lamb, ſaying, Great and marvellous are thy works Lord God Almighty, juſt and true are thy wayes thou King of Saints. Who ſhall not fear thee O Lord, and glorifie thy Name, &c. for thy judgments are made manifeſt, (*Rev.*15. 3,4.) The Lord is alwayes alike juſt, but it doth not alwayes alike appear how juſt he is. And as, that God is juſt is the faith and ſtay of the Saints, ſo the appearances of his juſtice are their joy and triumph.

Secondly, God is honoured much in the attribute of his truth; in the truth of his word, in the truth of his threatnings, when the wicked are puniſhed. God hath ſpoken bloody words concerning wicked men; not only in reference to their future eſtate in the next life, but to their preſent eſtate in this. Say to the wicked it ſhall be ill with him, the reward of his hands ſhall be given him. But what is this reward? There are two ſorts of rewards; Firſt, Rewards of love and favor according to the good which we have done; Secondly, Rewards of wrath and anger, pœnal rewards, according to the evil which we have done. Now when the Lord puts theſe pœnal rewards into the hands of the wicked, or pours them upon their heads, he is honoured in his truth as well as his juſtice, for the mouth of the Lord hath ſpoken it. As the promiſes are yea and Amen (2 Cor. 1.20.) So alſo are the threatnings, unto the glory of God by us. But as when David ſaw his life in danger every day, he began to queſtion the truth of God, in the promiſe, that he ſhould live to reign and ſit upon the throne of Iſrael; for ſaith he (Pſal. 116.11. when things went thus with him) I ſaid in my haſt all men are liars, even Samuel among the reſt, who aſſured me of the Kingdom by expreſs meſſage from God, but ſurely he alſo is deceived, and hath fed me with vain hopes. Now as theſe words of David, according to our tranſlation of them, and the truth of the thing in frequent experiences, ſhew, that Godly men are apt to queſtion the truth of the promiſe, when themſelves are by ſeemingly contradicting providences much afflicted; ſo they are apt to queſtion the truth of the threatnings when they ſee outward providences proſpering the wicked; Therefore when the threatnings have their actual yea and Amen, that is, when they are executed upon the ungodly, this alſo is to the glory of God by us, that is, God is glorified by all his people, who hear of it in the truth of what he hath ſpoken. Again, as God is magnified in the truth of his threatnings, when any particular wicked man is puniſhed; ſo when common calamities come upon the wicked, the truth of God, or God in his truth, is magnified two wayes. Firſt, As ſuch calamities are a fulfilling of many Propheſies; Secondly, As they are the anſwer or return of many prayers. The vengeance which falls upon the Enemies of the Church of God is drawn out by prayer, Luk. 18.7,8. And there is nothing wherein God is more honoured, then when prayer is anſwered; For as therein he fulfils our wants, ſo his own word; Who hath not ſaid to the ſeed of Jacob, ſeek ye me in vain.

Thirdly, When the wicked fall, the Lord is honoured in the attribute of his power; How great is his power, who pulls down great power? It argues the Almightineſs of God, when he puts the mighty from their ſeats: when the Oaks and the Cedars, when the high walls and mountains are ſhaken and removed by his blows and batteries. When Pharaoh and his Egyptian hoſt were drowned in the red Sea; Then Moſes magnified God in his power (*Exod.*15.2.) The Lord is my ſtrength and ſong (that is, I will ſing of the ſtrength of the Lord, not of the ſtrength of man) he is my God, and I will prepare him an habitation; my fathers God, and I will exalt him.

In theſe three attributes, juſtice, truth, and power, God is honoured, when the wicked are deſtroyed; and therefore it cannot be uncomely for the Saints to rejoyce when they are deſtroyed. The Lord by his Prophet aſſures the Church his Jacob, that all the enemies thereof ſhall be ſcattered (Iſa. 41.15.) Behold, I will make thee a new ſharp threſhing inſtrument, having teeth, thou ſhalt threſh the Nations and beat them ſmall, and ſhalt make the hills as chaff, &c. The mountains and the hills to be threſhed, were the mighty ones of the earth, ſetting themſelves againſt the wayes and deſigns of heaven. The Inſtrument or flayl wherewith they were to be threſhed was the worm Jacob (*verſ.*14.) God did not ſo much make an Inſtrument for the worm Jacob, as he made the worm Jacob his Inſtrument. Behold, I will make thee, (not for thee) a new threſhing Inſtrument; But when the worm hath done this great work, when he hath threſhed the mountains, and made the hills as chaff; What muſt he do then? The ſixteenth verſe tells, Thou ſhalt rejoyce in the Lord, and ſhalt glory in the holy one of Iſrael. Glorying is more then rejoycing: Glorying is a kind of rapture or extaſie of the ſoul. As there is an extaſie of infatuation, ſo there is an extaſie of Gracious admiration. Fools and mad men are beſides themſelves for want of reaſon; the wiſeſt and beſt of men, are beſides themſelves through the abundance of the Grace of God in them, and the abundance of the goodneſs of God towards them. When the goodneſs of God acted mightily towards us, meets with the Grace of God acting mightily in us, we are lifted up ſo far out of our ſelves, that we can ſee nothing in our ſelves, and then in whom or in what can our rejoycing be, but in the Lord the holy one of Iſrael?

Gaudebunt de eorũ exitio, non vindictæ cupiditate, ſed zelo dei accenſi qui hoc modo declarabit ſibi cura eſſe res humanas. Druſ.

This joy is not, Firſt, the joy of the Epicure; A ſenſual joy, in wine and belly chear, in eating the fat, and drinking the ſweet, in carnal merriments and muſick. Nor is this, Secondly, a cruel joy in the ruine and deſtruction of men, which the Prophet rebukes (Obad. v. 12.) Thou ſhouldeſt not have rejoyced over the children of Judah in the day of their deſtruction. Nor is this, Thirdly, a proud joy, or a joy of oſtentation, when men ſpread their plumes, and publiſh their own wiſdom, greatneſs and power. Nor is it, Fourthly, a covetous joy, ſuch as theirs is who are glad becauſe they have fill'd their purſes, enriched their families, and their hand hath gotten much. Nor is it Laſtly, a ſecure joy, becauſe when evil men are caſt down we hope to ſit warm and well, ſafe and quiet upon their ruines. But this joy conſiſts, Firſt, in high thoughts and valuations of God; Whom have I in heaven but thee, &c. (*Pſal.*73.25.) Who is like unto thee O Lord among the Gods (*Exod.*15.11.) It conſiſts, Secondly, in a ſweet reſt of complacency in God. Return unto thy reſt O my ſoul: that is, turn in to God, live nearer him, ſaith a Godly man (to his ſoul) in ſuch a caſe (*Pſal.*116.7.) This joy is the reſt of the ſoul in God; He who is reſt to himſelf (as God is) may be ſo infinitely more to us. Thus, The righteous ſee it, and are glad.

And the innocent laugh them to ſcorn.] This heightens the ſence of the former part of the verſe; not only are the righteous glad when the wicked are deſtroyed, but they laugh them to ſcorn. The righteous, in the former part of the verſe are the ſame with the innocent here: yet we may diſtinguiſh them. The innocent are taken two wayes in Scripture; Firſt, the innocent are they who are pure from ſin; Secondly, the innocent are they who are pure or free from puniſhment, or from trouble; freedom from ſin, and freedom from trouble are ſo dependant upon one another, that one word may well expreſs both. Thus the word is uſed (2 *Sam.*14.9.) The woman of Tekoah ſaid to the King; My Lord O King, the iniquity be on me, and my fathers houſe, and the King and his throne be guiltleſs or innocent, that is, free from all evil and trouble. While ſhe ſaith, The iniquity be upon me, her meaning is, let the puniſhment of the iniquity be upon me, let the King and his throne be guiltleſs; let no puniſhment of iniquity fall either upon the King in perſon, or, upon his government. In the ſame ſence the word is read (*Exod.*19.21.) If he (that hath been ſmitten) riſe again and walk abroad upon a ſtaff, then he that ſmote him ſhall be quiet; the Hebrew is, then ſhall he be innocent, that is free from puniſhment, he ſhall not have any cenſure, or judgment for it. We have the like uſe of the word (*Numb.*5.19.) in the caſe of the woman ſuſpected by her huſband for diſloyalty in breaking her marriage vow; ſhe being for her purgation to drink the bitter water, the Prieſt was to beſpeak her in this manner: If no man hath lien with thee, and if thou haſt not gone aſide to uncleanneſs with another in ſtead of thy huſband, be thou free (or innocent) from this bitter water that cauſeth the Innocens in Scriptura ſumitur, non ſolùm activè, pro eo, qui nemini nocet, ſed etiã paſſivè, pro eo cui nemo noces.

Innocens eris ab aquis iſtis amariſſimis. Heb.

curſe, that is, let the water do thee no harm; as if he had ſaid, thou ſhalt feel no evil of pain by it, if thou art not guilty of the evil of ſin. Thus ſome expound the word here. The innocent ſhall laugh them to ſcorn, that is, they who are free from thoſe troubles with which the wicked are over-taken and undone, thoſe particular righteous men who eſcape the ſtorm untouched, laugh the wicked to ſcorn. Many of the Hebrew writers fix upon a ſpecial perſon; and by the Innocent, underſtand Noah, as if it were a report of what was done upon the old world; Then the righteous, that is (as the Chaldee Paraphraſe explains it) the ſons of righteous Noah ſaw (the flood) and were glad, and innocent Noah laught the prophane old world to ſcorn. When Noah, and his ſons were building the Ark, the old world in ſtead of believing and fearing the report or prophecy of a deluge, laught them to ſcorn, and in deriſion, doubtleſs, ask't them what voyage they intended, and whether they meant to ſail their Ship over the dry Land; as for them they never dreamt of a Sea hanging in the clouds, and ready to drop down upon their heads. Now as the ungodly world derided Noah and his Sons for their credulity before the flood came, ſo 'tis probable enough that when the flood came upon that world of the ungodly, Noah and his Sons laught and derided their incredulity. They who laugh at divine threatnings, deſerve to be laughed at under divine ſufferings.

Videbant filii Noë juſti & lætabuntur, & Noë innocens ſubſannabit eos. Targ.

Others apply this particularly to the Tragedy of Pharoah and his Egyptians overwhelmed and drowned in the red Sea, of which it is ſaid, (Exod. 14.30,31.) Thus the Lord ſaved Iſrael that day out of the hand of the Egyptians, and Iſrael ſaw the Egyptians dead upon the ſhoar; and Iſrael ſaw that Great work, which the Lord did upon the Egyptians. The effect of this ſight is two wayes deſcribed in that holy Hiſtory: Firſt, By the acting of fear and faith: And the people feared the Lord, and believed the Lord and his ſervant Moſes. Secondly, by the acting of their joy in the Lord, and their holy inſultation over the drowned Egyptians (Chap. 15. verſ. 1.) Then ſang Moſes and the children of Iſrael this Song unto the Lord, and ſpake ſaying, I will ſing unto the Lord, for he hath triumphed glorioſly, the horſe and his rider hath he thrown into the Sea. Thus alſo that innocent people ſaw the ruine of their wicked enemies, and laughed them to ſcorn.

Yet I conceive Eliphaz ſpeaking here rather upon a generally experienced and poſitive truth, then ſtrictly and particularly aiming at thoſe ancient Examples. The Innocent, that is, any innocent perſon, whether innocent in reference to the doing of evil, or having eſcaped the ſufferance of evil, laugh them to ſcorn.

Before, he ſaid, the righteous ſee it, and are glad; now he ſaith, the innocent laugh them to ſcorn: it is one thing for a man to be glad in himſelf, and another thing to laugh other men to ſcorn: for though to be innocent carries in it ſomewhat leſs, or at the moſt but ſo much as to be righteous, yet to laugh the unrighteous and wicked to ſcorn when they fall, carries in it much more then to be glad when they fall. And beſides, the word in the Hebrew ſignifies the moſt ſcornful laughter, ſuch a laughter as is expreſſed, by a diſtortion of the mouth, and lips, or by a kind of fained liſping with the tongue, and artificial faultring in ſpeech; For as they that liſp and faulter in ſpeech are uſually derided and laught at, ſo they that deride and laugh at others will purpoſely liſp, or faulter in ſpeech. Stammerers are contemptible, and many ſtammer at others in contempt; This imitation of a defect in nature ſhews the exceſs of malice. Such is the force of this expreſſion, The innocent laugh them to ſcorn.

לעג Denotat geſtum qui fit ore, labiis, & ficta balbutie, ſive quod balbutientes irrideri ſoleant, ſive quod irriſores balbutiant, per contemptum & malignam imitationē.

Here it may be queſtioned, how a good man, an innocent perſon can do ſuch a thing; can he thus laugh the wicked to ſcorn? it is difficult enough to ſalve it as conſiſtent with Grace, for a righteous man to rejoyce at the fall of the wicked, but it is far more difficult to ſalve it, how a righteous man may laugh them to ſcorn: ſcorning and deriding are the practices of lewd perſons, of ſons of Belial; ſuch indeed are uſually ſcorners and jeerers. The enemies of Jeſus Chriſt are ſo deſcribed (Pſa. 22.7.) All they that ſee me (that is, all the wicked that ſee me; for many Diſciples ſaw Chriſt in his ſufferings, and did not only pity him, but honour and believe on him, but (ſaith he) all they (who are mine enemies) that ſee me) laugh me to ſcorn, they ſhoot out the lip, and ſhake the head. And David tells us (Pſal. 1.1.) that to ſit in the ſeat of the ſcornful, is the concluſion of thoſe who have firſt walked in the way of the ungodly; and Secondly, ſtood in the way of ſinners. The common Latine tranſlater renders that in the Pſalm, not the ſeat of ſcorners, but the ſeat of the peſtilence. And indeed they have ſpiritual plague-ſpots upon them, and the ſureſt tokens of eternal death, who are given up to be ſcorners. Therefore queſtion it again, how are the Innocent ſcorners?

I anſwer, That as when humane affections, which are below the divine nature, are attributed to God, (ſuch are to repent, to be grieved at the wickedneſs, and to laugh at the calamity of the wicked) we ſay theſe note only an effect upon the creature, not a change of affection in God (for, in him there is no variableneſs nor ſhadow of change) ſo when thoſe actions, which are below or unſutable to a renewed regenerate nature in man, are attributed to the Saints (ſuch as theſe, to waſh their feet in the blood of the ungodly, to laugh them to ſcorn in their ſaddeſt miſeries) we muſt ſay, that theſe note rather what the wicked deſerve, then what the godly do. The godly are no ſcorners, but there is that in wicked men which is worthy to be laughed to ſcorn; or wicked men do that, for which they deſerve to be laughed at; whatſoever is evil in ſuch like actions, is far from the heart and ſpirit of the godly. And therefore as Scriptures of ſuch a tenour are to be interpreted and underſtood in ſuch a manner as becomes and is conſiſtent with the holineſs of God, ſo alſo (in their proportion) to the holineſs of the Saints. The laughter of the Saints in theſe diſpenſations is ſerious; and their ſcorning, the acting of their graces, not of their corruptions. And thus it is ſaid of God himſelf (Pſal. 2.4.) He that ſitteth in heaven ſhall laugh, the Lord ſhall have them in deriſion. And (Prov. 1.26.) I will mock at your calamity, and laugh when your fear cometh: when your fear cometh as deſolation, and your deſtruction cometh as a whirlwind, &c. that is, I will carry my ſelf ſo towards you, I will pity you (who have been ſcorners of my word, and have ſet at nought my counſel) no more then men pity thoſe, whom they laugh to ſcorn; ſuch is the laughter of the Saints at the calamity of the wicked. And thus Eliah derided Baals Prieſts, while they wearied themſelves in their fooliſh ſuperſtition (1 King. 18.27.) And it came to paſs at noon that Eliah mocked them, and ſaid, cry aloud, for he is a God; either he is talking, &c. Thus Hieruſalem is expreſſed (Iſa. 37.22.) when Sennacherib ſent up that proud threatning meſſage, the Lord ſent a comfortable meſſage to his people by Iſaiah the Prophet; Thus ſaith the Lord God of Iſrael, whereas thou haſt prayed to me againſt Sennacherib the King of Aſſyria, this is the word which the Lord hath ſpoken concerning him; the virgin the daughter of Zion hath deſpiſed thee, and laughed thee to ſcorn, the daughter of Jeruſalem hath ſhaken her head at thee. The daughter of Zion, and the daughter of Jeruſalem are but one and the ſame; ſhe was called a virgin, not (as ſome have conceived) becauſe ſhe was never taken or forced by any enemy, nor was ſhe ſo called, becauſe ſhe had preſerved her ſelf pure and chaſte in the worſhip of the true God (for ſhe had her failings and Idolatrous dalliances before that day) but ſhe was ſo called becauſe of that ſpecial care which God had of her to protect and ſave her againſt the inſultations of the enemy then ready to aſſault her, even as a virgin is protected from violence in her fathers houſe. And the Prophet to aſſure them that it ſhould be ſo, ſpeaks of the ruine of Sennacheribs Army, and Jeruſalems laughter, as accompliſht and come to paſs already; The virgin daughter, &c. hath deſpiſed thee, and laughed thee to ſcorn, and ſhaken her head at thee. What God ſaith ſhall be done, is as good as done already. The Aſſyrians were yet in their Jollity, laughing at Jeruſalem, and promiſing themſelves the ſpoil of the people of God, yet (ſaith the Lord) Jeruſalem hath laughed thee to ſcorn; that is, aſſuredly ſhe ſhall. And as the people of God do ſometimes formally and explicitly laugh at the downfal and witherings of the wicked, ſo they alwayes virtually and ſecretly laugh them to ſcorn, even when they ſtand and flouriſh in their greenneſs and proſperity: For while the Godly are not daunted with the power and ſplendour, while they are not terrified with the threats and high looks of the wicked, but in the ſingleneſs and ſimplicity of their hearts, keep cloſe to God, his wayes and truths; even this, though they uſe the dueſt reſpect to them in regard of their authority, both in word and geſture, is a laughing them to ſcorn: For this is as a thorn in the ſides of evil men, and as a prick in their eyes; when they ſee they will not ſtoop to their greatneſs in any ſinful compliance with their commands. This is a truth, but the former is the truth intended in this Text.

Irriſio, & ἐπιχαιρεκακία, & ſimilia quæ affectum humanũ ſignificant, uti à deo longe abſunt, ita quæ mali moris ſunt ab eccleſia. Coc. Ut hæc de deo θεοπρεπῶς ita de ſanctis ἁγιοπρεπῶς ſunt intelligenda.

Hence Note, That wicked men are not only miſerable but ridiculous.

They are the laughter of the innocent, upon more accounts then one.

Firſt, Becauſe they do ſuch childiſh and ridiculous things, ſuch things as can never reach the ends they deſire and purpoſe: they are juſtly laughed at, whoſe counſel and courſes are unſuitable, much more, when contrary to their deſigns.

Secondly, Wicked men become ridiculous, while the Lord fruſtrates their wiſeſt counſels, and blaſts thoſe hopes which were bottom'd upon the moſt probable principles and foundations, while he takes them in their own craft, and entraps them in the ſnare which they laid for others.

Thirdly, While he over-rules all that they plot or act to ſerve his own ends, and fulfil his own holy counſels. Hence the enemies of God are ſaid to pine away; this ſhall be the plague wherewith the Lord will ſmite all the people, that have fought againſt Jeruſalem, their fleſh ſhall conſume away while they ſtand upon their feet (he doth not ſay, that they ſhall be ſlain, but their fleſh ſhall conſume away while they ſtand upon their feet) and their eyes ſhall conſume away in their holes, and their tongue ſhall conſume away in their mouth (*Zech.*14.12.) which as ſome interpret of their bodily languiſhment, that they ſhall live dying continually, or that their life ſhall be a continual death, ſo all interpret the cauſe of this conſumption to ariſe from vexation of ſpirit, becauſe they ſhall ſee themſelves ſcorn'd and laughed at, or that they are become ridiculous to all the world, but chiefly to Jeruſalem, the Church and people of God, whom they ſhall behold in good condition, notwithſtanding all the oppoſition which they have made againſt them; which Eliphaz alſo clearly expreſſeth in the next words.

Verſ. 20. Whereas our ſubſtance is not cut down, but the remnant of them the fire conſumes.

There are divers readings and rendrings of this verſe: Firſt, Some with an affirmative interrogation; is not their ſubſtance cut down? that is, it is cut down; And then this verſe is a continuation of the former diſcourſe concerning the utter extirpation of the wicked; The righteous are glad, they laugh them to ſcorn; is not their ſubſtance cut down? and doth not the fire conſume the remnant of them? As if Eliphaz had ſaid, Whatſoever they had of any ſubſtance or moment is cut down, and if poſſibly there be any ſmall inconſiderable remainder of them, fire (that is, ſome devouring Judgement) will meet with it, and make an utter end of it.

Secondly, Another underſtands this twentieth verſe as a reaſon of the former; the righteous are glad (when the wicked fall) the innocent ſhall laugh them to ſcorn, becauſe our ſubſtance was not cut down; as if he had ſaid, our ſafety will be matter as of praiſe to God who hath preſerved us, ſo of holy ſcorn and inſultation over ungodly men, who longed to ſee our deſtruction, and ſaid in their hearts, that ſurely our day was not only coming, but haſtning; whereas indeed we ſee the day come upon them which burneth as an oven, and themſelves as ſtubble. Wicked men are for the moſt part doubly diſappointed; Firſt, By their own fall, when they looked to ſtand: Secondly, By the ſtanding of the righteous when they look, yea, and long for their fall; This double diſappointment doth at once double their ſorrow, and the joy of the Innocent, who laugh them to ſcorn, becauſe their own ſubſtance is not cut down, but the remnant of them the fire conſumeth.

Innocens ſubſannabit eos, quia nō fuit ſucciſa ſubſtantia noſtra,&c. q. d. ut qui ſe & res ſuas ſalvas, illos autem penitùs igne illo divino videant jure abſumptos. Bez.

Innocens ſubſannabit eos dicens, etſi non eſt ſucciſa ſubſtantia noſtra, tamen excellentiā illorum conſumpſit ignis. Piſc.

Cū nondum abſcinditur ſubſtantia noſtra & reſiduū illorū abſumit ignis, aſſueſce quæſo cum illo. Jun.

There is a third tranſlation which makes theſe words the form in which the innocent expreſs their laughter at the wicked. When the innocent laugh them to ſcorn, they will thus beſpeak them: Whereas or Although our ſubſtance is not cut down, yet the remnant of them, or the beſt the excellency of them the fire hath conſumed.

There is a fourth reading, which makes the ſecond part of the Chapter begin with this verſe. For hitherto Eliphaz hath been deſcribing the ſinfulneſs of wicked men, and the wrath of God upon them for their wickedneſs. But here he is ſuppoſed entring upon a very ſerious exhortation to repentance, after this manner, or to this effect; O Job, now while our ſubſtance is not quite cut down, and the fire conſumeth the reſidue or the remnant of the wicked, acquaint thy ſelf with God, or apply thy ſelf to God; as if he ſhould ſay, before thou art clean cut down, before thou art utterly ruined, as many wicked men have been heretofore, and now are, humble thy ſelf and ſeek to God, that thy ſin may be forgiven, and thy wound healed. Some parallel this in ſenſe with that of the Preacher, Eccl. 12.1. Remember now thy Creator in the dayes of thy youth, while the evil dayes come not, nor the years draw nigh wherein thou ſhalt ſay, I have no pleaſure in them. Thus Eliphaz is conceived exhorting Job, While our ſubſtance is not cut down, while we are not totally undone, while the fire of Gods wrath is conſuming the remainder of wicked men, do thou acquaint thy ſelf with God, and repent. And though our tranſlation makes not this connection, yet it joyns fully in the ſenſe of the Original.

Quum ſubſiſtentia noſtra non ſit exciſa, reliquias autem iſtorum ignis aſſumpſerit. Tygur.

Ita bene ut nihil melius. Bold.

Whereas our ſubſtance is not cut down.

So this verſe is an elegant concluſion of the whole matter hitherto inſiſted upon by Eliphaz, and he ſhuts it up in two parts: Firſt, ſhewing the ſtate of the innocent, who are brought in ſpeaking thus, Our ſubſtance is not cut down; ſtrictly, that by which we ſtand or ſubſiſt, our ſubſtance or ſubſiſtence, which ſome expound not by goods, but by life; we may take it both wayes, our life, and that by which our life is maintained, or by which we and our families ſubſiſt, is not cut down.

קימה ἡ ὕπαρξις, exiſtantia vel potius τὸ ἑστηκὸς ἡμῶν quo ſubſiſtimus duramus, vel ſubſiſtantia, i. e. vita qua ſubſiſtimus, nam ſtarè valet interdum ſuperſtitem eſſe. Druſ.

There is yet a difficulty in regard of the Grammatical ſenſe of theſe words. For Eliphaz having ſpoken before in the third perſon plural, The righteous are glad, and the innocent laugh them to ſcorn, ſhould (as it may be thought) rather have continued his ſpeech in the ſame form, and have ſaid, Whereas their ſubſtance is cut down, but he puts it in the firſt perſon plural, Whereas our ſubſtance is not cut down, &c.

We may anſwer two wayes; Firſt, that it is uſual in Scripture to vary the number, while the ſame perſon or perſons is or are ſpoken of, take only one Inſtance, *Hoſ.*12. 4. He (that is, the Angel of the Covenant) found him in Bethel, that is, Jacob: And there he ſpake with us. It ſhould according to Grammar be read thus; And there he ſpake with him. Having found Jacob in Bethel, he ſpake with him in Bethel. But we ſee both the perſon and number are varied, the former words running in the third perſon ſingular (being meant particularly of Jacob) the latter in the firſt perſon plural, There he ſpake with us; The Spirit of God thereby ſignifying, that, what God ſpake at that time to Jacob perſonally, he ſpake to all the ſpiritual ſeed of Jacob, whether of the Circumciſion or Uncircumciſion, virtually. He ſo ſpake to Jacob as that the ſubſtance and effect of his ſpeech reacheth down to and hath an influence upon us, believers, who are his poſterity according to the Spirit. Beſides this, other Scriptures hold out the like variation of the number, as in the Text, which is the firſt anſwer.

Secondly, Eliphaz might purpoſely vary the number, that himſelf might put in for a ſhare, and be numbred among thoſe, who had obtained that ſparing mercy, not to be cut down while others were conſumed. And ſo this reaſon of the change is purely ſpiritual, much like that laſt opened out of Hoſea.

Whence Note, That the righteous are often preſerved in common calamities.

(*Pſal.*20.8.) They are brought down, and are fallen, but we are riſen and ſtand upright, our ſubſtance is not cut down. God takes ſpecial care of his own people; they are under a promiſe; there can be no greater ſafety, no better ſecurity then to be under a promiſe: the promiſe is the beſt ſhelter in a ſtorm, and the beſt ſhield againſt the dart. The Apoſtle Peter gives us two famous examples of this, (2 *Pet.*2.5,6.) God ſpared not the old world, but ſaved Noah, &c. bringing in the flood upon the world of the ungodly. And having turned the Cities of Sodom and Gomorrah into aſhes, condemned them with an overthrow, &c. and delivered juſt Lot, &c. From both which examples he concludeth (*verſ.*9.) The Lord knoweth how to deliver the Godly out of temptation, and to reſerve the unjuſt unto the day of Judgment to be puniſhed. When judgment begins at the houſe of God, what ſhall the end of them be that obey not the Goſpel of God? as the ſame Apoſtle ſpeaks (1 *Pet.*4.17.) It is a ſure argument to the wicked that they ſhall be judged, when they ſee God bringing judgements upon his own houſe and people; but the wicked are many times judged while the houſe and people of God are preſerved and untoucht; and when both good and bad, both the innocent and the wicked are wrapt up in the ſame calamity, when they are (as it were) thruſt together into the ſame furnace, the Lord makes a difference, they are not cut down as the wicked are cut down, not conſumed as they are conſumed. When the righteous are caſt into the fire, they are purged, but not conſumed; but (as it follows in the ſecond part of this concluſion, ſhewing the ſtate of the wicked)

The remnant of them the fire conſumeth.

Fire in this place is not taken ſtrictly, as oppoſed to water; God indeed hath often made fire in kind his ſcourge. And the Apoſtle Jude ſaith of Sodom, That it ſuffered the vengeance of eternal fire: But all the judgments of God are in Scripture compared to fire (Mal. 4. 1.) Behold the day cometh that ſhall burn like an Oven, and all the proud, yea all that do wickedly ſhall be ſtubble, and the day that cometh ſhall burn them up, ſaith the Lord of hoſts, that it ſhall leave them neither fruit nor branch. There is a burning, and not by fire; There is ſo great a judgment and terror in fire let looſe and breaking its bounds, that it may well ſignifie all judgments, or any thing that is terrible. (Iſa. 52. 4.) As the fire devoureth the ſtubble, and the flame conſumeth the chaffe, ſo their root ſhall be rottenneſs, and their bloſſom ſhall go up as duſt. Thus here, the remnant of them the fire conſumeth; that is, the wrath of God appearing in ſome viſible judgment, conſumeth the remnant.

But what is this remnant which the fire conſumeth?

I anſwer, Firſt, we may expound it of perſons. The remnant of perſons, all that are left of their family, their children and poſterity, their kindred and relations are taken away and conſumed from off the face of the earth.

Secondly, We may expound it of things, the remnant of goods, whatſoever remains of their eſtate, the odd ends, the very gleanings and leavings of their great riches and worldly ſubſtance, are all eaten up and brought to an end, ſo that nothing of them or theirs remaineth.

Thirdly, The remnant of them may be the remembrance of them. A fire ſhall conſume their name and memorial, they ſhall never be thought of, nor ſpoken of any more with honour.

Fourthly, The word remnant, as it ſignifieth in the Original any thing which remaineth, ſo eſpecially that which remaineth in way of excellency, or eminency; not as we ſay the fagg-end of a thing, but even the uppermoſt and beſt of it. So that (after this tranſlation) the remnant of them is the excellency of them, that which they thought moſt durable, and honourable, that which they looked upon as moſt ſubſtantial and intrinſecal to their greatneſs, that very thing the fire ſhall conſume. So the word is uſed (Pſal. 17. 14.) Deliver my ſoul from men which are thy hand, O Lord, from men of the world, &c. whoſe belly thou filleſt with thy hid treaſures, they are full of children, and leave the reſt (or as we ſupply, the reſt of their ſubſtance) to their babes; the reſt, that is, the beſt; their bellies are full of hid treaſures while they live, that is, they have and uſe abundance of the things of this life themſelves; and they leave the reſt, he doth not mean the ſcraps or parings after they had filled their own bellies, but by the reſt or the remnant, ('tis the word of the text) he meaneth the choiceſt of what they had; even that they leave to their babes or children, when themſelves muſt be gone and leave the world. Thus we may underſtand the word remnant in this place, not for a poor pittance, but for the beſt, the choiceſt things, for the flower and cream of all they had, even theſe things the fire ſhall conſume, vengeance ſhall purſue and follow, till all be turned into ſmoak and aſhes.

יתר Significat illud quo quis alium excellit, ideo reliquiarum nomine impiorum excellentem & ſupra cũctos mortales ingentem fœlicitatem intelligo. Pined.

I have in divers other paſſages of this book met with Texts ſhewing the utter conſumption of wicked men, therefore I ſhall not ſtay upon it here; only take this brief note;

> That the Lord hath a different fire for the righteous and the wicked.

He hath a fire for his own people, but it is a purging fire, a cleanſing, a refining fire. Like that (Mal. 3. 3.) He ſhall ſit as a refiner and purifier of ſilver. The Lord alſo hath a fire for the wicked, but it is a conſuming fire. He kindles many fires upon them, and himſelf is a conſuming fire to them. But it may be ſaid, that God is a conſuming fire alſo to his own people; for the Apoſtle ſpeaking of himſelf and other believers, ſaith (Heb. 12. 29.) Our God is a conſuming fire. I anſwer; Firſt, Tis true, the God of Believers is a conſuming fire, but he is not a conſuming fire to believers; even the hearts of believers ought to be over-awed with a holy fear of that in God, which they ſhall never feel from God. Secondly, God is ſometimes a conſuming fire to believers; but it is only to conſume their corruptions, or their corruptible comforts: He will never conſume either their Graces or ſpiritual intereſts. Theſe he will not conſume, whatſoever he conſumes. But the whole of a wicked man is as combuſtible matter before him. There went up a ſmoak out of his noſtrils, fire out of his mouth devoured (Pſal. 18. 8.) That is, God poured out wrath, which devoured them like a fire. Fire (I mean natural fire) is a great devourer, it hath a ſtrong ſtomach, there's nothing but pure Gold too hard for its digeſtion; but myſtical fire, the fire of divine wrath is infinitely a greater devourer. Wrath kindles many devouring fires, but wrath it ſelf is the moſt devouring fire; who can ſtand before it? who can abide the heat and flames of it? This is the Tophet prepared of old for the wicked; This fire is able to conſume branch and ruſh, the root and top of the wicked in one day, and yet it will continue conſuming them to eternity. The remnant of them the fire conſumeth.

Eliphaz having thus far proſecuted a deſcription both of the unrighteouſneſs and of the ruine, both of the ſin and puniſhment of wicked men, cloſely inſinuating that Job was the man concern'd in all this large Diſcourſe, he, in the latter part of this Chapter, turns his ſpeech into a ſerious Exhortation to move Job to repent, and ſeek God, giving him many aſſurances and promiſes, that (in caſe he did ſo) it ſhould not be in vain.

VERS. 21, 22, 23.

Acquaint now thy ſelf with him, and be at peace: thereby good ſhall come unto thee.
Receive, I pray thee, the Law from his mouth, and lay up his words in thine heart.
If thou return to the Almighty, thou ſhalt be built up, thou ſhalt put away iniquity from thy Tabernacles.

ELiphaz having reproved Job for ſin, and preſt him with the remembrance of the Judgments of God againſt ſinners: now turns his ſpeech into a ſerious Exhortation moving him to ſeek the favour of God, and humble himſelf, Acquaint now thy ſelf with him, and be at peace. From this courſe and method in which Eliphaz deals with Job, take this note:

> That in dealing with ſinners we are not only to threaten, but to perſwade and propoſe the promiſes of peace to them.

Daniel dealt ſo with Nebuchadnezzar; yea, though he had told him of a decree in heaven paſt againſt him (Dan. 4. 22. 27.) yet he gives him faithful counſel, and exhorts him to break off his ſins by righteouſneſs, and his iniquities by ſhewing mercy to the poor, if it might be a lengthning of his tranquility, or (as we put in the Margin) a healing of his error. Hopes of mercy prevail with many, more then fear of wrath, and they are ſooner led then driven unto Chriſt. Thus Eliphaz; Acquaint now thy ſelf with him, and be at peace.

This verſe 21. contains two general Propoſitions. Firſt, a Propoſition concerning duty, in the former part of the verſe; Acquaint now thy ſelf, &c. Secondly, Concerning mercy in the latter, thereby good ſhall come unto thee. This duty of acquainting himſelf with God, and being at peace with him, is explained in verſ. 22. Receive, I pray thee, the Law from his mouth, and lay up his words in thine heart. That's a good Comment upon, Acquaint now thy ſelf with him, and be at peace. The Propoſition of mercy, or the promiſes laid down in the cloſe of that verſe, are drawn out in all the following part of this Chapter, in which Eliphaz by moſt ample propoſals of good things, doth provoke Job to turn from thoſe ſins of which he ſuppoſed him guilty, and to return to God.

Promiſſionibus invitat ampliſſimis, quæ & in ſe veræ ſunt & cum lege cõſentiunt, non tamen perpetua ut Eliphaz putat. Merc.

Acquaint now thy ſelf with God.

The Original word which we render to acquaint, hath ſome variety of ſignifications: As firſt to be familiar with another. And ſo it is uſed by David (Pſal. 139. 3.) to ſhew the Intimacy which God hath with all our wayes, works, and thoughts; O Lord (ſaith David) thou haſt ſearched me and known me, &c. thou art acquainted with all my wayes; As if he had ſaid, Lord, thou knoweſt my wayes infinitely more clearly and diſtinctly, then any of my neereſt acquaintance, who converſe with me every day. It is uſed, ſecondly, to expreſs the cuſtomary doing of a thing (Numb. 22. 30.) Balaams Aſs ſpake thus by a miracle, Was I ever wont to do thus unto thee? Hath it been my cuſtom, or have I familiarly ſerved thee thus, ſaid the Aſs, when he thruſt Balaam againſt the wall.

שכן Profuit, commodus, aptus fuit. Profice cum deo. Rab. Moſ.

Thirdly, To profit; one of the Rabbins tranſlates the Text thus, Profit with God; as who ſhould ſay, thou haſt been an unprofitable ſervant to God all this while; be thou now profitable unto him, ſerve him and his Providences, advance his name and glory; or thus rather, Thou haſt but played the Truant hitherto, be thou now a good proficient in the School of Divine doctrine and diſcipline under the holy precepts and various providences of God. We find it applied to that ſenſe at the ſecond verſe of this Chapter; Can a man be profitable unto God, as he that is wiſe may be profitable to himſelf? Man cannot be profitable unto God, or add any advantage to him by what he doth, but man may be profitable unto himſelf, or do himſelf good in doing the good will of God; yea God reckons it, and rewards man for it, as if he had been profitable to him, when he acts as becomes a faithful ſervant to him. So ſome expound it here, be profitable unto God, be a faithful and induſtrious ſervant unto him: having received his talents, do not lay them up in a napkin, hide them not in the earth.

Redi cum ipſo in gratiam. Bez. Accommoda te illi. Tygur.

Thirdly, Maſter Broughton reads thus, Reconcile thee now unto him. That's Goſpel language, like that of Paul (2 Cor. 5. 20.) Now then we are Ambaſſadors for Chriſt, as though God did beſeech you by us, we pray you in Chriſts ſtead, be ye reconciled to God. So he conceives Eliphaz ſpeaking here, I pray thee now reconcile thy ſelf unto God. Maſter Beza reaches that ſence fully, Return into his favour, get into his heart again; God hath as it were lockt thee out of his heart, and ſhut the door upon thee, now get in again; and the Tygurine reads very aptly, Accommodate thy ſelf to him, that is, every way ſuit thy ſelf to him; thou haſt heretofore been humorous, or haſt followed thine own ſpirit, and haſt labour'd to pleaſe thy ſelf, now accommodate thy ſelf to him, or comply with him in every thing, be no more at thine own but at his diſpoſe. All theſe rendrings comply well both with the words and the general ſcope of Eliphaz in this part of his diſcourſe. Our tranſlation fully joyns with the firſt of them.

Aſſueſce cum eo. Pagn. Reg. Vatabl.

Acquaint now thy ſelf with him.] Get into a familiarity with God. The word implieth a likeneſs, or a ſuitableneſs between two in their wills and affections, in their wayes and counſels; for from likeneſs in theſe familiarity or acquaintance doth ariſe. So that Eliphaz here ſpeaketh to Job as one that had eſtranged himſelf and departed from God, as one who had broken off Communion with God, and ſo he muſt needs have done, had he run ſuch a courſe of wickedneſs as Eliphaz charged him with, in the former part of this Chapter. Therefore upon that ſuppoſition he gives Job wholeſome advice, Acquaint now thy ſelf with him.

Hence obſerve, Firſt, That as man by nature is a ſtranger from God, ſo every act of ſin, eſpecially great and continued actings of ſin, breed a further eſtrangement from God.

We act the part of nature every time we ſin, and that in a proportion brings us back in ſome degree to what we were by nature, ſtrangers unto God. A godly man (who hath had acquaintance with God) ſinning puts back his acquaintance, and a diſtance grows between God and him. Believers after great ſins and follies committed, are not forward to come into the preſence of God, they have a kind of liſtleſneſs to duty, a liſtleſneſs to prayer, and to all acts of communion with God. And God himſelf appears as if he did not much care for them when they come, they have not thoſe Communications from God which he uſually vouchſafeth his, God doth not give them the meeting as formerly; they do not find the Lord preſently, though they ſeek him earneſtly. So that both wayes there is an Eſtrangement; ſin ſeparates between God and the ſoul, not onely judicially but naturally. If God ſhould not depart from ſinners, or command them to depart from him, yet they would of themſelves depart from him. It is not poſſible for one, who willingly lives in ſin, to live willingly in the preſence of God: For as to be caſt out of the preſence of God, is the extreameſt puniſhment of wicked men, ſo alſo is their being in his preſence. The ſame thing is both their deſire and their puniſhment. They are puniſhed with a departure from God, and they deſire nothing more then to be out of his preſence.

Acquaint thy ſelf now with God.] Secondly, Whereas Eliphaz exhorting Job to repentance, counſels him to acquaint himſelf with God,

Obſerve, That Repentance is the renewing of our Communion or acquaintance with God.

As ſin is a turning from God, ſo repentance is a returning to God; 'tis a change firſt of our mind, and then of our way. Impenitency brings the ſoul into an acquaintance and unholy familiarity with Satan; Repentance brings back the ſoul into its former acquaintance, and holy familiarity with God. As the firſt converſion (which is from a ſtate of ſin) ſo the ſecond and every renewed converſion (which is from our falls into ſin) renews our converſe with the moſt high.

Thirdly, take this general obſervation;

A godly man is (as we may ſay) one of Gods acquaintance or familiars.

God calleth Abraham his friend; friendſhip cannot be without familiarity, there muſt be acquaintance before there can be love; if therefore there be friendſhip and love between God and man, there muſt be Acquaintance; we cannot love either perſons or things, while unknown.

But it may be ſaid, how can we, who are at ſuch a diſtance, acquaint our ſelves with God?

I anſwer, we (who of our ſelves are afar off) are made nigh by the bloud of Jeſus Chriſt, and being thus made nigh in our ſtate, we draw nigh or acquaint our ſelves with him by ſeveral Acts. As firſt, To think or meditate of God, is to acquaint our ſelves with and draw nigh to God; meditation is an inward diſcourſe and converſe with God, it is a Soliloquie between God and the ſoul. Acquaintance is got by Conference: when friends meet and confer, that doth not only begin, but confirm, ſtrengthen, and heighten their acquaintance. Saints have many thoughts of God, and that's their acquaintance with God. How precious are thy thoughts to me, O God! (ſaith David, Pſal. 139. 17.) how great is the ſum of them! when I awake I am ſtill with thee. How was David ſtill or ever with God? He was ſo in his thoughts, and meditations, in the actings and goings forth of his ſoul to him. Now he that is ſtill or ever with a perſon, muſt needs be acquainted with him, I am ſtill with thee, alwayes meditating upon thee. We find him again in the ſame holy frame (Pſal. 63. 5, 6.) My ſoul ſhall be ſatisfied as with marrow and fatneſs, and my mouth ſhall praiſe thee with joyful lips; while I remember thee upon my bed, and meditate on thee in the night watches. As the Lord is ever thinking upon his people, they are written upon his heart, and graven upon the palms of his hand; and when his outward actings towards them are ſuch, as may ſeem to intimate that his heart is withdrawn from all intimacy with them, yet even then he thinks moſt of them. This he acknowledgeth concerning Ephraim (Jer. 31. 20.) Since I ſpake againſt him I do earneſtly remember him ſtill. Since I ſpake againſt him, that is, ſince I ſpake againſt him by words of rebuke and correction, ſince I ſpake againſt him by rods of chaſtiſement and correction, (as Ephraim found and confeſſed he had; Thou didſt chaſtiſe me, and I was chaſtiſed) ſince I ſpake thus againſt him, I do earneſtly remember him ſtill. I remember him, and I remember him ſtrongly, my heart is much upon him. And when the Lord ſaith thus, we are not to underſtand it as a man will remember an Enemy, when he ſpeaks againſt him; hee'l remember him indeed, and that earneſtly to plot miſchief againſt him, and to execute his revenge; but the meaning is, I remember him in mercy, my affections go out to him, my bowels are moved towards him. Such is the remembrance which God had of Ephraim, even when he was ſpeaking againſt him and ſmiting him. Now as the Lord doth remember his people at all times, and earneſtly remember them at ſometimes. So his people in their proportion do earneſtly remember the Lord, they mind him often, they would mind him alwayes, they like to retain God (which the natural man liketh not, Rom. 1. 28.) in their knowledg, or to acknowledg God; They have not ſome flitting tranſient thoughts and acknowledgments of God (as a carnal man may have) but they fix and retain God in their thoughts and acknowledgments; they think of God, what he is in his nature, they think what God is in all his perfections, they meditate of all his glory, of his juſtice, of his mercy, of his faithfulneſs, of his power, of his truth, of his unchangeableneſs, of his all-ſufficiency, they acquaint themſelves with God in all theſe; for indeed we are never acquainted with God, till we come to a diſtinct knowledg of him in all theſe parts of his glory, which yet are all but one and the ſame glorious God. To know only in general that there is a God, is not to acquaint our ſelves with God; our acquaintance with him conſiſts in a ſpiritual and fiducial knowledg of all his revealed perfections, ſo far as it is poſſible or lawful for man to ſearch and know. To be acquainted with any man, notes more then a general knowledg of him, how much more to be acquainted with God.

Secondly, We acquaint our ſelves with God, not only when we ſtudy his nature, or what he is, but when we ſtudy his works, or what he hath done. God is viſible in his works. That his name is near, his wondrous works declare (Pſal. 75. 1.) We may acquaint our ſelves much with God in the works of Creation, but more in the works of Providence, in thoſe we may moſt legibly read his name, that is, his greatneſs and power, as alſo his goodneſs and mercy.

Thirdly, We acquaint our ſelves with God in the ſtudy of his Word; there he hath made a full diſcovery of himſelf and of his Will; O how I love thy Law (ſaith David) my meditation is in it night and day. The word of God is the demonſtration of the holineſs of God. There he hath ſet forth himſelf, how juſt, how pure, and how gracious he is. The Word is a glaſs in which God is ſeen, therefore acquaint thy ſelf with the word of God, and thou ſhalt be acquainted with God: reading and hearing the word of God is our going to God for Counſel. As we acquaint our ſelves with a man when we go to him, and ask his advice and counſel in any matter, or conſult his books; ſo every time we either read or hear the word of God in faith, we are asking counſel of God, and ſo acquainting our ſelves with him.

Fourthly, We eſpecially acquaint our ſelves with God in Prayer. That is nothing elſe but the opening of our hearts to God, a declaring of our wants to him. Prayer is the aſcending, the lifting up of the ſoul to God, therefore in prayer we acquaint our ſelves with God.

Fifthly, Our daily holy walking, is a daily acquainting our ſelves with God, every ſtep of a holy life is both towards and with God. The life of Enoch (who was too holy for a life here on earth, and therefore he was tranſlated that he ſhould not ſee death, his life I ſay) is deſcribed thus, Enoch walked with God (Gen. 5. 24.) God and Enoch were like two familiars or intimate friends walking together; And becauſe he took ſo much delight in Gods acquaintance, God took him from all acquaintance with men; ſo ſaith that text, Enoch walked with God, and was not, for God took him. He was ſo taken with God, that God took him; or as the Author to the Hebrews ſaith, tranſlated him (Chap. 11. 5.) He was before tranſlated from nature to Grace, and he proved ſo great a proficient in that ſchool, that he was tranſlated from Grace to Glory (as it were per ſaltem,) by a leap over the grave; for he ſaw not death; From which ſad viſion, but one more (that I read of in all the Scripture, Elias by name) was excuſed before he was admitted to the beatifical viſion. Holy walking is the ſum of all our acquaintance with God, and our fulleſt acquaintance with God is but the iſſue of our holy walkings.

To draw towards a cloſe of this point, we may take notice, That there is a twofold acquaintance with God: Firſt, from neceſſity, when we come to him, and deſire to have to do with him, preſt with our own wants, fears, or afflictions; of this the Prophet ſpeaketh (Iſa. 26. 16.) Lord, in trouble have they viſited thee, they have poured out a prayer when thy chaſtning was upon them. And of this the Pſalmiſt ſpeaks (Pſal. 78. 34.) When he ſlew them they ſought him, and they returned and enquired early after God: nevertheleſs, they did but flatter him with their mouth, &c. Theſe make God their refuge, not their choice. They, I grant, who have made God their choice in good times, may comfortably make him their refuge in evil times. But to neglect God while it is well with us, and only to run to him while it is ill with us, or to have our evils and burdens removed, is to acquaint our ſelves with God, becauſe we cannot chooſe, or becauſe we cannot be without him, not becauſe we have choſen him, or deſire to be with him. As there is a patience, ſo there is an acquaintance perforce. Though God doth not refuſe acquaintance with many poor ſouls, when their neceſſities drive them to him, yet it is beſt to acquaint our ſelves with him for the love we bear to him, or the deſire we have to enjoy him, rather then (though we all have need of him, and are bound to come to him becauſe we have) for the need we have of him. And therefore, ſecondly, there is an acquaintance with God from pure love. As when we come to a friend, having nothing to do but to ſee him, and to renew or ſtrengthen our acquaintance with him. We do not come to load him with our cares, or adviſe with him about our buſineſſes, or deſire a courteſie of him, but, meerly and purely to ſhew our love to him. Thus to come to God when we are not preſt with fears, nor pincht with wants, nor clouded with doubts, nor vexed with troubles, is the moſt noble and ingenuous way of acquainting our ſelves with him. When we (as it were) make a journey to God, having nothing to do with him, but to viſit him and to deſire further communion with him; nothing to do with him, but to behold his excellency and his glory; nothing to do with him, but to tell him what our hearts are towards him; how we love him, how we depend upon him, how we deſire to pleaſe him, and to commit our wayes to him, to acquaint God with thoſe things which only concern our holy walking with him; this is to ſeek pure acquaintance with him. The Lord ſaith of Abraham his acquaintant or friend (Gen. 18. 17.) Shall I hide from Abraham the thing that I am to do? I ſhould not deal with him as with my friend, if I did ſo. A friend who is as our own ſoul (Deut. 13. 6.) ſhould know all that is in our ſouls. Now as God (whether we will or no) is acquainted with all that is in our ſouls; ſo a ſoul acquainted with God, will let him know all: Shall I hide from God the thing that I am about to do? ſhall I not tell him how it is with me? To acquaint our ſelves thus with God is a ſweet and precious duty. Much might be ſaid about it, I ſhall only adde theſe two things; Firſt, That all our acquaintance with God muſt be had through the mediator; There is no getting neer the Father but by the Son. Secondly, That the more we are acquainted with God, the more we are transformed into his likeneſs. Some have altered the habit of their bodies, yea the diſpoſitions of their minds by long acquaintance with others, and have looked or appeared like them, by often looking upon or being with them. When Moſes had been forty dayes in the Mount talking with God, his face ſhone, ſome rayes of a divine glory darted out from him, ſo that Aaron and the children of Iſrael were afraid to come nigh him (Exod. 34. 30.) And thus every one who gets up into the Mount by faith, and acquaints himſelf with God, gets ſomewhat of God, which will draw a reverence upon him among men. As when Chriſt ſhall appear hereafter to us in glory, we ſhall be like him (ſaith the Apoſtle John 1 Ep. 3. 2.) for we ſhall ſee him as he is; ſo according to the ſight which we have of and our acquaintance with Chriſt in the wayes of grace here, will our likeneſs be unto him. The more we are with God, the more we have of God. Acquaint now thy ſelf with him,

And be at peace.

There is a threefold Interpretation of this clauſe.

Firſt, it may be taken as an Effect of what was ſaid before, Acquaint thy ſelf with God, and be at peace; that is, If thou acquaint thy ſelf with God, thou ſhalt have peace. So in the Hebrew often the Imperative mood is put for the future tenſe, as, Do this, and live, (according to the tenure of the Covenant of works) that is, Do this, and thou ſhalt live. So acquaint thy ſelf with him, and be at peace; that is, thou ſhalt have peace. Peace comprehends all good; good of the mind, good of the body, good of the eſtate. When the Hebrews ſay, Peace be unto you, they ſay as much in that one word, as the Greeks ſay in three; whereof the firſt reſpects the welfare of the mind; the ſecond, the welfare or health of the body; and the third the ſucceſs of all our affairs and undertakings. So that while Eliphaz ſaith to Job according to this reading, Thou ſhalt be at peace, it is a promiſe of all manner of good flowing in upon the renewing of his acquaintance with,

Imperativū pro futuro paſſim in hac lingua. Merc.

Quando Hebræi dicunt pax tibi, ſignificant id quod Græci tribus verbis enunciant, χαίρειν, ὑγιαίνειν & εὐπραγεῖν quorū primū ad animum refertur, ſecundum ad corpus, tertium ad actiones externas. Druſ.

with, and his returning to a reverential converſe with God. But becauſe this promiſe follows in the next words, thereby good ſhall come unto thee, therefore I underſtand this clauſe as a duty, and not as a promiſe. Acquaint now thy ſelf with him, and be at peace. To be at peace is a diſtinct duty from that of acquainting our ſelves with God, yet neceſſarily following upon it; The words may have theſe two things in them.

Sedatiore animo eſto. Bez. Acquieſce in caſtigationibus Dei, ſatis repugnâſti; ſatis protervè reluctatus es, ergo miteſce.

Firſt, Be at peace, that is, be quiet and content under the chaſtening hand of God, do not murmur, do not repine. Thou haſt ſtrugled enough already, now lay aſide all impatiency and paſſion, all diſcontents and animoſities; as, do not rage and rave, do not diſtemper and diſcompoſe thy ſelf as thou haſt done; There is a ſtorm upon thee, but be thou of a calm and quiet ſpirit, kiſs the rod, be not angry with it; we may expreſs this frame by that which the Apoſtle Peter makes the chief adorning, or ornament of a woman, that ſhe be of a meek and a quiet ſpirit, which with God is of great price; As meekneſs is a Jewel of the greateſt price that women can wear; ſo it is a moſt rich and precious Jewel for a man to wear: and as at all times, ſo then eſpecially meekneſs and peaceableneſs of ſpirit becomes man, when God ſeems to come in anger and to be at war with him. Bildad ſaid of Job (Chap. 18. v. 4.) He teareth himſelf in his anger; As if he had ſaid, the man's mad or diſtracted: now Eliphaz adviſeth him, Be at peace, be quiet; This is a good interpretation, and we may note from it,

> That it is our Duty to ſit down quiet and ſatisfied under the ſaddeſt diſpenſations of God.

A ſubmitting ſpirit under an afflicting hand, how comely is it? To be at peace in our ſelves, when all is unquiet about us, how bleſſed a ſight is it? There are ſome who trouble themſelves a great deal more then all the troubles that are upon them can. Man is naturally a very unquiet creature, an angry piece of fleſh, when God is angry, he is apt to ſtorm: till his heart is ſubdued to God, he cannot bear the hand of God. Wicked men naturally (as the Prophet Eſay found them, Chap. 51. 20.) are like a wild bull in a net, full of the fury of God; and not only ſo, but full of fury againſt God, throwing up the duſt, and moyling themſelves when the net of God hath caught them, or when God hath caught them in his net. God catcheth his own people in his net many times as well as the wicked. His own people are like a dove in a net, but the wicked are like a wild Bull in a net. I grant, the Doves will flutter a while when the net hath caught them. Impatiency doth often break out in the beſt of Saints: it is a hard thing to keep the heart quiet within while our eſtate is unquiet without, and to be at peace in our ſelves, when God ſeems to be at war with us. It is hard for us to hold our peace, much more to be at peace in an afflicted condition; yet this leſſon, though very hard, Saints have learned. David ſaith (Pſal. 39. 9.) I was dumb, I opened not my mouth, becauſe thou didſt it. His was not a ſullen ſilence, but a patient ſilence. He had not a word to ſay againſt God, when God ſpake hard words againſt him, yea, when God was at blows at ſharps with him. Paul alſo had learned in every eſtate to be content (Phil. 4. 11.) However the world went with him, he was at peace.

Cum eo pacem habe, in gratiam redi qui nunc alienatus es, & velut hoſtis.

Secondly, Be at peace, may refer unto God, and ſo it is but the heightning of our acquaintance with him; for, firſt there muſt be an acquainting, and then a making up of peace; when friends fall out, they muſt firſt ſpeak with one another, before the breach can be healed; if they do not treat, there can be no reconciliation. After treating comes peace; As peace is the fruit of the lips (Iſa. 57. 19.) when God treats with man by man, ſo when man treats with man, and when man treats with God. Acquaint now thy ſelf with him, call for a treaty, and therein make thy peace. Be at peace with him, do not any longer continue thy unholy war with God. Eliphaz ſuppoſing Job as a man ſetting himſelf againſt God, had reaſon to beſpeak him thus.

> Hence note, That till we do acquaint our ſelves with God, we can have no peace with him.

The wicked are like the troubled Sea, whoſe waves caſt up mire and dirt; there is no peace to the wicked, ſaith my God (Iſa. 57. 21.) Why no peace to the wicked? The wicked have no acquaintance with God, they are ſtrangers, they are afar off from God, and God beholds them afar off, therefore there is no peace to them: if they have any peace, it is a falſe peace, a deceitful peace, or it is but a ſhort peace, which will quickly break out into a war again: when once Conſcience is awakened, when that ſleeping Lyon is rouzed, what will become of all their peace? they will then find, indeed, that their ſoul is among Lyons; and that they have been only ſecure, not ſafe; or that theirs hath been at beſt, a truce only, not a peace; no peace till acquainted with God, and no acquaintance with God can produce peace, but that which is by Jeſus Chriſt: He is the Peace-maker, who is alſo the Mediator; ſinners cannot have peace by any immediate acquaintance with God, for he is a conſuming fire, and ſinners ſtanding alone, are but as dry ſtubble before him. When we are made nigh to, or acquainted with God by the blood of Jeſus Chriſt (and not till then) are we at peace with him. Acquaint thy ſelf with him, and be at peace: no peace without acquaintance with God, no acquaintance with God but by Chriſt; therefore no peace but by Chriſt.

> Secondly, Obſerve, That God is ready to give peace to, or to be at peace with thoſe that acquaint themſelves with him.

Acquaint thy ſelf with him, and be at peace; as if he ſhould ſay, thou ſhalt certainly be at peace with him, if thou doeſt but acquaint thy ſelf with him; for the Lord will not always chide; his love is everlaſting, but his anger towards his, continues but for a moment; As the wiſdom of God in man, ſo much more, the moſt wiſe God, is gentle, and eaſie to be entreated. The Lord is found of thoſe who ſeek him not (Iſa. 65. 1.) Surely then he will be found of thoſe that ſeek him; he is not implacable, no, nor inexorable. The Lord hath declared himſelf full of Compaſſion to returning ſinners, ſo full of compaſſion that he ſeeks the acquaintance of ſinners, and beſeeches them to be reconciled to him; much more will he be acquainted with them who beſeech him that they may be reconciled to him. Fury is not in me (ſaith the Lord, Iſa. 27. 4, 5.) who would ſet the bryars and thorns in battel againſt me? that is, who would be ſo fooliſh as to encourage ſinful men to be ſo fool-hardy as to ſtand out againſt me, or contend with me, for alas, (as it follows in the text) I would go through them, I would burn them together. There's no dealing with me upon thoſe terms; but I will tell you upon what terms a ſinner may deal with me; Let him lay hold of my ſtrength, that he may make peace with me, and he ſhall make peace with me; that is, he ſhall not loſe his labour, he ſhall find peace, if he take hold of my ſtrength. One would think he ſhould rather have ſaid, let him take hold of my mercy and goodneſs, but he ſaith, Let him take hold of my ſtrength. To oppoſe the ſtrength of God is moſt dangerous, but by faith to take hold of it, that's both the duty and the priviledge of an humbled ſinner. Proud ſinners oppoſe the ſtrength of God, humbled ſinners take hold of it, as their ſtrength. As a man ſeeing another whom he hath offended, but is unable to reſiſt, or make his party good with him, with much ſubmiſſion takes hold of his arm or weapon, endeavouring by earneſt ſuit to ſtay him from ſmiting. And indeed to take hold of the ſtrength of God, is to take hold on his mercy: The ſtrength of God to ſave ſinners, lies in his mercy, and that mercy is in his Son, who is his ſtrength to ſave ſinners; if a ſinner lay hold of this ſtrength, the mercy of God in his Son, that he may make peace with God, if this be his deſign, he ſhall make peace; there ſhall not be a treaty with God in Chriſt for peace in vain; if a ſinner ſhould take hold of the ſtrength of his own righteouſneſs and performances, if he ſhould take hold of the ſtrength of all the Angels in heaven, he could not make peace with God, nor would God agree with him upon thoſe terms. Such a ſoul muſt return (re infecta) without his errand. God is ready to be at peace with us, but we muſt have our peace in his way, not in our own. Acquaint now thy ſelf with him, and be at peace. And this peace, whether in our ſelves or with God, is no light or unprofitable thing, as Eliphaz to provoke Job to purſue and ſeek after it, tells him in the laſt words of this verſe,

Thereby good ſhall come unto thee.

Thereby; whereby? or by what? what is it that ſhall procure, or produce this good? The anſwer is at hand; Thy acquaintance with God, thy being at peace will procure all good things for thee. Acquaint thy ſelf with him, and be at peace: be at peace to thy own ſpirit, be quiet; be at peace with God, be reconciled, every way good ſhall come unto thee. M. Broughton renders, Proſperity ſhall come unto thee: the ſence is the ſame. Others read, in ſtead of good ſhall come unto thee, thy comings in ſhall be good: thou ſhalt have a good revenue, a good in-come: whereas before evil came upon thee, now thy comings in ſhall be good. This is of the ſame meaning with our tranſlation. I ſhall not need to ſtay upon the opening of the words, there is no difficulty in them.

Proventus tuus erit bonus. Druſ.

From their dependance, in that he ſaith, Acquaint thy ſelf with him, and be at peace, ſo ſhall good come unto thee, Theſe words are brought in by way of inference upon the former, whence > Obſerve, That when we are eſtranged from God, good is ſtranged from us.

God can ſtop the Influences of all our mercies from us, he can lay an embargo upon all Creatures from bringing any good to us; though there be ſtore of treaſure and rich Commodity in the place, yet he can bar up all, that no good can come unto us; yea, the Lord in ſuch caſes doth often lay a ſtop upon the ſpirit of prayer in his own people, and when the heart is ſtopt that we cannot pray, then uſually good is ſtopt and kept back from coming to us; Prayer is that which fetches in mercy and good things through the love of God in Jeſus Chriſt. Prayer may have a twofold ſtop. Firſt, Prayer may have a ſtop in the heart; Secondly, Prayer which comes forth of the heart may have a ſtop in heaven; the Lord doth even ſhut out prayer ſometimes, and when prayer is ſhut out, no good can get out to us. Prayer is ſent upon a meſſage to heaven; and if our meſſenger be ſhut out of doors and not admitted in, what anſwer can we expect by his meſſage? And the Lord as he doth ſtop ſuch from the receiving of further good, ſo from receiving of good by what they have already. We may have that which in the nature of it is good, and yet have no good by it; God can ſtop the creature in our hands, that it ſhall not at all give us any Comfort, as well as he can ſtop any creature comfort from coming into our hands. Unleſs the Lord (in one ſence) ſtop the creature, it quickly leaks out all the Comfort which he hath put into it, and proves to us indeed, what ſin hath made it, a broken Ciſtern: And unleſs the Lord open the creature, the creature cannot give forth that good which it hath; It will be to us as a Ciſtern without a vent to paſs out the water for our uſe. There's many a one who hath enough in his hand (take it in any kind) but he enjoys nothing of it, becauſe the Lord locks up the conduit, or the ciſtern, and then how much good ſoever there is in it, there's none for him. It is all one to us, whether we have only a broken Ciſtern for our portion, or a Ciſtern always lock't up; for as the one lets all the water run out, ſo the other holds all the water in; we are as far from good, if our Ciſtern hold all, as if it held nothing at all. It is then not only our duty and our holineſs to acquaint our ſelves and be at peace with God, but our wiſdom and our intereſt; For it is as he pleaſeth, always, and uſually as we pleaſe him, that either we have any thing that is good coming to us, or that any good cometh to us by that which we have.

Secondly, Note (which is a Corollary from the former Obſervation,)

> That the renewing of our Communion with God, and making peace with him, is followed with all manner of mercies and good things.

So ſhall good come unto thee.] There was never any man a looſer by acquaintance with God: Gods acquaintance is a gainful acquaintance: Our acquaintance with God, ſhould we conſider it abſtractly and ſeparate from all benefit but his very acquaintance, yet that is benefit enough; God is the chiefeſt good, and therefore when we enjoy him, we enjoy all good. The enjoyment of God himſelf is infinitely more then the enjoyment of all created good things that come from God. Friends are ſometimes in thoſe heights of friendſhip and nobleneſs of ſpirit one to another, that they count the enjoyment of one another to be more then all the benefits they can heap upon or reap by one another; it is your good Company, ſaith ſuch a friend, and your acquaintance that delights me more then all the good you can beſtow upon me. And is not God much more ſo to us? Thus (I ſay) acquaintance with God alone is all good; but beſides (as the point leads us to conſider) God gives out good things from himſelf, to all his holy acquaintants; temporal or bodily good comes to us by his acquaintance, and ſo alſo (and that chiefly) doth ſpiritual or ſoul good. Acquaint thy ſelf with God, and the dews of grace, ſhowers of the Spirit ſhall fall into thy boſom. Acquaint thy ſelf with God, and ſpiritual comfort ſhall flow in unto thee, ſpiritual ſtrength ſhall flow in unto thee, thy ſoul ſhall be filled as with marrow and fatneſs. And as good ſhall come to thee in perſon, ſo to thine; to thy family and poſterity good ſhall come. And as God will cauſe good to come to ſuch, ſo to ſtay and abide with them. As good comes, ſo good continues according to the command and commiſſion which it hath from God. Thus he promiſed in the Prophet (Iſa. 48. 18.) in caſe his people had harkned to his commandments; Then had thy peace been as a river, and thy poſterity as the waves of the Sea. Thy peace and proſperity had not been as a Land flood or brooks of water which fail in ſummer when we have moſt need of them (all worldly things are apt to do ſo) but they ſhould have flowed perpetually as a river doth, which is fed by a conſtant Spring, or as the Sea doth which is the feeder of all Springs. A godly man gets not only a large portion of good things, but a laſting portion, yea a portion of thoſe good things which are everlaſting, by acquainting himſelf with God. And becauſe by acquaintance with God ſo much good comes to us; therefore Eliphaz preſſeth Job further to it in the next verſe.

Verſ. 22. Receive, I pray thee, the Law from his mouth, and lay up his words in thine heart.

Receive,] That is, learn from his mouth; he that teaches gives, and he that learns receives; and the Hebrew word which we render here to Receive, ſignifies not ordinary receiving, but receiving with an earneſt deſire; yea, it implyeth a kind of violence in deſire, ſuch as they have who take ſpoils in war. They flie upon the ſpoil, and catch it with as much eagerneſs as they won it with courage. So Receive the Law from his mouth. David ſaith, I have rejoyced in thy word, more then they that find great ſpoils (Pſal. 119. 162.) O how ſtrongly did his heart run out to the word? and there is an Elegancy alſo in it, that this word which ſignifies to receive the Law, doth alſo ſignifie the Law or doctrine to be received (Prov. 4. 2.) I give you good doctrine, forſake you not my Law. The word which is there uſed for doctrine is the ſame that is here rendred to receive, the reaſon is, becauſe wholſome doctrine is worthy to be received, and ought to be received willingly, chearfully and gladly, and therefore the Goſpel which is the higheſt and moſt precious doctrine is called an Acceptable doctrine: This is a faithful ſaying, and worthy of all Acceptation (1 Tim. 1. 11.) The Goſpel is worthy not only of Acceptation, or of great, but of all Acceptation, and that from all men, even from the Greateſt; And ſo alſo is the Law, for, as ſhall be opened further afterwards, the Law in this place comprehends the Goſpel alſo. Receive the Law at his mouth.

Dat Magiſter quando docet, capit diſcipulus quando diſcit. Druſ.

לקח Verbum hoc ad prædam quæ cum violentia tollitur referri poteſt. Ex hac radice dicitur doctrina.

לקח quaſi accepta vel accipienda, quia ſc. lex debet accipi grato & lubenti animo.

Further, The word which we expreſs Receive, is rendred by ſome to buy; we may connect both ſences here. Receive the Law as a thing bought, and carry it home with thee. That of Solomon (Prov. 23. 23.) Suits it well; Buy the truth, and ſell it not. Truth is a Commodity the trade whereof goes but one way; all Civil Trades and Merchandizes are continued by buying and ſelling, but this ſpiritual trade is continued by buying only, without ſelling; it will be our profit to have this Commodity always upon our hands, or rather always in our hands. Thus here, Receive the Law at a price, buy it, and keep it; not that the Lord doth expect any price from us, or that we can bring any thing to him valuable for it. We buy it, when we take pains for it, when we do our utmoſt endeavour to receive the truth, when we receive the truth, not only as it is offered and brought home to us, but when we go out for it, and ſeek after it in all the means which God hath appointed as conveyances of it, that's buying the Law of truth.

Receive the Law.] Again, We may profitably conſider a double derivation of that word which we tranſlate, Law. Some ſay it is from a root that ſignifies to behold or Contemplate, to Conſider, to look about; and the Law is well expreſt by a word of that ſence, becauſe the whole Law is diligently to be obſerved and conſidered, looked into, and meditated upon, we are alwayes to behold it, and that in every part. For the whole Law is copulative, and he that offends in one part offends in all. David ſpeaking of the righteous man, man, (Pſal. 1.2.) ſaith, he meditates in the law of the Lord day and night. What's meditation? but the Inward view of a thing, or the beholding it with an Intellectual eye; meditation is the continual turning of things over in the mind, to behold the excellencies and perfections that are in them.

תורת a radice תור Explorare aut circumquaq; luſtrare quia lex univerſa eſt diligenter obſervanda, ne quis in uno offendat.

A radice ירה Quod eſt pluere irrigare; quare commune & fere idem eſt nomen, pluviæ Doctoris & legiſlatoris.

Non elongabit arte pluviam.

Sanctè colludit propheta nominibus doctoris ſeu legiſlatoris & pluviæ, ſeu imbris matutini & ſerotini.

Secondly, Say others, it proceeds from another radical word, that ſignifies to rain, and that not only ſome ſmall driſling dewing rain, but full ſhowers, or as we ſay to pour down; and in the Hebrew, the ſame word ſignifies, to rain, and to teach, becauſe teaching by the word is like raining, or the ſending down of rain. The Apoſtle (Heb. 6.7.) alludes to it. For the earth which drinketh in the rain that cometh oft upon it, &c. by the earth he means thoſe who hear the word or doctrine, which comes down upon them like rain to ſoften their hearts, and make them fruitful. There are two other Texts of Scripture very ſuitable to this Expoſition (Iſa. 30. 20.) Though the Lord give you the bread of adverſity, and the water of affliction, yet ſhall not thy teachers be removed into Corners any more, but thine eye ſhall ſee thy teachers. Thy teachers ſhall not be removed, ſo we render: but ſtrictly from the letter of the Hebrew we may read it thus: Though the Lord give thee the bread of adverſity, &c. yet ſhall not thy rain be removed from thee. It may ſeem ſtrange that they ſhould have the bread of adverſity, and the water of Affliction, and yet have alſo rain which naturally cauſeth the earth to bring forth bread, and fills the pools with water. But the Prophet who ſpeaks of corporal bread and water in the former part of the verſe, ſpeaks of ſpiritual rain in the latter, making this ſo full a compenſation to the people of God, for the want of the other two, that they ſhould have no cauſe to complain of it. As if the Prophet had ſaid, Though you are cut ſhort in outward things, yet you ſhall not be ſhortned in ſpirituals, the rain of holy doctrine ſhall not be removed from you, or as we tranſlate, thy teachers ſhall not be removed, &c. Some amongſt us would have the teachers of holy doctrine removed, leſt by feeding them the bread and water of the Land ſhould fail; as if the charge of publick preaching the riches of the Grace of Chriſt would be an undoing, or at leaſt an impoveriſhing of the Nation. Whereas (I touch it only by the way) the Prophet comforts the people of God in the midſt of all their wants and outward afflictions, that they ſhould not want the preſence of their teachers, nor the ſhowers of holy inſtruction by them. Again (Joel 2.23.) Be glad O Zion, and rejoyce in the Lord your God, for he hath given you the former rain moderately, and he will cauſe to come down the rain, the former rain and the latter rain in the firſt month. That which we render, (The former rain moderately) others tranſlate, a Teacher of righteouſneſs, or according to righteouſneſs; ſo you may find in the Margin of your larger Bibles. And that's the great mercy which Zion is to rejoyce in; for can we think that Zion, the children of Zion ſhould be called ſo earneſtly to rejoyce meerly in natural rain, or the effects of it; becauſe of the abundance of Corn and Wine and Oyl, which the earth well watered uſually produceth? This is too poor a thing (conſidered alone) for Zion, to rejoyce in! Zion or the people of God do and muſt confeſs themſelves unworthy of the leaſt outward mercy, even of a ſhower of rain, or of a ſheaf of corn, and they ought to praiſe God, and be very thankful for theſe; But theſe are not properly, the matter of Zions gladneſs and rejoycing. In theſe the world rejoyceth, Who will ſhew us any good? (Pſal. 4.7.) They are for Corn, and Wine, and Oyl; but Lord (ſaith David) lift up the light of thy Countenance upon me. Thou haſt put gladneſs in mine heart, more then in the time that their corn and their wine encreaſed: As if he had ſaid, Worldly men rejoyce in Corn and Wine; but I rejoyce more in the light of thy countenance. The light of the favour of God, and the light of the knowledge of God, are the chief matters of a believers joy. And this light of holy joy comes in uſually with and by the rain of that doctrine, which falls upon us from the mouth of God in the teachings of his Divine Law. Receive the Law from his mouth.

But you will ſay, What is this Law which comes down like rain from heaven, and which we are to receive from the mouth of God?

I anſwer, The Law may be taken two wayes.

Firſt, Strictly for the ten Commandments, or the five Books of Moſes, which are called the Law.

Secondly, More largely, and ſo the whole word of God is the Law. Chriſt himſelf calls the Book of Pſalms the Law two or three times in the New Teſtament (John 10.34.) Jeſus anſwered them, is it not written in your Law, I have ſaid ye are Gods? where was that written? in the 82 Pſal. verſ. 6. And ſo again, (John 15.25.) But this cometh to paſs, that the word might be fulfilled that is written in their Law, they hated me without a cauſe. What Law doth he mean? thoſe words we find (Pſal. 35.19.) Take one text further? (1 Cor. 14. 21.) In the Law it is written, With men of other tongues and other lips will I ſpeak unto this People. Where is that written? (Iſa. 28.11.) So that the Law in a large ſenſe, is taken for the whole body of the word of God, or for the general Revelation of the myſtery of his will, in which ſenſe we may ſay the Goſpel is the Law: And the Goſpel is expreſly called the Law (or rule) of faith (Rom. 3.27.) So that by Law here we may underſtand whatſoever the Lord hath given us, either as a rule of life, or as a rule of faith. The Seventy tranſlate Eliphaz ſpeaking in that latitude, Receive whatſoever God delivers, declares, or puts forth. Receive, I pray thee, the Law

'Εξηγορίαν.

From his mouth.] From whoſe mouth? from the mouth of God; how can that be? Indeed Moſes went up into the Mount, and was with God fourty dayes, and there received the Law from his mouth; but could Job receive the Law from his mouth as Moſes did? I anſwer, If God had called him to it, as he did Moſes, he might. But that's not the purpoſe of Eliphaz. Neither are we (I conceive) to underſtand him of ſuch a Receiving from the mouth of God, as the old Prophets had who received the mind of God by Immediate Inſpiration, and dictates from God himſelf: for though they were not called up ſolemnly into a Mount (as Moſes) to receive the Law, yet the Spirit was ſent to make known the mind of God to them. And in that ſence the Prophet Jeremiah is ſaid to warn King Zedekiah from the mouth of the Lord (2 Chron. 36.12.) And he did that which was evil in the ſight of the Lord his God, and humbled not himſelf before Jeremiah the Prophet ſpeaking from the mouth of the Lord, that is, he received a word from God by an Extraordinary Revelation to carry unto the King who yet humbled not himſelf. And ſo (Iſa. 30.2.) the Lord complains of his people that walked to go down into Egypt to ſtrengthen themſelves with the ſtrength of Pharaoh, &c. and yet had not asked at his mouth, that is, had not asked direction in the thing according to the wayes of Revelation then in uſe, by enquiring of the Prophets, or of the high Prieſt. And the Lord tells the Prophet Jeremy (Chap. 15.19.) That he ſhould be as his mouth if he would take forth the precious from the vile; as if he had ſaid, if thou art faithful in my work, I will reveal my ſelf to thee, and thou ſhalt ſpeak even as I my ſelf ſpoke, thou ſhalt be as my mouth. Now, I conceive, Eliphaz doth not go thus high when he bids Job receive the Law from the mouth of God, as if he were to expect immediate direction and advice from him. For then, we may be ſaid to receive a rule or a law from the mouth of God, when we receive that which God hath manifeſted at any time as a rule and law for us with the reſt of his people to walk by: they who receive that law once delivered from the mouth of God, may be ſaid to receive the law from his mouth, though they are not the immediate receivers of it, yea, though it were publiſhed ſome thouſands of years before they were born. Some from theſe words, collect that the books of Moſes were written before this time, and that Eliphaz did refer Job to thoſe, bidding him receive that law which the mouth of God had ſpoken to Moſes; but though whether the law were then formally ſpoken or no is a diſpute, yet it is without all diſpute, that the mouth of God had then given a law or rule of life to his people; and ſo Eliphaz might ſafely and truly ſay, Receive, I pray thee, the law from his mouth, there having been a Revelation of the mind of God among the faithful in all ages and times. God never left his people to their own will, nor them to be their own Guide and Counſeller. For when the Apoſtle ſaith (Rom. 2. 14.) that the Gentiles having not a law are a law unto themſelves; his meaning is not that they had no law, but one of their own deviſing. They indeed had not the law of God formally ſpoken to their ears, and preſerved in tables of ſtone, but they had the ſubſtance of the law of God naturally written in their hearts. So then, there hath alwayes been a law from his mouth formally in the Church, and naturally in the world.

Prophetæ ſunt quaſi os dei quia per ipſos loquutus eſt.

Therefore ſaith Eliphaz, Receive the law from his mouth; and when he ſaith, Receive the Law from his mouth, it may have a double Oppoſition.

Firſt, To the will and wiſdom of Job; As if Eliphaz had ſaid, Thou haſt been hitherto a law to thy ſelf, that is, thou haſt followed thy own advice, run on upon thy own head, now receive the law from his mouth. Man naturally hath high thoughts of himſelf; and would be a law to himſelf. Not as (*Rom.*2.14. which place was touched before) The Gentiles having not a law, were a law to themſelves; that is, they had the law of God written in their hearts by nature: but beſides that, there is a law which man would be to himſelf againſt that law of nature written in his heart, and againſt the light of nature ſhining in his conſcience, he would ſet up a law, even his own Luſt, in oppoſition to the law of God. Thus he would be a law to himſelf, and not Receive a law from the mouth of God. Therefore ſaith Eliphaz; Now receive the law from his mouth.

Ex ore ejus notanter dicit, i.e. non ex ore aut arbitrio tuo. Merc.

Secondly, (from his mouth) may be oppoſed to the mouthes of others; as if he ſhould ſay, if thou wilt not truſt us, nor take our word, then truſt God, we would not have thee depend upon us, nor upon any man living, not on the judgment or Authority of any Creature, but receive the law from his mouth; there is a law and a truth come from God, let thy faith be guided, and thy life ordered by that.

Hence Note, It is our duty to receive the rule from God.

The Lord hath power to give us the law, and we muſt receive the law from him. None have power to impoſe a law upon us but God himſelf, nor may we deviſe a law for our ſelves: God is the only Maſter of the Conſcience, he alone can ſay, Receive the law at my mouth. If you ask, what is it to receive the law? I anſwer, it is more then to give it the hearing. To receive, is, Firſt, to believe the law; Secondly, to receive, is to honour and reverence the law; Thirdly, to receive the law, is to yield up our ſelves to the obedience of it, to be caſt into the mould of it, to ſubject our ſelves wholly to the mind of God in it; Then we receive the law when we take the Impreſſions of it, and have as it were the Image and ſtamp of it upon our ſpirits, and in our lives. Fourthly, then we receive it when, as it follows in the Text, we lay up his word in our hearts: barely to receive it is not enough, you muſt lay it up, treaſure it up.

And lay up his word in thy heart.

This is oppoſed,

Firſt, To forgetfulneſs of the word, receive the law and let it not ſlip out of thy memory.

Secondly, It is oppos'd to negligence in the practice of the law, lay it up that it may be forth coming to direct thee in every duty. In Converſion the law is written in the heart; every godly man hath a Copy of the law in his heart: That's the deſcription of a godly man, (*Pſal.*37.31.) The law of God is in his heart, none of his ſteps ſhall ſlide; which is not an univerſal excluſion of all failing and ſlipping, as if every godly man were as much paſt ſinning, as he is paſt periſhing: but when 'tis ſaid, none of his ſteps, the meaning is, few of his ſteps ſhall ſlide, or he ſhall never ſlide ſo in any of his ſteps as not to recover his feet and get up again. He ſhall walk very holily, ſo holily as if all his walkings were but one continued act of holineſs. But, to the text, None of his ſteps ſhall ſlide quite and for ever out of the way, becauſe the law of God is in his heart. What David ſpeaks in that prophetical Pſalm of Chriſt (Pſal. 40. 8. Thy law is within my heart) is true in its degree of every Chriſtian, all the laws of God are in his heart. That Character is again given of them (*Pſal.*84. 5.) In whoſe heart are thy ways; there is a ſuiting of the mind of God and the heart of man together in regeneration. But now the duty ſpoken of in the Text is another thing; for a man that hath the law written in his heart, may yet poſſibly forget to lay up the word and law of God in his heart, he may (under temptation and the preſſures of corruption) be negligent in that; it is the work of a godly man, who hath the law of God in his heart already, continually to lay up the law in his heart; and ſo we are to underſtand ſuch Scriptures as theſe (*Prov.*7.3.) Keep my Commandments and live, and my law as the apple of thine eye, bind them on thy fingers, write them on the table of thine heart, &c. The firſt writing of the law in the heart is by the finger of the Spirit, by Gods own finger. As it was God that firſt wrote the law in tables of ſtone with his own finger, ſo it is he that writes the law in theſe fleſhly Tables of the heart by the finger of the Spirit: yet Solomon perſwades his ſon to write the law upon the Table of his heart: when grace is received, and the law once written in our hearts, we do as it were put in ſeveral freſh Copies of the law, we are continually writing divine notions and Inſtructions upon our hearts; this renewed act is aſcribed to us, becauſe we through grace joyn in it. We have an Expreſſion of like import (*Prov.*4.21.) My ſon attend to my words, encline thine ear to my ſayings: let them not depart from thine eyes, keep them in the midſt of thine heart. The heart is ſaid to be the midſt or Center of the body; now, ſaith he, keep the law in the very midſt of thine heart, in the ſafeſt place; as the heart is the ſafeſt place, the middle of the body, ſo the middle of the heart is the ſafeſt place of the heart. So we may underſtand that of David, I have hid thy Commandments in my heart (*Pſal.*119.11.) And (*Deut.*6.6.) Theſe words which I command thee this day, ſhall be in thine heart, that is, thou ſhalt lay them up there. Of this laying up the law in the heart we are to underſtand Eliphaz here; as if he had ſaid, O Job, thou haſt often heard of the law, but thou haſt been a forgetful hearer, now hear it, and hold it now (as the Apoſtle exhorts the Hebrews, *Heb.*2.1.) Give the more earneſt heed to the things, which thou haſt heard, or ſhalt hereafter hear, leſt at any time thou ſhouldeſt let them ſlip, or thou ſhouldeſt run out (as we there put in the margine) as a leaking veſſel.

Præcedentis partis expoſitio & amplificatio Ita legē ſuſcipe ut ponas proprie, diſponas arte cura ſollicitudine obſervandi.

Further, This laying up the word in the heart, is oppos'd unto a bare barren knowledge; it is not enough to have the word of God in our heads, that is, to know it: it is not enough to have the word of God upon our tongues, that is, to ſpeak of it, but we muſt lay it up in the heart; For though the heart in Scripture takes in the underſtanding, and the whole ſoul, yet chiefly it reſpects the affections: lay up the word in thine heart, that is, let thy affections be warm'd with it, while thy memory retains and keeps it, and thy underſtanding is enlightned with a true notion of it.

Hence Obſerve, Firſt, The word of God is a precious thing.

We do not lay up trifles and traſh, but precious things, and treaſure; we lay up our Plate and Jewels, our Gold and Silver; the word of God ſhould be more to us then thouſands of Gold and Silver, it is the moſt precious Jewel, 'tis treaſure, and therefore it muſt be laid up.

Secondly, The heart is the Ark or Cabinet, in which the word muſt be laid up.

There was an Ark or Cheſt provided for the law (Exod. 25.21.) and that Ark was Chriſt, he was typified by it; and indeed the law would be too hot for our hearts, too hot to lie there, if it had not firſt lain in the heart of Chriſt; we (ſince fallen) could never have been an Ark for it, if he had not been. The tables of the law were laid in the Ark, and the Ark (in which the law was put) had a mercy-ſeat which did cover it all over. (The dimenſions of the Ark and of the mercy-ſeat were exactly the ſame, two cubits and a half in length, and a cubit and a half in breadth, (*Exod.*25.10,17.) So that nothing of the law could appear or riſe up in Judgment againſt poor ſinners. The propitiatory or mercy-ſeat covered all. Now as Chriſt hath been the Ark of the law to protect and cover us from the condemning power of it; ſo the hearts of believers muſt be the Ark of the law, where it muſt be laid up with a readineſs of mind to yield our ſelves up to the commanding power of it. David propheceying of Chriſt ſaith (*Pſal.*40.10.) I have not hid thy righteouſneſs within my heart; yet he had ſaid before, I delight to do thy will, thy law is within my heart. To clear which Scripture take notice that there is a twofold hiding of the righteouſneſs or word of God in the heart. Firſt, So as to obſcure or conceal it from others; in that ſence David ſaith, I have not hid thy righteouſneſs in mine heart, I have declared thy faithfulneſs and thy ſalvation, and not concealed thy loving kindneſs and truth from the great Congregation. And thus no man ought to lay up the truths, the law, the promiſes of God in his heart to conceal and ſtifle them there. Secondly, There is a hiding of the law in our hearts, Firſt, That it may be ſafe, leſt Satan or the world ſhould ſnatch it from us. Secondly, That we may further conſider of it; when a man hath got an excellent truth, or Scripture, he ſhould lay it up in his heart to ponder and meditate more upon it, to draw out the ſweetneſs, and to experience the power of it. Thirdly, That we may have it ready at hand for our uſe; and ſo the Scribe inſtructed for the kingdom of heaven is deſcribed by bringing forth out of his treaſury things both new and old. How ſad is the condition of many that have heard much, but laid up little or nothing at all of all that word which they have heard. Some having laid it up in their note books, are ſatisfied with that; 'tis good and uſeful to do ſo; but do not let it lie there, get a Copy of it in your hearts; a few truths in your hearts are better to you then many truths in your books; no man was ever ſaved by the word in his book, unleſs that word were alſo written in his heart. God commanded the Jewes (Deut. 6. 8, 9.) to write the law upon the poſt of their houſes, and on their gates, to bind them as a ſign upon their hand, and as frontlets between their eyes. They were commanded alſo to put fringes upon the borders of their garments (Numb. 15.38.) which our Saviour calls Phylacteries (Mat. 23.5.) theſe were ribands of blue ſilk, or as ſome ſay, ſcroles of parchment upon which the law being firſt wrought or written, and then bound upon their garments, they were to look upon it, and remember all the commandments of the Lord (Num. 15.39.) Now, ſaith Chriſt, they make broad their Philacteries, and enlarge the borders of their Garments, as much of the law as you will upon their Cloaths, but none of it in their hearts. Thus the proud Scribes and Phariſees went about as it were Cloathed with the word of God, but his word was far from their hearts, nor did it appear in their lives; it is a meer vanity to have much of the law in our books, while we neglect to keep it in our hearts, and act it in our wayes. The former is good, but it doth no good without the latter. The want of this, the laying up the word in the heart, cauſeth the great want of Saints in the things of God; and as many looſe that grace which they ſeemed to have, ſo many are at a loſs in the uſe of that grace which they have, becauſe they have not laid up the word of God in their hearts ſo carefully as they ought. We ſay proverbially, Sure bind and ſure find; They who would ſurely find the comfort of the word of God when they need it, had need to bind it ſure, when they receive it.

Vaniſſimi profecto Phariſæi illi, qui cum ipſi non ſervarent in corde mandata, at membranulas decalogi cōplicantes & quaſi coronam capiti facientes. Phylacteriū ex ſua proprietate, Cuſtoditdorium eſt. Bold.

VERS. 23, 24, 25.

If thou return to the Almighty, thou ſhalt be built up, thou ſhalt put away iniquity far from thy Tabernacles.

Then ſhalt thou lay up gold as duſt, and the gold of Ophir as the ſtones of the brooks.

Yea, the Almighty ſhall be thy defence, and thou ſhalt have plenty of ſilver.

ELiphaz having invited Job (at the one and twentieth verſe) to renew his acquaintance with God, and now again preſſing him to return to God, he reckons up thoſe advantages which might move, and incourage him to it; he tells Job what will follow his return to, and acquaintance with God, and theſe advantages are of two ſorts.

Firſt, Temporal, and outward; Secondly, Spiritual, and inward; the temporal good things which he aſſures him of in caſe he repent, and turn to God, are ſet down, Firſt, more generally in the three and twentieth verſe, Thou ſhalt be built up. Secondly, They are ſet down particularly; Firſt, He ſhould then have riches, gold and ſilver, in the four and twentieth verſe; Secondly, protection, The Almighty ſhall be thy defence, (in the five and twentieth verſe) as he will fill thy houſe, ſo he will guard thy houſe and keep all ſafe.

In the following parts of the Chapter, Eliphaz aſſures him of eight bleſſings ſpiritual.

Firſt, Joy in God, in the ſix and twentieth verſe, Thou ſhalt have thy delight in the Almighty.

Secondly, Confidence, or holy boldneſs before God; Thou ſhalt lift up thy face unto God; thou ſhalt not hide thy head, and run into corners, but lift up thy face.

Thirdly, (which is an effect or part of the former) freedom in prayer; Thou ſhalt make thy prayer to him, (in the ſeven and twentieth verſe.)

Fourthly, He aſſures him of audience, or of an anſwer to his prayer in the ſame verſe; He ſhall hear thee, and thou ſhalt pay thy vows; that is, thou in thy prayer having made vows to God, God ſhall hear thy prayer, and ſo give thee occaſion to pay thy vows.

Fifthly, He promiſeth him not only that his prayer ſhall be heard, but that his very purpoſes and deſigns ſhall be fulfilled; Thou ſhalt decree a thing, and it ſhall be eſtabliſhed to thee, in the eight and twentieth verſe. When thou reſolveſt upon ſuch a way or courſe in thy affairs, thou ſhalt have this priviledge, thy decree ſhall ſtand.

Sixthly, He promiſeth him direction and counſel, what way he ſhould take, what courſe to run, in the cloſe of the ſame verſe; And the light ſhall ſhine upon thy wayes, that is, thou ſhalt ſee what to do, the Lord will give thee counſel.

Seventhly, He gives him hope of riſing out of any trouble, or that when others are overtaken with calamities, he ſhould be preſerved, at the nine and twentieth verſe; When men are caſt down, then thou ſhalt ſay, there is a lifting up, for God will ſave the humble perſon.

Eightly, He promiſeth, that he ſhall not only have bleſſings perſonal, and family bleſſings, but he ſhall be a publick bleſſing, (in the thirtieth verſe,) He ſhall deliver the Iſland of the innocent, and it is delivered by the pureneſs of thy hand. Thus you have both the general ſcope of this latter part of the Chapter; which is to ſtir up Job to return to God, and likewiſe the particular bleſſings and mercies which are held forth as arguments moving him to return.

Verſ. 23. If thou return unto the Almighty.

To Return is uſed frequently in Scripture in a metaphorical ſenſe, and ſignifies as much as to repent; ſin is a going away from God, great ſinning is a going far from God, a going, as it were, into a far Country, ſuch ſinners would go out of Gods ſight, and fall out of his memory. Eliphaz had charged Job deeply with ſuch departures; and now he ſpeaks to him of returning.

And here we may conſider the condition or ſtate of Job, and the ſeaſon in which Eliphaz preſſeth him to this duty, he was in an afflicted condition, the hand of God was upon him. Now Eliphaz adviſeth him to return; intimating at leſt, that the preſent diſpenſation of God towards him, was a ſpecial opportunity for the duty he moved him unto.

Hence Note, When God afflicts us, when his hand is upon us, he ſpeaks to us, repent, or beſpeaks our repentance.

How often in Scripture doth the Lord complain as if he were wholly fruſtrated of his deſign, when either nations or perſons being ſmitten by his judgments did not return unto him, or repented not? (Iſa. 9. 13.) They turn not to him that ſmiteth them: that is, they turn not to me the Lord: I have ſmitten them, and I alone can heal them, yet they turn not to me; as if the Lord had ſaid, I therefore ſmote them that they might bethink themſelves of returning, but they turned not to me. As they turned not at my word, or to me ſpeaking, ſo they turned not at my ſword, or to me ſmiting. I ſee they are not only Sermon proof, my Prophets ſpake to them in vain, but they are judgment-proof alſo, my hand is upon them in vain, they return not. And as it was then, ſo at this day; for may we not obſerve, ſome mouldering in their eſtates, cruſhed in their hopes, croſſed in their children, blotted and blaſted in their credit, weak and ſick in their bodies, even tired and worn out under ſeveral afflictions, yet no thought of returning to the Lord, or of making their way perfect before him. So that the Lord may ſay to them, as he once did to his ancient people the Jewes (Iſa. 1. 6.) Why ſhould ye be ſmitten any more, ye will revolt more and more. The returning of many is like that which Solomon ſpeaks of (Prov. 26. 11.) As a dog returneth to his vomit, ſo a fool returneth to his folly; As Jeſurun waxed fat, and kicked, ſo ſome will be kicking while they wax lean.

Further, Eliphaz doth not ſpeak barely to Job of returning, but he directs him to the object; If thou return

To the Almighty] And that is expreſſed in ſome tranſlations very emphatically, Return home to the Almighty, return till thou comeſt to or reacheſt God, be thou ſure to repent home; ſo the word is uſed (Hoſ. 14.2. Joel 2.12. Amos 4.6.) return home to God, ſtay not ſhort of him in your repentance, that is, repent fully, ſeriouſly; And the intendment of Eliphaz in ſpeaking thus, might be to reprove Job for his former (by him ſuppoſed) hypocriſie: thou haſt returned before, but not to the Almighty, ſurely thou didſt repent only as an hypocrite in former times when thou madeſt the greateſt ſhews of עד שדי Revertere uſq; ad dominum, videtur idem eſſe cum אל שדי Si plane & ſerio, toto corde, non ut ante hypocrita fuiſti, &c. Merc.

of repentance. Therefore now repent is a ſincere Convert. Thy former repentance was to thee a fruitleſs repentance, and therefore doubtleſs but a fained and falſe repentance. Thou couldſt never after it recover out of thine afflicted, thy ruinous condition, and therefore ſurely thou didſt never by it recover out of thy ſinful condition, or from thy ſins. But now, I promiſe thee, If thou return to the Almighty, thou ſhalt be built.

Hence Note, That, True repentance is a full, a home returning to God.

Much of the progreſs of a Chriſtian is to go backward, backward (I mean) from thoſe ſins and evils to which he hath (by temptation) been carried forth; nor (having ſinned) can any man go forward till he return to God. We read in Scripture, of God returning to us, as well as of our returning unto God, in both there is repentance; when God returns to us, he repents of the evil of puniſhment, that he hath brought upon us; and when we return to God, we repent of the evil of ſin which we have committed againſt him; only be ſure (as the point directs) that ye return home to God. The Prophet found Iſraels repentance defective in this (Hoſ. 7. 16.) They return (that is, they make a ſhew of repentance) but not to the moſt High. There is a repentance which brings the ſoul never the nearer unto God: And that's a repentance (as we ſpeak) never the near, or to no purpoſe. Thus another Prophet taxeth their faſting (Zach. 7. 5.) When ye faſted and mourned in the fifth and ſeventh month, even thoſe ſeventy years, did ye at all faſt unto me, even to me? Obſerve how he doubles it upon that point, as if the whole emphaſis of repentance lay upon that point, To me, even to me. As David in confeſſing of his ſin (Pſal. 51. 4.) Againſt thee, thee, thee only have I ſinned, &c. Many faſt, but not at all to God, they return, but not at all to God. They faſt to themſelves, and return to themſelves; that is, their own intereſt, not the honour of God, is the motive and end of their faſting and repenting. And hence the Prophet is plain and downright with Iſrael in this caſe (Jer. 4. 1.) If thou wilt return, O Iſrael, ſaith the Lord, return unto me; as if Iſrael had uſed to return, but alwayes ſhort of God, or not to God; Iſrael made ſome ſtop in the work of repentance before he came at God. Now then (ſaith the Lord by his Prophet) O Iſrael, if thou wilt return, return to me. If thou haſt any further purpoſe to return, be perſwaded to return to ſome purpoſe. Let not thy repentance be any longer, ſuch as is to be repented of. All our returnings are but wanderings, unleſs we return to God.

But when may we be ſaid to return to God?

I anſwer: Firſt, When we return out of a ſence of ſin againſt God, as well as of ſmart upon our ſelves; for when we return only becauſe of ſmart, we return to our ſelves rather then to God; as when it is ſaid in Hoſea (Chap. 7. 16.) They returned, but not to the moſt High: We may ſee the reaſon of this charge at the fourteenth verſe, They have not cried unto me with their heart, when they howled upon their beds: they aſſemble themſelves for corn and for wine, and they rebel againſt me: As if he had ſaid, All their crying and howling is not becauſe they have ſinned againſt me, but becauſe their ſins have pincht them; they do not mourn becauſe of their wickedneſs, but becauſe of their wants. 'Tis famine that moveth them, not my fear. They would fain be at their full tables again; they are all for corn and wine, nothing for grace and holineſs. We may ſay of ſome perſons repenting, as Job (Chap. 6. 6.) of the wild Aſs braying, Doth the wild Aſs bray when he hath graſs, or loweth the Ox over his fodder? He applyed it to his own caſe, that he did not cry out without cauſe, nor complain when he felt no pain; but (I ſay) we may apply it to ſome perſons repenting. They would never bray if they had but graſs enough, nor low if they had fodder enough: That is, if they had but outward comfort enough, corn and wine, health and ſtrength enough, did they but abound in theſe, you ſhould never hear them complain, nor ſhed a tear, how much ſoever they abound in ſin: All the world cannot ſatisfie the ſoul of a godly man, till (after ſinning) he be reconciled to God: His ſoul is hungry and thirſty, notwithſtanding all his corn and wine, till he be filled with the favour of God. And this is indeed to return to the Almighty.

Secondly, Then alſo we return to the Almighty, when we turn eſpecially from and mourn for that ſin whereby we have moſt provoked the Almighty; when that which hath moſt offended God, is moſt offenſive and burdenſom unto us. For though in repentance, every ſin is to be repented of, yet ſome more: As Samuel ſaid to the houſe of Iſrael (1 Sam. 7. 3.) If you do return to the Lord with all your hearts, then put away the ſtrange Gods and Aſtaroth. But why doth he exhort them to put away that ſtrange God Aſtaroth, by name, more then any other of their ſtrange Gods? I anſwer, It was becauſe they had moſt provoked the true God by worſhipping that ſtrange God, and therefore he counſels them as ever they would approve themſelves to have returned to God in their repentance, to look to it, that they turned from that Idol. If every ſtrange God muſt be put away when we return to God; How can we return to God, if we put not away our Aſtaroth. Thus the rule was given by the King of Nineveh, in proclaiming a faſt (Jon. 3. 8.) Let them turn every one from his evil way (that is, from his beloved ſin) and from the violence that is in their hands; that is, from the ſin of oppreſſion, by which they got much into their hands. But why doth he inſtance in that ſin? Surely becauſe that was the common ſin of that City; they were an oppreſſing people, and loved the gain of oppreſſion, or to get by violence: They lived more by the blood of others, then by their own ſweat, more by the violence, then the labour of their hands, therefore they muſt particularly repent of that ſin. If the covetous man return to God, he muſt turn from every ſin, and from his covetouſneſs. If the proud man return to God, he muſt turn from every ſin, and from his pride; this is the nature of returning to the Almighty. Yet, Thirdly, Unleſs we do all this with the whole heart, we do not return to the Almighty (2 Chron. 6. 38. Jer. 3. 10. and 24. 7.) The wicked are ſerious and cordial in ſinning, they muſt be ſo in repenting. But ſome ſinner poſſibly may ſay, I have gone away too far to return: No (Jer. 3. 1.) Thou haſt played the harlot with many lovers, yet return unto me, ſaith the Lord. Another will ſay, I have ſlidden back and relapſed, I have, as it were, repented of my repentance. The Prophet anſwers this doubt (Jer. 3. 12.) Return thou back-ſliding Iſrael, ſaith the Lord. And again (ver. 14.) Turn, O back-ſliding children, ſaith the Lord, for I am married unto you, &c.

If thou return, &c.] Eliphaz having thus ſhewed him that it is his duty to return to the Almighty, now proceeds to ſhew that it will be his happineſs; and this he doth by an enumeration of thoſe manifold bleſſings which follow our returning to him. Whereof the firſt is,

Thou ſhalt be built up.] Affliction and trouble, which are the fruit of ſin, pull down, and lay us waſte; godly ſorrow and repentance, which are our turning from ſin, have a promiſe of this good fruit, That we ſhall be built up again.

This building up may be taken two wayes: Firſt, More generally for an encreaſe in all good things: Secondly, More ſpecially for an encreaſe in Children. In the Hebrew the ſame word, which ſignifies a ſon, ſignifies to build, becauſe Children build up their Fathers houſe, or are their Fathers building; in that ſence the word is often uſed (Gen. 16. 2. Gen. 30. 3. Ruth 4. 11.) It is ſaid (Exod. 1. 21.) that God built the Midwives houſes; which ſome interpret, he gave them Children, or made them more fruitful in child bearing. We read in the Law how that man was to be dealt with, who refuſed to take his Brothers Wife, according to the commandment of God in thoſe times; and the concluſion of all is (Deut. 25. 9.) So it ſhall be done to the man that ſhall not build up his Brothers houſe; that is, who refuſeth to marry his Brothers Widow, and (through the bleſſing of God) to have Children by her, which would be as the building up of his houſe, or the continuance of his name and family. Thus ſome underſtand the phraſe here; Thou ſhalt be built up; that is, thou, who haſt loſt all thy Children; thou, whoſe houſe hath been pull'd down by the fall of a houſe, (Chap. 1. 19.) ſhalt have more Children and ſo thy houſe built up again. But I rather take the phraſe here in that larger ſence, and ſo to be built up, implyeth all kind of proſperity in outward things. (Mal. 3. 15.) Now ye call the proud happy, yea, they that work wickedneſs are ſet up, we put in the Margin, are built up; that is, they are very proſperous, they may have what they will in this world, or (as we ſay) the world at will. And (note that by the way) 'tis the worſt character of an Age, When they that work wickedneſs (which ruines the beſt built State) are built up. The Lord makes a Promiſe in the language of this Metaphor to the Church (Jer. 31.4.) I will build thee ,and thou ſhalt be built, O Virgin of Iſrael: As if he had ſaid plainly, I will bleſs thee, and raiſe thee up out of the duſt of thy preſent deſolate condition, into a glorious fabrick of proſperity and honour; ſo it follows in the ſame Text, Thou ſhalt again be adorned with thy tabrets, and go forth in the dance of them that make merry. This ſence of the word is clear in that oppoſition uſed in the Pſalm (Pſal. 28.5.) Therefore, ſaith the Lord, I will deſtroy thee, and not build thee up; that is, thou ſhalt be deſtroyed for ever; I will never repair any of thy ruines, thine ſhall be as Aſaph ſpeaks (*Pſal.*74.3.) Perpetual deſolations. So that, when Eliphaz promiſeth Job, Thou ſhalt be built up, his meaning is, thy ruin'd ſtate ſhall be repaired, and thou ſhalt have not only a beautiful, but a well foundation'd felicity.

בן

Filius inde dictus, quod ædificium ſit & ſtructura parentum. Merc. Prolem dedit. Merc.

Hence Note, It is no vain nor unprofitable thing to repent and turn to the Almighty.

If we by repentance pull down the ſtrong holds of ſin, if we forſake and lay waſte our luſts, the Lord will build us up, he will build us up with all manner of bleſſings; repentance is fruitful: There are many who profeſs they repent, but they do not bring forth fruits meet for repentance; but as true repentance is accompanied with our fruits of holineſs and obedience towards God, ſo with Gods fruits, the fruits of his love and mercy towards us. There is a kind of repentance in Hell, there's weeping, wailing and gnaſhing of teeth; but that's a fruitleſs repentance, as well as a faithleſs repentance; the damned are under chains of everlaſting darkneſs. Unſound repentance, or the repentance of Hypocrites in this life, is like the repentance of the damned in the next life; but true repentance is fruitful. If we as the Baptiſt exhorted the Jews (Matth. 3.) Bring forth fruit meet for repentance, our repentance will bring forth fruit meet for us; we ſhall have good things of all ſorts, if we ſorrow (as the Apoſtle ſaith the Corinthians did) after a godly ſort; godly ſorrow is rewarded with joy; if we humble our ſelves, God will lift us up. The ſorrows of Goſpel-repentance are like the ſorrows of a woman in travail, who (as Chriſt ſpeaks, John 16.21.) ſtraightway forgets her pain, for joy that a man is born into the world. The pangs and throws of godly ſorrow are therefore ſaid by the Apoſtle to cauſe repentance not to be repented of, becauſe that repentance brings forth joy to be rejoyced in, a maſculine joy, joy that a Man-child of Grace to build up our ſpiritual houſe is brought into the world. If thou return to the Almighty thou ſhalt be built up. And Thou ſhalt put iniquity far from thy Tabernacles.

The word imports, Firſt, Putting away with indignation: Secondly, Putting away to the utmoſt diſtance: Therefore we tranſlate, Put away far; 'tis but two words in the Original: Thou ſhalt put iniquity far, &c. Iniquity may be taken either for ſin, or for the effects of ſin, that is, puniſhment: if we take it in the firſt ſence for ſin it ſelf, then this latter clauſe muſt be underſtood as a duty; If thou return to the Almighty, thou ſhalt be built up, thou ſhalt put away iniquity far from thee; that is, it is thy duty to put away iniquity far from thee; as if Eliphaz here did ſet forth more fully what repentance is; Thou ſhalt be built up, if thou return to the Almighty; that is, if thou return ſo as to put thy iniquity far from thee. If we take iniquity in the ſecond ſence, for the puniſhment of iniquity, then the words are a promiſe: As if he had ſaid, If thou return, &c. then thou ſhalt rid and diſcharge thy ſelf and thy houſe of all the troubleſome effects of ſin; Thou ſhalt put iniquity, or all the ſad iſſues and conſequents of iniquity far from thee, none of them ſhall touch thee to annoy thee.

Maſter Broughton pitcheth upon the former ſence in his tranſlation, If thou caſt far off unrighteouſneſs from thy tents. That gives a perfect ſence to the whole ſentence.

Hence Obſerve, That, In true repentance ſin muſt be utterly caſt off and put away.

We return not at all to the Almighty, till we wholly turn from ſin; nor will the Almighty build up our houſe, till we put iniquity quite out of our houſe; till we turn it out of houſe and home; out of the houſe of our family, out of the home of our hearts; nor is it enough to put ſin away a little, or a little way, but it is muſt be put far away. There are ſeveral degrees of putting away ſin: Firſt, there is a putting it away out of our practice, or converſation, ſo that it hath no viſible being or abode in us or with us. This is a putting of ſin away; but this is not a putting of ſin far away. Secondly, There is a putting of it out of our affections, or out of our hearts; not as if we could keep it (while we are in the body) from having a place or dwelling there; but as keeping it from having a throne or reigning there. This is to put ſin very far away from us; it is no great thing to put ſin out of our hands; but it is hard to get it out of our hearts; Hypocrites will (poſſibly) lay down the practice of it, but ſtill their ſpirits cleave to it; they are not at all alienated from the love of it, but only reſtrained from the acting of it; ſuch are oftentimes kept from doing iniquity; but they do not at all put away their iniquity, much leſs put it far away. As it is with a natural man in reference to his doing of good, ſo to his not doing of evil: If good be at any time in his practice, yet it is far from his ſpirit, he hath no mind to it, he cannot ſay the Law of God is in his heart, or that he delights to do it; ſo if evil be at any time put out of his practice, yet it is ſtill in his ſpirit, his mind is toward it, he cannot ſay that his heart is withdrawn from it, or that he hates it. No, but as the Prophet Ezekiel ſpeaks of the ſtubborn Jews (Ezek. 11.21.) Their heart walketh after the heart of their deteſtable things. As every godly man is (in the main) like David, A man after Gods own heart, and walketh after the heart of God; ſo every ungodly man is a man after the heart of the Devil; and every Idolater or worſhipper of falſe Gods (who is one of the worſt of ungodly men) is after the heart of his falſe Gods, and he walketh after the heart of his falſe Gods, which the Prophet calls deteſtable things. Whatſoever is moſt after the heart, or according to the deſires and commands of an Idol, that the idolatrous heart walketh after, that is, he loves it, he delights in it; and thus doth every natural mans heart walk after the heart of his luſt, though ſometime his feet walk not after it, or he may ſeem to lay it out of his hand. But he that turns indeed from ſin, deals with it, when he is repenting of it, as the Lord doth when he is pardoning it. How is that? The Lord in pardoning ſin, puts it far from us (Pſal. 103.12.) As far as the Eaſt is from the Weſt, ſo far hath he removed our tranſgreſſions from us: That is, He hath removed them from us to the utmoſt imaginable diſtance; for ſuch is that of the Eaſt from the Weſt: They and we ſhall no more meet together again, then the Eaſt and Weſt ſhall or can meet at all. And thus in repenting a godly man deſires to put his ſin as far from him as the Eaſt is from the Weſt, that he and they may never meet together in the practice of them, as he is aſſured that God hath ſo pardoned them that they and he ſhall never meet together in the puniſhment of them. Thou ſhalt put iniquity far

From thy Tabernacles.] In which words he includes more then his own perſonal repentance; for by the Tabernacles, we are to underſtand the whole family or houſhold; the Tabernacle containing, is put for the perſons contained; in this Eliphaz ſeems to ſtrike at Job for his former courſe: As if he had ſaid, Wickedneſs hath lodged not only in thy heart, but in thy houſe, in thy family, children, and ſervants. And this ſurely was it which provoked the Lord to cruſh thy family of children and their ſervants with the fall of a houſe; now therefore I counſel thee to put away iniquity from thy Tabernacle, that is, from all that belong to thee, from all that are under thy ſhadow, and are committed to thy truſt and charge.

Innuit ante hac nec Jobum nec ejus filios culpa vacaſſe, ideo eum everſum & filios extinctos. Merc.

Hence Obſerve, That they who repent truly ſhould indeavour to purge ſin, not only from themſelves, but from all that belong to them.

They ſhould cleanſe not their perſons only, but their families, they ſhould ſweep their houſes, as well as their hearts from ſin. (Gen. 35.2.) Then Jacob ſaid to his houſhold, and to all that were with him, put away the ſtrange Gods (or, the eſtranging Gods (ſuch are Idols, they are not only ſtrange, becauſe new Gods; and ſtrange, becauſe 'tis a ſtrange or wonderful thing that man ſhould be ſo beſotted as to worſhip ſuch things for Gods; but they are eſtranging Gods) becauſe they withdraw or ſteal away the heart from the true God; therefore ſaid Jacob, put away the ſtrange Gods) that are among you, and be clean, and change your garments. This outward changing of their garments ſignified the changing or cleanſing of their ſouls. God principally looks at that, and the outward ceremony hath no acceptance at all without the inward ſincerity: In compariſon of which, as the Lord ſaid in Joel, Rent your hearts, and not your garments; ſo he would ſay here, Change your hearts, and not your garments. Now Jacob was very careful that this bleſſed change of garments, betokening the change and cleanſing both of heart and life, ſhould be the livery of all his family and houſhold Family ſins bring family judgments as well as perſonal: and they that have the charge of a family, have (in a great degree) a charge of ſouls as well as of bodies; every Maſter of a family hath cure of ſouls: And he is to ſee ſo far as lyeth in him, that no ſin nor wickedneſs remain or be harboured in his family, that his children and ſervants live not in ignorance, nor in any evil. In Numb. 6. Moſes gives charge to the Congregation, That they ſhould depart from the tents of thoſe wicked men, Corah, Dathan, and Abiram. It is dangerous to be near the families of the wicked, but it is more dangerous to have wickedneſs remaining in our family, in our ſervants, or in our children. And if Maſters endeavour not by all due means to remove ſin out of their family, that in a little time may remove them out of their family, or (as we ſay) eat them out of houſe and home. Thou ſhalt put away iniquity far from thy Tabernacle. Thus much of this part of the verſe, in the firſt ſence, as iniquity is taken for ſin; yet,

Further, As the word iniquity is taken for puniſhment, Thou ſhalt put away iniquity (or the effects of iniquity) far from thy Tabernacle; and then the words are both a new Promiſe, and a further explication of what is meant by being built up, which was the former Promiſe, Thou ſhalt be built up, and all evil ſhall depart away from thy Tabernacle. Iniquity, which properly ſignifies the evil of ſin, is often put in Scripture, for the evils of trouble and ſuffering; and as all acknowledge this to be a truth, ſo ſome judge it the truth ſpecially intended in this place. I ſhall therefore briefly note from it,

> That, When we truly return to God from ſin, then ſuffering evils depart from us and ours.

For though the Lord be pleaſed to diſpence variouſly for trial of his people, and often ſuffers the evil of affliction to hang about their Tabernacles, who deſire ſincerely, and endeavour faithfully to put all iniquity far from their Tabernacles; yet this is the Promiſe of God, and this hath been often experienced by Godly men, That God hath turned trouble out of their doors, when they have humbly and zealouſly laboured to turn ſin out of their hearts.

Eliphaz having incouraged Job by this general Promiſe, he draweth it forth into particulars. And that, firſt, in reference to outward things.

Verſe 24. Then ſhalt thou lay up gold as duſt, and the gold of Ophir as the ſtones of the brooks.

בצב Munire. Aurum lectiſſimum quaſi ab igne munitum, aut quod ſit homini munimentum.

Then] That is, when thou haſt acquainted thy ſelf with God; then, when thou haſt laid up his Law in thy heart; then, when thou haſt returned to the Almighty thy ſelf, and put away iniquity far from thy Tabernacle, Then thou ſhalt lay up gold as duſt, &c. The word which we render Gold, ſignifies to fortifie, or to defend, and it is tranſlated a defence at ver.25. Solomon ſaith (Eccleſ.7.12.) not only, that wiſdom is a defence, but that money is a defence (that is, it procures defence) and Gold is the chief of money. Though Gold be not a defence formally, yet virtually it is; Gold defends it ſelf againſt all the forces of fire; and it is a principal means of defending us againſt the fire and fury of the greateſt dangers. Thou ſhalt lay up gold as duſt, &c. But Chriſt ſaith (Matth.6.19.) Lay not up treaſures for your ſelves on earth. And it was a Rule given concerning the King of Iſrael in the Levitical Law, long before Iſrael had a King (Deut.17.17.) He ſhall not greatly multiply to himſelf ſilver and gold. How then doth Eliphaz ſay, that he who repents ſhall lay up gold as the duſt? Is that fit work for him? I anſwer, The words are not to be underſtood as an exhortation to bend his endeavours to the gathering of riches; but as a promiſe from God that he ſhall, by a bleſſing from above, gather ſtore of riches here below. Thou ſhalt lay up gold as the duſt. By gold here, and ſilver in the next verſe, we are to underſtand all manner of riches; becauſe gold and ſilver are the chief riches, therefore all is contained under them. And when he ſaith, Thou ſhalt lay up gold as the duſt, the words receive variety of rendrings: Some thus, Thou ſhalt lay up gold above the duſt; as if he ſhould ſay, thou ſhalt have more gold then duſt, which is a ſtrain of Rhetorick, expreſſing abundance: Others read, Thou ſhalt lay up gold upon the duſt: As (Pſal. 24.2.) He hath founded it upon the Seas: A third renders, Thou ſhalt lay up gold by the duſt. Like that (Pſal. 1. 3.) A tree planted by the river ſide: A fourth thus, by way of counſel, And lay gold in the duſt. Which two latter readings are expounded as a direction given to Job, how he ſhould lay up gold; he muſt not lay up gold in his heart and ſpirit, but in the duſt, or by the duſt. As if he had ſaid, Put that purer duſt, that better concocted and refined duſt, in the common duſt; put the duſt to duſt; put thy gold in its proper place, where God and Nature put it. 'Tis but duſt, and ſo a fit companion for the duſt: Yea (ſay ſome) 'tis as if Eliphaz had ſaid, Do not ſo much as make room for it in thy houſe, provide not cheſts for it, let it lye where it had its original: It came from the duſt, there leave it, return it back to its own Country, to the place of its nativity. A Heathen hath this notion concerning gold and ſilver, &c. And he labours much to ſhew, that the ſite and poſition of theſe things in Nature holds forth how we ought to receive and eſtimate them; Even Nature (by which he means the ordinary courſe ſet in Nature) draws us off from coveting gold and ſilver; there is nothing which may provoke or ſtir up covetouſneſs, which God hath advanced or ſet up high in the order of Nature: Gold and ſilver are the chief objects of covetouſneſs; now both theſe, as alſo whatſoever elſe man is preſſed about, and as it were trodden under foot in the dirt for, by burdenſom or covetous cares, God hath thruſt or trodden under our feet. Gold doth not fall out of the Clouds of Heaven, but lyeth under the Clods of the Earth: There God hath put them to be trampled and trodden under our feet, that we might ſcorn to have our affections trampled upon and trodden under foot by them, or ſuch things as they. So then, all that this interpretation or tranſlation aims at in ſaying, Gold muſt be put in the duſt, is only to ſhew us, that our eſtimations ſhould be taken off from it, or that we ſhould place it as low in our thoughts, as God hath placed it in the order of Nature. And this is a ſpiritual ſence, ſuiting that of our Saviour, Lay not up for your ſelves treaſures on earth; make not great preparations to keep your earthly treaſures, eſpecially let them not be kept in your heart, or lye there where Chriſt only and the treaſures of Heaven ought to be laid up. Put your gold in the duſt, or let it be eſteemed as duſt, ſeeing at beſt it is but well concocted duſt. So gold and ſilver are called (Amos 2.7.) That pant after the duſt of the earth upon the head of the poor. So the Prophet deſcribes their extream covetouſneſs, who will be rich though it be by impoveriſhing thoſe who are pooreſt.

Et pone in pulvere Aurum. Coc.

Noli animū auro apponere, nimiſq; illud diligere, ſed nihili æſtima; dejice in terram unde ortum eſt, æſtima ut terram & lapides petræ. Scult.

Pone ubi deus & Natura poſuit. Coc.

Nulli nos vitio natura conciliat, nihil quidē quod avaritiam noſtrā irritaret poſuit in aperto: pedibus aurum & argentum ſubjecit, calcandum ac premendum dedit, & quicquid eſt propter quod calcamur & premimur. Sen. ep. 94.

Yet, I conceive, in this place Eliphaz hath another aim: And that where he ſaith, Thou ſhalt lay up gold as the duſt, his meaning only is, Thou ſhalt lay up plenty of gold, or thou ſhalt gather much riches; for the duſt of the earth, or ſand of the ſea, are uſed frequently to ſignifie abundance, or the exceeding numerouſneſs of things, or perſons; Who can count the duſt of Jacob? and the number of the fourth part of Iſrael? (Numb. 23. 10.) That is, they are as the duſt that cannot be counted, or numbred. That was the Promiſe made to Abraham (Gen. 13. 16.) I will make thy ſeed as the duſt of the earth. So here, Thou ſhalt lay up gold as the duſt; that is, gold more then thou canſt tell, or caſt up: Thou ſhalt have not only enough, but even more then enough. Job was very rich before; now ſaith Eliphaz, Thou ſhalt have gold as the duſt; thy riches ſhall be increaſed, thou ſhalt have a greater ſtore and ſtock then ever, Thou ſhalt lay up gold as the duſt. And, as it followeth,

The Gold of Ophir as the ſtones of the brook.

'Tis the ſame thing in another tenour of words; the Hebrew is, Thou ſhalt lay up Ophir as the ſtones of the brook. The word gold is not expreſſed in the Original; yet it may well be underſtood; Ophir is put for the Gold of Ophir, becauſe Ophir was the place of Gold, yea, of the richeſt Gold (1 Kings 9. 27,28.) They came to Ophir, and fet from thence gold four hundred and twenty tallents, and brought it to King

Ophir nomen Inſulæ unde aurum primæ notæ adferebatur; quod inde Ophir appellatum, hoc eſt, ut quidam opinantur Obryſum quaſi Ophiriſum. Druſ.

Solomon. Ophir was a noted place in thoſe times for Gold, both in reference to the plenty and purity of it. 'Tis a queſtion much controverted, where Ophir is; ſome making it to be an Iſland in Africa; others place it in India; ſince the diſcovery of America, or the Weſt-Indies, many contend, that Ophir is now called Peru; And they have (as they conceive) a probable ground for this opinion from that place in the holy Story (2 Chron. 3.6.) Where 'tis ſaid, He (that is, Solomon) garniſhed the houſe with precious ſtones for beauty, and the gold was gold of Paruaim, which is near in ſound to the name of that Gold-abounding Countrey in America called Peru. I ſhall not undertake to decide this Geographical Controverſie about Ophir: That which is agreed on all hands is enough for my purpoſe, and the explication of this Text, that Ophir was a Countrey famous in ancient times, both for the plenty and excellency of the Gold found there, and brought from thence. Therefore ſaid Eliphaz, Thou ſhalt lay up Ophir, that is, the Gold of Ophir, pure and precious Gold.

Vide Bold. in hunc locum Jobi.

As the ſtones of the brook.] That is thou ſhalt have abundance of gold; to lay up gold as the duſt, and to lay it up as the ſtones of the brook, or as the ſtones of the valley, are parallel expreſſions for plenty of Gold, ſutable to thoſe Hyperboles (2 Chron. 1.15.) The King made gold and ſilver at Jeruſalem as plenteous as ſtones, &c. And Ch. 9. of the ſame book (v. 27.) The King made ſilver in Jeruſalem as ſtones, and Cedar trees made he as the Sicamore trees that are in the low plain in abundance. Thus in the Text Job is promiſed to lay up the Gold of Ophir, as the ſtones of the brook.

The Vulgar tranſlation reads differently, He ſhall give thee for earth a Rock, and for a Rock ſtreams of Gold; which is a proverbial ſpeech, implying a change for the better: As if he had ſaid, Thou before who hadſt a ſandy foundation, ſhall now build upon a Rock, as (Matth. 7.27.) And we find ſuch language in the Prophet (Iſa. 60.7.) where the Lord promiſeth, For braſs I will bring gold, for iron ſilver, for wood braſs, &c. So here, For earth I will give thee ſtone, and for ſtone golden brooks, or brooks of gold; that is, thoſe brooks where gold is; or, I will give thee much gold out of thoſe brooks.

Dabit pro terra ſilicē & pro ſilice torrentes aureos. Vulg.

Junius ſeems to favour this tranſlation moſt of all, rendring the whole verſe thus, connecting it with the former; Thou ſhalt be built up, &c. and that by giving thee for the duſt the choiceſt gold, and for the rock the river gold of Ophir. By all aſſuring Job of a happineſs in his civil ſtate in caſe he did change or mend in his ſpiritual ſtate. Then he who had ſo great a change in his worldly ſtate for the worſe, ſhou'd have a greater change in his worldly ſtate for the better. The next verſe is a continuation of the Promiſe, much to the ſame intent, and almoſt in the ſame words, and therefore I ſhall open that alſo before I give any Obſervations.

Idq; ponendo pro pulvere lectiſſimum aurum & pro rupe Ophirinū fluviatile. Jun.

Verſe 25. Yea, the Almighty ſhall be thy defence, and thou ſhalt have plenty of ſilver.

There is ſome difference in the reading of this Verſe, for the word which we tranſlate defence, is the ſame which we tranſlate gold in the former Verſe. And hence ſome tranſlate thus, Thy gold ſhall be mighty. Making the word Shaddai (which is one of the names of God, and uſually rendred Almighty) to be as an Epithite to the word Gold. Thy Gold ſhall be ſtrong or mighty. And thus ſome Tranſlations render the word Shaddai (Ezek. 1.24.) where the Prophet ſaith, I heard the noiſe of their wings like the noiſe of great waters, as the voice of the Almighty; ſo we render; but others thus, As a mighty voice: So in the preſent Text, whereas we ſay, The Almighty ſhall be thy defence, or according to the ſtrictneſs of the word, The Almighty ſhall be thy gold: Others give it thus, Thy gold ſhall be mighty. And this anſwers the latter clauſe of the verſe, where we read, Thou ſhalt have plenty of ſilver; yet put in the Margin, Thou ſhalt have ſilver of ſtrength, or ſtrong ſilver. Theſe readings have an elegancy in them.

But I ſhall keep to our own, which is profitable to us, and ſuitable to the Text; Yea, the Almighty ſhall be thy defence; the Particle (Yea) ſheweth, that this is a higher ſtep of mercy then the former: As if he had ſaid, Thou ſhalt not only have gold, which is a defence, but better then gold, even the Almighty for thy defence; or, God, who is better then gold, will be thy defence, and the defence of thy gold. The Hebrew word is plural, Defences, which intimates; Firſt, All ſorts of defence: Secondly, Strong defence; The Almighty ſhall be thy defences: All manner of defence, and a ſtrong defence unto thee.

> Hence Note, God himſelf is pleaſed to be the Lord Protector of his people (who repent and turn to him) both in their perſons and eſtates.

There are many in the world who have gold; but there are few who have this defence for it. The Prophet Haggai ſpeaks of thoſe who earned money, but put it into a bag with holes; that is, they could not hold or keep what they had gotten. It is the Lord that eſtabliſheth the creature to us, and defends it for us. The beſt things in the world take wings and are gone, unleſs the Lord ſtay them with us; and unleſs the Lord defend and keep them for us, they would ſoon be pull'd out of our poſſeſſion. Some mens eſtates waſt away they know not how, there is a hole in the bottom of the bag they thought not of. Others have their eſtates violently taken away from them, becauſe the Lord is not their defence. The Lord is the Protector of his people, the Lord is a Caſtle, a ſtrong Tower, all manner of fortifications about his people, to defend their eſtates and perſons, much more their ſouls. And Eliphaz ſeems to mind Job that he once had, but now had loſt this defence; God once made a hedge about him, or rather was a hedge about him, but he opened a gap or withdrew, and then in came the Sabeans and Chaldeans and ſpoiled all. Now then (ſaith he) return to the Lord, and he will once again be thy defence. How ſafe are they that have God for their defence, who live under the ſhadow and covert of the Almighty! How ſafe are they (I ſay) and all that they have.

The vulgar Latine is ſo full of this ſence, that he leaves out the word defence, and only ſaith, The Almighty ſhall be (or ſhall ſtand up for thee) againſt thine enemies; and in this perfect outward happineſs conſiſteth. For to have much, and that ſecured, is all we can deſire for the things of this world. Many have gold, and riches ſtore, but the thing that troubles them is this, how to make all ſure; Return to the Lord, and he ſhall be thy defence; he ſhall be an Aſſurance Office to thee, he ſhall protect thee againſt all winds and weathers, againſt all enemies and pirates: The Almighty ſhall be thy defence, and the defence of thy gold.

Eritque omnipotens contra hoſtes tuos. Vulg.

Further, Becauſe the word which we render defence, ſignifieth gold alſo, as was ſhewed; therefore ſome keep to that reading, and thus tranſlate this twenty-fifth verſe, And the Almighty ſhall be thy choice gold, and ſilver, and ſtrength unto thee. Which reading is likewiſe followed by Mr. Broughton, And the Almighty will be thy plentiful gold, and ſilver of ſtrength to thee. This ſence of the word is comfortable indeed: for to have told Job only this, Thou ſhalt lay up gold as the duſt, and gold of Ophir as the ſtones of the brook; this had been (though a great mercy, yet but a common mercy) ſuch as the men of the world have and enjoy. Many that know not God lay up gold as the duſt; and they who ſerve him not have often ſtore of ſilver. But when God himſelf ſaith, I will be your gold and ſilver, this is not only the richeſt of temporal, but the riches of all ſpiritual mercies. For when 'tis ſaid, The Lord ſhall be thy choice gold and ſilver of ſtrength to thee, the meaning is, he will be better to thee then the choiceſt gold, and a greater ſtrength then ſilver unto thee. This is a rare and a diſtinguiſhing mercy. Wicked men may have gold from God; but no wicked man hath God for his gold.

Eritque omnipotens lectiſſimum aurum tuum & argentū vireſque tibi. Jun.

> Hence Note, That God himſelf is the riches, and fulneſs, the gold and ſilver of his people.

The Lord is my portion, ſaith my ſoul: Whoſe ſoul ſaid this? It was the ſoul of a mourning Jeremy. And when ſaid he this? Even then, when their lands and houſes were poſſeſſed by the enemy; even then, when their gold and ſilver with all their goodly things were carried captive into Babylon; then Jeremy ſaid, The Lord is my portion (Lam. 3.24.) the gold and ſilver which I had in my houſe are gone, but my gold and ſilver in Heaven is not gone into captivity, he is my portion ſtill and for ever. They who have God for their gold and ſilver, are happier and richer then gold and ſilver can make them: What can be ſaid more to draw our hearts to God, then this promiſe, that God will not only give us riches, but that himſelf will be our riches? What can be ſaid more to take a covetous mans heart off from the love of his gold then this? Take thy heart off from thy gold, and God will be thy gold. And ſo what can be ſpoken more prevailingly to the voluptuous man, who delights to ſwim in rivers of ſenſual pleaſures: O take off thy heart from theſe pleaſures of ſin, which are but for a ſeaſon, and God will be thy pleaſure for evermore? What ſtronger Argument to take down the ambition of man, who hunts after high places and dignities in the World, then to tell him, withdraw from this purſuit, and God will be thy honour, and thy high place? We may ſay to the ambitious, to the covetous, to the voluptuous, and in a word, to all ſorts of ſinners, Ye ſhall find all that your ſins can offer you, and infinitely more in God; your honours, and pleaſures, your gold and ſilver, you ſhall have altogether in him. One of the Ancients ſpeaks well and truly to the point; That man is too too covetous whom God doth not ſuffice; or, who is not ſatisfied with God. The only true reaſon why any man is not ſatisfied with God, is, becauſe he knoweth not God: He that can ſay knowingly, The Lord is my God, cannot but ſay, I am ſatisfied. When God is ours, all is ours. And the pooreſt who are rich in faith, have as great a ſhare in this riches, as the richeſt. God is the poor mans gold; they that have neither gold nor ſilver in their purſe (as Peter ſaid to the impotent m[illegible]) may have gold in their hearts. The Almighty is their gold and ſilver too, as it followeth in the Text.

Nimis eſt avarus cui deus non ſufficit. Bern. Deus meus & omnia.

And thou ſhalt have plenty of ſilver.

Some render, Thou ſhalt have ſilver of wearineſs: He means it not of ſilver, as it wearies a man in getting of it; but he means it of ſo great a quantity or ſum of ſilver, as ſhall weary a man to tell it, or trouble him to weigh it. The manner of accounting ſilver was anciently by weight, hence that is paid in money is called a Penſion. We tranſlate fully to that ſence, Thou ſhalt have plenty of ſilver; for they that have ſo much as tires and wearies them to tell or weigh, have ſtore enough. We put ſilver of ſtrength in the Margin. Silver is a ſtrong metal, and it is ſtrength, great ſtrength to man. This rendring ſuits beſt with the beginning of the verſe, The Almighty ſhall be thy defence, and thou ſhalt have ſilver of ſtrength, or ſilver to ſtrengthen thee. As for plenty, that was fully ſet forth in the former verſe, where he is promiſed Gold as the duſt, and the Gold of Ophir as the ſtones of the Brook. Beſides, the word is divers times applyed to expreſs ſtrength by; but rarely, if at all in Scripture, to expreſs plenty by; and here our Tranſlators render it ſo, not properly, but tropically, as appears before; for properly it expreſſeth the greateſt ſtrength: As firſt, The ſtrength of the Unicorn (Num. 23. 22.) God brought him out of Egypt, he hath as it were the ſtrength of an Unicorn. Secondly, The ſtrength of Mountains (Pſal. 95. 4.) therefore I conceive it is beſt rendred ſilver of ſtrength; as gold is cloathed with a word which ſignifies defence, ſo ſilver is joyned with a word that ſignifies ſtrength, becauſe there is much ſtrength and defence in both, money being the ſinews or ſtrength of war: So that to ſay, Thou ſhalt have ſilver of ſtrength, is as if he had ſaid, Thy ſilver ſhall be a ſtrength, or a bleſſing to thee. Some have ſilver, and it is no ſtrength to them; or he calleth it, Silver of ſtrength, becauſe it ſhould be confirmed and eſtabliſhed for his uſe, and in his poſſeſſion. He ſhould find, by experience, that there was tack in it, that it was ſolid ſilver, or ſilver that had ſtrength in it. So then, theſe are but ſeveral expreſſions of the ſame thing, all which gathered together heighten up the promiſe of this outward mercy; he ſhould have gold, and God would be his defence, yea, his gold, and he ſhould have ſilver plenty, enough of it to make a man weary to tell it; or he ſhould have ſilver of ſtrength, his ſilver ſhould be a ſtrength to him, and all this is aſſured him upon his repentance and return to the Almighty.

תועפות à radice יעף laſſus ſatigatus fuit. Argentum laſſitudinū; quod præ copia laſſos reddit homines numerando illud vel certè appendendo. Nam olim appendebant argentum, unde Penſionis vocabulum in ſermone latino. Druſ.

Nihil tam ſanctum quod violati, nihil tam munitum quod non expugnari pecunia poſſit. Cic.

בסף תועפות

Hence Note, Firſt, That Godlineſs is the beſt and neareſt way, even to worldly gain.

Godlineſs is gainful, though a godly man ſhould dye a beggar; but beſides there is worldly gain in it, theſe promiſes are not made in vain. Chriſt ſpeaks as much (Matth. 6. 33.) Seek firſt the Kingdom of God, and the righteouſneſs thereof, and all other things (even gold and ſilver) ſhall be added to you. And the Apoſtle is full for it (1 Tim. 4. 8.) Godlineſs is profitable for all things; 'tis good to make men rich, it will bring in worldly profits; Godlineſs hath the promiſe of gold as well as of grace; of ſilver, as well as of pardon and peace; do not think that godlineſs is barren of outward bleſſings, or that we muſt needs loſe all gain in this world, by getting that which fits us for the Glory of the next world. Know, that as the Lord makes his wayes ſweet to his people by inward communications of himſelf, revealing his love and grace to them, yea, in them, ſo he makes his wayes ſweet to his people, by giving them outward good things, bleſſing their basket and their ſtore, filling their hearts with food and gladneſs.

Secondly Note, That, The godly man may lawfully poſſeſs earthly riches, gold and ſilver.

It is no ſin to be rich, but when riches are got by ſin: Poor Lazarus lay in the boſom of rich Abraham: As many poor men may be called the Devils poor; ſo ſome that are rich may be called Gods rich men. Again, if godlineſs have a promiſe (as it hath) of riches, then the godly may lawfully poſſeſs riches; which alſo may be inſtruments in their hands of glorifying God, and doing good among men. Nor can it be denyed that they know beſt how to uſe the things of the world and how to be the beſt Stewards of earthly treaſures, who are inſtructed for the Kingdom of Heaven, and are (as the Apoſtle Peter exhorts Saints to be (1 Pet. 4. 10.) Good Stewards of the manifold grace of God.

Thirdly, Note, That riches, gold and ſilver, are at Gods diſpoſe.

He beſtows them where, and upon whom he pleaſeth. This promiſe of plenty of gold, upon repentance and returning to the Almighty, muſt needs procede from this ſuppoſition, that the Almighty hath gold and ſilver in his power. The world is the Lords, and the fulneſs of it (Pſal. 50. 12.) God is the beſt Indies for gold. If any would trade for gold proſperouſly, let them trade heaven-ward; for God is every where Lord of the ſoyl, and he ſaith of all the precious mines hidden in the bowels of the earth, They are mine. See how the Lord ſpeaks as the great Proprietor of all the gold and ſilver, of all the good things of this world (Hoſ. 2. 8, 9.) She did not know that I gave her corn, and wine, and oyl, and multiplied her ſilver and gold, which they prepared for Baal: therefore I will return, and take away my corn in the time thereof, and my wine in the ſeaſon thereof, and will recover my wool and my flax, &c. All's mine. Thus the Lord voucheth himſelf the great owner of all theſe things; all the gold and ſilver, all the wool and the flax, all the corn and wine are his. When the people and Princes of Iſrael, with David their King, offered ſo willingly and ſo liberally gold and ſilver, &c. for the building of the Temple, David makes this confeſſion for them all (1 Chron. 29. 14.) All things come of thee, and of thine own have we given thee. And may he not do what he will with his own? Men think they may, ſurely God both may and will.

Fourthly Obſerve, That, the plenty and ſtability of the creature, is from God, as well as the poſſeſſion of it.

Eliphaz promiſeth Job from the Lord, Gold as the duſt, and as the ſtones of the brook, with ſilver of ſtrength. That we have it in ſuch or ſuch a proportion is from the Lord, as much as that we have any thing at all; he can give much as well as little; and that our proportion hath a defence and ſtrength in it, is from the Lord; therefore we ſhould honour the Almighty for every portion and proportion of worldly riches, and for the eſtabliſhment of our portion whatſoever it is. Silver and gold have no ſtrength in them unleſs the Lord who giveth theſe give them ſtrength, and bid them ſtay with us to do us good.

Laſtly, Obſerve, We may lawfully poſſeſs abundance of outward things.

'Tis ſinful to make abundance our aim, or to contend for much in temporals; to do ſo in and about ſpirituals is our duty, and our contention for the higheſt degree, our commendation. We ſhould deſign it, to lay up the Gold of Grace, as the duſt, and the Silver of Sanctification, as the ſtones of the brook: We ſhould forget all that we have, that we might get what we have not. Our deſirings while pitcht upon an eternal object cannot be immoderate, but in temporals they quickly may: and therefore as to them, our moderation ſhould be known to all men. Yet if God give in abundance of temporals in the lawful exerciſe of our callings, we may warrantably enjoy it as a bleſſing from him. The providence of God doth often bound us to a little, and we ought to be contented with the leaſt portion of outward things, with bare food and raiment; but the Word of God doth not bound us to a little, nor doth it ſay, it is unlawful to have much. And as it is not unlawful to have much of the world; ſo it is a great exerciſe and tryal of our Graces to have much: As there are ſome Graces of a Chriſtian which come not to tryal till we are in want; ſo there are other Graces which come not to tryal unleſs we have abundance. Want tryeth our patience, and our dependance upon God for a ſupply of what we have not; and abundance tryeth our temperance, our humility, our liberality, yea, and our dependance upon, and faith in God, for the ſanctifying, bleſſing, and making of that comfortable to us which we have. When a rich man ſeeth an emptineſs in his abundance without the enjoyments of God in it, he exerciſeth as high a grace, and ſheweth as heavenly a frame of mind, as that poor man doth who ſeeth and enjoyeth a fulneſs in God, in the midſt of all his emptineſs. And therefore Paul puts both theſe alike upon a divine teaching (Phil. 4. 12.) In all things I am inſtructed, both to be full and to be hungry, both to abound and to ſuffer need. And had it been unlawful to enjoy plenty, Eliphaz had never preſſed Job to repentance by this motive, The Almighty ſhall be thy defence, and thou ſhalt have plenty of ſilver.

VERS. 26, 27.

For then ſhalt thou have thy delight in the Almighty, and ſhalt lift up thy face unto God.

Thou ſhalt make thy prayer unto him, and he ſhall hear thee, and thou ſhalt pay thy Vows.

IT hath been ſhewed from the former Context, how Eliphaz encouraged, yea, provoked Job to repentance, and returning to God, by the propoſal of many promiſes, by promiſes of outward and temporal mercies, gold, ſilver, and protection. He might have what he pleaſed of God for the comforts of this life, if his life were once pleaſing unto God. In this latter part of the Chapter he riſeth higher and propoſeth ſpiritual promiſes: And he begins with the beſt of ſpiritual promiſes, The free enjoyment of God himſelf.

Verſe 26. For then ſhalt thou have thy delight in the Almighty, &c.

As if Eliphaz had ſaid, If thou doſt indeed repent and turn from ſin, thy conſcience which now troubles, yea, torments thee, ſhall have ſweet peace in God, and thou who now groveleſt with thy eyes down to the ground, by reaſon of thy preſſing guilt and miſery, ſhalt then with confidence lift up thy face unto God in prayer, and thou ſhalt find God ſo ready at hand with an anſwer, that thou ſhalt ſee cauſe chearfully to perform thy Vows, which thou madeſt to him in the day of trouble: That's the general ſcope of this latter part of the Chapter. I ſhall now proceed to explicate the particulars.

For then ſhalt thou have thy delight in the Almighty.

The firſt word implyeth a reaſon of what he had ſaid before. Having ſpoken of temporal promiſes, he confirms his intereſt in them by aſſuring him of ſpiritual; For then ſhalt thou have thy delight in the Almighty. As if he had ſaid, God will not deny thee outward comforts in the creature, ſeeing he intends to give thee the higheſt comforts, even delight in himſelf. 'Tis an Argument like that of the Apoſtle (Rom. 8. 32.) He that ſpared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all, how ſhall he not with him freely give us all things? Thus Eliphaz ſeems to argue, Seeing God will give thee himſelf to rejoyce in, or to rejoyce in himſelf, how can he deny thee gold and ſilver with thoſe other conveniencies which concern this life? Theſe being indeed as nothing in compariſon of himſelf.

Then ſhalt thou delight, &c.] Then, that is, when thou returneſt to God, and not till then, then thou mayeſt expect to receive much ſweetneſs from him, ſuch ſweetneſs as thy ſoul never taſted or experienced to this day.

Then ſhalt thou have thy delight.] The word ſignifies to delight, or take contentment, whether it be outward contentment, or inward contentment, the delight of the body, or the delight of the mind; and ſo an univerſal delight, thy whole delight ſhall be in the Lord. Moſes (Deut. 28. 56.) deſcribes thoſe women by this word, who were made up of delight, Thy tender and delicate woman; that is, ſuch as are ſo delicate, that they are the delight of all who behold them, or who are themſelves altogether devoted to their delights, who (as the Apoſtle Paul ſpeaks of the wanton widow (1 Tim. 5.) live in pleaſure; theſe are threatened with ſuch calamities as ſhould render their very lives a pain to them. The word is uſed again (Iſa. 58. 13, 14.) Where the Prophet ſpeaks of keeping the Sabbath; If thou turn away thy foot from the Sabbath, from doing thy pleaſure on my holy day, and call the Sabbath a delight; What then? Then ſhalt thou delight thy ſelf in the Lord, thou ſhalt have curious delight, all manner of delight in the Lord, If thou call the Sabbath a delight, the holy of the Lord, honourable and ſhalt honour him; if thou haſt a delight in duty, thou ſhalt have the delight of reward.

ענג Delectatus fuit corpore vel animo. Sonat etiam aliquid delicatum & molle.

Thus Eliphaz, Then ſhalt thou have thy delight in the Almighty. And 'tis conſiderable that he doth not ſay, thou ſhalt have thy delight in the merciful, or gracious God, but in the Almighty; in him thou ſhalt have thy delight, whoſe power is over all, and who is able to do whatſoever pleaſeth him. Even the power and all-mightineſs of the Lord ſhall be as pleaſant to thee as his mercy and loving kindneſs.

Further, delight, in the general nature of it, conſiſts in theſe two things.

Firſt, In the ſuitableneſs and conveniency of the object, and the faculty, whether ſenſitive or intellective.

Secondly, It conſiſts in the reflection and application of the faculty upon the object. So that to delight our ſelves in the Almighty, hath theſe two things in it.

Firſt, A ſuitableneſs in our ſouls to the Lord.

Secondly, The ſouls reflecting upon the Lord as good and gracious unto us. This reflect-act breeds and brings in delight, and works the heart to an unſpeakable joy in God. By this laſt and higheſt act of faith, we take in the ſweetneſs of the Almighty, and delight our ſelves in him mightily. This Faith doth not only ſuck the Promiſes, wherein the love of God is evidenced to us, but is it ſelf an evidence of the love of God to us. We ſuck and are ſatisfied with the breaſts of conſolation by believing (Iſa. 66. 11.) that is, we believing draw forth that ſweetneſs of the promiſe which the Word declares to be the portion of Believers. Thus ſpiritual delight is made up; and therefore Saints are ſaid to rejoyce in believing, with joy unſpeakable and full of glory (1 Pet. 1. 3.) That is, having as much and as clear a manifeſtation, yea, participation and taſt of that Glory in believing, which is prepared and reſerved for them againſt the next life, as they are capable to receive, and more then they are able to expreſs, in this life. Then ſhalt thou delight thy ſelf in the Almighty. We may look upon the words firſt as a Command; and then obſerve,

That, It is our duty to delight our ſelves in God.

Delight in God, is both a priviledge and a duty, it is commanded in the Law, and it is promiſed in the Goſpel. God is pleaſed to give us many things in the world, not only for neceſſity, but for delight. A Heathen looking upon the various proviſions which the Great Creator hath made, not only for the maintenance of man in his being, but for his comfortable and pleaſurable being; ſome of which affect the ſenſes, the eye, the ear, the taſte, &c. others are ſweetly contentful to the underſtanding, with all the faculties of the ſoul, He (I ſay) concludes this from it, The bountiful Creator hath provided for more then our neceſſity, or he hath provided more then will barely ſerve our turns to live upon, we are loved even up to our delights. Now I ſay, though the Lord hath provided delights for us in the creature, yet it is our duty, our greateſt, our higheſt duty to delight chiefly in the Lord, to delight in him firſt, and to delight in nothing but in reference unto him; nothing ſhould be pleaſing to us, but as there is an impreſs or ſtamp of the love of God upon it, or as it taſtes of his goodneſs. And indeed what can delight us long but this thought; That God

Neq; enim neceſſitatibus, tantum noſtris proviſum eſt, uſque in deliciis amamur. Sen. l. 4. de Benefic. 5.

God delighteth in us, or that we are a delight to God; that God is good, and that God is good to us? having taſted his goodneſs, we ſhould love and delight in him, above all our delights. The Pſalmiſt (Pſal. 137. 6.) preferred Jeruſalem above his chiefeſt joy; How much more ſhould we prefer the God of Jeruſalem above our chiefeſt joy. God delighteth in man whom he hath made, and who is his Son by Grace, next to Jeſus Chriſt, who is his Son by Nature; and Jeſus Chriſt delighteth in man whom he hath redeemed; And ſhould not man delight in his Maker, in his Father, in his Redeemer? We have a moſt divine deſcription of the delight which the Father takes in Chriſt his Son, and which Chriſt taketh in his redeemed ones (Prov. 8. 30, 31.) Then was I by him as one brought up with him, and I was daily his delight (Chriſt was the delight of his Father; and he delighted in his Father) rejoycing alwayes before him; rejoycing in the habitable parts of his earth, and my delight was with the ſons of men. Jeſus Chriſt himſelf takes up many of his delights with the ſons of men, whom he calls the habitable parts of the earth, even thoſe of the ſons of men that are a habitation of God through the Spirit. Now (I ſay) as the delight of the Father is in the Son, and the delight of the Son in the Father, and the delight both of Father and Son in the Saints, in the habitable parts of the earth, or with the ſons of men; ſo the delight of the ſons of men ſhould be in the Father, and in the Son; there ſhould our delight be, there ſhould we take our higheſt contentment.

Hæ ſunt piorum deliciæ & ſuaviſſimæ voluptates, deo placato frui, cujus etiam deliciæ ſunt habitare inter eos qui ipſum animo reverentur & colunt.

Secondly, The words are rather to be taken for a Promiſe; Then ſhalt thou have thy delight in the Lord: Then, that is, when thou turneſt from ſinful delights, or delighteſt not in ſin, I aſſure thee of ſpiritual delight.

Whence Obſerve, That they who mourn for, and turn from ſin, ſhall have delights in the Lord.

When once ſin is bitter to us, the Lord will be ſweet to us; and until ſin be bitter to us, the Lord is not ſweet to us; ſin hinders our delightful enjoyment of the creature, it puts gall and wormwood into our diſh and cup, it is that which makes all relations grievous and burthenſome to us; yet this is but a ſmall matter, that it hinders us from the contentment and ſweetneſſes which are to be had in the creature; ſin takes us off from delighting in God. That ſoul cannot delight in the Almighty, who loveth and continueth in the love of ſin. If ſuch profeſs delight in God, it is but a falſe boaſt, and a high preſumption; it is impoſſible for ſuch to delight in the Lord indeed. Job (Chap. 27. 10.) ſaith of the Hypocrite, Will he delight himſelf in the Almighty? Will he alwayes call upon God? He may pretend to a delight in the Almighty, he may have ſome flaſhes, ſome raptures, but his joyes and delights are not in the Almighty; what joyes ſoever he hath they are in ſomewhat below God; the Hypocrite may delight himſelf in ſomewhat received from the Almighty, in ſome preſent benefit, or future expectation that he hath from the Almighty; he cannot delight in the Almighty himſelf, or in God as God.

As it is impoſſible in the nature of the thing, for a man to delight in ſin, and in God too; ſo God hath ſaid, that he who hath a delight in ſin, ſhall not find any delight in him. God hath ſaid, Delight thy ſelf in me, and I will give thee the deſires of thy heart (Pſal. 37. 4.) But if any man will follow the deſires of his own heart, he ſhall not delight himſelf in God. Sin ſeparateth between God and us (Iſa. 59. 2.) That is, it ſeparates between the comforts and mercies which are in God, and us; ſin doth not, cannot ſeparate us from the power, or preſence, from the eye, or juſtice of God; ſo ſin doth not ſeparate (for God is nigh to ſinners both to ſee what they are doing, and to puniſh them for what they have done ſinfully) but ſin ſeparates from all thoſe delights that flow from God, from thoſe joyes which his people take in him; yea, ſin breeds a ſtrangeneſs between God and the ſoul, ſo that the ſoul that loveth ſin, cannot have any holy familiarity or converſe with God. The Lord ſaith to thoſe who repent (Iſa. 1. 18.) Come let us reaſon together, &c. As if he had ſaid, I am now ready to debate the matter with you that repent, and how great ſoever your ſins have been, they ſhall be blotted out. Whereas before, the Lord tells them that he was weary of them, and that they were a burthen to him in all their ſervices: Now when we are a burthen to God, God is never pleaſant to us; if the Lord ſay he is weary of us, we cannot ſay we delight our ſelves in him. Our delight and pleaſure in God is the fruit of his delight in, and well-pleaſedneſs with us.

Thirdly, Eliphaz propoſeth this delight in the Lord, as the moſt winning promiſe.

Hence Note, Delight in the Lord is the higheſt and choiceſt mercy.

There is nothing better, nothing ſweeter then to delight in the Lord; delight in the Lord hath all true delights in it. David ſpeaks this out fully in that place lately quoted to another occaſion (Pſal. 37. 4.) Delight thy ſelf in the Lord, and he ſhall give thee the deſires of thy heart; that is, thou ſhalt have all thy deſires fulfilled in this thing; delight in the Lord will be the fulfilling of all thy deſires; not only ſhall they who delight themſelves in the Lord, have all their deſires filled up; but their very delight in the Lord is the fulfilling of all their deſires. What is the glory of Heaven, but delighting in the Lord? And he who delights in the Lord, feels not the want or abſence of any earthly Good. In thy preſence is fulneſs of joy, and at thy right hand are pleaſures for evermore (Pſal. 16. 11.) Heavenly glory is nothing but delight in God; and all earthly good is nothing without delight in God. We may affirm four things of this delight, in oppoſition to all worldly delights.

Firſt, This is a real delight; worldly delights are but ſhadows, or pageant like ſhews of delight. The joyes of a hypocrite, are like his holineſs, meer appearances of joy; he hath no real, no true joy, as he hath no true, no real holineſs. That man doth but fain a taſte of joy, whoſoever he is, that doth but fain the practice of holineſs. Thus who wickedly hold out a holineſs which they feel not, ſhall talk of joyes which they find not.

Secondly, Delight in the Lord is a ſtrong delight; yea, it is a ſtrengthening delight: That muſt needs be ſtrong joy, which is ſtrengthening joy; ſuch is the joy of the Lord, as Nehemiah told that people (Nehem. 8. 10.) The joy of the Lord, is the ſtrength of the ſoul, the ſtrength of the inward man, it makes us mighty, it makes us Giants to run our race, the race of holineſs. The Giant rejoyceth to run his race, becauſe he is ſtrong, and knows he can do it. The joy of the Lord is our ſtrength, and is both an evidence that we are ſtrong, and a means to make us ſo. Worldly delights are weak, and they weaken us; Delight in the Lord is ſtrong, and it ſtrengthens.

Thirdly, It is a laſting delight; not like the crackling of thorns under a pot (to which Solomon elegantly compares the laughter of the fool, Eccleſ. 7. 6.) that make a noiſe, and a blaze for a while, but are preſently extinct. Now Solomon's fool may be either, firſt, the prophane man in the World; or, ſecondly, the Hypocrite in the Church. All the joyes of this pair of fools, the prophane worldling, and the formal hypocrite, are ſoon in, and ſoon out, like crackling thorns. But joy or delight in the Almighty is a laſting delight; it is not for a fit, or a pang, but for a continuance; yea, it continueth in the midſt of all worldly ſorrows, for it overcomes and conquers them. There is a laughter in which (ſaith Solomon, Prov. 14. 13.) the heart is ſorrowful, and there is a ſorrow in which the heart laughs; As ſorrowful, yet alwayes rejoycing, ſaith the Apoſtle (2 Cor. 6. 10.) Spiritual joy, or joy in the Lord is not extinguiſhed, though ſurrounded with worldly ſorrows, Many waters cannot quench this vehement flame, thus flame of God (as Solomon ſpeaks of love, Cant. 8.) neither can the floods drown it.

Fourthly, Delight in the Almighty is a holy delight, a delight which makes us more holy; the delights of the world are impure, and they defile us; we ſeldom take in worldly pleaſures, but they leave ſome ſpot and taint upon our ſpirits or converſations; but the delights we have in the Lord are all pure, yea, purifying delights, they make the ſoul more clear, more holy, more heavenly; they make us like unto the Almighty, in whom our delight is. For what the object is in which we delight, ſuch is the ſpirit of him that takes that delight; now the Lord in whom this delight is, being altogether holy, they that take delight in him, muſt needs be made or kept holy by it. As delight in worldly things makes the heart worldly, baſe and dreggiſh, ſo this refines and purifies it. The more we drink of the rivers of this pleaſure, the more ſober we are; To be an Epicure (as it were) in theſe delights, is the higheſt temperance. Our feeding cannot be too full, nor our draughts too large upon theſe delights. Solomon (Eccleſ. 2. 2.) who had run a courſe through all worldly delights, and tryed them to the utmoſt, ſaid of laughter, it is mad, and of mirth what doth it? There is a madneſs in the mirth of the world, what doth it? That is, What good doth it to any man? Many things it doth, it makes men vain, fooliſh, diſſolute, dis-ſpirited for any goodneſs; But what good doth it? Doth it make any man better, more holy, more wiſe or fit for duty? No, it can do none of theſe things. But delight in the Lord, is all this, and can do all this, it is true, ſtrong, ſtrengthening, laſting, holy, a delight that makes us more holy. This is the portion of Saints at all times, though paid them in more or ſpecially at ſome times; and that either, firſt, reſpecting the ſtate and diſpoſition of their own ſouls, as in the reſt; or ſecondly, the ſtate of and promiſed diſpenſations of God to the Church. (Iſa. 65. 14, 18. Iſa. 66. 11.) Then (alſo in a ſpecial manner) ſhalt thou have thy delight in the Lord. And becauſe every man doth freely or willingly look to that in which he is delighted, therefore Eliphaz addeth, Quum unuſquiſq; licenter reſpicit id in quo delectatur, ſubdit, ver. ſeq. Aquin.

And ſhalt lift up thy face to God.

Os homini ſublime dedit. Ovid.

But ſome may ſay, Is that ſuch a great matter: Is it any ſpecial favour to lift up the face to God, ſeeing to do ſo is common to mankind? The Naturaliſt ſaith, That whereas other creatures look groveling downward, God gave man an erect countenance, and bid him look heavenwards. How then doth Eliphaz promiſe, Thou ſhalt lift up thy face to God? We had the like expreſſion (Chap. 10. 15.) If I be righteous, yet I will not lift up my head. And (Chap. 11. 15.) Then ſhalt thou lift up thy face without ſpot. The lifting up of the head, and the lifting up of the face, are the ſame; implying confidence, or well-grounded boldneſs in him that doth ſo: For all theſe phraſes of ſpeech imply a lifting up of the mind or ſpirit to God. As David ſaith (Pſal. 25. 1.) Unto thee, O Lord, do I lift up my ſoul. Eliphaz means not the lifting up of a heartleſs face or head, ſuch as the Hypocrite or Formaliſt lifts up to God in worſhip; nor the lifting up of a meer living head or face, ſuch as all men lift up to God according to the form or frame of their natural conſtitution, but the courage and confidence of the ſoul, and that a holy courage and confidence is here intended. And there are not many, who can thus lift up their face to God, as is promiſed here to Job by way of priviledge.

Equiparantia ſunt caput vel oculos vel faciē vel animam ad deum levare. Bold.

Fiduciam habebis recurrendi ad deū. Aquin:

And ſhalt lift up thy face to God.

Faciei elevatio orantis habitus eſt. Pined.

Vultum attollit qui ſibi bene conſcius eſt animo confidenti. Druſ.

To lift up the face, is taken under a twofold notion in Scripture: Firſt, As a geſture or bodily poſition in prayer: He that prayeth doth uſually lift up his face to God; and ſo to lift up the face to God, is to pray unto God. A corporal poſture being put often in Scripture to ſignifie a ſpiritual duty. Thus ſome underſtand it here, Thou ſhalt lift up thy face to God; that is, thou ſhalt pray: Secondly, (which further complyes with the duty of prayer) To lift up the face, notes (as was touched before) confidence of ſpirit, and boldneſs, courage, and aſſurance towards him, before whom the face is lifted up, whether God or man.

Παῤῥησιασθήσῃ ἐναντίον κυρίου. Sept.

The Septuagint, who rather paraphraſe then tranſlate this Text, give this ſence fully, Thou ſhalt be confident before the Lord (or thou ſhalt act fiducially and boldly before him) and behold Heaven chearfully. This lifting up the face is oppoſed to caſting down the face, and that is a phraſe uſed in Scripture to ſignifie ſhame and failing of ſpirit. When courage is down, the countenance is down too; as we ſay, ſuch a man hath a down look; that is, there is an appearance of guilt upon him. The face is caſt down three wayes: Firſt, By fear: Secondly, By ſorrow: Thirdly, By ſhame. (Ezra 9. 6.) O my God, I am aſhamed and bluſh, to lift up my face unto thee; for our iniquities are increaſed over our heads. So (Luke 18. 13.) the Publican durſt not lift up his eyes to Heaven: and poſſibly there was a complication of all theſe three cauſes why he durſt not, fear, ſorrow, ſhame; he was ſo much terrified, ſo much grieved, ſo much aſhamed of himſelf, that he durſt not lift up his eyes to Heaven. It was the ſpeech of Abner to Aſahel (2 Sam. 2. 22.) Turn thee aſide from following me; Why ſhould I ſmite thee to the ground? How then ſhould I hold up my face to Joab thy Brother? That is, If I ſlay thee I ſhall be afraid to look him in the face, nor can I have any confidence of his favour; and it is well conceived, that he ſpake thus (for it is indeed a very unuſual thing for the General of an Army, in the very heat of war, to look after the favour of the General of the oppoſite Army; but (I ſay) 'tis conceived he ſpake thus) as being convinced that he had undertaken a bad cauſe in upholding the houſe of Saul againſt David, and therefore had miſgivings that he might ſhortly fall into the hands of Joab, David's General, and was therefore unwilling to provoke him by killing his Brother. This made him ſay, How ſhall I hold up my face to thy Brother Joab? As if he had ſaid, I ſhall obſtruct the way of my own reconciliation to thy Brother (in caſe the turn of things in this war caſt me into his hand) by killing thee. Again, we may look back to Gen. 4. 5. where it is reported of Cain, That he was wroth, and his countenance fell; anger, and ſorrow, and ſhame, falling at once upon him (becauſe the Lord had reſpect to Abel and his offering, but had no reſpect to him or his) cauſed his countenance to fall; which phraſe ſtands in direct oppoſition to lifting up the face in all the three occaſions of it. For it implyeth, firſt, fear, which is oppoſed to boldneſs; ſecondly, ſorrow or anger, which are oppoſed to content and joy; thirdly, ſhame, which is oppoſed both to freedom of appproach, and liberty of ſpeech. We have an expreſſion which parallels much with this, in that Prophecy of Chriſt (Pſal. 110. 7.) He ſhall drink of the brook in the way, therefore ſhall he lift up his head; that is, he ſhall riſe and appear like a mighty Conqueror, with boldneſs, honour, and triumph. So Chriſt himſelf prophecying of the troubles which ſhall be in the latter dayes, comforts the ſurviving Saints in this language; When theſe things begin to come to paſs, then look up and lift up your heads (that is, then take heart and boldneſs) for the day of your redemption draweth nigh (Luke 21. 28.) That is, the day is at hand, wherein you ſhall be freed from all fears and ſorrows.

Quod legitur Exod. 14. 8. egreſſos filios Iſrael in manu excelſa, Chaldaicè dicitur, capite diſcooperto, i. e. palam, confidentèr, ſine metu.

Hence Obſerve, Holineſs hath boldneſs and freedom of ſpirit with God.

Then ſhalt thou lift up thy face unto God. As ſoon as Adam ſinned, he hid himſelf from the preſence of the Lord amongſt the Trees of the Garden (Gen. 3. 8.) He ran into the thickets for ſhelter, he durſt not appear or ſhew his face. But when once we are reconciled to God, and ſin is taken off, when we are freed from the bonds of guilt, then we have boldneſs; reconciliation is accompanied with the Spirit of adoption, Whereby we cry Abba, Father; we can then ſpeak to God as a Child to his Father; the Child dares lift up his face to his Father, and ſpeaks freely to him. Where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty (ſaith the Apoſtle, 2 Cor. 3. 17.) And that's a threefold liberty. Firſt, A liberty from ſin: Secondly, A liberty unto righteouſneſs, or a freeneſs and readineſs of ſpirit to do good: Thirdly, Where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is a liberty of ſpeech, or acceſs, with boldneſs in all our holy Addreſſes unto God. As the Apoſtle clearly ſheweth at the twelfth Verſe of the ſame Chapter; Seeing then that we have ſuch hope, we uſe great plainneſs (or boldneſs) of ſpeech, as we put in the Margin of our Bibles to expreſs the ſignificancy of the Greek word in the full compaſs of it. For as becauſe we have ſuch hope we ought to uſe great plainneſs of ſpeech towards men in preaching and diſpenſing the Goſpel to them; ſo great boldneſs towards God in receiving the offers and promiſes of the Goſpel, for our ſelves. Eliphaz having thus ſhewed what freedom Job, truly repenting, might have with God in prayer, proceeds in the next Verſe to ſhew what ſucceſs with God, or what fruit he ſhould have in prayer.

Verſe 27. Thou ſhalt make thy prayer to him, and he ſhall hear thee, and thou ſhalt pay thy Vows.

In theſe words we have a further promiſe, leading to a further duty; as before the duty of returning to the Almighty, mighty, had a promiſe annexed to it of liſting up the face to God, or boldneſs in prayer. So now the promiſe of being heard in prayer, is followed with a duty, The payment of Vowes.

Thou ſhalt make thy prayer to him, &c.

עתר Multiplicavit, propriè verba fortia fudit in Oratione.

The word notes the pouring out of many prayers, or of a multitude of words in prayer; yet not of bare words, but of words cloathed with power, ſtrong prayers as well as many prayers. For as the Goſpel comes from God to us, not in words only, but in power, and in the holy Ghoſt, and in much aſſurance (1 Theſ. 1. 5.) ſo prayer ſhould go from us to God, not in word only, but in power, and in the holy Ghoſt, &c. Thus ſaith Eliphaz, Thou ſhalt make many, and mighty prayers, ſtrong prayers, prevailing, conquering prayers; ſo the word is uſed, (Gen. 25. 21.) Then Iſaac intreated the Lord for his Wife, becauſe ſhe was barren; that is, he made many prayers to God; he made a buſineſs of praying that he might have a Son. Though there was a ſure promiſe made to Abraham, that he ſhould have a Son, and that in him, and from him ſhould come the promiſed ſeed; yet Iſaac was long without a Son, and he leaves it not careleſly in the decree of God, reſolving idly, God hath ſaid I ſhall have a Son at leaſt, if not many Sons, why ſhould I trouble my ſelf in the thing? No, Iſaac had not ſo learned the mind of God, he was better skill'd in Divinity then ſo, to ſeparate the means from the end, or to conclude that we need not pray for that which God hath purpoſed and promiſed. He, I ſay, was better inſtructed then ſo, and therefore though he (doubtleſs) did fully believe that God would fulfil the promiſe made to Abraham in giving him a Son, yet he intreated the Lord for his Wife, becauſe ſhe was barren; and he intreated the Lord earneſtly, he made plenty, abundance of prayers; for it cannot be ſuppoſed but that he had prayed for that mercy long before (for it was near twenty years ſince his marriage to Rebeccah, as appears plainly by comparing the twentieth Verſe of that Chapter with the twenty-ſixth, the former telling us, that he was forty years old when he married Rebeccah; and the latter, that he was threeſcore when Rebeccah bare Jacob and Eſau. So that I ſay, we cannot ſuppoſe but ſo holy a man as Iſaac had been ſuing out the good of the promiſe before) but when he perceived it ſticking ſo long in the birth, then his ſoul fell in travel about it, then he was very fervent in prayer, and would give the Lord no reſt; Then he entreated the Lord, &c. The ſame is ſaid of Manoah (Judges 13. 8.) Then Manoah intreated the Lord, and ſaid, Oh my Lord, let the man of God which thou didſt ſend come again unto us, and teach us what we ſhould do unto the Child that ſhall be born: He prayed then with much earneſtneſs, or made prayers for direction in that thing. The word is often uſed to ſignifie abundance (Iſa. 35. 2.) It ſhall bloſſom abundantly, (Jer. 33. 6.) Behold, I will bring in health, and cure, and I will cure them, and will reveal unto them the abundance of peace, and truth. Not only ſhall they have peace, and truth, but abundance of them. So here, thou ſhalt not only pray, but a ſpirit of prayer ſhall be poured out upon thee abundantly. Thou ſhalt make thy prayer unto him.

Hence Note, Firſt, Prayer is a duty.

We owe prayer to God as his creatures, or in regard of our natural dependance upon him, much more as new creatures, or in regard of our ſpiritual dependance upon him.

Secondly, Note, It is our duty not only to pray, but to pray much, or to pray with much fervency.

The emphaſis of the Original word here uſed, leads us to this as well as many Scripture Authorities. Cold asking invites a denyal; 'tis effectual or working fervent prayer that prevails much (Jam. 5. 16.)

Thirdly, Note, Prayer is due only to God.

Prayer is a part of holy worſhip, and all ſuch worſhip is proper to God alone, Thou ſhalt make thy prayer unto him. Saints and Angels worſhip God with us; we muſt not worſhip either Saint or Angel with God, no nor God, by the help and mediation of Saints or Angels. We know no Mediator of interceſſion, but he who is the Mediator of redemption, the Lord Jeſus Chriſt.

Fourthly, Taking in the conſideration of the time, as before in the former part; Then ſhalt thou have thy delight in the Lord, then ſhalt thou make thy prayer to him.

Obſerve, That, We are never in a fit frame for prayer, till we turn from every ſin by repentance.

As the Lord will not hear us when we pray, if we regard iniquity in our heart (Pſal. 68. 18.) ſo neither are we in a fitneſs to ſpeak to God in prayer, if we regard any iniquity in our hearts. Repenting and praying muſt be of the ſame length; unleſs we repent continually, we cannot pray continually, becauſe we ſin continually. The more holy we are, the more free we are to pray. Sin clogs and checks the ſpirit in this great duty; caſt off that weight, and then ſhalt thou make thy prayer to him,

And he ſhall hear thee.] To hear prayer, is more then to take notice of the matter or words ſpoken; to hear prayer, is to grant what we pray for. As our hearing the Word of God is more then to take in the ſound or the ſence of what is ſpoken; it is to ſubmit to and obey what is ſpoken: Now as we hear no more of the Word of God, then we believe and practice; ſo the Lord heareth no more of what we pray (in a Scripture ſence) then what he granteth. There are two expreſſions in Scripture which note this.

Reſpicere eſt audire.

Firſt, To have regard to a perſon, or to a prayer (1 Kings 8. 28, 29.) when Solomon prayed at the dedication of the Temple, the Lords hearing of prayer, which he then begged, is thus deſcribed, Have thou reſpect unto the prayer of thy ſervant, and to his ſupplication, &c. that thine eyes may be open toward this houſe night and day. So it is ſaid of Abel (Gen. 4. 4.) That the Lord had reſpect to his Offering, the Lord looked towards him, and accepted of him; to accept a prayer, is to hear a prayer.

Adeſſe eſt audire.

Secondly, The hearing of prayer is deſcribed by the preſence of God with thoſe that pray (Iſa. 58. 9.) Then ſhalt thou call, and the Lord ſhall anſwer; thou ſhalt cry, and he ſhall ſay, here I am. This is a wonderful condeſcenſion, 'tis even as when a Maſter calling to his ſervant, he anſwereth, Here, Sir, here I am; and that is as much as to ſay, I am ready to your command, I am ready to do what you will have me, here I am: So ſaith that Promiſe in the Prophet, Thou ſhalt cry, and the Lord ſhall ſay, here I am; that is, I am ready to what you ask, I am even ready (O unſpeakable Goodneſs) at your command (as our tranſlation of the eleventh verſe of the forty-fifth Chapter of Iſaiah ſpeaks out in plain terms) or, I am willing to do what you will have me to do. All which is in effect and vertually contained in the word of the Text. He ſhall hear thee. This teacheth us,

Firſt, That God is the hearer of prayer.

It is the Lords Title, O thou that heareſt prayer, unto thee ſhall all fleſh come (ſaith David, Pſal. 65. 2.) God is not only A hearer of prayer, but he is The hearer of prayer; to hear prayer is his peculiar prerogative and priviledge as well as his goodneſs and mercy; none in Heaven or Earth have a will to hear prayer as God doth, nor have any a power to do it. No creatures ear is long enough to reach the complaints, nor his ſtock large enough to ſupply the wants of all his fellow creatures. The Crown of this honour fits none but God himſelf. He ſhall hear thee.

Secondly, Note, It is a great mercy, a mercy comprehending all mercy, to be heard in prayer.

He ſhall hear thee.] Man cannot deſire a richer favour then to be heard of God. To have audience in the Court of Princes, and among the great men of the earth, is a great favour. What greater worldly priviledge can a man have then this, that he hath the ear of thoſe who are greateſt in the world? When a man ſaith, I have the Princes ear, I can be heard when I ſpeak, we think he hath ſpoken enough to make him a man. How great a mercy is it then to have the ear of God? To have ready audience in the Court of Heaven? That as ſoon as we call the Lord is ready to anſwer, Here I am; What's the matter? What would you have? It ſhall be done; your requeſt is granted. And to ſhew that to be heard by God is the ſum of all mercies, or all our mercies wrapt up in one, the Scripture teſtifies that not to be heard of God is the ſum of all judgments, or all judgments wrapt up in one. When the Lord refuſeth to hear, or ſaith he will not hear thoſe that pray, then wrath is coming upon them to the uttermoſt. Thus the Lord threatened the Jews (Iſa. 1. 15.) When ye ſpread forth your hands, I will hide my eyes from you, yea, when ye make many prayers, I will not hear, your hands are full of blood: As it is an argument of the greateſt ſinfulneſs of man againſt God, not to pray; Pour out thy fury upon the Heathen that know thee not, and upon the families that call not on thy Name (Jer. 10. 25.) So it is an argument of the greateſt wrath of God upon man not to be heard in prayer. He that is not heard receives nothing; and he that is heard receives all. And this is the Saints priviledge by Jeſus Chriſt, their prayers are heard, they have welcome audience at the Throne of Grace continually. And hence by way of Corollary from the former Obſervation, we learn, that Holy prayers are fruitful and gainful prayers.

God hath not ſaid to the ſeed of Jacob, ſeek ye me in vain; He that goeth forth and weepeth bearing precious fruit (this precious fruit, faith and prayer, or the prayer of faith) ſhall doubtleſs (there's no hazard nor peradventure in the caſe) come again rejoycing, bringing his ſheaves with him. His ſhowry ſeed-time ſhall be bleſſed with a fruitful and plentiful harveſt. The wicked make many adventures, many voyages by prayer, ſuch as it is, Heaven-wards, yet come home without lading, without any fraight at all. Their prayers are all loſt, and turn to no profit; and indeed theirs are not prayers but words, or babling rather. But holy prayer, the prayer of the holy, is prevailing: Thoſe ſhowers of prayers and tears which Believers ſend up to Heaven, are like the rain (as the Prophet ſpeaks, Iſa. 55. 10.) which cometh down, and the ſnow from Heaven, and returneth not thither, but watereth the earth, and maketh it bring forth and bud, that it may give ſeed to the ſower, and bread to the eater. Even thus the word of prayer which goeth out of the mouths, or hearts rather of Believers, returns not to them void, but proſpers in the thing whereto they ſend it. As appears yet more fully in the next words of this verſe ſpoken by Eliphaz, He ſhall hear thee: What then?

At quibuſcunque tandem modis peccator oret, verum etiam eſt nunquam exaudiri peccatorem ex dignitate ſuæ perſonæ aut meriti ſed ex dei gratia & miſericordia. Bold.

And thou ſhalt pay thy Vows.

That is, God will give thee the mercies which thou didſt pray for, and thereby give thee occaſion to pay the Vows which thou didſt make to him in caſe he performed thy deſire in prayer. Eliphaz is not exhorting Job (directly) to pay Vows; but he is aſſuring him that his prayer ſhall be heard, and ſo fully anſwered, that he ſhall ſee reaſon and have abundant cauſe to pay them, and to pay them both fully and chearfully.

Thou ſhalt pay thy Vows.] The word ſignifies free votive promiſes made to God, yet obligatory upon man; for howſoever, as the word implyeth, there ought to be the greateſt freedom and voluntarineſs in making a Vow; yet a Vow being made, there is an obligation, a bond or tye upon him that made it to perform or pay it: He that voweth binds himſelf, but he cannot unbind or abſolve himſelf from his Vow, nor can he retract or call in his lawful Vow.

נדרים Significat votivis promiſſiones deo factas, quæ obligat, nec retractari nec ſolvi propria authoritate poſſunt. Bold.

Eliphaz, I ſuppoſe, here mentions the payment of Vows, becauſe the godly in thoſe times did often make Vows. When Jacob (Gen. 28. 20.) fled from his Brother Eſau, he in caſe of his ſafe return, vowed a vow, ſaying, If God will be with me, and will keep me in this way that I go, and will give me bread to eat, and rayment to put on, ſo that I come to my Fathers houſe again in peace, then ſhall the Lord be my God (that is, I will own and honour him, love and depend upon him more then ever) And this ſtone which I have ſet up ſhall be Gods houſe, and of all that thou ſhalt give me I ſhall ſurely give the tenth to thee. Here's the tenour and form of the moſt ancient and famous Vow that ever was made. Likewiſe Hanna (1 Sam. 1. 11.) vowed a vow, and ſaid, O Lord of hoaſts, if thou wilt indeed look on the affliction of thy handmaid, and remember me, and not forget thy handmaid, but wilt give to thy handmaid a man-child, then will I give him unto the Lord. We read often in the Pſalms of paying of Vows, Pſal. 61. 13, 14. and 50. 14. and 76. 11. and 116. 14. And we have the command for it (Eccleſ. 5. 4.) Pay that which thou haſt vowed.

Further, To explicate this Text, It may be inquired what a Vow is?

I anſwer, A Vow is a ſolemn, free and voluntary promiſe made to God, of things lawful, weighty, and poſſible, to further and help us to glorifie God in our obedience. In which deſcription we have, Firſt, The nature of a Vow, It is a ſolemn promiſe, not a bare promiſe. Secondly, The object, It muſt be made to God. Thirdly, The manner of it, It is a free and a voluntary promiſe; for though a lawful Vow layeth a neceſſity upon us to keep it, when once we have made it, yet there is not an antecedent neceſſity of compulſion upon us to make it; ſo that a Vow ought to be a moſt free and voluntary act. Fourthly, In this deſcription of a Vow we have the general matter of it. As firſt, It muſt be of things lawful, we may not vow that which we may not do, either expreſly, as they did (Acts 23. 12, 13.) who vowed to kill Paul; or implicitly, as Herod did, who promiſed to give the Daughter of Herodias whatſoever ſhe ſhould ask, limiting her only as to the quantity of her demand, ſhe muſt not ask above half the Kingdom, but leaving her without limits, as to the quality of her demand, whether good or evil, lawful or unlawful made no matter. And thus many conceive Jephtah failed, implicitly vowing to do that, which was unlawful for him to do (Judg. 11. 30, 31.) Secondly, A Vow muſt be of things weighty and ſerious, we muſt not vow about trifles. Thirdly, It muſt be of things poſſible, through grace; though we muſt vow weighty things, yet we muſt not vow things impoſſible, either in their own nature, or without extraordinary aſſiſtance and ſtrength from God. Fifthly, We have here the ends of a Vow: Firſt, To glorifie God: Secondly, To oblige us more ſtrictly to obedience.

Hence Note, Firſt, It is lawful to make a Vow.

All the Scripture teſtimonies before alledged confirm that Propoſition.

Secondly, Vows lawfully made ought to be kept.

Thou ſhalt pay thy Vows, hath in it the nature both of a Promiſe and of a Command: Vows are bonds, we muſt take heed of breaking them; if we break our Vows, God will break our peace. The word which we tranſlate to pay a Vow, ſignifies alſo to give peace and quietneſs, implying that till the Vow be paid we cannot have peace. A man that is in bond to men hath no peace till he diſchargeth, or hath prepared to diſcharge his debt; and therefore an acquittance or a diſcharge for a debt, is commonly called, A quietus eſt, implying, that till a man hath got a diſcharge, he is not at quiet. We are at our liberty whether we will vow or no; but we are not at our liberty whether we will pay our Vows or no. And therefore Solomon doth not only exhort to the payment of Vows, but to the ſpeedy payment of them (Eccleſ. 5. 4.) When thou voweſt a Vow unto God, defer not to pay it, for he hath no pleaſure in fools: That is, He is greatly diſpleaſed with fools; he means it not of ſuch as are called fools for the want of a natural underſtanding, but for the want of a good conſcience, and ſuch are all they, who flatter God with their haſtineſs in making Vows, and then mock him by their ſlowneſs in, or neglect of paying them. And therefore take four Cautions about Vows.

Firſt, Be not frequent in making Vows; vowing muſt not be like praying, an every dayes work; we may not vow as we muſt pray, alwayes, and without ceaſing. Many have brought themſelves into great ſnares, by multiplying Vows, and we have need to be caution'd in this thing, becauſe the nature of man is carried much to it. The Heathens made many Vows, eſpecially when they were in any diſtreſs; and ſo meer carnal men will do to this day, vow great things, what they will be, and what they will do, if trouble be upon them. It is ſaid, that thoſe Heathen Marriners made Vows when the ſtorm was over and the danger paſt (Jon. 1. 16.) Many make Vows in a ſtorm, whether at Sea or Land, which they little mind when the ſtorm is done. But thoſe Heathens (which may be a rebuke to ſome Chriſtians) made Vows of praiſe and thankfulneſs when they had eſcaped the ſtorm. And this is a further proof of that naturalneſs which is in man to make Vows. And the reaſon of it is, becauſe this ſatisfieth a natural man, and fills him with confidence that he ſhall receive good from God, becauſe he hath vowed duty to him. Man loves to be upon his own bottom, and thinks he ſhall ſurely engage God to be merciful, while himſelf promiſeth to be dutiful and thankful. Now (I ſay) though there be ſtill a lawfulneſs of Vows in theſe Goſpel times, yet take heed of making many Vows, eſpecially of conceiting to oblige God by any of them. As the former may prove a ſnare, and an entanglement to us; ſo the latter is a diſhonour to God, who never ſhews us mercy more freely, then when we bind our ſelves moſt to duty.

Secondly, When ever you vow, be ſure you do it in the ſtrength of Chriſt. None diſcover more weakneſs in keeping Vows, then they who make Vows in their own ſtrength, or not wholly in the ſtrength of Chriſt. Some have vowed never to commit ſuch a ſin more; and they never committed it ſo much as after they had vowed. Some have thought to get cure and remedy againſt ſuch a corruption or luſt by a Vow; and yet that luſt or corruption hath prevailed more upon them after their Vow. The reaſon of all is, becauſe they have either put their Vow in the room of Chriſt, as if that could help them alone, or elſe they have made their Vows alone, without relyance upon the power of Chriſt. That rule of the Apoſtle which obtains in all caſes of duty, doth moſt in this; Whatſoever ye do in word or deed, do all in the Name of the Lord Jeſus, giving thanks to God and the Father by him (Col. 3.17.)

Thirdly, In things which are directly commanded, or directly forbidden in the Law of God; we are not to vow the doing or not doing of the thing in it ſelf, but only a greater care and ſtricter watch over our ſelves, either for the doing of the one, or not to do the other. As for example, We ſhould not vow abſolutely, that we will not worſhip Idols, that we will not ſwear, that we will keep the Sabbath, that we will honour our Parents, that we will do no murder, for all theſe duties are expreſly commanded by God, and are therefore paſt being vowed by us. Only thus, we (obſerving the treachery of our own hearts) may vow more care and diligence in and about all theſe things. And thus we are to underſtand that of Jacob (Gen. 28.21.) vowing That the Lord ſhould be his God; as alſo that of David (Pſal. 119.106.) I have ſworn, and will perform it, that I will keep thy righteous judgments. David kept them before; but now he would be more ſtrict then before in keeping them. So then, when we vow things already commanded or forbidden, we muſt pitch and place our Vow, not upon the matter of the Commandment, but upon the manner and intenſeneſs of our ſpirits in keeping it.

Fourthly, Let not Vows about indifferent things be perpetual. All Vows about things expreſſed in the Law of God muſt be perpetual, becauſe the things themſelves are alwayes a duty. For the affirmative Precepts of the Law are at all times binding; and the negative bind at all times. But as for things which are not preciſely under a Law: As for example, In the affirmative to pray ſo many times in a day, to read ſo many Chapters of the holy Scriptures in a day, to hear ſo many Sermons in a week: and in the negative, not to drink any wine or ſtrong drink, not to wear ſilk or lace for or upon our apparel, not to take ſuch or ſuch a recreation, in it ſelf lawful; I ſay, in theſe caſes, let not Vows be perpetual, but limited to a ſeaſon, leſt thereby we entangle our own ſouls, and caſt our ſelves into temptation, while (through a zeal, not according to knowledge) we uſe ſuch means to avoid it. Make no Vows to bind your ſelves at all times in things which are not neceſſary at all times, either to be done, or not to be done.

From the whole Verſe obſerve, That, The anſwer of prayer received from the Lord, doth call us to pay and perform all the duties that we have promiſed or vowed to the Lord in prayer.

Though we do not alwayes make ſtrict and formal Vows when we pray, yet every prayer hath ſomewhat of a Vow in it; ſo that having prayed at any time, we may ſay, The Vows of God are upon us; for when we pray we promiſe, and then eſpecially we do ſo, when we pray under any preſſure of trouble, or when we have any extraordinary requeſt to make; then, I ſay, we engage our ſelves in a more ſolemn manner to ſerve and walk with God: And ſo the return or anſwer of ſuch prayers ingageth us more ſtrongly to duty. For whereſoever the Lord ſoweth, there he looks to reap; and where he hath ſowed much, he looks to reap much; but then and there chiefly, when we promiſe him fruits of duty for our receipt of favour and mercy. Did we take notice of this, we ſhould not be found as we are ſo much in arrear to the Lord, either for our private or publick mercies. What promiſes have we made in the day of our diſtreſs? That we would be holy, that we would ſtrive againſt and mortifie our ſins, or the deeds of the body, through the Spirit and power of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt. Now let Conſcience ſpeak; have we performed our promiſes? Have we paid our Vows? We can hardly ſay that we have put up a prayer which hath not had an anſwer by bleſſing and ſucceſſes; God hath been to us a prayer-hearing God; Have we been to him a vow-paying people? Who amongſt us is now more active for God? Or more careful to pleaſe him then before? Who amongſt us is more watchful over his heart, or more circumſpect in his walking then he was before? Who is more careful over his family, that it may be holy? Or more zealous for the publick, that it may be reformed, then he was before? What manner of men ſhould we be in all holy converſation and godlineſs, did we but pay thoſe Vows and make good thoſe Engagements which have gone out of our lips, and we have laid upon our ſelves before the Lord, in the day of our trouble? How juſt, how pure, how righteous a Nation ſhould we be, were we what we promiſed our outmoſt endeavours to be? The Lord hath done much for us; let us up and be doing for him; let us make good what we have ſpoken to the Lord in vowing and promiſing, ſeeing the Lord hath performed what we have ſpoken to him in praying and calling upon his Name. God hath anſwered us at the firſt call, yea, ſometimes before we called; let us not put God to call a ſecond and a third time, much leſs often and often for the payment of our Vows. For though the Lord in patience wait many dayes for the payment of Vows, yet according to righteouſneſs we ſhould not let him wait one day for it. All theſe ſpiritual debt-bills are payable at ſight or upon demand; God ſhews us our own bills and bonds wherein we ſtand engaged to his Majeſty every day, and every day (by ſome or other of his Attorneys; that is, by ſome means or other) he makes his demand: therefore pay to day, pay every day, for we can never come wholly out of theſe debts to God, or ſay, we owe him nothing, how much ſoever, we have paid him. And know, that if when God hath heard us, we be ſloathful in paying our Vows, either God will hear us no more, or we ſhall hear of him (and that, as we ſay, with both ears) till he make our ears tingle, and our hearts ake for not paying them. Swift Judgments have often followed theſe ſlow payments. And though they have not been ſwift in coming preſently upon the neglect, yet when they have come, they have come ſwiftly upon the neglecters. And as we may alwayes ſay of the evils and judgments which come upon any of the people of God, as the Prophet in a like caſe doth to the people of Iſrael (Jer. 4. 18.) Thy way and thy doings have procured theſe things unto thee, this is thy wickedneſs. So in moſt caſes, when evils and judgments fall upon and afflict the people of God, we may ſay, Your not doing what you have promiſed, hath procured theſe things unto you, This is your vow-breaking or your neglect of paying your Vows. And how juſt is it that their troubles ſhould not only be renewed, but even doubled and trebled, yea, ſeven times more encreaſed upon them, who ſlight and throw off thoſe very duties which they took upon them in the day of their trouble, in expectation to have their troubles removed. Every mans mouth will be ſtopt, when he ſuffers for not doing that good which the mouth of the Lord hath ſpoken: How much more will his mouth be ſtopt, and he have nothing to ſay for himſelf, who ſuffers for not doing that good, or for not forbearing that evil, which his own mouth hath ſpoken, and ſolemnly charged upon himſelf as a duty in the preſence of the Lord. They will have leaſt to ſay for themſelves who go againſt or come not up to what themſelves have ſaid. Then pay your Vows.

VERS. 28, 29, 30.

Thou ſhalt alſo decrée a thing, and it ſhall be eſtabliſhed unto thée; and the light ſhall ſhine upon thy wayes.
When men are caſt down, then thou ſhalt ſay, There is lifting up; and he ſhall ſave the humble perſon.
He ſhall deliver the Iſland of the Innocent; and it is delivered by the pureneſs of thine hand.

IT hath appeared in opening the whole Context (of which this is a part) how Eliphaz preſſeth Job with Promiſes, aſſuring him, that not only good, but great good ſhould accrue to him by his returning to God, and acquainting himſelf with the Almighty. And in the foregoing verſe, That great benefit was ſhewed, The Lords hearing the prayer of ſuch as do ſo; Thou ſhalt make thy prayer to him, and he ſhall hear thee, and thou ſhalt pay thy vows: Here Eliphaz gives in another excellent Promiſe, Thou ſhalt alſo, &c. that is, moreover and beſide what I have ſaid, I add this,

Verſe 28 Thou ſhalt alſo decrée a thing, and it ſhall be eſtabliſhed unto thée.

גזר Scidit, abſcidit, ſecuit diviſit. Metalepticè ſecuit lites, definivit, decrevit. Importat hoc verbum decretum cum quadã ſeparatione unius rei ab alia. Bold.

Thou ſhalt decrée.] The word here tranſlated to decree, ſignifies properly to divide, to cut aſunder. So it is uſed (1 Kings 3. 25.) when Solomon gave ſentence between the two women that were Harlots concerning the living Child, he ſaith, Divide the Child; my decree is that the Child ſhall be divided. Now hence, by a Trope, the word ſignifies alſo to decree, to decide, or to determine a matter, becauſe in all decrees about or determinations of a Controverſie, there is (as it were) a cutting off the buſineſs, a laying aſide of one thing, and a ſticking to another. When the whole matter is debated and weighed in Council, then the reſult and iſſue of all is drawn up and given out in a decree. So that to decree is to divide, or ſeparate one thing from another, reſolving upon that, which we conceive moſt juſt and reaſonable.

Verbum pro re frequenter per Metonymiam adjuncti.

Thou ſhalt decrée a thing.] The Hebrew is, Thou ſhalt decree a word: It is uſual in that language to put word for thing. And when he ſaith, Thou ſhalt decree a thing, we are not to underſtand it at large, as if whatſoever were decreed ſhould be eſtabliſhed; but the meaning is, thou ſhalt decree that which is right and good in it ſelf, and good for thee. For the decree being made by a godly man, we cannot ſuppoſe that he ſhould decree any thing but that which is juſt and good; and ſo the ſignification of the former word is well applyed to this, Thou ſhalt decree; that is, thou having by deliberation and ſerious diſcuſſion conſidered what is right, and having cut off all evil from thy ſentence, thou decreeing ſuch a thing, It ſhall be eſtabliſhed unto thee.

Poterit eſſe præcedentis partis expoſitio. Decernes offerre vota & deus illa rata efficies, vel rata ſemper fundes verba. Pined.

There are yet two Opinions concerning this decree, as it is an expoſition of the former promiſes, Thou ſhalt be heard, and, Thou ſhalt pay thy Vows; that is, what thou ſueſt for by prayer on earth, ſhall be decreed for thee in Heaven. That is, thy prayer ſhall certainly be performed, thy prayers ſhall not be loſt, no, they ſhall be as the Statutes and decrees of Heaven. It is ſaid of Eliah (1 Kings 17. 1.) what he decreed was done: And what was his decree? His decree was his prayer: See how he ſpeaks, as if he had the command of Heaven and Earth; as if he had carried the Keyes of the Clouds at his girdle; As the Lord God of Iſrael liveth, before whom I ſtand, there ſhall not be dew nor rain theſe years, but according to my word. But what was this word of Elijah? The Apoſtle James expounds that for us, he telleth us what this word was, when Eliah ſaid, It ſhall be according to my word (James 5. 17.) Elias was a man ſubject to the like paſſions as we are, and he prayed earneſtly that it might not rain, and it rained not on the earth, for the ſpace of three years and ſix months: And he prayed again, and the Heavens gave rain, and the Earth brought forth her fruit. The Apoſtle explains, what the word of Eliah was, even a prayer-word, he prayed and ſought the Lord in that thing, and his prayer was as certainly performed to him, as if he had the whole power of decreeing what he would have. Thus here, thou ſhalt pour out a prayer, and thy prayer ſhall be as a decree eſtabliſhed with God. So we read (Gen. 32. 24.) in the report of Jacob's wreſtling with the Angel, that the word of Jacob was as a decree, I will not let thee go, except thou bleſs me; I will have a bleſſing; and it is ſaid, As a Prince haſt thou power with God, and with men, and haſt prevailed. Jacob had what he would in prayer, he decreed a thing, and it was eſtabliſhed to him. The prayers of Saints are decrees with God: And 'tis but reaſon they ſhould be ſo; becauſe their prayers anſwer the decrees of God, or they pray for that which God hath decreed; and indeed there is no Saint or godly man would pray any other prayer, or ask any thing of God, but what God hath determined and decreed before to give: As a godly man would do nothing but what God hath commanded, ſo he would ask nothing but what God hath decreed. This is a comfortable truth; yet I rather conceive the ſence of this place more general, and not tyed up to that of prayer: And therefore,

Ordinabis per tuam providentiã facturum aliquid, & quaſi rem non futuram & incertã, ſed quaſi divina jam voluntate conſtitutam illam habebis. Aquin.

Secondly, Thou ſhalt decree a thing: That is, thou ſhalt take up a reſolve, or a purpoſe; thou in thy wiſdom and prudence ſhalt ſay in thy heart, I will do ſuch a thing, or I would bring ſuch a thing to paſs, and it ſhall come to paſs or be eſtabliſhed. For as many men met together in Council, make Decrees; ſo any man in himſelf may make a decree; and we alwayes make decrees in our own minds before we joyn in any decree with others: Firſt, We ſpeak in our minds, then we ſpeak out our minds; Thou ſhalt decree a thing; that is, thou ſhalt reſolve to go ſuch a way, or to do ſuch a thing, and it ſhall be done. Now, this caſe of decreeing muſt be underſtood with a caution; ſuppoſe the thing it ſelf be juſt and lawful (as we touched before) yet a man muſt not make abſolute decrees (that's the priviledge of God, he only can make peremptory decrees, who hath all things in his power) we muſt decree ſubmiſſively to the will of God, and ſay, If the Lord will, if the Lord pleaſe we will do ſuch a thing. The Apoſtle (James 4. 12, 13, 14.) reproves thoſe that would make peremptory decrees of what they would do in reference to outward affairs, Go to now ye that ſay to day or to morrow we will go into ſuch a City, here is a decree, we will go to ſuch a place, or do ſuch a thing, we will continue there a year, and buy, and ſell, and get gain. It is lawful for men to take up a purpoſe to go to ſuch a place, and follow their trade to buy and ſell, and get gain in an honeſt way; but no man muſt be peremptory in this, becauſe we know not what ſhall be on the morrow; therefore, the Apoſtle directs, Ye ought to ſay, if the Lord will we ſhall live, and do this or that. Such decrees muſt be made with the Lords good leave, or with a reference to his pleaſure who alone doth whatſoever pleaſeth him. As the perſons ſo the works of all men are in the hand of God (Eccleſ. 9. 1.) And there they are: Firſt, As to the performance of them: Secondly, As to the ſucceſs of them. They take themſelves for more then men, who decree the doing of lawful things without the leave of God. We muſt not only ſee what we do is according to the will of God; but we muſt have his good will for the doing of it: That is, as we muſt have a Law from God for what we do, ſo leave from God. Thus Paul teacheth us to ſpeak by his own example (1 Cor. 4. 19.) I will come unto you ſhortly, if the Lord will. And again (Chap. 16. 7.) I muſt tarry a while with you, if the Lord permit. Once more (Phil. 2. 19.) I truſt in the Lord to ſend Timothy to you ſhortly. And even Heathens themſelves, by the light of Nature, have acknowledged ſuch a ſubmiſſion as due unto their ſuperiour Powers, their gods; therefore they uſed to expreſs their reſolutions thus, If the gods will; much more muſt Chriſtians ſpeak thus in all they undertake to do, we will do it, if God will. Thou ſhalt decree a thing,

Ethnicis illud in ore frequens erat, ſi dii volunt.

And it ſhall be eſtabliſhed unto thée.

יקם Surget tibi; ſurgere pro exiſtere vel effectũ dare.

That is, Thou ſhalt have ſucceſs in it, it ſhall be confirm'd. The word in the Original ſignifies to riſe up, as alſo to ſtand. So ſome render it here, Thou ſhalt decree a thing, and it ſhall riſe up to thee. When a thing that we are determined upon, proſpers and comes well on, we ſay, it riſeth up to us; whereas a buſineſs that fails, falls off from us, or goeth backward. But ſaith Eliphaz to Job, The thing which thou decreeſt ſhall riſe or come up to thy mind, to thy deſire; or as ſome read, It ſhall come to thee; we ſay, It ſhall be eſtabliſhed. So the word is uſed frequently in Scripture (Iſa. 40. 8.) The word of the Lord ſhall ſtand.

Veniet tibi. Vulg.

Now as the Word of the Lord ſhall ſtand, ſo ſhall the word of man while it is according to the Word of God. So the word is uſed in the Caſe of a virgins making a vow (Numb. 30.4.) If the father hear it and ſay nothing, it ſhall ſtand, or be confirm'd; otherwiſe if he diſlike, it is a void vow, a null vow. So that here, to riſe up, or to be eſtabliſhed, notes only the effectiveneſs and ſucceſs of thoſe decrees which this godly man ſhould make; theſe ſhall be eſtabliſhed unto him for his good, he ſhall have the comfort and benefit of them, while he aims at the glory of God in them.

Hence note, Firſt, The ſucceſs of our Councels and Decrees is a great mercy.

Eliphaz brings it in by way of promiſe, Thou ſhalt decree a thing, and it ſhall be eſtabliſhed unto thee. Succeſs in any of our right actions is to be acknowledged as a mercy; and therefore the Lord doth ſo diſtinctly ſpecifie the ſucceſleſneſs of the Jews after their return from Babylon, in their rural and houſhold buſineſſes, for neglecting to build his houſe (Hag. 1.6.) to ſhew that he had a controverſie with them; Ye have ſown much, and brought in little (no ſucceſs) ye eat, but have not enough; ye drink, but ye are not filled with drink (that is, ye are not ſatisfied) ye cloath you, but there is no warmth (which is the effect of cloathing) and he that earneth wages, earneth wages to put it into a bag with holes. Which is a proverbial ſpeech, implying that nothing ſticks, nothing ſtayes by a man, no more then mony doth in a bag that hath holes in it, or water in a ſieve, or in a leaking veſſel. Succeſleſneſs attended them in all they did, and that was their affliction. So when our Councels proſper, when what we adviſe to be done thrives in the doing; when the directing word of a man proves like the Creating word of God (Gen. 1.) who did but ſay, Let there be light, and there was light; let there be a firmament, and there was a firmament, &c. Thus when a man ſhall ſay, let ſuch a thing be done, and it is done; when every thing comes forth at a word, like a new Creation, how great both a mercy and honour is this? When he ſaith, let there be deliverance, and there is deliverance; let there be victory, and there is victory; let there be peace, and there is peace; when in caſes of greateſt difficulty and utter impoſſibility to fleſh and blood, he ſpeaks like magnanimous Joſhua (Joſh. 10.13.) in a commanding language to the creature, while with ſtrongeſt confidence in and humbleſt dependance upon God, Sun ſtand thou ſtill upon Gibeah, and thou Moon in the valley of Ajalon; and the Sun ſtood ſtill, and the Moon ſtayed until the people had avenged themſelves upon their enemies. Who of the ſons of men (who were not alſo the ſons of God) were ever crowned with ſuch an honour?

Secondly, He doth not ſay, he ſhall decree a thing and eſtabliſh it; for man may decree a thing, but man cannot eſtabliſh it; the decree is from one, the eſtabliſhment is from another; and who is that other? Eliphaz doth not expreſs who by name, but we may eaſily underſtand who it is, even God himſelf. For as it is God alone who hath given a being to all things, ſo he alone gives all things their eſtabliſhment, whether they be things wrought by him, or wrought by us; God ſhall eſtabliſh it, or it ſhall be eſtabliſhed by the fiat, and conſent of God.

Hence obſerve, The ſucceſs of our Councels and decrees is from God.

There are many who take wiſe, yea honeſt Councels, which yet are not eſtabliſhed, becauſe the Lord is not pleaſed to eſtabliſh them; and the Lord doth often overthrow evil and malicious Counſels. We read (Iſa. 7.5, 6, 7.) of Councels and Decrees made, Syria, Ephraim, and the ſon of Remaliah, have taken evil Councel againſt thee, ſaying (they decree a thing, what was it?) let us go up againſt Judah to vex it (there was the decree) let us make a breach therein for us, and ſet a King in the midſt of it, even the Son of Tabeal. Here was their decree, we will vex this people, we will ſet a King among them, the Son of Tabeal. But what ſaith the Lord to this? Thus ſaith the Lord God (verſ 7.) it ſhall not ſtand, neither ſhall it come to paſs. It is this word in the Text, it ſhall not be eſtabliſhed. You have made a decree, but you have not my conſent for the eſtabliſhment of it, and therefore it ſhall not ſtand, it ſhall not come to paſs. Take another Scripture (Iſa. 8.10.) the Lord doth as it were give them leave to make decrees: make as many decrees as you will, and ſit together in Councel, lay your Councels as deep as you can, take Councel together, and it ſhall come to nought (you may take Councel, but it is in my power whether it ſhall ſucceed or no, and I have decreed concerning your decree, that it ſhall come to nought) ſpeak the word, and it ſhall not ſtand. The ſtanding or not ſtanding, the fruſtrating or the fulfilling of our Decrees and Councels, it is from the Lord.

Thirdly, When he ſaith, Thou ſhalt decree a thing, and it ſhall be eſtabliſhed unto thee.

We may Obſerve, The Councels of the godly are under a promiſe of good ſucceſs.

They have a kind of aſſurance that what they ſay ſhall come to paſs; though they have not an abſolute aſſurance, yet they have much aſſurance; though we cannot ſay in every particular caſe, that their decree ſhall be eſtabliſhed to them, yet their decrees in general are under a promiſe of eſtabliſhment. Chriſt ſpeaketh concerning the decrees of a Church-Aſſembly (Matth. 18.18.) Verily I ſay unto you, whatſoever ye ſhall bind on Earth, ſhall be bound in Heaven; and whatſoever ye ſhall looſe on Earth, ſhall be looſed in Heaven; that is, I will eſtabliſh your decrees. If when you meet together in my name, you decree concerning a perſon to bind ſin upon him, he ſhall be bound; if to looſe or pronounce him pardon'd, he ſhall be looſened; your decree on Earth, ſhall be a decree in Heaven; I will bind what you bind, and looſe what you looſe. Now in proportion, the Lord ſpeaks the ſame concerning the decrees of any godly man; what he binds on Earth, the Lord doth bind in Heaven, and what he looſeth on Earth, God looſeth in Heaven; that is, there is an eſtabliſhment of his decrees: and as the Church there hath a promiſe that the Lord will joyn with her in her decrees; ſo a godly man hath a promiſe here that the Lord will joyn with him in his decrees. We have alſo an excellent confirmation of it (Iſa. 44.25, 26.) The Lord is many wayes deſcribed in Scripture, but here he is deſcribed by diſappointing and eſtabliſhing the Councels of men. He it is that fruſtrateth the tokens of the liars, and maketh diviners mad; that turneth wiſe men backward, and maketh their knowledge fooliſhneſs. Here is a deſcription of God in reference to the diſappointments which he puts upon his enemies, in fruſtrating their Councels and Decrees; they boaſt of theſe and theſe tokens that aſſure them of good ſucceſs, but the Lord fruſtrates their tokens. The Diviners ſay, O the Stars promiſe good luck, and tell us we ſhall have good fortune; thus diviners boaſt, but the Lord maketh the diviners mad; how doth he make them mad? By making them ſee things fall out quite croſs to what they have foretold or propheſied. Again, he turns wiſe men backward; that is, he turns the Councels of wiſe men backward, when they have reſolved ſuch a thing, the Lord ſets it quite another way: this is the glory of God that he can give check to the Councels of the greateſt Politicians, and deepeſt Machiavels, he turns them backward. Thus the Lord is ſet forth overthrowing the decrees of the wicked; but at verſ. 26. He is ſet forth eſtabliſhing the decrees of the godly. He it is that confirmeth the word of his ſervant, and performeth the Councel of his meſſengers; that ſaith to Jeruſalem, thou ſhalt be inhabited; and to the Cities of Judah, ye ſhall be built, &c. God confirmeth the word of his ſervant; which may be underſtood not only of the word of Propheſie (though that be the ſcope of that place; as if it had been ſaid, when the Lord ſendeth forth his Prophets and holy Diviners, 'tis not with them as with falſe Prophets and heatheniſh Diviners, who making promiſes from the Stars of Heaven, not from the God of Heaven, are fruſtrated and diſappointed; 'tis not thus with the Lords holy Diviners, for he confirmeth the word of his ſervants. Now, I ſay, we may underſtand that Text not only of that word of propheſie which the Lord puts into the mouths of his ſervants by an immediate inſpiration) but alſo of that word of propheſie, or decree, which any one of his faithful ſervants ſpeaketh or maketh according to his already revealed will. This word of his ſervants the Lord confirmeth alſo, and performeth the Councel of his meſſengers. And the reaſon is (as was touched before about prayer) becauſe there is a ſuitableneſs between ſuch words and decrees of his ſervants, and his own decrees; for the deſigns of his ſervants falling in with his own deſignes, and ſo their decrees with his decrees; he in eſtabliſhing their decrees, doth indeed but eſtabliſh his own. For the ſervants of God deſiring that their decrees may be ſuitable to the written or revealed will of God, they ſeldom miſs of a ſuitableneſs to the decrees of his hidden and ſecret will. So that their decrees are (as it were) the Duplicate or Counterpanes of the Decrees of God; and therefore no wonder if they be under ſuch a promiſe of ſucceſs and eſtabliſhment. The Lord ſaith concerning his own decrees or thoughts, Surely as I have thought, ſo ſhall it come to paſs (Iſa. 14. 24.) Now if we think as God thinketh, then what we think ſhall come to paſs too) and as I have purpoſed ſo ſhall it ſtand; if we purpoſe as God purpoſeth, then our purpoſes ſhall ſtand too. Again (Iſa. 46. 10.) I am the Lord, and there is none elſe; I am God, and there is none like me: Declaring the end from the beginning, and from ancient times the things that are not yet done, ſaying, My councel ſhall ſtand, and I will do all my pleaſure. If then the councels of the Saints be the councels of God, he will do all their pleaſure. That's the ſum of this promiſe to Job, Thou ſhalt decree a thing, and it ſhall be eſtabliſhed unto thee. Which appears further from the laſt clauſe.

And the light ſhall ſhine upon thy wayes.

Eliphaz in this promiſe might poſſibly have reſpect to Job's former complaint (Chap. 19. 8.) He hath fenced up my way that I cannot paſs; and he hath ſet darkneſs in my paths; as if Eliphaz had here ſaid, thou didſt complain a while ago that God ſet darkneſs in thy paths, do thou return unto the Lord, and the light ſhall ſhine upon thy wayes, or there ſhall be light in ſtead of darkneſs in thy paths. This light may be taken three wayes.

Firſt, A light of direction, thou ſhalt ſee what to do; ſo it anſwers the former promiſe, Thou ſhalt decree a thing, and it ſhall be eſtabliſhed unto thee. Thou ſhalt not make blind decrees, or decrees in the dark; thou ſhalt not decree at a venture, or at random; the light ſhall ſhine upon thy wayes; thou ſhalt have the light of the Word, and the light of the Spirit to direct thee in making thy decrees, and for the ordering of thy whole converſation.

Secondly, Light ſhining upon his wayes, is the proſperity of his wayes; as if he had ſaid, ſucceſs ſhall attend thy undertakings, the favour of God and his bleſſing ſhall be upon what thou takeſt in hand; as the Sun ſhining upon the earth ripens the fruits thereof, ſo the light, heat, and influence of divine favour ſhall ripen thy undertakings and bring them to a deſired perfection. Light, in Scripture, is often put for proſperity, as hath been ſhewed from other paſſages of this book.

Thirdly, The light ſhall ſhine upon thy wayes; that is, thou ſhalt have perſonal comfort and contentment in thy wayes; that's a different bleſſing from the former; 'tis poſſible for a man to be in a proſperous way, and yet himſelf to take no comfort nor contentment in it. When theſe three lights ſhine upon any man in his way, or upon the wayes of any man, when the Lord ſhews him what he ſhould do, when he proſpereth and ſucceeds what he doth, and when he hath comfort and joy in what he is doing or hath done, then the bleſſing is full. As the Lord meets him that rejoyceth in his way and worketh righteouſneſs, ſo the Lord doth often meet thoſe that work righteouſneſs in their way, cauſing them to rejoyce; and then the light ſhines upon their way indeed. This is a further addition unto the promiſe of ſucceſs before given.

From the firſt notion of light,

> Firſt obſerve, The righteous are under a promiſe of direction and guidance by God; they ſhall ſee their way, and know what to do, by a divine light.

The ſteps of a good man are ordered by the Lord (Pſal. 73. 23.) that is, the Lord gives him light to ſee how to order his ſteps. He hath not only an outward natural light ſhining in the Air, and an outward ſpiritual light ſhining in the rule; but he hath an inward ſpiritual light ſhining in his heart, or that outward rule planted within, as it follows at verſ. 31. of the ſame Pſalm, The law of his God is in his heart, and none of his ſteps ſhall ſlide: The law in the heart is a rule within, which directs the good man what to do, and gives him ſuch good direction, that none of his ſteps ſhall ſlide. He ſhall not walk like a man upon glaſs or ice, all whoſe ſteps are ſlips, or in danger of ſliding; but he ſhall walk like a man upon plain firm ground, whoſe very ſteps are as ſure as ſtandings. As Saints who were darkneſs are made light in the Lord, in reference to their ſtate; ſo they have light from the Lord, in reference to their walkings; and as they receive a light from God whereby they know all things, that is, thoſe great things which concern eternal life (1 Joh. 2. 20.) Ye have an unction from the holy One, and ye know all things. Now as they have a light promiſed them, that they may know all things, that is, all neceſſary ſaving truths, or doctrines of ſalvation for attaining the next life; ſo a light is promiſed them whereby they may do all things, that is, all their neceſſary works, buſineſſes, and affairs, which concern their duty in this life.

From the ſecond notion of light,

> Obſerve, Righteous men, ſuch as turn unto the Lord, ſhall have a bleſſing in their way, their way ſhall proſper.

As they ſhall have a light ſhining to ſhew them their way, ſo to proſper them in their way: God is a Sun, and he is a Shield (Pſal. 84. 11.) And as he is a Sun to give light, and a Shield to protect, ſo, no good thing will he withhold from them that walk uprightly; that is, he will not hinder or ſtop thoſe good things from them which their ſouls deſire, or move after; they ſhall proſper in their way: yea, when 'tis ſaid, He will not withhold, &c. there is more intended then expreſſed; for the meaning is, he will plentifully give forth or pour out all good things to and upon them, who walk uprightly.

From the third notion of light, Learn,

> That the Lord gives godly men joy and comfort in their way.

Though their way be a way of much labour, yea and a way of much danger too, though it prove a way full of ſweat and trouble; yet the Lord will cauſe a light to ſhine upon them, and refreſh them in their way; To the righteous there riſeth up light in darkneſs. The light of joy in the darkneſs of ſorrow, the light of comfort in the darkneſs of trouble; they who walk in the light of truth and holineſs, uſually find the light of joy and comfort in their way, and are ſure to find it in their end. The way of wiſdom (ſaith Solomon, Prov. 3. 17.) are wayes of pleaſantneſs, and all her paths are peace; and if at any time her wayes and paths are not peace and pleaſantneſs (as to the outward man they often are not) while we are travelling in them, yet they are alwayes ſo in the cloſe of our travels (Pſal. 37. 37.) Mark the perfect man, and behold the upright, for the end of that man is peace. Yea when others find moſt trouble in their way, then God is neareſt to him for ſupport, as it follows in the next words.

Verſ. 29. When men are caſt down, then thou ſhalt ſay there is a lifting up, and he ſhall ſave the humble perſon.

In this and the following verſe, Eliphaz gives a firm aſſurance to Job by way of promiſe, that he ſhould not only be delivered, but ſhould have two further priviledges.

Firſt, That himſelf ſhould be exalted when others were caſt down, or that he ſhould be ſaved in times of common calamity, verſ. 29.

Secondly, That he ſhould be a means of ſafety to others, and ſhould prevail with God for their deliverance: he ſhall deliver the Iſland of the Innocent, &c. verſ. 30. That's the general ſcope of theſe two verſes, according to our tranſlation; as will further appear in the explication of them.

When men are caſt down.

When they are preſt, or oppreſt with mountains of affliction and trouble. So the word is uſed (Iſa. 2. 17.) The loftineſs of man ſhall be bowed down; that is, the lofty man ſhall be bowed down, as a man with a heavy burden upon his back. We ſay, when men are caſt down: the word, men, שפל Depreſſus proſtratus.

Cum humiliatæ fuerint viæ tuæ dices, elatio illis eſt, i. e. mox ſenties conditionem tuam ex ima factam optimam. Contextus mirè conciſus eſt, ideo variè intelligitur. Merc.

men, is not expreſſed in the Hebrew Text, 'tis there only, when caſt down; and becauſe that word is not expreſt, therefore ſome ſupply out of the former clauſe, the word, way, The light ſhall ſhine upon thy way when it, that is, when thy way is caſt down; though thou be now in a low condition, and though thou ſhouldeſt hereafter be caſt into a low condition again, yet thou ſhalt ſay there is a lifting up, or, thou ſhalt be lifted up. If at any time thy wayes be caſt down in darkneſs, the light ſhall ſhine upon them, thou ſhalt ſay in faith, there is a lifting up. The Apoſtle ſpeaks (in a language like this) of himſelf and of his fellow Apoſtles (2 Cor. 4. 8.) We are troubled on every ſide, yet not diſtreſſed; perplexed, but not in deſpair; perſecuted, but not forſaken; caſt down, but not deſtroyed. Thus here, when there is a caſting down, or, when thy wayes are caſt down, yet thou ſhalt ſay there is a lifting up; thou mayeſt be caſt down, but not deſtroyed. Yet, I conceive, that Supplement of the word, men, which we put into the Text, is more ſuitable to the ſcope of it, and then the ſence is this, When men are caſt down, that is, when ſinners or ungodly men are caſt down, when God comes to ruine his enemies, and make them deſolate, then thou ſhalt ſay there is a lifting up; A lifting up for me, and for ſuch as I am.

Thou ſhalt ſay.] This ſaying may be taken two wayes, and in both 'tis the voice of faith.

Dices, ſc. in tuis ad Deū precibus exaltatio ſit, ſc. illi depreſſo, i. e. ex alta illū O deus. Piſc.

Firſt, Thou ſhalt ſay in prayer, or thou ſhalt pray, O Lord, let there be a lifting up. Thus it is expounded as a promiſe to Job, that when others were caſt down, he ſhould help them up again by prayer; thou ſhalt ſay, There is a lifting up, or, O Lord, let there be a lifting up, namely, of him who is caſt down; lift him up, O Lord. As prayer is in its own nature a lifting up of the ſoul to God (Pſal. 25. 1.) ſo prayer in the effect of it hath a mighty power and prevalency with God for the lifting up both of our own bodies and outward eſtates, as alſo the bodies and outward eſtates of others out of the deeps of miſery and trouble. Many a godly man hath lifted himſelf and others out of the mire by prayer, while ſeeing a caſting down, he hath ſaid, There is a lifting up, or, O Lord, let there be a lifting up. This ſence carrieth a high priviledge; but I rather conceive that intended in the next verſe. And therefore

Pollicetur Jobo, Eliphaz eximiā fœlicitatem, impiis aliis atque etiam hoſtibus ſuis ad extremū infœlicitatis gradum præcipitatis

Secondly, I ſhall take theſe words of Eliphaz as a promiſe, When men are caſt down, thou ſhalt ſay (or confidently affirm this thing) there is a lifting up; that is, I promiſe or aſſure thee, O Job, that when thou ſhalt ſee the Lord bringing vengeance upon the wicked, when thou ſeeſt them fall on this ſide, and on that, when nothing is viſible but the ruine and deſtruction of men and families, yea of Nations; that even then thou ſhalt ſay, there is a lifting up; that is, thou ſhalt have faith for thy ſelf, that both thou and thine ſhall be lifted up, or ſaved and delivered in a time when many wicked men or thine enemies fall and periſh, and ſhall never (as to any worldly enjoyment) riſe any more.

> Hence obſerve, That a godly man may have much aſſurance when others are caſt down, that yet he and others ſhall be preſerved and lifted up.

When men were caſt down in Sodome, when Sodome was overthrown, Lot was lifted up, and aſſured of his preſervation. When all the men in the world were overwhelm'd and ſwept off the face of the earth with a Deluge, there was a lifting up for Noah and his family; he and his were ſafely houſed in the Ark floating upon the Waters. Thus the Lord had made proviſion for the preſervation of his people, when thouſands have been undone, and caſt down on the right hand and on the left by common calamities; yea when they have been caſt down, his people have been not only preſerved, but exalted and lifted up. Thou ſhalt ſay there is a lifting up,

And he ſhall ſave the humble perſon.

ὅτι ἐταπείνωσας σεαυτόν. Sept.

That is, the Lord ſhall ſave him; the Vulgar reads thus, He that is humble ſhall be in glory; the Seventy thus, Becauſe thou haſt humbled thy ſelf thou ſhalt be ſaved.

Interior animi faſtus & tumor per oculos & per omnes externos geſtus ſe prodit. Non enim is ſuperbiæ mos eſt, qui latere aut diſſimulari poſſit. Pined.

But I ſhall keep to our reading, He ſhall ſave the humble perſon (or according to the ſtrictneſs of the Hebrew) He ſhall ſave him that is low of eyes; 'tis frequent in Scripture to expreſs an humble perſon in this form, A man that hath low eyes; as high looks and lofty eyes, are every where in Scripture the periphraſis of pride. David ſaid (Pſal. 101. 5.) him that hath an high look and a proud heart will I not ſuffer; for you may ſee pride in the eye, pride ſits upon the eye; therefore David puts a high look and a proud heart both together there. And again (Pſal. 131. 1.) Lord, mine heart is not haughty, nor mine eyes lofty. So that, I ſay, an humble perſon, and a perſon of low eyes is the ſame; as a proud perſon, and a perſon of lofty eyes is the ſame in Scripture ſence, and both are very ſignificant expreſſions; He ſhall ſave the humble perſon, this humble perſon may be taken two wayes, either Paſſively, or Actively.

Non tam modeſtum qui ſeſe ſubmittit (ut virtutem ſignificet) intelligo, quam afflictum etſi illud etiam ſententiæ non repugnat, imo utrumq; recte intellexeris? Merc.

Paſſively, ſo 'tis he that is caſt down and laid low by affliction. Thus the humble perſon is the ſame with the humbled perſon; affliction is an humiliation, however the afflicted take it or carry it; and uſually it makes men humble, at leaſt in appearance, and lowly in their looks; whereas in proſperity men lift up their eyes uſually, and look loftily, as if they would reach Heaven with their heads, while their hearts are far from it. But affliction makes men ſtoop. We may underſtand the Text of a perſon who is humble, when humbled, who ſtoops down quietly to take up and bear his croſs; and doth not in ſtoutneſs ſlight it, or in wantonneſs play with it, but is ſerious under the rebukes of God; He ſhall ſave the humble perſon.

Dimiſſis oculis eſt, qui ſuo judicio & exiſtimatione ſibi ipſi vileſcit.

Secondly, It may be taken Actively, He ſhall ſave the humble perſon; that is, the perſon who is low in his own eyes, while in the greateſt worldly heights, the perſon that humbles himſelf and walks humbly with God and men when moſt exalted. Thus the Apoſtle James exhorts the brother of high degree, or the rich brother, to rejoyce in that he is made low (Jam. 1. 10.) But if he be rich, how is he made low? He means it not of a lowneſs in ſtate, but of a lowneſs or rather lowlineſs of ſpirit. The brother of high degree hath no cauſe to rejoyce in his highneſs, but when he is low in his own eyes. Lowneſs of eyes is more then a vertue or common modeſty, 'tis a grace; that's in a ſpiritual ſence the moſt graceful look, which is the moſt humble look. He ſhall ſave the humble perſon; but with what ſalvation? I anſwer, Salvation is either temporal and bodily, or eternal, uſually called the ſalvation of the ſoul. We may expound this Text of both, the Lord ſaveth the humble perſon both body and ſoul, both temporally and eternally.

> Where note, That the Lord takes ſpecial care of humble ones.

The Lord ſeems to take ſo much care to ſave the humble, as if there were none elſe that he took care to ſave, or regard what became of them, whether ſaved or no. And the Lord ſpeaks of proud perſons, as if he contemn'd none but under that name and notion (Jam. 4. 6.) He reſiſteth the proud; he that is proud of his perſon, or parts, or eſtate, or wit, or power, the Lord reſiſteth him. And he ſpeaks of the humble as if none were ſaved but under that name and notion, He ſaves the humble perſon; or as that Text in James hath it, He giveth grace to the humble. What grace? There is a twofold grace, and both are given to the humble; firſt, he gives them the grace of favour or good will, he is kind to and reſpecteth the humble, or (as this Text in Job hath it) He ſaves the humble perſon. Secondly, He gives much grace to the humble, as grace is taken for that gracious work of the Spirit in us, forming up faith, love, &c. in our ſouls. The Lord gives more of this grace alſo to the humble, that is, he addeth unto the graces which they have, and makes them more humble, more gracious; a man cannot be (in that ſence) an humble perſon without grace; humility it ſelf is a great grace, and the greater our humility is, the greater acceſſion we have of other graces. Thus, I ſay, we may underſtand the Text in James both wayes; He giveth grace to the humble, that is, he favours and reſpects them, becauſe they are gracious, and he addeth to or increaſeth their graces. We have a promiſe very parallel to theſe of Eliphaz and James (Pſal. 18. 27.) Thou wilt ſave the afflicted people, but wilt bring down high looks. The word which we tranſlate afflicted, ſignifies alſo one humbled, and humble, and ſo we might render the Pſalm; Thou ſhalt ſave the humbled or the humble people; and that the humble are to be taken in to partake of the priviledge of that promiſe, is plain from the oppoſite Term in the latter clauſe of the verſe, High looks; that is, high lookers God will bring down, but he will ſave the humble perſon. Men of low and mean eſtates are uſually wrapt up with great ones in the ſame judgment, as the Prophet ſpeaks (Iſa. 5. 15.) The mean man ſhall be brought down, and the mighty man ſhall be humbled; the eyes of the lofty ſhall be humbled; there we have the mean man and the mighty man under the ſame wrathful diſpenſations of God. The wicked whether high or low, are far from ſalvation; but God knows how to make a diſtinction between the humble and the proud, when his wrath makes the greateſt confuſions in the world. Humility it is not only a ſweet, but a ſafe, yea a ſaving grace; we never go under the covert of God ſo much as when we walk humbly with God; He will ſave the humble perſon.

Verſ. 30. He ſhall deliver the Iſland of the Innocent, and it is deliver'd by the pureneſs of thine hands.

The promiſe is continued to the man that returns to God, He ſhall deliver the Iſland of the Innocent; or as ſome tranſlate, the Innocent ſhall deliver the Iſland. The ſence is the ſame, He ſhall deliver the Iſland, that is, the Inhabitants of the Iſland; all ſhall be ſafe, the Iſland and they that dwell in it. There is another reading of the Text, which yet falls in fully and clearly with this; whereas we read, He ſhall deliver the Iſland of the Innocent, it may be read, He ſhall deliver him that is not Innocent. Now becauſe this may ſeem a very wide difference in the tranſlation, we are to conſider the ground of it, how this can be made out, that the ſame Text ſhould be rendred, the Innocent, and him that is not innocent? The reaſon is becauſe the word which we tranſlate, Iſland, is taken by many of the Hebrew Doctors, as alſo by other tranſlators, only for a negative particle, ſignifying not, or that which is not. So the word is rendred (1 Sam. 4. 21.) when Phineas his wife dying in travel gave the name to her Child, ſhe ſaid, He ſhall be called Ichabod, There is no glory, or, not glory. And again (Prov. 31. 4.) The word is uſed in the ſame ſence, It is not for Kings, O Lemuel, to drink wine; ſtrong drink is not for Princes. So here, Thou ſhalt deliver the nocent, or the not Innocent. And ſo the whole verſe is thus tranſlated, God, becauſe of or for the pureneſs of thy hands, will deliver the nocent, or thoſe who are not Innocent. Whereas we ſay, Thou ſhalt deliver the Iſland of the Innocent, or the Innocent ſhall deliver the Iſland.

Liberabit noxium. Piſ.

Vocula אי quæ hic redditur inſula, idem valet quod לא non. Piſc. Ego cum veteribus אי pro negatione exponerem. Eritq; facilis ſenſus, ſc. Deus puritate manuum tuarū etiam nocentem, vel non innocentem liberabit. Merc.

And it is delivered by the pureneſs of thine hands.

Eliphaz ſpake before in the third perſon, here in the ſecond; 'tis probable he did ſo purpoſely to make Job underſtand that he meant him. It is delivered, &c. that is, the Iſland is deliver'd; according to our tranſlation, how is it delivered? By the pureneſs of thine hands. The word notes the moſt exact purity and cleanneſs, like that of gold when it is refined in the fire, or of garments that are waſhed with Soap or Nitre; By this pureneſs it, or the Iſland, ſhall be delivered: and by the pureneſs of his hands, he means the pureneſs of his actions or adminiſtrations. The hand is the inſtrument of action, and pure or clean hands in Scripture are put for the purity or cleanneſs of our actions or converſations. While our doings are holy, our works righteous, juſt, and good, it may be ſaid our hands are pure. And we may refer this eſpecially to prayer, Thou ſhalt deliver the Iſland of the Innocent, and it is delivered by the pureneſs of thine hands; that is, thou praying in the purity of thy hands, or with pure hands, ſhalt deliver the Iſland of the Innocent, or (according to that other reading) thoſe that are not Innocent. And then, pureneſs of hands, or pure hands, are put as a ſign for the thing ſignified; the geſture, for that which is done in that geſture. The lifting up of pure hands is a geſture in prayer, and the lifting up of pure hands, notes the purity of prayer (1 Tim. 2. 8.) I will that men pray every where, lifting up holy or pure hands. Now becauſe 'tis uſual in prayer to lift up the hands; and in prayer no hands but morrally pure or holy hands ſhould be lifted up (and ſo theirs are in Scripture ſence whoſe lives are holy) therefore we may well conceive, that when he ſaith, It ſhall be deliver'd by the pureneſs of thy hands; his meaning is this, it ſhall be delivered by holy prayer, or when thou prayeſt holily, it ſhall be delivered. Thus Eliphaz doth not only promiſe Job, that himſelf in perſon ſhould be lifted up and ſaved when others are caſt down; but that he ſhould be a means of ſaving and delivering others, and thoſe not ſome few, or all his own family, but that the whole Nation or Iſland in general ſhould eſcape and fare the better for him. It ſhall be delivered by the pureneſs of thy hands. Learn hence, this great and famous truth;

Manus puræ ſunt opera inculpata & quæ crimine vacant Druſ.

That, a godly perſon is a Common good.

He doth good not only within his own walls, or to his own perſonal relations; but he is a Common good, a publick mercy, a general bleſſing; whether we conſider general bleſſings either Negatively, or Affirmatively, that is, either as delivering from evil, or as bringing in of good; every way the godly man is a general bleſſing, he ſhall deliver the Iſland of the Innocent, yea thoſe that are not Innocent; the Lord will accept his prayer, and hear his requeſt for the deliverance of a place, though there be many wicked ones in it. Abraham (Gen. 18. 32.) had that priviledge granted him, that for his ſake and at his ſuite the Lord would have ſpared the wicked, the not Innocent, thoſe who were moſt abominably polluted: if there had been but ten righteous perſons there, Sodome had been ſaved from burning at the ſuit of Abraham. Much more will the Lord ſpare the Iſland of the Innocent; that is, where there is a great many Innocent ones, at the prayer and requeſt of an Abraham, a man eminent in faith and holineſs. How often did Moſes turn away the wrath of God, when it was breaking forth againſt the people of Iſrael (Pſal. 106. 23.) He ſaid, he would deſtroy them (that is, the Lord ſaid it) had not Moſes his choſen ſtood before him in the breach, to turn away his wrath leſt he ſhould deſtroy them. The Lord had as it were made a decree that he would deſtroy that people; but Moſes comes and interpoſeth for them, and the Lord ſpared them. We read (Exod. 32. 9, 10.) that how the Lord ſaid to Moſes, I have ſeen this people, and behold it is a ſtiff-necked people; Now therefore let me alone, that my wrath may wax hot againſt them, and that I may conſume them, and I will make of thee a great people. But did Moſes accept this offer of advancement upon the ruines of that people? No, he deprecates his own honour, as it follows (verſ. 11.) And Moſes beſought the Lord his God, and ſaid, Lord why doth thy wrath wax hot againſt this people? &c. Then at verſ. 14. The Lord repented of the evil which he thought to do unto his people. Thus Moſes by the pureneſs of his hands, holy prayer, delivered a Nation that was not Innocent, from conſumption in the flames of the Lords provoked jealouſie. Again (Jerem. 5. 1.) the Prophet is commanded to run to and fro through the ſtreets of Jeruſalem, to ſee and know in the broad places thereof, if he could find a man, if there were any that executed judgment, that ſought the truth, and I will pardon it, ſaith the Lord. One man ſhould deliver the City that was not Innocent by the pureneſs of his hands. We ſee the Lord puts the whole iſſue upon this, if thou canſt find a man. But were there not multitudes and throngs of men in Jeruſalem? Why then was it propoſed as a matter of difficulty to find a man there? Doubtleſs Jeruſalem was a populous City and was filled with men, but a man ſo qualified, a man of Juſtice, a man that ſought the truth was hardly to be found there, and therefore if thou canſt find (ſuch) a man, I will pardon it, ſaith the Lord. How pardon it? There is a twofold pardon; firſt, a pardon of the guilt of ſin; ſecondly a pardon of the puniſhment of ſin. The Lord, upon the finding out of ſuch a man, would not pardon the guilt of all that were there, nor give them an everlaſting pardon; but pardoned they ſhould be as to preſent puniſhment and ruine, they ſhould be pardoned or ſaved from deſtruction for that time, if ſuch a godly man could be found among them. Godly men ſave the wicked three wayes.

Firſt, They ſave them, when by their good Councel and Inſtruction they turn them from their ſins, and bring them to repentance; this is a happy way of ſaving them. And thus a godly man may ſave the wicked: every godly Miniſter of the Goſpel is ſaid to ſave not himſelf only (but in this ſence) thoſe that hear him; becauſe he offers and urgeth upon them the means of ſalvation (1 Tim. 4. 16.)

Secondly, As they may ſave them thus by being a means of their Converſion, ſo they may ſave them by being a means of their Direction; one godly man may ſave a whole Land by his directing Counſel, as well as he ſaveth many by his converting Counſel. Of this Solomon ſpeaks clearly (Eccleſ. 9. 14, 15.) There was a little City, and few men in it, and there came a great King againſt it, &c. Now there was found a poor wiſe man in it, and he by his wiſdom delivered the City; that is, he gave wiſe and wholſom Counſel, which being followed, proved an effectual means for the deliverance of the City.

Thirdly, A godly man may be a publick good to ſave and deliver others by his Prayers and Interceſſion, by ſeeking the Lord that they may be deliver'd, as the latter branch was opened; he ſaves them by the pureneſs of his hands, lifted up in prayer. Yet we muſt take this with a caution, for we cannot affirm it univerſally, that the righteous have alwayes this priviledge (in the event) to deliver the Iſland or Nation wherein they are. But we may ſay, that this is a priviledge which Saints have often been honoured with, and which none but Saints have been honoured with at any time, to be the Saviours and Deliverers of a people among whom they dwell; for we know the Lord himſelf hath given expreſs Exceptions to this rule (Jer. 15. 1.) where he tells the ſtubborn Jews by his Prophet, Though Moſes and Samuel ſtood before me, yet my mind could not be towards this people; Caſt them out of my ſight, and let them go forth; and it ſhall come to paſs if they ſay unto thee, whither ſhall we go forth, thou ſhalt tell them, thus ſaith the Lord, ſuch as are for death, to death; and ſuch as are for the ſword, to the ſword; and ſuch as are for famine, to famine. When he ſaith, Though Moſes and Samuel ſtood before me; ſome may ask, what to do? I anſwer, we are not to take it for a mute ſtanding before the Lord; but a ſtanding before the Lord with earneſt Prayers, Interceſſions, and Supplications, for the ſparing of that people: now ſaith the Lord, though Moſes and Samuel (who in their generations were eminent godly men, and eminent favourites of God) though theſe ſhould ſtand before me, earneſtly praying for this people, yet my mind could not be toward them; that is, I would not ſpare them, nor ſave them from death, ſword, famine, or captivity, no not at their entreaty. And we have a like Inſtance (Ezek. 14. 14.) Though theſe three men, Noah, Daniel, and Job were in it (there were but two named in Jeremy, but here three, though theſe three men, Noah, Daniel, and Job were in it) they ſhould but deliver their own ſouls by their righteouſneſs, ſaith the Lord God. They might have the priviledge mentioned by Eliphaz in the former verſe, When men were caſt down, they might ſay, there is a lifting up, or there is preſervation for us; God will take care of us; but God would not be perſwaded, no, not by Noah, Daniel, and Job, to ſave the reſt. So that there are caſes wherein the Lord will not hear the Interceſſions of the beſt of men for a ſinful people. The Iſland of the wicked, or of the not Innocent ſhall not be delivered, no, not by the pureneſs of their hands; yet 'tis an experienced truth, that God hath ſpared a people for the ſake of ſome godly found among them; yea the reaſon why the Lord doth not deſtroy the world which lies in wickedneſs, is much, in reſpect of them who walk in holineſs. For were it not (as Eliſha told Jehoram to his face in reference to good King Jehoſaphat, 2 Kings 3. 14.) that God hath regard to their preſence in the world, God would not ſo much as look towards the ungodly, nor ſee them for good. This honour have all the Saints, and how great an honour is it to be a publick good, to be a Saviour to an Iſland, to a Nation? Some indeed are of ſuch narrow ſpirits, that if they may ſave themſelves, and keep their own ſtakes, they care not what becomes of the publick. But as it is a great honour to be active for the ſaving and delivering of a Nation, ſo it is a greater honour to have the ſafety and deliverance of a Nation attributed or given in to us by God himſelf (though not at all by way of deſert, yet) in a way of favour. Paul was at Sea with no good company, yet when all looked to be ſwallowed up, An Angel of God appeared to him, ſaying, Fear not Paul, Thou muſt be brought before Cæſar, and lo, God hath given thee all them that ſail with thee (Acts 27. 23, 24.) that is, for thy ſake, or becauſe they are now in thy company, they alſo ſhall eſcape the rage of this tempeſt. They all ow their lives to thee henceforth as well as to me, for to thee have I given them. The men of this world might hence take notice of their own folly, who can hardly afford them a good word, or room to live in the world, for whoſe ſake it is that they live. How often do they wiſh and ſeek their deſtruction, for whoſe ſake it is, that themſelves are not deſtroyed? How often do they accuſe the godly, as the troublers of a Nation, as the hinderers of publick good? Whereas they are indeed a common good, the Chariots and Horſemen, the Protection and Defence, the Salvation and Deliverance of thoſe States and Nations where they are. The breaches which wicked men make by ſinning, they make up by praying, to turn away the Lords wrath, that they be not conſumed. We read how the Lord complains, that there was none found to make up the hedge, to ſtand in the gap when he was coming to deſtroy them (Ezek. 22. 30.) And it is ſaid of Moſes (Pſal. 106. 23.) that he ſtood before the Lord in the breach, that he ſhould not deſtroy the Iſraelites. Which phraſe of ſtanding in the breach ſeems to bear an alluſion to an Army beſieging a City, who firſt plant their Canon, and make a breach, and then come to the ſtorm. Thus the Lord deals many times with a people, he encamps againſt them, and batters them; he makes ſome breach upon them by troubles and diviſions, and then expects that ſome ſhould ſtand in the breach, and beſeech him not to ſtorm them with the whole Army of his Judgments. And the Lord takes it well when any of the Valiant ones, when any of the Worthies of his Iſrael preſent themſelves in the breach, praying with utmoſt importunity, that the Lord would withdraw thoſe evils which threaten to come in at the breach like armed men and lay waſt a Nation.

Haud tamen Deus id ſemper facit, neq; eſt quod quiſquam in hac re certã ei legem imponat, fallitur ergo Eliphaz ſi hoc perpetuũ eſſe putavit. Merc.

And foraſmuch as men of pure hands, or godly men have this priviledge to be a common good, by being the deliverers of Nations from common evils and calamities; I ſhall hint ſome few things from it more diſtinctly.

Firſt, We ſee wherein (under God) the ſtrength and ſafety of Kingdoms and Common-wealths doth conſiſt. It is not, ſo much, in the wiſdom of the Counſeller, or in the courage of the Souldier; it is not, ſo much, in Armies at Land, or Navies at Sea; it is not, ſo much, in walled Cities and fortified Caſtles; it is not, ſo much, in union at home, or in Leagues and Confederacies abroad, as it is in the purity of mens hands, or in the holineſs of their lives. Godlineſs is the Sampſons lock, wherein the ſtrength of a Nation lyes. A Heathen could ſay, that A people were never ſafe by the ſtanding of their walls, while themſelves were falling in their virtues. It is therefore (if there were nothing better in it) good policy to encourage piety, and to endeavour the encreaſe of a holy Seed in any Nation. For as the Prophet ſpeaks (Iſa. 6. 13.) As a Teil tree and as an Oak whoſe ſubſtance is in them, when they caſt their leaves, ſo the holy Seed ſhall be the ſubſtance thereof.

Secondly, In this we ſee the honour which God puts upon godly men. What can be greater then this, to be really (though perhaps far from being accounted ſo) the Deliverers and Saviours of their Country? What an honour was it to Abraham when God told a King, that he was beholding to Abraham for his life, or that favour muſt be granted to him at the ſuit and as it were ſent him by the hand of Abraham (Gen. 20. 7.) He ſhall pray for thee, and thou ſhalt live. An honour much like this God put upon Job alſo, at the latter end of this Book (Chap. 42. 8.) My ſervant Job ſhall pray for you, for him will I accept, leſt I deal with you after your folly. Such an honour (in ſome degree) have all the Saints.

Thirdly, Let men honour thoſe whom God honours thus; and let the Princes and powers of the world be glad when they hear that they have many ſuch in their Dominions; when ſuch are ſubject to them, as rule with God. It is ſaid of Xerxes (the greateſt Monarch in the world in his time) that when Themiſtocles came over to him (who was a man Eminent for Wiſdom and Eloquence) that being over-joyed at ſuch a treaſure, he cryed out in his ſleep, I have got Themiſtocles the Athenian. Spiritual wiſdom renders men a greater treaſure to States, then moral wiſdom can. Surely then they who are ſpiritually wiſe deſerve to be rejoyced in. I am ſure it is not ſafe to let them be diſcouraged by whom our ſafety is eſtabliſhed; much leſſe is it ſafe to let them fall by whom in their capacity Kingdoms ſtand; leaſt of all, it is ſafe to caſt them down, who (by the rule of divine politicks) are State-upholders. Therefore let me ſay this to all the powers of this world, do not deſtroy thoſe who have the priviledge to be Saviours and Deliverers: Yea, Take heed of deading and ſtraitning their ſpirits in prayer for you; above all, take heed of turning their prayers againſt you. Do not provoke your own Horſemen to fight againſt you, and your own Chariot-wheels to run over you. As theſe are the beſt friends to a Nation, ſo the worſt enemies. Better have many outwardly oppoſing you, then one (upon juſt ground) ſecretly praying, or but complaining to God againſt you. They who have no power at all in their hands, no not ſo much as to help or ſave themſelves, may yet deſtroy many by the pureneſs of their hands; that is, they holding up pure hands in prayer, may bring down deſtruction upon many who are wicked, and the adverſaries of Chriſt becauſe their adverſaries. But that which they moſtly do, and that which they moſt of all deſire to do, is, That Lands and Iſlands may be delivered by the pureneſs of their hands.

To ſhut up this Point and Chapter, we ſee, that as the Saints are killed all the day long, by the wicked world, for the Lords ſake (Rom. 8. 36.) that is, becauſe they own the Lord and his wayes: ſo the wicked of the world are ſpared even all the day long, or as often as they are ſpared by the Lord, for the ſake of the Saints; that is, becauſe the Lord owns and approves them and their wayes, and doth therefore give peace to the world, that ſo in their peace they alſo may have peace.

A

A TABLE DIRECTING TO Some Special Points Noted in the Precedent EXPOSITIONS.

A

Abib, the Jewiſh month, why ſo called. Folio 712

Abominable, what that is which is called abominable, or an abomination, 1418. Sinful man how abominable to God. 1419.

Aboundance cannot ſatisfie, 1444. Aboundance a great tryal of grace as well as want, 2205 Aboundance of worldly things not to be deſired, yet may lawfully be enjoyed. 2256

Abraham, in what ſence called the root of the Olive-tree, 1783. Abraham's faith how ſtrong, 1883. Abraham how he complained becauſe childleſs. 2033

Accepting of perſons what it is, 1219. To accept perſons perverts juſtice, 1220. How we may be ſaid to accept the perſon of God, 1221. It is a very provoking ſin, 1229 Four things ſhew it. ibid.

Accuſation, to accuſe mearly upon ſuſpition very uncharitable. 2171

Acquainting our ſelves with God, what it is, and the ſeveral ſteps by which Saints ariſe to it, 2234, &c. A twofold acquaintance with God, 2235, &c. The more we are acquainted with God, the more like we are to him, 2236. No acquaintance with God but by a Mediator, ibid. We can have no true peace till we acquaint our ſelves with God, 2237. While we are unacquainted or eſtranged from God, we are eſtranged from good, 2239. Acquaintance with God brings in all good. ib. &c.

Adam's ſin in eating the forbidden fruit, how aggravated in one particular. 2158

Adamant, why ſo called. 761

Advancement is from God, 414. The difference between Gods advancing his own people and enemies. 415

Advice and Councel, the good or evil which others do by our advice, is reckoned as done by us. 24

Advocate between God and man, 1587. How the Holy Ghoſt is an Advocate, ibid. In what manner Chriſt performes the office of an Advocate, 1588. Chriſt is an effectual Mediator or Advocate, 1589. Five things to ſhew the effectualneſs of Chriſts pleading for us as an Advocate. 1590

Affections of men and their opinions of others are very variable, 1620. Affections, the change or ſtability of them is from God, 1819

Affliction is the touchſtone of ſincerity, 67. Afflictions are all bounded and ordered by God, 70. Thoſe afflictions are moſt grievous, wherein God ſeems to be againſt us, 83 We ought to be ſenſible under the hand of God in afflictions, 95. And may expreſs our ſorrows by outward geſtures, 96. When God humbles us with ſorrows, we ſhould humble our ſelves for ſin, ibid. Afflictions ſend the people of God home to him, 100 They turn them into prayers, ib. They come from God, 108. Therefore look beyond the creature, 109. To bleſs God in affliction, is a high act of Grace, yet but our duty, 111 To bleſs God in afflictions, will make our afflictions a bleſſing, ib. God afflicts his, ſometime without reference to ſin, 123. Great afflictions may cauſe greatcomplainings, 183 No affliction in this life ſo great, but it may be greater, 193. Reaſons why God continues life to thoſe who are greatly afflicted, 238. Affliction uſually accompanied with much darkneſs, 249. It encreaſeth an affliction, not to know the reaſon of it, ib. Eſpecially not to ſee a way to eſcape it, ib. Sore afflictions indiſpoſe for duty, 270. Affliction often diſturbs the ſeat of reaſon, 272 Times of affliction, ſpecial ſeaſons for the uſe of our graces, 275. Affliction diſcovers our hearts and our graces to our ſelves, 278 Afflictions good for the Saints, 327. They are but trials, ibid. Affliction is a cleanſer, how, 328. They are ſent to humble us, ib. To bring the Saints nearer God, ib. Man naturally ſeeks the reaſon of his afflictions out of himſelf, 387. Every affliction hath a cauſe, 388. It comes not by the power of any creature, ib. It is from the Lord, ib. It is our wiſdom and our duty to ſeek God in times of affliction, 393. We are to ſeek him about four things in affliction, 393, 394. It is a great eaſe to the ſoul to do ſo, ib. Affliction and happineſs meet in the ſame perſon, 438 Yet every one that is afflicted is not happy, 439. The beſt of Gods children, ſometimes entertain afflictions unwillingly, 444. They ſometime apprehend them as unuſeful, 445 As diſgraceful, ib. The leaſt affliction ought not to be ſleighted, 446. We ought highly to prize them, ib. Afflictions of others are to be throughly weighed, and wherein that conſiſts, 497. It is an addition to a mans affliction, when others are not ſenſible of it, 498. Afflictions are heavy burdens, 500 They come by multitudes, 501. Afflictions are the higher ſervices of grace, 537. They are meaſured out by the hand of God, 593 Man apt to think he needs not ſo many or ſo great afflictions, 616. It makes a little time ſeem very long to us, 623. Affliction is the magnifying of a man two wayes, 632. Why called viſitation? 635. They are trials, 638. They are bands, and ſuch as man cannot break, 640, 641. It is a great eaſe to an afflicted mind, to know the reaſon why afflictions are ſent, 655. God brings his eminenteſt ſervants to the moſt eminent trials by afflictions, 656. A good heart gives teſtimony to the righteouſneſs of God, in the midſt of greateſt afflictions, 753. God layes very ſore afflictions upon them that are very dear to him, 828. Afflictions continued cauſe us to ſuſpect that our prayer is not anſwered, ib. A godly man may be much oppreſt with the fears of affliction, 869. There was not ſuch a ſpirit of rejoycing in affliction among the Saints of the Old Teſtament, as is under the New, 871, &c. After purgings God goes on ſometimes with afflictions, 880. It is lawful to pray againſt affliction, 894. Affliction removed three wayes, 895. Great afflictions carry a charge of wickedneſs upon the afflicted, 913. An afflicted perſon is very ſolicitous about the reaſon of his afflictions, 915. Afflictions are ſearchers, 933. Afflictions affect with ſhame, 990, &c. Under great afflictions our requeſts are modeſt, 994. Afflictions are the deſert of ſin, 1044. All the afflictions of this life are leſs then ſin deſerves, ibid. Afflictions bleſſed by God work a gracious change, 1065 They have three advantages for it, ibid. Affliction layes the beſt men open to diſeſteem, 1119. Affliction layeth us open to temptation, 1120. Men at eaſe are apt to deſpiſe thoſe who are afflicted, 1121. It is very ſinful to do ſo, 1122. In great afflictions we are apt to afflict our ſelves more, 1246

All

All afflictions are not alike grievous, 1278 How we may pray for the withdrawing of affliction, 1280. Afflictions bitter things, 1303. Great afflictions hinder the ſenſe of tendred mercies, 1404. Some afflictions bring a wearineſs both upon ſoul and body, 1514. Some afflictions diſtract, ib. A godly man may grow extream weary of affliction, 1515. Great afflictions, like great ſins, leave a mark, 1521. Great afflictions, how made witneſſes of ſin againſt a man, ib. The witneſs which affliction gives, cenſured two wayes, ib. God afflicts his own ſeverely, 1535. God ſeems to take pleaſure in afflicting his, 1538. Affliction comes not by chance, but by ſpecial direction, ib. God hath many wayes to afflict, 1539. He ſends breach upon breach, 1546. Great afflictions have three things in them in reference to others, 1619. Afflictions are ſtraits, 1713. The length or continuance of affliction is more then the weight of it, 1769 Thoſe afflictions moſt painful which reach our ſpirits, ib. It is ſinful not to own the godly in affliction and trouble, yet hard to do ſo, 1777, &c. Affliction called reproach in Scripture, and why, 1785. A good heart acknowledges God in all his afflictions, 1786, &c. Affliction like a net ſhewed in five parallels, 1788. Some have much darkneſs in their afflictions, 1798. Afflictions like troops of enemies, 1811. Afflictions are all at Gods command, ib. There is no ſtriving with afflictions, 1813. A man in affliction is apt to lay little things to heart, 1831. It may be an act of grace to do ſo, ib. Differences between God and man in afflicting, 1847. Affliction doth not ſeparate from Chriſt, 1865. God is not to be charged with any unrighteouſneſs, becauſe the righteous are afflicted, 2085. Affliction hath much inſtruction in it, 2131. God hath abundance of affliction in his hand, 2178. Difference between the afflictions of a godly and a wicked man. 2179

Age, what meant by it? taken three wayes, 701. Old age, three degrees of it among the Jews. 1400

Alpha and Omega, firſt and laſt, include all perfections. 1862

Amalekites, their enmity againſt the Jews. 1450

Amarantus, the unfading flower. 1803

Amen, with what ſtrength of ſpirit it ſhould be uttered, 1074. Rabbins give three Rules about ſaying Amen. ibid.

Anathema Maranatha, what it ſignifieth. 1872

Ancient of dayes, why God is ſo called. 928

Angels, called the ſons of God, three reaſons of it, 37, 116. How Angels preſent themſelves before God, 37. We ſhould imitate Angels in our readineſs to do the will of God, 39. Angels are the ſervants of God, 334. Their ſeveral ſervices for the Church, 334, 335. And againſt the wicked, ib. Angels how chargeable with folly, 338. Pride and ſelf confidence, the ſins of Angels, 339 Angels as creatures mutable, ib. Yet now confirmed by Chriſt, 340. God hath no need of Angels, 341. Angels falling, why their ſin greater then mans, and God ſo irreconcilable to them, 954. Angels, how imperfect, 1416. Angels by ſome called Heavens, and why, 1417. Chriſt a mediator and head of the good Angels, not their Redeemer, 1863. Angels, how in a place. 2184

Anger in man, what it is, 772. How God is angry, ib. The troubles that fall upon the creature are the effects of Gods anger, ib. It is not in the power of man to turn away the anger of God, 810. How prayer is ſaid to do it, ib. The anger of God is more grievous to the Saints, then all their other afflictions, 913. Anger a bitter thing, eſpecially the anger of God, 1302, &c. Angry man deſcribed, 1703. Anger, ſix ſorts of it, ib. Anger may be of good uſe, ib. Furious and diſtempered anger hurts our ſelves moſt, 1704. Seven rules given for the moderating of our anger, ib. 1705. Anger is the kindling of a fire in us, 1807. Anger of God, how God is ſaid to be angry, 2065 Dangerous to provoke God to anger, ib. The afflictions of wicked men are diſtributed to them by God in anger. ibid.

Anſwer, how taken in Scripture, 493. It is the duty of a man to anſwer when he is queſtioned or charged with any fault, 494. Anſwer of two kinds, 811. It is a duty to anſwer what is ſpoken. How a fool muſt and muſt not be anſwered, 1019 Two things alwayes may, two things uſually do embolden men to anſwer. 1501

Antiochus Epiphanes, his painful life. 1431

Apis, the Egyptian Idol, why his Prieſts did not give him the water of Nilus to drink. 1461

Apoſtacy from profeſſion, worſe then continued prophaneneſs. 1534

Apoſtles, how ſome are called chief among the Apoſtles. 1108

Appeals to God lawful, 1573. It is a daring work to appeal to God. 1576

Appearance, we muſt not judge by it. 873

Appetite of the end infinite, 1493. Appetite twofold. 1975

Application of general truths very neceſſary. 490, 1042

Archers, ſeven Archers ſhot at Job. 1539

Arcturus deſcribed. 788

Ariſe, to ariſe and do a thing, what it imports. 91

Ark in which the Law was put, typed Chriſt. 2244

Arminians, why they deny the Interceſſion of Chriſt for all. 1598

Arrhabo, an earneſt, whence it comes. 1603

Arrows, how taken in Scripture, 502, 503. Arrows of God why ſo called, ib. Afflictions like arrows in four things, 1504. Poyſon'd arrows, ibid.

Aſtoniſhment at the dealings of God, 1628 Aſtoniſhment, judgments of God cauſe it. 2026, 2028

Aſſemblies of the Saints to worſhip, are the dwelling place of God. 2184

Aſſes colt, man like a wild Aſſes colt in three things. 1063

Aſſurance, to be aſſured of a mercy, is better then the enjoyment of a mercy, 479. Aſſurance that we are in a ſtate of Grace poſſible, and how wrought, 939. Aſſurance of faith, hope, love and underſtanding opened, 1273. What aſſurance is, ib. & 1274. Objections againſt aſſurance anſwered, ib. How a right aſſurance is grounded, 1275. Aſſurance of approaching miſeries, how great a trouble to the mind, 1446. A wicked man may have this aſſurance. ibid.

Atlantes, what people they were. 197

Attention to the word twofold, 1669

Auguſtine, his wiſh to ſee three things. 1888

Auguſtus Ceſar, his peircing eye. 1523

Awake, in what ſenſe God awakes, 692. His awaking and ſleeping, note only the changes of providence, 693. Two things awaken God, the prayer of his people, and the rage of his enemies. 694

Aygoland, a King of the Moors, why he refuſed baptiſm. 1630

B

BAptiſm threefold. Folio 1713

Barathrum, why it ſignifies Hell, 1622

Beaſts, in what ſence put for men in Scripture, 470. Beaſts of the earth, hurtful to us three wayes, 471. Beaſts how at peace with us, 476. Sin hath made the beaſts and all creatures hurtful to man, ib. It is from ſpecial providence that the beaſts hurt us not, 477. Beaſts complain not without cauſe, 511. Man in paſſion worſe then beaſts, 614, 615. When man is ſent to the beaſts to be taught, what it importeth, 1128. How we may be ſaid to ask queſtions of beaſts, or to confer with them, 1129. What ſpecial leſſons the beaſts and fowls teach us. 1130, 1131

Begging, or wandring for bread, a great affliction. 1443

Behold, a note either of deriſion, or of aſſeveration. 266

Being, How a troubleſom being may be worſe then no being, and how not, 220. How God excelleth all creatures in his being, ſhewed in ſeven particulars. 1233, &c.

Belial, wicked men, why called ſons of Belial? 289. Belial, whence derived, 1389 Who is Belial. 1429

Believing, a wicked man hath neither a ground nor a heart to believe, 1438, &c. A wicked mans believing is preſuming. 1439

Belly, taken for the appetite. 1986

Benefits received or promiſed, what influence they may or ought to have upon our obedience unto God. 53

Beſt things hardeſt to come by, 244. Beſt things are hidden in two reſpects. 244

Birth, The great power of God in the birth of man, 209. The remembrance that God takes us out of the womb, a great ſupport to faith in greateſt troubles, 210. Untimely birth, what, and why ſo called. 227

Birth-dayes kept ſolemnly, 336. Spiritual birth-day our greateſt joy. ibid.

Bitter day, is a day of trouble, 192. Sin is a bitter thing, and why. 1301

Bitterneſs of ſoul, notes the deepeſt ſorrow, 238. Bitterneſs put for ſoreſt affliction, 831 The Lord ſometime mixes a very bitter cup for his own people, 832. Bitterneſs of ſoul, what. 2094

Blaſphemy, what? 114. The holieſt perſons ſubject to the moſt blaſphemous temptations. 151

Blaſt and breath of God, what they ſignifie in Scripture. 293

Bleſſedneſs, three degrees of it. 479

Bleſſing, three wayes, 1. Man bleſſes man. 2. Man bleſſeth God. 3. God bleſſes man, what? 57, 58. All ſucceſs from the bleſſing of God, 59. God delights to bleſs thoſe who are laborious, ib. The bleſſing of God is effectual, 60. To bleſs God, what? 110 The beſt outward bleſſing may be turned into a croſs. 144

Blood, what it ſignifies in Scripture, 1565 Blood of Chriſt conſidered two wayes, as to the work of Redemption. 1862

Bloody ſins ſhall not paſs undiſcovered, 1570 Why God is ſaid to make inquiſition for blood in ſpecial. 1571

Body of man compared to a houſe, in two reſpects, 343. Why called a houſe of clay, 344. How it ſhould humble us, 345. Much care of the body is uſually joyned with neglect of the ſoul, ibid. Body of man an excellent cellent frame of it, 960. Five things ſhew this, ib. &c. Body of man an excellent frame, 947. How called a vile body, ib. Body of man like earth or clay, 1240, 1241. To mind the feeding of it, ſinful, 1462. They take little care for their ſouls, who take overmuch care for their bodies, 1463. Body ſhall be ſpiritual, after the Reſurrection, three wayes, 1886. Four endowments of a glorious body. ibid.

Bodies of the Saints abuſed and tortured here on earth. 134

Bodily-evils diſtemper the mind. 1841

Bonds of Kings of two ſorts, how both are broken. 1163, 1164

Bones and ſinews, their uſe in the body of man, 960. Our bones how taken in Scripture. 1946

Book, God hath a two fold book. 1300

Branch, what it ſignifies in Scripture, 1483 Branches of a man, what they are. 1736

Bread the ſtaff of life, 457. It is a precious comfort, to have bread in a promiſe, when we have none upon the board, 458. What it ſignifies in Scripture. 1442, &c.

Breath, our breath in the hand of God, 1134 The ſafety of our lives chiefly in this, ibid. Breath of God, what it ſignifies in Scripture, 1470, &c. Breath of man, 1472. Breath of man taken three wayes, 1594. The breath of man is corruptible, 1595. Breath is not the ſoul. ibid.

Brethren, many ſorts of them, 543. Brethren deceitful, 544. The deceit of a brother is double deceit, eſpecially of a brother in the faith, ib. Seven ſorts of them, 1817. Brethren may prove forgetful and unfaithful, ib. The eſtrangement of a brother is very grievous, 1818. Brethren of two ſorts, 2156 To do wrong to, or not to relieve a brother. heightens the ſin. ibid.

Bribe-takers, and bribe-givers, both alike wicked. 1486

Bribery is an odious ſin, 1487. That which is got by bribery will not hold long. ibid.

Brimſtone implies barrenneſs, 1751. Three things in a judgment intimated by ſcattering brimſtone. 1752

Building, and to be built up what it ſignifies in Scripture. 2248

Burial, a comely burial is an honour and a bleſſing. 485

By-word, to be made a by-word, notes two things, 1617. Great ſufferers are uſually made a by-word, ib. &c. It is very burdenſom to the ſpirit of a man to be made a by-word. 1618

C

CAbirs a Sect of babling Poets. Folio 675

Calling, every man ought to have a calling. 59 It is a great bleſſing when we can freely go on in the exerciſe of our callings. 1095

Candle-light, the removing of it ſhews a very miſerable condition. 1711

Carnal reaſonings are the ſtrong holds of ſin, 1455. The armor and weapons of ſin, 1456 Carnal men, their ſpirits are mearly mercenary. 2212

Cattel the riches of the Patriarchs, and why? 14, &c.

Cauſe, ſecond cauſes can do nothing without the firſt. 947

Chaff, wicked men compared to it in three things. 2067, &c.

Chambers of the South, what, and why ſo called. 789

Changes, greateſt changes incident to greateſt perſons, 1167. Changeableneſs of man in his natural, civil, and ſpiritual eſtate opened, 1319. The moſt durable creatures have a changeableneſs in their nature, 1345. Three great changes, 1356. What a change is made by death, and the reſurrection, opened, ib. 1357. To be without change is either the beſt or worſt condition, 1359. The ſtrongeſt creatures ſubject to change, 1369. Changes of wicked men for the worſe, 1479. Changeableneſs of our eſtate both a part of our miſery, and a great mercy. 1480

Charity, four acts of ſpiritual charity, 266. Spiritual charity beſt, 270. Charity eſpecially ſpiritual charity is open handed, ib. Charity muſt and will make ventures, 2157. Charity is accepted, and uncharitableneſs condemned in the ſmalleſt matters, 2161. Churliſh perſons ſtick at ſmall charities as well as great, ib. How charity believeth all things. 2171

Chaſtnings, ſee Afflictions. What is properly a chaſtning, 447. How we may improve this notion that Shaddai God Almighty chaſtens us. 448, 449

Chemarims, Idolatrous Prieſts, why ſo called? 192

Children are bleſſings, 11. A greater bleſſing then riches, ibid. The more children, the more bleſſing, 12. Beſt to have moſt ſons, ib. To have daughters and ſons, the compleat bleſſing, ib. Many children no hinderance either of piety or equity, ib. Love and concord among children, is the fathers ſpecial bleſſing, 19. Lawful delights is to be permitted our children, 23. Children of full age, not out of their parents care, ib. Childrens ſouls chiefly to be cared for, ib. Parents ought to pray in ſpecial for every child, 29 Job's loſs of his children, his greateſt loſs, ſhewed in five conſiderations, 85, &c. Children of wicked parents, often wrapt up in the ſame judgment with their parents, 374 Children of godly parents neareſt the bleſſing, 482. Bleſſings upon children are the parents bleſſings, ib. 483. Children of God why ſo called, 1614. Children may ſmart for their Fathers ſin, ib. How their parents ſtrength, 1732. To have no children, or to be bereaved of children, a greater croſs to the wicked then to the godly, and why, 1759 Children how the crown of old men, 1802. Children being puniſhed are a puniſhment to parents, 1942, 1943. Children their corruption of nature and life, ſignified in their name, 2037. Worldly men breed their children vainly, 2039. Children why compared to a building. 2248

Chiſlu the tenth month among the Jews, why ſo called. 788

Chriſt, his preſence makes any place or condition comfortable, 232. That the heart of a believer is never at reſt, but in Chriſt, 257 Chriſt confirmed the good Angels, 340. No ſtability in any eſtate out of Chriſt, ib. Chriſt is not only a principle, but a pattern of holineſs, 360. Faith can live upon nothing but Chriſt, 537. Chriſt is the medium by which we ſee God, 801. Chriſt, his exceeding great love ſhewed in that a little before his death, he was ſo mindful of the Church and of his mother, while he was nailed to the croſs, 1378. Chriſt is comfort cloathed in our fleſh, 1402. They are moſt free, who ſerve Chriſt moſt, 1431. Two battels in which we cannot ſtand without the help of Chriſt, 1448. The great love of Chriſt to ſinners, how it appears, 1534. God did not ſpare Chriſt when he ſtood in our place, 1544. Name of Chriſt, the eſſential form of prayer, 1560. To pray in the name of Chriſt hath three things in it, ib. Chriſt, why called the Son of man, 1585. Chriſt is a ſurety for his people, as well as an Advocate, 1608 Chriſt was, and is, moſt ready to undertake the cauſe of ſinners, 1607. Chriſt, how not heard of the Father, 1792. Chriſt hath in him a ſutable good to all our wants, 1746 That Chriſt liveth, implieth three things, 1864. Chriſt firſt and laſt, 1868. Chriſt an everlaſting foundation. 2207

Churches, their happineſs when freed from the the mixture of prophane and erroneous perſons, 1428. &c. A double danger by mingling with ſuch in Church fellowſhip, 1429 Church, how like a flock. 2038

Chuſing, or to make choice, what, 1394

Chyrurgion, three neceſſary qualifications for him, either in a natural or myſtical ſence 452

Ciſterns, what kind of ciſtern the creature is. 2239

Cities, their glory in ſeven things. 1801. Four Glories of the City of God. ibid.

Clay, that man was made of clay intimates three things. 953

Clean, how we are or are not clean in the ſight of God, 1031. To be clean in our own eyes or in the eyes of men, not enough, 1032 Man how clean under a fourfold notion. 1415

Cleopatra, why ſhe choſe to die by putting Aſpes to her breaſts. 1957

Cloathing, put for all good things of this life, 2159

Cloud, what it is, and what it ſignifies in Scripture, 191. Cloud, what, 606. Dying man like a cloud, 607. Clouds and darkneſs, how God is ſaid to dwell in them. 2192

Comfort comes only from God, 866. Yet a man in affliction may help on his own comforts or ſorrows, 867. Comforts put off upon two grounds. 868

Comforters, miſerable comforters who, ſhewed diverſe wayes, 1497. Two ſpecial ſorts of miſerable comforters, 1498. Three things to be conſidered by thoſe who undertake to be comforters, ib. To know how to comfort others is a ſpecial gift of God, 1499. Two great duties of a comforter, 1507. He that would comfort a diſtreſſed ſoul, muſt watch for advantages both from his ſpeech and ſilence. 1512

Commands, God can make every word he ſpeaks, a command, 778. Every creature muſt ſubmit to his command, 779. God hath a negative voice of command to ſtay the motion of any creature. ibid.

Commendation with a But, a wound, 271. To commend our ſelves very unſeemly, 837 Commendation of our ſelves not alwayes uncomly. 1107

Committing our cauſe to God, what it imports, 392. Committing our cauſe to God, a great eaſe to the ſoul, 394. A caution about committing our cauſe to God. 395

Communicating our cauſe and eſtate to God, three encouragements to do do ſo. 1205

Company of friends and children, a great mercy, 1516. Man a ſociable creature, ib. Some company is a burden, 1517. The comfort of ſociety conſiſts in the ſuitableneſs of it, ib. None but good company in Heaven. ib.

Complainings, when ſinful, 611. Great ſufferings, put the beſt to their complaints, 2020 Complaints of two ſorts, 2021. Beſt to complain to God, ib. Seven ſorts of men unfit to receive complaints. ib. &c.

Concealing the word of God ſinful, four wayes of concealing it. 524

Conception of children, the work and bleſſing of God. 209

Condemnation hath three things in it, which makes it very grievous, 913. It is the adjudging a man to be wicked, 914. Condemnation, ſelf-condemnation ſtrongeſt. 1394

Confeſſion of ſin; a general confeſſion may be a ſound one, 643. Divers ingredients of it, 644. The holieſt have cauſe to confeſs ſin, and why? 645. Sin not confeſſed gets ſtrength three wayes, 646. It makes the ſoul very active about the remedies of ſin, ibid.

Confidence, holy confidence what it is, 274 Confidence in God, ſettles the heart in all conditions, 279. Confidence, what it is, 1741. Wicked men full of confidence, ibid. Their confidence ſhall periſh. ibid.

Conſcience, the teſtimony of it the beſt ground of willingneſs to die, 524, 525. A good conſcience to be kept rather then our lives, 841. God and conſcience keep a record of our lives, 972, &c. Conſcience how neglected, 1436. Conſcience evil, its defect conſidered two wayes, ib. The offices of conſcience, ib. Four ſorts of evil conſcience, ib. Guilty conſcience thinks every man he meets his enemy, 1440. He is ever in danger, and under the curſe, 1441. A twofold evil conſcience ſhewed, 1563. A guilty conſcience cannot endure plain words, 1599. Conſcience hath divers works in man, 1728. Conſcience a Hell to ſome. 1991

Conſent to ſin how proper to the wicked. 938

Conſideration, what and how taken, 1058. How God conſiders, ib. &c. The want of it cauſeth us to be ſo little affected with great things. 2187

Conſolation, it is eaſie with God to comfort thoſe who are moſt diſconſolate, 1401. Conſolations of two ſorts, ib. Conſolation is the proper gift of God, 1402. God can turn all our croſſes into comforts, 1403. It is happy for Saints that conſolation is in the hand of God, ſhewed in four particulars, ib. Conſolation rightly adminiſtred by man, is the conſolation of God, 1404. To count the conſolations of God ſmall is a very great ſin, ſhewed upon two grounds, ib. A man in affliction receives much conſolation if he be heard. 2013, &c.

Contamino, whence derived. 1702

Contempt of others ſinful. 1701

Contention, Man naturally loves it, 755. Man is apt to contend with God, 756. Eſpecially about three things, 757. Man is unable to contend with God in any thing. ibid.

Contentment with our portion, whether much or little, whence it is, 1976. What content is, ibid. It is our duty to ſit down quiet and content under the ſaddeſt diſpenſations of God. 2237

Correction, what it is, 440. The greateſt afflictions upon the children of God, are but corrections, ib. How a correction differs from a judgment, ib. A child of God is happy under all corrections, 441. What it is to deſpiſe corrections, opened. 443

Counſel, in counſelling others, we ſhould ſhew our ſelves ready to follow the ſame counſel, 395. God turns the counſels of wicked men againſt themſelves, 425. What counſel is? 426. Raſh, haſty counſels are ſucceſleſs, 428 Counſel what it is, 1142. Good counſel is the ſupport of a Kingdom, 1161. Counſel of God unmoveable, 1707. Counſel of the wicked, what, 2218. Counſels of wicked men not ſhined on by God, 922. Counſels of evil men biſappointed, 1483. Though the counſels of evil men be diſappointed, yet they will go on, three grounds of it. 1492, &c

Counſels of men turned upon themſelves, 1716 God over-rules the counſels and purpoſes of men, 1719. Counſel, what it is, 2060. The counſel of the wicked fooliſh in the opinion of the godly, 2061. Poor mans counſel not heard. 2062

Counſellors, their power to hurt or do good among Kings and Princes, 221. The beſt and wiſeſt counſel. 1838

Covetous man an inſatiable gulf. 1444

Covetouſneſs unſatiable, 1974, &c. Covetous perſons are in ſtraits when fulleſt. 1981

Cowardiſe of wicked men. 1986, 1989

Craft, wiſdom of natural men is craft, 418 Craft alone, how ſinful. 1394

Crafty men, who they are, 417. Crafty men Satan deſires to get to his ſide and ſervice, why? 419, &c. Crafty men full of hopes, 420. And induſtry, ib. They want power to effect what they deviſe, 421. It is a wonderful work of God, to ſtop the devices of crafty men, 422. In what ſence any of their devices proſper, ib. How God takes the wiſe in their craftineſs, 423. No craft of man can ſtand before the wiſdom of God, 424

Creation, the work of creation ſhews God the author, 1132. The ſmalleſt creatures are of Gods making as well as the greateſt. 1133

Creatures, the beſt creatures left to themſelves, will undo themſelves, 39. Creatures, a book wherein we may learn much of God and our ſelves, 609. Creatures cannot give us any comfort without God, 618. He can make any creature helpful to us, ib. Creatures teach us, 1127. They teach us four ſeveral leſſons, ib. God can ſoon make any of them a ſcourge to puniſh man, 1149. The exceſs of any Creature is a judgment, 1150. We ought to conſider the ſeveral excellencies of them, 2188. The creature leads us to God ib. &c. Creature can neither hold nor give out the good it hath, but by a word from God. 2239

Credit and eſteem, eſpecially from parts and gifts, much ſtood upon. 1700

Croſs, good men are apt to have ſtrange thoughts about the croſs or ſufferings, for, or from Chriſt. 1630

Crown, what it ſignifies in Scripture. 1801. &c.

Cruelty of ſome, ſo great, that they are not ſatisfied unleſs they vex the ſouls of their brethren. 1853

Cup of Conſolation, what. 2013

Curſe, what it is to curſe, 369. The Saints in Scripture, rather propheſie of, then pray for curſes upon the heads of wicked men, ib. No creature can ſtand before the curſe of God. 372

Curſing, what is meant by curſing God in the heart, 31, 32, 33, &c. Curſing hath three things in it, 65. What, to curſe God to his face, 67. What it is to curſe a thing or perſon, 174. A curſe contains all evil, as bleſſing all good, 175. Man is but the miniſter of any curſe, 176. In what ſenſe the irrational creatures are capable of a curſe. 177

Cuſtom in ſin, what. 938

D

Dalilah, what it ſignifies. Folio 434

Damned under endleſs ſufferings, one reaſon of it. 2151

Dark day is a ſad day, 186. It ſtains the beauty of the creature. 191

Darkneſs divers ſorts of it, 185, 1182, 1438, 1468, 1798, 2176. Darkneſs in the day time, what it ſignifies. 428

Davids holy ingenuity in chooſing the Peſtilence. 1733

Dauncing twofold. 2038

Day, what it is to regard a day, 187. How changed into night, 1650. Day, put alone in Scripture, ſignifies a time of judgment or of tryal. 1761

Dayes of God not like the dayes of man, 928 Dayes of man few in this life, conſidered divers wayes, 1312. Sin the ſhortner of mans dayes, 1313. Dayes of man determined by God, 1331, 1332. A twofold limit of mans dayes, 1334. Latter or laſt dayes, underſtood three wayes in Scripture. 1867

Dayes-man, who, 887. Why ſo called, ibid. Five things belonging to a Dayes-man, 888 A threefold poſture of the dayes-man in laying on his hand, 889. No creature can be a dayes-man between God and man, only Chriſt is. 890, 891

Death, ſuddain death no argument of Gods disfavour, 88. Death may ſurpriſe us eating, therefore be holy in eating, 89. Death ſhakes us out of all our worldly cloathing, 104. It is ſinful abſolutely to wiſh our own death, though we are in pains more painful then death, 150. Satan perſwades that death is an end of all troubles, 151. He would make men willing to die, when they are moſt unfit to die, ib. Death is the total reſt of the godly only, 215. The outward reſt of all, 216 In death we have a four-fold reſt, ib. Death is the ſleep of the body, 217, 1346. Why ſo called, 218. Their opinion refuted, who ſay the ſoul ſleeps when the body dies, 217 No power or policy can prevent death, 224, 235. In death all are equal, ib. In what ſence we may deſire death, 241. Many afflictions to our feeling are worſe then death, 243 Death finds ſome before they look for it, others look for death and cannot find it, 243 Not to die is a puniſhment to ſome in this life, and it will be an everlaſting puniſhment to all the damned, ib. Death conſumes us without noiſe, 348. Man cannot ſtand out the aſſaults of death, 349. We are ſubject to death every moment, ib. Death haſtens upon us all the dayes we live, 350. What death is? 353. In death all natural and civil excellencies go away, ib. Greateſt wiſdom to prepare to die well, 354. How man is ſaid to periſh for ever when he dies, 350, 351. Few of the living obſerve how ſuddenly others do, or themſelves may die, 352 Thoughts of death laid to the heart, are a good medicine for an evil heart, ib. An happy death, what, 483. A godly man is a volunteer in death, 485. When a godly man dies, he hath had his fill of living, 486. In what ſence a man may be ſaid to die before his time, and in the midſt of his dayes, 487 Aſſurance of a better life, carries us through all the pains of death with comfort, 520. So doth the teſtimony of a good conſcience, 524, &c. No evil in the death of a godly man, 533. Death the end of worldly comforts, 609. Sudden death, or to be ſlain ſuddenly, in what ſence a mercy, 846. Man dies by ſtatute, 955. Whether death was natural to man or no, ib. Death without order two wayes, 997. No natural return from it, 995. Death is a bitter thing, 1303. We ſhould familiarize death to us by eaſie notions of it, 1346, 1592. Death, a great change, 1356. Death, to whom it is deſirable and welcom, 1353. Death defaceth ceth the beauty of man, 1374. An untimely death the portion of a wicked man, 1482 Death inexorable, we muſt go with it, when it calls, 1591. A believer ſpeaks familiarly of death, ib. Death haſtens, ſo ſhould we to be ready for death, 1592. Reſt in death, 1658. Nothing deſireable in death it ſelf, ib. The familiarity of ſome believers with death deſcribed, 1660. Corruption the portion of the dead, 1661. Death, very terrible, or the King of terrors, in a threefold conſideration, 1744. A threefold gradation of the terribleneſs of death, 1745. In two caſes death terrible to a godly man, ibid. Seven things may ſweeten death to Saints, 1746 A low and miſerable eſtate expreſſed by death in Scripture, 1859. Death of the wicked often eaſie and peaceable, 2044. Sloweſt death is moſt cruel. 2045. Death takes the ſtrong and healthy, 2092. Death doth not obſerve the laws of nature, 2093. Man is daily dying, 2125. 'Tis no new thing to dye, 2126. Death of Chriſt voluntary, 1864. Death could not hold Chriſt under its power, two reaſons of it, 1881, &c. Chriſt continued as little time under the power of death as could be to conſtitute the third day, 1882. Death prevaileth over our whole outward man, 1880, &c. Death of Chriſt the beſt argument to give us comfort in death, 2126. Death makes no difference among men, 2097. Death when and to whom ſudden. 2175

Dead know nothing of what is done in this life. 1376

Deceived, what it is to be deceived, 1473. Man is very apt to be deceived, 1474. Mans aptneſs to be deceived ariſeth two wayes. ibid.

Deceivers and deceivings of two ſorts opened, 1158. There are three notorious deceivers, 1475. How the deceiver and the deceived are ſaid to belong to God, 1154. How God orders the deceiver and the deceived, ſhewed in four things, ib. 1155. Deceiver, he that publiſheth that which is falſe, though he had no intent to deceive, is yet a deceiver. 1599

Decrees of God are abſolute, 1335. This doth not diſingage us from the uſe of means, ibid. Decree of God carries all before it, 1471 Decree by man what; how he may be ſaid to decree a thing, and have it eſtabliſhed, 2270. The ſucceſs of our decrees or counſels is a great mercy, 2271. The ſucceſs of our decrees is from God, ibid. The decrees of godly men are under a promiſe of ſucceſs. 2272

Deep things of two ſorts, 1181. The deep things of God and men opened, ib. 1182

Degrees in grace. God hath ſervants of all ſizes, 50. We ought not to ſet up our reſt in a low or lower degree of grace, ib. Degrees of excellency and dignity in the creatures, God hath not levelled them. 2188

Deliberate ſinning. 1954

Deliberating neceſſary before ſpeaking.

Delight in ſin worſe then the committing of ſin, 939. Delight conſiſteth in two things, 2258. Delight in God is our duty as well as our reward and comfort. ib. They who mourn for ſin, ſhall find delight in God, 2259 Delight in the Lord is the choiceſt mercy, 2260. Delight in the Lord exceeds all worldy delights in four things. ibid.

Deliverance is of the Lord, 455. The Lord can deliver as often as we can need deliverance, ib. God delivers his people from evil while they are in trouble. 457

Deſert, no rule of Gods proceedings. 2029

Deſire, it is not alwayes a mercy to have our deſires granted, 69. It is an affliction to nature, to be debar'd of what it deſires, though the thing deſired be deſtructive to nature, 243. True deſires produce endeavours, 244 Proportionable to the ſtrength of deſire, is the ſtrength of endeavour, ib. Deſires obtained fill with joy, 245. And with joy proportionable to thoſe deſires, 246. How God hath a deſire to man, 1362. Deſires when ſtrong are very importunate, 1835. Deſire of the wicked never full, 1975. When a wicked man hath his deſire, it ſhall not help him. 1977

Deſpair, a godly man may think his eſtate deſperate, 569. Deſpair is the cutting off of hope. 720

Devices, what. 417

Devils trade, what, 1489. Devil, how the firſt-born of death, 1737. How he is ſaid to have the power of death, ib. How wicked men come to be the children of the Devil, 2071 Devils not in fulneſs of torment yet. 42

Diſcontent at the dealings of God with us, a high point of folly, 364. Diſcontent at the afflictions of God, afflicts more then thoſe afflictions, 365. Diſcontent very ſinful. 1976

Diſcourteſies from thoſe who are near us go neareſt to our hearts. 1111

Diſcoveries made of deep evil counſels or ſinful practices three wayes. 1186

Diſeaſes, Satan can ſmite the body with diſeaſes if God permit him, 140. No diſeaſe can wear out the marks by which Chriſt knows us, 169. Diſeaſes called weapons. 1986, &c.

Diſgrace, a great affliction to dye under a blot of diſgrace. 1592, &c.

Diſputes kindle paſſion, 1698. Diſputers apt to make falſe inferences from the tenets of their oppoſers. 2191

Diſſimulation, what it is. 1565

Diviſion and diſunion, a great curſe. 193

Doctrine, no doctrine ought to be rejected till tried, 1137. Doctrine and divine teachings, why compared to and expreſſed by rain and raining. 2241

Doubling of words, what it imports. 2010

Dreams, the ſeveral ſorts, and cauſes of them, 619, 620. Our dreams are ordered by God, ib. Satan makes them terrible, 621. Dreams, how vaniſhing. 1939

Drinking iniquity like water; ſeven parallels between the drinking of iniquity, and the Drinking of water, 1421, &c. Drinking wrath what it imports. 2075, 2076

Dropping, why put for propheſying in Scripture. 1581

Drunkenneſs of two ſorts, 1197. A parallel in ſeven particulars between a man who is drunk, and one whoſe heart God taketh away. 1199, 1199

Dung of man worſe then that of other creatures. 1935

Duſt, ſhaking off the duſt of the feet, notes three things, 1550. To be raiſed from the duſt, or laid in the duſt, what it meaneth. 1551

Duties, dangerous to lean upon them, 725 How hypocrites duties fail, ib. How we muſt hold duties faſt, and how not. 726

E

EAgles flight, time compared to it. 861

Ear, two ears given man, and but one tongue, what it teacheth, 1018. Ear of God, what and how exact, 1136. Ear muſt do more then hear, it muſt try, 1137. What it is to hear with our ears, 1293. What it is to hear with our harveſt ears. 1294

Earneſt, what it is. 1603

Earth taken five wayes in Scripture, 851. How the earth is given to wicked men, ib. Men of the earth, why the wicked are ſo called. 2166

Earthly things ſlippery and uncertain, 1118 And all earthly things the gift of God two wayes, 1427. Earthly things continue not, two reaſons of it, 1467. Earthly things the beſt of them may ſoon be taken from us. 1802

Earth-quake the force of it, 774. The cauſe of it. ibid.

Eaſt-wind, why it ſignifies paſſion in man. 1387

Eclipſe of the Sun, when Chriſt ſuffered, was miraculous in two reſpects. 777

Egg, white of an egg what it emblems. 512

Egypt, called Rahab in Scripture, and why, 808

Elect perſons, how, impoſſible they ſhould be deceived. 1475

Election, man muſt not elect or chuſe perſons as God doth, 1032, &c. Election the quarrellings of mans heart about it, 2083. The decree of election is an unmovable foundation. 2206

Emims, why ſo called. 1992

Empty, a perſon may be ſent away empty in a threefold ſence. 2169, &c

Encreaſe from God, 1188. God encreaſeth a Nation three wayes. ibid.

End, we ſhould reſolve upon our end, before we undertake any action, 165. A wiſe man propoſes ſutable ends, ib. Man may propoſe his end, but he cannot reach it, ib. End two wayes taken, 532. An evil heart is never ſetled either about its way or end, 1083 Our end will be ſuch as our way is, 1480 End and rule to be enquired into before every action. 1905

Enemy who, 1295. God acts toward ſome of his neareſt friends as if they were his enemies, ib. God may account thoſe he loves as enemies, 1808, &c. God hath enemies of two ſorts, 1809. To be an enemy to God is a moſt dangerous condition, ib. We ſhall ſurely prevail over our enemies, if they be Gods enemies, 1810. Enemies, in what ſence we may not or may rejoyce in their fall, 2223, 2224

Enmity everlaſting between the godly and the wicked. 1633

Envy, what it is, 363, 1523. Envy a killing paſſion. 363, &c.

Error, he that is ſhewed his error, ſhould ſit down convinc'd, 561. He is in a fair way to truth, who acknowledges he may err, 563 What is properly called an error, as diſtinct from hereſie, ib. Upon what terms an error is to be left, ib. The publiſhing of it ſerves the ends of God, 1157. Why God ſuffers many to be ſeduced by error, ib. &c. We may be guilty of errors by conſequence, though we do not hold them, 1391. They who maintain error among men, ſhall not find favour with God, 1612. Error, the daughter of ignorance, 1779. The beſt of men, godly men are ſubject to error, ib. He that judgeth himſelf to be in the truth ſhould not leave it, becauſe others call it error, 1781 Many call that an error, which they cannot prove to be one, ib. Man is apt to magnifie himſelf over thoſe who are fallen into an error, 1782. That it is very ſinful to do ſo, ſhewed, 1784. Good men may err and continue long in an error, 2128. Error, very binding upon the conſcience as well as truth, 2180. Hard to judge which is worſe, unſetledneſs in truth, or tenaciouſneſs in error,

ror, ib. The way of error old. 2199

Eſchewing evil, more then the not committing of evil, 8. A godly man doth not only forbear but eſchew ſin, all ſin, and all the occaſions of ſin. 11

Eternity, how the longeſt and the ſhorteſt, 623 Eternity is Gods day, 929. Difference between eternity, eviternity, and time, 930 God hath time enough to do his work in. ibid.

Everlaſting, things ſo called two wayes. 1397

Evil of ſin. Why ſin called evil, 8. Satan would perſwade us to eaſe our ſelves of troubleſom evils, by committing ſinſul evils, 150. Affliction in what ſence called evil, 154. Evil of puniſhment or affliction, conſidered as coming from God, may be born with more quietneſs, 155. Becauſe we receive all good from God, it is equal that we ſhould patiently bear evil, 156. Evils of body or mind, when they may be ſaid to be incurable, 1511 It makes that which is evil or bad worſe, when we account it better then it is. 1935

Evil-doers who, 741. God will not help ſuch, ib. How God concurs with evil-doers and how not, 742, 743. God reſiſts them, a twofold reſiſtance. ib.

Exaltation of Chriſt threefold. 1876, &c.

Example of God and Chriſt, how our rule, 360, &c. The examples of others falling into ſin, or under puniſhment, ſhould be our warnings, 689. Examples of two ſorts in Scripture, 1619. Examples of puniſhment upon ſinners ought to be marked, 2200. Examples of two ſorts, ib. God makes wicked men examples. 2221

Excellency of God, 1231. What that is ſhewed three wayes, 1233, &c. The excellency of God ſhould overaw the ſpirit of man, 1235 What the opening of the eye implies in Scripture. 1321

Exhortation a duty, 392. It muſt be joyned with reproof, ib. The beſt Saints on earth may need brotherly Exhortations, 393. Exhortations muſt be managed with meekneſs. ib.

Experience the miſtreſs of truth, 366. Experience works hope, 435. Experience teacheth wicked men, they will not know till they feel. 2073

Extaſie twofold. 2226

Eye, how the ſight of the eye wounds the heart, either with ſin or ſorrow, 211. Alſo that the ſight of the eye affects the heart with joy, 212. Eyes of God what, 923. Seven differences between the eyes of God and man, 924. As man ſees, ſo much of man is ſeen at his eye, 1408. Two ſins very viſible in the eye, 1409. A look of the eye, how powerful, 1523. Eyes, high or low, note pride or humility. 2276

Ezekiel, why ſo often called Son of man. 1585

F

Face of God, what, Folio 71. Faces of Judges covered, what it imports, 854. Face put for anger, &c. why, 865. Lifting up the face notes three things, 1079. Four things are chiefly ſeen in the Face, ib. What it is to lift up the face without ſpot, 1080, &c. Face of God, what, 1289. Face of God ſeen in this life, and how, 1290. Face of God ſeen chiefly in three things, 1291. Six grounds of Gods hiding his face, 1292. The hiding of Gods face a great affliction, 1293. Lifting up the face, what it imports in Scripture, 2261. Face caſt down three wayes. ibid.

Faith ought to be great, becauſe God can do great things, 401. We muſt believe not only what we cannot ſee, but what we cannot underſtand, 403. Faith ſhould encreaſe in us, when God works wonders for us, 406 Faith muſt have ſomewhat to lean upon, 723. Faith neceſſary in prayer, 824. Faith in prayer doth not deſerve an anſwer though it get one, 825. Faith hath its decayes, 826 Faith ſees God good to us and our friend, when we receive nothing but frowns and evil from him, 1253, &c. Faith propheſies, 1362. Want of Faith in times of affliction, how grievous, 1439. The great benefits of faith in ſuch a ſtate, ib. He that hath no faith knows not whither to go for the ſupply of any want, 1445. Faith, how neceſſary in prayer, 1562. Faith muſt be openly profeſſed when we are called thereunto, 1858 Open profeſſion of our faith a ſupport in affliction, 1859. Faith will venture and truſt in the worſt condition, 1730, &c. Man is hardly brought to believe that God will pour out wrath upon ſinners, 1765, &c. A threefold work of faith, 1863. Faith triumphs over all difficulties, 1883. We cannot pleaſe God without faith, yet he may be ſerved without faith, 2005. Faith, the reflect act of it moſt ſweet. 2258

Fall, a three-fold fall in Scripture. 260

Family, To order a family well, is a great point of wiſdom, 481. A family well ordered, is uſually a proſperous family, ibid. The governor of a family is to take care that ſin abides not in his family. 1078

Famine, a very ſore judgment, the effect of it, 457, 458. How many wayes the Lord redeems from famine. 458

Father, a wicked Father brings a curſe upon his Children, 1484. Fathers provoking their Children, very dangerous, 1601. In what ſence no man is to be called Father. 1701

Fatherleſs, who, 570. Such in a ſad condition, 571. A grievous ſin to oppreſs them, ib. Fatherleſs and widdow, who in Scripture, 2170. How ſinful to wrong them. 2172

Fatneſs, wicked men deſcribed by it. 1461

Favour of God makes our worſt outward troubles comfortable, 187. The bleſſing of the creature depends wholly on the favour and reſpect which God ſhews. ib. &c.

Fear of God taken two wayes, both deſcribed, 7. Morall honeſty without the fear of God, commends us not to God, 10. Fear contains every grace, ib. Fear keeps the life clean, ib. What it is to fear God for nought, 51, &c. Whether it be lawful in times of comfort to fear troubles, 252. Divers ſorts of fear, ib. &c. To fear a fear, what it imports, ib. Holy wiſdom bids us fear, ſo as to prepare for evil in our beſt dayes, 253. The more we thus fear, the leſs we ſhall feel troubles, 254. Fear natural what, 313, 314. It is natural for man to fear at the appearances of God, and why, ib. Four effects or ſymptoms of natural fear, 314, 315. It is a ſtrong paſſion, 317. From what kind of fear God exempts his people in times of danger, 465. Holy fear what it is, 273. They who have moſt holy fear in times of peace, ſhall have moſt confidence in times of trouble, 277. It keeps the heart and life holy, 279 Fear of God ever joyned with love to our brethren, 541, 542. Fear taken two wayes, 898. Extream fear hinders ſpeech, ib. Fear, good and bad, 1084. To get free from ſin is the way to get free from fear, ib. To be free from the fear of evil, is better then to be free from evil, ib. Divine fear cauſed three wayes, 1236. God is to be dreaded, ib. Fear of two ſorts, 1390. To caſt off the fear of God is higheſt wickedneſs, ib. Holy fear like a Porter at the door, 1392, &c. Natural fear what it is, 1434. Pannick fear, ib. A wicked man moſt ſubject to vexing fear, 1434, &c. Three ſorts of fear, 1447 Fear of evil worſe then evil, ib. Diſtracting fear is the portion of the wicked, ib. We may uſe arguments from fear to diſſwade from ſin, 1913. Holy fear hath a threefold effect, 1914. Fear taken two wayes, 2143 Fear makes men cruel, and do unjuſt things as well as hope, 2144, &c. Fear may be a juſt ground of doing Juſtice, 2145 Fear of two ſorts, 2175. Sudden fear ſurprizeth ſecure ſinners. ibid.

Fearful perſons cannot be helpful. 553

Feaſting is lawful, 20. Seven rules given about feaſting, 20, 21. Feaſtings anciently in the night. 194

Feet, ſlipping with the feet implies two things in Scripture. 1117

Fellow-feeling of others afflictions, a duty, 497. It adds to a mans affliction, when others have no feeling of it, 498. We cannot be truly ſenſible of the afflictions of others, till we throughly weigh them, ib. he that hath not been afflicted, ſeldom feels the afflictions of others. 498

Finger of God, what it ſignifies in Scripture. 1844, &c.

Fire of God, why ſo called, 81. How taken in Scripture, 1486. Three reaſons why the judgments of God are called fire, ib. Fire not blown, what it is; nine apprehenſions about it, 1994, &c. Fire put to ſignifie any Judgment, 2231. There is a different fire for the righteous and the wicked, ib. How God is a conſuming fire in reference to the godly. 2232

Firſt-born of death, what or who; ſeven opinions about it opened, 1737, &c. The priviledges of the firſt-born, 1738. How believers are called the Congregation of the firſt-born, ib. How Chriſt is called the firſt-born from the dead, and of every creature. 1739

Flame, taken two wayes. 1469

Flattery, how God may be ſaid to be flattered, 1220. Man is flattered by three, 1228 Flattery, hath a force in it, 1612. Flattery is a kind of language by it ſelf, ib. An ordinary way of flattering ſick friends. 1613. Two wayes of flattering men, ib. How God may be ſaid to be flattered, ibid. Flattery a very great ſin, 1614. Eſpecially flattery in ſpiritual things. 1615

Flatterers prove moſt hateful at laſt to thoſe whom they have flattered. ibid.

Flight, an argument of guilt. 1732

Flood, the Judgments of God compared to it, and why. 2204

Flower, three excellencies of a flower. 1317

Fool and wicked the ſame, 152. Low thoughts of God, and the works of his providence, argue the greateſt folly, 153. Sin the greateſt folly, ib. Who, and what a fool is, 362 Every wicked man is a fool, 364, 366. A fool ever worſt when he is at eaſe, 367. Fools moſt burdenſom when they ſpeak or are angry. 2015

Forgetfulneſs of God conſiſts in four things, 714, 715. Hypocrites are forgetters of God, ib. To forget God, is a very great ſin, ib. Forgetfulneſs of God is a mother ſin, 716 Forgetfulneſs of three ſorts, 864. Some things can hardly be forgotten, others as hardly remembred, 864, &c. Forgetfulneſs of paſt evils implieth two things, 1085. A twofold twofold forgetfulneſs deſcribed, ib. In what ſence we muſt not only forgive but forget injuries, 1086. How God is ſaid to forget the ſins which he pardoneth, ib. Forgetfulneſs is the cure of all our ſorrows. ib.

Forgiveneſs, God ready to forgive. 1735

Foundation is the ſtrength of the building, 344 Foundation, figuratively taken, what, 2204. 2205. Everlaſting foundation, what, 2206 The ſtrongeſt foundations which the wicked lay, are quickly overthrown by God, ib. A righteous man hath two foundations which ſhall never fail. ib. &c.

Friend, unkindneſs from a friend troubles moſt, 144. A friend who, 160. It is an act of true friendſhip, to mourn with and comfort our afflicted friends, 162. An unfaithful friend fails us moſt, when we have moſt need of him, 553, 554. A faithful friend, who, 554 The beſt of them may prove unfriendly, 1580. Friend taken two wayes, 1586. The alienation of friends from us, is a great encreaſe of our trouble in times of trouble, 1823. The moſt profeſſed friends may prove unſteady, 1824. A godly man may fail as a friend, ib. Inward friends who, 1838 Some friends ſhould have more love then others, 1639. The diſſention of friends many times hotter then that of brethren, the ground of it, ib. Beſt friends may turn enemies, ib. Friend how nearer then a brother, ib. Friendſhip; adverſity is the touchſtone of it, 1822. True and ſtrong love or friendſhip hath five things in it, ib. Friendſhip breaks uſually upon two rocks, 1824 Four concluſions about our friendſhip with men, 1825, &c. What friendſhip is. 1844

Froward men who they are. 426

Fulneſs, twofold, which wicked men uſually have before their ruine. 1983

Funerals, men wicked in their lives, have glorious funerals. 2120, &c.

G

Gain will make ſome do any thing. Folio 204

Gall of Aſps how poyſonous. 1957

Garments, renting of garments in what caſes uſed, 92. Garments teſtifie mans perfidiouſneſs againſt God. 544

Gehenna, why it ſignifies Hell. 1622

Geſtures, outward geſtures in prayer very ſpeaking, a caution about them. 1074

Ghoſt, giving up the ghoſt, what it imports. 212

Giants and infants are expreſſed by a word coming from the ſame root in the Hebrew, 226. To run on like a Giant, what, 1546. Two reaſons why Giants are called Nephilim in the Hebrew. ibid.

Gift, what it is, 105. Every outward as well as ſpiritual good thing, is Gods gift, ib. &c. God gives no more then we get honeſtly, 106. That God gives all, deſtroyes four Monſters at once, two in the rich, two in the poor, 107, &c. That the Lord gives, ſhould make us willing to give to the Lord, 108 Gifts not to be truſted to, 724. God gives to men two wayes, 851. Gifts of five ſorts, 1487. A gift and a bribe ſignified by one word in the Hebrew, and why. ibid.

Girdle and girding with it, what it ſignifies in Scripture, 1666. The ſame word ſignifies both a girdle and ſtrength, why. 1180

Glory of God promoted, promotes the good of man, 586. Glory of three ſorts, 1799 Earthly glory taken two wayes, ib. In glory we ſhall have perpetual aſſurance of the favour of God, 1891. Glorying, man apt to do it in worldly things. 1971

Glorifie, in what ſence man may be ſaid to glorifie God. 2133

Gnaſhing of the teeth aſcribed to men, notes four things. 1523

God can eaſily deſtroy his enemies, ſhewed in particulars, 294. He can do it ſuddenly, 295 Secretly, ib. Unavoidably, ib. Man is not able to bear the preſence of God, 315. Reaſons why men tremble and fear at any greater manifeſtations of Gods power or preſence, 314. Man naturally prefers himſelf before God, 324. It is high preſumption for the beſt of men to compare with God, ibid. God in himſelf is moſt juſt and pure, 325 Holieſt men compared with God are unholy, ib. God is ſo juſt and pure in himſelf, that he can do no wrong to any creature, 326. Objections againſt this, anſwered, 327, 328 It cannot be ill with him, with whom God is, 329. To conſider God in his greatneſs, is an excellent means to humble man, 396, &c. The conſideration of Gods greatneſs, ſhould provoke us to ſeek him, 397. God can do great things as eaſily as the ſmalleſt things, 400. God can do the ſame things as often as he pleaſeth, 407. God appears ſometimes as an enemy to his beſt friends, 501, 655. When God appears an enemy man cannot bear it, ib. Beſt to turn to God for comfort in diſtreſs, 603. The beſt way for man to get his heart humbled, is to look up to the holineſs of God, 754. God is inviſible and incomprehenſible, 800. As God is, ſo he works above man, 881. The conſideration that God is above man, ſhould humble man, 822. The unevenneſs of mans acting towards God, ariſes from thoughts of his evenneſs with God, ib. 883. Man was made in the image of God, but God is not in the image of man, 884. Man ſhould take heed of meaſuring God eſpecially in three things, 885. Man cannot contend with God, ſhewed in ſeven things, 886. Why it is ſo fearful to fall into the hands of God, 891, &c. Preſence of God both joyful and terrible, 896, &c. Man cannot bear the anger of God, 897 God knows the ſtate of every man, 935. God knoweth all things, in and of himſelf, 936 God, how he may, how he cannot be found, 1046. The attributes of God are eſſential to God, 1047. God is unſearchable, ib. 1048 How God is every where preſent, 1051 God is beyond all creatures, 1052. All changes are from God, 1055. God being our friend, we need not care who is our enemy, 1142. What God will do he can do, 1144 How God hath a hand in the errors and wandrings of men, 1195. Reaſoning with God how and when, 1204. Our undue actings or ſpeakings for God ariſe from our undue apprehenſions of God, 1236. The loſs of Gods favourable preſence is the greateſt loſs, 1290, &c. How God ſhews himſelf to us, 1281. God appears to his ſometimes in majeſty only, and not in mercy, 1282. The enjoyment of God is the happineſs of man ſhewed in four things, 1294. The cleaneſt creatures are unclean before God, 1418. The hand ſtretcht out againſt God three wayes, 1451. That it is a fooliſh as well as a ſinful thing to oppoſe God, ſhewed three wayes, 1456, &c. God is in Heaven in a ſpecial manner, 1576. God ſhould not only be our refuge, but our choice, 1582. God expreſſed by four names in Scripture, ſhewing a fourfold excellency in him, 2047. Wicked men cannot abide the preſence of God, 2046, 2048 How God is near the worſt of men, 2049 To be weary of God the higheſt argument of an evil heart, ib. Wicked men have low and ſlight thoughts of God, 2054. God the author of mans temporal good, and that God is jealous of this honour, 2059, &c. God cannot be taught, &c. vid. Teaching. Works of God, vid. Works. God abſolutely independent and perfect in himſelf, 2132 To think of God on high, the beſt way to quiet our ſouls in any trouble here below, 2182. How God is every where, 2185, &c. Carnal men frame conceptions of God like themſelves, 2193. A wrong notion of the true God is the ſetting up of a falſe God, 2194. The preſence of God ſlighted by carnal men, the only joy of Saints, 2210, &c. God hath not given the worſt of men any cauſe to be weary of him, 2214. God doth good to them that are evil, two reaſons of it; 2215. God is to be acknowledged as the fountain of all good to us, 2216. God ready to be at peace with ſinners, 2238. God infinitely better to the ſoul then all other things, 2239. God is the defence of his people, 2254 God is the riches, the gold and ſilver of his people. ibid.

Gods, falſe Gods, how they are famiſhed. 1519

Godly man, the moſt conſiderable object in the world, 45. Such are moſt aimed at, and aſſaulted by Satan, ib. A godly man will not let nature work alone, 99. He acquits God in all his dealings with him, 104. A godly man can never be in ſo ill a condition, but God hath uſe of his life, 133. The Godly can be in no condition wherein God doth not love them, 371. A godly man hath help within him, when all worldly help fails, 537. A godly man hath a light within him in the greateſt outward darkneſs, ib. Godly men ſhall never be caſt away, 738, 739 How God may be ſaid to caſt his people away, ib. God highly honours them, 740 A godly man exalts God, while God is caſting him down, 796. Godly men are a ſafety and a ſupport to the places where they live, 808. Yet ſometimes God will not be entreated by the godly, ib. A godly man may put the worſt caſes to himſelf, 594. Godly man not pleaſed with the way of the wicked, though he proſper in it, 2061. Godly and wicked in ſome things like and unlike in this life, ſhall be in all things unlike in the next life, 2098. Godly and the wicked have quite contrary both deſires and fears, 2219, 2211 A godly man is one of Gods acquaintants, 2237. He ſhall be guided the right way, and bleſſed in his way, 2273, &c. He ſhall have comfort in his way, 2274. A godly man is a common good, 2278. Godly men ſave others three wayes. ib. 2279

Godlineſs hath the promiſes of this life performed to it, 17. Time ſpent in duties of godlineſs, no hinderance to our calling, 18. Godlineſs is truly profitable, 2137. Godlineſs the neareſt way to worldly gain. 2255

Gold and Silver how proper and neceſſary for Princes, 223. Gold and Silver how a defence, and why put for all riches, 2251, &c. How Gold is to be laid up in the duſt, 2252 The natural place of Gold ſhould abate our deſires after it. ibid.

Good and evil, how alike from the hand of God, 155. Good done is a reproach to us, when we do the contrary evil, 272. Good and bad, alike dealt with by God in outward things. 845. Three ſorts of good things, 2042. The things of the world called our goods in a threefold conſideration ib:

Goodneſs of God. Sin hath by ſo much the greater evil in it, as it is committed againſt the greater goodneſs. 2215, &c.

Goſpel-times, why called the laſt or latter dayes. 1867

Government of God over the world moſt exact. 2084

Grace preſerves it ſelf pure among the impure, 6. Grace the beſt bleſſing, 9. &c. Where one grace is every grace is, ib. Holy practiſe makes grace viſible, 21. It increaſes by oppoſition, 119. Grace and the favour of God are ſweet to us when all other things are bitter and burdenſom, 239. Falſe grace fails when we have moſt need of it, 275. Our graces ſhould be made viſible in our actions, 278. How failings in grace conſiſt with ſincerity, 280. Grace muſt not be truſted to. We may make Idols of our own graces, 537. Grace acts alwayes like it ſelf, but a gracious man doth not, 875 Grace exerciſed fits us for the receiving of more grace, 1070. Grace eſtabliſheth the heart, 1082. Grace is of an increaſing nature, 1636. It increaſeth in times of trouble, 1637. Grace, ſhadowed in Scripture by the moſt excellent things, 1702. Grace put for glory, 1889. Grace in the heart is the root of the matter. 1909, 1910

Graſs of the field, how man is compared to it. 482

Graves and Sepulchres called deſolate places, 222. Care and coſt anciently beſtowed in building of them, ib. Why called deſolate places, ib. Grave called a houſe, 224. Much treaſure formerly put in graves, ib. Some take more care for their graves and ſepulchres, then they do for their ſouls, 226 Grave a ſure hiding place, 1347. Grave, in what ſence no returning from it, 1591. We had need ſee all our work done, and well done, before we go thither, 1592. Diſcourſes of the grave very ſutable for ſick men, 1597. Some as ready for the grave as the grave is for them, ib. Why the grave is called a houſe, 1653. The grave called darkneſs in a double reſpect, ib. It is a mercy when the body is not diſturbed in the grave. 2122, &c.

Greatneſs of Gods works, 399. The leaſt works of God, have a greatneſs in them, becauſe they are his, ib. A twofold greatneſs in the works of God. 400

Greenneſs, what it ſignifies in Scripture. 1483

Groping at noon day, what it imports. 428

Guilt, till guilt be removed, fear will not, 871 Guilt of ſin wearieth the ſoul. 902

H

HAllalujah, what it ſignifies, where firſt uſed in the Scripture of the Old and New Teſtament. Folio 336

Hand, work of the hands may be applied to any buſineſs, though a work of the head, 58 To put forth the hand, what it means, 61 Hand of God what it ſignifies, 62, 945, 1279. Either mediate or immediate, ib. To put into the hand, what it notes, 68. Hand of God, how ſaid to be looſned, 519. If God ſtretch out his hand of power, all creatures are helpt or deſtroyed by it, 520. Putting forth the hand notes three things in Scripture, 741. Hand put for outward converſation or action, 877. Waſhing hands an emblem of freedom from guilt, ibid. Laying out of the hand, what it ſignifies, 888 Hands how aſcribed to God, his hand implies two things, 918, &c. Sin of the hand, what properly, 1075. The hand muſt be cleanſed as well as the heart, ib. Hand of God working, what it imports in Scripture, 1132. To put our life in our hand, what it imports, 1247. Hand, how taken in Scripture, 1450. Stretching out the hand imports four things, ib. 1451. The hand of a good man, how it is ſaid to be green, 1483 Clean hands, what it imports, 1636. They who have clean hearts, will have clean hands too, ibid. Striking of hands, what it ſignifies, 1604. Hand of God taken two wayes in Scripture, 1844. It is dreadful to fall into the hand of God. 1848. Hands hanging down, what meant by them, 267. Weakneſs of the hands ariſes four wayes, ib. Stretching forth of the hands imports three things in Scripture, 1072. It hath four ſignifications in prayer, 1073 Clapping the hands for three cauſes, 1979 Pureneſs of hands, what, 2277

Happineſs, what it is, 438. Many opinions about happineſs, and whence they aroſe, ib. Why the Hebrew word for happineſs is in the plural number, ib. Happineſs ariſeth from our viſion of God in glory four wayes. 1890

Hardneſs of heart oppoſed both to repentance and pity. 1846, &c.

Hardning the heart, what, 760. A hardning the heart to do either good or evil, 761 The heart hardned appears in ſix things, ib. A threefold hardneſs of heart, 762. Man hardens himſelf againſt God upon four grounds, ib. Nine degrees or ſteps of hardneſs of heart, 763. None ever proſpered by hardning themſelves againſt God, 764 A hard heart is Satans cuſhion. ib.

Harpocrates, the Egyptian Idol, an emblem of ſilence. 2026

Haſt twofold, 1924. 'Tis good to make haſt in doing good, ib. &c. We ſhould make haſt to recover any from ſin or error. 1925

Hatred taken two wayes, 747. Wicked men haters of the righteous. 750

Head, lifting up of the head, what it imports in Scripture. 975, &c.

Health, a great bleſſing, 140. Yet quickly blaſted. ibid.

Hearing is more then a work of ſenſe, 488 Man counts it a diſhonour not to be heard, 1216, 1271. Extraordinary matters muſt not be heard with ordinary attention, 1271 It is uſeful to ſtir up hearers to attention. ib. To hear well, requires a compoſed ſpirit, 1669. Hearing put for anſwering, 1790 To hear well, no eaſie matter. 2011. Hearing conſidered as a threefold work, ib. Spiritual hearing hath a fourfold work in it. ib.

Hearkning is more then hearing. 823

Heart muſt be eſpecially looked to, 34. Man can but gueſs at the heart of another, ib. The heart continually evil, 35. Satan can but gueſs at the heart, 67. A judiciary hard heart, is the greateſt judgment on this ſide hell, 330 Setting the heart upon any thing magnifies it, 631. Setting the heart, notes four things, 633, &c. Our duty to ſet our hearts upon God 634. Heart of man, full of changes, 638 The beſt repoſitory for truth, 710. What it ſignifies in Scripture, 1067. How it is to be prepared for God, 1068. God muſt have the heart, 1069. The heart is the worſt part of man till it be mended, and then it is the beſt, ib. While our hearts are not right no marvel if things go wrong with us, 1070. Heart put for underſtanding and courage, 1107 To take away the heart ſignifies three things, 1191. When we will not give God our hearts he takes them away, 1192. When the heart is diſordered the whole man is out of order, 1195. They who undertake to judge the heart take upon them the place of God, 1218. An evil heart is a bad tutor, 1406. The heart is too hard for the whole man, 1407. How the heart carries the man away, ib. The heart ſtrengthens and hardens it ſelf againſt God, and how, 1455 The heart very deceitful in a threefold reference, 1475. Heart, as a Shop where ſin is framed, 1491. The opening and ſhutting of the heart is the work of God, 1609. The vanity of ſuch as ſay they have good hearts, when their wayes are evil, 1636. Heart lift up to Heaven, the work of Grace, 2182 Laying up the word in the heart, hath a twofold oppoſition, 2243. The heart of man is the Ark where the Word of God muſt be laid up, 2244. Truth in the heart better to us then truth in the book, 2245 Heart of man makes more falſe Gods then his hand ever made. 2194

Heathens confined their gods to certain places. 2187

Heaven, the various acceptations of it in Scripture, 782, 783. Heaven is a building of three ſtories, ib. Heaven taken three wayes, 1343. In what ſence the heavens ſhall be no more after the reſurrection, divers opinions about it, 1344. Heavens, how they are unclean, 1417. Heaven is not every where, 1577. Three Heavens ſpoken of in Scripture, 1578. Heaven is higheſt in Scripture, four deductions from the highneſs of Heaven, ib. To mount up to heaven notes four things, 1932. Heaven, how it reveals the ſin of man, 1997, &c. Heaven is the place of Gods ſpecial reſidence, 2182. Two inferences given from it. ib. &c.

Hedge, what it imports, when God makes a hedge about a man, 54. Job had a threefold hedge, 55. There is a hedge of affliction, and a hedge of protection. 248

Heel, what it ſignifies in Scripture. 1722

Help given by God, twofold. 742

Hereſie, three things concur to make an hereſie. 563

Hiding, of two ſorts, 1426. Hiding the word of two ſorts, 2244. Three ends of hiding the word in the heart. ib. &c.

High, God can ſet us high and ſafe. 415

Higheſt of men ſhall be judged by God. 2068

Hills from the beginning, 1396. It is uſual in Scripture to ſet that forth by the Hills, which is of greateſt antiquity. ib.

Hirelings, who, 585. His eye upon his wages more then upon his work. 589

Holineſs, holieſt perſons do not alwayes keep the ſame degree of holineſs, 183. Holineſs better then peace in our dwellings, 479, 481 What the holineſs of the creature is, 527 We muſt go to God for holineſs, 528. To deſpiſe holineſs, is to deſpiſe God, 529. Holineſs makes us truly honourable, 1098. Holineſs is diſgraced and mockt by unholy men, 1114. And they who are moſt holy are moſt diſgraced, 1115. No created holineſs ſtable and perfect in it ſelf, 1416. In what holineſs conſiſts, 1558. Holineſs, the Lord takes pleaſure in it, three reaſons why, 2140, &c. Why we ſhould be every where holy, 2186. Holineſs hath boldneſs with God. 2262

Holy One, God is called the holy One in five reſpects, 526. The excellency of the holineſs of God, above that in men or Angels, ſhewed divers wayes, ib. 527. None are fit for communion with God, but holy perſons. 529

Holy perſons fit for holy duties, 690. It is not contrary to free grace, to ſay we muſt be holy, if we would be heard. 691

Honeſty,

Honeſty, what we get honeſtly, we can looſe patiently. 106

Honour, God will honour them who honour him, 117. What it is to honour God or man, 174. Honour no ſhelter againſt the wrath of God, 1170, &c. They who abuſe their honour ſhall receive contempt, 1180 A threefold honour ariſing to God by the fall of the wicked. 2225

Hope, the want of that afflicts us moſt, which we hope for moſt, 206. A hopeleſs condition is the worſt condition, 207. Hope, what it is to hope, 275. Hope taken two wayes, 434 The people of God have hope in the worſt times, ib. It is no vain thing to hope in God, 435. Experience breeds hope, ib. Hope, is better to the people of God, then all their poſſeſſions, ibid. Hope that troubles will end, ſupports the heart in bearing preſent troubles, 522. Hope of more is better then enjoyment of much, 1093. Hope in God is the ſettlement of the ſoul, ib. The condition of a godly man is alwayes hopeful, ib. Hopes of wicked men are dying and decaying, 1101, 1102. Whoſe hope and what hope may be deſtroyed, 1372. Hope puts men on to action, though they have been often diſappointed, 1493. A good man may give up all his worldly hopes, 1658. Hope conſidered two wayes, 1662. A twofold object of hope, ib. Hope of the righteous ſtrong, 1741. Hope about worldly things may ſoon be gone, 1805. The worldlings hope cut ſhort, 1965 The wicked when fulleſt of hope, then neareſt deſtruction, 1983. Hopes deceived, trouble us more then wants, 550. Deceived hopes fill with ſhame, 551. Hope the laſt refuge, 600. A godly mans hope may lie proſtrate. ibid.

Hopeleſs, to be ſo is the worſt condition, 718 Where hope faileth, endeavour faileth alſo. 875

Horn, it imports two things in Scripture, 1550 Why ſtrength is ſignified by the Horn. ibid.

Hornets, what meant by them in Scripture. 1729

Horſleach, the embleme of covetous deſire. 1975

Humble, the apprehenſion of Gods great goodneſs, humbles man, 630. Humble perſons of two ſorts, 2276. Humble perſons under the ſpecial care of God. ibid.

Humiliation muſt encreaſe as afflictions either perſonal or publick do encreaſe, 141, &c. Outward humiliation is a duty, when the hand of God is upon us. 1552

Humility, a godly mans thoughts are loweſt of himſelf, 812. The more holineſs any man hath, the more humility he hath. 976

Husbands bitterneſs to their Wives, how unbecoming. 1600

Hypocrites profeſſion, grounded upon hope to gain by it, 276. They cannot hold out in profeſſion, becauſe they want an inward principle, 630. Hypocrites compared to a ruſh in ſix particulars, 713, 714. What an hypocrite is, 717. Two ſorts of hypocrites, ib. They are filthy, they may be full of hopes, their hopes will deceive them, 718. He ſhall loath himſelf, 719. His whole courſe is nothing but fooliſhneſs, ib. He ſhall be hopeleſs, 720. His hope like a ſpiders web, ſhewed in five things, 721, 722. He hath two houſes, 723. His hopes may be very ſtrong, 725. He hath three witneſſes, ibid. All he truſts to ſhall fail, ib. He may abound in outward bleſſings, 729. They do all to be ſeen, ib. They may endure perſecution a while, ib. They care not whom they wrong, ſo they may thrive, 631. They are often deſtroyed in the height of their proſperity, 632 They ſhall be forgotten or remembred with diſgrace, 734. He may have much joy, 735 His joy is moſt from outward things, ib. His joy is ſhort, 736. He hath no right to come before God, nor acceptance with him, 1288 Four expreſſions in Scripture, gradually ſhewing the rejection of hypocrites in the life to come, 1289. Hypocrites are the worſt ſort of wicked men, ib. Hypocrite is under a curſe, 1485. The faſhion of an Hypocrite, 1599. Hypocrite, his joy in what, 1930. He may have joy about ſpiritual things. 1931

Hypocriſie paints the face as well as pride, 413 Hypocriſie and pride deſire nothing ſo much as to be ſeen. 1936

I

IDol, the ſame word in the Hebrew ſignifies ſorrow and an Idol, two reaſons of it, 869 Idols, why called Emims. 896

Idols, how called new, or near Gods. 1651

Idolaters bring God in their hands. 1126

Jews, how God brought the curſe which they wiſhed upon their own heads. 1570

Ignorance, how God is ſaid to wink at times of ignorance, 188. Ignorance, or not knowing of God, fourfold, 1763. Wickedneſs and ignorance go together 1764. Ignorance and error near a kin, ignorance the mother of two very uncomely daughters, 1779. Affected ignorance what, 2050. Ignorance of three ſorts. 2052

Imitation, God is not to be imitated in all things, 1851. Childrens imitation of their parents ſin, what it doth. 2071

Immortality threefold. 956

Impatience is a charging of God with folly. 114

Impenitency under ſin committed, worſe then the ſin committed. 2151

Imprecations, of two ſorts, 1567, &c. We may in ſome caſes uſe imprecations, 1568 Two grounds of them, ib. Four rules limiting the uſe of imprecations, 1569. Divers dreadful examples of ſuch as have uſed imprecations raſhly and falſly. 1570

Impriſonment, when a cruelty. 2156

Ingemination of words in Scripture very emphatical. 1843

Innocent oft charged with fouleſt crimes, 2171 Innocent taken two wayes in Scripture. 2226

Innocency, or an innocent perſon, whence called, 283. A man is bound to defend his own innocency, 494. Innocency fears no diſcovery. 1571

Infants weep as ſoon as born, 211. They have the ſeed of death in them as ſoon as born. 214

Infidelity, a wicked man full of infidelity, that his ſtate is bad. 1480

Infirmities of two ſorts. 1556

Iniquity ſhall be revealed. 1998

Injuſtice, two ſorts of it, 1555. That which a man gets by injuſtice is none of his, 1750. It ſhall not be long poſſeſſed. ib. &c.

Innumerable, a threefold ſence of it. 407

Inſtruction, to inſtruct others, is a mans duty and his praiſe, 269. Such as know God aright, are ready to inſtruct others in his knowledge, ib. An honour to great men to inſtruct others, ib. It is eaſier in ſome caſes to inſtruct then to learn, 276. It is a ſhame when our actions croſs our teaching. ibid.

Inſtruments and ſecond cauſes, what God doth by them is to be reckoned as his own act. 803

Integrity, to hold integrity in evil times, is not only good but admirable, 120. The world would perſwade, that the holding of integrity and profeſſion of holineſs are vain. 145. Integrity makes a man ſtrong in bearing troubles. 1556

Intentions, it argues a malitious ſpirit, when a mans actions are fair, then to accuſe his intentions. 53

Interceſſion of Chriſt aſſures us of a twofold ſalvation. 1866

Interpretation, what is meant by private interpretation. 1183

Invocation of Saints confuted. 357, &c.

Job, when he lived. 2

Joy, godly joy and ſorrow mutually cauſe one another, 162. What at one time is our fear, at another time may be our joy, 245. Joy is the portion of the Saints, and they ſhall receive it in good time, 746. They rejoyce in the works of Gods mercies to themſelves, judgments on enemies, ib. 747. Joy better then outward good things, 1729. Joy often ſeperated from the enjoyment of the creature, 1971. Senſitive joyes, who taken up with them, 2039. Saints joy in God, 2040 A threefold joy ſpoken of in Scripture, ib. Senſual joyes, their ſinfulneſs, 2041. When joyes are ſinful in their circumſtances, ib. Joy at the troubles which befall wicked men, how lawful, 2224. What kind of joy that is not, and what it is. 2226

Ira, whence derived. 1704

Jubilee, whence ſo called. 2120

Judge, it is a great honour to judge another mans cauſe. 1611

Judging, man apt to judge favourably of himſelf, hardly of others, 2153. We muſt take heed of judging upon ſuſpition, ibid. &c. What Judging of others forbidden. 2154

Judgment conſidered under a threefold oppoſition, 1655, &c. Day of General Judgment known and believed in all ages, 1872. Three demonſtrations of a judgment to come, ib. 1873. Two profitable effects of conſidering the laſt judgment, 1874. Chriſt ſhall be Judge, 1875. The equity of it that he ſhould, 1876. This terrible to the wicked, 1877 Five things make the wrath of this Judge dreadful, ib. That Chriſt is Judge comfortable to the Saints, 1878. And why, ib. Man is not eaſily perſwaded of a day of judgment, 1919. Preſent judgments of God argue a future judgment, 1920. The judgment of God exact, ib. Judgments of God on the wicked amazing, 1761. Judgments of God to be feared, 1915. Judgments come ſometime by an inviſible hand, 1995. Judgment twofold. 1918. They who judge others harſhly, have cauſe to fear judgment, 1920. The remembrance of the judgment to come ſhould keep us in a holy fear, 1921. To judge notes three things, 2087. Wicked ripe for judgement ſometimes before ripe in years, 2201 Judgements of God have ſomewhat of mercy in them, 2214. Judgments of God upon the wicked, how matter of Joy to the righteous. 2222

Julian the Apoſtate a mocker of the Chriſtians, 1024. His blaſphemy, 1450. The opinion of Athanaſius concerning him. 1468

Juſtice in our dealings, honours our profeſſion of godlineſs, 10. Juſtice and judgment, how they differ, 678. Judgment oppoſed to three things, ib. Judgment ſubverted two wayes, 679. To pervert judgment, what, ib. Judgments of God find moſt men ſecure, 771 Judgment taken three wayes, 834. Judgment of God unlike mans in four things, 926. God is moſt exact in juſtice, 680. Three things cauſe men to pervert juſtice, ib. Juſtice of God how acquitted, when he afflicts us without cauſe, 829, &c. Juſtice or righteouſneſs twofold, 754. Juſtice, the want of it a great evil, it layeth the people open to the judgments of God, 560. Some men out-grow the reach of mans juſtice, 2118. Juſtice, how blind, and how ſeeing, 2141. Juſtice muſt be done for the example of others, 2221. Juſtice of God honoured by the fall of evil men. 2224, &c.

Juſtification cannot be by works, 758, 838 Self-juſtification will prove ſelf-condemnation, 836. Three reaſons of it, ib. Juſtification ſure, though the perſon juſtified have doubts concerning it, 872. We are never ſo black in Gods eye, as when we are whiteſt in our own, 878. There is a ſelf-juſtification warrantable, 1261. What it is to be juſtified, 1273. Aſſurance of juſtification is attainable in this life, ibid. Self-juſtification extreamly diſpleaſing unto God, 2141. God hath no reſpect to our righteouſneſs in the buſineſs of juſtification. 2144

K

Key, the giving of a key, what it ſignifieth, 1145. Four keyes ſpecially in the hand of God. 209

King of terrors, who or what, 1743. Kings ſet up or caſt down as God pleaſeth, 1165 Examples of great Kings brought low, 1167, 1168. The will of Kings ſtrong and reſolved, yet turned by God. 1191, &c.

Kingdoms are not ruined by chance but by the decree of God. 1161

Know, to know how taken in Scripture, 1056, 1445. How God is ſaid to know wicked men, 1765. They who know not God, and whom God doth not know, are the ſame, ib. Knowing put for the higheſt act of believing. 1860. God is not honoured by wicked men, becauſe they do not know him, 2054, &c. To know put for experience, 1918. We may be ſaid not to know, what we do not act up to. 1919

Knowing, three ſorts of knowing men. 489

Knowledge, wicked men hate it, and why, 199 Knowledge of miſery which we cannot be delivered from, makes us more miſerable, 237 Knowledge, or to know, taken five wayes in Scripture, 478. A man may know much, and yet get no good by it, 490. Life of man ſo ſhort that it cannot get much knowledge, 707 We ſhould have humble thoughts of our own knowledge, ib. A godly man is a knowing man, 753. The more we know God, the more humble we are, 812. Knowledge of our ſelves twofold, 840. Knowledge of God concerning man, and all other things deſcribed, 935, 936. It is matter of great conſolation to the Saints, that God knows them, 937. His knowledge of us gives an aſſurance of four things, ib. Knowledge of three ſorts, 1201. God cannot be known perfectly by man, no not in glory, 1048, &c. God knoweth man fully, 1057. The knowledge of God over all things, 1183. The knowledge of God reacheth the moſt ſecret things, 1223. Knowledge of things twofold, 1240. A threefold knowledge opened, 1272 Knowledge coming in by ſight hath a threefold advantage of any other knowledge, 1058. Many over-rate their own knowledge as if they knew all, 1105. There is a vanity in ſome kind of knowledge, 1387. Sins againſt the light of knowledge moſt dangerous, 1453 Knowledge of the wayes of God very troubleſom to wicked men, 2051. Three conſiderations whence it is that ſuch knowledge is ſo troubleſom, ib. Knowledge hath three things attending upon it, 2052. Not to deſire knowledge is more ſinful then ignorance, ib. All mans knowledge derived from God, 2083. Mans knowledge nothing compared to the knowledge of God, ib. &c. Knowledge of God, how and what God knoweth. 2190

L

Labour, it is a ſore affliction when we cannot enjoy our labours, 377. Except we labour, we have no right to eat, 585. We muſt not be diſpleaſed at our labour. 586

Lamp deſpiſed, what. 1118

Laughter, what it is, 466. To laugh, how taken in Scripture, with the kinds of it, ibid. 467. A godly man laughs at, or triumph over all outward evils, 468. Yea, though brought at once to charge againſt him, 470. Filling the mouth with it, what, 745 Laughter, of two ſorts, ib. How the Lord laughs at the afflictions of his people, opened. 848, 849, &c.

Law, why God calls his laws, judgments, 678 Good laws without good men, never made a happy people, 698. Law given to Noah, the ſeven precepts of it, 1040. More righteouſneſs in the law then man is able to comprehend, ib. How he that breaks one Commandment of the Law, may be ſaid to break all, 1558. Law of God, the Elegancy of the Hebrew word, whereby it is expreſſed, opened, 2240, &c. Law taken two wayes, 2241. To receive the law, what it is, 2243 God only can give a law to the conſcience, ib. Law how written in our hearts by God, and how by our ſelves, 2244. Law-ſuits to be avoided. 890

Leanneſs of two ſorts. 1520

Lebbeus, what it ſignifies. 1107

Levelling principles confuted by the natural ſtate of the creature. 2188

Leviathan, why ſo called, 197. What it is to raiſe up Leviathan, ib. 198. Two other ſignifications of the word, 202. The name of a ſong. 203

Liberty threefold where the Spirit is. 2262

Lie, to lie taken two wayes, 573. A lie cannot belong hid, 574. Every ſin is a lie, 1431 Lies, the falſe heart of a man a fit ſhop to frame ſuch falſe ware, 1021. Lies of three ſorts. 1022

Life, our life here is but a coming and a going, 104. Life is the moſt precious treaſure in nature, 126. Not to be parted with for a trifle, ib. The ſoul far more precious then life, 127. So alſo is the Goſpel, ib. &c. The love of Chriſt in parting with life for us, 128 What life is, in the natural conſideration of it, 131. Life and death are in the hand of God, 134. Mercy to have life, though we looſe all elſe, 135. No ſtrength in man can give him aſſurance of long life, 532, 533 The life of man a warfare, 582, &c. The life of man is meaſured out by the will of God, 584. The decree of God concerning our lives, no ground for any to abate their care of preſerving their lives, ib. Life ſhort, 587. It is good for man that it is ſo, ib. Life what it is, 902. Life taken two wayes, ib. Life, may grow to be a burden, 905 Grounds of this burdenſomneſs of life both in wicked and godly men ſhewed, 906, 907, &c. Life is the gift of God, 962. A favour, 963. Life of man ſhort in divers reſpects, 1312. Times of mans life fixed and determined by God, 1331. This life muſt be reckoned for, 1338. It is a mercy to be taken out of this life, before great troubles come upon the place where we live, 1377 The number of the years of our life is a ſecret to all, 1433. That is a ſecret is an affliction to a wicked man, ib. It is beſt for us that this is a ſecret, and why, ib. Life of man like a piece of cloath in the loom, 1605 Life of man goes out like a candle, opened three wayes, 2063. Life of man in what ſence it may be ſaid to be ſhortned by God, 2079. Long life a promiſe of it to the godly. 2092

Light, a great bleſſing, the ſorts of it, 188, 189. Light-haters, who, 199, 200. A double light neceſſary to ſeeing, 428. It is a ſore judgment not to ſee when light ſhines, 429 They who abuſe light ſhall be deprived of it, 1197. A twofold light denyed to ſome, 1608 Three reaſons why God denyes light, ibid. Light of three ſorts, 1708. Outward proſperity compared to light for three reaſons, 1709. A threefold light oppoſed to a threefold darkneſs, 1758, 1798. It is a hard thing to ſin againſt light, 2052. God is with all men by a twofold light, 2208. Light threefold ſhining upon the wayes of a godly man. 2273

Lightning, to come as lightning, what it ſignifieth. 1992

Lion, God comes forth as a Lion againſt his own ſervants, 981. Lions, their ſeveral names, 296. How they ſhadow ſeveral ſorts of men, ib. How tyrants reſemble Lions. 297

Lips, a man of lips, who, 1019. A wiſe man hath a lock and key at his lips, 1034. Opening the lips what it implieth. 1035

Likeneſs of quality and of equality, 48. All the Saints on earth like one another, and like Chriſt in quality, but unlike in equality, ib.

Limiting God what, the ſinfulneſs of it. 1656

Live, to live, what it imports in Scripture. 2032

Loathing, twofold. 719

Longing for a thing, notes the ſtrongeſt deſire. 240

Loſs, the puniſhment of loſs opened, 1290, &c. How we may be ſaid to loſe that which we never had, 1292. Great loſſes have great repairs. 699

Love of God everlaſting, 744. Love, the ſpring of all action, whether good or evil, 1492. What we over-love, we are in danger to loſe, 1540, Love much decayed among Goſpel-profeſſors in theſe times, 1777. True love deſcribed in five things, 1822. Love or loving taken two wayes, 1838. Two ſorts of love, ib. True love to man will not eaſily conceive or nouriſh ſuſpition. 2180

Low, they that are loweſt, are neareſt exaltation, 414. It is a wonderful work of God, to ſet on high thoſe that be low. 415

Lowneſs, twofold. 413

Luſt, the ſhorteſt time is too long to ſerve any luſt in, 674. Several luſts act in ſeveral ages of man. 362

M

Magiſtrates are the heads of the people, which imports both their dignity and their duty, 1193. Magiſtrates great duty is to relieve the oppreſſed, 1791. Magiſtrates, that are bad moſt ready to favour ſuch as are ſo, 2166. Why evil Magiſtrates are compared to Oaks, ib. Evil Magiſtrates favour the great, 2167. They ſhould take ſpecial care of the widdow and fatherleſs. 2172, &c.

Magnifie, ſignifies three things, 627. God magnifies man four wayes, 627, 628. Eſpecially by ſetting his heart upon man. 631

Male children, why expreſſed in the Hebrew by a word which ſignifies memory. 950

Man, the word man in Scripture, ſignifies more then a reaſonable creature, or the noble ſex, 3, &c. Three Hebrew words for man, their difference, ib. Man taken, firſt, for any eminent man; ſecondly, for a Magiſtrate, 4 Man is the work of Gods hands, 919. Three cautions from it, 920. It moves the Lord to compaſſion, to tell him we are the work of his hands, ib. No man is Maſter of his own deſigns, 1719. A fourfold condition of man, held out in four names given him in Scripture, 2047. Man can no way be profitable unto God. Objections anſwered. 2132, &c. Mans natural conſtitution, makes him ſenſible of affliction, 534. Mans worth is out of himſelf, 628. God beſtows many thoughts upon man. 629

Mankind fallen may be conſidered two wayes. 1863

Manutenentia Dei. 1635

Marrow, what to the bones. 2091

Marvellous things what, 404. They are ſeparated from man three wayes, ib. Ordinary works of nature and providence are marvellous in two reſpects, 405. Marvels are a token of Gods preſence, 406. Marvels ſhould work faith in us, ib. Chriſt will wonder at our unbelief, if we believe not, when he doth wonders. ib.

Maſchil, the title of ſeveral Pſalms, what it importeth. 2136

Maſs, a Popiſh conceit about the name of it. 538

Mediator, the doctrine of a Mediator between God and Man, known and believed, before Chriſt came into the world, 1588. The twofold nature of the Mediator known in all Ages of the Church, 1589. Mediator and Redeemer how they differ. 1863

Meditation turns the promiſes of God into marrow, 1138. Meditation, what it is. 2241

Memory, and to remember, what, 280, 281 The works of God are to be remembred, 281 Memory or remembrance, how aſcribed to God, 951. It implieth two things. ib.

Mercy, a threefold mercy in God, 522. Mercy of God moſt moved towards us by telling him our miſery, 604. Mercy of God, how not to be pleaded, 1455. There is a fivefold mercy of God, 1541. Four degrees of ſparing mercy, 1541, &c. Sparing mercy brings no good to the wicked, 2113. Mercy of God, in what ſence ſin may be ſaid to overcome it, 2151. Some mercies received, exceed our own praiſes, as ſome troubles exceed our own mourning, 204. In ſad times ſmall comforts paſs for great mercies, 206 Every ſtep of our lives needs a ſtep of mercy, 214. Mercies come in by degrees; we may be over-mercy'd as well as over-afflicted. 700

Merit, the beſt of men cannot oblige God or merit any thing at his hand. 2131

Minchah, the offerings of the Jews, why ſo called. 1189

Mind of man hath a formative faculty in it. 2195

Miniſters of Chriſt, their joy is when the Word is heard and obeyed. 2014

Miracles, ſigns and marvels, how they differ. 405

Miſchief contrivers do themſelves moſt miſchief. 1963

Miſery, vid. Afflictions.

Mocking, the higheſt ſtep of ſinning, 1024 To be mockt eſpecially in affliction is a great affliction, 1110. Mocks make deep wounds, 1111. Some more ready to mock then to anſwer ſuch as oppoſe them or differ from them, 2017. Mocking how ſinful and dangerous. 2018

Moloch, the Idol, why ſo called, how formed, and worſhipped. 1621

Moment, what. 1930

Morning, to do a thing in the morning, is to do a thing diligently, 26. Morning beſt praying time, ib. To do a thing in the morning, and every morning, what they import. 636

Moſes and Aaron in what ſence they may be called evil Angels. 1813

Moth, how man is cruſhed as a moth, a threefold meaning of it. 348

Mountains, figurative mountains, of two ſorts, 767. To remove a mountain, uſed proverbially for doing the moſt difficult things. 769

Mourn, to mourn with thoſe that are in affliction, our duty, 162. The report of others ſufferings, ſhould cauſe us to mourn, 163. Great troubles warrant ſolemn mournings. 170

Mourners deſcribed, 413. Such neareſt joy and exaltation. 414

Mourning, a profeſſion. 201, &c.

Mouth, to open the mouth, what, 173. A fool doth not open his mouth and ſpeak, but his ſpeech opens his mouth, ib. Mouth of God, how we may be ſaid to receive the Law from it, 2242. To receive the Law from the mouth of God, ſtands in a double oppoſition. 2243

Multiloquie, very burdenſom. 2016

Murmuring or complaining, to murmur at the dealings of God, is to make our ſelves juſter then God, 331. Complain to God, but not of God. ib.

Muſing men no great talkers. 559

N

Naked, who in a Scripture ſence. Folio 2158

Nakedneſs twofold, 102, &c. Every man born a naked helpleſs creature. 104

Name, what it importeth when God knoweth a man by name, 47. Name of God taken four wayes, 110. What it is to bleſs the Name of God, 111. A good name a great bleſſing, 1081. Name, in Scripture put for honour and renown, 1756. A man of no name, and a man of no number, the ſame, ib. To looſe our name a great puniſhment, ib. With whom good men looſe their good name, ib. To want a name among men is moſt penal to the wicked. 1757

Nations ſubject to change as well as perſons, 1189. All the changes in Nations are from God. 1190

Nature, changes in the courſe of nature, are full of terror, 192. The beſt natural things which we have may turn to our hurt. 1717

Natural things are ſhadows to us of ſpiritual. 712

Neceſſity cannot excuſe ſinful actions. 2158

Neck, ſtiff neck what it imports in Scripture, 1458. Running upon the neck, the meaning of it. ibid.

Need makes a little mercy ſeem great. 2162

Negative words in Scripture, are not alwayes denials, 92, 93. Negative voice, God hath one upon all creatures, 779. Where the negative voice lies, there is the greateſt power, ib. Negative expreſſions in Scripture often ſignifie the contrary affirmative. 1976

Nero, his miſerable end, 1464. The clemency of Nero, how ſhewed, 1543. His ſpeech when he made his grave. 1548

Net, affliction compared to it. 1788

Noahs three Sons, how ſtiled. 1427

Noſtril of God, what meant by it. 294

Noon-day imports two things in Scripture. 1090

Numbers, three, ſix and ſeven, how uſed in Scripture, 453. Twice and thrice, three and four, ſix and ſeven, ſeven and eight, what they ſignifie in Scripture. 454, 455

O

Oaths of two ſorts, Folio 1568, 1574 Rules about oaths. 1574

Old-age, a full old-age, what, 483, 484. A periſhing old-age, aud a flouriſhng old-age, ib. A godly man never dies but in a full age, 485 A bleſſing to live to old-age, 486. Old-age, three degrees of old-age among the Jews, 1139. Old-age of ſome men very vigorous. 2032

Old men are preſumed to know much, 709 Old men why ſuppoſed full of wiſdom, 1139 It is their duty to be wiſe, ib. It is a ſad ſight to ſee an old man ignorant, 1140. Old men are to be honoured and their counſel reſpected. ib.

Omnipotency of God, what. 1454

Omnipreſence of God, 1051, 2183. Two deductions from the omnipreſence of God. 2186

Omniſcience of God, 2080. To deny that, is is to deny his being, 2190. Sinners fancy to themſelves that God ſeeth them not in all their wayes, 2194. That God is omniſcient, cleared, 2195. Queries about it anſwered. 2196, &c.

Oppreſſors of three ſorts, 231. The words of oppreſſors are wounding words, 232. They who will not hear the voice of the Preacher, may juſtly be given up to hear the voice of the oppreſſor, 233. Oppreſſors are ſpeedily cut off. 1432

Oppreſſion, to oppreſs the poor and fatherleſs, a grievous ſin, 570. Oppreſſion twofold, 917 Oppreſſion, wiſe men moſt affected with it, why, 1514. Oppreſſion called blood, 1566 Oppreſſion of the poor, the moſt ſinful act of oppreſſion. 2159

Oppreſſed, men uſually are very deaf at the cry of the oppreſſed, and why, 1790, &c. Not to hear the cry of the oppreſſed is a very crying ſin, 1792. Not to hear the oppreſſed is an oppreſſion, ib. Oppreſſors not only unjuſt but cruel, 1972. Oppreſſion calls for revenge, ib. 1973

Ordeal, uſed ſuperſtitiouſly by the old Saxons, four ſorts of it. 1569, &c.

Ordinances of God, how vainly truſted too. 1742

Ophir the place of Gold, queried where it is. 2253

Orion deſcribed. 788

P

Pain of the body, very powerful to diſquiet the mind. Folio 130

Papiſts, would teach God. 2082

Panther, his fierceneſs againſt mankind, 750

Parable, what it is, 173. Parables grounded on known cuſtoms. 213

Pardon of ſin, God only can do it, 663. Why pardoning or remitting ſin is committed to men, and in what ſence, ib. How pardon of ſin is expreſſed in Scripture, 664. When ſin is pardoned, the puniſhment of ſin is alſo pardoned, 665. Greateſt ſins pardonable, 666. They whoſe ſins are pardoned, may and ought to pray for pardon, ib. In two caſes prayer for pardon is ſpecially to be renewed, 668. Pardon of ſin is our acquittance from ſin, 973. Pardon of ſin, the infinite freeneſs of God in it, and the unlikeneſs of his thoughts to mans about it, 2193 Pardon twofold, 2278. Pardoned ſins may be preſented to the ſoul as unpardoned. 1306

Parents ſhould not take immoderate care to prefer their children, why, 1377. Parents ſick and dying, mindleſs either of the comforts or ſorrows of their children, ib. &c. Parents ſmitten in their childrens puniſhment, 1943. Sins of parents juſtly puniſhable in their poſterity. 2070

Paſſion, it is lawful to ſhew paſſion in the cauſe of God, when his glory is concerned, 152 We may expreſs our paſſion by reproofs, ib. Paſſion carries us out of our ſelves, 576 Paſſions aſcribed to God, have no power over him, 809. Paſſions, when violent, are the diſguiſe of a wiſe man, 1588. Paſſions break out into unprofitable words, ib. We ſhould not anſwer paſſionate ſpeeches with paſſion. 1926

Path, our ordinary courſe of life compared to a path. 714

Patience, a man may be patient, and yet complain under his afflictions, 181. Five things in afflictions to clear this, 182. A threefold patience, 1654. The perfect work of patience conſiſts in two things, 1655. Patience aſcends by three ſteps to her perfection, ib. Patience gives us poſſeſſion of our ſelves, ib. Patience of God extended long to ſome wicked men, 2111. Wicked men ſpared in wrath. 2113

Peace with beaſts, how, 476. When God is at peace with us, he can quickly make all creatures at peace with us, ib. Peace a great mercy, 477. Peace of wicked men, what it is, and whence it ariſeth, 1436. Peace of a wicked man in death, whence it proceeds. 2044. God ready to be at peace with us, when we apply to him. 2238

Peacock, how called in Hebrew, and why. 1929

Pelican, whence called in the Hebrew. 1959

People of God, dangerous to touch them. 1452

Perfection, or to be perfect, what, 6. The kinds of it, ib. In what ſence the Saints are perfect in this life, ib. Perfection of a thing, what, 1467. All the perfection of earthly things is vaniſhing, 1468. Perfection of our wayes, what. 2139

Periſh, what it is to periſh, 179. How a day may be ſaid to periſh, ib. Periſhing, or to periſh taken five wayes in Scripture. 282 How righteous perſons may or cannot periſh. 284, 285

Perſecution, what it is properly, 1849. Perſecution conſidered two wayes, ib. To perſecute and perſecution further conſidered, 1903 To perſecute very ſinful, 1906. Some think they do well, while they perſecute, 1907 Two ſorts of perſecutors, ibid. Perſecutors catch at words, 1908. He that holds root-truths ſhould not be perſecuted. 1910

Perſeverance, that which a man doth out of conſcience, he will do with perſeverance, 35 Perſeverance in evil, is worſe then the doing of evil, 674. Perſeverance both the duty and priviledge of Saints. 1633

Perſiſting in evil moſt dangerous. 576

Petitioning, It is a great honour to be petitioned and ſued unto. 1097

Phariſees, whence ſo called, two reaſons of it. 1071

Phylacteries among the Jews, what they were, and their uſe. 2245

Phyſitians of two ſorts, 1209. Who is a Phyſitian of no value, ib. Four things make a Phyſitian of no value. 1210

Pillars, two ſet up before the flood, 702. Pillars of the earth, what, 774. The real pillar of the earth is Gods power, 775. Metaphorical pillars of the earth, who. 776

ity, what it is, 439, &c. 1842. It is a duty to pity the diſtreſſed, 541. A twofold pity, 1842 Why pity is expreſſed by bowels, ib. Miſery calls for pity, 1846. We may pity evil men in ſufferings, 1847. Double afflictions call us to double pity. ib.

Plato, one of his chief leſſons to his Schollars. 2189

Pleaſure, two ſorts of it, which every man ſhould abhor, 1529. Pleaſure a choaker of the Word, 1952. Pleaſure threefold, 2094 Four concluſions about the ſtate of mans life in reference to pleaſure, 2095, &c. All the pleaſure which God taketh is in himſelf, or in the fulfilling of his own good pleaſure in Chriſt. 2142

Pledge, taking a pledge when ſinful, ſhewed in two things. 2155

Pleiades, what, and why ſo called. 788

Plowing of iniquity, &c. 287. Plowing referred to good actions. ib.

Policy and Power the two great pillars of Nations. 1715

Poor, ſome Gods poor, and ſome the Devils poor, 430. Poor are full of deſires, becauſe full of wants, 431. Wicked men plot againſt the people of God, how poor ſoever, and why, 432. God delights to help the poor, 433. Poor muſt take heed of greedy ſeeking the creatures, 556. Poor that are modeſt in asking, ſhould be ſooneſt ſupplied, ib. They are brought to the loweſt ſtate who muſt ſubmit and ſeek to the poor, 1944. Poor are Gods treaſury, 1969. Poor moſt ſubject to oppreſſion, 432, 1972, 2172. A poor man oppreſſed, or oppreſſing, how grievous, 2159 Want of compaſſion to the poor, the mark of a wicked man, 2162. The poor have a right in what rich men have, 2163. Not to do good to the poor is ſinful, as well as to do them injury, 2164. Honeſt poor leſs regarded by wicked men, then their beaſts. 2166

Portion of the wicked, what. 2003

Poſſeſſion of good things without the enjoyment of them, is a great evil and trouble. 239

Pouring out of any thing notes abundance. 1178

Poverty is Gods gift as well as riches, 155 Some poverty is a note of Gods diſpleaſure, 1443. Oppreſſors often brought to poverty, ib. What it is which makes poverty ſo great an evil to any man, ib. Imaginary poverty, or fear of want, makes us more miſerable then want. 1444

Power, neither Men nor Devils have any power to hurt till God give commiſſion, 69 Power of God as viſible in changing, as in ſetling the courſe of nature, 770. Power of God can do greater things then ever he hath done, 774. Power of God ſuch, that he needs not the help of any creature, 784 None can reſcue from the hand of his power, 803, 804. His power is abſolute, 806. They who have much power are tempted to oppreſs, 1432. A godly man hath a natural and civil power to do evil, but he hath not a moral power to do it, 1505, &c. The more power we have to prevent evil, the greater is our ſin if we do not. 2168

Practiſe of duty, the beſt anſwer to ſlander in any kind. 1548

Praiſe, they who do well, ſhall be ſure to have praiſe from God. 114

Prayer, how it may be ſaid to move God, 120 We muſt plead with God in prayer, 121 Satan would diſcourage us out of prayer and holy duties, 146. Some wicked men thruſt out of the prayers of Gods people, 370. A dreadful thing to be ſo, ib. Prayer is the putting of our caſe to God, 392. They who pray much, expect much, 518. God often keeps prayer by him unanſwered, ib. The return of prayer is the ſolace of the ſoul, ib Prayer, early in the morning, 687. Prayer is a ſeeking of God, ib. God muſt be ſought ſpeedily and diligently, ib. In prayer we muſt expect all from free grace, 688 Prayer of the upright prevails, 691. Holy prayer is certainly and preſently heard, 693 Prayer awakens God, ib. It ſhould be fervent, 694. Prayer cannot ſtay the anger of God ſometimes againſt a people, 804. How prayer is ſaid to prevail with God, 810 Prayer a reaſoning with God, 814. Nothing of man ſo prevailing with God as prayer, 821. Faith in prayer, 824. Prayers may be anſwered, while we are ſtill afflicted, 827 The whole man muſt be exerciſed in it, 1074 Prayer hindred three wayes by uneven walking, 1081. Prayer of the Saints very powerful 1099. Prayer ſhall be anſwered, 1113. It is dangerous to wrong them who can go to God in prayer, ib. Prayer to Saints departed vain as well as ſinful, 1377. The ſinfulneſs of forbearing, or abating prayer in times of trouble, 1392. Hypocrites never love prayer, and in two ſeaſons they lay it by, ib. To reſtrain prayer is worſe then not to pray, ib. Prayer taken two wayes, 1555. Only pure prayer is acceptable prayer, 1559. The requiſites to pure prayer, ſhewed, ib. 1560, &c. The general end of prayer what, 1563 Prayer, why expreſſed by a cry, 1567. Not to have prayer heard by God, is the greateſt miſery that can befal man, 1571. Prayer, God defers the anſwer of it ſometimes, and why, 1791, &c. Eight reaſons why God defers to hear, 1792, &c. Not to be heard when we pray is a great trial and temptation, 1794. A gradation of four ſteps in this trial, 1795. Strong afflictions uſually raiſe ſtrong affections in prayer, ib. Prayer ſometimes born down by the anger of God, 1813 Prayer is our meeting God, 2056. Wicked men count prayer unprofitable, 2057. Prayer may have a twofold ſtop, 2239. We muſt pray much for that whereof we have a ſure promiſe that God will do it, 2263. Prayer due to God only, ib. We are never in a fit frame to pray, till we turn from ſin, 2264 To hear prayer, what, ib. God is the hearer of prayer, ib. It is a mercy including all mercy to be heard in prayer, ib. Prayer profitable, 2265. Prayer is a lifting up both in the act and effect, 2275. Prayer of the righteous ſhall not prevail in ſome caſes. 2279

Preparation, holy duties call for holy preparations, 24. Preparation of the heart conſiſts in two things, 1068. God only can prepare the heart, yet man is to be exhorted to prepare his own heart, and why, 1070. Preparation of the heart will be ſeen at the fingers ends. 1076

Preſence of God twofold, 639. God can make his own preſence grievous to us. 640

Preſervation, the work of God, 651, 966 Man wants a preſerver, and why, ib. How God is a preſerver, 652. A neceſſity that God ſhould be mans preſerver, ib. He preſerves his own people in a ſpecial manner, and why, 653. His preſerving care is perpetual, 654. He preſerves both natural and ſpiritual life. 967

Preſumption, a threefold preſumption of wicked men. 2213

Preſumptuous ſin, ſpoken of in the Old Teſtament, why thought to be the ſame with the ſin againſt the Holy Ghoſt in the New Teſtament. 1453

Pride grows in the beſt ſoil, 328. God reſiſts the perſons of the proud, and he will reſiſt pride in his beſt friends, ib. Pride in apparel and beauty, 597. We are apt to be proud of ſtrength, 807. Pride comes from ignorance of our ſelves, 839. Men are uſually proud of three things, 1239. Pride ariſeth from ignorance of what we are, 1240 Pride ſtops the ear againſt counſel, 1241 Pride cauſeth oppoſition againſt God. 1458 Proud men lifted up, 1932. They love to be ſeen, 1937. Proud mans fall. 1938

Prince and Prieſt expreſſed by one word in the Hebrew, three reaſons of it, 1169 Princes moſt ſenſible of diſhonour and contempt, 1179. Princes ſhould be free and open hearted, 2104. The eſtates of Princes brought to nought as ſoon as the eſtates of meaneſt men. 2105

Principles, ſome eaſie, 1109. It is a ſhame not to know common principles, ib. Falſe principles cannot produce true comforts. 2128

Printing taken in a large ſence, 1856. When the art of Printing was firſt invented. ib.

Priſoners of two ſorts, 231. Theirs is a ſad condition, 232. To viſit Priſoners, a work very pleaſing to Chriſt, ib. Sighing is the language of Priſoners. ib.

Probability of finding, is ground enough for ſeeking. 548

Profit, wicked led by their profit in all they do, 2056. Wicked men throw up holy duties, when they get no outward profit by them, 2057. Man cannot profit God, 2133, &c. Eight Concluſions made from that principle, that man cannot profit God. 2134, &c.

Prognoſtication by the Stars ſinful and vain. 794

Promiſes are the portion of believers, 490 Three acts of the ſoul upon the Promiſes. 1652

Proſelyte, who he was. 1827

Proſperity of good men a torture to evil men, 1099. To have been in proſperity adds to the bitterneſs of any preſent adverſity, 1533 Proſperity diſcovers the wickedneſs that lyeth cloſe in the heart, 2005. A threefold evil flows to an evil man from his preſent proſperity, 2007. Several anſwers given why wicked men are in proſperity, 2030, &c. Proſperity of the wicked tryeth the graces of the godly. 2031

Proverbs, what they are. 1617

Providence, the common bleſſings of God, not diſpenced without a ſpecial providence, 410 Providence watches over all creatures, moſt over ſuch as are hurtful to man, 614. Providence of God orders the greateſt confuſions in the world, 856. Confuſions argue the power of God, 857. Providence of God orders all things, and is preſent with all ſecond cauſes, 1052. Providence and preſervation follow creation, 1133. God leads all people, eſpecially his own, by a hand of providence, 1189. Providence of God, how exerciſed towards his people, when he puts them into the hand of wicked men, ſhewed divers wayes, 1531. Some providences of God put the wiſeſt to a ſtand, 1628. Five miſcarriages of carnal men, at the unuſual dealings and providences of God, 1629. Wiſe men often out in expounding the providences of God. 1644

Provocation, what it is, 1600. There is a good provocation, 1601. Three ill effects of provocation, ib. Provoking God, more then ſinning. 1124

Prudence goes ſoftly. 427

Puniſhment of loſs, worſe then the puniſhment of ſenſe, 189. Puniſhment may come long after the ſin, 290. It ſhall be proportionable to the degrees of ſin, ib. It ſhall not exceed the deſert of ſin, ib. It is often like the ſin in kind, 291. The ſtrongeſt ſinner ſhall not eſcape puniſhment, 299. Puniſhment is gradual, ib. &c. Reaſons why the Lord ſuſpends puniſhment, 301. Wicked puniſh'd by thoſe whom they have oppreſſed, 379 God can puniſh the ſtrongeſt by the weakeſt inſtruments, 380. God will puniſh impenitent ſinners ſeverely, 1228. Puniſhment of loſs the greateſt puniſhment, 1290. Puniſhment proportioned to ſin two wayes, 1453, 1464. God hath judgments of ſeveral degrees to puniſh ſinners with, 1740. Puniſhment of offenders, three ſpecial reaſons of it, 2221. Puniſhments often ſuited to the ſin, 1938. Puniſhments deſerved, yet all the puniſhments of this life leſs then deſert, 2073. Puniſhment is payment. 2118

Purity of doctrine, what it imports. 1030

Purpoſes to ſin, how proper to wicked men, 938. Purpoſes, muſt be followed by action, if not, a double danger, 1647. Death breaks all our purpoſes. 1648

Pyramides in Egypt, not known who built them. 1757

Q

QUantity, natural and civil. Folio 234

Queſtions, what it imports when God asks a queſtion, 41. Queſtions in Scripture, ſometime heighten the ſence, and ſometime abate it, 626. In all diſputes and queſtions we ſhould yield as much as without wrong to truth may be yielded to, 752. Three kinds of queſtions, 989. Extravagant queſtions, what fruit they produce, 990. Queſtions in Scripture concerning God or man, who or what he is? how to be underſtood, 2053 Queſtioning our ſelves about what we are to do, or have done, how uſeful. 1905, 1906

R

RAcha, what it means to call one ſo. Folio 2169

Rain, the benefit of it, 409. How is is a ſpecial gift of God, 410. It is a wonderful work of God to ſend rain, 411. The giving of rain a motive to fruitful obedience, and a conviction of the diſobedient, 412 Rain of doctrine, 557. Rain at the command of God, 1148. Raining of wrath, what. 1984

Reaſon, we are apt to think there is no reaſon for that, for which we ſee no reaſon, 238 Reaſon is the ſouls taſter, 579. Bare reaſon as far from grace as ſenſe is from reaſon, 1064. Meer humane reaſon no competent ſurveyor of the wayes of God, 2086 Actings of many out-run their reaſon. 1904 Reaſoning with God, twofold: how we may or may not reaſon with God, 814. Reaſoning with God in prayer. ib.

Recompence of two ſorts. 1479

Redeemer twofold, 1861. Chriſt a Redeemer in the ſtricteſt ſence, 1862. Five things concur in the work of a Redeemer, all which meet in Chriſt, 1863. Chriſt was the Redeemer from the beginning, 1865. That our Redeemer liveth, carrieth in it a twofold comfort. 1866

Redemption, what it is, 556. Redemption, what it is; to redeem taken three wayes, 1861 Redemption of ſinners by Chriſt is Gods pleaſure. 2142

Rejoycing, to ſee others rejoyce at our troubles is very grievous. 1625

Relapſing into the ſame ſin very ſinful, 1773 A good man may relapſe. ib.

Relations, God can create us trouble out of any relation. 1831

Religion, the two chief heads of it, which. 1031

Remembrance of evil which ſhall never return to hurt us, comforts us, 1089. To remember a man, is to do him good, 1352 Gods remembrance of his people, implies all good to his people, ib. 1353. Remembring what it imports, when aſcribed to God, 600

Remembrancer, a great honour to be ſo to God, 951. Saints uſe to put God in remembrance of four things. ib. &c.

Repeated acts though ſmall produce great effects. 1370

Repentance, renewed ſins muſt have renewed repentance, 35. Repentance not to be put off to a pained body, 130, &c. Repentance twofold, ſinful, and for ſin, 822. Repentance a brief platform of it in three things, 1078 A returning, the two terms of it, 1665. Repentance twofold, 1960. They who neglect repentance in health ſeldom mind it in ſickneſs, 2045. Repentance reneweth our communion with God, 2234. Affliction beſpeaks our repentance, 2246. True repentance is a home returning to God, 2247 Repentance followed with a bleſſing, and a building of us up, 2249. In true repentance ſin is utterly caſt off, 2250. They who repent truly endeavour to put away ſin, not only from themſelves, but from all that belong to them. ib. &c.

Repetitions with a negative how uſed in Scripture. 1197

Reproach, the beſt Saints on Earth have been deeply reproached, 1526. Good men have often reproached one another, 1527. Reproach is a very heavy burden, ib. A reproacking tongue is compared in Scripture to three things, ib. Reproach, the bearing of it is a great fight of afflictions, 1771. Reproaches make breaches, 1773. Good men ſubject to reproach, 1774 Moſt ſad when one good man reproaches another, ib. Reproof muſt not ſavour of reproach. 1785

Reproof lawful, 152. How to be qualified with meekneſs, 153. Reproof prevails moſt when backt with reaſon, 154, &c. Reproof muſt be ſweetned with friendly inſinuations, 265 It is no eaſie thing to bear a reproof, ib. In ſome caſes we muſt reprove, whether men take it well or no, ib. Some in reproving other mens faults, run into the ſame themſelves, 1400. Reproofs are often grounded upon miſtakes, 674. Reproofs of two ſorts, 1226. How God reproves ſinners, 1227 Reproofs may prove comforts, 2013. Wicked men ſhould be reproved, 2115. Few found doing it, ib. Four qualifications neceſſary in a reprover, 2116. It is the miſery of ſome men that they are not reproved. ib. How dangerous to ſin againſt reproof. 2148

Reſt of confidence, and reſt of contentation. 256

Reſtitution of what is ill gotten, neceſſary, 1076, &c. Reſtitution of two ſorts, 1945 To reſtore is very troubleſom to a wicked man, ib. Five queries anſwered about reſtitution. 1968, &c.

Reſtraint of others from ſin two wayes. 2168

Reſurrection, a birth, 103. Reſurrection how great a change, 1357. It will be as a new birth-day to mankind, ib. Hopes of a happy reſurrection adds much courage, &c. 1358 Reſurrection, an ancient hereſie about it, 1760 A twofold reſurrection ſpoken of in Scripture, 1870. Reſurrection of the body proved. 1871. Spiritual reſurrection, ib. Chriſt a twofold cauſe of our bodily reſurrection, ib. Difference between the reſurrection of the godly and the wicked, 1872. The total conſumption of the body, no impediment to the believing a reſurrection, 1882. The body after the reſurrection ſhall have true fleſh. 1884. The ſame body ſhall riſe, 1897. Faith in the reſurrection to life, encourageth us in all the troubles of this life. 1901

Return to God, when we may be ſaid to do ſo, 2247. Returning, what it imports in Scripture, 574. Return, return, what it imports. 575

Revelation of deep things the work of God, 1183. He revealeth both his own deep things and the deep things of man, 1184. Revelation of divine ſecrets, two wayes of it. 1397

Revenge belongs to God, man muſt not revenge himſelf, 1508. Revenge is very ſweet to ſome ſpirits. 1529

Reward, every man ſhall have a reward, 586 It is the undoing of ſome to have their reward, 1480. The difference between a godly man and a carnal man, in looking to his reward, 2137, Reward twofold. 2225

Reynes, what they ſignifie in Scripture, 1540 To cleave the reyns, what. ib.

Riches, three reaſons why the Holy Ghoſt is ſo exact in deſcribing Job's riches, 15, &c. To be rich and holy, argues much riches of holineſs, 16. Riches are the bleſſing of God, ib. Honeſt dealing no ſtop to the getting or keeping of riches, 17. Riches and all outward comforts may be loſt in a day, when we leaſt ſuſpect, 75, &c. All our care cannot ſecure them, 76. Worldly men very careful to ſecure their riches, 381. Ill gotten riches cannot be ſecured, 382. Riches, why called ſtrength, 383. It is not in the power of man to get riches, 1466. Riches ill gotten will not hold, 1467. A carnal man would have perfection of riches, ib. Riches, lying vanities, ſhewed two wayes, 1477 In what ſence riches are deceitful, ib. Riches why expreſſed by the ſame word that ſignifieth ſtrength, 1733. Riches a ſweet morſel to a worldly mind, 1959. A wicked man cares not how he gets riches, ſo he get them, ib. Riches ill gotten, not held long, 1961 A wicked man cannot hold the riches which he hath gotten, 1977. Riches ſhut up how revealed, 1999. Riches flow away, or are conſumed in the day of Gods wrath three wayes, 2001. Riches provoke to contemptuous thoughts of God, 2048. Riches not gotten nor kept by mans own power, 2059, 2060. Riches no defence againſt death, 2094. Riches, how we may lay up a good foundation for our ſelves by them. 2138

Rich men, the ſame word ſignifies a rich man, and a man at eaſe, in Hebrew, two reaſons of it, 1532. Rich covetous men, in what ſence, they would be alone in the Earth. 2167

Righteous, men ſo called in a four-foldence. Righteous men perſevere in the wayes of God againſt all diſcouragements, 1634 Their perſeverance is from the power of God, 1635. How the Lord hath and hath not pleaſure in us as righteous, ſhewed in ſix propoſitions, 2139, 2140, &c. Righteous men often preſerved in common calamities. 2230

Righteouſneſs, what it is, 696. Righteouſneſs the mother of proſperity, 697. Two things make a Nation an habitation of righteouſneſs, 698. Man is called righteous in a twofold oppoſition, 817, &c. Two ſorts of righteouſneſs, 818, 2138. How a righteous perſon may anſwer God, and how not, ib. Mans righteouſneſs is not pleadable before God, 819. A godly man reckons his righteouſneſs as nothing. ib.

Roaring under affliction, notes extream affliction. 251

Robbers of two ſorts. 1123

Rod, what it ſignifies in Scripture, 893. Affliction called a rod in a threefold conſideration, 894. Rod of God, what it ſignifies. 2035

Root of a wicked man what, 1752. Taking away root and branch, notes compleat deſtruction. ib.

S

Sack-cloath, taken two wayes in Scripture. Folio 1549.

Sacrifices, four ſorts of them under the Law, 26. Why the whole burnt-offering is called an aſcention, three reaſons of it, 27. The Father of the Family was as Prieſt before Moſes, ib. The Law of ſacrificing given, though not written from the beginning, ib. &c. Wherein the benefit of a ſacrifice did conſiſt, and what made it effectual to man. 28

Saints, what a Saint is, 359. It is our duty to look upon and imitate the examples of the Saint, 360. When God forſakes a man, the Saints on earth forſake him too, 361. Saints, who, 1416. Saints by ſome called Heaven, two reaſons of it. 1417

Salt in our ſpeech, what, 512. Miniſters of the Goſpel, why called ſalt, 516. Salt, implying barrenneſs. 1749

Salvation or ſafety is of the Lord, 432. God is the ſalvation of his people, 1261. A thought that God is our ſalvation is an abundant conſolation, ib. None can give any kind of ſalvation without God, 1262. A believer looks upon God himſelf as his ſalvation. ib.

Sanctifie, how man ſanctifies God, 529. Sanctifying to the ſlaughter, what it meaneth. 2112

Sanctification, how one man may be ſaid to ſanctifie another, 22. To ſanctifie notes two things, ib. He that is holy, deſires to make others holy. 24

Sand of the Sea applied three wayes in Scripture. 499, &c.

Satan, what the word imports, 38. How Satan comes into the preſence of God, ib. He that oppoſes good, is the Devils picture, 39 Satan is in a twofold chain, though he walk all the world over, 42. His going to and fro, what it imports, 43. No place free from his temptations, 44. Very active to do miſchief, ib. Satan boundleſs in malice, 70. Satan is ſpeedy in executing where he hath power to hurt, 72. How the will of God and Satan may meet about the ſame thing, 69. He cannot compel, 77. Wicked men do his will, while they are doing their own, 78. He loves to work by inſtruments, 79 Satan labours to work in us hard thoughts of God, 83. Satan very powerful, 90. Meer malice moves Satan againſt the people of God, 123. When one means will not prevail, he tries another, 129. And more prevalent or ſtrong, ib. He makes uſe of ſuch inſtruments to tempt by, as are moſt effectual. 144

Satisfaction for ſin cannot be made by man, 648. A three-fold deficiency in all our works for that end, 649. A wicked man is never ſatiſfied, 1734. All worldly things together cannot ſatiſfie. ib.

Sauce, what the beſt to our meat 2094

Scandal, what, 570. Scandal at the croſs or ſufferings of Profeſſors. 1630

Scorn, how oppoſite to love, 1580. They who are highly honoured by God, are often ſcorned by men, ib. Three words in the Hebrew ſignifying to ſcorn, their difference. 1598

Scorning, vid. mocking. All kind of ſcorn is not ſinful or uncomely, 1105. How the godly may be ſaid to ſcorn the wicked in their troubles, 2227, &c. Scorning is very ſinful. 2228

Scourge of the tongue, vide Tongue. Scourge put for any kind of affliction, 846. A ſudden ſcourge, what. ib.

Sea, three things in it moſt conſiderable, 612, 613. How like man in his natural condition, 614, 615. Eſpecially to covetous oppreſſors, 615. The ſea in its higheſt rage is under the command of God. 785

Sealing of a thing imports two things, 781 A threefold uſe of it in Scripture. 1365

Seaſon, every thing (even pale death) is beautified in it, 486. Seaſons and opportunities. Satan is very watchful to take the fitteſt time in doing miſchief, 74. We ſhould be as wiſe to do good. 72

Secrets of God, or divine ſecrets, of two ſorts. 1397

Security twofold, 1092. Wicked men are neareſt deſtruction when they are moſt ſecure. 1439

Seeing, a ſure ſenſe, 1424. Seeing taken two wayes, ib. 1884

Seeking implies four things, 392. We muſt ſeek God eſpecially in times of affliction. 393

Seers, old Prophets, why ſo called. 1425

Sence of want carries us to look for remedy. 547, &c.

Senſe is an inlet to the underſtanding. 1202

Serapis, the Egyptian Idol, why the Emblem of ſilence was alwayes placed near it, 2116 The honour which the Egyptians did to that Idol. 2217

Serve, to ſerve God, what it is, 2054. A wicked man ſlights the ſervice of God. 2055

Service of God counted an unprofitable thing by carnal men. 2212

Servants of God, God hath ſervants in the worſt places, 5. It is an honour to ſerve God faithfully among the wicked, ib. What it is to be Gods ſervant, godly men are his ſervants three wayes, 46. Servants of God ſurrounded with enemies, therefore ſurrounded with protections, 56. God is the guard of his ſervants, 57. And of the meaneſt thing belonging to them, ib. Servants of two ſorts, 235. Sin brought in ſervility, 236. No ſervant at his own diſpoſe, ib. In what ſence they muſt not anſwer again, 1410. Servants not to anſwer when called is their ſin. 1832

Shaddai, one of the Names of God, what it ſignifieth, 447, &c. 1454, 2053. Three ſignifications of it opened in reference to juſtice. 677

Shaddow of death, what, 190, 1182. How taken in Scripture, 588. Shadows, three ſorts, 708. Mans life how like a ſhadow. 709, 1319

Shame the fruit of ſin, what ſhame is, and how cauſed, 551, 748. Three degrees of Scripture expreſſion about ſhame, ib. 749. To be cloathed with ſhame, ib. Shame, as it hinders ſome from doing good, ſo many from doing ſo much evil as they would, 1775. Not to be aſhamed of the evil we have done doubles it, 1776. Shame is a good effect of a bad cauſe, how, ib. A twofold ſhame, ib. Shame put for repentance. ib.

Shaving the head, what it imports. 94

Shekel, whence ſo called, it's uſe. 495

Sheol, how taken in Scripture. 607

Shiggaion, what it means. 562

Shiloh, why Chriſt was ſo called. 255

Ship, how time paſſes like a ſhip. 860

Sick friends not to be flattered, how to be dealt with, 1613. Sickneſs unfits moſt for ſpiritual duties. 1648

Sight of the eye, much comfort comes in by it, 602, &c. Sight put for enjoyment, 1964 Sight of evil how grievous. 2074

Silence is beſt in great ſorrows, for then a man is unfit either for counſel or comfort, 170 In what ſence it is a mans wiſdom, 1213 Silence or ſtopping of the mouth cauſed two wayes, 436, 2027. The mouths of wicked men ſtopt two wayes, 436. Silence ſignified by laying the hand upon the mouth, 643. Silence becomes learners, 560. Silence or holding the peace, what it imports in Scripture, 1022. Seven ſeaſons of ſpeech and ſeven of ſilence, 1214. Three ſorts of ſilent men, 1215. The ſeaſon of ſpeaking and of ſilence to be obſerved, 1242. Silence twofold, 2237

Sin, not ſafe to let ſin lye a moment upon the ſoul, 26. In what ſenſe a man may be ſaid not to ſin, 29. Three degrees of ſinning, 30 We may quickly ſin while we are about lawful things, 31. Sin ſpoils us of all, both honour and comfort, 39. In what ſence we may be ſaid not to ſin in this life, 112. The material cauſe of it, is in our ſelves, 387 Sin is the meritorious cauſe of ſuffering, ib. We need no teaching to ſin, 389. Sin and ſorrow the portion of man by nature, ib. 390. They are contained vertually in our nature, ib. To ſin is no burden to a natural man, ib. Not to ſin, how taken, 480. To be kept from ſin is better then all outward bleſſings, 481. Sin the greateſt evil, ib. Sin contrary to the nature of God, 528. They who are ſenſible of ſin, will pray hard for the pardon of it, 658, 659. Sinners expect benefit by ſin, 289. Sin perſiſted in, ſhall have a ſorrowful reward, ib. God gives men up to the power of ſin, 685. Sin is a puniſhment, ib. Sin ſhall not go long unpuniſhed by outward evils, 686. They who are equal in ſin, may be unequal in puniſhment, 689. How God aſſiſts, and how not in the committing of ſin, 742. All ſin is reſiſted by God, 743, &c. All our weakneſſes are the effects of ſin, 818. A godly man may relapſe into ſin, 904. Every ſin makes man a debtor to God, 973, 1043. Sin can never be put too far away, 1076. Sin will come in, but we muſt not let it ſtay in, 1077. Sins of others, when ours, 1078. Sin unrepented hinders confidence in approaching to God, 1081. To be a plotter of ſin is worſe then to be an actor of it, 1207. How ſin is ſaid to find out the ſinner, 1224. Secret ſins before God, 1230. Secret ſins in two things not ſo bad as open ſins, ib. In what ſence we may deſire to know the number of our ſins, 1285 God only can ſhew us what and how many our ſins are, 1286. The better any man is, the more he deſires to know the worſt of his ſins, 1287. What it is to know our ſins, 1288. Some ſins more proper to ſome men, 1393. Man is moſt apt to act his proper ſin, ib. Sin kept cloſe hinders the receiving of the word, 1406. Sin, and ſin only, makes men abominable in the ſight of God, 1420 Multiplied acts of ſin argue mans ſinfulneſs, ib. All ſins are againſt God, yet ſome are more againſt him, 1452. Sinning with a high hand, two things in it, ib. Sin the greateſt evil, and why, 1454. Sin runs againſt reaſon, 1456. No danger can keep a wicked heart from ſinning, 1459. Sin deceitful, 1475. There are three eminent evils in ſin, 1476. Sin deceives by a threefold promiſe, ib. Some ſpecial characters of the ſin of a wicked man, 1488. To be a plotter of ſin is worſe then to be an actor of it, 1489 Wicked man cannot but ſin, 1490. They are oft put to much pain in ſinning, ib. Sinful conceptions often prove abortive, ib. Sin is the ſting of affliction, 1497, &c. Great ſins leave their mark, 1521. It is poſſible to live without any known ſin, 1557. Crying ſin, what, 1567. Sin makes both things and perſons vile, 1702. It brings into ſtraits, 1713, &c. Sin may do much hurt to others, but it doth moſt hurt to our ſelves, 1945 Seven ſorts of Sins, 1947. Puniſhment of ſin reacheth as far as ſin reacheth, 1948. Perſeverance in ſin is the greateſt miſery, 1949 Sin goes to the grave with wicked men, the miſery of that, ib. Sin is as food to the ſoul of a natural man, 1951. The metaphor between ſinning and eating opened in ſeven things, 1950. Sin hath a preſent ſweetneſs, 1951. This ſweetneſs provokes to the committing of ſin, 1952. Our covering of our own ſin how ſinful, 1953. A carnal man is kind to his ſin, 1955. Sin ſpared three wayes, ib. How dangerous it is to ſpare ſin, 1955. Evil man keeps cloſe to ſin, 1956 Sin bitter in the end, 1957. Sin how it is covered, 1998. To be bidden go on in ſin the greateſt threat againſt ſinners, 2018. Sin, no diſadvantage to God, 2135. We ſhould not think any ſin little, 2147. In what ſence no ſin is little, ib. It is our duty to take notice of the greatneſs of our ſin, ib. &c. How we may take the meaſure of ſin, 2148. Seven aggravations of ſin, ib. &c. In what ſence ſin may be ſaid to be infinite, 2149, &c. How our ſins may be ſaid to be innumerable, 2150. The leſs we are provoked to ſin, the greater is our ſin if we fall into it, 2157, &c. 2174. Sin puniſhed in all ages, 2199. Sin breeds an eſtrangement from God, 2233. Two degrees of putting away ſin, 2250. Sins of omiſſion more frequent then ſins of commiſſion. 2146

Sinners, in three degrees. 228

Sinning adviſedly, the property of the wicked. 2219

Sincerity commends us unto God, 9. Sincere perſons are in Gods eſteem perfect perſons ib. Where there is ſincerity toward God, there will be honeſty toward men, 10. It is moſt oppoſed by Satan, 118. A godly man will hold that, whatſoever he looſes, ib. It is our armor, 119. Sincerity cauſeth us to rate our ſelves low. 899

Sleep, the eaſe of trouble and cares, 594. Bed cannot give ſleep, ib. Quiet reſt in ſleep a great mercy. 1095

Small and great in a twofold ſence, 699. We muſt not deſpiſe ſmall beginnings, 700. Smalleſt matters fall under providence. 399, 2197

Smiting on the cheek, what it ſignifies in Scripture. 1525

Snare, every thing which a wicked man hath is a ſnare to him, 1721. An account of ſix particulars which are a ſnare to him. ib.

Sodom, the judgment of God upon that, made the meaſure of greateſt judgments, 1751 Apples of Sodom. ib.

Solitarineſs is a ſad condition, 194. What ſolitarineſs good, 196. Solitarineſs, in what ſence good. 1516

Son, no Son mentioned in Scripture to die before the Father till Terah, 1760. Sons of God who, 116. In what ſence ſonſhip is ſaid to be brought in when Chriſt was born, ib.

Sorrow is good, only as it tends to joy, 165 Great ſorrows hinder ſpeech, 172, 502. Man ſees ſorrow as ſoon as he is born, 210. We ought to give a reaſon of our ſorrows, as well as of our hopes, 494. Not to be able to expreſs ſorrow is an increaſe of it, ib. Sorrow is not eaſily ſhaken off, 866. Sorrow is dry, 1519 Sorrow makes old before the time, ib. Sorrow under ſufferings is not contrary to patience, 1552. Sorrow, worldly, and godly, its effects, 1553. Sorrow taken two wayes, 1626. The ſorrows of the mind break and weaken the body, ib. &c. Sorrow is a breaker, 1770. Sorrow ſhortneth the ſpirit of man, 2019. A godly man may give too much way to ſorrow, 2023. The danger of it, 2024. Sorrow for ſin may be exceſſive, 2178. There is an unavoidable ſequel between ſin and ſorrow. 2179

Sovereignty of God, 830. It ſhould ſilence all complaints, 109 God can do us no wrong. 108

Soul, the preciouſneſs of it, 127. Soul of man is the man, 347, 1503. Mans excellency, 353 Souls being ſeperate from the body, ib. &c. Soul taken two wayes in Scripture, 901 Three things weary and load the ſoul, 902 Soul and life in man are diſtinct, 905. Soul-ſufferings put for all ſufferings, and why. ib.

Sowing, how applied & taken in Scripture. 288

Sparing mercy what, 1542. Sparing ſinfulneſs, 1543. Sparing mercy is the loweſt degree of mercy. 1544

Speaking, when the heart is full of matter, it a hard thing not to ſpeak, 266. God is ſaid to ſpeak four wayes, 1035. Some men beyond the ſpeaking of man, 1036. If God ſpeak he makes the ſtouteſt ſtoop. ib.

Speech, ability of ſpeech the gift of God, 1174 Speech removed two wayes, 1175. It ſhews what we are. 1176

Spirit, a threefold work of the ſpirit, 939 Spirit of man taken three wayes, 966. Spirit of man in an ill ſence, what it ſignifieth, 1410 To turn the ſpirit againſt God, moſt ſinful, 1411. In what caſes a man may be charged to have turned his ſpirit againſt God, ib. Spirit helps to pray: no pure prayer without the help of the ſpirit. 1562

Spot natural and metaphorical. 1080

Star, what it is, 787. The difference of the Stars, ib. The number of the known Stars, ib. The known Stars repreſented in fourty one images, 788. All the Stars are particularly planted in the Heavens for the good of man, 790. Man very apt to commit idolatry with the Stars, ib. 791. God knows the number and names of all the Stars, 790. Some Stars more excellent then others, 791. The power and wiſdom of God ſhines forth from the Stars, ib. Six things ſhew the power and wiſdom of God in making and ordering the Stars, 792. Stars can do nothing of themſelves, but as God orders, 793. They are for ſigns, but not for infallible ſigns, 794 It is a duty to ſtudy the Stars, 795. Stars, a threefold benefit to the night, 205. Stars to be conſidered, eſpecially in four things. 2188. The conſideration of the Stars ſhould make us humble and thankful. 2189

Stedfaſtneſs fourfold, 1082. There is a double unſtedfaſtneſs brought in by ſin, and caſt out by grace. 1083

Steps of ſtrength fourfold. 1712

Stones of the field, what it is to be in league with them, 472, 473, &c. How God turns ſtones into bread, and how man may be ſaid to do ſo. 475

Strait, what properly it is, 1614, 1980. Straits of two ſorts into which ſin brings us, 1614 Grace may put us into ſome ſtraits, ib. How and why God brings his into ſtraits. ib.

Strangers, a double notion of them, 1428 Strangers why called Enemies. ib.

Strangeneſs among Chriſtians very ſinful. 1777

Strength, of two ſorts, 759 Strength of God opened, 760. Strength ſignified by five diſtinct words in the Hebrew, 833. Strength of God inſuperable, ib. The ſtrength of God appears in three things, ib. Strength cannot protect againſt the wrath of God, 1715 Strength threefold, 2090. Strength no defence againſt death, 2092. Strength of God, in what. 2238

Sufferers, great ſufferers uſually thought to be great ſinners. 2152

Suffering, few hit upon any other cauſe of ſuffering but ſin, ib. &c. Other cauſes of ſuffering noted, 2153. In ſuffering it is good to ſuſpect our ſins, and ſearch after them. ib.

Sufficiency, how many wayes a carnal man may be ſaid to be in ſtraits in the fullneſs of his ſufficiency. 1980, &c.

Sun at Gods command, 777. Shaddow of the Sun going back in Hezekiahs time, 779. The riſing of the Sun is an act of favour renewed to the world every day. 780

Superſtition, or falſe worſhip hath a tange of baſeneſs and ſlavery in it. 1431

Supplication, the nature of it, 820. Supplication, properly what it is. 821

Surety, what it is to be a ſurety, 1603. Chriſt is our ſurety, 1606. How Chriſt is called the ſurety of a better Teſtament, ſhewed two wayes, ib. Chriſt being our ſurety, we need not fear, ib. Our ſurety is of Gods appointing not of ours. ib.

Suſpition, it is no breach of charity to ſuſpect ill of others, while it leads us to do them good, 30. A ſuſpition that we or others have ſinned, is ground enough to ſeek for pardon. 31

Swallowing, what it imports in Scripture. 1958

Sword, a terrible judgment, 80. How worſe then Famine, ib. Two ſwords of the mouth, 431. The hand of the ſword, ſword in the hand, what they import, 459. Sword, how taken in Scripture, 1440. Sword twofold, 1911. Sword put for all manner of outward evils, ib. Face of the ſword, what, 1912 The ſword is a very dreadful evil. 1913

T

Tabernacle taken three wayes, Folio 1742 How the body of man is like a Tabernacle. ib.

Tamerlane, the majeſty of his eye. 1523

Taſt, what the inſtrument of it, 1138. Faith is the ſouls taſter. ib.

Teaching compared to raining, or holy doctrine to rain in four reſpects, 558, 559 What we teach others, we ſhould be well aſſured of our ſelves, 1425. God cannot be taught, 2080. Some men attempt to teach God; how this is done, and ſeveral ſorts of men who do it, 2081. How ſinful it is to go about to teach God. 2083

Teachable, a gracious ſpirit is teachable, and a teachable ſpirit is an excellent ſpirit, 560 Unteachableneſs more dangerous then ignorance. ib.

Tears of three ſorts, 1551. Tears have a voice, 1581. Eight ſorts of tears in Scripture, all vocal, ib. Tears are very powerful Orators. 1582

Ten, or ten times how uſed in Scripture, 1771, &c. The number ten burdened with innumerability. 1772

Temptation, four ſteps of Satans work in temptation, 77, &c. Satan ſuits temptations to mans temper and condition, 79. The moſt violent temptations are reſerved to the laſt, 85. Some tempt the Devil, 88. Temptation by way of aſſay or tryal, 264. Temptation, prayer and meditation, the three great exerciſes of a Chriſtian, 582. Temptation makes the Saints ſometimes weary of their lives, 906. Great afflictions lay us open to great temptations, 912. Temptation, no ſtanding in it without the help of Chriſt. 1448

Terah the firſt whoſe ſon died before him. The note of Epiphanius about it. 1760

Terrors, after terrors God uſually ſends comforts, 320, &c. Terrors of God what, why ſo called, 505. Divers ſorts of terrors, ſent from God, 506, 508. Spiritual terrors, as ſpiritual joyes, are known to few, 508. Terrors of two ſorts, 1728. A threefold diſtinction of terrors, ib. Wicked men ſubject to terror, which riſeth three wayes, ib. Terrors are worſe then outward troubles, 1729. Approaching terrors have a different effect, as perſons differ, 1731. Terrors wound within. 1993

Thoughts compared to boughs or branches of a tree, and why, 307. Thoughts the firſt-born of the ſoul, ibid. A godly mans top branches, or higheſt thoughts, are about higheſt things, ib. God never loſt any one of his thoughts, nor ever ſhall, 421. Thoughts called the poſſeſſions of the heart, why, 1647. Thoughts are vocal to God, 1790 Thoughts, what they are, 1923. Thoughts preſs to words, 1924. Thoughts ſhould form our words, ib. There is a kind of art in thinking, 2099. Thoughts how known to God only, ib. It is poſſible for man to know the thoughts of man, 2100. Six wayes ſhewed by which man may know the thoughts of man, 2101. Evil thoughts of God the character of a wicked man, 2191. Thoughts of God, how we acquaint our ſelves with God by them. 2234

Thouſand, how taken in Scripture, 755. One of a thouſand, what it means. 756

Threatnings, a godly man makes uſe of threatnings, as well as of promiſes, to provoke himſelf to his duty, 1615. Threatnings againſt ſin, why ſo often repeated in Scripture. 1766

Time, the ſhortneſs and ſpeed of it, 599. Time paſt irrecoverable, ib. Time is very ſwift, 858. Swift as, and ſwifter then a Poſt, ſhewed in ten particulars, ib. 859. Time is not an empty duration, 1139. All time is as nothing compared with eternity, 1313. It is the ſole priviledge of God to ſet times, 1351 God can pull down the ſtouteſt ſinners in a little time, even without time, 2202. God needs not take time to do what he hath a mind to. ib.

Tomb or grave why called a heap. 2122

Tongue, to govern the tongue under great affliction, is a high act of grace, 158. A ſcourge, and what the ſcourge of the tongue is, 461. &c. What it is to be hid from the ſcourge of the tongue, 462. It is moſt ſad, when Chriſtians ſcourge each other with the tongue, 463. It is a great mercy to be delivered from the ſcourge of the tongue, ib. The tongue diſcovers the iniquity of the heart, 578. Man is not maſter of his own tongue, God is two wayes, 1174. Tongue, the Scholler of the heart, 1593. Sin hath got the maſtery of the heart, when it freely vents it ſelf at the tongue, 1413. Tongue, a light member, yet falls heavy, 1472. Tongue, of a wicked man, the cover of his ſin three wayes. 1953

Tophet, why ſo called. 1621

Touching the eſtate or perſon of a man what it ſignifies, 63. Satans touches are utter ruinings. 65

Tradition and immediate revelation the rule, till the Word was written, 702. Tradition when in uſe, of what force now. 1426

Treading under the feet notes abſolute conqueſt. 1744

Treaſure, called hidden, in two reſpects, 241 In what ſence the Lords people are his treaſure. 2133

Troubler, to be a troubler of others, is the height of ſin, 229. Wicked men are troublers both of themſelves and others, 229 By troubling others, they trouble themſelves, 230, &c. They never ceaſe to trouble till they ceaſe to live, ib. Except in two caſes. 231

Troubles, to conſider what we were and ſhortly muſt be, may much ſtrengthen us to bear preſent troubles, 105. Troubles afflict them moſt who ſuppoſe thmſelves beyond trouble, 370. Troubles of this life many and how diſtinguiſhed, 1316. It is a mercy that our lives are ſo ſhort ſeeing they are ſo full of trouble. 1317

Truſt, what it is, 720. A twofold effect of truſt, ib. Truſt of hypocrites like a Spiders web in five things, 721, &c. Truſting in God proper to a godly man, 1252. True truſt triumphs over the worſt, not only of preſent but of poſſible evils, ib. Truſt is due to God in all eſtates, 1253. Truſt is an honour to God, ib. Truſt in God is a remedy before the remedy comes, 1254. We can never truſt God too much nor creatures too little, 1255. Five encouragements to truſt God, ib. Three rules for the ſtrengthening of truſt, 1256. To truſt God alone, to truſt him for the leaſt matters, to truſt him in our fulleſt enjoyments, ſhews the pureſt and moſt ſpiritual truſt, ib. Truſting in thing or perſon is upon a twofold ſuppoſition, 1416. To truſt, and to truſt in, or upon, the ſame, ib. Man will have ſomewhat to truſt to, and why, 1478. It is mans duty to truſt God, ib. Man is moſt apt to truſt that which hath deceived him, ib. The creature is moſt vain to thoſe who truſt it. 1479

Truth, Satan will ſpeak truth for his own advantage, 56. Truth is infuſed, not born with us, 304. God ſometimes (as it were) ſteals a truth into the hearts of his people, 305. Why he is ſaid to do ſo, 304. Holy truths are very pleaſant to the ear of a holy perſon, 306. Our hearts are too narrow to take in or hold all the truths of God, ibid.

A godly man ever receives ſomewhat, when truth is revealed, ib. God uſually humbles man, before he ſhews him his truth, 316 Truth deſerves our moſt diligent ſearch, 489. We are to ſearch and make truth our own, before we diſtribute it unto others, ib. Truth may challenge credit, 490. Truth is the portion of the Saints, ib. Truth miſ-applied is very unſavoury, and may be dangerous, 516. Truth muſt be made known, 425. It is the ſtudy of a godly man to do ſo, ib. Dangerous to conceal truth, ibid. The ſtrength of truth, naked truth is too hard for armed Error, 565. Common truths ſeriouſly to be ſtudied, 599. Truth is more ancient then error, 704. Truth cannot be had with eaſe, 705. Four things fit us for the ſearch of truth, ib. Truth is to be highly eſteemed, 710. We ſhould yield to one another in controverſies, as far as truth will let us, 752. Truth is ever the ſame, and we ſhould be the ſame to truth, 843. Great truths muſt be reſolutely maintained, ib. It is our duty to be advocates for truth, 1022. We muſt own a derided truth, 1024. It is no new thing to be called a liar, when we ſpeak truth, 1025. Truth of doctrine hath both ſtrength and ſubtlety in it, 1029. Truth is the meat of the mind, 1138. Truth hath grayeſt head, 1140. Great truths muſt be uſhered in with great thoughts of God, 1151. Whoſoever ſpeaks truth it ought to be embraced, 1176. Truth wrong applied may be as dangerous as error, 1211. Truth, a precious commodity, it ſhould be conveyed to poſterity, 1426. Truth muſt not be hid, ib. Some truths are of very common obſervation, 1495. Ordinary truths will not ſerve in extraordinary caſes, ib. Truth ſeeks no corners, 1858. Truth well ſet home will put the wittieſt and proudeſt beſides their mocking, 2017. God honoured in his truth by the fall of the wicked, 2225. Truth muſt be bought, but not ſould. 2240

Tryals, when God brings to new tryals he gives new ſtrength. 1638

Tympanization, or drumming, what kind of torture it was. 1622

Type, what it is properly. 689

Tyrant, the common name of Kings in old time, 1428. Tyrant, who or what he is. 2154

V

Vain man, who, Folio 1056, 1060. He is an empty man, 1060. Scripture calls things vain four wayes. 1386

Vanity gradual, Moneths of vanity, what, 590, 591. The vanity of mans life ſhewed four wayes. 624, 625. Man is full of vanity, 1056. The vanity of man ſubjects the creature to vanity, 1057. Vanity, what it is, 1474. Vanity, taken two wayes, ibid. Vanity of the creature, 1477. When a man brings forth vanity, ſhewed in three particulars. 1489, &c.

Vau, an Hebrew particle, its diverſe ſignifications. 1587

Verſe, or meeter, thoſe parts of Scripture which are fulleſt of affection, are written in verſe. 178

Vipers tongue how deadly. 1963

Viſion of God in Heaven, not in his Eſſence, 800. We cannot ſee God fully on Earth in his Word and Works, 799, 801. That we ſee ſo little of God ſhould humble us, 802 Viſion of God twofold, 1290. Viſion of God our compleat Bleſſedneſs in glory, 1889, 1891. We have a viſion of God by faith in this life three wayes, 1889. Viſion of Chriſt in our nature glorified, 1890. We ſhall eye nothing but God in glory, 1895 Viſions of two ſorts, 1940. Viſions and revelations feigned often by falſe prophets, and why, 302. And heathens, 303. Four ſorts of viſions or divine revelations obſerved among the Rabbins, 308. Three ſorts noted from Scripture, 309. Viſions five wayes diſtinguiſht, 309, 310. A further ſort of viſions. 619

Viſit, to viſit, what it imports, 480. Viſitation of God three wayes. 635, 966

Viſiting of the afflicted, how called pure Religion. 165

Unbelief of threatnings as dangerous as of promiſes, 1480 The uſe which Satan makes of ſuch unbelief, 1481. Unbelief is the ſheild of ſin. ib.

Uncleanneſs of man by nature opened, 1323 A clean thing cannot be brought out of an unclean, in a threefold ſence, ib. Sin is an unclean thing, 1324. Two things in the natural uncleanneſs of man, ib. Seven properties of mans natural uncleanneſs opened, 1325. All the actings of men unclean, 1326 Even the beſt actions of believers are unclean, objections anſwered. ib. 1327

Underſtanding, the work of it attributed to the tongue and ſenſes, why, 577. Underſtanding at the diſpoſe of God, 1177. It is a ſore judgment when underſtanding is taken from the ancient, ib. How God may be ſaid to hide the heart from underſtanding, ſhewed four wayes, 1608. That it is the work of God to do it, ſhewed, 1609. It is a great judgment to have the underſtanding clouded, 1610. Our inability to underſtand ariſeth two wayes, ib. When God takes away mens underſtanding it is a ſign of their deſtruction. 1611

Unity, men are apt to agree in doing hurt, 1528

Unſearchableneſs of God in his works two wayes conſidered. 402

Unthankfulneſs, man is apt to be unthankful both to God and man, 1828. Unthankfulneſs provokes. 1829

Until, notes a continued act. 744

Vomiting four cauſes of it, ſpiritually conſidered, 1960. How ill gotten goods are vomited up. ib.

Vow, what it is, 2266. Vows lawfully made ought to be kept, ib. Four cautions about vows, ib. &c. When God anſwers prayer, we muſt be careful to pay our vows. 2267

Uprightneſs, Upright, what it is to be upright, as upright is diſtinct from perfect, 7, 274 Two ſorts of uprightneſs, 7. It makes us confident in ſaddeſt times, 278. It hath boldneſs, 574. And ſtedfaſtneſs, ib. An upright heart the more it is ſearched, the better it proves, 576. Uprightneſs and honeſty ſhall not alwayes be hid, 1187. An upright heart is not afraid to reaſon with God, 1206 An upright heart is very reſolute, 1243. An upright man never fears any hurt from God, ib. He keeps his ground in all turns, 1258 It is a ſign of uprightneſs when we dare put our ſelves in the preſence of God. ib.

Uſeleſs, to be uſeleſs in Scripture account, is to be eſſenceleſs. 552

Uſeleſneſs of any creature, is the diſhonour of that creature. 194

Uz, Land of Uz, why ſo called, 4. Where ſeated, 5. What manner of people dwell there. ib.

W

Waiting hath four things in it, Folio 1355. It is our duty to wait Gods time fully, ib. Waiting, what it is, 1652 Waiting upon God is one of the great duties of man, 1654. Waiting hath a bleſſing, 1656 Four ſinful grounds of giving over waiting upon God. 1657

Walking of God and of Satan, how to be underſtood, 2193. Our holy walking notes our acquaintance with God. 2235

Wall, a falſe propheſie why called a wall built with untempered morter. 2204

War uſually accompanied with famine, and why, 459. War is a devourer, 459, 1985

Warfare, the life of man is a warfare ſhewed in ſix particulars. 582

Waſhing, what it imports, ceremonial waſhing. 876

Watchfulneſs a duty in two things. 1864

Water, fire and water put for all manner of afflictions, 2177. Grounds of the alluſion why water ſignifieth affliction, 2178. Waters at the command of God, 1148. Waters deſtroy as well as nouriſh the Earth. 1149

Way of a man, what, 247. Way of man towards God twofold, ib. How our way is hid from God, 248. How Gods way is hidden from us, ib. Way of God a ſafe way. 1196. Wayes of God threefold, 2050. Prejudices of wicked men againſt the wayes of God. 2052

Wealth, the buſineſs of a worldly man is all about wealth, 2042. Wealth often impoveriſheth the godly in ſpirituals, 2043. Three cautions about wealth. ib.

Wearineſs of body and mind. 1514

Weavers ſhuttle, life of man like it. 598

Wedding garments ſigns of joy. 1549

Weeping and crying out in pain, is an caſe of pain, 169. Weeping not unbecoming the moſt valiant men. 1582

Weighing of actions and perſons, God doth it moſt exactly. 2196

Whale, why God ſets a watch over him. 613

Wicked men are imployed as inſtruments to afflict the godly, 84, &c. Wicked men may flouriſh in great outward proſperity, 368 The patience of God glorified in the proſperity of wicked men, ib. Two other reaſons why they are permitted to proſper, ib. Wicked men may flouriſh a great while, ib. They are under a curſe while they flouriſh, 370. Wicked men have their name from unquietneſs, 844. They often abound with earthly things, 853. They have a juſt title to the earthly things which they enjoy, ib. How it is in vain for a wicked man to ſeek unto God, and how not, 874, &c. To be accounted wicked, is a ſore affliction, 914 Wicked men in what ſence they may be ſaid to have proſperity, 922. To be wicked, or to do wickedly, is inconſiſtent with grace, 937 A wicked man who, deſcribed in five particulars, 937, 938, &c. All men are either godly or wicked, 941. Wicked man is never ſetled either about his way or about his end, 1083. Wicked men may enjoy great worldly peace, 1124. Four grounds of it, ib. 1125 Wicked men turn the bleſſing of God into fuel for their luſts, ib. Wicked mans life, a painful life, 1430. He hath two ſorts of pain, ib. He hath the pain but not the deliverance of a Woman in travel, 1431. He makes an ill conſtruction of all that he hears, 1435 The deſtruction of a wicked man is inevitable 1441. His miſery is decreed, 1447. Wicked ked man falling into miſery is irrecoverable, 1469. Wicked men of two ſorts, 1485. God often delivers his precious ſervants into the hands of wicked men, 1530. It is an addition to affliction to be given into the hands of wicked men, ib. Wicked man the cauſe of his own ruine, 1709. The proſperity of a wicked man is his affliction, 1710. The beſt things which a wicked man hath turn to his hurt, 1717. How wicked men deſtroy their own lives, 1720. Every thing proves a ſnare to him, 1721. They are catcht when their hopes are higheſt, 1724. God hath many wayes to vex them, 1726. Wicked men numbred among wild and hurtful creatures, ib. The proſperity of the wicked ſhort, 1929. He is very miſerable, 1762, 1930 A wicked man may get to the higheſt of worldly heights, 1934. No height can ſecure a wicked man againſt the hand of God, ib. Wicked mans proſperity like a dream, 1939. When it is beſt with him, his worſt is approaching, 1980. God hath inſtruments of all ſorts ready to puniſh wicked men, 1988. The wicked ſeek not to improve troubles, but only to get out of them, 1989 The ſhifts of a wicked man ſhall not help him, ib. Portion of the wicked appointed out by God, 2003. What their portion is, ib. Why God gives many wicked men a portion of good things in the world, 2004 It ſometimes troubles good men to ſee the wicked proſper, 2030. Wicked men careleſs of what is beyond their own time, 2078 Wicked ſometimes ſpared when others ſuffer, 2111. Wicked have impreſſes of the preſence of God upon their Spirits, 2208 Preſence of God grievous to the wicked, 2209. Wicked men think they can do well enough without God, their great folly ſhewed in it, ib. &c. Wicked have ſlight thoughts of God, 2211. The wicked do even dare God to do his worſt, 2213. God gives wicked men no cauſe to be weary of him, ſhewed divers wayes, 2214. They do not acknowledge God the fountain of all the good they receive, 2216. Portion of the wicked lyes on this ſide Heaven, 2217. A threefold honour ariſing to God by the fall of the wicked, 2225. Wicked men how made ridiculous, 2229. Wicked men doubly diſappointed. ib.

Wickedneſs is very laborious, 289. There is an art in wickedneſs, ib. Wickedneſs and iniquity how diſtinguiſhed. 2147

Widdow, what the Hebrew word for a widdow importeth concerning her, 2169. Two cautions to the widdow and the fatherleſs, 2173

Wife, why Job's wife was ſpared, when all elſe was loſt, 143. Wives have a threefold advantage in perſwading with their husbands, 144. Good wife the beauty and ornament of the houſe, 480. Wife, ſhe was given for a help, yet may prove helpleſs, 1834. An example of high conjugal love, 1835. Love between husband and wife grounded on externals, may ſoon decay, ib.

Will of God the law and rule of all things, 1152. Will of God under a threefold conſideration is the rule of prayer, 1560. How man may croſs the will of God, by doing that which God wills, 1852. Will of God to be ſubmitted to, 2086. Will of man by nature goth out without end to ſin. 2151

Wilderneſs, and wandring in it, what it implies, 1194

Wind, vain words compared to wind, 568 How the life is a wind, 600. Winds, their nature and power, 87. How ſent by God, how raiſed by Satan. ib. &c.

Winking, how ſinful. 1408

Wiſdom is the ſtability of things, 418. Wiſdom of God both in his word and works, full of ſecrets, 1038. God only can effectually teach us the ſecrets of wiſdom, ib. The wiſdom of God which appeareth is but little to that which is in him, 1041. Wiſdom the gift of God, 1141. The wiſdom of man no wiſdom compared with the wiſdom of God, 1141. Man loves forbidden wiſdom, 1062 Two extreams about wiſdom, ib. No one man hath all wiſdom, 1398. The higheſt ſtrain of pride to think ſo, ib. He that is full of his own wiſdom is unfit to receive inſtruction, 1405. Wiſdom and happineſs go together, 2136. What that wiſdom is which doth not profit man, and what that is which doth. ib. 2137

Wiſe men to whom plain things may be dark and obſcure, 430. What it is to be wiſe in heart, 759. God is infinitely wiſe, ib. How it may be folly to deſire to be wiſe, 1062. Wiſe man, who, and how diſtinguiſhed from a crafty man, 1385. It is moſt uncomely for a wiſe man to ſpeak vainly, 1387. The wiſeſt of men do not ſee all truths, 1609. A wiſe man may ſoon forfeit his title, 1643. Wiſe men rarely found, 1644. Wiſe men ſometimes ignorant in what ordinary men know. 2109

Wiſhing evil to others, in what ſence it may be done, 1504. In what ſence we may lawfully wiſh that had not been, which is. 218

Wit often abuſed by Satan. 430

Witneſs and party muſt not be the ſame man, 837. Self-witneſs the ſole priviledge of God, 1026. How we may or may not bear witneſs to our ſelves, 1027. Witneſſes, an old cuſtom among them, 1394. God is both Judge and witneſs, 1573. How and in what caſes we may call God to witneſs, 1574. The witneſs of God is the moſt deſirable witneſs, 1575. It is the joy of an upright heart, that God is a witneſs of all he doth. 1576

Woes of two ſorts, 974. Wo is the portion of the wicked. ib.

Woman, in what ſence ſaid to be the glory of the man, 1799. Women fulleſt of affections. 203

Word of God expounded in his Works, 281 A caution about it, ib. Word of God, how it may be hid, and how not, 523, &c. Word of God, in that God diſcovers himſelf to us, 2235. Words the conceptions of the mind, as hard to keep them in, as children ready for the birth, 266. Words of the wiſe very powerful, 270. Right words very ſtrong, three things in right words, 564, 565. It is our duty to watch over our words, 674. It is a duty to give check to the idle or evil words of others, ib. Words like a ſtrong wind ſhewed in ſix particulars, 675, 676. God is not taken with fine words, 816 When many or a multitude of words are ſinful, ſhewed in five particulars, 1017. Good words may colour a bad cauſe, but they cannot make it good, 1020. Words are often reckoned for more then the ſpeaker meant them, 1028. Words are great doers, 1388 Words which do no good, are evil, 1389 Salt of words, what, ib. Our words are ſutable to our ſpirits, 1413. In what ſence evil words are worſe then evil thoughts, ib. Words called windy in three reſpects, 1499 Bitter and paſſionate words to man, provoke God, 1502. Words duly ſpoken, are of great power, 1508. Ill ſleeping upon hard words, 1600. Unkind words are bitter to the hearer, ib. Harſh words carry much provocation in them, 1601. Hard words ſtick long upon the ſpirit of man, 1602. Unkind words make deep wounds, 1770. Two ſorts of words work much upon the heart, ib. What words, and to whom, burdenſom. 2015

Works of God are perfect works, 398. Work of man put for his reward, 588. Works of God are to be recorded for after-times, 703 It is our duty to enquire into former times, ib. It is but little of God that we are able to ſee in his works, 801. Good works muſt be done in ſecret, 1071. Works of God anſwerable to a threefold word, 2084. The juſtice of the works of God. 2085

World, when we are moſt retired from the world, we uſually have, and are moſt fit to have communion with God, 312. Worldly men would live alwayes in the world. 623

Worldly things in their greateſt beauty may be blaſted in a moment, 89. The thoughts of great and wiſe worldly men are only for the world, 225. The beſt things of this world may prove burdens to us, 239. worldly mens hearts, fuller of the world then their houſes, 256. They reſt fully in worldly contentments, ib. A godly man never ſets up his reſt in worldly things, ib. The more our hearts are looſned from the world, the more aſſurance we have to hold the world, 257. Worldly things, the more we truſt to them the leſs we receive from them, 258 • Their difference in this from ſpiritual things, ibid. Worldly good things not good in themſelves, 368. They are no argument that a man who hath them is good, 369. No evidences of the favour of God, 371. The beſt of worldly things loathed, if long uſed: ſpiritual things, the more uſed, the more deſired, 443. Beſt of worldly things fading, 479. The world is but for this life, 605 Worldly things have no conſiſtence, they are alwayes in motion, 859. They paſs as if they had never been, 862. Worldly eſtate of good men, as tranſitory as that of evil men, ib. Worldly things, are not the reſt of believers, 1532. All worldly proſperity may quickly be daſht and loſt, 1534. Worldly things, are taſtleſs and worthleſs to us in times of great ſorrow, 1554. Worldly men hope for great things in the world, 1965. Worldly things, much pains willingly taken for them, 1966. Worldly things the matter of a carnal mans rejoycing. 1971

Worms, the companions of the dead. 1660

Worſhip, what the poſtures of it, 97. Standing, ſitting, walking, kneeling, falling down, all theſe are worſhip poſtures, ib. What worſhip is with the kinds of it, 98 Divine Worſhip proper only to God, 99, 100. Civil worſhip may be given men, that of two ſorts, 99. God muſt be worſhipped in an humble manner. 100

Wounds of an enemy, what, 1296. Woundings by the hand of God are often preparatory to a cure, 450. God never makes a wound too big for his own cure, 451 And he can eaſily cure all the wounds which the malice of man can make. ib.

Wrath what it is, 362. Wrath kills three at once, 363. Wrath of God, what, 1348 The love of God is our only refuge from the wrath of God, ib. Man is not able to bear the wrath of God, 1349. Saints here may be under ſence of wrath, 1350. Wrath of of God, a conſuming flame, 1470. How we are ſaid to give place to wrath, 1507 Wrath of God what it is, 1807. The wrath of God is very terrible, ib. Apprehenſions of wrath more grievous then all our ſufferings, 1808. Wrath of God brings Judgements, 1917. Wrath falls upon the wicked when they are taking their fill of worldly contentments, 1988. How God is ſaid to have a day of wrath, 2000. Wrath goes out with Judgments, 2001. Wrath of man brings a ſword two wayes, 1917. No ſhelter againſt the wrath of God, but Chriſt, 2064. God hath abundance of wrath ready for the wicked, 2075. A day of wrath coming upon wicked men. 2112

Wrinkles in the face cauſed two wayes, 1518. A perfect ſoul-ſtate, and a perfect ſtate of body, hath no wrinkle in it. 1519

Wrong, we muſt not wrong men to right God. 1230

Y

YEA and nay, what they ſignifie in Scripture. Folio 552

Yeſterday, taken three wayes in Scripture. 706

Young ones owe reverence to the aged. 1836

Youth, how the ſins of youth are poſſeſſed in elder years, 1304, 1305. Youth is eaſily overtaken with ſin, ib. Youth is very ſubject to and uſually very full of ſin, 1947. Youth-ſins remain upon the oldeſt impenitents. 1948

Youthful ſins prove often the ſufferings of old age. 1306

Z

ZOphar, what it ſignifies. Folio 1015

A TABLE
OF THOSE SCRIPTURES
Which are occaſionally CLEARED and briefly ILLUSTRATED in the foregoing
EXPOSITIONS.

The Firſt Number directs to the CHAPTER, the Second to the VERSE, the Third to the FOLIO.

GENESIS.

Chap.	Verſ.	Folio.
1	1	782
	1	1194
	2	191
	2	590
	4	286
	8	783
	9	274
	14	787
	16	400
	20, 24	132
	22, 28	175
	28	60
2	2	918
	7	344
	7	131
	15	1927
	20	143
	24	143
	24	315
	25	102
	25	417
3	1	417
	3	456
	5	52
	8	1435
	9	41
	9, 11	41
	14, 17	177
	16	826
	16	1722
	17	175
	17	177
	19	59
	22	266
	23, 24	2168
4	5	2262
	6	685
	5, 6, 7	1079
	7	1080
	7	1570
	9	41
	10	879
	14	1440
	16	43
5	22, 24	2186
	29	216
	29	1402
6	2	37
	2	116
	3	2175
	4	110
	4	226
	4	1546
	5	1326
	5	2175
	5	2195
	6	950
	9	7
7	4	1867
	21	213
	23	726
8	21	84
	21	1329
	22	289
9	4	132
	24, 25	1943
	25	236
	27	363
	27	1475
10	9	1725
11	3	343
	4	1932
	5	2185
	5	498
	5, 6	1528
	15	936
	27, 28	1760
12	15	1586
13	8	1819
14	14	270
	22	1574
15	1	2033
	13	1336
	16	2201
16	4	110
	4	175
	12	510
	13	313
17	17	464
18	5	680
	12	464
	14	404
	20, 21	2185
	21	498
	25	323
	25	326
	27	345
	30	265
19	21	936
	24	81
20	3	1805
	7	2280
	18	208
22	12	888
	12	936
	14	1133
	17	499
23	1	889
	8	911
	12	99
	16	495
24	16	312
25	8	212
	8	1312
	21	2263
	22	249
	22	1942
	23	833
	25	397
	27	6
	32	964
	32	126
26	14	17
	11, 19	63
27	33	856
28	19	745
	21	2267
29	15	51
	31	209
	31	747
30	8	426
	23	1785
31	1	1800
	2, 5	1079
	7	1771
	24	779
	24	887
	29	134
	47	730
	47	1572
	53	273
32	2	335
	9	1835
	9, 10	815
	10	156
	24	196
	24	312
	24	1516
	24	2269
	30	1887
34	1, 2	286
	23	54
	29	1591
35	2	22
	2	2250
	5	505
	11	448
37	34	92
38	21	33
	24	1784
	29	58
39	7, 8	68
40	30	660
41	13	1085
	51	1086
42	7	1776
	11, 19	898
	13	227
	18	10
43	11	4
44	30, 31	212
45	8	1719
46	32	18
47	6	383
	9	211
	10	32
	13	271
48	11	99
	14	578
	15, 16	1943
	16	1861
	17	403
	19	1861
49	1	1867
	3, 4	353
	7	176
	9	570
	10	255
	10	296
50	3, 10	169
	21	1085

EXODUS.

1	10	417
	10	2145
	12	58
	14	192
	21	2248
3	3	1893
	7	211
4	10	1020
	19	126
	21	68
	25, 26	641
5	21	1911
6	12	1019
7	5	1786
8	18	404
	19	1844
	22, 23	457
	29	1598
9	10	137
10	13, 19	87
	28	764
12	13, 14	661
	15	1586

41

	41	1336
13	4	712
14	13	60
	13	1089
	15	42
	24	295
	24, 25	1471
15	8	293
	9	1529
	10	664
	9, 10	2203
	11	48
	11	405
	11	884
	13	2028
18	11	31
	21	2139
19	5	2133
	6	1170
	20	22
20	3	250
	5	270
	6	689
	7	1056
	12	1334
	16	160
	20	277
21	11	51
22	1, 4	1969
	6	381
23	11	740
	20, 21	1861
	22	763
	28	1729
28	8	417
	30	7
	38	112
32	1	549
	6	381
	31	2148
	32	665
33	2	653
	11	2205
	12	47
	15	2185
	15	2211
	16	405
	19	688
	20	800
	23	71
34	7	635
	7	663
	7	872
	29, 30	1550
35	5	1179
40	38	191

LEVITIC.

1	4	888
4	15	888
10	2	81
	3	1170
13	3, 8	369
16	22	360
19	15	698
	15	1221
	17	2117
	27	95
20	9	174
	17	539
	27	173
21	5	95
26	26	457
	26	1772
	41	656
	41	1655
	44	739

NUMB.

1	16	1756
5	19	2226
	21	1568
6	12	179
8	10	889
11	20	443
	20	1833
	31	87
12	6, 7, 8	308
	14	1023
14	9	408
	42	1052
	42	2185
15	10	1451
	30	1452
16	2	1756
	46	2001
20	10, 11	1502
	17, 18	2162
21	4	2019
	8	319
22	6	176
23	10	2252
	11, 12	1174
	21	288
24	17	785
25	4	2221
33	42	2027
35	12	190
	12	1861

DEUT.

1	28	407
2	10	1992
	11	896
3	23	688
4	15, 16	319
	19	790
6	13	8
7	7	6
	20	1729
	21	2185
8	2	638
	2	936
	2	2005
	10	111
	16, 17	2059
	18	1466
9	14	641
10	12	701
11	8, 11	412
	12	186
	24	785
13	6	160
	14	332
	14	487
14	1	95
16	19	1175
17	8	404
	13	553
	13	1915
	17	223
18	9	793
	11	173
19	6	2075
	18	332
21	6, 7	877
	17	1738
22	4	450
23	3	1772
24	6	2159
	10	2155
	15	589
28	6	58
	7, 25	1991
	12	209
	15	177
	22	1994
	24	170
	24	1371
	25	250
	31, 34	212
	35	137
	48	2159
	50	1079
	56	2258
	59	87
	67	594
29	4	1609
	18	1301
	18	1962
	26	790
32	2	558
	4, 5	1080
	6, 21	152
	9	2133
	13	474
	13	785
	15	1122
	17	1651
	17	1929
	20	1293
	21	380
	24	457
	30	1054
	31	625
	34	1365
	35	1117
	36	1053
	41	1912
	41	2175
	42	80
33	9	841
	26	1235
34	7	484
	8	169

JOSHUA.

1	5	639
	8	577
2	11	1729
5	2	1641
6	5	746
	26	1144
7	7, 8	806
	19	645
	21	1976
8	26	1450
10	12	777
	22	1744
21	45	330
23	13	282
	14	330
24	12	1729

JUDGES.

1	6, 7	1167
4	18	1476
5	7	291
	20	197
	20	582
	20	792
	23	2132
	28	206
6	1, 7	69
	21	755
	22	313
7	31	745
8	21	654
9	15	190
	15	380
	54	380
10	10, 11	455
	12, 13	456
	13	408
11	3	2169
12	3	1248
	7	1808
14	12	987
15	16	1545
	19	510
16	29	547
20	16	480

RUTH.

1	21	15
2	15	1772
3	8	547
4	4, 5	1862

I. SAM.

1	13	42
	16	611
	18	865
	19	951
	27	435
2	3	2196
	5	453
	5	1443
	5	1733
	9	231
	12	1919
	23	1228
	30	175
	30	1098
3	1	309
	7	1820
	12	398
	13	2168
	13	1228
4	18	92
	20	45
7	3	1892
	3	2248
	6	251
	12	157
	12	474
9	9	309
	9	1425
	20	45
10	27	1022
12	20	277
13	8	1355
14	6	400
	29	1098
15	22	2141
	29	807
	29	882
	32	240
	32	1303
16	5	22
	14	69
	14	505
17	24	1912
	33	881
18	1	1844
	21	144
19	5	1248
20	8	155
	19	472
21	4	25
22	18	833
24	14	126
	14	432
	14	686
25	5	2035
	10	2022
	11	108
	16	55
	25	45
	25	152
	27	254
	30	1215
	36	1744
	41	630
	41	1829
27	12	350
28	15	217
	15	442
	19	706
	21	271
	21	1248
31	4	1597

II. SAM.

1	9	519
	9	1597
	11	92
	12	173
	21	177
	26	1838
2	14, 26	469
	22	1079
	22	2262
3	31	92
5	8	948
7	14	131
	14	2036
	15, 25	666
9	8	630
10	4	94
11	25	80
12	7, 8	53
	9	24
	12	683
	12	728
	12	2221
13	4	1520
	39	2012
14	2	201
	9	2226
	14	1088
	22	32
	31	91
15	25, 26	394
16	10	110
	10	1052
	10, 11	544
	15	174
	21	268
18	3	634
	18	31
	18	222
	23	1243
	33	229
19	3	1024
	24	95
	24	793
	25	351
	35	408
21	1	916
22	19	723
23	4	1148
	5	1899
	9	287
24	4	118
	14	62
	14	453
	14	604
	14	1733
	14	1850

I. KINGS.

2	8	1500
3	7	1836
4	29	500
	32, 33	713
5	4	38
	4	654
6	19	265
7	21	727
8	10, 11	2192
	27	1577
	29	631
	46	29
11	14	38
14	10	1935
	10	2201
	12, 13	483
15	5	112
16	2	1551
	34	1144
17	1	411
	1	2269
18	17	230
	21	307
	41	1434
	46	62
19	4	155
	4	242
	12	319
20	11	1165
	18	180
	23, 24	2186
	32	1864
	33	1512
21	13	33
	25	48
	25	120
	25	144
22	19	37
	19, 20	1156
	29	556

II. KINGS.

2	12	1843
	23, 24	1942
3	14	45
4	1	1862
	29	831
	40	1303
5	18	97
	25	41
6	11	1186
	33	1434
7	4	1730
	6	1435
8	10	1250
	11	164

13

	13	2005
9	25	500
	26	706
	37	1762
14	9	755
	9	1456
15	5	569
18	4, 5	49
	20, 21	1256
	27	1935
19	4	27
	4	210
	7	294
	28	616
	28	1715
20	3	278
	5	1333
	9, 10	779
	17	2000
21	13	997
22	20	1377
23	5	192
	25	49

I. CHRON.

17	16	630
21	1	78
23	25	350
29	16	1071

II. CHRON.

3	6	2253
6	13	31
10	7	1941
15	3	1764
28	22	120
30	5	704
	18, 19	25
32	25	1829
33	13	1919
35	25	201
36	12	2242

EZRA.

4	6	38
9	13	156
	13	400
	13	1044
[illegible]	13	1412

NEHEM.

1	4	169
2	18	91
3	2	76
4	12	1772
5	13	2169
6	8	1021
	9	741
	11	1320
	16	1107
8	10	2260
9	26	664
	27	1262
13	14, 22	820
	26	49

ESTHER.

4	17	282
5	6	73
	11, 12	1734
	13	188
	13	1099
6	2	62
7	8	854
9	2	1729
	29, 31	726

PSALM.

1	1	1024
	2	2138
	3	1299
	4	294
	6	1056
2	1	421
	1	786
	1	1490
	1, 2	1164
	2	424
	7	103
	9	952
	12	294
	12	1807
	12	1917
	12	2605
4	2	673
	3	2133
	4	313
	6	601
5	3	26
	3	506
6	1	2065
7	3, 4, 5	1568
	6	1235
	12, 13	426
	12, 13	1735
	14	420
	15	570
	15	1716
	16	1945
8	3	795
	3	2187
	3	2189
	4	480
	4	627
	4	1236
9	12	1570
	18	337
	18	951
	20	1786
	20	1918
10	4	2049
	4	2211
	7	176
	7	1954
	11, 13	1059
	11	2191
	11	2194
	18	571
11	3	2205
	4	573
	5, 6	2066
14	1	152
	5	702
	6	1113
15	4	45
	4	1419
16	2	2132
	5	2076
	7	1540
	8	2186
	10	602
17	11	1363
	13	1912
	14	63
	14	225
	14	853
	14	896
	14	1975
	14	2217
	14	2231
	15	1889
	17	1824
18	1, 2	1263
	4	614
	4	1232
	7	773
	25, 26	691
	26	427
	27	2276
	28	1119
	43, 44	101
19	1	609
	4	795
	5	87
	12	562
	14	1575
22	1, 14	251
	2	1792
	2	1956
	6	1023
	6	1773
	7	2227
	9	209
	12	1461
	15	538
	15	1864
	16	1775
	21	1790
	29	954
	30	1462
23	1	159
	4	190
	4	1403
	5	378
	6	350
	6	1820
24	1, 2	775
25	1	27
	11	2148
	16	360
26	6	24
27	4	603
	4	1291
	10	1112
29	2	98
30	6, 7	252
31	11	1823
	15	70
	15	584
	15	1351
	19	1978
32	1	439
	1	1998
	2	644
	3	251
	4	62
	6	2179
	9	297
	10	232
33	6	675
	17	2013
34	6	430
	7	35
	10	300
	16	1060
35	5	2067
	7	51
	13, 14	1121
	15, 16	1523
	19	1408
	26	596
	26	1782
36	1, 2	2004
	1, 2	2046
	6	82
	6	300
	9	962
37	4	2259
	4	2260
	10	609
	13	1761
	16	371
	23	2273
	25	281
	25	285
	25	1443
	31	2243
	35, 36	281
	36	545
	36	661
	37	330
38	1	1539
	2	507
	3	1947
	5	1912
	11	1824
	16	1782
	19	1864
39	1	158
	2	613
	4	355
	5	350
	5	441
	5	1312
	6	625
	9	109
	9	611
	9	2237
	10, 11	349
	12	1582
	13	522
40	7, 8	1924
	9, 10	525
	10	2244
	12	2150
41	3	618
42	1, 2	2049
	2	1267
	4	1178
	5	2024
	7	2178
	10	94
	10	1937
	11	1246
44	4	455
	5	110
	12	2135
45	5	502
	12	1462
	12	2043
	13	1799
46	2	31
	2	769
	5	636
	8, 10	2086
47	7	1927
48	10	110
	10	881
	12	1896
	13	1700
	14	2055
49	1, 2	234
	5	1722
	11	225
	13	273
	20	282
	20	354
	20	1063
	20	1700
	20	1926
50	8	2143
	16	874
	17	664
	18	882
	20	1421
	21	509
51	4	105
	4	323
	4	683
	4	1020
	5	662
	8	659
	9	877
	12	1729
	13	269
	14	1179
	14	1566
	15	174
53	5	1728
55	2	2020
	11	238
	12	144
	12	544
	12	1782
	15	2202
	19	1120
	23	487
	23	1313
56	5	868
	8	2150
	11, 13	592
57	1	1840
58	2	2196
	6	300
	7	503
	8	228
	10	2223
	11	398
61	7	701
62	5	855
	9	497
	9	627
	9	1826
	10	76
	10	256
	10	589
	11	1766
63	2	1291
64	8	1472
	8	1716
	9, 10	435
65	9	82
66	9	134
	17	1953
	18	693
68	9, 10	558
	12	480
	12, 13	469
	17	335
	20	135
	20	432
69	4	2157
	6, 7	748
72	5	250
	15	2032
	17	348
	17	1759
	20	1899
73	2, 13	1117
	3	2209
	3	2223
	4	846
	4	2045
	9	676
	9	461
	12	283
	13	67
	14	63
	14	637
	15	690
	22	511
	22	1514
	25	1263
	25	1895
	25, 28	1112
	25, 28	1583
	27	2047
	28	1820
74	11	420
	15	1171
	19	430
	19	433
75	1	406
	4, 5	336
	5	776
	5	1160
	5	1458
	8	444
	8	2004
76	4	504
	5	421
	6	780
77	4	172
	7, 8, 9	1794
	9	714
	9	951
	19	2050
78	2	173
	20	408
	27	499
	31	1461
	36	1220
	38	604
	41	1656
	49	1813
	72	578
79	11	232
	12	291
80	4	1096
	10	82
81	11	685
	13	2014
	14	64
82	2	17
	5	855
84	1	564
	5	2243
	11	640
85	6	1641
	8	1035
86	5	1735
	13	607
87	3	1801
88	5	569
	15	509
	15	1514
89	15	745
	25	889
	36	1047
	39	573
	45	1334
90	2	2133
	6	1734
	8	1946
	9	597
	11	897
	20	628
91	1	57
	5	503
	7	460
	8	2220
	11	1471
	13	785
	13	1744

92	5	1181
94	4,5	231
	5,6,7	2191
	9	943
	20	238
95	6	97
	8	219
	10	720
	11	294
97	8	2223
99	6	1111
100	3	947
101	8	26
102	23	487
	27	797
103	2	57
	8	294
	12	1076
	12	2250
	14	953
	16	351
104	3	82
	32	768
105	15	63
	15	780
	18	232
	18	238
	25	1819
	32	82
106	7	403
	7	1600
	8	1883
	15	1520
	23	804
	23	2278
	32,33	1502
	36	1325
	40	1418
107	39,40	415
	40	250
	40	1179
	41	2038
	42	436
	42	2222
108	1	703
	2	203
	7,8,9	1471
	9	785
109	6	1530
110	1	1810
	3	1179
	7	976
	7	2262
111	2	281
	4	281
	7	281
	10	2137
112	4	1798
	7,8	277
	10	362
	10	1741
113	5,6	2197
115	2,3	2185
	17	215
116	3	614
	3	1046
	7	157
	11	2225
	15	57
118	2,3,4	1827
	17	2032
	22	445
119	1	2139
	13	308
	59	417
	75	156
	96	1040
	103	564
	104	1196
	106	2267

	109	1248
	113	1952
	116	206
	116	748
	121	678
	121	1605
	176	1473
120	5,7	1502
121	3	1117
	4	692
	5	967
	8	234
123	1	1832
	3	72
124	3	1958
125	1	279
	2	454
126	1	75
	1	1087
	3	1530
	4	545
	5	288
127	2	513
	2	618
	2	1087
	4	12
130	3	972
	5	531
131	1	406
133	1	543
136	4,5,6	405
	23	2163
137	7	600
	7,12	1761
139	1,2	642
	2	234
	2	1790
	6	2196
	7	37
	7,8	2184
	8	607
	14,15	209
	14,15	919
	23	574
	23,24	1206
	23,24	2198
141	2	27
	3	613
	4	1951
	5	2117
	5	1530
	7	135
142	2	394
	4	138
	4	1100
143	2	757
	4	1761
144	4	625
	5	767
	7	61
	7	1428
	11	2191
145	16	209
	15,16	1443
146	4	1648
147	10,11	2140
148	8	88
	8	779
	14	1821
149	6	459

PROVER.

1	17	1724
	18	1720
	18	1963
	22	673
	22,25	2051
	26	251
	26	2228
	27	77
	27	317
	32	686
2	4	244
	16	1828
3	2	2092
	17	1952
	27	2163
	29	287
4	15	2219
	16	1602
	17	1555
	17	1951
	19	1197
	21	2244
	24	1407
	27	287
5	4	1302
	22	1718
6	1	1604
	11	556
	13	1020
	13	1409
	17	1409
	18	287
	25	1407
	26	1442
	30	2158
	34	1969
7	3	2243
	13,21	1029
	14	26
	15	26
	18,19	2193
	21	1612
	22	447
	27	789
8	6	173
	27	784
	30,31	2259
	34	2121
9	12	488
	12	1963
	17	1951
10	4	59
	4	1330
	4	1756
	4,22	59
	7	1238
	10	1409
	15	1477
	20	252
	20	1741
	20	2067
	24	252
	25	2206
11	4	224
	11	1995
	16	383
	21	1982
	30	1029
	31	1479
12	10	144
	16	1565
	26	377
	27	1965
13	12	207
	15	383
	25	1975
14	1	1720
	2	1115
	3	462
	17	294
	24	1802
	27	279
15	2	173

	7	1970
	21	221
	32	1061
16	1	1071
	1,9	1719
	4	2112
	26	1853
	30	1409
17	6	1802
	9	1028
	11	162
	17	1823
	17	1824
	21	1610
	22	2091
	26	337
	28	1213
18	1	244
	1	392
	4	1182
	9	1817
	10	413
	14	130
	14	500
	14	1558
	23	688
	23	1830
19	11	797
	24	520
20	5	1182
	5	1185
	8	574
21	1	1191
	4	287
	25	363
	30	424
22	2	2164
	8	288
	17,18	1034
	26	1604
23	2	532
	5	626
	5	1803
	7	500
	10,11	572
	23	2240
	28	802
	31	1202
	31,32	1957
24	4	789
	7	2223
	10	640
	16	268
	16	454
	16	1469
	17,18	1787
25	3,25	125
	12	1497
	20	74
	20	239
	25	1587
	26	1108
	27	1048
26	4,5	1019
	6	1420
	27	1716
27	1	1314
	3	365
	3	2015
	5,6	2117
	17	1698
	19	48
	19	811
28	3	1432
	3	2159
	14	253
	14	761
29	1	2148
	6	1718
	8	1712

	11	1411
	15	684
	18	309
	27	1419
	2	1063
30	4	87
	8,4	16
	8	155
	15	1975
	15,18	454
	32	561
31	4,5,6	1087
	6	1303
	8	797
	8,9	174
	10,11	333
	21	467
	31	374

ECCLES.

1	16	679
	16	1893
	17	1154
	18	2051
2	1	1964
	2	164
	2	2261
	7	169
	16	2097
	18	736
3	1	73
	1	194
	7	170
	13	378
	18	1062
	19,20	601
4	1,2	242
	5	1245
	9,10	1517
5	1	1905
	2	1018
	2	2183
	4	2265
	10	1444
	17,19	1971
	19	2058
6	4	227
	10	884
7	2	352
	6	2260
	7	1514
	9	362
	12	2251
	13	679
	14	156
	15,16	1629
	16,17	1333
	17	486
	17	1482
	19	1771
	24	1183
8	4	806
	5	1272
	6	75
	6	1919
	8	413
	10	1476
	11	762
9	1	284
	1	2270
	2	368
	2	941
	4	126
	4	242
	5,6	1376
	7,8,9	1549

	10	216
	10	1271
	12	75
10	1	1129
	7	855
	11	1947
	19	14
	20	1184
11	1	2157
	8	455
	9	148
12	1	280
	1	484
	1	714
	1	2040
	1	2183
	2	185
	2	455
	3	679
	5	224
	5	353
	11	157
	13	10
	13	347
	13	1993

CANTIC.

1	6	927
	7	1090
	16	1483
2	3	1977
	4	74
	4,5	2075
	16	1590
4	9	1523
	11	1953
5	10	756
	12	877
6	9	1030
	13	575
7	1	1095
	4	417
	11	312
8	6	82

ISAIAH.

1	1	1422
	2	544
	2	1823
	2	1829
	3	2216
	6	137
	6	378
	7	1428
	7	1828
	10	2172
	15	1566
	15,16	1327
	18	814
	24	440
	29	551
2	4	459
	4	1585
	9	4
	12	175
	12,17	1172
3	1	457
	1	723
	4	1161
	6	2159
	6,7	449

	6,7	2022
	7	223
	9	717
	9	748
	9	863
	9	1776
	10	1762
	11	2225
	12	1311
	16	1458
4	5	191
5	2	54
	2	681
	2, 5	474
	2, 5	34, 35
	6	410
	8	2167
	8, 9	1464
	13	1733
	19	436
	19	1990
	24	437
	25	62
6	5	800
	5	1019
	8	369
	9	2176
	9, 10	429
	9, 10	1610
	13	537
7	2	162
	4	1119
	13	408
	22	1964
8	7	2204
	8	1053
	9	173
	9	765
	9	1740
	10	2272
	17	240
	17	1292
	19	173
	19	300
	20	703
	21	66
	21	1443
	22	1964
9	2	186
	2	190
	6	482
	6	1891
	12	62
	20	1246
10	7	1850
	6, 12	329
	14, 15	2217
	18	538
	19	407
	23	1330
	26	846
	27	1912
11	3	856
	3	925
	3	1341
	4	675
	4	1440
	4	1471
	7, 8, 9	476
14	4, 5, 6	1105
	11	2097
	12, 16	1937
	18, 19	2122
	20, 21	2034
	22, 23	216
	23	722
	29, 30	1738
15	2	94
16	3	1090
	14	585

17	13	294
	13	2067
19	6	434
	25	919
20	3	169
	5	551
	20	1194
21	2, 3, 4	1585
	14	2163
22	2	1435
	4	171
	12	94
	12, 13	21
	18	1449
	22	1145
24	16	1841
	18	1989
	20	775
25	4	827
	4	1411
	6	74
	9	435
	9	1656
	9	2055
26	3	256
	4	224
	4	1857
	9	513
	11	436
	11	1787
	16	635
	17, 18	1489
	19	955
	20	1344
27	1	200
	1, 7	71
	4	764
	4	1815
	4, 5	2238
	7	732
	8	131
	11	921
28	1	1802
	10	1545
	15	846
	15	1919
	15	2175
	16	2207
	17	2206
	19	2073
	21	406
29	4	321
	6	379
	13	1390
	14	8
	14	1178
	15	1182
	21	570
	21	1908
30	2	2422
	5	551
	7	809
	9	1599
	13	847
	14	1710
	18	1655
	20	511
	20	2241
	26	189
	30	2165
	30, 31	1623
	33	293
31	1	505
	1	1998
	8	80
32	2	909
	4	427
	5	1179
	6	1387
	6,7	2162

	17	697
33	2	1465
	1	2001
	8, 9	92
	9, 10	414
	14	509
	14	640
	14	714
	16	415
	20	479
	20	1742
	21	434
	21	652
	24	665
35	3	267
37	1	93
	22	2228
	36	136
38	2	603
	3	820
	10, 12	903
	11	603
	11	1889
	12	350
	12	598
	14	130
	14	183
	14	1605
	17	664
	18	215
39	6, 7	1377
	8	2086
40	1, 2	582
	2	1039
	4	767
	6	140
	6	482
	8	1320
	15	401
	24	367
	27	247
	28	759
	30, 31	1638
41	8	2042
	14, 15	2226
	15	767
	15	2068
	23	155
42	25	771
43	2	457
	3	1524
	4	1179
	7	397
	13	760
	13	804
	13, 14	1457
	14	1171
	26	815
44	9	1977
	9	1394
	19, 20	1905
	20	889
	20	1075
	20	1478
	22	606
	24, 25	793
	25	422
	25	2272
45	7	62
	7	109
	7	155
	11	806
	11	921
	14	1097
46	8	1419
47	3	2056
	9	170
	9	1740
	11	1441
48	6,7	1892

	15, 17	1190
	18	1964
	18	2240
49	1	47
	4	1509
	15, 16	716
	23	809
	26	1246
50	4	1498
	6, 7	1773
	7, 8	1276
	10	188
	10	189
	10	249
	10	1731
51	1	1862
	4	2044
	6, 7	348
	9	694
	9	808
	17	2075
	19	161
	20	2237
	23	1812
52	1	1265
	1	1429
	14	167
53	2	367
	2, 3	1326
	3	45
	5	447
	6	660
	8	702
	10	58
	9, 10	660
	10	849
	10	1543
	10	2142
	11	1967
	12	592
	12	873
54	4	1085
	9	1088
	17	1978
55	1	649
	1	1967
	7	408
	7	1726
	6, 7	883
	8	2193
56	3	483
	12	254
	12	584
57	1	282
	1	351
	2	217
	10	897
	14	1812
	15	518
	15	1934
	16	270
	16	534
	17	714
	19	373
	20	229
	20	786
	20	1502
	21	189
58	1	304
	1	359
	2	1820
	3	167
	3	717
	3	757
	3	2041
	6	2157
	7	450
	9	2264
	10	1091
	13	238

	13	1258
59	1	62
	1, 2	388
	2	2259
	5, 14	1796
	6	421
	19	2204
60	5	1914
	6	2177
	14	100
	17	233
61	8	1230
	3	139
62	1	1119
	4	2140
	1, 6	121
	6	951
63	15	1843
	15	2182
	16	1376
	17	1195
64	1	768
	1	2002
	7	942
65	1	1842
	2	1072
	5	1916
	5	2142
	11	592
	13	1085
	16	210
	17	401
	20	486
	22	450
	24	1794
66	1	2184
	3	252
	5	740
	5	1818
	7	1907
	8	210
	11	2258
	12	982
	14	2091
	24	596

JEREM.

1	6	1836
	10	369
	10	565
8	5	625
	12	2025
	19	1957
	22	878
	23, 24	1063
	25	567
	29	757
	31	715
	32	715
	34	933
	36	1083
3	5	2165
	16	1821
	23	432
	23	1262
4	1	2247
	7, 8	167
	12	1077
	14	1780
	14	2151
	16	1545
	18	288
	18	1720
	19	142
	20	295
	22	418

5	1	4
	1	681
	1	1797
	7	1463
	13	568
	13	1386
	22, 23	2151
	24	412
	24	1905
	28	2173
6	8	2210
	11	483
	15	1778
	29, 30	1460
7	1, 2	110
	1, 2	725
	4	1742
	4, 9	874
	16	2056
8	1	224
	1	2123
	5	120
	5	2151
	6	1906
	7	511
	9	153
	14	183
	14	805
	15	207
	15	254
9	4	144
	4	554
	17, 18	201
	22	152
10	6,7	1914
	14	1240
	23	165
	24	897
11	13	750
	16	1783
12	1	85
	1	757
	1, 2	284
	2	368
13	16	1117
	27	2151
14	4	1451
	9	2211
	18	1178
15	1	804
	1	1813
	1	2279
	1, 2, 3	635
	2	1440
	9	453
	19	2242
16	7	2013
	14, 15	1085
	16	1725
17	1	1851
	6	491
	6	602
	9	1057
	9	1218
18	4	952
	12, 13	1657
	18	418
	18	461
19	11, 17	1161
20	3, 4	1435
	9	265
	10	1364
	14, 15	178
22	3	1750
	24	681
	28	33
	28	194
	28	2138
	29	628
	29	1241

23

23	9	1198
	24	2184
24	3	284
	10	898
	13	113
25	10	1711
	15	2076
	27	80
	27	1959
27	6	852
29	22, 23	152
30	14	715
	17	1097
	21	1607
31	15	227
	18	1553
	19	1947
	20	2234
	28	692
	35	792
	35, 36	1707
32	40	1914
33	22	499
36	24	93
38	4	267
39	6; 7	1089
	18	135
41	6	1680
45	5	135
46	28	1542
47	6	1811
48	10	1271
49	7	161
	7	1400
	11	2173
	31	255
50	6	1005
	7	1221
	20	664
	20	184
	43	461
51	25	765
	44	1961
	57	1306

LAM.

1	12	498
	12	1768
2	2	1821
	6	1170
	10	169
	14	113
	14	512
	19	240
3	1	602
	4	1519
	7, 9	248
	8	1795
	12	1543
	12	1768
	12, 13	1539
	22	1542
	22, 39	1044
	23	637
	24	2254
	36	681
	36	1786
	73	780
	44	27
	51	211
	59	679
	6	846
4	6	2045
	7, 8	167
	9	80
	16	71
	21	148
5	16	1802

EZEK.

1	3	62
	24	2253
2	7	2016
3	8, 9	761
	26	1176
4	15	1936
5	13	2066
6	6	1566
	9	720
	19	2014
7	17	268
8	12	2195
11	16	2111
	21	2250
13	9	1208
	10	516
	10, 13	2204
	14	113
	14	2205
	19	127
	19	1498
14	5	1820
	9	1156
	14	1619
15	3	1420
16	4, 5	213
	6	1566
	14	629
	49	741
	49	1463
18	2	374
	20	2070
20	47	1995
21	2	1581
	3	845
	3, 4, 5	2111
	7	251
22	6	2165
	16	1555
23	4	478
	42	1532
24	6	1949
	7	1566
	13	1509
	13	1949
	17	94
26	20	222
28	17	2222
29	18	94
30	2	202
32	7	778
34	4	362
36	30	1780
	31	902
	31	1419
	38	2038
37	1	62
	13	209
39	2	452
40	4	634

DANIEL.

1	20	592
2	3	84
	21	2160
	34	1996
	35	733
	44	2205
3	27	1341
	4	255
4	4	367
	13, 14	372
	24	1065
	26	1577
	35	805
	23	134
5	5	169
6	9	928
7	9	2044
	15	347
	5	731
	6	1459
	7	1302
	13	1184
	13, 14	1769
9	14	1364
	14	692
	17	71
	23	1362
	23	1976
	24	1367
10	2	163
	3	513
	33, 34	327
11	21	1702
12	2	215

HOSEA.

2	2	757
	6	381
	6	1797
	6	1227
	8	53
	8, 9	2216
	8, 9	2256
	14	363
	15	250
	21	1127
	21, 22	793
	21, 22	1149
4	1	1764
	2	1566
	4	474
	4	2117
	8	662
	14	386
	18	557
	18	1171
5	10	474
	13, 14	348
6	7	884
	7	1643
7	5	175
	5	1121
	9	96
	9	771
	11	759
	11	1061
	11	1192
	16	2247
8	4	41
	4	106
	7	1389
	8	1725
9	2	573
	6	166
	7	1500
	8	1725
	11	1800
	11	1938
	15	739
10	4	1796
	12	1984
11	5, 6	1543
	8, 9	440
	9	678
12	1	568
	4	121
	4	2230
	4	703
	7	917
	8	1123
	13	1366
13	1	898
	6	2048
	9	388
	9	1720
	13	1483
14	3	433
	5	367
	5	1635

JOEL.

1	7	1102
	19	1469
	20	1147
	20	1994
2	2	185
	2	778
	13	92
	13	1553
	14	549
	23	2241

AMOS.

1	3	454
2	8	2159
	9	1755
	14	1100
	14, 15	1192
3	2	1059
	3	835
	6	388
	6	108
	8	108
4	6	283
	7	778
	6, 8	457
	8	410
	12	2956
5	8	791
	10, 11	1214
	13	170
	16	201
	17	798
	18, 19	1990
	21	622
6	3	253
	3	2112
	4, 5, 6	2041
7	1, 2, 3	1541
	4, 5	1995
	8	661
	8	797
8	3, 10	195
	5	1453
9	1, 2	296
	1	377
	1	1053
	1	1990
	5	774

OBADIAH.

1	3, 4	1934
	12	163
	12	1818

JONAH.

1	3	2186
	17	592
2	8	1476
3	6	139
	8	2248
	9	549
4	4	41
	9	1704

MICAH.

1	3	785
	15	1748
	16	94, 95
2	6, 7	2019
3	2	298
	2	1972
	3	1799
4	11	2220
5	1	1526
	5	455
6	2	2142
	3, 4	2214
	6	648
	11	1153
	15	378
	16	2026
7	2	1475
	3	244
	3	395
	5	1825
	9	365
	16	436
	18	48
	18	430
	18	663
	18	841
	19	664
	19	876

NAHUM.

1	9	1088
	15	1429
	15	1895
2	7	1622
	11, 12	297
	12	13
	12	1720
3	6	161

HABAK.

1	2, 3	1792
	6, 7	84
	4	1796
	6	192
	7	1233
	8	598
	16	2216
2	2, 3	1355
	3	1654
	9, 10	1487
	12	1566
3	6	809
	8	180
	8	772
	14	369
	16	314
	17	459
	17	573
	17	2040

ZEPHAN.

1	12	933
	12	957
	12	2053
	12	2213
2	1, 2	2067
	11	1519
	11	2132

HAGGAI.

1	6	290
	6	2002
	6	2271
	7	1059
	9	295
	9	1471
2	4	1513
	6, 7	773
	14	132
	14	1326

ZECHAR.

1	8	335
	10	43
	10	565
	11	1983
	12	1588
	15	163
	15	371
	15	923
	18, 20	1725
2	5	55
	5	653
	8	1452
	13	695
	13	1022
4	7	626
	7	767
	10	43
	10	700
5	1	2175
	6, 8, 11	2221
7	1	788
	5	2248
	7	1533
	13	292
8	4, 5	2038
	9, 13	267
	23	734
	23	1772

9

9	1	30
	4	1961
	12	434
10	10	734
11	1	1470
	2	2166
	4	32
	15	362
	17	428
	17	1483
	17	1209
12	1	1819
	10	85
14	6	185
	12	2229
	21	89

MALAC.

1	4	697
	4	1144
	4	1987
	13	1101
2	2	497
	7,8	1170
	9	1219
	17	857
3	2	1806
	9	173
	13, 14	118
	13, 14	1452
	15	2248
	16	117
	16	1052
	17	653
4	2	206

MATTH.

1	19	1619
	19	2221
3	7	1963
	9	707
	9	1988
	17	40
4	3	778
	6	473
	9	52
	9	852
	16	186
5	1	173
	8	1268
	19	1612
	22	152
	22	1060
	22	1701
	22	2169
	39	1774
	39	1525
	45	411
	45	780
	45	2215
6	3	1071
	7	1391
	16	413
	24	2055
	25	1503
	26	1966
	33	371
	33	442
7	1	1643
	1	1920
	1	2154
	6	1214
	9, 10	1113
	22	551
	22	717
	22	724
	23	167
	23	251
	23	2208
	24	1765
	24, 25	2207
	27	2024
8	12	1758
	17	497
	25	282
	25	695
	26	785
	27	87
	29	42
9	18	889
	23	203
10	10	893
	13	1717
	14	1550
	19	1503
	19, 20	1924
	21	1817
	25	1187
	30	57
	30	2150
	42	2161
11	5	2043
	16	2038
	16, 17	1511
	22	139
	23	1933
	25	1430
	25	1609
	29	361
12	20	1119
	36, 37	184
	37	1393
	44	1068
	57	281
13	10, 14	1608
	21	368
	42	1554
	44	245
15	20	107
	26	969
16	19	1145
	22, 23	149
	25	127
	26	318
18	5	1096
	10	37
	18	2272
	21, 22	1773
19	24	1064
	26	127
	28	1351
20	15	107
	15	829
21	19	548
	21	769
	25	1577
22	13	189
	31, 32	1746
23	2, 3	566
	4	244
	4	395
	5	2245
	8, 9	1701
	14	377
	14	2170
	15	1827
	32	2071
24	12	1823
	15	903
	22	587
	22	1317
	24	1475
	25	253
	30	1892
	37	2175
	38	1985
	40, 41	457
	50	2176
	51	1266
25	29	1708
	35	820
	36	162
	36	232
26	24	220
	33, 35	1638
	38	238
	39	444
	49	2076
	56, 58	1777
27	19	620
	25	1569
	38, 46	181
	45	777
	46	666

MARK.

2	27	2135
4	38	785
6	2, 6	406
	8	893
	4	1510
	16	413
8	38	1775
9	49	389
14	65	854
15	22	1087

LUKE.

1	6	1557
	6	30
	10	28
	19	38
	25	1785
	35	1440
	46	627
	51	414
	68	635
2	30	1888
	34, 35	1537
	35	2101
	37	168
4	13	117
	20	1408
	22, 23	2103
	23, 24	1510
	24	1590
5	8	2211
6	25	467
	25	747
	38	468
7	15	1904
8	14	1952
9	3	893
10	4	821
	9	995
	19	1744
	2,3	1757
	30	160
11	20,46	1845
	31	1876
	48	2071
12	4, 5	1913
	19	256
	19	584
	20	213
	20	367
	32	2038
	36, 37	2131
	50	1713
13	1	88
	9	665
	26	602
	28	1893
	28	2034
14	12, 13	30
	31	1456
15	7	167
	17	576
	17	1642
	32	553
16	3	1095
	9	995
	15	145
	15	885
	15	1261
	29	710
17	4	1773
	4	663
	27	31
18	5	1096
	8	416
	14	322
	31	216
19	41	211
	41, 42	1610
	42	75
21	19	1655
	28	1879
	28	2262
	34	89
	34	906
22	28	162
	28	1822
	29, 30	1876
	44	121
	61, 62	1523
23	24	53
	30	1348
	31	1349
	31	1483
24	37	315
	38	1647
	39, 40	1884
	53	168

JOHN.

1	5	430
	11	166
	16	125
	20	190
2	4	74
	19	1897
	23, 24	334
	24, 25	2099
3	6	954
	14	659
	16	189
	16	282
	19, 20	200
	21	195
	24	1542
	30	1120
	35	68
4	42	1272
5	17	357
	22, 27	1875
	25, 28	1870
	31	1026
	35	1120
	35	1620
6	26	54
	67	1111
7	24	873
	24	1580
	38	549
	39	116
8	5	1784
	13, 16	837
	14	1026
	15	1875
	21	1949
	44	79
9	2	123
	2, 3	2153
	4	418
	27	488
10	13	589
11	23	1901
	25	1871
	25	1882
	35,37	1882
	55	22
12	19	421
	24	1340
	24	1747
	28	40
	35	1720
13	2	78
	7	331
	7	1039
	33, 36	1578
14	1	2024
	2	1578
	18	433
	21	1274
16	2	1221
	21	1085
	23, 24	1561
	30	927
17	1	1073
	1	2182
	3	1765
18	6	1461
	11	444
	37	1824
19	12	2102
	13	1238
	25	1378
	30	1737
20	15	103
	23	663
	25	689
21	18	656

ACTS.

1	15	110
2	2, 3	676
	21	1794
	24	1866
	25	1032
	27	1882
	31	168
	42	1517
3	19, 20	1877
4	19	266
	28	62
	28	945
	30	61
5	3	78
	10	213
	38, 39	1452
	39	765
6	1	1973
	15	1886
8	21	1069
	23	663
	23	1302
9	1	504
	1	1849
10	25	99
12	23	136
13	10	39
	10	418
	18	902
	22	528
	33	1357
	46	563
14	13	93
	16	684
	17	412
	17	1729
15	9	1069
16	25	232
17	3	1321
	18	1017
	25, 27	2208
	26	851
	27	429
	28	962
	30	187
	30	684
	30	1042
18	5	1924
20	24	127
	24	241
22	23	168
23	1, 2	1526
	6, 7	1897
26	9	1907
	28, 29	1505
27	23, 24	2279
	33	169
28	3	88
	27	429

ROMANS.

1	1	1236
	1	1756
	9	1573
	18	524
	18	1228
	20, 26	684
	20	1046
	20	2189
	20	2209

	21,29	2194
	32	1906
2	4	1109
	5	174
	5	1873
	5	1948
	12	680
	14	340
	14	2242
	15	1873
	15	2209
	17	724
	19	272
	23, 24	566
3	4	105
	4	1643
	7,8	1217
	19	1559
4	5	688
	18	531
	18,19	1883
	20	825
	21	1274
5	3	219
	4	435
	6,7	539
	14	214
	20	1980
6	20, 21	2056
	21	1476
	21	1776
	21	2137
	23	2003
7	9, 13	1040
	13	884
	15	1904
	24	907
	25	1489
8	7	757
	13	1913
	15	1350
	19	1128
	26	1562
	31	476
	31	1018
	31	1276
	32	522
	32	664
	32	1543
	35	1634
	35, 36	469
	36	349
	36	1249
9	11, 12	1209
	16	2203
	18	885
	19	910
	20	756
	20	1410
	22	2031
	23	550
10	18	795
11	11	1601
	13	627
	17, 18	1782
	20	252
	20	1410
	32	1146
	33	402
	34	2080
12	14	176
	15	2222
	19	1507
	20	1508
13	8	1968
14	3	1783
	3	1875
	4	1874
	6	187
	7	2137
	11	656
15	15	1212
	30	205
16	18	1612
	18	49
	20	2203
	20	1744

I. COR.

1	21	419
	25	425
	25	834
	28	1750
2	4, 14	813
	12	940
3	2	578
	13	1761
	19	423
4	4	323
	4	340
	4, 5	1874
	4	1875
	5	1188
	5	1920
	8	556
	8	1449
	8, 10	1106
	9	1625
	11	2158
	13	1761
	21	1785
5	2	226
6	2	1876
	20	173
	20	556
	20	2132
7	5	25
	20	586
	23	2054
	30	76
	30	1534
	31	256
	31	479
8	1	569
	1	1061
	2	560
	2	707
	4	625
	4	1977
	11	1212
	11	1498
9	9	633
	22	515
10	3,4	1591
	11	689
	11	1619
	12	1784
	13	71
	13	249
	13	906
	16	57
11	7	194
	7	1799
	14	1110
	16	755
	31	1873
12	9	1254
13	2	769
	3,4	2171
	9	305
	12	211
	12	1049
	12	1887
14	1	1902
	14, 15	1927
	24, 25	101
	36, 37	1106
15	8	227
	12	1871
	16, 17	1871
	26	241
	28	1895
	32	602
	34	1763
	37	288
	37, 38	1885
	40	316
	50	1885
	53	597
	53	1897
	54	956
	55	468
16	13	1454
	22	1872
	26	1418

II. COR.

1	3	866
	3, 4	1402
	17, 20	552
	23	1573
	24	1398
2	6, 7	1784
	7	2178
	7, 11	2024
3	2	1858
	6	92
	10	325
	17	2262
	18	528
4	3, 4	429
	6	778
	7	343
	8, 9	285
	12, 17	441
	16	133
	17	174
	17	632
	17	2008
	17	2262
	18	2061
5	1	343
	1, 2	908
	4	104
	4	1885
	5	1603
	7	1196
	7	1887
	9	1575
	10	1897
	11	507
	11	1073
	14, 15	1866
	14	1924
	15	2137
	16	1220
	21	478
	21	1272
6	4	1025
	10	157
	10	256
	16, 17	2184
7	1	1513
	6	1403
	10	1553
	10	2019
	11	1703
8	9	128
9	2	1602
	6	288
10	4	305
	4, 5	423
	12	754
11	1, 19	2015
	5	1108
	5	1203
	14	335
	20	1525
	24	1542
12	1	310
	2	217
	9, 10	1638
	10	219
	10	434
13	8	391
	8	1506
	12	800

GALAT.

1	16	317
	16	1925
2	9	776
	11	66
3	1	1405
	20	1587
4	4	1311
	5	116
	13, 14	130
	29	1115
5	3	1044
	12	231
	15	1917
6	1	265
	1	268
	1	1785
	2	163
	2	2021
	3	755
	7, 8	288
	14	219

EPHES.

1	21	37
2	2	77
	2	90
	10	2140
	12	90
	13	373
3	8	227
	8	813
	13	749
	18	1051
	18, 19	897
4	10	1578
	13	1083
	18	902
	23	1926
5	8	185
	14	560
	15	177
	15	1905
	15	417
	18	1150
	18	1463
	27	1519
6	2	2092
	12	10
	12	57
	12	507
	19	174
	28	34

PHILIP.

1	9	2181
	23	241
	23	908
	23	1714
	28	556
2	5	48
	7	2169
	9, 10	1876
	12	1070
	15	1080
	16	524
	27	1545
	27	962
3	2	674
	8, 9	1935
	19	1776
	19	1462
	20	225
	20	1898
	21	1886
	21	597
4	1	2014
	5	76

COLLOS.

	15, 18	1739
	18	1357
	18	1871
	20	340
	24	219
2	2	1273
	15	556
	17	708
3	3	214
	3	1249
	11	235
	19, 20	1600
4	6	516
	6	1389

I. THES.

2	5	1573
3	3	1538
	3, 4	1630
	8	2032
	16	1360
4	3	76
5	6	195
	17	34
	18	111
	20	446
	23	66

II. THES.

1	10	1761
	10	950
2	2	76
	2	303
	3	282
	3	2199
	6, 7	2202
	8	1471
	11	1022
	11	1157
	19	2014
3	10, 12	585
	10	1974
	12	1750

I. TIM.

1	9	469
2	5	1589
	8	1562
	8	2277
	14	1311
3	3	462
	4, 5	481
4	10	1866
	12	446
	16	867
5	1	1837
6	1	236
	1, 2	1832
	6	105
	7	104
	9	1466
	16	338
	17	107
	17	76
	19	2138

II. TIM.

1	10	1592
	12	1861
	16	1777
2	3	521
	15	398
	15	515
	19, 20	2206
	26	45
	26	77
3	1	1867
	2	1828
	9	1156
4	16	1822
	17	297
	17	1790

TITUS.

1	7	462
	10, 11	676
	13	2013
	15	1326
2	16	1420
	9	811
	9	1410
	9	1830
	15	446
3	10	563
	14	1394

HEBR.

1	1	308
	3	637
	3	1294

	5	37
	6, 7	1811
	7	82
	14	38
	14	332
2	8	1801
	10, 15	871
	11	1862
	14	1862
	17	1588
	17	1590
3	8	163
	8	1600
	8	1602
	11	573
	12	32
	13	393
	19	219
	19	1462
4	1	2014
	13	935
	13	1270
	15	498
5	2	1847
	7	667
	7	1795
	12	1139
	14	429
	14	1109
	14	1737
6	5	1266
	7, 8	558
	11	1273
	18	1662
7	22	340
	25	1866
8	5	708
9	8	116
	24	1587
	27	16
	27	234
	27	1313
	28	1888
10	1, 2	871
	4, 10	649
	9	1607
	14	6
	22	1563
	22	1273
	24	1601
	26	1453
	26, 31	892
	30	1479
	31	62
	32, 33	1771
	34	164
	34	1637
	36	1654
11	1	564
	1	1588
	3	1133
	4	710
	5	2074
	7	253
	7	2175
	8	1196
	10	346
	17, 19	1883
	21	2041
	24	800
	35	1622
	36	233
12	1	361
	2	360
	4	1565
	5	96
	5	446
	6	268
	10	442
	14	529
	14	1910
	15	1301
	16	126
	29	1807
	29	2232
13	2, 3	1846
	3	163
	8	706
	9	1082
	9	1910
	12	2232
	13	1528

JAMES.

1	2	469
	3	1131
	4	1655
	6, 7	824
	10	2276
	17	105
	17	542
	17	624
	17	708
	19	1018
	19	1699
	27	163
	27	636
	27	2173
2	2, 3	926
	10	1558
	14, 15	539
	15	258
	15, 16	2022
	15, 16	2165
	18	278
	20	1060
3	1	1131
	3, 4, 5	1508
4	1	615
	1	1807
	3	1561
	6	2276
	9, 10	142
	12, 13	2270
	14	127
	16	691
5	1, 2	1309
	13, 14	130
	17	411

I. PET.

1	6	445
	6, 7	1707
	7, 8	1888
	8	2258
	10	2026
2	1	1406
	11	1454
	22	660
	24	1881
3	7	1081
	7	1889
	19	1146
	21	1909
4	3	674
	12, 13	1630
	14	111
	14	468
	19	70
	19	395
	19	1249
5	4	1803

II. PET.

1	4	48
	4	527
	4	754
2	9	2113
	12	393
	12	1726
	18	568
	20	1183
3	3	1990
	8	44
	8	755
	9	931
	16	402

I. JOHN.

1	1	1425
2	1	30
	1	112
	1	1557
	3, 13	1272
	4, 5	1023
	11, 12	1139
	12	664
	14	1638
	16	363
	19	1635
	20	390
	20	1039
	21	1208
	24	390
3	2	211
	2	800
	2	1887
	9	1387
	9	1505
	18	1822
	20	1260
4	5	1413
	18	10
	18	252
	18	1084
	18	1273
5	8	800
	8	940
	13	1273

JUDE.

6	42
10	1763
12	552
13	786
15	233
16	568
17	1237
22	516
22, 23	559
22, 23	1499

REVEL.

1	7	1868
	7	1892
	18	1865
	14	923
2	9	1027
	10	79
	10	134
	10	1772
	20	2168
	24	1050
3	2	9
	3	1145
	9	100
	9	1097
	9	1943
	14	1739
4	6	1117
	6	670
5	8, 9	470
6	9, 10	218
	10	70
7	9	407
	9	2150
9	11	132
	11	1737
	12	282
11	8	2032
	11	1236
12	1	68
	1	1803
	1	2043
	16	808
13	8	1588
14	3	851
	7	1915
	10	2076
	13	215
	13	288
	13	1337
	13	1949
15	3	400
16	9	131
	15	304
	20	773
17	8	1750
	16	1516
	2, 3	1711
18	4	1429
	6	291
	7	771
	7	1118
	7	1516
	7	2170
	7	2206
	7, 8	1981
	8	89
	21	664
	22	195
20	2, 3	1155
21	19	346
	27	289
22	8	99
	11	685
	11	1635
	17	1878
	18	2081

FINIS.